According is well said. For, that indeed is the chord, to which this and all our Benedictus's are to be tuned, That, the Center, from which all the lines are drawn. The line of Christs birth, in Zacharies Benedictus, through the tender mercies of our God, whereby the day-spring from on high did (lately) visit us. The line of Christs resurrection, in S. Peters Benedictus, according to his manifold mercies, whereby this day-spring from on high doth now visit us. The line of all the rest, if we had time to go through all the rest.

At all times, mercy commeth in, at no time out of time (I trust;) we shall dye with it, in our mouthes: let us make much of it while we live: Never pass by it, but say it; say it, as oft as we can; blessed be God: blessed be his mercy. God, that doth it: His mercy according to which he doth it. Doth it, and doth all else, at this and all other Feasts: at Easter, at Christmas, the fifth of November, and all. Blessed be He for His mercy: Yea, many times blessed, for His manifold mercies.

4. Regenerat nos.

Mercy then first: Regeneravit secundum, the act, of this mercy, the second, that is Regeneravit. Regeneravit may be said, with reference to Christ. Generavit Christum, regeneravit nos; and not amiss. But, better and more properly, both to us. Generavit nos, begot us first, in Adam, to this: regeneravit nos, begot us again, in Christ the second Adam, to the hope of a better life.

2 Hath begotten us again.

But, why is it not so then, qui generavit without Re? Why begin we not with that? Verily, even for that, even for our natural generation, we owe him a Benedictus. But, what should I say? Unless (beside our first generavit) we be so happy, as to have our part in this second generavit, the former (I doubt) will hardly prove worth a Benedictus. But, if this come to it, then, for both, a Benedictus indeed. Otherwise (as our Saviour said to Nicodemus) No man, unless he be thus born again, by his first birth, be it never so high or noble, is a whit the nearer this Inheritance following. For all our goodly generavit, we so much boast of, it would go wrong with us, but for this. Well therefore may we all say, Benedictus qui regeneravit.

Again, that is, the second time.

Now Re hath in it two powers, Re is, again, the second time: So, it suits well with Secundum, it is the second. For, two there be: 1. that old creation; 2. and the new Creature in Christ: And, two births; (We see it daily:) A child is brought into the world, but it is carried but again, to the Church, there to be born and brought forth anew, by the Sacrament of Regeneration.

Gal. 6. 15.

Again, that is, upon a loss.

But Re is not only again, but again (as it were) upon a loss. Not, a second only, but a second, upon the failing of the first. So doth Re imply, ever. Re-demption, a buying again, upon a former aliening. Re-conciliation, upon the former falling out. Re-stitution, upon a former attainder. Re-surrection, upon a fall taken formerly. Regeneration, upon a former degenerating, from our first estate.

Eph. 2. 3.

Our first would not serve; it was corrupt, it was defiled, it did degenerate. Degenerating made us filios iræ: And, ira principis (much more ira Dei) mors est. So, children of death, death and damnation: and there left us, and all by means of the corruption and soil of our former degenerate generation.

Prov. 16. 14.

Never ask then, Quid opus est re? Re cannot be spared: There was more than need of a new, a second, a re-generation, to make us children of grace again, and so of life: which he hath given us power to be made; by the washing of the new birth, the fountain which He hath opened to the house of Israel for sin and uncleanness; even, for the sin and uncleanness of the first. Will ye have it plainly? Benedictus Deus qui generatos ad mortem, regeneravit ad vitam: or qui generatos ad timorem mortis, regeneravit ad spem vitæ. That we, we that were begotten to the fear of death, or to a deadly fear; Us, He hath begotten anew, to the hope of life, or to a lively hope.

Tit. 3. 5. Zach. 13. 1.

This act of regenerating is determined doubly: in is twice repeated. 1. To hope first: 2. then to the inheritance: ye may put them together, to the hope of an Inheritance. But, thus parted, they stand, because of our two estates, to serve them both: 1. Hope, in this life; 2. Inheritance, in that to-come: Hope, while here, in state of grace; Inheritance, when there, in state of glory.

But

But because (as we said) an inheritance is no present matter: It is to come, and to be comen to: From begetting, we step not straight to entring upon our inheritance; but the state of heirs is a state of expectancy, and so a fit object for hope, Donec, till the time come: therefore we begin with that: Regeneravit in Spem. In Spem. To Hope.

There needs no great Benedictus for in Spem: Hope, is no great matter. For, what is hope? What, but vigilantis somnium, a waking mans dream? And such a hope indeed it may be: for, such hopes there be many, in the world. But, this is none such.

To shew, it is none such, it is severed by two terms: 1. Regeneravit, and 2. Vivam. They are worth the marking, both.

1. Regeneravit first: that it is Spes generata; which implies, there is another, but insita, but blown into us, or we sprinkled or perfumed with it. Such there is; but, not this: but this is per viam generationis, and Generatio (we know) terminatur ad substantium, brings forth a Substance. So, this, a substantial hope; called therefore by S. Paul, the Helmet of hope (1 Thes. V.) the Anchor of hope (Heb. VI.) things of substance, that will hold; that have metal in them. a Spem generatam. 1 Thes. 5. 8. Heb. 6. 19.

2. Then mark Vivam. And vivam follows well, of regeneravit. For, they that are begotten, are so to live; to have life. Vivam also imports, there is a dead, or a dying hope: but, this is not such, but a living. b Spem vivam.

Nay, Viva is more than Vivens; lively than living. Where, Viva is said of ought (as, of a stone, or water) the meaning is, they spring, they grow, they have life in themselves. And, such is the Water of our regeneration: not from the brooks of Teman (in Job VI.) that in Summer, will be dry; but the water of Jordan, a running river. There Christ was himself baptized: there, he began, and laid the Sacrament of our New birth; to shew what the nature of the hope is, it yields: even viva, with life in it. Job. 6. 15. 16 Mat. 3. 13.

And indeed Regeneravit is a good Verb, to joyn with hope. There is, in hope, a kind of regendring power: It begets men (as it were) anew. And, Viva is a good Epithete for it. When one droops, give him Hope, his spirits will come to him afresh; it will make him alive again that was half dead. As Jacob, when he was put in hope to see Joseph alive, it is said, Revixit spiritus Jacob, his spirit revived in him: he shewed, Spes was viva, hope was a reviver. Gen. 45. 24.

Never so well seen (this) as this day, in them, that went to Emmaus; With cold hearts; cold and dead (God wot) till they heard the Scriptures opened to this point: and then, Did we not (say they) feel our hearts warm (nay hot) within us? Such a vital heat, they found and felt, came from this hope. For (to say truth) what is it, to give life, to them that have it already; dum spiro, that are alive, that can fetch their breath? it is not worthy (that) to be called spes viva: Spes viva (indeed) is, that which when breath and life, and all fail, fails not: that then puts life into us, dum expiro, when life is going away: that, when this life we must forgoe, bids, let it go; when that is gone, shewes us hope of another. Luke 24 32.

This is Viva indeed. Nay, this is Vita; for the hope of that life immortal, is the very life of this life mortal. And for such a hope, Benedictus Deus, Blessed be God.

And whence hath it this life? the next word sheweth it, vivam per resurrectionem. The Viveness (as I may say) the vivacity, the vigour it hath, from Christ rising, and by his rising, opening unto us the gate of life at large. What life? Any life? this life? No: vivam per resurrectionem. Not this (here) falsi seculi vita (as even the Heathen man called it;) but, the other, the life by the resurrection, the true life indeed. Not to live here still, as we do: But to rise again and live, as Christ (this Day) did. That so, we mistake not the life, and take the wrong for the right. For, so shall we mistake, in our hope also, as commonly we do. 1 Vivam, per Resurrectionem Jesu Christi.

For, shall we do hope no wrong? The truth is Hope bears evil without a cause. The fault is not hope's, the fault is our own; we put it where we should not, and then lay the blame upon hope; where we should blame our selves, for wrong putting it. For, if you put it not right, this is a general rule: As is that, we hope in: so is our hope. a Ye lean on a reed, (saith Esay.) b Ye take hold by a cobweb, (Job.) c Ye catch at a shadow, (saith the Wise man.) And can it be then, but this hope must deceive you? a Isa. 36. 6. b Job 8. 14. c Eccles. 34. 2.

We for the most part, put it wrong: for we put it in them, that live this transitory perishing life; we put it in them, that must dye, and then must our hope dye with them, and so prove a dying hope. Miserable is that man, that among the dead is his hope (saith the Wise man.) The Psalm best expresseth it: Our hope is in the Sons of men; and they live by breath, and when that is gone, they turn to dust; and then there lies our hope in the dust. For, how can (ever) a dying object yield a living hope? Sap. 13. 10. Psal. 146. 3.

But, put it in one that dyes not, that shall never dye, and then it will be Spes Viva, indeed. No reed, no cobweb-hope then; but helmet, anchor-hope; hope, that will never confound you.

And who is that, or where is He, that we might hope in Him? That is Jesus Christus spes nostra, Jesus Christ, our hope: so cals Him S. Paul (1 Tim. 1. 1.) Such shall their hope be, that have Christ for their hope.

Yet, not Christ every way considered; not, as yesterday, in the grave; not, as the day before, giving up the Ghost upon the Cross: dead and buried yields but dead hope. But in Jesus Christus hodie, Jesus Christ to day, that is, Christus resurgens, Christ rising again; Christ not now a living soul, but a quickning spirit.

In Christs life then: But, not in his mortal life. They, that so hoped in him, to Emmaus they went, this day, with Nos autem sperabamus, we did hope: Did, while he was alive; but, now, now he is dead, no more hope now. And, for two dayes, as he was, so was their hope; dead, and buried: and if he had risen no more, had been quite dead for ever. But, this day, he revived and rose again: So did their hope too. Luke 24. 21.

To this life we are regenerate, by the resurrection of Christ: Right. As to death generate, by the fall of the first Adam: So, to life regenerate, by the rising again of Christ, the second.

And these two, Resurrection, and regeneration, match well. The Regeneration, of the soul, is the first Resurrection. And, the Resurrection of the body, is the last Regeneration. So doth our Saviour Christ term it (Mat. 19.) In the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit, that is, at the general resurrection. So was his own, his resurrection, his regeneration. This day have I begotten thee (the verse of the Psalm the Apostle applies to Christs eternal generation (Heb. 1. 5.) But, so doth he, to his Resurrection also (Act. 13. 33.) For, then was Christ himself regenerate (as it were) begotten in a sort anew, and brought forth out of the grave, as out of the womb, the very womb, wherein he was born to the immortal, that is, to the true life.

Psal. 2. 7.

By his resurrection: and if ye ask how, Esay tels us; There goeth from his resurrection an influence, which shall have an operation like that of the dew of the spring; which when he will let fall, the earth shall yield her dead: as at the falling of the dew, the herbs now rise, and shoot forth again. Which term therefore [of regenerating] was well chosen, as fitting well with his rising, and the time of it. The time (I say) of the year, of the week, and (if ye will) of the day too. For, he rose in the dawning: then is the day regenerate: and in primâ Sabbati, that the first begetting of the week: And, in the spring, when all that were winter-sterved, withered, and dead, are regenerate again, and rise up anew.

Isa. 26. 19.

2 Inhæreditatem. To an inheritance.

We pass now to the Inheritance, But, as we pass, will ye observe the situation first. It is well worth your observing, that the Resurrection is placed in the midst, between our Hope, and our Inheritance. To hope before it; before the resurrection, hope: but, after, to the Inheritance it self, to the full possession and fruition of it. So, from the estate of hope, by the resurrection (as by a bridg) pass we over, to the enjoying our Inheritance. And, that falls well with the feast, which is the feast of the Passe-over. The resurrection is so too; pass we do, from spes, to res. So passed Christ: So we to pass. Every word stands exactly in his place and order.

An Inheritance accords well with according to his mercy. We have it not of our selves, or by our merits, by the πολὺ of them; but, of him, and by his mercies, and the πολὺ of them: Else were it a purchase, and no Inheritance. It comes to us freely; as the Inheritance, to children.

Well, with Mercy: and well, with Regenuavit. For, the Inheritance is of Children, pertains to the Children, either of generation, by Nature; or of Regeneration, by Grace: By the former, he is Pater Domini nostri; by the later, he is Pater noster.

But yet for all that, Ad hæreditatem is a new point. Begetting is (properly) but to life, and nothing else: The greater part, by far, are begotten so. To Inherit, besides, not one of a thousand. Ask poor mens children: Ask yonger brethren. But this (here) not in Vivam only; but in Hæreditatem also, and these are two. 1. To be begotten, vivam: 2. To be heirs, hæreditatem. It is no Lazarus's resurrection, to rise again to the condition, he had before. It is Christ's; rising, to receive an Inheritance withall.

Nor shall we need to doubt any prejudice to God, from whom it comes, by our comming to this Inheritance. Vivam and hæreditatem (there) will stand well together. Here, they will not. Here, the Inheritance comes not, but by the death of the party in possession: But there, no prejudice to the Ancestor; he dyes not, for the heir to succeed. There is Successio minorum sine recessione majorum. A succession, as of lights; the second burns cleer; yet the first goes not out, but burns as cleer as it.

Nor no prejudice to the Heir neither: To us, by Him; not to Him, by us. It is not, as here: One catches it from all, and all the rest go without; Or, if they come in, his part is the less, No: it is of the nature of light, and other such spiritual things (as sounds, and smells) which be Omnibus una, & singulis tota. If there be a thousand together, every one sees, hears, smels as much, as he should do, if there were no more but himself alone. Such is this: not, erga aliquos vestrûm, but erga vos.

And (as we said) one thing is to be born; another, to be so, to Inherit: So say we again now; One thing, to be born to an Inheritance; Another, to such an Inheritance as this here. For, in Inheritances, there is great odds; one much better then another, even here with us: But this, better, incomparably better; another maner Inheritance far, than any with us here. We would know, what manner one, and Saint Peter gives us a little overture, how it is conditioned, that we may know, it is worth a Benedictus. E Theologicâ negativâ he doth it; there is no other way to describe things to come, but by removing from them such defects, as (we complain) are incident and encomber all, we can inherit here.

Three they are: 1. Corrumpi, 2. Contaminari, 3. Marcescere; Corruption, Soil, and Fading; to which nos nostraque, we and all ours are subject. Of which three, 1. Corruption refers, to the very being it self: 2. Defiling, to the sincere and true being, without all forreign mixture: 3. Fading, to the beauty the prime and flourishing estate, that each thing hath.

The Substance, that corrupts and comes to nothing: suppose, by death: (for, Corruption is contrary to generation.) The undefiled pure estate, that is, soiled, and embased, by some bad thing coming to it from without: (as it might be, by infection or sickness.) And though both these hold, the best estate long will not; but lose the lustre by and by, and fade away of it self. Saint Peter enlarges this, after, in this Chapter: taking his theme from the voice in Esay XL. All flesh is grass, and all the glory of it as the flower of the grass. The grass it self lasts not long; but, the flower of the grass, nothing so long, as the grass it self. Let there be no blasting to corrupt it; no canker to defile it; yet, of it self, it falls off and leaves the stalk standing.

Isa. 40. 6.

It

It is (now) the time of flowers, and from flowers, doth the Apostle take this term, of Marcescere. It is properly the fading of the Rose. Streight, of it self, doth the Rose marcere, and the violet livere, wax pale and wan. Their best, their flourishing estate they hold not long; neither the flowers, that are worn, nor they, that wear them either: they, nor we: but decay we do, (God wot) in a short time.

And, as we, so they; as the heirs, so the Inheritances themselves. Their corruptible hath not put on incorruption neither. They corrupt dayly (we see) from one to another. One mans Inheritance corrupts, by another mans purchase; To them, that had them and have them not, they are corrupt. And, not that way alone: diverse other exchoats, for want of heirs; confiscate, for some offences; rioted and made away, by mishrifmess; the heir stripped, and turned clean out: the Inheritance wasted, and quite brought to nothing. At least, if not they, to us; We, to them, corrupt: which comes all to one. 1 Cor. 15. 53.

But say, they stand and corrupt not: another complaint there is: Their soil, their μιασμὸς is but too evident. They soil us; their soil we brush off, wipe, rub, wash off daily: in Summer, dust; in Winter dirt. These, and sundry like inquinamenta mundi: Nothing, in this region, but subject to soil. Why, the Inheritance it self, we call it soil; and how can it then, but soil us? or how can there be (here) any undefiled Inheritance. 2 Undefiled.

But make them and keep them as clean as you can, take them, even at the best, yet fade they do sensibly; Tanea worm, once a year, bites them by the root, and they wither. Every year, at least, they fall into a Marasmus, lose flowers and leaves and all; till they be regenerate by a resurrection, or rise again, by a regeneration, as it were: Till this time, the time of the spring come about, and bring them forth new again. 3 That fadeth not. Jonah 4. 7.

So, whatsoever we (here) can inherit, is subject to one, nay, to all of those. It corrupts, takes soil, fades. Is it not so? find we not, Saint Peter saith true? find we it not by proof daily? One or other, are we not still complaining of, specially of the fading? For, though they fade not of themselves; yet, to us, they fade. The fading, to us, even before themselves fade. We are hungry, and we eat: Eat we not, till that fades, and we are so weary of our fullness, as we were of our fasting: We are weary, and we rest; rest we not, till that fades, and we as weary of our rest, as ever we were of our weariness.

Yes indeed, so it is; and that so it is, is the very faithfulness of the creature to us. Thus by these defects, to tire us, and not suffer us to set our rest upon them, upon any Inheritance, here; but to chase us from themselves, and force us up to God the Creator, with whom, there is an Inheritance layed up, in danger of none of these. But incorrupt, that shall hold the Being, and none ever dis-herit or dispossess us of it; 2. Undefiled, that shall hold the assay, and never be embased, by any bad mixture: 3. And that shall never fade or fall into any Marasmus, but hold out in the prime perfection, it ever had. And if there be, upon Earth, a state like this, it is now at this time: Now, all things generate anew; the Soil of Winter is gone, and of Summer, is not yet come: Now, nothing fades; but all springs fresh and green. At this time, here; but, at all times, there: A perpetual spring; no other Season, there, but that. For, such an Inheritance, blessed be God.

But, where may this be? For, all this while, we know not that. Only, this we know; where ever it is, it is not here; upon earth, no such seat. All (here) savour of the nature of the soil; corrumpi, contaminari, marcescere, are the proper passions of Earth, and all earthly things: But, in Heaven, it may well be. There, is no contrary and corrupt; Nihil inquinatum, nothing to defile there. And there, all things keep and continue, to this day, in their first estate, the original beauty, they ever had. There then, it is: and we thither to lift up our hearts, whither the very frame of our bodies gives, as if there were somewhat remaining for us there. In heaven.

It is thought, there is some further thing meant, by S. Peter. He writes to the dispersed Jewes. And that, by, in Cœlo, he gives them an Item, this Inheritance is no new Canaan, here on earth; Not Christ, any earthly Messias, to settle them in a new Land of promise: No, that was for the Synagogue, ἥτις ὄντι δούλοις ἐπαγγέλλεται ὄντα, was it self mortal (is dead and buried since) and so had but mortal things to promise to her children, whom she did generate to mortality. The Church of Christ, the heavenly Jerusalem, hath other manner of promises, to her children regenerate by the immortal seed of the word, and Spirit of God: to them She holdeth forth things immortal, and heavenly; yea, heaven, and immortality it self. Gal. 4. 26.

In heaven then. There, it is first; and there it is kept: the being there, one; the keeping, another. For, that there it is kept, is happy for us. Earth would not keep it; Here, it would be in hazard, there is great odds. For my part, I give it for lost, if, in this State, we were possessed of it. It would go the same way, Paradise went. Since it would be lost in Earth, it is kept in heaven. And a Benedictus for that too: as, for the regenerating us to it here on Earth; so, for the keeping, the preserving of it there, in Heaven, Reserved in heaven.

Kept, and for us kept; Else, all were nothing: that, makes up all, that it is not only preserved, but reserved for us, there. As Benedictus, the Alpha; so this the Omega of all. For us.

But reserved (as the nature of the word is, and as the nature is, of things hoped for) yet under the veil: for, Spes quæ videtur non est spes. But, time shall come, when the veil shall be taken off, and of that, which is now within it, there shall be a revealing (as followeth in the next verse.) And so, all begins and ends, as the Bible doth. As the Bible, with Genesis; So this Text, with Regeneration: as the Bible ends, in the Apocalypse; So, this here, with a Revelation. Rom. 8. 24. Verse 5.

Only, it stayeth, till the work of regeneration be accomplished. Generation, and it, take end both together; and when generation doth, then shall corruption likewise, and with it, the state of dishonour, which is in foulneſs, and the ſtate of weakneſs, which is in fading; And in ſtead of them, incorruption comes in place with honour and power. And theſe three, 1. Incorruption, 2. honour, and 3. power, make the perfect eſtate of bliſs: To which, Chriſt this day aroſe, and which ſhall be our eſtate, at the Reſurrection. That, as all began with a reſurrection, ſo it ſhall end with one. Come to us, by Chriſts riſing now, this firſt Eaſter; and we ſhall come to it by our own riſing, at the laſt and great Eaſter, the true Paſſover indeed: when, from death and miſery, we ſhall paſs to life and felicity.

Heb. 6. 18, 19, 20. Now, for this Inheritance, which is Bliſs it ſelf, and in the interim for the bleſſed hope ſet before us, Which we have as an Anchor of our ſoul, ſtedfaſt and ſure, which entreth even within the veil; where Chriſt the fore-runner is already ſeized of it in our names and for our behoofs: For theſe, come we now, to our Benedictus.

For, if God, according to his manifold mercy, hath done all this for us; we alſo, according to our duty (as manifold as his mercy,) are to do (or ſay, at leaſt) ſomewhat again. It accords well, that, for ſo many beneficia, one Benedictus, at leaſt. It accords well, that his riſing ſhould raiſe in us; and our regenerating beget, in us, ſome praiſe, thanks, bleſſing at leaſt: but, bleſſing fits beſt with Benedictus.

Firſt then, dictus, ſomewhat would be ſaid, by way of recognition, This hath God done for us, and more alſo: But, this, this very day. Then, Bene let it be: to ſpeak well of him, for doing thus well by us; A verbal Benedictus, for a real bleſſing, is as little as may be. For the Inheritance, which is bleſſing; for the hope, which is bleſſed; for the bleſſed cauſe of both, Gods mercy; and the bleſſed means of both, Chriſts Reſurrection, this bleſſed day, bleſſed be God.

But, to ſay Benedictus any way, is not to content us; but, to ſay it, ſolemnly. How is that? Benedictus, Pſ. 116. 12, 13 in our mouth, and the holy Euchariſt in our hands. So, to ſay it. To ſeal up, as he (in the old) his quil 1 Cor. 10. retribuam with calicem ſalutaris, the Cup of Salvation: So we (in the new) our Benedictus, with Calix benedictionis, the Cup of bleſſing, which we bleſs in his Name. So, ſhall we ſay it, in kind; ſay it, as it would be ſaid. The rather, ſo to do, becauſe, by that Cup of bleſſing, we ſhall partake the blood of the New Teſtament; by which, this Inheritance, as it was purchaſed for us, ſo it is paſſed to us. Alwayes making full account, that, from the Cup of bleſſing, we cannot part, but with a bleſſing.

And yet, this is not all; We are not to ſtay here, but to aſpire farther; even to ſtrive to be like to God: and, be like God we ſhall not, unleſs our dicere be facere as his is; unleſs ſomewhat be done withal. In very deed, there is no bleſſing, but with levatâ and extenſâ manu, the hand ſtretched out; So, our Sa- Luk. 24. 50. viour himſelf bleſſed, Luk. 24. The vocal bleſſing alone is not full; nor the Sacramental alone, without Benedictio manus, that is the actual bleſſing. To leave a bleſſing behind us, to beſtow ſomewhat, for which the Church (the poor, in it, ſo) ſhall bleſs you, and bleſs God, for you. In which reſpect, the Apoſtle ſo 2 Cor. 9. 5. calleth it expreſly (2 Cor. 9.) εὐλογίαν benedictionem, and by that name, commends it to the Corinthians. Mat. 25. 33. And, that is the bleſſing of bleſſings, when all is done: That is it, for which Venite Benedicti ſhall be ſaid to us. Even, for parting with that here, which ſhall feed, cover, and ſet free, the hungry, naked, and them in priſon. That, ſhall prove the bleſſing real, and ſtick by us when all our verbal benedictions ſhall be vaniſhed into air.

So, for a treble bleſſing from God, 1. Our regenerating, 2. Our hope, 3. Our Inheritance, we ſhall return him the ſame number; even three for three. 1. Benedictus of the voice and inſtrument, 2. Benedictus of the Sign and Sacrament, 3. and Benedictus, of ſome bleſſed deed done, for which, many bleſſings upon earth, and bleſsing of God from heaven ſhall come upon us. So, as we ſay (here) Benedictus Deus; Bleſſed He: He ſhall ſay, Benedicti vos, Bleſſed Ye. The hearing of which words, in the end, ſhall make us bleſſed without end, in heavens bliſs. To which, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON

Preached before the

KINGS MAJESTY

In the Cathedral Church at

DURHAM,

On the Twentieth of Aprill, being Easter-Day,

An. Dom. 1617.

MATTH. Chap. XII. Ver. XXXIX, XL.

Qui respondens ait illis: Generatio, &c.

But He answered and said unto them; An evil and adulterous generation seeketh a sign, but no sign shall be given unto it, save the sign of the Prophet Jonas. For, as Jonas was three dayes and three nights in the Whales belly; so shall the Son of man be, three dayes and three nights, in the heart of the earth.

THe sign of the Prophet Jonas, is the sign of the Resurrection: And, this is the Feast of the Resurrection. Being then the sign of this Feast, at this Feast to be set up: Signum temporis, in tempore signi, The sign of the time, at the time of the sign, most properly, ever.

The words are an answer, of Christs (in this verse) to a motion of the Pharisees (in the last) They would see a sign. The answer is negative, but qualified. There is in it, a Non, and a Nisi: Non dabitur, none shall be given them. Indeed, none should: They were worthy of none. Yet saith He not, Non simply. His, Non, is with a Nisi, Non dabitur, nisi; it is with a limitation, with a but: None, but, that. So, that: So, one shall be. In the Non, is their desert: in the Nisi, His goodness: that though they were worthy none, yet gives them one, though. The Summe.

Gives them one: and one, that is worth the giving. Put Non and Nisi together, it is a Non nisi. If you speak of a Sign, None to it: a Sign, instar omnium.

This Sign, is the Sign of the Prophet Jonas. Of him, diverse other wayes, and namely this: That as he was in the Whales belly, so was Christ in the heart of the earth. There they were either.

And, that which makes up the Sign; three edayes apeece: Three dayes; and no longer.

And

And then, as Jonas cast up by the Whale; so Christ rose again from the dead: and both, the third day. So that, upon the matter, the Substance of this Sign, is Christs Resurrection; and the Circumstance of it, is this very day.

The Summe. We will divide it no otherwise, than already we have: 1. into the Non, Non dabitur: 2. the Nisi, Non dabitur nisi: 3. and the Non nisi, Non nisi Signum Jonæ.

I. The Non, the denial first: Non dabitur eis. And the reason is, in Eis, in the parties. For they, 1. an evill, and 2. adulterous, and 3. a generation of such (three brands set upon them:) Non, to them, such as them, no Sign to be given: none at all.

II. Then the Nisi: Non dabitur, Nisi. For though they were such, as little desert of any, yet Christ of his goodness, will not cast them quite off. Non he will give, but. So, not he will give it to Gods shall have.

III. And that, no trivial, or petty Sign (to give it his due) but, in very deed, a Signum non nisi: Non nisi Signum Jonæ, that is, insigne Signum, a Sign signal: a mark them all, None like it.

And that is, the sign of the Prophet Jonas, coming forth of the Whales jawes, half out and half in. In which Sign, there are (upon the point) three Sicuts.

1. The Parties first; as Jonas, so the Son of man (that is) Himself.

2. Wherein, the Place. That as the one was in the Whales belly; so was the other in the bowels of the earth.

3. Last, in time. Either, three dayes and three nights just, and but three dayes, and then forth again. There they were, and there (both) the same time: the Places diverse; the time, the same.

So, Jonas, the sign of Christ: and the Whales belly, the sign of Christs grave. Jonas three dayes, the sign of Christs three dayes, 1. Good-friday, 2. Yesterday, 3. and to day.

Which three dayes, when we shall come to calculate them, they will give us three stands, and make (as it were) three signs in one; each day, his several sign.

The letter of the Text saith, there they were; 1. we are carried then, to ask, how came they thither. The Text saith, there they were, but three dayes: 2. We are carried then to ask, how came they thence.

1. Jonas state before he came into the Whale: 2. His state while there: 3. His state getting thence.

Conform in Christ. 1. Good-friday, when, as Jonas went down the Whales throat, so Christ laid in his grave: 2. Easter-eve, while there he lay: 3. And this (which is now the third day) when, as Jonas cast up on dry land; So Christ risen from death, to the life immortal.

So have you (as in a sign) set forth 1. Christs death, by Jonas drowning: 2. Christs burial, by Jonas abode there: 3. Christs resurrection, by Jonas emersion again.

As Christus sepultus, by Jonas absorptus; So Christus resurgens, by Jonas emergens. 1. Jonas going down the Whales throat, of Christ put into his Sepulcher: 2. Jonas appearing again, out of the Whales mouth, of Christs arising out of his Sepulcher. All; in Jonas, shadowed: And, in Christ, fulfilled.

In these three dayes, these three Signs: And, in them, three Keys of our faith, three Articles of our Creed, 1. Mortuus, 2. Sepultus, 3. and Resurrexit, 1. Christs death, 2. burial, and 3. rising again.

And last, what this Sign portends, or signifies. That whatsoever it was, to them; to us, it is Signum in bonum, a Sign boding good to us-ward: A sign of favour and good hope, which we have by the resurrection of our Saviour. Specially, if we have the true Signature of it, which is true repentance.

The denial of a Sign. Non dabitur. Judg. 6. 36. 2 King. 20. 8.

TO ask a Sign, is (of it self) not evill; Good men, holy Saints have done it. Gedeon asked one of God and had it: He is painted with the fleece (that is, the Sign given him) in his hand. Ezechias asked one and had it too: In the Sundial of Ahaz, the shadow went ten degrees back. Yet, this suit here is denied by Christ: and Christ denieth nothing that is good: Specially, not with hard terms as here (we see) he doth.

The reason, in Eis, the men.

Somewhat is amiss sure: and it is not in the Sign, or in the suit, but in Eis, the men: the suit, was not evil, the Suitours were. In three words, three brands set upon them: 1. Evil, 2. adulterous, 3. a generation of evil and adulterous.

They were Evill. Verse 22.

1. Evil. There be marks of evil minded men, even in their very suit. They would see a sign: If they had never seen any before, it had not been evil: but, they came now, from a Sign; they had scarce wiped their eyes, since they saw one (the Sign of the blind and dumb man, made to see and speak) immediatly before; It was Spirans adhuc, yet warm, as they say. That, they saw; and saw they not a Sign? A little before, even in this very Chapter, a withered hand was restored to another: What, could not they see a Sign, in that, neither? Go back to the Chapters before, ye shall have no less than a dozen signs, one after another: and come they now with a Volumus videre? They would have that shewed them, that, when it is shewed, they will not so see: A bad mind this, certainly.

Nay maliciously evil.

2. Nay worse yet: for ye shall note malice in them (which is the worst kind of evil.) For, if ye mark, this Volumus of theirs, is, with a kind of spite, with a kind of disgrace, to those he had shewed before. They would see one: as who should say; those were none, they had seen: that was none they saw, even now. Maliciously: If he shewed none, then he was no body; could not indeed shew any;

and

and ſo vilified him with the people: If he ſhewed one, then carp and cavil at it, as they did at that even now: Say, it was done by the black art. So, cavil out one; and call for another, to deprave that too.

3. Nay (which is worſt of all) Evil and abſurd men (ſaith the Apoſtle.) When is that? Vidi iniquitatem & contradictionem, ſaith the Pſalmiſt. Ye ſhall ſee, how abſurdly they contradict themſelves. But even now, they charged him, to work by the divel: and here now they come, and would have him ſhew a miracle. The divel cannot ſhew a miracle; a trick of ſorcery he can: Such may be done by the claw of the divel: miracles not, but by the finger of God, by power divine. Him then, him, whom they even now had pronounced, to deal with the divel; him come they to now for a miracle. So abſurdly malicious, as they cared not, in their malice, to contradict themſelves. To men, ſo evil, ſo maliciouſly evil, ſo abſurdly evil, Signum non dabitur eis. And abſurdly evil. 2 Tim. 3. 13. Pſal. 55. 9.

Well: howſoever they might err that way, the men otherwiſe to be reſpected, they were ſo vertuous men, ſo ſtreight livers. See ye not their philacteries, how broad they wear them? Nor that neither (ſaith Chriſt,) but, evil, and adulterous too. As, of evil minds, ſo of evil lives, too. Ye ſhall come now, to the uncaſing of a Phariſee. For, Chriſt lifts up their Philacteries, and ſhews what lurks under them.

For, by adulterous I underſtand not, as if he charged them, they were born of adultery, came into the world the wrong way: the ſeed of Canaan, and not of Juda: As, having nothing in them of the Patriarchs; So nothing leſs, than their children, of whom they bare themſelves ſo much. This, is adulterina rather than adultera: children of the adulterers, rather than adulterous themſelves. And, that was no fault of theirs: And Chriſt upbraideth no man, but with his own faults.

Nor, I underſtand it not, of ſpiritual adultery; though, that way, they might be charged, as leaving him the true Spouſe, the true Meſſias; taking no notice of him, paſſing by him, went after ſuch as had adulterate the truth of God, by devices of their own taking up: Not with Idolatry (perhaps) but (which is an evil, and differs but a letter) with idolatrie: For, to worſhip images, and to worſhip mens own imaginations, comes all to one. That, they were faulty of: (and I pray God we be free.) But this, is myſtical adultery, and I would make, as no more miracles, ſo no more myſteries, than needs I muſt.

For my part, I ſee no harm, to take the word in the native ſenſe, without figure, for men given to commit that ſin, the ſin of adultery. For (for all their deep fringes) all was not well that way: as is plain by John VIII. Where, not one of them durſt take up a ſtone, to caſt at the woman taken in adultery: but ſlunk away one after another, till there was not one left. Chriſt toucheth upon that ſtring: to ſhew, what heavenly men theſe were, that would have a ſign from heaven, and none elſe ſerve them. Were not theſe meet men, to ſue for a ſign? Were not a ſign even caſt away upon them? Joh. 8. 1.

But, this is not all. For, this they were (ſaith our Saviour) not here and there a man of them; but the whole bunch was no better: not the perſons only, but the Generation ſo: not a good, of them all. And ſuch, you ſhall obſerve, there be: Not only, ſuch men, but ſuch Generations of men, and faults (ſuppoſe of lying, ſwearing, and ſuch like) rooted in a ſtock; kept even in traduce (as it were) and derived down ab avis atavisque, from the father to the ſon, by many deſcents, in a kind of hereditary propagation. A generation of ſuch.

Solomon in his time noted four of them: 1. One, a generation unkind to their parents, and their children, ſo to them for it: 2. Another, pure in their own eyes: 3. A third, of high eyebrows: 4. A fourth, cruel hearted, whoſe teeth were as knives to ſhred the poor of the earth, ſhred them ſmall. Prov. 30. 11. 11, 13, 14.

Such were theſe: and adultery made way for ſuch. For, ubi corrupta ſunt ſemina, where a general corruption that way, no good to be hoped for; the Country will not laſt long. By this, Chriſt had ſaid enough; and ſhewed, non dabitur eis, is a fit anſwer for theſe.

Now, this ye ſhall mark; the worſe the men, the more importune ever, and the harder to ſatisfie. They muſt have ſigns, and ſigns upon ſigns, and nothing will ſerve them: As, no leſs than four ſeveral times were they at Chriſt. 1. Here: 2. In the XVI. Chapter: 3. Marke VIII. 4. Luc. XI. And ſtill to ſee a ſign. As oft as they came, this had been their right anſwer: to diſpatch them, with a Non dabitur, and no more ado. Other anſwer let them have none: even abſolutely none at all: For none they ſhould have had. Chap. 16. 4. Mar. 8. 11. Luk. 11. 29.

II. The denial qualified Non, Niſi.

Yet ſaith he not, None they ſhall have. He will be better to them, than they deſerve: Chriſt will be Chriſt: Redit ad ingenium: Forgets now all, he had ſaid ere while. And, an evil and an adulterous generation though they be, yet a ſign they ſhall have, for all that. Not ſimply None then, but Non niſi, Non ſave; the Negative is qualified: ſo qualified, as upon the matter it proves an Affirmative. The Niſi deſtroyes the Non: Non dabitur niſi (that is) dabitur. So, one they ſhall have: Though not now preſently, at their volumus, at their whiſtling (as it were) but after, when he ſaw the time: And, though (perhaps) not ſuch an one, as they would have phanſied, yet ſuch an one, as they rather need, and would do them more good: (that is) one for their want, not for their wanton deſires.

And this is the reaſon, why none but it: For, no ſign needed but it. For, without others, well they might be; without this, they or we, could not well be. For, oportuit Chriſtum pati, It behooved Chriſt, Chriſt ought to dye, and riſe again. Luk. 24. 26.

None but that? Why afterward, between this and his Paſſion, he ſhewed divers others: and how then ſaith he, none but it? Signes (indeed) he ſhewed: yet not any of them ſo pregnant for the purpoſe; they ſought, as was this. They ſought a ſign of the ſeaſon, as by the XVI Chapter is plain: that this was the time, the Meſſias was to come. To put them out of doubt of that; to that point, none ſo forcible, as his death and riſing again, figured in that of Jonas. That, and none but that. All he did elſe, the Chap. 16. 4.

Pre-

Prophets had done the like: Giving signs from heaven (which they here ſought;) yea, even raiſed the dead. But raiſe himſelf being dead, get forth of the heart of the earth, when once he was in, that paſſed their skill: never a Patriarch or Prophet of them all, could do that: Non niſi, None but he. So as, therein he ſhewed himſelf indeed to be the true and undoubted Meſſias, and never ſo elſe, in any ſign of them all.

For ſigns being compounded of Power and Goodneſs (not power alone, but power and goodneſs, that is, the benefit or good of them, they be done for:) Never ſo general, ſo univerſal, ſo great a good, as by Chriſts death, (as it might be Jonas caſting in:) Nor ever ſo great, ſo incomparably great a power, as by raiſing himſelf from death to life (ſet forth in Jonas caſting up again:) Thoſe twain, by theſe twain, more manifeſt, than by any other. The ſign of the greateſt Love and power (love, to die; power, to riſe) that ever was vvrought.

This Niſi then, is a non niſi in a new ſenſe: A nove ſuch, a ſigne paramount. All elſe nothing in compariſon of it. I keep you too long from it.

This ſign Signum non niſi a ſign paramount.

The ſign is laid in the Prophet Jonas, Sicut Jonas: and we are much bound to God, for laying it in him: they, and we both. And Jonas is a non niſi: ſuch a ſign, for us, and (beſides) ſo many peculiars of Chriſt, in him, as (in effect) no ſign but he.

For them, Propheta peccator.

Firſt, for them, for an evil and adulterous generation, no ſign ſo meet to be given as he. For Jonas, and non niſi Jonas, was Propheta peccator, he treſpaſſer or ſinning Prophet, among them all. Sinners (I know) they vvere all: they confeſs as much themſelves: But, for tranſgreſſing the expreſs Commandement of God, in not obeying Gods immediate call; therein, none of the reſt to be tainted: He only was Propheta fugitivus, fled touch, was in the tranſgreſſion; ſent to Ninive, and went to Joppa; ſent Eaſt, and went flat Weſt: and was even taken with the manner (as we ſay) and arreſted in the very flight. For an evil and an adulterous generation, this was a good ſign (ſay I:) and ſo might they, if they knew their own good. For them, and for us, and (in a word) for all ſinners; for he is Propheta peccator, and ſo Propheta peccatorum. And Chriſt is pleaſed to pick out his fugitive Prophet, his runaway, and make him (a Sinner, and ſuch a ſinner) his ſign. As to come himſelf in the ſimilitude of ſinful fleſh; ſo, to make ſinful fleſh his ſimilitude, to come into a ſicut with. All, that ſinful fleſh might have hope in the Signatum, in him, of whom this was the ſign. This, theirs, and ours.

Rom. 8. 3.

For us, Propheta gentium

The next is ours, and we highly to bleſs God for it: that being to ſet his ſign in a Prophet, he would do it in him; chooſe him out, to make him his pattern, who was Propheta Gentium, the Prophet of the Gentiles, ſent to propheſie to Ninive, that were Heathen, as we and our fathers were. And in that a Non niſi too: For, none but he was ſo; never a Prophet of them all, ſent to the Heathen: the reſt, to the Jews, all. This ſending of his, to the Gentiles, was, to us of the Gentiles, a gate of hope, that in former ages, and long before Chriſt came in the fleſh, we Gentiles were not forgotten. Even then ſent God a Prophet to Ninive. And what was Ninive? the head City of the Aſſyrians, the greateſt Monarchy then in being, and ſo the principal place of all Paganiſm. That thus, in ſigno, we were not forgotten, a ſign it was, no more ſhould we be in ſignati; but Chriſt be to us, as Jonas to them, a light to lighten the Gentiles; and his ſalvation to the uttermoſt parts of the earth.

Hoſ. 2. 4, 5.

Luk. 2. 32. Eſa. 49. 6.

Primus Prophetarum.

Let us add this yet more, to our comfort. This Jonas, whom he thus ſent on this errand to the Gentiles, what was he? Of all the Prophets, all, whoſe prophecies vve have remaining on record in the Bible; the four great, the twelve leſs, of them all, all the ſixteen, he was the firſt in time, Senior to them all. Plain by 2 Kings 14. that he propheſied long before any of them. For, it is there ſaid, that his propheſie came to paſs, in the dayes of Jeroboam the Second, who lived the ſame time with Uzzia in Juda. And, in Uzzia's time, the eldeſt of all the reſt, did but begin to propheſie. So, his was done, before theirs was begun. Him, that vvas thus firſt in the ranck of them all did God ſend to us Gentiles; to us firſt, before any, to the Jews. A ſign, vve vvere not laſt; nay firſt in his care: in that, viſited by him firſt, as to whom he ſent the firſt of all the ſixteen. And, I may ſay to you, this was to them an Item, as if God were now to turn Gentile, as looking that way, having a mind to them then, even in Jonas time; they to come in ſhortly, and the Jews to be ſhut out: and that, as they had then priority in ſigno, ſo ſhould they no leſs, in ſignato, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles came in before the converſion of the Jews. This to us ſinners, to us ſinners of the Gentiles, was ſalutare ſignum, a healthful ſign every way.

2 King. 14. 25.

Rom. 11. 15.

Theſe three are put, on the by. In the main point of the Text, and of the time, two more.

1. Jonas Signum Non niſi, As Piacularis hoſtia.

He, and non niſi, none but he, had the honour to be a piacularis hoſtia (as it were) for, the caſting him into the ſea, ſerved (in a ſort) as a kind of expiatory ſacrifice, as far, as to the temporal ſaving of the ſhip he ſailed in. And therein, as a meet ſign, he expreſſed Him, whoſe death was (after) the full and perfect expiation of the ſins of the whole world.

2. As Propheta redivivus.

Then again Jonas, and non niſi, only he was propheta redivivus; that, his peculiar, above them all. He the only Prophet, that went down into the deep, into the Whales belly, and came forth again alive. Dead he was not, but (lege viventium) after the law of the living, one throwen overboard, into the Sea in a tempeſt, to all intents, may be given for dead; and ſo (I dare ſay) all the mariners in the ſhip gave Jonas. That he came out again alive, it was by ſpecial grace, not by courſe of nature. For from the Whales belly he came (for all the world) as if one ſhould have come out of his grave; riſen again.

1 Reg. 17. 23.

Among the Jews, it goes for currant, the Rabbins take it up one after another, that this Jonas was the Widow of Sareptas ſon, the child, whom Elias raiſed from death to life (1 Reg. 17.) If ſo: then well might he be a ſign; A ſign, dead in his cradle, once: as good as dead in the Whales belly, now again:

In

In both, resembling him, vvhose sign he was, if both be true: But, one is most certain; and, to that, we hold us. And this is (indeed) the main scope, the scope of the Text, and of the Day.

One more, and I have done; and that is, of the time: precise three dayes and three nights; For, in this a Non nisi. For, none but he, so: just three, neither more nor less. For, I ask, why not the sign of Joseph, or of Daniel? [a] Joseph vvas in the dungeon, among condemned persons to dye: [b] Daniel in the Lions den, as deadly a place, as the Whales belly: yet neither of them, made the sign of Christ. Why? Joseph was in the dungeon too long: Daniel, too short, but a night; not long enough, to represent Christ being in his grave. Only Jonas time, just. And the time is it here. Else might the others have been his sign well enough, for the matter, if that had been all. 3. A three dayes & three nights in the Whales belly.

But, the time is still stood on, and the dayes numbred: that His Disciples, that all might know, how long, he vvould be from them, and not a day longer. And this, not without good cause. This day, vvas but the third day: and, this day, they were at sperabamus, did hope; did, but (now) do not; their hope was fallen into a tertian: that, it was time, he vvere up again. This Sign set, that they might know for a surety, by this day at the farthest, they should hear of Him again. Luk. 24.21.

Of vvhich three. To verifie his being there three dayes, it is enough, if he vvere there but a part of every one of them: for, it is not three whole dayes. As, in common phrase of speech, we say, the Sun shone, or it rained these three dayes past, though it did not so, all day long, but some part only of each. And if it rained at all, in every of them, we say true: It is enough. And so here, the first day of the three, Jonas was in the ship, and Christ on the Cross, till friday, somewhat before the Sun-set. All the second day, Jonas was in the whale, Christ in his Sepulcher. The third day Jonas came out of the Whale, and Christ out of his grave, as it might be about the Sun-rising; for, this day, both Suns rose together.

To verifie the three nights: that do we, reckoning as did the Jews (and that, by warrant out of the Gen. 1) the evening and the morning but for one, so, drawing still the precedent night, and computing it with the succeeding day. So do they still: the night past, with the day following, as (in Genesis) they are taught; and vve doing so, it vvill fall out right. Gen. 1.5, 8, &c.

To the Sicut then, of these three dayes. There is in each of them, set down a several state of Jonas; and so of Christ. 1. Their going thither: 2. Their being there: 3. And their coming thence. The Sicut of these three dayes.

Thus fell it the first day: Ionas was at sea, in a ship: A great tempest came; so great, as the ship was upon casting away. 1. In their going thither. Good-friday.

Of tempests, some are of course, have their causes in nature; and, in them, art and strength vvill do good. With Ionàs (here) it did not prevail a whit. Thereby, they knew it to be one out of course, of Gods immediate sending. Joh. 1.4,5.

God sends not such tempests, but he is angry. He is not angry, but with sin. Some great Sinner then, there is in the ship, and if the ship vvere vvell rid of him, all vvould be calm again.

To lots they went: Ionas was found to be the party.

Being found, rather then all should be cast away, he bid frankly, Tolite me & projicite, Take me, cast me into the sea. Jon. 1.12.

Cast in he was, and the storm ceased streight, and the ship came safe home. And the evening and the morning were the first day.

Will ye see now, what was acted in Ionas, actually fulfilled in Christ? But (first) vvill ye note, that vvhat is (in the Old Testament) vvritten of Ionas, is not onely historia vera, but Sacramentum magnum, not a bare Story only, but besides the story, pregnant also vvith a great Mistery. Not only, a deed done, but further, a sign of a deed to be done, of a far higher nature; dico autem in Christo, I speak it as of Christ and his Resurrection: Of that history, this the mystery, this, the Sacramentum magnum. Ephes. 5.32.

Will ye note again; it is on Christs side with advantage. Sicut Ionas (saith this verse) but ecce plus quàm Ionas (saith the next;) and both may stand; There may be a sicut, where yet there may be a plus quàm; a likeness in quality, where an exceeding in degree, though. Indeed, sicut makes not a non nisi; plus quàm doth: and we then, so to remember the sicut in this, as we forget not the plus quàm, in that. No more vvill vve. Ver. 41.

And now, vveigh them over vvell, and vvhithersoever ye look, ye shall find a plus quàm. Plus, in the ship, in the tempest, in the cause, in the danger, in the casting in, in the coming out again: In every one, a plus quàm. All that was, in Ionas, in Christ more conspicuous, and after a more excellent manner; in signato, then in signo. That so, in this, as in all else, Christ may have the preheminence. Col. 1.18.

To begin then. It is no new thing to resemble the Church, the Common-wealth, yea the World, to a ship. A ship there was, not a small bark of Ioppa, but plus quàm, a Great Ark, or Argosy, wherein was imbarqued all mankind, having their course through the Main Ocean of the vvorld, bound for the Port of Eternal bliss. And, in this great Carrick, among the sons of men, the Son of Man (as he terms himself) became also a passenger, even as did Ionas, in his small bottom of Ioppa.

Then rose there a tempest. A tempest it self, and the cause of all tempests (the heavy vvrath of God, ready to seise upon sinners) which made such a foul sea, as this great ship, and all in it were upon the point to be cast away. The plus (here) is plain: take it, but as it was indeed literally. For what a tempest was there at Christs death! It shook the Temple, rent the veil, clefts the stones, opened the graves, put out the Sun's light, was seen and felt all the world over; as if heaven and earth would have gone together. But, the miserable storm, then, who shall declare? Cha 27.51, 52

And, no marvel: there was a great plus in the cause. For, if the sin of one poor passenger (of Ionas) made such a foul sea: the sins of the great Hulk, that bore in it all mankind together in one bottom, what manner tempest (think you) were they like to raise? In what hazard, the vessel, that loaden with them all? But one fugitive, there: here, all run-awayes, from God, Masters, Marriners, Passengers and all.

Now,

Now, the greater the Veſſel, the more ever the danger. With Ionas but a handful like to miſcarry: In this, the whole maſs of Mankind like to periſh. So, in the peril, Plus too.

The ſtorm will not be ſtayed neither, till ſome be caſt into the ſea: and ſome great ſinner it would be: And here the ſicut ſeems, as if it would not hold: here, the only Non ſicut Ionas. For Ionas there, was the only ſinner; all beſides, in the ſhip, innocent poor men. Here, Chriſt only, in the ſhip, Innocent, no ſinner; all the ſhip beſides, full fraught with ſinners: Mariners, and Paſſengers, grievous ſinners, all. Here it ſeems to halt.

And yet, I cannot tell you neither, for all that. For, in ſome ſenſe, Chriſt was not unlike Ionas; no, not in this point: but, like Ionas, as in all other reſpects, ſo, in this too. Not, as conſidered in Himſelf; for ſo, 2 Cor. 5. 22. he knew no ſin: But, Him that knew no ſin, for us made he ſin: How? By laying on Him, the iniquities of Eſay. 53. 6. us all, even of all the ſons of men, upon his Son of Man. And, ſo conſidered, he is not only Sicut, but plus quàm Ionas here. More ſin on him, then on Ionas: fory on him, the ſins of the whole ſhip, yea Ionas's ſin and all.

For all that, here is another plus, though. For what Ionas ſuffered, it was for his own ſin, and merito haec Luk. 23. 41. patimur might he ſay (and we both) with the Thief on the Croſs. But Chriſt, what had he done? It was Pſal. 69. 4. not for his own, it was for other mens ſins, he ſuffered, He paid the things he never took. So much the more 1 Pet. 3. 18. likely was he, to ſatisfie; the juſt, for the unjuſt; the Lord, for the ſervant: Much more, then if one ſinner or ſervant ſhould do it for another.

Yet was Chriſt, as was Ionas, content to be thrown in. Tollite me (ſaid Ionas;) Sinite hos abire, (ſaid John 1. 12. Chriſt) let theſe go. Take me, my life ſhall anſwer for theirs; as it did. As content (ſaid I?) Nay, plus, Joh. 18. 8. more. For, with Ionas, there was no other way, to ſtay the ſtorm, but overboard with him. But, Chriſt had Chap. 8. 26. other wayes; could have ſtayed it with his word, with his Obmutesce, as he did (the VIII. Chapter, before) Mat. 3. 15. needed not to have been caſt in: Yet, to fulfil all righteouſneſs, condeſcended to it (though;) and in he Eſa. 53. 7. was thrown, not of neceſſity (as Jonas) but, quia voluit: and Voluit, quia nos ſalvos voluit, would have us ſafe, and his Fathers Juſtice ſafe, both.

Now to the effect. Therewith the ſtorm ſtayed, Gods wrath was appeaſed, mankind ſaved: Here, the plus is evident. That of Ionas was but Salus phaſeli, no more: This was Salus mundi, no leſs. A poor boat, with the whole World, what compariſon? And the evening and the morning were Good-friday, Chriſts firſt day.

2. In their bethere. Eaſter Eve.

To Ionas, now, ſecundò: He was drowned by the means. Nay, not ſo: God (before, angry) was then pacified: Pacified, not only with the ſhip, but pacified with Ionas too: provided a Whale, in ſhew, to devour him; indeed not to devour, but to preſerve him; down he went into her belly.

There he was, but took no hurt there. 1. As ſafe, nay, more ſafe there, than in the beſt ſhip of Tharſis; no flaw of weather, no foul ſea could trouble him there. 2. As ſafe, and as ſafely carried to land: The ſhip could have done no more. So that upon the matter, he did but change his vehiculum; ſhifted but from one veſſel to another; went on his way ſtill. 3. On he went, as well, nay better than the ſhip would have carried him; went into the ſhip, the ſhip carried him wrong, out of his way clean, to Tharſis-ward: Went into the Whale, and the Whale carried him right, landed him on the next ſhore to Nineve; whither (in truth) he was bound, and where his errand lay. 4. And all the while, at good eaſe, as in a cell or ſtudie; For, there, he indited a Pſalm, expreſſing in it, his certain hope of getting forth again. So as, in effect, where he ſeemed to be in moſt danger, he was in greateſt ſafety. Thus can God work. And the even- Jonas 2. 2, 6. ing and the morning, were Iona's ſecond day.

The like now, in Chriſt: but ſtill with a plus quàm. Do but compare the Whales belly, with the heart of the earth, and you ſhall find, the Whale that ſwallowed Chriſt (that is, the grave) was another manner Whale, far wider throated than that of Ionas. That Whale caught but one Prophet, but Ionas; This, hath ſwouped up Patriarks, and Prophets, and all; yea, and Ionas himſelf too. None hath ſcaped the jaws of it.

And, more hard getting out (I am ſure;) witneſs Ionas. Into the Whales belly he went, and thence he gate out again. After, he gate thence, into the heart of the earth he went, and thence he gate not: there he is ſtill.

The Sign lyes, in this, by the letter of the Text. And, in Chriſt, the ſign greater. For, though to ſee a Whale tumble with a Prophet in the belly, were a ſtrange ſight: yet, more ſtrange, to ſee the Son of God, lye dead in the earth: and, as ſtrange again, to ſee the Son of man, to riſe from the grave again, alone. A double ſign in it.

The heart of the earth (with Juſtin Martyr, Chryſoſtome, Auguſtine) I take for the grave: though (I know) Origen, Nyſſen, Theodoret take it for hell, for the place, where the Spirits are (as, in the body, that Col. 2. 15. is the place of them.) And, thither he went in Spirit, and triumphed over the powers and principalities there, in his own perſon. But for his body, it was the day of reſt, the laſt Sabbath that ever was: and then his bo-
Pſal. 16. 10. dy did reſt, reſt in hope, hope of what? That neither his ſoul ſhould be left in hell, nor his fleſh ſuffered to ſee corruption. For Chriſt had his Pſalm too, as well as Ionas. David compoſed it for him long before (the XVI. Pſalm, the Pſalm of the Reſurrection.) And ſo the evening and the morning were Chriſts ſecond day. Eaſter eve.

3. In their coming thence. Eaſter day. Jons. 2. 10. 33.

Now to Jonas's ultimò. Ionas his hope failed him not; the Whales belly, that ſeemed his tomb, proved his womb, or ſecond birth-place. There he was: not, as meat in the ſtomack; but, as an Embrio, in the matrix of his mother. Strange! the Whale to be as his mother, to be delivered of him; and bring him forth into the world again. So, forth he came, and to Nineve about his buſineſs. Thither he went, to bring them out of the Whales belly too. And the evening and the morning were Jonas's third day.

Now the Whale could not hold Jonas, no more could the grave Chriſt, longer than this morning, after breake of day: But, forth came He too. And with a plus quàm, in reſpect of Ionas. It was in ſtrict ſpeech, with Ionas, no reſurrection; For the truth is, he was never dead: never he, but putative. But, Chriſt, was dead, ſtarke dead, indeed ſlaine out-right upon the Croſſe, His heart pierced, His heartblood ranne out. And, for dead taken downe, laid in, ſealed up in His grave, a ſtone rolled on Him, a watch ſet over Him. Made ſure (I trow) and roſe for all that. Iohn 19. 34. Matth. 27. 66.

Another. Ionas riſing, the Whale gaped wide, and ſtrained hard, and up came Ionas. It was long of the Whale, not of him, or any power of his. But, Chriſt, by His own power, broke the barres of death, and loſed the ſorrowes of hell, of which it is impoſſible He ſhould be holden. Acts 2. 24.

A third. Ionas roſe but to the ſame ſtate, he was in before; but mortall Ionas ſtill: When hee ſcaped, he drew his chaine after him, and by the end of it was plucked backe againe afterward. But, Chriſt left them, and linnen clothes and all, in the grave behinde Him; roſe to a better, to ultrà non moriturus, never to die more, He. Rom. 6. 9.

And (in a word) the great plus quàm. Ionas was but ejectus in aridam: But, Chriſt was receptus in gloriam. And, in ſigne of it, the place whereon Ionas was caſt, was drie land, or cliffes, where nothing growes. The place, wherein Chriſt roſe, was a well-watered garden, wherein, the ground was in all her glory, freſh and greene, and full of flowers, at the inſtant of His riſing, this time of the yeare. So, as He went lower, ſo Hee roſe higher, then ever did Ionas, with a great Ecce plus quàm.

And yet, behold a greater than all theſe. For, Ionas, when he came forth, came forth, and there was all; left the Whale, as he found it. But, Ecce plus quàm Ionas hîc, plus quàm indeed. Chriſt ſlew the Whale that devoured Him, in the comming forth; was mors mortis: He left not the grave, as He found it, but altered the propertie, nay changed the very nature of it, by His riſing. Verſe 42.

Three changes Hee made in it, very plainly: 1. Of a pit of perdition, which it was before, He hath made it now an haboure of reſt, Reſt in hope. Hope of a new; not the ſame it was before, but a better, farre, with a great Plus quàm.

2. Made it againe (as the whale, to Ionas, was) a convoy, or paſſing boat, to a better Port, than any is in our Tharſis here; even, to the haven of happineſſe, and heavens bliſſe without end. This for the ſoule. Acts 2. 26.

3. And, for the body, made the grave, as a wombe for a ſecond birth, to travell with us anew, and bring us forth to life everlaſting; Made cor terræ ventrem ejus, the heart of the earth, to us as the belly of the Whale was to Ionas, which did not ſtill retaine him. That, did not him, nor this ſhall not us; ſhall not hold us ſtill, no more than the Whale did him, or the grave did Chriſt. There ſhall be a comming forth out of both. And, when God ſhall ſpeake to the earth (as to the Whale, He did) the Sea and Grave both ſhall yeeld up their dead, and deliver them up alive againe. Apoc. 20. 13.

The very terme [of the heart of the earth] was well choſen. There is heart in it. For, if the earth have an heart, there is life in it; for, the heart is the fountaine of life, and the ſeat of the vitall ſpirits, that hold us in it. So, there is (wee ſee:) for, the earth, dead for a time (all the Winter) now, when the waters of heaven fall on it, ſhewes, it hath life, bringing forth herbs and flowers again. And, even ſo, when the waters above the heavens, and namely the dew of this day diſtilling form Chriſt's riſing, ſhall in like ſort drop upon it, it ſhall be (ſaith Eſay, Chap. XXVI.) as the dew of the herbs, and the earth ſhall give forth her dead. Dead men as it doth dead plants now freſh and green again, in the ſpring of the yeare. And ſo, the evening and the morning were Chriſt's third day, this day, Eaſter-day morning. Eſay 26. 19.

Thus many wayes doth this ſicut hold, and hold with a plus quàm. Were it not great pitie now, that Chriſt, who is ſo many wayes plus quàm Ionas, for all this ſhould come to be minus quàm Ionas, in this laſt, the chiefe of all? For, this is the chief. Ionas, after he came out of the whale, brought to paſſe that famous repentance, the repentance of Ninive: At Iona's preaching, they repented at Ninive; at Chriſt's they did not, in Ieruſalem. Jonas 3. 5.

We ſhall mend this, if we be as the Ninivites; repent as they. As they? Abſit ut ſic (ſaith Saint Auguſtine; but addes then) ſed utinam vel ſic. As they? God forbid we ſhould be but as they: As Chriſt was more then Ionas, ſo Chriſtians ſhould be more than Ninivites. Well, in the mean time, I would we were, but as they; but ſo farre on-ward, never plead for a plus, but be content with Sicut, and never ſeeke more: But, that, we muſt: For, leſſe (ſure) we cannot be, Chriſt to be plus quàm Ionas, we to be minus quàm Ninivita, it will not fit, it holds no proportion. What this ſigne portends. Pſal. 86. 16.

The Sicut (ye ſee) and the plus quàm, both. Now, what is the profit of this ſigne of the Prophet? This ſigne being of Chriſts giving, Chriſt gives no ſigne, but it is ſignum in bonum, a ſigne for good, a good ſigne; and a good ſigne is a ſigne of ſome good. Of what good is this a ſigne? Of hope of comming forth (ſure.) Comming forth, whence? From a whale. What is meant by the whale? (the deliverance) (moſt what) is, as the whale is.) And three Whales we finde here: 1. Iona's Whale: 2. Chriſts Whale: 3. and a third: And, hope we have, to come forth of all three.

Firſt, Iona's whale; death it was not, it was but danger; but danger as near death as could be; never man, in more danger to ſcape it, than he; if not in death, in Zalmaveth, in the vale of the ſhadow of death, it was. Pſal. 23. 4.

Of any, that hath been in extreme perill, we uſe to ſay; he hath been where Jonas was; By Iona's going down the whales throat, by Him againe comming forth of the Whales mouth, we expreſſe, we even point out the greateſt extremity, and the greateſt deliverance that can be. From any ſuch danger, a deliverance is a kinde of reſurrection, as the Apoſtle plainly ſpeakes of Iſaac, when the knife was at his throat, he was received from the dead ὅθεν ἐν παραβολῇ though yet he died not. This for the feaſt of the Reſurrection. Heb. 11. 19.

And thus, was, Jonas a ſigne to them of Ninive. As he eſcaped, ſo they: he his Whale, they their (deſtruction:) which even gaped for them, as wide as Jona's Whale. And, as to them a ſigne, this; ſo, to us. And, this uſe we have of it; When at any time, we are hard beſtead, this ſigne then to be ſet up for a token. And there is no danger ſo deadly, but we may hold faſt our hope, if we ſet this ſigne before us, and ſay, What, we are not (yet) in the Whales belly; why, if wee were there, from thence can God bring us though, as Jonas He did.

Jona's Whale was but the ſhadow of death: Chriſts was death. And, even there, in death, to be ſet up. And, we, no not in death it ſelf; to deſpaire, but (with Iob) to ſay, yea, though He kill me, yet will I truſt in Him. My breath, I may; my hope, I will not forgoe: expirare poſſum, deſperare non poſſum. Here now is out ſecond hope, to come forth, to be delivered, from Chriſts Whale, from death it ſelf.

Iob 13. 15. But, if the Whale be, or betoken the death of the body; it doth much more, the death of the ſoul, So ſhall we finde another Whale, yet, a third. And that Whale is the red Dragon, that great ſpirituall Le-

Apoc. 12. 3. viathan, Satan. And ſinne, the very jawes of this Whale, that ſwoupeth down the ſoul firſt, and then the bodie, and in the end both. Jonas had been deep down this Wales throat, before ever he came in the others: The Land-Whale had devoured him, before ever the Sea-Whale medled with him. In his flight, he fell into this Land-Whales jawes, before ever the Sea-Whale ſwallowed him up. And, when he had got out of the gorge of this ghoſtly Leviathan, the other bodily Whale could not long hold him. And from this third Whale was Jonas ſent, to deliver the Ninivites: which when he had, the other (of their temporall deſtruction) could doe them no hurt. Their repentance rid them of both Whales, bodiy nd ghoſtly, at once.

Here then is a third Cape of good hope: that, though one had been down as deep in the entrailes of the ſpirituall great Leviathan, as ever was Jonas in the Sea-whales, yet, even there alſo, not to deſpaire. He that brought Jonas from the deep of the Sea, and David from the deep of the Earth (his body, ſo:) He Pſal. 71. 20. Pſal. 86. 13. alſo delivered his ſoul from the nethermoſt hell, where Jonas and He both were, while they were in the tranſgreſſion.

And now, by this, are we come to the very Signature of this ſigne, even to Repentance, which followeth in the very next word, for they repented, at the preaching of Jonas. Jonas preached it: and (indeed) none

Verſe 41. ſo fit to preach on that them (on repentance) as he, as one that hath been in the Whales belly; in both the Whales, the ſpirituall Whales too (for Jonas had been, in both.) One that hath ſtudied his ſermon there, been in Satans ſieve, well winnowed (cribratus Theologus) he will handle the point beſt, as being, not only a Preacher, but a ſigne of repentance (as, Jonas was both) to the Ninivites.

And, as Jonas, ſo Chriſt: how ſoon He was riſen, He gave order ſtraight, that repentance (as the very Luke 24. 47. vertue, the ſtamp of his Reſurrection) and, by it, remiſſion of ſinnes ſhould be preached in His name to all nations.

But (indeed) if you mark well, there is a neare alliance between the Reſurrection and Repentance; reciprocall, as between the Signe, and the Signature. Repentance is nothing, but the ſouls reſurrection:

Epheſ. 2. 1. Men are dead in ſinne (ſaith the Apoſtle:) their ſouls are. From that death, there is a riſing: Elſe were it wrong with us. That riſing, is repenting: And when one hath lien dead in ſinne long, and doth eluctari, wraſtle out of a ſinne, that hath long ſwallowed him up, he hath done as great a maſtery, as if (with Jonas) he had got out of the Whales belly; Nay, as if (with Lazarus) he had come out of the heart of the earth. Ever holding this, that Mary Magdalen raiſed from ſinne, was no leſſe a miracle, than her brother raiſed from the dead.

And ſure, Repentance is the very vertue of Chriſts Reſurrection. There, it is firſt ſeen, it firſt ſheweth it ſelf, hath his firſt operation, in the ſoul, to raiſe it.

This firſt being once wrought on the ſoul, from the ghoſtly Leviathan, the like will not fail, but be ac-

Epheſ. 5. 32. compliſhed on the body, from the other of death; of which Jonas is here, Myſterium magnum, dico autem in Chriſto. For, in Chriſt, this ſigne is a ſigne, not betokening onely, but exhibiting alſo what it betokeneth, as the Sacraments doe. For, of ſignes, ſome ſhew onely, and work nothing, ſuch was that of Jonas, in it ſelf; Sed Ecce plus quàm Jonas hîc: For, ſome other there be, that ſhew and work what they ſhew; preſent

Verſe 42. us, with what they repreſent; what they ſet before us, ſet or graft in us. Such is that of Chriſt. For, beſides that, it ſets before us, of His: it is further a ſeal or pledge, to us, of our own, that, what we ſee in Him this day, ſhall be accompliſhed in our own ſelves, at his good time.

And even ſo paſſe we to another Myſterie. For, one Myſterie leads us to another: this in the Text, to the holy Myſteries we are providing to partake, which doe work like, and do work to this: Even to the Apoc. 20. 5. raiſing of the ſoul with the firſt reſurrection. And, as they are a meanes for the raiſing of our ſoul, out of the ſoil of ſinne; (for, they are given us and we take them expreſly for the remiſſion of ſinnes:) ſo are they no leſſe a meanes alſo, for the raiſing our bodies out of the duſt of death. The ſigne of that Body, which was thus in the heart of the earth, to bring us from thence, at the laſt. Our Saviour ſaith it totidem verbis, Who

A SERMON

Preached before the

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of Aprill, being Easter-Day,

An. Dom. 1618.

1 Cor. Chap. XI. Ver. XVI.

Si quis autem videtur contentiosus esse, nos talem consuetudinem non habemus, neque Ecclesiæ Dei.

But if any man seem to be contentious, we have no such custome, neither the Churches of God.

THis is no Easter Text, as we are wont to have: Nothing of the Resurrection in it. It is not for the day.

It is not, directly: But if it should happen, there were any contention about Easter, that would bring it within the word [contentious] here. Specially, if that contention about Easter were, whether it hath been ever a custome in the Church of God, for that would bring it within in the word [custome] here mentioned: And so would it both wayes fall within the compass of the Text. The Custome of Easter, made a contention, would make it an Easter-day Text.

1 How the Text may serve for Easter.

I say not, any such contention there is: I desire to proceed (as the Apostle doth) without the least offence. 1. He saith not, there be any contentious, but if any seem to be. That any be contentious, it may not be said. They will deeply protest, that from their hearts they abhor all contentions, and desire to walk peaceably. Be not, then: but, seem to be.

The Text two wayes qualified

1 Videtur Seems.

2. Nay, not seem to be, neither: Saint Paul saith not so much: sayes only, si quis, if any; puts but a case (and there is no harm in that.) No more will we: go no further, than the Text: If any such seem to be, this Text tells what to do: If none be, none seem to be, it is but a case put. And so by way of supposition, be all said, that shall be.

2 Si quis If any.

All upon supposition.

Upon the view, three points give forth themselves: 1. Here are contentions; and 2. here are customs; and 3. customes, opposed to the contentions. These the three heads.

The Division

I. Contentions.

To break them yet further, into certain Theſes or propoſitions; to proceed by. 1. Firſt, it ſhould ſeem, there were contentions in the Apoſtles time. 2. Contentions, about what? About matter of circumſtance. So was this here, Whether men were to pray uncovered, and women veiled, or no? 3. And that there were, vvhich did not only contend, but (which is more) vvere even contentious about theſe. 4. For thoſe that vvere ſo, here is a Se quis ſet up, If any ſeem to be ſuch, vvhat to do to them.

II. Th Church Cuſtomes.

Not to paſs them in ſilence, and ſay nothing to them: but this to ſay: We have no ſuch cuſtome, nor the Churches of God. And ſo oppoſe the Churches cuſtome to contention.

In which ſaying, there are theſe heads: 1. Firſt, that the Church hath her cuſtomes. 2. As ſhe hath them, ſo ſhe may, and doth alledg them. 3. And alledg them finally (as the Apoſtle here, we ſee, reſolveth the vvhole matter into them, as into a final reſolution.) 4. And all this by Scripture confirmed: even by this Scripture: on which, the cuſtomes of the Church are grounded, and the power that ſhall be ever in them, to over-rule the contentious.

Non habemus talem. Mat. 12. 39. The Text the laſt year. Negative in the Affirmative, in effect. The two marks of a tight cuſtome. I. III. The Church cuſtome for keeping Eaſter.

And let not this move you, that it ſeems to be negative, Non habemus talem. As (this time twelve moneth) Non dabitur niſi (a negative in ſhew) proved an affirmative, Dabitur, ſed non niſi: So will this Non habemus talem, prove to Habemus, ſed non talem. Churches we have, but none ſuch. To apply it to the Apoſtles purpoſe: None to ſit covered at prayer, Non talem, None ſuch; but the contrary rather; To be uncovered then, talem, Such is our cuſtome; Such an one, the Church hath.

Where, becauſe this negative refers not to habemus, but to talem; And, a cuſtome is not therefore good, becauſe we have it, but becauſe it is talem, ſo qualified; The talem to be: 1. Firſt, if we (that is) the Apoſtles have had it, if it were Apoſtolick. The non talem to be, if our new Maſters have taken it up the other day, and the Apoſtles never knew it. 2. the talem to be, if the Churches of God in general have had it, if it be Catholick. The non talem to be, if the Church of Corinth, or ſome one Church perhaps had it, but the reſt never had any ſuch.

Then, will we deſcend to ſhew the keeping of Eaſter, to be ſuch: Ever in uſe vvith the Churches of God, from the time of the Apoſtles themſelves. Which, if we can make plain, here is a plain Text for it: That if one ſhould ask, What Scripture have you, why Eaſter may not be laid down? It may vvell be anſwered, Non habemus talem conſuetudinem, nec Eccleſia Dei, Cuſtome to keep it we have; the Apoſtles, the Church had it: but to aboliſh it, ſuch a cuſtome have we not; we depart from them both, if we do.

There wants not Scripture for Eaſter. Epiſt. 119. cap. 14. Pſal. 118. 24. 1 Cor. 5. 7, 8. But the Churches cuſtome is more kindly.

Proteſting yet, that we have no purpoſe to wave Scripture quite, for the keeping of Eaſter. S. Auguſtine is plain; Hoc ex authoritate divinarum Scripturarum; per anniverſarium Paſcha celebratur. Even by authority of divine Scripture it is, that every year, Eaſter is kept ſolemnly. We have touched two Scriptures heretofore: The day which the Lord hath made (118. Pſalm) applied ever to this Feaſt That Text for the Old. And for the New Teſtament, that verſe in this Epiſtle, Chriſt our Paſſover is offered, let us therefore keep a Feaſt.

But every thing ſtandeth faſt and ſure, upon his own baſe: and the right baſe of this, I take to be Cuſtome. We do but make our ſelves to be pitied other while, when we ſtand wringing the Scriptures, to ſtrain that out of them, that is not in them, and ſo can never come liquidè from them: when yet vve have for the ſame point, the Churches cuſtome clear enough. And that is enough, by vertue of this Text. There is, and ſhall be enough ever in this Text, to avow any Cuſtome: The Apoſtles, the Churches of God had it: to diſavow any; The Apoſtles, the Churches of God had it not.

The uſe of the third point about Eaſter. Eis. 30. 21.

The fruit of our labour will be this (I hope) at leaſt, to confirm us in the keeping of it. We keep Eaſter, many of us we know not upon what ground. By this, vve ſhall ſee, we have a ground for that we do. We do no more than the Churches of God, than the Apoſtles have done before us. So, our ears ſhall hear the voice in Eſay behind us, Hæc eſt via, This is the vvay: Ambulate in eâ, Walk in it, as you do, you are in the right, and there hold you.

I. 1. Contentions in the Apoſtles time. Gal. 4. 29. Gen. 25. 23.

IF any. This (if) I take it, is no idle if, no vain ſuppoſition; to ſay, if there be any, where there were none. No: contentions there were. When? when (we:) who be they? S. Paul and his fellow Apoſtles, vvhen they lived. And the Churches: what Churches? the Churches under them, of their times. In the very prime of the Primitive Church, then vvere there contentions.

And thoſe not with an enemy vvithout (Jew or Gentile;) that, were πόλεμοι, vvar abroad: this is νῖκος but a jar at home, among themſelves. That former (abroad) they repreſent by Iſmael and Iſaac, and they were of two venters. This latter (at home) by the two Twins in Rebeccas womb. (I fear the time: elſe could I let you ſee this ſtrife, in every Church of them.)

1 Pet. 4. 12.

This I note, firſt, that we may not ξενίζεσθαι (to uſe ſaint Peters terme) think it ſtrange, if there be contentions in our times. They ſhall be no ſtrangers with us, in ours: They were not vvith them, in theirs. Neither contentions (in this verſe:) Nor ſchiſmes (in the next, the 18.) Nor hereſies (in the 19. next to that.) It is of the firy tryal, Saint Peter ſpeaks it (of perſecution:) It is as true, of the watery trial (of contention.) As true it is of the laſt, as of the firſt Church: I proved thee alſo at the waters of ſtrife. Thoſe vvaters, the vvaters of Meriba, vvill hardly be dreined ever.

Pſal. 81. 7.

There

There were contentions then: About what? For, though peace be pretious, yet of ſuch moment may the matters be, as they are to be contended for, yea, even to the death. For what then were theſe? for nothing, but a matter of Rite: Iden praying, whether they ſhould be uncovered; and women, whether veiled or no. For a Hat and a Veil, was all this ado. It was not about any the high Myſteries, any of the vital parts of Religion, Preaching, Prayer, the Sacraments: Only about the manner, how; the geſture and behaviour, wherewith, in what ſort, to carry themſelves, at Preaching, Prayer, the Sacraments: about matter of circumſtance meerly, and nothing elſe. 2. Contentions about matter of circumſtance. Verſe 4, 5.

And even theſe, even the meaneſt things would be done for the better, not for the worſe (ſaith the Apoſtle, in the next verſe.) And the more order, the better. So the Apoſtle had ſet orders for them, and inter alia, for this too. Other his ordinances (he ſaith) they remembred well, but not this; this was oppoſed. For, with ſome, all is not worth a ruth, if they ſee no further than their fellows, nay their betters, then: if they find not ſomewhat to find fault with, if it be but a ceremony. And to pick a quarrel with a ceremony, is eaſie. A plauſible theme, not to burthen the Church with ceremonies: the Church to be free: which hath almoſt freed the Church of all decency. Ver. 2.

About ſuch points as theſe, were there that did no only contend, but that grew contentious. Now is one thing, to contend: φιλονεικία another, to be contentious. The Apoſtle ſaith not, if any contend: but, ſi quis contentioſus. And (eſto) is ſuppoſed: φιλόνεικος is one that loves it, is given to it. Strange, any ſuch ſhould be: But the Apoſtles if, proves to be no if. We ſee it daily, in perſons but meanly qualified (God wot) yet ſo peremptory, as if the word of God had come, if not from them, yet to them only, and none beſides. Good Lord! why ſhould any love to be contentious? Why? It is the way to be ſome body. In time of peace, what reckoning is there of Wat Tiler, or Jack Straw? Make a ſedition, and they will bear a brain with the beſt. Primianus and Maximianus were the head of the two factions of Donatiſts in S. Auguſtines time. He ſaith, it was well for them, that faction fell out: Elſe, Primianus might have been Poſtremianus, and Maximianus be Minimianus, well enough. But now, in ſchiſm, either of them was a jolly fellow, head of a party; This makes we ſhall never want contentious perſons, and they will take order, we ſhall never want contentions. 3. Yea, contentioſuneſs, which is more than contention. 1 Cor. 14. 26.

Well, if any ſuch ſhould happen to be, what is to be done in ſuch a caſe? what ſaith the Apoſtle? Saith he thus? Seeing it is no greater matter, it skils not greatly whether they do it or no, covered or bare, ſit or kneel, all's one: lets it light, and lets it go. No: but cals them back to the cuſtome of the Church, will not have them ſwerve from that; makes a matter of it. For (we ſee) he preſſes the point hard; ſpends many words, many verſes, even half the Chapter about it. 4. Such contention not to be neglected.

Why doth he ſo? For two reaſons: 1. First, he likes not contention at all. Why? If it be not taken at the firſt, within a while (within one verſe after) ye ſhall hear of a ſchiſm (look the 18 ver.) And within a little after that (look but to the 19.) ye ſhall have a flat hereſie of it. The one draws on the other: if the contentious humour be not let out, it will feſter ſtraight, and prove to an apoſthume. Not any contention.

2. Nor, he likes not the matter, wherefore; (though it ſeem but ſmall.) Saint Paul knew Satans method well: he ſeems ſomewhat ſhame-faſt at firſt, asks but ſome ſmall trifle: Give him but that, he will be ready for greater points. If he win ground in the Ceremonies, then have at the Sacrament: If he can diſgrace the one, it will not be long, but ye ſhall hear of him at the other. No, nor in theſe ſmall matters. For, from Ceremonies to Sacraments.

Speak I beſide the book? was it not ſo here? At the very next verſe, there he fals in hand with an abuſe of the Sacrament, and that takes up the reſt of the Chapter.

For, when they had ſit covered at Prayer a while, they grew even as unreverent, as homely with the Sacrament: Eat and drunk there, as if they had been at home, in triclinio; that the Apoſtle is fain to tell them (at the 22. verſe) They had homes to be homely at: the Church, the houſe of God, they were to be uſed with greater reverence. He did not commend them for this their rude carriage, at the Sacrament. Did not commend them? you know what that meaneth (minus dicitur, plus intelligitur.) He blamed them much for it.

Then, are we to make ſtay at theſe leſs matters at firſt (as the Apoſtle doth.) To think the Wiſe-mans councel worth the following, Ne ſit tibi minimum, non negligere minima, Count it no ſmall matter, not to neglect ſmall matters. What ſo ſmall as an hair? when theſe ſmall hairs were gone from Samſon, his ſtrength left him. In it ſelf, in his own nature, a Rite is not ſo much: This is much; that by it, they learn to break the Churches orders; and that thereby they are fleſhed, to go on to greater matters. Judg. 16. 19.

Oppoſing then to theſe, what courſe takes he? Layes for his ground, this, Non habemus talem. The force of his reaſon is, If we, if the Churches of God, had any ſuch cuſtom, it were ſomewhat; that were warrant enough, for a Rite. But now, we and they both, have none ſuch; nay, we and they have the quite contrary; therefore, let us hear no more of it. II. To theſe contentions, the Church cuſtome oppoſeth.

Where, it is plain, the Apoſtle is for the Church-cuſtomes. 1. And firſt, that ſhe hath them. Every Society, beſide their Laws in books, have their cuſtomes alſo in practice: and thoſe, not to be taken up, or laid down, at every mans pleaſure. The Civil Law ſaith this of Cuſtome, Imò magnæ authoritatis hoc jus habetur: quod in tantum probatum eſt, ut non fuerit ſcripto comprehendere neceſſe. Men (it ſeems) had a great good liking to their cuſtomes, that they remembred them without-book, that they never needed to be put in writing, as their Laws and Statutes did. Now, as every Society, ſo the Church, beſides her habemus legem, hath her habemus conſuetudinem too. There is ſuch a thing, as mos populi Dei. 2. The Church hath her cuſtomes. Pand. 1. Tit. 3. de legib. 35.

And fear not traditions a whit. Thoſe reſpect credenda, points of Doctrine: Theſe, but agenda, matters of Practice: And that, not in points of ſubſtance; reach only to matter of circumſtance, go no further. Nor do vve even them with, much leſs oppoſe them to, that which is written. Never any cuſtome, againſt that: No cuſtome, that comes from the will or wit of man, againſt Scripture, which comes from the wiſdom and will of God. But, hæc oportuit facere, & illa non omittere. Only ſo.

Mat. 23. 23.

The Apoſtles and their Churches had their cuſtoms.

The Church then, hath her cuſtomes. I add, theſe (we) here (that is) the Apoſtles had them; and the Churches under them, had theirs. It was but early day then, yet had they their cuſtoms, even then. At the writing of this Epiſtle, it was not (at the moſt) thirty years from Chriſts Aſcention. If that were time enough, to make a cuſtome: Now, after theſe twenty times thirty years, and thirty times thirty years, and a hundred years to ſpare, ſhall it not be a cuſtome now, by much better right? A cuſtome is ſuſceptible of more and leſs: The further it goeth, the longer it runneth, the more ſtrength it gathereth; the more gray haires it getteth, the more venerable it is: for indeed, the more a cuſtome it is.

The Church alledgeth her cuſtomes.

Mat. 19. 8.

Now then, as the Church hath them, ſo ſhe ſtands upon them; feats not (we ſee) to alledg them, to ſay habemus, or non habemus. Habemus, to uphold an ancient good one: Non habemus, to lay down an evil one, new taken up.

Here, negative, Non habemus talem. As our Saviour likewiſe, A principio non fuit ſic. And yet, by implication, this here is, One we have, but not ſuch an one. And our Saviours there, a way there was from the beginning, but this was not it.

In the affirmative.

Hath ever ſo alledged. Moſes. Deut. 4. 12. Job 8. 8.

But otherwhere, it is poſitive alſo, to affirm, and to maintain a good: And men poſitively referred, to know, vvhat hath been the uſe in former times.

Higher than Moſes, we cannot go. Moſes as a Law-giver, one would think would be all for Law. He is poſitive full, for cuſtome too. Enquire (ſaith he) of the dayes that be paſt, them is hath gone, ſince the day God created the earth. (And that, in the ſecond edition, or ſetting forth of the Law.)

Job is for it too: Enquire, I pray you, of the former Age, and ſet your ſelves to ask after the Fathers (for we are but of yeſterday) ſhall not they tell you, thus, and thus it was in their times?

The Prophets. Jer. 6. 16.

And, ſay not the Prophets the ſame? Stand upon the wayes (it is Jeremy) and there look for the good old way, and that way take, it is the only way to find reſt for your ſouls.

The Fathers.

To all which agreeable is that wherewith I ſhall ſhut up this point; which all the Fathers in the firſt Nicene Councel took up, and which, ever ſince, hath been the Churches cry, τὰ ἀρχαῖα ἔθη κρατείτω, Mos antiquus obtineat: Let old cuſtomes prevail, let them carry it. By this you ſee, habemus conſuetudinem, hath been counted a ſound allegation, not only from the Apoſtles, but even from Moſes time.

The Badges of a right cuſtome, two.

And now, for the talem, For, it is not the habemus that binds, but the talem. Not becauſe we have it, but becauſe it is ſo qualified. It is not every cuſtome, hand over head, we may ſtand on. Why binds not this? 1. Becauſe though it may be, it was at Corinth (Eccleſia Dei, a Church of God, one Church) yet Eccleſiæ Dei, the other Churches of God, had it not; the word is plural. 2. Becauſe, though it hath liked ſome, not long ſince to like well of it: yet the Apoſtles never knew it: or (the other may) if it have liked them to diſlike it, and lay it down; yet the Apoſtles liked it well enough.

Non talem (ſaith the Apoſtle) none ſuch. Qualem then? How ſhall he do to know the right talem? Thus. Non talem is here oppoſed, to two: To the Churches of God: To nos (that is) the Apoſtles.

If it be Eccleſiarum Dei.

If it be but of ſome one Church, but at Corinth alone, it is too narrow; not large, not general enough. If it be but taken up by ſome of our Maſters of late, it is too freſh, it is not ancient enough: Non talem, No ſuch.

But by theſe two, we know our right qualem. If it be Eccleſiarum (that is) if it be general: If nos come to it (that is) the Apoſtles, if it be ancient: then is it rightly qualified; then it is as it ſhould be; then it may be alledged, and ſtood upon, then it vvill bind: and then if any oppoſe, videtur contentioſus eſſe.

I begin with the Church (in the plural.) Every Church hath power to begin a cuſtome: and that cuſtome, power to bind her own children, to it. Provided, her private cuſtome affront not the general, received by all others: for then binds it not. By the Rule in the Mathematicks, Ever Totum eſt parte majus: And by the rule in the Morals, Ever turpis pars omnis, toti non congrua.

As neither is any particular Church bound to the private cuſtome of another, like particular, as it ſelf is. But if the other Churches cuſtome, have alſo been the general cuſtome of the Church: then it binds, and may not be ſet light: For then ſaid it muſt be, that S. Auguſtine doth ſay, If the whole Church uſually have obſerved ought: to go from that, or to queſtion, whether it be to be obſerved, inſolentiſſima inſania eſt.

Epiſt. 118. c. 5.

Prov. 13. 10.

It ſavours of a diſtemper coming of a heat, or humour of pride: For only by pride (ſaith Solomon) cometh contention. This for the Churches cuſtome.

If nos (that is) the Apoſtles had it.

But if to this we add, or rather, if before this vve ſet, this (nos) the Apoſtles had it too, that it is Apoſtolick: vve have then ſaid as much, as in this point can be ſaid, as much as may content any, that is not contentious, that is not more wedded to ſhew his vvit, than to ſeek the truth; and more ſet φυλάτειν τὴν δόξαν to maintain his own poſition, than to regard the Churches peace. For ſure, if a cuſtome be to be eſteemed by antiquity, ſuch a cuſtome is ab heroicis uſque temporibus; for they be our Heroës. 2. If it be to be eſteemed by the author: what author more worthy in themſelves, more vvorthy of our imitation, than they? Nothing can be deviſed more reaſonable, than that in the 118. queſt. ad Orthod. in Juſtin Martyr, That, of and from whom we received τὸ εὔχεσθαι to pray: of and from them, we ſhould alſo receive τὸ πῶς εὔχεσθαι how, and when, at what time, at what feaſt to do it. Their example (that is, the Apoſtles) the Church commended to her children to practice (a better She could not:) that practice in time grew to a cuſtome. That cuſtome is talem, may ſafely be alledged.

Laſtly,

Lastly, As this sheweth it may be alledged for a good argument in Divinity: So doth it, 1. what the men are against whom: 2. what the matters, wherein: 3. what the penaltie, whereupon it may be alledged. 4. The Use of this argument from custome.

1. Whom against. This may be alledged against si quis videtur contentiosus esse, such as are, or at least seem contentious. Habemus, or Non habemus consuetudinem, is their proper answer. No reasoning with such, it will be to small purpose, they will be sine fine dicentes. Saint Augustine saith well, they cannot distinguish between respondere posse, and tacere nolle: They take them, for all one. So they cry lowdest, and have the last word, they take it they have answered sufficiently. Against these it lyeth most properly. None so ready a way, to stop their mouths: for custome is matter of fact, habemus, or non habemus may be put to the twelve men, and there's an end. Saint Paul then using here against these, reacheth us to use it against the like. Against such parties; against si quis videtur contentiosus esse, to put it upon this; Is there a custome, or is there none? Against what parties.

Specially, if the matter be of the nature of this here in the Text, where the question seemed to concern but matter of circumstance, and outward order; there hath it his right use; that, the proper place of it. You will say; But had it not been good though, to have used some reason for it? It had: And the Apostle used divers (if that would have served:) from the signification, at the third verse; from decency, at the thirteenth; from nature, at the fourteenth. But (to say the truth) such, (he saw) a wrangling wit would elude. The nature of the question afforded none other. It was well observed, and set down for a rule by the Philosopher, that in morall matters, men may not look for Mathematicall proofes: The nature of the subject will not bear them. If not in morall, in ritual, much less: they of all other, least susceptible of a demonstrative reason. In what matters.

The Apostle saw this, and therefore finally resolves all, into the Churches practice by custome confirmed in matters of this kind, enough of it self, to suffice any that will sapere ad sobrietatem. In so doing, as he took the right course (we are sure) so he taught us by his example, in points of this nature, of Ceremony or circumstance, ever to pitch upon habemus, or non habemus talem consuetudinem. This to be final.

3. And then follows upon what penalty. Upon no other pain, but to be pronounced to be fallen into the Apostles signis; to be taken and declared, pro contentioso. Then if any, for every point of rite that takes him in the head, will hazard the Churches peace, will not acquiescere, but set himself against the Churches custome; he knoweth his doome here. For it turns back recisprocè. As, if any be contentious, the Churches custome is against him: So, if any turn upon the Churches custome, be against it, it is no good sign; videtur (saith S. Paul) to the Apostle he seems so (and he had his eyes in his head.) And what such seemed to him, they may well seem to us; and we take them for no less, that are like stirring in matters of no more weight. And so an end of this matter. For the Apostle when he had said this, thought he had said enough, needed to say no more. The Churches custome shall ever be of force, to over-rule such as are contentious. And when S. Paul had said this, he had said. And so have we. Upon what penalty. The argument final.

This then being set down, That Customes so qualified are to be kept: Shall we now go on to the hypothesis, that the keeping of Easter is such? (And now I would the hour were to begin again, so much is to be said for it.) III. The keeping Easter is such a custome.

One foot of our compass we fix in the Apostles times. The other, where? They appoint us Gelasius time, who was fast upon the five hundred year. Be it so. The time to make this custome.

From the Apostles Age (which ended with Saint John, who survived Christ sixty eight years, and dyed the year CII. under Trajan) to Gelasius Age. Of these five hundred, the first hundred years as for (Nos) the Apostles time. From thence the four hundred years following, are for the Churches. Which four hundred we may divide again, into two even moieties, two hundred under persecution: two hundred under peace. How long the Apostles 100. How long the Churches 40.

To prove (then) our habemus consuetudinem: We cannot better begin, than with this in the Text, the contentions, that from the beginning rose about it. Those very contentions prove it. It must be, that must be contended for: and then it must be, when it is contended for. These three things in this one proof. 1. The contentions that were about it, even presently upon the Apostles times: 2. The great care had, and continual pains taken, to lay them down, that is, the Churches, contending for the Feast: 3. The censuring of those that took them up, with Saint Pauls contentiosus here, and with somewhat more: (Of Blastus, at Rome in Europe; Of Crescentius in Ægypt, for Afrike: Of Audæus, in Syria, for Asia:) These were the principals, these were all written up in the black book, by those that registred the Heriticks; by Tertullian, Epiphanius, Philastrius, Augustine, and Theodoret (all five.) Proofs for the Custome of the Churches. 1. Proof. From contentions about it. 2. The Church took part with Easter. 3. Censured ever for Heretiks that against it. Tertul de præs. c. 53. Epiph. Hæres 70. Syn. Antioc. Can. 1.

But as God would have it, the question never was of the Feast it self, but of the time of it only. All kept Easter, though not all at one time. For the keeping, they had the Churches customs: for the time of keeping, they had their own: the Feast of the Christians; the time of the Jews. The contention not about the Feast, but the time only.

And I will tell you how this came, first. From Saint James (who was the first) there were successively one after another, fifteen Bishops of Hierusalem, all of them of the Circumcision. These (the sooner to win their brethren the Jews) condescended to keep their Easter XIIII°. Lunæ, as they did. That which was by them thus done by way of condescension, was after, by some, urged as a matter of necessity, as if it were not lawfull, but in that day to hold it. How the contention first came. Chap. 53. Hic. defer. 35. Epiph. hær. 52.

The first that it took thus in the head (Tertullian in the end of De præscrip. saith) was one Blastus, about the dayes of Commodus. He began a schism. And Irenæus presently wrote de schismate contra Blastum. But after, from schism Blastus fell to heresie, and began that of the Quartodecimani: to whose manner manner of keeping it, for the moſt part, other Hereticks did cleave, leaving the Churches cuſtome of purpoſe, ſince they were departed from her.

Great pity, ſome in our days had not been then living, to have adviſed the Church to have ſaved her pains, and never have ſtriven ſo about it, the ſhorteſt way was to have made no more ado, but kept none at all. But, non habemus talem conſuetudinem, it could have been their anſwer. For you will eaſily gheſs: if theſe, for not keeping it at the right time, were ſcored up for Hereticks; what would become of them, that had been againſt the keeping of it at all.

None againſt Eaſter, but Aërius. Epiph. Hæreſ. 75.

Till now in our dayes, there was never any ſuch, but Aërius; he took it away clean, as Jewiſh. His reaſon was (ſaith Epiphanius, ſcorning it) becauſe Chriſt our Paſſeover is offered. Chriſt our Paſſeover is offered, let us therefore keep a Feaſt (ſaith Saint Paul:) Let us therefore keep none (ſaith Aërius) holden for ſo ſaying, for little better than crazed. There was never any Councel called about him: but as Aërius was his name, ſo was his opinion, and ſo it vaniſhed into air, and was blown over ſtraight.

1 Cor. 5. 7. All doe keep Eaſter, the old Puritans, the Novatians, and all. Socra. l. 5. 6. 20.

Otherwiſe, all Hereticks, in Eaſter they hand: Not ſo much as the Novatians, that called themſelves Cathari (that is, the Puritans of the Primitive Church) but one they had: but like good fellowes (by their Canon nihil phibrus) they left every one at liberty, ſo he kept one, to keep it whether way he liſted, but keep one he muſt. This contending about this cuſtome from the beginning, ſheweth, from the beginning, ſuch a cuſtome there was.

2 Proof from the Cycli Paſchales.

Next we avouch the Cycli Paſchales (for the keeping it right) which were indeed the Churches yearly Calendar (which to this day the Greek Church call their κανόνες) made of purpoſe for the juſt keeping it, at the very time. A pregnant proof for this cuſtome, if there were none but it. By

1. Hippolytus firſt a famous Biſhop and holy Martyr (his was the ſixteen-year Canon ſet forth by him ſo timely, as it ended in the firſt year of Alexander Severus.)

2. And after him, that of eight years, deviſed by Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria, who was a Martyr alſo, and of high account ever in the Church. (And both theſe under the perſecution.)

3. Then came Euſebius, whoſe deviſe the Golden number was, or Cycle of nineteen years. His held,

4. till Theophilus of Alexandria's began. Now the time of the ſetting his, is recorded to have been the year 380.

5 6. Proſper came after him, and he ſet another. And laſt came Victorinus of Aquitaine about the year 460. (not much before Gelaſius.) Two more came after theſe before it was fully ſetled, (but we will not paſs our bounds.) If no ſuch cuſtome were, what needed all theſe pains, all this ado, in theſe Cycles ſetting, and calculation of times? It ſhews the great eſteem, the Church had the Feaſt in, that it was ſo carefull of the preciſe time of it, every year.

1 Victor. Capuanus, 2 Dionyſ. Exiguus. The uſe of the Cycli Paſchales. a Paſc boſius. b Julianus Ep. 68. c Ep. 64. d Eph. 65.

And there was reaſon for it. Other-while they were at an after-deal, about the time. The year 454. (within a year or two, after the Councel of Chalcedon) all were at a ſtand. Eaſter fell ſo high in April, they were in a doubt, they had been wrong? Yea, Leo himſelf (that then lived) and all. Preſently fell Leo to writing of letters about, to all, reputed any thing ſeen that way. To the Biſhop of (a) Lilibæum in Sicil. To the Biſhop of the Iſle (b) Coos. To the (c) Emperour Martian himſelf (and to the (d) Empreſs to ſollicite him) that he would not fail, but ſend to Proterius Biſhop of Alexandria to help them out: As he did. And the like fell out in S. Ambroſes time. Damaſus and all, were to ſeek about it, and he then fain to clear it by his LXXXIII. Epiſtle, to the Biſhops of Æmylia.

3 Proof. From the Paſchales epiſtolæ of λόγοι ἑορτάσιμοι of the Biſhop of Alexandria. Collat. 10. 2.

Now, upon the conſulting of the Biſhop of Alexandria, there hangs a third proof. The Paſchales epiſtolæ yearly ſent abroad by that See, to this end. Leo confeſſeth to the Emperour, That becauſe, they of Egypt were held for the moſt skilfull in the Mathematicks, beſt at calculations; it was by the firſt Councell at Nice laid upon them (this truſt) yearly to calculate the day exactly, and to give notice of it in time to other Churches, yea, to Rome and all.

And it was antiqua conſuetudo, ſaith Caſſian (who lived with Chryſoſtome, and was his Deacon) that every year, the morrow after their Epiphania, the Biſhop of Alexandria ſent abroad his Paſchales epiſtolæ, to warn Eaſter, over the world. And, when (after) by reaſon of warres in the ſpring time, in many places they were intercepted, that they came not time enough: Order was taken anew by the great Councel of Africk, that letters for warning Eaſter ſhould come forth ſooner, by the one and twentieth of Auguſt every year, that ſo they might have time to come, whither they were ſent ſoon enough.

Concil. Carthag. Can. 7. 4.

Theſe Paſchales epiſtolæ, were ever famous, and of high account, for other good matter contained in them. Three of them of Theophilus, we have extant, ſo highly eſteemed by S. Hierom, as he took the pains to turn them into Latine, and to him we owe them. But, though by the Nicene Councel this was laid upon the Biſhop of Alexandria; I would not have you conceive, it began then. Ruffin. ſaith, the Councel did but antiquum Canonem tradere, deliver the old Canon, that had been before in uſe. For, long before, Euſebius mentioned thoſe Paſchales epiſtolæ ſent about, by Dionyſe Biſhop there, even under the perſecution.

4 Proof. * Job. 8. 8. From the Fathers in the Churches peace, the latter 200. years. By the Homilies upon Eaſter-day

Now if we will follow * Job's advice, and ſet our ſelves to ask of the Fathers: we ſhall find habemus talem conſuetudinem, cleer with them for it. 1. Thoſe firſt, that lived after the Churches peace: 2. Then thoſe that during the perſecution. Thoſe in the Churches peace, four wayes: 1. By the Homilies or Sermons made purpoſely by them to be preached on this day. We have a full Jury, Greek and Latine of them; and that of the moſt chief and eminent among them. S. Baſil, Nazianzen, Chryſoſtome, Nyſſen, Theophilus Alexandrinus, Cyril, Chryſologus, Leo, &c. And yet I deal not with any of thoſe in Ambroſe, Auguſtine, Maximus, now extant; I know, they are queſtioned. I rely only on the report of S. Hierome and Gennadius, who ſaw the right copies, and what they ſaw, have reported.

I will give you a taste of one. It shall be Nazianzen, surnamed the Divine, and so one that knew what belonged to Divinity. Thus begins he a Sermon of his upon it. Easter-day is come, Gods own Easter-day: and again I say, Easter-day is come, in honour of the trinity: the Feast of Feasts, the solemnity of all solemnities, so far passing all other Feasts, holden not only by or for men, but even in honour of Christ Himself, as the Sun doth the Stars. 1 In Pas. hz.

And, in his funeral Sermon for his father, having occasion but to name it by the way (for that his father once brought to the last cast, in a sickness of his, suddenly (as it were by a miracle) recovered upon an Easter-day morning.) It was (saith he) Easter, the great and famous Feast of Easter, the Queen and the Soveraign of all the dayes in the year. That, in his dayes they had (sure) such a custome.

(And so it seems they had in Ignatius dayes: for from him borrowed he that term of Lady and Queen of dayes, out of his Epistles ad Magnesianos.)

2. By the Hymnes set for this day, to be sung on it. By Prudentius that lived in Saint Ambrose's time. By S. Ambrose himself. Before him by S. Hilary. But, Paulinus I insist on. He, in his Panegyrick for Felix, sets down in particular all the Feasts in the year, as they were then in use among them: Easter for a chief Feast. He liveth with S. Augustine. A pregnant Record, for the Churches custome then. By the Hymnes upon Easter day.

3. By their Writings. 1. Some of them in their Commentaries (as S. Hierome) and namely on the Galatians, and on that place (ye observe dayes:) If that be a fault (saith he) we Christians do incur that fault, all. For we keep (by name) Easter, but not the Jewes Easter, of unleavened bread (which the Apostle excepts to) but the Christian Easter of the Resurrection of Christ. 2. Some, by way of Epistles and answers: as S. Ambrose, LXXXIII. Epistle, full to it. S. Augustine, CXVIII. CXIX. set Epistles concerning questions about it. 3. Some, by their τύποις: As Epiphanius (the Treasure of antiquity) in his L. LXX. and LXXV. heresie, ad oppositum. Positively in his Compendium of the true Churches orders, at the end of his Pannarium, whereof one is πανήγυρις μεγάλη ἐν τῷ ἁγίῳ τοῦ πάσχα, The great Solemnity upon Easter-day. 2. As S. Augustine expressly contra Adimantum, the 16. Chap. and the 32. book against Faustus (that found fault, the Church kept it, yet kept it not, as the Jewes:) confesseth the one, (the Churches keeping:) traverses the other, that she ought, neither at that time, nor in that manner to keep it as they did: and that at large. 4. Some, by short Treatises, as Ambrose de mysteriis Paschæ. And some by full books, as Eusebius, who wrote a book of the whole order of the Churches Service then, dedicated it to Constantine, was by the Emperour highly commended for it. By their Writings touching Easter.

4. Lastly, as by writing, so by matter of fact. As Chrysostome, who when he was deposed, and so enjoyned not to come in any Church: yet Easter-day coming, so loth he was not to keep it, as he got him in Thermas Constantini (a spacious great building, for the publick Bath of the City) and there held his Easter, with a very great company, that would not forsake him. As Athanasius, who being accused to Constantius the Emperour, for keeping the Feast of Easter in the great Church at Alexandria (then but newly finished, and as yet not dedicate) he layes the blame from himself upon the people, that would have it kept there, do what he could, the other Churches were so narrow, and the concourse to the feast so great, as he saith, it would have done the Emperours heart good, to have seen it. By matters of fact. Of Chrysostome. Socrat. lib. 6. 18. Of Athanasius. Apolog ad Constantium.

And in his Epistles ad Africanos; with open mouth he cryeth out upon the Arrians, that came in military manner to install their new Bishop, and the many outrages by them done. Above all, that not only they did those outrages, but did them (of all dayes) upon Easter-day, Et ne ipsum quidem Dominicum diem sanctissimi festi ullâ in reverentiâ habuere, and had not in any reverence, not the very Sunday of that most holy Feast.

Not the Sunday: for we are to know, the custome that is continued with us still, they then had, to keep two dayes beside the Sunday, three in all. For the Latine Church, plain, by S. Augustine de Civitate Dei, 22. In tertiam Festi diem. For the Greek, by Nyssen, who expressly termeth it, τριήμερον νεοθησίαν. Custome for the three Holy-dayes at Easter. Cap. 8. Hom. 1. in Pascha.

Thus, all these wayes, by singing, by saying, by writing, by doing, all bear witness to it: and I may safely say, there is not one of them, but one of these wayes or other, he hath his hand in it, and among them they make up a full proof, of this habemus consuetudinem.

From the Fathers, I pass to the Councels, and plead it by all the four. The Nicene first. 5 Proof. From the Councels. The Nicene.

1. Two causes there were (saith Athanasius de Syn. Arim. & Sel.) of the assembling that Councel. Nam & clandicabant circa Festum (and he makes that the first cause) They halted about the Feast, kept it not uniformly: and that was set straight against Crescentius. And, the Deity of the Son of God was questioned, and that was put into the Nicene Creed, against Arrius. You have the Councels Epistle for the setling it: you have the Emperours Sacra for the ratifying it, directed ad omnes Ecclesias (in the third book of his life, by Eusebius.) Theod. l. 1. c. 9. Socrat. l. 1. c. 9.

2. For the two General at Constantinople. As Constantine in the first; so Theodosius at this, was not behind. His Law remains, whereby he provided, that for fifteen dayes, from the Sunday before the day, till the Sunday after, no process should go forth, none should be arrested; a general cessation of all both processes and proceedings, in honour of the High Feast. That you have Easter day and the custome of holding it solemnly, in the body of the Law too, in Theodosius Code. The 2. of Constans.

3. At the third of Ephesus, there have you (in the 2. Tom. c. 32.) Rufinus, Hesychius, and Ruffin, three Quartodecimani hereticks, publickly in the face of the Councel, recanting their errour, subscribing, and promising ever after to conform and keep their Easter, after the custome of the Churches of God. At Ephesus.

4. And at the fourth of Chalcedon, the sixt Session (the Emperour being there then present in person) the whole Councel with one voice made this acclamation, Unum Pascha orbi terrarum: Thanks be to God, one Easter now, and but one, all the world over. At Chalcedon.

Cuſtome in England.

But before all theſe (the Nicene and all) by a dozen years at leaſt was the Councell of Arles, and in it, this cuſtome proclaimed. I mention it, not ſo much for the antiquity, as that by it appeareth, how the cuſtome of Eaſter went here with us in this Realme: for, at it was preſent and ſubſcribed, the Biſhop of London, Reſtitutus. A plain argument, We had ſuch a cuſtome then.

Cuſtome in Scotland. Sedulius.

And for the other Realme, Gelaſius ſhall ſpeak. In a Synod of ſeventy Biſhops, where he and they decreed, what bookes were to be read, what not: they ſay, there was then a Poeme of venerable Sedulius (who had the addition of Scotus for his nation) which they doe inſigni laude præferre, (that is) very highly commend. Sedulius intitles it, his Opus Paſchale, and begins it, with Paſchales quicunque dapes —— as it were inviting his Readers (his countrey-men, I dare ſay ſpecially, if they will come to it) to a Feaſt, upon Eaſter-day.

Cuſtome in both Conſtantine.

But for both, none ſo worthy a witneſſe, as the Emperour Conſtantine, who in his Reſcript about Eaſter, directed to all Churches, expreſly nameth this Iſle, the Iſle of Britannie, among thoſe places, where this cuſtome was duly and orderly obſerved.

6 Proof From the Fathers in the firſt 200. years of perſecution. Two, betweene peace and perſecution. Lactantius, Pierius. Hier. de Scr. 76.

All this while the Church had reſt: during the perſecution, how went it? Two we will take in, in the paſſage betweene the times of perſecution.

1. Lactantius, the moſt part of his life, lived under the perſecution, but dyed in the Churches peace: 2. So did Pierius of Alexandria (for his excellent learning, called Origen the younger.) In Lactantius ſeventh book, and nineteenth Chapter, there is a plain teſtimony for the ſolemn keeping of Eaſter-Eve. And Pierius (ſaith Saint Hierom) hath a long Sermon upon the Prophet Hoſee, made by Him and preached at the ſolemne aſſembly on Eaſter-eve. And if the Eve were ſo held, we make no doubt of the day.

Under the perſecution. The fact of Philip the Emperour. L. 6. c. 34. Euſeb. l. 7. c. 22. Dionyſ. Alex. Cyprian Epiſt. 21. 24. 40.

1. Now in the middeſt of the perſecution, there fell out a ſpeciall caſe of Philip the Emperour, (ſuppoſed to have given his owne and his ſonnes name to the Chriſtian profeſſion, as Euſebius reporteth:) in ſigne thereof, He on Eaſter-eve offered to joyne himſelf at the Church-ſervice, as knowing that to be their chiefeſt ſolemnitie: which they failed not to keep, no not then, when their caſe was at the hardeſt.

2. And even then at Alexandria, Dionyſius the Biſhop there, held this cuſtom. Thus writes he to Hierax (a Biſhop too) and to others: out of priſon, That, though the perſecution then raged much, and the plague more; yet were the Chriſtians, even then, ſo carefull not to break this cuſtome, as they kept their Eaſter, ſome in woods, ſome on ſhip-board, ſome in barnes and ſtables; yea, they in the very goale, keep it they did even then, perſecution and plague both notwithſtanding.

Origen.

3. Cyprian held this cuſtome: Not by his Homily (I wave it, as doubtfull:) but in foure of his Epiſtles I find it. I name but one, his LIII. Some had conſulted him, in a queſtion of ſome difficultie. He writes backe, It was now Eaſter, his brethren were from him, every one at his owne charge, ſolemnizing the Feaſt with their people. So ſoone as the Feaſt was over, and they met againe, they ſhould heare from him, he would take their opinions, and return them a found anſwer.

4. Origen had this cuſtome. In his VIII. againſt Celſus, frankely he confeſſeth, That other Feaſts, Eaſter by name, the Chriſtians held them; and that (as he ſaith) Συνθετωτερον, in more ſolemne manner, then Celſus, or any heathen-men of them all, held theirs.

* Tertullianus de corona mil. c. 3. ad uxorem l. 2. c. 4. contr. Marc 4. 3. 5. 4.

5. Tertullian had this cuſtome. *Many places in him. Only one I cite, in the fourteenth chapter, de Jejunio, Quod ſi omnem in totum devotionem dierum eraſit Apoſtolus, cur Paſcha celebramus annuo circulo? If it were the Apoſtles minde, to race out all devout obſerving of days quite, how comes it to paſſe, we celebrate Eaſter yearly, at the circle of the yeare turning about?

Irenæus. Euſeb l. 5 c. 26. Seven bookes then Written for it. Euſeb. l. 7 c. 32. Hier. de Scrip. 43. Hieron de Scriptor. 44. Ibidem 61. Ibidem 38. Ibidem 24.

6. Irenæus had this cuſtome: His Epiſtle to Victor ſheweth it: to Victor, and to many more (ſaith Euſebius) about that queſtion, (underſtand ſtill the queſtion of the time, not of the Feaſt.) A book alſo (we finde) he wrote de Paſchate, in the 115. quæſt. in Juſtin Martyr. So, he will be for it, certainly.

7. And it is ſtrange, even during the perſecution, how may bookes we finde written, to deduce the cuſtome by. 1. Beſide that of Irenæus, 2. One by Anatolius the great learned Biſhop of Laodicea: 3. By Theopilius Biſhop of Cæſarea, and 4. by Bacchylus Biſhop of Corinth, either of them one. 5. Another by Hippolytus, that made up the firſt cycle. Yet, 6. another by Clemens Alexandrinus. And laſt, which indeed was firſt in time of all, two bookes, 7. by the holy Martyr and Prophet Melito Biſhop of Sardis, (in the next Age to the Apoſtles themſelves) ſet forth by him (as he ſaith) at the time of the Feaſt, and in the very holy-dayes of it.

7 Proof From Councels in the perſecution. 1 Paleſtine. 2 Ponius. 3 Oſreena. 4 Italy. 5 France. 6 Græcia. 7 Aſia minor. Euſeb l. 5 c. 23.

Nay, there wanted not Councels then neither, and that in ſeven ſeverall parts of the world at once: all in the midſt of the fervour of the fiery tryall, when the Church (God wot) could but evill intend it. It was no time to contend then. But it ſhewes, they made a matter of it, and no ſlight reckoning of the retaining it. Elſe might they have ſlipt it, without any more adoe.

Proofs That this cuſtome was Apoſtolick. 1 Proof by teſtimony. Auguſtine.

Enough (I trow) to ſhew, ſuch a cuſtome there was in all the Churches, theſe parties lived in, which were all the Churches God then had. They muſt needs ſeeme contentious, that will contend againſt all theſe. I ſee not how they can ſcape the Apoſtles Si quis, that doe. And this I ſay, if ſome one example of ſome eminent man of worth, will ſerve to make an authoritie: If, that: Then this cloud of witneſſes, and thoſe 1. not perſons, but whole Councels and Churches: 2. not in ſome one Region, but in divers, all the world over: 3. and that not for one time, but ſo many ages ſucceſſively continued, from generation to generation: what manner of authority ought that to be? the greateſt ſure, and none greater, but of God Himſelf.

Now to (Nos) that is, to the Apoſtles themſelves. Firſt, that it was a Cuſtome Apoſtolike and ſo taken, Saint Auguſtine is direct in his CXVIII. Epiſtle to Ianuarius, who had purpoſely ſent to him, to know his opinion touching certaine queſtions, all of them about Eaſter. Thus ſaith he there: For ſuch things as come to us not by writing, but by practice (and yet ſuch as are obſerved quite thorow the world.) we are given to underſtand, they come commended to us, and were inſtituted either by the Apoſtles themſelves, or by

by general Councils, whose authority hath ever been accounted of, as wholsome in the Church. Now what be those things so generally observed toto orbe terrarum? These: that the Passion, the Resurrection, the Ascension of Christ, and the coming of the Holy Ghost from heaven, anniversaria solennite celebrantur, are yearly in solemn manner celebrated. And (saith he) if there be any besides these: for these, are most cleer.

First, he is cleer, It was the custome of the Church, far and wide the world through. Then, that it must either by the Apostles be institute, or by some Council. Not by any Council: Many met about the time: about the Feast never any: that, not questioned at all: taken pro confessa ever, and so, Apostolick. They be his own words (lib. 4. de Bapt. contra Donat. cap. 24.) If the whole Church observe any thing, not having been ordained by some general Council, rectissimè creditur, we are to believe, rectissimè, by as good right as any can be, right in the Superlative, that they came to us, non nisi ab Apostolis, from the Apostles, and from none else, nor by any other way. So S. Augustine is for nos habemus talem. So he held it.

An hundred years before him, Constantine is as direct in his Epistle ad omnes Ecclesias. Many remarkable things there are in that Epistle. 1. The most holy Feast of Easter, four times he calleth it. That is the good Emperors style, In so great a matter, in so high a Feast of our Religion to disagree, ἀθεμίτως utterly unlawful. And 2. τί κάλλιον, τί σεμνότερον, what more honest, what more seemly, than that this Feast should be inviolably kept, by which we hold our hopes of immortality? (Mark that reason well.)

Constantine. Euseb l. 3. vita Constantini.

But, for Apostolick: Be it lawful for us Christians (saith he) rejecting the Jewish manner, that day, ἣν πεύξεται τὰς πάθους ἡμέρας ἀχρὶ τοῦ παρόντος ἐνιαυτοῦ, which day ever since the very first day of his passion, we have to this present kept; to transmit the due observing of it to all ages to come. Mark the words, 1. They had kept Easter from the first day of Christs passion, till that present time. 2. And after that, We have received it of our Saviour. 3. And yet again, which our Saviour delivered to us. And concludes, that 4. accordingly, when he came among them, he and they would keep their Easter together. Nothing can be more full, that in his time this custome was, and that it was reputed to have come from the Apostles, as begun from the very day of Christs Passion. Which Leo shortly, but fully expresseth, Legalis quippe festivitas dum mutatur, impletur. The legal Feast of the Passeover, at the fulfilling of it, was changed both at once. Fulfilled and changed, at one time, both. No distance between. And fulfilled (I am sure) it was in the Apostles time, and so changed then also.

If you will see it deduced in story, that may you too. Thus of himself Irenæus writeth, that he was brought up in Asia under Polycarpus; and that he (young though he were) observed and remembred well all his course of life. And namely, how coming to Rome in Anicetus time, he kept his Easter there. Not when Anicetus kept it, but keep it he did though. In the keeping they agreed: in the time they differed. Either held his own.

2. Proof by Story. Euseb. 4. c. 14. Iren. l. 3. c. 3. Tertul de præscript. c. 32.

Polycarpus then kept Easter. Now, Policarpus had lived and conversed with the Apostles, was made Bishop by them, Bishop of Smyrna, (Irenæus and Tertullian say it directly) and he is supposed to be the Angel of the Church of Smyrna, Revel. 2. 8. And Polycarpus (as saith Irenæus) kept Easter with S. John, and with the rest of the Apostles, totidem verbis, Euseb. lib. 5. c. 26.

Polycarpus kept Easter with S. John & the rest of the Apostles.

Polycrates in his Epistle there (in Eusebius) expresly saith, that Saint Philip the Apostle kept it. If Saint Philip and Saint John (by name) If the rest of the Apostles had it, then nos habemus is true; then it is Apostolick.

Μετὰ Ἰωάννου τοῦ μαθητοῦ τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν, καὶ Φιλίππου τῶν λοιπῶν Ἀποστόλων ὅις συνδιέτριψεν ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ. Euseb l. 5. 14.

S. Philip the Apostle kept it.

But yet we have a more sure ground than all these: The Lords Day hath testimony in Scripture, I insist upon that: that Easter-day must needs be as ancient as it. For how came it to be the Lords Day? but that, as it is in the Psalm, the Lord made it? And why made he it? but because on it, the stone cast aside (that is Christ) was made the head stone of the corner? that is, because then the Lord rose, because his Resurrection fell upon it?

3. Proof from the Lords day. Apoc. 1. 10. Psal. 1. 88.

Now what a thing were it, that all the Sundayes in the year that are but abstracts (as it were) of this day (the very day of the Resurrection) that they should be kept: and this day, the day it self, the prototype and archetype of them all, should not be kept, but laid aside quite, and be clean forgotten? That, the day in the week we should keep; and the day in the month it self, and return of the year, we should not keep? Even of every congruity, it is to be as they, and somewhat more.

Aug. Ep. 119. 13. Dies Dominicus Christianis Resurrectione Domini declaratus est & ex illo habere cæpit festivitatem suam.

Take example by our selves. For his Majesties deliverance the fift of August: for his Majesties and ours, the Fift of November (being Tuesday both:) for these a kind of remembrance we keep, on Tuesday every week in the year. But when by course of the year in their several months, the very original dayes themselves come about; shall we not, do we not celebrate them in much more solemn manner? what question is there? weigh them well, you will find the case alike. One cannot be, but the other also must be Apostolick.

1. For the last proof I have yet reserved, one: or rather, three in one. 1. The custome of Baptism, known to have been ministred as upon that day, all the Primitive Church through. A thing so known, as their Homilies de Baptismo were most upon that day. S. Basils I name. In his upon Easter day, he shews the custome of Baptizing then, and the reason of it.

4. Proof of the Churches custom for Easter.
1. The Custome of Baptism

2. The use of the Keyes at that time specially. Then, were the censures inflicted: then were they released. 1. Inflicted: Against that time, did S. Paul cut off the incestuous person, that a little leven might not sower them all. Even against the time that Christ our Passeover was offered, and they therefore to hold this feast. 2. Released: So you shall find the Council of Ancyra (elder than that of Nice) order, the censures should determine all, indure no longer than the Great Day (so, in their common speech they termed Easter) and then, all to be restored. 3. To which purpose the Council of Nice took order there should be in Lent, a Synod yearly to this end: that by it all quarrels being taken up, and all things set straight, they might be in better case, to come with their oblation at Easter to the Sacrament.

2. The custome of the censures then determining. 1 Cor. 5. 7, 8. Can. 5. Can. 5.

And

Custome in England.

But before all these (the Nicene and all) by a dozen years at least was the Councell of Arles, and in it, this custome proclaimed. I mention it, not so much for the antiquity, as that by it appeareth, how the custome of Easter went here with us in this Realme: for, at it was present and subscribed, the Bishop of London, Restitutus. A plain argument, We had such a custome then.

Custome in Scotland. Sedulius.

And for the other Realme, Gelasius shall speak. In a Synod of seventy Bishops, where he and they decreed, what bookes were to be read, what not: they say, there was then a Poeme of venerable Sedulius (who had the addition of Scotus for his nation) which they doe insigni laude praferre, (that is) very highly commend. Sedulius intitles it, his Opus Paschale, and begins it, with Paschales quicunque dapes —— as it were inviting his Readers (his countrey-men, I dare say specially, if they will come to it) to a Feast, upon Easter-day.

Custome in both. Constantine.

But for both, none so worthy a witnesse, as the Emperour Constantine, who in his Rescript about Easter, directed to all Churches, expresly nameth this Isle, the Isle of Britannie, among those places, where this custome was duly and orderly observed.

6 Proof From the Fathers in the first 200. years of persecution. Two, betwen peace and persecution. Lactantius, Pierius. Hier. de Scr. 76. Under the persecution. The fact of Philip the Emperour. L. 6. c. 34. Euseb. l. 7 c. 22. Dionys. Alex. Cyprian Epist. 21. 24. 49.

All this while the Church had rest: during the persecution, how went it? Two we will take in, in the passage between the times of persecution.

1. Lactantius, the most part of his life, lived under the persecution, but dyed in the Churches peace: 2. So did Pierius of Alexandria (for his excellent learning, called Origen the younger.) In Lactantius seventh book, and nineteenth Chapter, there is a plain testimony for the solemn keeping of Easter-Eve. And Pierius (saith Saint Hierom) hath a long Sermon upon the Prophet Hosee, made by Him and preached at the solemne assembly on Easter-eve. And if the Eve were so held, we make no doubt of the day.

1. Now in the middest of the persecution, there fell out a speciall case of Philip the Emperour, (supposed to have given his owne and his sonnes name to the Christian profession, as Eusebius reporteth:) in signe thereof, He on Easter-eve offered to joyne himself at the Church-setvice, as knowing that to be their chiefest solemnitie: which they failed not to keep, no not then, when their case was at the hardest.

2. And even then at Alexandria, Dionysius the Bishop there, held this custom. Thus writes he to Hierax (a Bishop too) and to others: out of prison, That, though the prosecution then raged much, and the plague more; yet were the Christians, even then, so carefull not to break this custome, as they kept their Easter, some in woods, some on ship-board, some in barnes and stables; yea, they in the very goale, keep it they did even then, persecution and plague both notwithstanding.

Origen.

3. Cyprian held this custome: Not by his Homily (I wave it, as doubtfull:) but in foure of his Epistles I find it. I name but one, his LIII. Some had consulted him, in a question of some difficultie. He writes backe, It was now Easter, his brethren were from him, every one at his owne charge, solemnizing the Feast with their people. So soone as the Feast was over, and they met againe, they should heare from him, he would take their opinions, and return them a found answer.

4. Origen had this custome. In his VIII. against Celsus, frankely he confesseth, That other Feasts, Easter by name, the Christians held them; and that (as he saith) Κυριακωτερον, in more solemne manner, then Celsus, or any heathen-men of them all, held theirs.

* Tertullianus de corona mil. c. 3. ad uxorem l. 2. c. 4. contr. Marc 4. 3. 5. 4.

5. Tertullian had this custome. *Many places in him. Only one I cite, in the fourteenth chapter, de Jejunio, Quod si omnem in totum devotionem dierum erasit Apostolus, cur Pascha celebramus annuo circulo? If it were the Apostles minde, to race out all devout observing of days quite, how comes it to passe, we celebrate Easter yearly, at the circle of the yeare turning about?

Irenaus. Euseb l. 5 c. 26. Seven bookes then Written for it. Euseb. l. 7 c. 32. Hier. de Scrip. 43. Hieron de Scriptor. 44. Ibidem 61. Ibidem 38. Ibidem 24.

6. Irenæus had this custome: His Epistle to Victor sheweth it: to Victor, and to many more (saith Eusebius) about that question, (understand still the question of the time, not of the Feast.) A book also (we finde) he wrote de Paschate, in the 115. quæst. in Justin Martyr. So, he will be for it, certainly.

7 Proof From Councels in the persecution. 1 Palestine. 2 Pontus. 3 Osrhena. 4 Italy. 5 France. 6 Græcia. 7 Asia minor. Euseb l. 5 c. 23.

7. And it is strange, even during the persecution, how may bookes we finde written, to deduce the custome by. 1. Beside that of Irenæus, 2. One by Anatolius the great learned Bishop of Laodicea: 3. By Theopilius Bishop of Cæsarea, and 4. by Bacchylus Bishop of Corinth, either of them one. 5. Another by Hippolytus, that made up the first cycle. Yet, 6. another by Clemens Alexandrinus. And last, which indeed was first in time of all, two bookes, 7. by the holy Martyr and Prophet Melito Bishop of Sardis, (in the next Age to the Apostles themselves) set forth by him (as he saith) at the time of the Feast, and in the very holy-dayes of it.

Proofs That this custome was Apostolick. 1 Proof by testimony. Augustine.

Nay, there wanted not Councels then neither, and that in seven severall parts of the world at once: all in the midst of the fervour of the fiery tryall, when the Church (God wot) could but evill intend it. It was no time to contend then. But it shewes, they made a matter of it, and no slight reckoning of the retaining it. Else might they have slipt it, without any more adoe.

Enough (I trow) to shew, such a custome there was in all the Churches, these parties lived in, which were all the Churches God then had. They must needs seeme contentious, that will contend against all these. I see not how they can scape the Apostles Si quis, that doe. And this I say, if some one example of some eminent man of worth, will serve to make an authoritie: If, that: Then this cloud of witnesses, and those 1. not persons, but whole Councels and Churches: 2. not in some one Region, but in divers, all the world over: 3. and that not for one time, but so many ages successively continued, from generation to generation: what manner of authority ought that to be? the greatest sure, and none greater, but of God Himself.

Now to (Nos) that is, to the Apostles themselves. First, that it was a Custome Apostolike and so taken, Saint Augustine is direct in his CXVIII. Epistle to Ianuarius, who had purposely sent to him, to know his opinion touching certaine questions, all of them about Easter. Thus saith he there. For such things as come to us not by writing, but by practice (and yet such as are observed quite thorow the world) we are given to understand, they come commended to us, and were instituted either by the Apostles themselves, or by general Councils, whose authority hath ever been accounted of, as wholsome in the Church. Now what be those things so generally observed toto orbe terrarum? These: that the Passion, the Resurrection, the Ascention of Christ, and the coming of the Holy Ghost from heaven, anniversaria solennite celebrantur, are yearly in solemn manner celebrated. And (saith he) if there be any besides these: for these, are most cleer.

First, he is cleer, It was the custome of the Church, far and wide the world through. Then, that it must either by the Apostles be institute, or by some Council. Not by any Council: Many met about the time: about the Feast never any: that, not questioned at all: taken pro confessa ever, and so, Apostolick. They be his own words (lib. 4. de Bapt. contra Donat. cap. 24.) If the whole Church observe any thing, not having been ordained by some general Council, rectissimè creditur, we are to believe, rectissimè, by as good right as any can be, right in the Superlative, that they came to us, non nisi ab Apostolis, from the Apostles, and from none else, not by any other way. So S. Augustine is for nos habemus talem. So he held it.

An hundred years before him, Constantine is as direct in his Epistle ad omnes Ecclesias. Many remarkable things there are in that Epistle. 1. The most holy Feast of Easter, four times he calleth it. That is the good Emperors style, In so great a matter, in so high a Feast of our Religion to disagree διαφωνεῖν is utterly unlawful. And 2. τὸ κάλλιον, τὸ σωφρονέστερον, what more honest, what more seemly, than that this Feast should be inviolably kept, by which we hold our hopes of immortality? (Mark that reason well.)

Constantine. Euseb l. 3. vita Constantini.

But, for Apostolick: Be it lawful for us Christians (saith he) rejecting the Jewish manner, that day, ἣν πρώτην τῶν παθῶν ἡμῶν ἔσχε τὸ πάσχα ἰουδαῖοι, which day even since the very first day of his passion, we have to this present kept; to transmit the due observing of it to all ages to come. Mark the words, 1. They had kept Easter from the first day of Christs passion, till that present time. 2. And after that, We have received it of our Saviour. 3. And yet again, which our Saviour delivered to us. And concludes, that 4. accordingly, when he came among them, he and they would keep their Easter together. Nothing can be more full, that in his time this custome was, and that it was reputed to have come from the Apostles, as begun from the very day of Christs Passion. Which Leo shortly, but fully expresseth, Legalis quippe festivitas dum mutatur, impletur. The legal Feast of the Passeover, at the fulfilling of it, was changed both at once. Fulfilled and changed, at one time, both. No distance between. And fulfilled (I am sure) it was in the Apostles time, and so changed then also.

2. Proof by Story. Euseb. 4. c. 14. Iren. l. 3. c. 3. Tertul de præscript. c. 32.

Polycarpus then kept Easter. Now, Policarpus had lived and conversed with the Apostles, was made Bishop by them, Bishop of Smyrna, (Irenæus and Tertullian say it directly) and he is supposed to be the Angel of the Church of Smyrna, Revel. 2. 8. And Polycarpus (as saith Irenæus) kept Easter with S. John, and with the rest of the Apostles, totidem verbis, Euseb. lib. 5. c. 26.

Polycarpus Easter with S. John & the rest of the Apostles.

Polycrates in his Epistle there (in Eusebius) expresly saith, that Saint Philip the Apostle kept it. If Saint Philip and Saint John (by name) If the rest of the Apostles had it, then nos habemus is true; then it is Apostolick.

But yet we have a more sure ground than all these: The Lords Day hath testimony in Scripture, I insist upon that: that Easter-day must needs be as ancient as it. For how came it to be the Lords Day? but that, as it is in the Psalm, the Lord made it? And why made he it? but because on it, the stone cast aside (that is Christ) was made the head stone of the corner? that is, because then the Lord rose, because his Resurrection fell upon it?

3. The Custom of a Communion. John 6 50. 58.

And last, by the never broken custome of a solemn Eucharist, ever upon this day. Origen in his seventh upon Exodus, he saith, Our Easter-day far passeth the Jewish Easter. They had no Manna on theirs: (The Passeover was eaten in Ægypt: Manna came not till they were in the Wilderness:) But we (saith he) we never kept our Passeover, but we are sure of Manna upon it, the true Manna, the Bread of life that came down from heaven. For they had no Easter then, without a Communion.

Hom. 6. de Quadrag.

Leo joyns both; (he might well all three.) Paschalis quippe solennitatis hoc est proprium, This is a peculiar that Easter-day hath, ut in eâ tota Ecclesia, remissione gaudeat peccatorum: That on it, all the whole Church obtaineth remission of their sins. One part, qui sacro Baptismate renascuntur, by vertue of the solemn Baptisme then ministred: The rest, by benefit of the Eucharist they then receive; ad rubiginem mortalitatis (it is his term) to the scouring off the rust which our mortality gathereth by the sins and errors of the whole year.

I will conclude all, with the words which S. Ambrose concludes his LXXXIII. (his Paschal Epistle, with) to the Bishops of Æmilia: Ergo, cum tot veritatis indicia concurrant, juxta majorum exemplum, Festum hoc publicæ salutis, lati exultantésque celebremus. Since then there be so many proofs for this truth that thus meet; according to the example of our fore-fathers, let us with joy and gladness keep this Feast of our common salvation. How? Simamus spiritu ferventi Sacramentum in azymis sinceritatis. Let us receive the holy Sacrament, with the sweet-bread of Sincerity. Postes nostros, ubi est otium verbi, sanguine Christi, in fide passionis coloremus. The posts of the door of our mouth (that is, our lips) let us dye them with the Blood of Christ, in the faith of his blessed Passion. Ensuing the steps of the Apostles and the Churches of God (all:) with whom joyning in both, let us expect the blessing of God upon us, &c.

A SERMON
Preached before the
AT
WHITE-HALL,
On the Sixteenth of April, being Easter-Day.
An. Dom. 1620.

JOHN Chap. XX.

Vers. 11. But Mary, stood by the Sepulchre, weeping: and as she wept, she stooped, and looked into the Sepulchre.

12. And saw two Angels, in white, sitting, the one at the head, the other at the feet, where the Body of JESUS had lien.

13. And they said to her, Woman, why weepest thou? She said to them, They have taken away my LORD, and I know not where they have laid him.

14. When she had thus said, she turned her self about, and saw JESUS standing, and knew not that it was JESUS.

15. JESUS saith to her, Woman, why weepest thou? Whom seekest thou? She (supposing He had been the Gardiner) said to Him, Sir, if thou have born him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him thence.

16. JESUS saith to her, Mary: She turned her self, and said to him, Rabboni; that is to say, Master.

17. JESUS said to her, Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father: But, go to my brethren, and say to them, I ascend to my Father and to your Father, and to my GOD and your GOD.

This last Verse was not touched.

IT is Easter-day abroad: And it is so in the Text. We keep Solomons rule, Verbum diei in die suo: For, all this (I have read) is nothing else, but a report of Christs rising, and of his appearing this Easter-day morning, his very first appearing of all. S. Mark is expres for it, that Christ was no sooner risen this day, but, He appeared first of all to Mary Magdalen: which first appearing of his, is here by S. John extended, and set down at large. 1 Reg. 8. 59. Mark 16. 9.

The summe of it is, 1. The seeking Christ dead. 2. The finding him alive.

The manner of it is, That Mary Magdalen staying still by the Sepulchre, first she saw a Vision of Angels: and after, she saw Christ himself. Saw Him, and was her self made an Angel by Him; a good Angel, to carry the Evangel, the first good and joyfull tidings of His rising again from the dead.

Acts 13 33. And this was a great honour (all considered) to serve in an Angels place. To do that at his resurrection (his second birth) that, at his first birth an Angel did. An Angel first published that; Mary Magdalen brought the notice of this. As he, to the Shepherds, so she, to the Apostles, the Pastours of Christs flock; by them to be spread abroad to the ends of the world.

To look a little into it. 1. Mary is the name of a woman: Mary Magdalen, of a sinfull woman.

That, to a woman first; it agreeth well, to make even with Eve; that, as by a woman came the first news of death; so, by a woman also might come the first notice of the Resurrection from the dead. And the place fits well: for, in a garden, they came, both.

That, to a sinfull woman first; that also agrees well. To her first, that most needed it: most needed it, and so first sought it. And it agrees well, he be first found of her, that first sought him: Even in that respect she was to be respected.

Hos.2.15. In which two, there is opened unto us a gate of hope, two great leaves (as it were:) one, that no infirmity of sex, (for a woman we see:) the other, that no enormity of sin, (for a sinfull woman, one that had the blemish, that she went under the common name of peccatrix, as notorious and famous in that kind:) That, neither of these shall debar any to have their part in Christ, and in his Resurrection; any, that shall seek him in such sort, as she did. For, either of these non obstante, nay, notwithstanding both these, she had the happiness; To see his Angels, (and that was no small favour;) To see Christ himself: And that, first of all, before all others, to see and salute him: And, to receive a commission from him, of Vade & dic, to go and tell, (that is, as it were) to be an Apostle, and that to the Apostles themselves, to bring them the first good news of Christs rising again.

There are three Parties that take up the whole Text; and if I should divide it, I would make those three parties the three parts; 1. Mary Magdalen, 2. the Angels, 3. and Christ our Saviour.

I. Mary Magdalen begins her part in the first Verse, but she goes along thorow them all.

II. Then the Angels part in the two Verses next: 1. Their appearing, 2. and their speech to her. Appearing, in the twelfth; Speech, in the thirteenth.

III. And last, Christs part in all the rest. 1. His appearing, and Speech likewise. Appearing, first, unknown in the fourteenth, and his speech then, in the fifteenth.

After, His appearing, and speech again, being known, in the sixteenth and seventeenth. 1. Forbidding her, mane & tange, to stay and to touch; 2. and bidding her, Vade & dic, to get her quickly to his brethren, and tell them, His Resurrection was past, for (ascendo) he was taking thought for his Ascension, and preparing for that. Thus lieth the order and the parts.

The use will be, that we, in our seeking, carry our selves as she did: and so may we have the happiness that she had, to find Christ, as he is now to be found in the vertue of his Resurrection.

VER. XI.

But Mary stood by the Sepulchre, weeping: and as she wept, she stooped, and looked into the Sepulchre.

OF the favours vouchsafed this same felix peccatrix (as the Fathers term her) this day, 1. To see but Christs Angels, 2. To see Christ at all, 3. To see him first of all, 4. But more then all these, to be imployed by him in so heavenly an errand; reason we can render none, that helped her to these, but that, which in a place Christ himself renders, Quia dilexit multùm, because she loved much.

She loved much: We cannot say, She believed much. For, by her sustinerunt thrice repeated (the second, thirteenth, fifteenth Verses) it seems, she believed no more, then just as much as the High Priests would have had the world believe, that he was taken away by night.

Defectus fidei non est negandus, affectus amoris non est vituperandus: It is Origen. We cannot commend her faith; her love, we cannot but commend; and so do: Commend it in her, commend it to you. Much it was, and much good proof gave she of it. Before, to him living: now, to him dead. To him dead, there are divers: 1. She was last at his cross, and first at his grave: 2. Stayed longest there, was soonest here: 3. Could not rest, till she were up to seek him: 4. Sought him, while it was yet dark, before she had light to seek him by.

But, to take her as we find her in the Text, and to look no whither else. There are, in the Text, no less then ten, all arguments of her great love; all, as it were a commentary upon Dilexit multùm. And even in this first Verse there are five of them.

I. The first in these words; stabat juxta monumentum, that she stood by the grave. A place, where faint Love loves not to stand. Bring him to the grave, and lay him in the grave, and there leave him: but come no more at it, nor stand long by it. Stand by him, while he is alive; so did many stand, and go, and sit by him. But stans juxta monumentum, stand by him dead; Mary Magdalen she did it, and she onely did it, and none but she. Amor stans juxta monumentum.

The

The next in these, Maria autem ſtabat. But Mary ſtood. In the autem, the but (that helps us to another,) But Mary ſtood, (that is as much to ſay, as) others did not, But, ſhe did. Peter and John were there but even now. Thither they came; but not finding him, away they went. They went: But Mary went not, ſhe ſtood ſtill. Their going away commends her ſtaying behind. To the grave ſhe came before them, from the grave ſhe went to tell them, to the grave ſhe returns with them, at the grave ſhe ſtays behind them. Fortior eam figebat affectus, ſaith Auguſtine, a ſtronger affection fixed her; ſo fixed her, that ſhe had not the power to remove thence. Go who would, ſhe would not, but ſtay ſtill. To ſtay, while others do ſo, while company ſtays, that is the worlds love: But Peter is gone, and John too, all are gone, and we left alone; then to ſtay, is love, and conſtant Love. Amor manens, aliis recedentibus; Love, that when others ſhrink and give over, holds out ſtill. 2. Verſe 8.

The third in theſe, ſhe ſtood, and ſhe wept: and, not a tear or two; but ſhe wept a good (as we ſay;) that the Angels, that Chriſt himſelf pity her, and both of them, the firſt thing they do, they ask her, why ſhe wept ſo? Both of them begin with that queſtion. And, in this, is love. For, if, when Chriſt ſtood at Lazarus's graves ſide and wept, the Jews ſaid, See how he loved him: may not we ſay the very ſame, when Mary ſtood at Chriſts grave and wept: See how ſhe loved him? Whoſe preſence ſhe wiſhed for, his miſs ſhe wept for; whom ſhe dearly loved, while ſhe had him, ſhe bitterly bewailed, when ſhe loſt him. Amor amare flens, Love running down the cheeks. 3. John 11.36.

The fourth in theſe, And as ſhe wept, ſhe ſtooped, and looked in, ever and anon. That is, ſhe did ſo weep, as ſhe did ſeek withal. Weeping without ſeeking, is but to ſmall purpoſe. But her weeping hindred not her ſeeking; her ſorrow dulled not her diligence. And, diligence is a character of love, comes from the ſame root, dilectio and diligentia from diligo, both. Amor diligentiam diligens. 4.

To ſeek, is one thing: not to give over ſeeking, is mother. For I ask, why ſhould ſhe now look in? Peter and John had looked there before; nay, had been in the grave (they.) It makes no matter: ſhe will not truſt Peters eyes, nor Johns neither. But, ſhe her ſelf had before this, looked in (too.) No force, ſhe will not truſt her ſelf, ſhe will ſuſpect her own eyes; ſhe will rather think, ſhe looked not well before, then leave off her looking. It is not enough for love, to look in once. Thus we uſe, this is our manner when we ſeek a thing ſeriouſly; where we have ſought already, there to ſee again, thinking we did it not well; but, if we now look again better, we ſhall ſurely find it, then. Amor quærens quæſivit: Love, that never thinks, it hath looked enough. Theſe five. 5. Verſe 8.

And, by theſe five, we may take meaſure of our love, and of the true multum of it. Ut proſit nobis ejus ſtare, ejus plorare, & quærere (ſaith Origen) that her ſtanding, her weeping, and ſeeking, we may take ſome good by them.

I doubt, ours will fall ſhort. Stay by him alive, that we can, juxta menſam: but juxta monumentum, who takes up his ſtanding there? And our love it is dry-eyed, it cannot weep: it is ſtiff joynted, it cannot ſtoop to ſeek. If it do, and we hit not on him at firſt, away we go, with Peter and John; we ſtay it not out with Mary Magdalen. A ſign our love is little, and light, and our ſeeking ſuitable, and ſo, it is without ſucceſs. We find not Chriſt, no marvel: but ſeek him, as ſhe ſought him, and we ſhall ſpeed, as ſhe ſped.

VER. XII.

And ſaw two Angels, in white, ſitting, the one at the head, the other at the feet where the Body of Jeſus had lien.

For what came of this? Thus ſtanding by it, and thus looking in, again and again, though ſhe ſaw not Chriſt at firſt, ſhe ſees his Angels. For ſo it pleaſed Chriſt to come by degrees: His Angels before Him. And, it is no vulgar honour, this, to ſee but an Angel: what would one of us give to ſee but the like ſight?

We are now at the Angels part. Their appearing, in this Verſe. There are four points in it: 1. Their place, 2. Their habit, 3. Their ſite, 4. and their order. 1. Place, in the grave; 2. Habit, in white; 3. Site, they were ſitting; 4. and their Order in ſitting, one at the head, the other at the feet.

The Place, In the grave ſhe ſaw them: and Angels in a grave, is a ſtrange ſight, a ſight never ſeen before; not till Chriſts body had been there, never till this day; this the firſt news of the Angels in that place. For, a grave is no place for Angels (one would think;) for worms rather: Bleſſed Angels, not but in a bleſſed place. But ſince Chriſt lay there, that place is bleſſed. There was a voice heard from heaven, Bleſſed be the dead: Precious the death, Glorious the memory now, of them that die in the Lord. And, even this, that the Angels diſdained not now to come thither, and to ſit there, is an auſpicium of a great change to enſue in the ſtate of that place. Quid glorioſius Angelo? quid vilius vermiculo? ſaith Auguſtine. Qui fuit vermiculorum locus, eſt & Angelorum. That which was the place for worms, is become a place for Angels. 1. Rev. 14.13. Pſal. 116.15.

Their Habit, In white. So were there divers of them, divers times, this day; ſeen, in white, all; in that colour. It ſeems to be their Eaſter-day colour, for at this Feaſt, they all do their ſervice in it. Their Eaſter-day colour, for it is the colour of the Reſurrection. The ſtate whereof when Chriſt would repreſent upon the Mount, His raiment was all white, no Fuller in the earth could come near it. And our colour it ſhall be, when riſing again, we ſhall walk in white robes, and follow the Lamb whither ſoever he goeth. Revel. 7.9.

Heaven mourned on Good-Friday; the Eclipſe made all then in black. Eaſter-day, it rejoyceth, Heaven and Angels, all in white. Solomon tels us, it is the colour of joy. And that is the ſtate of joy, and Eccleſ. 9.8.

this the day of the firſt joyfull tidings of it, with joy ever celebrated, even in albis, eight dayes together, by them that found Chriſt.

3. In white, and ſitting: As the colour, of joy; ſo, the ſituation, of reſt. So we ſay, Sit down, and reſt. And ſo, is the grave made by this mornings works, a place of reſt. Reſt, not from our labours onely, ſo do the beaſts reſt when they die: But as it is in the XVI. Pſalm, (a Pſalm of the Reſurrection) a reſt in hope; hope, of riſing again, the members in the vertue of their head, who this day is riſen. So, to enter into the reſt, which yet remaineth for the people of God, even the Sabbath eternal.

4. Sitting, and in this order ſitting, at the head, one; at the feet, another, where his body had lien.

1. Which order may well refer to Chriſt himſelf, whoſe body was the true Ark indeed, In which it pleaſed the God-head to dwell bodily; and is therefore here between two Angels, as was the Ark (the type of it) between the two Cherubims.

Col. 2. 9.
Exod. 25. 19.

2. May alſo refer to Mary Magdalen. She had anointed his head, She had anointed his feet: at theſe two places, ſit the two Angels, as it were to acknowledge ſo much for her ſake.

John 11, 3.

3. In myſtery they refer it thus. Becauſe Caput Chriſti Deus, the God-head is the head of Chriſt, and his feet (which the Serpent did bruiſe) his manhood; that either of theſe hath his Angel. That to Chriſt man, no leſs then to Chriſt God, the Angels do now their ſervice. In principio erat verbum, his God-head; there, an Angel: Verbum caro factum, his man-hood; there, another. And let all the Angels of God worſhip him in both. Even in his man-hood, at his cradle (the head of it) a quire of Angels; at his grave (the feet of it) Angels likewiſe.

1 Cor. 11. 3.
Gen. 3. 15.
Heb. 1. 6.
Luc 2. 13.

And laſtly, for our comfort (thus.) That, henceforth even ſuch ſhall our graves be, if we be ſo happy as to have our parts in the firſt Reſurrection, which is of the ſoul from ſin. We ſhall go to our graves in white (in the comfort, and colour of hope) lie between two Angels, there: they guard our bodies dead, and preſent them alive again at the Reſurrection.

Revel. 20. 6.

1. Yet before we leave them, to learn ſomewhat of the Angels: ſpecially, of the Angel that ſate at the feet. That, between them there was no ſtriving for places. He that ſate at the feet, as well content with his place, as he that at the head. We, to be ſo, by their example. For, with us, both the Angels would have been at the head, never on one at the feet: with us, none would be at the feet by his good will; Head-Angels all.

2. Again, from them both. That, inaſmuch, as the head ever ſtands for the beginning, and the feet for the end, that we be carefull, that our beginnings onely be not glorious, (O an Angel at the head in any wiſe;) but that we look to the feet, there be another there, too. Ne turpiter atrum deſinat, that it end not in a black Angel, that began in a white. And this for the Angels appearing.

VER. XIII.

And they ſaid to her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? She ſaid to them, They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.

Now to their ſpeech. It was not a dumb ſhew, this, a bare apparition, and ſo vaniſhed away. It was viſio & vox, a vocal viſion. Here is a Dialogue, too: The Angels ſpeak to her.

And they ask her, Quid ploras? Why ſhe wept? what cauſe ſhe had to weep? They mean, ſhe had none (as indeed, no more ſhe had.) All was in errour, pia lachryma, ſed cæca, tears of grief, but falſe grief, imagining that to be that was not, Him to be dead, that was alive. She weeps, becauſe ſhe found the grave empty, which God forbid ſhe ſhould have found full, for then Chriſt muſt have been dead ſtill, and ſo, no Reſurrection.

Gregory.

And this caſe of Mary Magdalen is our caſe oftentimes. In the errour of our conceit to weep, where we have no cauſe; to joy, where we have as little. Where we ſhould, where we have cauſe to joy, we weep; and, where to weep, we joy. Our ploras hath never a quid. Falſe joyes, and falſe ſorrows, falſe hopes, and falſe fears, this life of ours is full of, God help us.

Now, becauſe ſhe erred, they ask her the cauſe, that ſhe alledging it, they may take it away, and ſhew it to be no cauſe. As the elench, à non cauſâ, pro cauſâ, makes foul rule among us, beguiles us, all our life long.

Her anſwer.

Will you hear her anſwer to, Why weep you? Why? ſuſtulerunt, that was the cauſe; her Lord was gone, was taken away.

1. And a good cauſe it had been, if it had been true. Any have cauſe to grieve, that have loſt, loſt a good Lord, ſo good and gracious a Lord, as he had been to her.

2. But that is not all: a worſe matter, a greater grief then that. When one dieth, we reckon him taken away, that is one kind of taking away. But his dead body is left; ſo, all is not taken from us; That was not her caſe. For, in ſaying (her Lord) ſhe means not, her Lord alive, that is not it: ſhe means not, they had ſlain him, they had taken away his life, (ſhe had wept her fill for that, already.) But, her Lord, that is, his dead body. For, though his life was gone, yet his body was left. And, that was all, ſhe now had left of him, (that, ſhe calls, Her Lord) and, that, they had taken away from her, too. A poor one it was, yet ſome comfort it was to her, to have even that left her, to viſit, to anoint, to do other offices of love, even to that. Etiam viſo cadavere resaleſcit amor, at the ſight, even of that, will love revive, it will fetch life of love again. But now, here is her caſe; that is gone, and all, and nothing, but an empty grave, now left to ſtand by. That S. Auguſtine ſaith well, ſublatus de monumento, grieved her more, then occiſus in ligno; for, then ſomething yet was left; now, nothing at all. Right ſuſtulerunt, taken away quite and clean.

And

And thirdly, her nescio ubi. For though he be taken away, it is some comfort yet, if we know where to fetch him again. But here he is gone without all hope of recovery, or getting again. For they (but she knew not who) had carried him (she knew not whither,) laid him (she knew not where,) there to do to him (she knew not what.) So that now she knew not, whither to go, to find any comfort. It was nescio ubi, with her right. Put all these together, His life taken away, his body taken away, and no man knows whither; and do they ask, why she wept? or, can any blame her for it? 3.

The truth is, none had taken away her Lord, for all this: for, all this while her Lord was well, was, as she would have had him, alive and safe: He went away of himself, none carried him thence. What of that? Non credens suscitatum, credidit sublatum, for want of belief He was risen, she believed, He was carried away. She erred in so believing, there was errour in her love, but there was love in her errour too. Her errour.

And give me leave to lay out three more arguments of her love, out of this Verse, (to make up eight, towards the making up of her multum.) Yes, her love.

The very title she gives him, of Dominum meum, is one, My Lord, that she gives him that term. For, it shews, her love and respect was no whit abated, by the scandal of his death. It was a most opprobrious, ignominious, shamefull death he suffered; such, as in the eyes of the world, many would have been ashamed to own him (or say of him, meum:) but, any would have been afraid to honour him with that title, to stile him, Dominum. She was neither. Meum, for hers; Dominum meum, for her Lord she acknowledgeth him, is neither ashamed nor afraid to continue that title still. Amor scandalo non scandalizatus. 1.

Another (which I take to be far beyond this,) That, she having looked into the grave a little before, and seen never an Angel there; and of a sudden looking in now, and seeing two, (a sight able to have amazed any; any, but her) It moves not her at all. The suddenness, the strangeness, the gloriousness of the sight, yea, even of Angels, move her not at all. She seems to have no sense of it; and so to be in a kind of extasie all the while. Domine, propter te est extra se, saith Bernard. Amor extasin patiens. 2.

And thirdly, as that strange sight affected her not a whit: so neither did their comfortable speech work with her at all. Comfortable, I call it; for they that ask the cause, why, (why weep you?) shew, they would remove it, if it lay in them. Neither of these did, or could move her, or make her once leave her weeping: she wept on still, (Christ will ask her, quid ploras? by and by again.) If she find an Angel, if she find not her Lord, it will not serve. She had rather find his dead body, then them in all their glory. No man in earth, no Angel in heaven can comfort her, none but he that is taken away, Christ, and none but Christ; and till she find him again, her soul refuseth all manner comfort: yea, even from Heaven, even from the Angels themselves. These three. Amor super amissum renuens consolari.

Thus she, in her love, for her supposed loss, or taking away. And what shall become of us in ours then? That lose him, 1. not once, but oft; 2. And not in suppose, as she did, but in very deed; 3. And that, by sin, (the worst loss of all;) 4. And that, not by any others taking away, but by our own act, and wilfull default; and are not grieved, nay, not moved a whit, break none of our wonted sports for it, as if we reckoned him, as good lost, as found. Yea, when Christ, and the Holy Ghost, and the favour of God, and all is gone, how soon, how easily are we comforted again for all this? that none shall need to say, quid ploras? to us; rather, quid non ploras? ask us, why we weep not, having so good a cause to do it, as we then have? This for the Angels part,

VER. XIV.

When she had thus said, she turned her self about, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus.

Always the Angels (we see) touched the right string, and she tells them the wrong cause, but yet the right, if it had been right.

Now, to this answer of hers, they would have replied, and taken away her errour touching her Lords taking away; that if she knew all, she would have left her seeking, and set her down by them: and left her weeping; and been in white as well as they.

But, here is a Supersedeas to them: The Lord himself comes in place. (Now come we from the seeking him dead, to the finding him alive.) For, when he saw, no Angels, no sight, no speech of theirs would serve, none but her Lord could give her any comfort, her Lord comes. Christus adest.

Adest Christus, nec ab eis unquam abest, à quibus quæritur, saith Saint Augustine, Christ is found, found by her; And this case of hers, shall be the case of all that seriously seek him. This woman here, for one, she sought him (we see.) They that went to Emmaus to day; they but talked of him sadly, and they both found him. Why, He is found of them that seek him not. Esay 65. 1. but of them that seek him, never but found. For, thou Lord never failest them that seek thee, Psalm 9.10. God is not unrighteous, to forget the work and labour of their love that seek him. Heb. 6.10.

So, find him they shall, but haply not all so fully at first, no more then she did. For, first (to try her yet a little further) He comes unknown, stands by her, and she little thought it had been he.

A case that likewise falls out full oft. Doubtless he is not far from every one of us, saith the Apostle to the Athenians. But he is nearer us many times then we think; even hard by us, and we not aware of it, saith Job. And, O si cognovisses & tu, O if we did know (and it standeth us in hand to pray that we may know) when he is so, for, that is the time of our visitation. Acts 17.27. Job 9.11. Luke 19.41. Luke 19.44.

S. John saith here, the Angels were sitting: S. Luke saith, they stood, Luke 24.4. They are thus reconciled. That Christ coming in presence, the Angels which before were sitting, stood up. Their standing up, made made Mary Magdalen turn her to see who it was they rose to. And so Christ she saw, but knew him not.

Not onely not knew him, but mis-knew him, took him for the Gardiner. Tears will dim the sight, and it was yet scarce day, and she, seeing one, and not knowing what any one should make in the ground so early, but he that dressed it, she might well mistake. But it was more then so: Her eyes were not holden Luk.24.16. Mark.16.12. onely, that she did not know him, but over and beside, He did appear ἐν ἑτέρᾳ μορφῇ, in some such shape as might resemble the Gardiner, whom she took him for.

Proper enough it was, it fitted well the time and place (this person). The time, It was the Spring; the place, It was a Garden (that place is most in request at that time) for that place and time, a Gardiner doth well.

Of which her so taking him, S. Gregory saith well, Prosecto eo modo non erravit. She did not mistake in taking him for a Gardiner: though she might seem to err in some sense, yet in some other she was in the right. For, in a sense, and a good sense, Christ may well be said to be a Gardiner, and indeed is one. For, our rule is, Christ, as he appears, to be ever: No false semblant in him.

1. A Gardiner he is then. The first, the fairest Garden that ever was (Paradise) He was the Gardiner, it was of his planting. So a Gardiner.

2. And ever since it is he that (as God) makes all our Gardens green, sends us yearly the Spring, and all the herbs and flowers we then gather; and neither Paul with his planting, nor Apollo with his watering, could do any good without him. So a Gardiner in that sense.

3. But not in that alone; but he it is that gardens our souls too, and makes them, as the Prophet saith, Jerem.31.11. Like a well watered Garden, weeds out of them whatsoever is noisome or unsavoury, sowes and plants them with true roots and seeds of righteousness, waters them with the dew of his grace, and makes them bring forth fruit to eternal life.

But it is none of all these, but besides all these, nay, over and above all these, this day (if ever) most properly he was a Gardiner. Was one, and so after a more peculiar manner, might take this likeness on him. Christ rising was indeed a Gardiner, and that a strange one, who made such an herb grow out of the ground this day, as the like was never seen before, a dead body, to shoot forth alive out of the grave.

I ask, was he so this day alone? No, but this profession of his, this day begun, he will follow to the end. For, He it is, that by the vertue of this mornings act, shall garden our bodies, too: turn all our graves into garden-plots: Yea, and shall one day turn land and sea, and all into a great Garden; and so husband them, as they shall in due time bring forth live bodies, even all our bodies alive again.

Long before did Esay see this and sing of it, in his song, Isai. 26. 19. resembling the Resurrection to a Spring-garden. Awake and sing (saith he) ye that dwell for a time are as it were sowen in the dust, for thy dew shall be as the dew of Herbs, and the earth shall shoot forth her dead. So then: He appeared no other, then he was; A Gardiner he was, not in shew alone, but opere & veritate, and so came in his own likeness. This for Christs appearing. Now to his speech, (but, as unknown still.)

VER. XV.

Jesus saith to her, Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? She (supposing he had been the Gardiner) said to him, Sir, if thou have born him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him thence.

Christs question unknown. Augustine.

Still she weeps: So he begins with quid ploras? asks the same question the Angels had before; onely quickens it a little with Quem quæris? Whom seek you? So quem quæris, quærit à te quem quæris, whom she sought, he asks her whom she sought? Si quæris, cur non cognoscis? si cognoscis, cur quæris? saith Augustine. If she seek him, why knows she him not? If she know him, why seeks she him still? A common thing with us (this also,) to seek a thing, and when we have found it, not to know, we have so; but even Christum à Christo quærere, to ask Christ for Christ. Which however it fall in other matters, in this seeking of Christ, it is safe. Even when we seek Christ, to pray to Christ, to help us to find Christ; we shall do it full evil without him.

This quid ploras? It comes now twice. The Angels asked it, we stood not on it then. Now, seeing Christ asks it again, the second time, we will think there is something in it, and stay a little at it. The rather, for that it is the very opening of his mouth, the very first words that ever came from him, that he spake first of all, after his rising again from death. There is sure some more then ordinary matter in this quid ploras? if it be, but even for that.

Thus say the Fathers; 1. That Mary Magdalen standing by the graves side, and there weeping, is thus brought in, to represent unto us, the state of all mankind before this day, the day of Christs rising again, Weeping over the dead, as do the Heathen that have no hope; comes Christ with his quid ploras? why do ye weep? 1 Thes.4.13. As much to say, as ne ploras, Weep not, why should you weep? There is no cause of weeping now. Henceforth none shall need to stand by the grave to weep there any more. A question very proper for Easter-day, for the day of the Resurrection. For, if there be a rising again, quid ploras? is right, why should she, why should any weep then?

So that this quid ploras of Christ, wipes away tears from all eyes, and as we sing in the thirtieth Psalm (whose title is, the Psalm of the Resurrection) puts off our sackcloth, that is our mourning weeds, girds us with gladness, puts us all in white with the Angels.

Ploras then, leave that for Good-Friday, for his Passion: Weep then and spare not. But, quid ploras? for Easter-day, is in kind (the Feast of the Resurrection) why should there be any weeping upon it? Is not

Christ

Christ risen? shall not he raise us with him? Is he not a Gardiner, to make our bodies sown to grow again? Ploras, leave that to the Heathen, that are without hope; but to the Christian man, quid ploras? why should he weep? he hath hopes; the Head is already risen, the members shall in their due time follow him.

I observe, that four times this day, at four several appearings, 1. at the first (at this here) He asked her, quid ploras? Why she wept? 2. Of them that went to Emmaus, quid tristes estis? Why are ye sad? Luke 24.17. 3. Within a Verse following (the nineteenth) he saith to the eleven, Pax vobis, Peace be to them. 4. And to the women that met him on the way, χαίρετε, that is, Rejoyce, be glad. So, no weeping, no being sad: Matt. 28.9 now nothing this day, but peace and joy: they do properly belong to this Feast.

And, this I note the more willingly, now this year; because the last Easter we could not so well have noted it. Some wept then; all were sad, little joy there was, and there was a quid, a good cause for it. But blessed be God that hath now sent us a more kindly Easter, of this; by taking away the cause of our sorrow then, that we may preach of Quid ploras? and be far from it. So much for quid ploras? Christs question. Now to her answer.

She is still where she was; at sustulerunt before, at sustulisti, now: si tu sustulisti: we shall never Her answer. get that word from her.

But, to Christ she seems somewhat more harsh, then to the Angels. To them she complains of others, They have taken: Christ she seems to charge, at least to suspect of the fact, as if he looked like one that had been a breaker up of graves, a carrier away of Corses out of their place of rest. Her (if) implies as much. But pardon love: As it fears where it needs not, so it suspects oft, where it hath no cause. He, or any that comes in our way, hath done it, hath taken him away, when love is at a loss. But Bernard speaks to Christ for her; Domine, amor quem habebat in Te, & dolor quem habebat de Te, excuset eum apud Te, si forte erravit, circa Te: That the love she bare to him, the sorrow she had for him, may excuse her with him, if she were in any errour concerning him, in her saying, Si tu sustulisti.

And yet, see how God shall direct the tongue! In thus charging him, Prophetas & nescit, she sayes Origen. truer then she was aware. For indeed, if any took him away, it was he did it. So, she was not much amiss. Her si tu, was true, though not in her sense. For, quod de ipso factum est, ipse fecit. All that was done to Chrysologus. him, he did it himself. His taking away, virtus fuit, non facinus, was by his own power, not by the act of any other: Et gloria non injuria; No other mans injury it was, but his own glory, that she found him not there. This was true, but this was no part of her meaning.

I cannot here pass over two more Characters of her love, that so you may have the full ten I promised.

One, in si tu sustulisti Eum, in her Eum, in her [Him.] Him? Which Him? Her affections seem so 1. to transport her, as she says no man knows what. To one a meer stranger to her, and she to him, she talks of one thrise under the term of Him, If thou hast taken Him away, tell me where thou hast laid Him, and I will fetch Him: Him, Him, and Him, and never names him, or tells who he is. This is Solœcismus amoris, an irregular speech, but loves own dialect. Him, is enough with love; who knows not who that is? It supposes every body, all the world bound to take notice of him whom we look for, onely by saying, Him; though we never tell his name, nor say a word more, Amor quem ipse cogitat, neminem putans ignorare.

The other is in her Ego tollam; If he would tell her where he had laid him, she would go fetch him, 2. (that she would.) Alas poor woman, she was not able to lift him. There are more then one or two either, allowed to the carrying of a corps.

As for His, it had more then an hundred pound weight of Myrrhe and other odours upon it, beside the John 9.39. poise of a dead body. She could not do it. Well, yet she would do it, though. O mulier, non mulier (saith Origen) for ego tollam seems rather the speech of a Porter, or of some lusty strong fellow at least, then of a silly weak woman. But love makes women more then women, at least it makes them have ὑπὲρ ἀνδρὸς ἰσχὺν the courage above the strength, far. Never measures her own forces, no burden too heavy, no assay too hard for love, Et nihil erubescit nisi nomen difficultatis; and is not ashamed of any thing, but that any thing should be too hard or too heavy for it. Affectus sine mensurâ virium proprium. Both these argue dilexit multum. And so now, you have the full number of ten.

VER. XVI.

Jesus saith to her, Mary: She turned her self, and said to him, Rabboni; that is to say, Master.

Now magnes amoris amor. Nothing so allures, so draws love to it, as doth love it self. In Christ specially, and in such, in whom the same mind is. For, when her Lord saw, there was no taking away His taking away from her, all was in vain, neither men, nor Angels, nor Himself (so long as he kept himself Gardiner) could get any thing of her, but her Lord was gone, he was taken away; and that for the want of Jesus, nothing but Jesus could yield her any comfort: He is no longer able to contain, but even discloses himself; and discloses himself by his voice. Christs second speech.

For, it should seem, before, with his shape, he had changed that also. But now, he speaks to her in his known voice, in the wonted accent of it, does but name her name, Mary, no more, and that was enough. That was as much to say, Recognosce à quo recognosceris, she would at least take notice of him, that shewed he was no stranger, by calling her by her name. For, whom we call by their names, we take particular Augustine. notice of. So God says to Moses, Te autem cognovi de nomine, Thou hast found grace in my sight, and I Exod. 33 17. know thee by name. As God, Moses; So Christ, Mary Magdalen.

And this indeed is the right way to know Christ; to be known of him first. Gal. 4.9. the Apostle saith,

Now

Now we have known God (and then correcteth himself) or rather have been known of God. For, till he know us, she shall never know him aright.

And now, lo, Christ is found; found alive that was sought dead. A cloud may be so thick, we shall not see the Sun thorow it. The Sun must scatter that cloud, and then we may. Here is an example of it. It is strange, a thick cloud of heavines had so covered her, as, see him she could not, thorow it: this one word, these two syllables [Mary] from his mouth, scatters it all. No sooner had his voice sounded in her ears, but it drives away all the mist, dries up her tears, lightens her eyes, that she knew him straight, and answers him with her wonted salutation, Rabboni. If it had lien in her power to have raised him from the dead, she would not have failed, but done it (I dare say.) Now, it is done to her hands.

Her answer.

And with this all is turned out and in. A new world, now. Away with sustulerunt; his taking away is taken away quite. For, if his taking away were her sorrow; Contrariorum contraria consequentia. Si de sublato ploravit, de suscitato exultavit; we may be sure: If sad for his death, for his taking away; then glad for his rising, for his restoring again. Surely, if she would have been glad but to have found but his dead body; now she finds it, and him, alive, what was her joy; how great may we think? so that by this she saw, Quid ploras was not asked her for nought, that it was no impertinent question, as it fell out.

Augustine.

Well now, he that was thought lost, is found again: and found, not, as he was sought for, not a dead body, but a living soul; nay, a quickning spirit, then. And that might Mary Magdalen well say. He shewed it, for he quickned her and her spirits, that were as good as dead. You thought you should have come to Christs Resurrection to day, and so you do. But not to his alone, but even to Mary Magdalens resurrection, too. For, in very deed, a kind of resurrection it was, was wrought in her; revived, as it were, and raised from a dead and drooping, to a lively and chearfull estate. The Gardiner had done his part, made her all green on the sudden.

1 Cor. 15. 45.

And all this, by a word of his mouth. Such power is there in every word of his; so easily are they called, whom Christ will but speak to.

But, by this we see, when he would be made known to her after his rising, he did choose to be made known by the ear rather then by the eye. By hearing, rather then by appearing. Opens her ears first, and her eyes after. Her eyes were holden, till her ears were opened; comes aures autem aperuisti mihi, and opens them.

Luke 24. 16. Psal. 40. 6.

With the Philosophers, hearing is the sense of wisdome. With us, in Divinity, it is the sense of faith. So, most meet. Christ is the Word, hearing then (that sense) is Christs sense; voce quam visu, more proper to the Word. So, sicut audivimus goes before, and then, sic vidimus comes after. In matters of faith, the ear goes first, ever, and is of more use, and to be trusted before the eye. For, in many cases faith holdeth, where sight faileth.

Psal. 48. 8.

This then is a good way to come to the knowledge of Christ, by Hodie si vocem, to hear his voice. Howbeit, it is not the onely way. There is another way to take notice of him by, besides, and we to take notice of it. On this very day we have them both.

Psal. 95. 7.

For twice this day came Christ; unknown first, and then known, after. To Mary Magdalen, here; and to them at Emmaus, Luc. Chapter 24. To Mary Magdalen unknown, in the shape of a Gardiner. To those that went to Emmaus unknown, in the likeness of a Traveller by the way-side. Come to be known to her by his voice, by the word of his mouth: Not so to them; for many words he spake to them, and they felt them warm at their hearts, but, knew him not for all that: But He was known to them in the breaking of the bread. Her eyes opened by speaking a word: their eyes opened by the breaking of bread. There is the one and the other way, and so now you have both. And now you have them, I pray you make use of them. (I see, I shall not be able to go further then this Verse.)

Luk. 24. 32, 35.

It were a folly to fall to comparisons, committere inter se, to set them at odds together, these two wayes: as the fond fashion now adayes is, whether is better, Prayer, or Preaching the Word, or the Sacraments. What needs this? Seeing we have both, both are ready for us; the one now, the other by and by. We may end this question soon. And this is the best and surest way to end it, to esteem of them both, to thank him for both, to make use of both; having now done with one, to make trial of the other. It may be (who knows) if the one will not work, the other may. And if by the one, or by the other, by either, if it be wrought, what harm have we? In case it be not, yet have we offered to God our service in both, and committed the success of both to him. He will see they shall have success, and in his good time (as shall be expedient for us) vouchsafe every one of us, as he did Mary Magdalen in the Text, to know him, and the vertue of his Resurrection; and make us partakers of both, by both the means before remembred, by his blessed Word, by his holy Mysteries; the means to raise our souls here, the pledges of the raising up of our bodies hereafter. Of both which he make us partakers, who is the Author of both, Jesus Christ the Righteous, &c.

Phil. 3. 10.

A SER-

A SERMON

Preached before the

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the First of April, being Easter-Day.

An. Dom. 1621.

JOHN. Chap. XX. Vers. XVII.

Dicit ei Jesus, Noli me tangere.

Jesus saith unto her, Touch me not.

MARY Magdalen, because she loved much, and gave divers good proofs of it, had this morning divers favours vouchsafed her: To see a vision of Angels: To see Christ himself; to see him before any other, first of all: He spake to her, Mary; she spake to him, Rabboni: Hitherto all was well. Now, here, after all this love, after all these favours, even in the neck of them (as it were) comes an unkind word or two, a Noli me tangere, and marrs all; turns all out and in. Make the best of it, a repulse it is: but a cold salutation for an Easter-day morning. Vers. 11. Vers. 14. Vers. 16.

A little before he asked, Why she wept. This is enough to set her on weeping afresh. For, if she wept for sustulerunt Dominum, that others had taken away her Lord: Much more, now, when her Lord takes away himself from her, that she may not so much as touch him. Vers. 15.

We observed, that (this morning) Christ came in two shapes, and at either of them spake a speech. At first, he came unknown, taken for a Gardiner: the latter he spake in his own voice, and became known to her. I know not how; but, unknown, Christ proves better to her, then when he came to be known: better for her, he had kept himself unknown still. For, then unknown, he asked her kindly, Why she wept? as much to say as, Weep not, Noli te angere, noli me plangere: there is some comfort in that. But known, he grows somewhat strange on the sudden, and asks her, what she means to come so near him, or offer to touch him; which must needs be much to her discomfort, to be forbidden, once to come near or touch her Saviour: and to be forbidden by his own mouth.

But there is a good use of Noli me plangere, and Noli me tangere, both. One, we have touched already: of the other, now. One would little think it, but they sort well: Quid ploras? and Noli me tangere. Quid ploras? To rejoyce at his rising: Noli me tangere, to do it with reverence. They amount to exultate in tremore. Psal. 2. 11.

The

The Diviſion. The Verſe of it ſelf falls into two parts. We may divide it (as the Jews do the Law) into Do not, and Do: ſomewhat forbidden there is, and ſomewhat bidden. Forbiden, do not, not touch me; Bidden, but do, Go your ways and tell. The forbidding part ſtands of two points: 1. a Reſtraint; and 2. a Reaſon.

I. 1. The Reſtraint in theſe: Noli me tangere, &c. II. 2. The Reaſon in theſe: Nondum enim, &c. For I am not yet aſcended, &c.

The Bidding part, of three, 1. A Miſſion or Commiſſion, to go do a meſſage, Vade & die. 2. The perſons to whom: to my Brethren, that is, to his Diſciples. 3. The Meſſage it ſelf; I aſcend to my Father, &c. And this latter is as it were an amends for the former: That the Text is ſomewhat like the time of the year: the morning ſomewhat freſh, but a fair day after: Noli me tangere, the Repulſe is the ſharp morning; Vade & die, the welcome Meſſage, the fair day (we ſpake of) that makes all well again.

Either of theſe will ſerve for a Sermon, the former Noli me tangere, &c. it is ſo full of difficulties: but withal, of good and needfull caution. The latter of the Meſſage, it is ſo fraught with high Myſteries, and beſide, with much heavenly comfort. They call it Mary Magdalens Goſpel: (for glad tidings it contains; and what is the Goſpel elſe?) The firſt Goſpel or glad tidings after Chriſts Reſurrection. The very Goſpel of the Goſpel it ſelf, and a Compendium of all the four. Of which (if God will) at ſome other time. Now, I will trouble you no further, but with Touch me not, for I am not yet aſcended to the Father.

I. The Reſtraint, Noli me tangere.

NO ſooner had Chriſts voice ſounded in her ears, but ſhe knew ſtraight Rabboni, it was He; and withal (as it may be gathered by this Noli me, &c.) ſhe did that which amounted to a Volo Te tangere: that is, ſhe made toward him, ſtretched forth her hand, and offered, would have touched him; but for this, Touch me not. Touch not? why not? What harm had there been, if he had ſuffered her to touch him? The ſpeech is ſtrange to be ſpoken either by Him, or to her: the reaſon, the For, yet more ſtrange: Many difficulties in both, God ſend us well through them. There be but three words, 1. Noli, 2. me, and 3. tangere; touch, at which of theſe three you will, tangere; noli, and me, the two parties: Me, Him, Chriſt; Noli, her, Mary Magdalen: you will find ſomewhat ſtrange this ſpeech of his.

1. Tangere, the thing forbidden. Matth. 9. 21.

Tangere, the thing. Not touch? Why, it is nothing, to touch; and becauſe it is nothing, might have been yielded to. And yet to touch Chriſt, is not nothing. Many deſired, yea, ſtrove, to touch him: there went vertue from him, even while he was mortal: But now he is immortal, by all likelihood, much more. That was not her caſe; to draw ought from him: it was for pure love, and nothing elſe, ſhe deſired it. To love, it is not enough, to hear, or ſee; it is carried further, to touch and take hold: It is affectus unionis; and the neareſt union is per contactum.

2. The parties.

Secondly, the Parties. Me: not Me, not Chriſt. Why not Him? Chriſt was not wont to be ſo dainty of it. Divers times, in divers places, he ſuffered the rude multitude to throng and to thruſt him. What ſpeak we of that? when, not three days ſince, he ſuffered other manner of touches and twitches both. Then, Noli me tangere would have come in good time; would have done well on Good-Friday. Why ſuffered he them then? why ſuffered he not her, now? She (I dare ſay for her) would have done him no hurt, ſhe. Noli, is to her: Not ſhe: Not Mary Magdalen. She had touched him before now; touched his head, touched his feet; anointed them both; What was done, ſhe might not, now? She hath even now, this morning, brought odours in her hand to embalm him: and with theſe, and with no other hands, doth ſhe offer to touch him at this time: She might have been born with. It was early: as early as it was, ſhe had this morning given many good proofs of her love. 1. That ſhe was ſo early up; 2. came to the Grave firſt: 3. ſtayed there laſt: 4. had been at ſuch coſt: 5. had taken ſuch pains: 6. had wept ſo many tears: 7. would not be comforted, no not by Angels, till ſhe had found him; and now ſhe hath found him, not to touch him? All theſe might have pleaded for as much as this comes to. For all theſe, one poor touch had been but an eaſie recompence. Of all other, this prohibition lay not againſt her: of all times, not at this. The more we look into it, the further off we find it, to be ſpoken, either by him, or to her.

Matth. 14. 3. Luke 7. 46? Mark 16. 1.

II. The Reaſon.

But if we go further, and look the Reaſon, we ſhall find it yet more ſtrange: it will increaſe the doubt. Touch me not, for I am not yet aſcended: What a reaſon is this? As who ſhould ſay: when he was aſcended, ſhe ſhould, then. But, then when he was aſcended, one would think, ſhe ſhould be further off, then now. Si ſtans in terra tam propè non tangitur, receptus in cœlum quomodo tangitur? If ſtanding on earth by him, he is not to be touched; when he is taken up into heaven, no arm will then reach him: paſt touching, then: that if not till then, never. The reaſon makes it yet further from reaſon. No remedy, but we muſt pray a conſultation (as they call it) upon this Prohibition.

It cannot be denied, but for Noli me, there is a time and place. It is worth the noting: the world began with a Noli me tangere; both the worlds. The old world: the firſt words (in a manner) God ſpake then, were a kind of a Noli me tangere; Touch not the forbidden fruit. And as in the old, ſo here at the beginning this new, (for with Chriſts riſing, began the New creature) it is Chriſts firſt ſpeech, we ſee, Chriſt riſing, it is his firſt precept: His firſt Law is negative; it is the firſt thing he forbiddeth us, the firſt he thought good to warn us of. Of his firſt words, we will have a ſpecial care, I truſt. The rule is,

Things

Things that will hurt us, beſt not touch. Beſt, not touch? nay, ſound and good was Arſenius the Eremite his advice touching thoſe: Impera Evæ & cave Serpentem, & tutus eris: Tutior autem, ſi arborem non aſpexeris. Can you command Eve, can you ſo? and can you beware the Serpent? well: do ſo then, and you ſhall be ſafe: But (hear you) Tutior, you ſhall be yet more ſafe, if you ſee not, look not upon, come not within the reach; nay, not within the ſight of the forbidden tree. But Chriſt is not the forbidden tree: the tree of life rather; to be touched and taſted, that we may live by him. No place in Chriſt for a Noli me tangere. John 12.25.

Of thoſe that hurt us, ſome we have no ſenſe of at the firſt. Such are all things unlawfull and forbidden: which, though for the time they ſeem pleaſant, yet they have their ſtings in their tail: ſooner or later, we ſhall find, they will hurt us; any fruit of the forbidden tree.

Other things we feel hurt us, we forbear eaſily. An angry inflammation there is, the name of it is a Noli me tangere; and not that onely, but any bile or ſore endures not the touching. What? had Chriſt any ſore place about him, ſince his paſſion? No: For, Saint Thomas put his finger, nay, his whole hand into the place of his wounds, and put him to no pain at all. No place in Chriſt for this Noli me tangere, neither. Verſe 27.

I. Not on Chriſts part.

Not to hold you longer: Noli me tangere can riſe but one of theſe ways: Either out of 1. Noli; or 2. out of Me: Ex parte tacti, or Ex parte tangentis; his that was touched, or hers that did touch him. 1. Touch me not, you will hurt me, I am ſore; Ex parte tacti: 2. or, Touch me not, I ſhall hurt you; I am hot or ſharp; Ex parte tangentis: Fire, I ſhall ſcorch you: an edge-tool, I ſhall wound you: Pitch, I ſhall defile you: ſome contagious thing, I ſhall infect you. Every one of theſe cries, Noli me tangere. But neither of theſe hath place in Chriſt. Chriſt riſing, was not now in ſtate, to receive any hurt; and neither now, nor ever in caſe to do any; to prick or to burn the fingers of any that touch him.

II. But on Mary Magdalens.

We reſolve then; it was not on Chriſts part, this Touch me not. It ſhould then more properly have been Nolo me tangi: But it is, Noli me tangere, and ſo on hers. No let in him, but he might be touched: the let, in her; ſhe might not touch him. That it was never Chriſts meaning, after he was riſen, he would not be touched of any at all, it is evident. This very day, at even, appearing to the eleven, he not onely ſuffered, but invited them to touch him; nay more, Palpate Me, which is, touch Me thoroughly. This very Chapter, at the XXVII. verſe, he calls to Saint Thomas, Infer digitum, put in your finger: Nay, Affer manum, hand and all: which is to touch, and touch home (I am ſure.) Luke 24.39.

How then? would he have Men touch him, and not Women? nor that, neither. This is his firſt appearing: at his ſecond, and next to this, certain Women met him on the way: He ſuffered them to touch him, and take him by the feet. Some vertuous woman it may be: But Mary Magdalen had been a notorious ſinner, and ſo unworthy of it. No, nor that, of the women that ſo met him, and ſo touched him, ſhe was one. See *Matth.*28. Mary Magdalen touch, and Mary Magdalen not touch? the difficulties grow ſtill. For I aſk: if at the ſecond appearing, why not at the firſt? Why after, and not now? Why, there, touch and ſpare not; and here, Noli me tangere, not come thither. Matth.28.9. Luke 7.47.

Let me tell you what we have gained: Theſe three things. 1. The Prohibition is not real: the touch, the thing is not forbidden: it is but perſonal. 2. Nay, not perſonal, neither abſolutely; not ſhe ſimply, but not ſhe, as now at this time. She might touch, (it ſeems) for ſhe did, not long after. Mary Magdalen might: but not this Mary Magdalen. 3. And laſt, that it is not final; there is life, there is hope in it. Not, never to touch; but not, Stando in his terminis, ſtanding in the terms ſhe doth. What terms are thoſe? And now (lo) we are come to the point, to that we ſearch for.

Three ſenſes I will give you, and they have great Authors, all three; Chryſoſtome, Gregory, Auguſtine. I will touch them all three; and you may take your choice of them; or, if you pleaſe, take them all: for, they will ſtand well together.

To correct her want of due reverence: S. Chryſoſtomes ſenſes.

One is (it is Chryſoſtomes) That, all was not well; ſomewhat amiſs; ſhe ſomething to blame in the manner of her offer, which was not all as it ſhould. The moſt we can make, ſhe failed in ſomewhat. Not, that ſhe did it in any immodeſt or undecent manner: God forbid: never think of that. But onely a little too forward, it may be: not with that due reſpect that was meet.

We ſee by that is paſt, how the world went. Chriſt ſaid, Mary: She anſwers him with her wonted term, with a Rabboni. And as ſhe ſaluted him with her wonted term, ſo after her wonted faſhion, ſhe made toward him, to have touched him: not in ſuch manner, as was fit to have been obſerved; nor with that regard, which his new glorified eſtate after his reſurrection, might ſeem juſtly to require. It is in Me: not the ſame Me, he was. That that was enough to Chriſt, a few dayes ago, was nothing near enough, to day, for him. He that three dayes ſince endured ſo much, the day is now come, He will be touched after another faſhion: Propter hoc exaltavit Eum Deus, For, to this end God ſo highly exalted Him. I tell you plainly, I did not like her Rabboni: it was no Eaſter-day-ſalutation, it would have been ſome better term expreſſing more reverence. So, her offer would have been in ſome more reſpective manner; her touch no Eaſter-day touch; her tangere had a tang in it (as we ſay.) The touch-ſtone of our touching Chriſt, is, with all regard and reverence that may be: Bring hers to this, and her touch was not the right touch; and all, for want of expreſſing more regard; not, for want of toto, but tanto: not, of reverence at all; but of reverence enough. Phil.2.9.

Two cauſes they give of this fail. One, a defect in her judgment: The other, an exceſs in her affection. Her amiſs in the manner, grew out of her amiſs in the mind; a miſconceipt, he had been but even Rabboni ſtill. As it ſhould ſeem, it ſeemeth to her, it was with him no otherwiſe, then with her brother Lazarus: that Chriſt had riſen idem qui prius, neither more nor leſs, but juſt the ſame, he was before.

To

To be ſaluted, approached, touched, as formerly he had been. Formerly, he might have been touched: She thought, he might have been even ſo ſtill. Whereas, with him, the caſe was quite altered: He is 1 Cor.15.53. riſen in a far other condition then ſo. His corruptible had now put on incorruption; and his mortal, im-
43. mortality. He died in weakneſs and diſhonour: Roſe again in power and glory. And, as in another ſtate, ſo to another end: Not to ſtay upon earth, or converſe here any longer, but to aſcend up into heaven. There was no aſcends in her mind.

His reaſon imports as much. You touch Me, not as if I were upon aſcending; but, as if to ſtay here ſtill. For, in ſaying, I am not yet; his meaning is, ere long, he ſhould. Nondum aſcendi, yet I am not: but aſcendo, preſently I am to do it; to leave this world, and all here beneath, and to go up and take poſſeſſion of my Kingdome of Glory. To this new glorious condition of his, there belonged more then Rabboni; another manner approach then more ſolito. He being ſo very highly exalted, and far otherwiſe then he was, her acceſs to have been according: Not being ſo, it made her unmeet to touch him, now. Nay, if you be but at Rabboni, and make toward Me in no other ſort then thus, Noli me tangere, Touch me not.

Hence we learn, that when he ſees, we forget our ſelves, Chriſt will take a little ſtate upon him; will Verſe 28. not be ſaluted with Rabboni, but with ſome more ſeemly term. Saint Thomas his, My Lord, and my God, a better far then Rabboni. Nor be approached to, after the old accuſtomed faſhion, but with ſome more Ephes.5.3. ſeemly reſpect, ſicut decet ſanctos. They that ſo preſs to touch him, and beſomewhat too homely with him, they are in Mary Magdalens caſe: Her Noli me tangere, touches them home. And their puniſhment ſhall be, that touch him they ſhall not.

It is no excuſe to ſay, all was out of love: Never lay it upon that. Love, Chriſt loves well: but, love, if it be right, ὐ ἀσχημονεῖ, nihil facit perperam (ſaith the Apoſtle) in æquum, doth nothing uncomely, keeps decorum; forgets not what belongs to duty, and decency; carries it ſelf accordingly. And ſuch love Chriſt loves. Otherwiſe, Love may, and doth forget it ſelf other-while: and then, in that caſe, the Heathen mans ſaying is true, Importunus amor parùm diſtat à ſimultate: ſuch love is not love. A ſtrange kind of love, when, for very love to Chriſt, we care not how we uſe him, or carry our ſelves towards him. Which being her caſe, ſhe heard, and heard juſtly, Noli me tangere: you are not now in caſe, till you ſhall have learned to touch after a more regardfull faſhion.

This may truly be ſaid: ſhe was not, before, ſo carried away with ſorrow (that Paſſion;) but ſhe was now as far gone in the other of joy: and ſo like enough to forget her ſelf, in offering to touch him no otherwiſe then heri and nudius tertius, as two or three dayes ago ſhe might have done. S. Peters caſe in the Mount, was juſt her caſe here: He knew not what he ſaid, nor ſhe, what ſhe did: ſo ſurpri-
Mark 9.6. ſed with the ſudden joy, as ſhe had no leiſure to recollect her ſelf, and to weigh the wonderfull great change, this day wrought in him.

Out of which, our leſſon is, that in the ſudden ſurpriſe of any paſſion, Chriſtus non eſt tangibilis, no touching Chriſt then. But, when the paſſion is over, and we come to our ſelves, it will be with us, as with her judgement calmed; her judgement ſetled better, then now on the ſudden it was (as it ſeemed) ſhe will be then fit, and then ſhe may be admitted: and ſo, ſhe was, and did touch him: but, that time,
Matth.28.9. when ſhe did ſo touch him, ſhe was upon her knees, down at his feet, another manner of geſture, then here ſhe offered.

Say, ſhe were unfit, yet hangs there a cloud ſtill: all is not clear. For, why then did others touch, to our ſeeming as unfit as ſhe? Thomas with his faith in his fingers ends? The reſt, in whoſe teeth he caſt their unbelief and hardneſs of heart, they touched him at firſt: why not ſhe, as well as they? They were unfit, I grant; but their unfitneſs grew ex alio capite, another way, then did hers. They believed not, were in Luke 24.38. doubt; thought, he had been but a ghoſt. To rid them of that doubt, that they might be ſure it was he,

1 John 1.1. touch him. Touching was the proper cure for their diſeaſe: So, was it not, for hers. She never doubted a whit; was ſure, he whoſe voice ſhe heard, was Rabboni. She had no need to be confirmed in that. Her diſeaſe grew another way. Not from want of faith; of fear, rather: from want of due regard. To touch would not have cured her diſeaſe, but made it worſe. So, they touched, becauſe they believed not: ſhe touched not, becauſe ſhe miſ-believed; believed not of him aright. They touched, that they might know, he was riſen: She touched not, that ſhe might know, he was not ſo riſen, as ſhe wrongly imagined, that is, as in former times, ſhe had known him.

Out of that hath been ſpoken, we learn; That they be not ſo well adviſed, who, if they hear one ſpeak of Noli me tangere, imagine ſtraight, it muſt needs be meant of a bile, ulcer, or ſome dangerous ſore. Every Noli me tangere is not ſo: Chriſt's here is not ſo. Learn here, there doth to Excellency belong a Noli me tangere, inducing reverence; no leſs then to biles or ſores procuring indolency. Touch me not,
Levit.13.45. come not near me, I am unclean (ſaith the Leper.) Stand back, touch not my skirts, I am holier then you,
Eſay 65.5. (ſaith one, Eſay 65.) that is, Touch me not, I am ſo pure and clean; as if to his excellent holineſs there belongeth this priviledge, not to be touched.

The truth is, in the Natural body, the eye is a moſt excellent part; but withal, ſo tender, ſo delicate, it may not endure to be touched; no, though it ail nothing, be not ſore at all. In the Civil body the like is; there are in it, both Perſons and Matters, whoſe excellency is ſuch, they are not familiarly to be dealt with by hand, tongue, or pen, or any other way. The Perſons, they are, as the apple of God's own eye:
Pſal.105.15. Chriſti Domini. They have a peculiar Nolite tangere, by themſelves. Wrong is offered them, when after this, or in familiar or homely manner, any touch them. The Matters likewiſe, Princes affairs, Secrets Pſal.131.1. of State, David calleth them magna & mirabilia ſuper ſe, and ſo ſuper nos: points too high, too wonderfull for us to deal with. To theſe alſo, belongs this Touch not.

And,

And, if of Kings secrets this may truly be ſaid, may it not as truly, of God, of his ſecret decrees? May not they, for their height and depth, claim to this Noli, too? Yes ſure: and I pray God, he be well pleaſed with this licentious touching, nay, toſſing his Decrees of late; this ſounding the depth of his Judgments with our line, and lead; too much preſumed upon by ſome in theſe dayes of ours. Judicia ejus abyſſus multa (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) his judgments are the great deep. S. Paul, looking down into it, ran back, and cryed, O the depth! the profound depth! not to be ſearched, paſt our fathoming or finding out. Yet are there in the world, that make but a ſhallow of this great deep: they have ſounded it to the bottom. Gods ſecret Decrees, they have them at their fingers ends, and can tell you the number and the order of them juſt, with 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Men, that (ſure) muſt have been in Gods Cabbines, above the third heaven, where S. Paul never came: Mary Magdalens touch was nothing to theſe. Pſal. 36. 7. Rom. 11. 33. 2 Cor. 12. 2.

This was but upon the by. The main of the Text, that it beareth full againſt, ex tota ſubſtantia, is undue and undutiful carriage: and againſt them that uſe it. Not, that Mary Magdalens was ſuch; hers was but Tekel, certain grains too light, minus habens: Not altogether without regard, but not altogether ſo full of regard as it might and ought to have been. Make it as little as you will, Chriſt ſaith Noli to it: and Noli is a word of unwillingneſs. Chriſt is not unwilling with ought that is good: what he ſaith Noli to, is eo ipſo, not good, would be forborn: would not be offered him, be it more then hers was. She (it may be) ſhewed more regard then we: Yet, if we ſhew not more regard then ſhe, we ſhall hardly eſcape this Noli me tangere. 1.

But, from this we riſe. If Chriſt ſaid noli to her, that failed but in tanto; what ſhall he ſay to them that fail both in tanto and in toto? The Noli to her given, reacheth them in a higher degree. Greater muſt their fault be, now, then hers was, then. She had no Noli to warn her: they have hers to warn them, and will take no warning by it. Chriſt, as he ſaw, ſhe was; ſo, he foreſaw, others would be as (yea, more) defective this way. The Noli that was given to her, was (in her) given to them all. Even to this day, Chriſt cryeth ſtill, Noli me tangere: Even to this day, there is uſe of it, to call upon us for a better touch. 2.

If the Text be againſt rudeneſs, to reſtrain it; then, it is for reverence, to enjoyn it. If he ſay Noli, to the want of regard; we know, what he will ſay Volo to: that the more reſpectively, the better we carry our ſelves, the better he will like us. This is ſure, he will be approached to in all dutiful and decent ſort; and he will not have us offer him any other. Whatſoever is moſt or beſt in that kind, if there be any one better then other, be that it. The beſt, we have (I am ſure) is not too good for Chriſt. It is better to render account to him of a little too much, than of a good deal too little. 3.

Take this with you: Chriſt can ſay Noli, then. For (I know not how) our carriage, a many of us, is ſo looſe; covered we ſit; ſitting, we pray; ſtanding, or walking (or as it takes us in the head) we receive: as if Chriſt were ſo gentle a perſon, we might touch him, do to him, what we liſt, he would take all well: He hath not the power, to ſay Noli to any thing. But, he hath, we ſee; and ſaith it; and ſaith it to one highly in his favour: and ſaith it, but for a touch a little awry, otherwiſe then it ſhould. 4.

As the heathen ſaid, vultu; ſo the Text ſaith, tactu ledi pietatem. One may offend Chriſt, only by touching him; ſuch the touch may be. We will allow him greater then the Ark: That, would not indure Uzza's touch; he dyed for it. We will hold us to our Text: if we touch him unduely, we ſhall do it nolenti it ſhall be much againſt his will; he likes it not: Witneſs this noli here. 5. 2 Sam. 6. 7.

Which, though it go but to the touch, yet, à paritate rationis, it reacheth to all the body, and to every member of it. To our very feet (ſaith Solomon) we to look to them when we draw neer to him. To our very fingers (ſaith a Greater then Solomon) we to look to them when we touch him. And, as not with the foot of pride, nor the hand of preſumption; ſo, along through the reſt: neither with a ſcornful eye, nor a ſtiff knee: All are equally forbidden, under one; all to be far from us. 6. Eccleſ. 4. 17. Luk. 22. 31.

It reacheth to all: but yet for all that, the native word of the Text (the touch) is to have a kind of preeminence. Moſt kindly, to that. To Chriſt it is every way; but moſt of all, to Chriſt as he is tangibilis; comes under our touch. To all parts of his worſhip; but, other parts will not come under tangere ſo fitly, as the Sacrament. So, as the uſe may ſeem properly to have relation to that: and we, there, to ſhew our higheſt reverence. If we do ſo, Dicite juſto quia bene, we do well. But, diverſe have too much of Mary Magdalen in them. I know not how they would touch Chriſt, if they had him: that, which on earth doth moſt neerly repreſent him, his higheſt memorial, I know not how many both touch and take, otherwiſe, then were to be wiſhed. 7. Eſa. 3. 10.

But, thus are we now come to the day, the very day, it was given on. Chriſt gave this Noli me tangere that it might be Verbum Dei, a watch-word for this day. Take heed, how you touch: for, he eaſily foreſaw this would be tempus tangendi, the time whereon, touch we muſt: Nay, more then touch him, we muſt; for, eat his fleſh and drink his blood we muſt; and, that can we not do, but we muſt touch him. And this we muſt do by vertue of another precept, Accipite & manducate. John 6. 56. Mat. 26. 26.

How will Accipite & manducate, and noli me tangere cleave together? Take, eat, and yet touch not? If we take we muſt needs touch, one would think: If we eat, guſtus eſt ſub tactu (ſaith the Philoſopher:) ſo, that comes under touching too.

It ſeems the Text was not ſo well choſen, theſe points conſidered. Nay, ſet the day aſide we have no need (God wot) to be preached to of not touching: we are not ſo forward that way. It would rather have been that of S. Thomas, Affer manum. This, is now out of ſeaſon. Verſe 27.

But, you will remember ſtill, I told you, this Noli was not general. It was but to Mary Magdalen: And, to her, but till ſhe had learned a little better manners. Not to any, but ſuch as ſhe, or worſe then ſhe, that in unbeſeeming manner preſs and proffer to touch him (the only cauſe of her repulſe.) But, at another time, when she was on her knees, fell down at his feet, then did she touch him, without any

Mat. 28. 9. check at all. Be you now, but as she was then, and this noli me tangere will not touch you at all.

It is the case of the Sacrament right. There is place in the taking it, for noli me tangere: So is there, for Affer manum. To them, that with Saint Thomas, in a feeling of the defect of their faith, or of any Verse 27. other spiritual grace, cast themselves down, and cry, My Lord, and my God, Affer manum to them: I set them free, I give them a discharge from this Noli me tangere. But, for them that are but at Rabboni, and scarce so far; bold guests with him; base in conceit, and homely in behaviour: to them, and to them properly, belongs this Noli me tangere: More properly, then ever it did to her. And so, that point reconciled. Thus far for Saint Chrysostome, and his taking.

2. There is a second, and it is Saint Gregorie's: That the Vade & dic, was the cause of Noli me, &c.
To hasten the Message. and that all was but to save time, that she was not permitted it. Christ was not willing to spend time
S. Gregories sense. in these Complements (it was no other;) but, to dispatch her away, upon an errand, better pleasing to him, that required more haste. As if he should have said: Let us have no touching now; there is a matter in hand, would be done out of hand, and therefore for this time hands off, Touch me not.

And the reason will follow well so: Nondum enim ascendi. You need not be so hastie, or eager to touch me; I am not yet, ascended: though I be upon going, yet I am not gone. You may do this, at some other time, at some other meeting: & quod differtur non aufertur, at better leisure, you may have your desire: forbear it now.

Why, what haste was there of doing this errand? Might she not have touched him, and done it time enough? Peradventure, she might think so: She, knew Christ was risen; She, was well. But, they that sate in fear and sorrow, that knew not so much; they would not think so: Not, to them. To them Nihil satis festinatur, No haste was too much; all delay too long.

Nor to Christ neither. Who was (we see) so desirous to have notice given with all speed, that he would not take so much time from it, as wherein Mary Magdalen might have had but a touch at him. So careful, they might receive comfort with the first, that he saith, Go your wayes with all speed; Get ye to them, the first thing you do: It will do them more good to hear of my rising, then it will do you, to stand and touch me.

Yet, a touch and away would not have taken up so much time. True: but he easily foresaw, in the terms she stood, if he suffered her to touch, that would not serve the turn; she would have taken hold too. And, if she had taken hold once, not that neither: She would have come to a Non dimittam, with her
Cant. 3. 4. in the Canticles, Tenui Eum & non Dimittam: She would not have let him go; or been long, yer she had: So, much time spent in impertinences, which neither he nor she the better for. So, she to let her touching alone, and put it off till another time, being to be imployed in a business of more haste, and importance.

3. The third place is Saint Augustine; That, Christ in these words, had a further meaning; to wean her from
To wean her from sensual touching. all sensual and fleshly touching, and teach her, a new and a true touch; truer than that, she was about. This
S. Augustines sense. sense groweth out of Christs reason: Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended; as if, till he were ascended, he would not be touched; and, then, he would. As much to say: Care not to touch me, here. Stand not upon it: Touch me not, till I be ascended; stay till then, and then do. That, is the true touch; that is it, will do you all the good.

And, there is reason for this sense. For the touch of his body, which she so much desired; that, Act. 1. 3. could last but forty dayes in all, while he in his body were among them. And, what should all, since, and we now, have been the better? He was to take her out a lesson, and to teach her another touch, that might serve for all, to the worlds end; that might serve, when the body and bodily touch were taken from us.

Christ himself touched upon this point (in the sixth Chap. at the 62. ver.) When at Capernaum they stumbled at the speech of eating his flesh; What (saith he) find you this strange, now? How will you find it, then, when you shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before? How then? And yet, then you must eat, or else there is no life in you.

So, it is a plain Item to her, that there may be a sensual touching of him here: but that is not it: not the right: it avails little. It was her error, this; She was all for the corporal presence; for the touch with the fingers. So, were his Disciples, all of them, too much addicted to it. From which they were now to be weaned: That if they had, before, known Christ, or touched him after the flesh; yet now from henceforth, they were to do so no more, but learn a new touch; to touch him, being now ascended. Such a touching there is; or else his reason holds not: And, best touching him, so; Better far than this of hers, she was so eager on.

Do but ask the Church of Rome; Even, with them it is not the bodily touch, in the Sacrament that doth the good. Wicked men, very Reprobates, have that touch, and remain reprobates, as before. Nay, I will go further: It is not that, that toucheth Christ at all. Example, the multitude that thronged and thrust
Mar. 5. 31. him; yet for all that, as if none of them all had touched him, he asks, Quis me tetigit? So that, one may rudely thrust him, and yet not touch him, though: Not, to any purpose, so.

Christ resolves the point, in that very place. The flesh, the touching, the eating it, profits nothing.
Joh. 6. 63. The words he spake were spirit: So, the touching, the eating, to be spiritual. And Saint Thomas, and Mary Magdalen or whosoever touched him here on earth, nisi felicius fide quàm manu tetigissent, if they had not been more happy to touch him with their faith, than their fingers end, they had had no part in

Him; no good by it at all. It was found better with it, to touch the hem of his Garment; than, without it, to touch any part of his body. Mat. 9. 20

Now, if faith be to touch, that will touch him no less in heaven than here: One, that is in Heaven may be touched so. No ascending can hinder that touch. Faith will elevate it self, that ascending in spirit, we shall touch him, and take hold of him. Mitte fidem & tenuisti: It is Saint Augustine. It is a touch, to which there is never a Noli: fear it not.

So, do we then: Send up our faith, and that shall touch him, and there will vertue come from Him: and it shall take such hold on him, as it shall raise us up, to where He is; bring us to the end of the verse, and to the end of all our desires; to Ascendo ad Patrem, a joyful ascension to our Father and His, and to Himself, and to the Unity of the Blessed Spirit. To whom, in the Trinity of Persons, &c.

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the Twenty first of Aprill, being Easter-Day,
An. Dom. 1618.

JOHN. Chap. XX. Ver. XVII.

Dicit ei Jesus, &c.

Jesus saith to her, Touch me not: For, I am not yet ascended to my Father: But, goe to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God.

IF noli me tangere the former part, you have formerly heard. Mary Magdalen might not touch: at least-wise, not, as thus; not, as now.

The reason: 1. On her part, she forgat her self a little in her touch, as in her terme, toward him, who, though nondum, He were not yet, was presently to ascend, and be taken up into heaven, and would be touched in some better manner. And, till she had learned, so to touch, Noli me tangere.

2. On Christs part. She need not be so eager; Nondum enim Ascendi: that is, though He were going, yet he was not gone. Some other time might serve her, to touch him in. Now, he had matter of more hast, to send her about, and would have no time taken from it. And so, for saving of time. Noli me tangere.

3. On the touch it self. He was not yet ascended: And to touch Him before he were so, was not the true touch; not the touch that would doe her, or us, any good. For these all or some of these, Noli me tangere, no touching, now.

Heb. 6. 10. But what, shall she be quite cast off in the mean time? Denied touching; denied it, graunted nothing for it? That were hard. Nothing to comfort her, in liew of it? Yes: Christ is not unrighteous, that he should forget the work and labour of her love, which she, this day, made, so many waies to appear. Somewhat he deviseth to comfort her, somewhat: in that he will have her doe somewhat for Him. So, the old rule was: quem non honoro non onero. He will imploy her in a message; and such a message, as was to the present joy of them, it was sent to, and should be to the generall joy and good, not of them onely, but of us all.

Now

Now then, this muſt needs be reckoned as a ſpecial favour ſhewed her by our bleſſed Saviour. For, otherwiſe, he could as eaſily, himſelf have appeared to them he ſent her to, as, to her, he did: but that, his will was, to vouchſafe her the honour of the firſt bearing of theſe ſo joyful tidings, to them, and in and by them, to the whole world. When time was, ſhe broke her box of pretious ointment, and the ſent of it filled the whole houſe: The breaking of this box now, of the tydings of Chriſt, and his riſing, with the ſweet ſavour of life unto life hath filled, and ſtill filleth the whole world, from one end to the other. John 12. 3. 2 Cor. 2. 16.

The ſum of the Text is; A diſpatch of Mary Magdalen by Chriſt, to deliver a meſſage to his Diſciples. It is in effect, as if he ſhould have ſaid: You know, I am riſen, now; you are well for your part: There be others, that know not ſo much; and, becauſe they know it not, ſit in ſorrow, heavy and half dead at home. It would comfort them much, revive them, put life into them again, to know what you know. Now you are well, think upon them that are not. Remember, what was your own caſe but even now. You cannot do a better deed, than carry comfort to the comfortleſs. I would they knew it; I wiſh them well: They be my brethren, however they forgate themſelves when time was. The Summe.

But, this is not all; that they might know of it: but, they muſt know of it with all ſpeed. For, that ſhe may the ſooner go tell them, ſhe muſt not touch. For, if you mark it, It is not vade & dic; but Sed vade & dic: It is not barely, Go and tell them; It is, Touch me not, But, go and tell them. That is, in ſtead of touching, ſhe muſt be gone in all haſt to tell them. As if he ſhould ſay; Go to, let us have no touching now: Get you to them, the firſt thing you do, and tell them of it. It will do them more good to be told of this, then it will do you to ſtay here and touch me never ſo oft.

This ſo great haſt of the carrying it, is much for the credit of the meſſage: Much for it; I cannot but note it. That Chriſt thought the notice of it ſo neceſſary, the bearing of it ſo every way important, as (we ſee) he is careful no time be taken from it: but with all poſſible ſpeed, with the very firſt, they acquainted with it. So careful, as he would not take ſo much (or rather ſo little) time from it, as wherein Mary Magdalen might have had but a touch at him; but takes her off, and ſends her away in all haſt. As if, ſome matter had lien in it, if they ſhould not have heard of his riſing, before the Sun-riſing.

Much for the honour of the Feaſt, on which it was done. That he would for ever have a Feaſt celebrated in memory of this Day, whereon theſe tidings came to the world firſt.

Moſt of all, for his own honour; Who ſheweth himſelf ſo deſirous, that they that are in heavineſs may receive comfort, as he thinketh no haſt too much, no haſt enough, till they hear of it, till they hear of his loving kindneſs betimes in the morning. Pſal. 143. 8.

To take the Text in ſunder. The parts be two: 1. A Commiſſion to carry a meſſage; 2. And the Meſſage it ſelf. The Diviſion.

1. The Commiſſion: Vade ad fratres meos & dic eis. 2. The Meſſage: Aſcendo ad Patrem meum, &c.

In the Commiſſion, again, there are two, 1. The Parties firſt: 2. And then, the Charge. 1. The Parties, Fratres meos: 2. The Charge, Vade & dic eis.

In the Meſſage, two likewiſe: 1. Firſt, that he is upon aſcending: 2. Then, the party, to whom. That Party, to whom is but one; yet repreſented here, under two names, 1. Father, and, 2. God. And (that which, to us, is the capital point of all, and which we to lay hold of ſpecially) his Father, but ours, withall: and His God, but ours, as well as his. The laſt and beſt part of the meſſage: For, in it lyeth the joy that cometh to us this morning.

On which four, 1. My Father, and 2. your Father, and 3. My God, and 4. your God, as it were ſo many wheeles, is his aſcendo drawn: Upon the ſame, is ours likewiſe to be, and is therefore the Conſummatum eſt of the Text, and of the Feaſt, and of this, yea, (I dare add) of the whole Goſpel.

And, let not this move you a whit, that His Father and our Father, His God and our God (who are the end to which we aſcend) are made the Chariot by which we aſcend. This is no ſtrange thing in Divinity. Ad Chriſtum non itur, niſi per Chriſtum (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) and ſo neither ad Deum, niſi per Deum. With us nothing is more certain, then that the end of our way, which we come unto, is alſo the way it ſelf, whereby we come thither. One and the ſame ad quem, and per quem aſcenditur.

We ſhall make four ſtands. 1. One, at fratres meos, the Parties. 2. Another, at Dic eis, the Commiſſion. 3. The third, at Aſcendo, the Motion. 4. And the laſt, at My Father and your Father, my God and your God, the Terminus ad quem, which giveth the perfection to all our motions, and ſo, to this, the laſt end of all our motions; For, after aſcendo, we ſhall move no more, but reſt for ever.

I.

Fratres meos. The Parties.

Vade ad fratres meos, Go to my brethren. Our firſt ſtand is to be at fratres meos, my brethren, the Parties he ſent to.

Who be they? They ſhe went to. To whom went ſhe? To his Diſciples (in the next verſe:) They then the Parties, He meant: They, his brethren.

A ſtrange term to begin with, conſidering how they had dealt with him, ſcarce like brethren, not long before. We ſhall therein do the work of the Sabbath, vvhich is to tell of his loving kindneſs betimes in the morning; and this morning, more then ever any.

Pſal.59.16.

Yet then vve go any further, let us touch a little at this term, he gives them. It is no noli me tangere (this) It is a word to be touched and taken hold of: It was ſo, when time was, by Benhadads ſervants, this very word. Is Benhadad alive (ſaith the King of Iſrael) Frater meus eſt, He is my brother: which they preſently caught hold of, yea, thy brother Benhadad is yet living. So they.

1 King.20.32, 33.

And ſo we, Fratres meos. Let us not let this word fall to the ground, but ſay (with Bernard) Salvum ſit verbum Domini mei, God ſave this vvord; bleſſed be the lips that ſpoke it. Yea thy brethren, Good Lord, if ſo thou vvilt vouchſafe to call them.

Out of it firſt I note, here is nothing that ſavours of any diſpleaſure, of remembring any old grudg. Not ſo much as an harſh term in all the meſſage; no mention they had fled from him, forſook him, forſwore him (full unbrotherly:) He hath forgotten it all, all is out of his mind: Caſts not them off, as they did him, but ſends to them; and, by the name of brethren, ſends to them: They be my brethren, and I theirs, and by that name commend me to them. Nothing, here, that ſavours of any anger.

Nor nothing, that ſavours of any pride. But, even as Joſeph in the top of his honour; So he, in this, the day of his glorious exalting from the dead, claims kindred of them, a ſort of poor forlorn men: and (as the Apoſtle expreſſeth it) non eſt confuſus vocare, is not a whit aſhamed of them that were aſhamed of him. Diſdains not, poor as they were, unkind as they vvere, but vouchſafes to call them brethren for all that.

Which word [Brethren] implies two things: 1. First, Identity of nature. His nature is not changed by death. The nature he dyed in, in the ſame he riſes again. Thereby lyes a matter. For, if he roſe, as man, then man alſo may riſe: If one be riſen, there is hope for others: If the nature be riſen, the perſons, in it, may. So it was with the firſt Adam. In his perſon was our nature; and, in him, it dyed; and we, in it. So is it in the ſecond. In his perſon our nature is riſen; In our nature, we all. This firſt: Riſen in the ſame nature, he had before: Not changed it.

2. And ſecond, Riſen with the ſame love and affection, he had before: Not changed it, neither. Yes, changed it, (I ſaid not well in that:) but, changed it for the better. Before this, when he ſaid moſt, he ſaid but, I will call you my friends: The higheſt term he came to, before. But here, being riſen, he riſeth (we ſee) higher, as high as Love can riſe, to count them and ſtile them fratres meos. And ſo much for that, Go to my brethren.

II. Dicen. The Commiſſion.

Well, when ſhe comes to his brethren, what then? Et dic eis, and ſay to them, or tell them. By which words, he gives her a Commiſſion. Vade, is her Miſſion: Dic eis her Commiſſion. A Commiſſion, to publiſh the firſt news of his riſing, and (as it fals out) of his aſcending too.

The Fathers ſay, that, by this word, ſhe was, by Chriſt, made an Apoſtle. Nay, Apoſtolorum Apoſtata, an Apoſtle to the Apoſtles themſelves.

An Apoſtle: For, what lacks ſhe? 1. Sent firſt, immediately from Chriſt himſelf: And what is an Apoſtle but ſo? 2. Secondly, Sent to declare and make known: And what difference between Ire prædicare, and Vade & dic, but only the number? the thing is the ſame. 3. And laſt; what was ſhe to make known? Chriſts riſing, and aſcending: And what are they but Evangelium, the Goſpel, yea, the very Goſpel of the Goſpel?

Mat.28.19.

This day, with Chriſts riſing begins the Goſpel: Not before. Crucified dead and buried, no good news, no Goſpel they, in themſelves. And them, the Jews beleeve as well as we. The firſt Goſpell of all, is the Goſpell of this day, and the Goſpell of this day is this Marie Magdalen's Goſpell, πρωτόλειον, the prime Goſpel of all, before any of the other four. That Chriſt is riſen, and upon his aſcending: and ſhe the firſt, that ever brought theſe glad tidings. At her hands the Apoſtles themſelves received it firſt: And, from them, we all.

Mat.26.13. Which, as it was a ſpecial honour (and whereſoever this Goſpel is preached, ſhall be told for a memorial of her:) ſo was it withal, not without ſome kind of enthwarting to them (to the Apoſtles) for ſitting at home, ſo drooping in a corner, that Chriſt not finding any of them, is fain to ſeek him a new Apoſtle: And finding her, where he ſhould have found them, and did not, to ſend by the hand of her, that he firſt found at the Sepulchers ſide, and to make himſelf a new Apoſtle. And ſend her to them, to enter them (as it were) and catechize them, in the two Articles of the Chriſtian faith, the Reſurrection and Aſcention of Chriſt. To her, they and we (both) owe them, them, the firſt notice of them.

And, by this (lo) the amends (we ſpeak of) is made her for her Noli me tangere: Full amends. For, to be thus ſent, to be the meſſenger of thoſe ſo bleſſed tidings, is a higher honour, a more ſpecial favour done her, a better good turn, every way better, than if ſhe had been let alone, had her deſire, touched Chriſt, which ſhe ſo longed for, and ſo eagerly reached at. Better (ſure:) for I reaſon thus: Chriſt (we may be ſure) would never have enjoyned her to leave the better, to take the worſe: To leave to touch him, to go to tell them, if to go to tell them had not been the better.

So that, hence we infer, That to go and carry comfort to them that need it, to tell them of Chriſts riſing, that do not know it: is better than to tarry and do nothing but ſtand touching Chriſt. Touching Chriſt gives place to teaching Chriſt. Vade & die better than mane & tange. Chriſt (we ſee) is for Vade & die. That, if we were in caſe where we might touch Chriſt, we were to leave Chriſt untouched, and even to give our ſelves a noli me tangere, to go and do this: And to think our ſelves better imployed in telling them, than in touching him.

Will

Will you obſerve withall how well this agrees with her offer (a little before) of Ego tollam Eum? She must needs know of the Gardiner, Tell me where you have layd Him, Et ego tollam, and ſhe would take him, and carry Him, that ſhe would. Why, you that would ſo faine take and carry me, being dead, goe take and carry me now alive: That is; carry newes, that I am alive: And you ſhall better pleaſe me, with this, ego tollam, a great deal: It ſhall be a better carrying, Ego tollam, in a better ſenſe, than ever was that. Stand not here then touching me: Goe and touch them; and with the very touch of this report, you ſhall work, in them, a kind of (that you ſee in me, a kind of) reſurrection from a dolefull and dead, to a cheerefull and lively eſtate. Verſe 15.

Tell them? What? Tell them that I aſcend: that is, am about to aſcend, am upon the point of it, am very ſhortly to doe it. Quod prope abeſt, ut fiat, habetur pro facto, that that is neere done, we reckon as good as done. III. Aſcendo. The Motion.

Tell them that I aſcend. Why now, What day is to day? It is not Aſcenſion day: It is Eaſter, and but early Eaſter yet: His aſcenſion is fourty dayes off. This ware a Text for that day. Why ſpeakes He of that now? Why, not rather, Tell them I am riſen (more proper for this day?) why, He needs not tell her that: She could tell that of her ſelf, ſhe ſaw it. And beſides, in ſaying, I aſcend, He implyes fully as much. Till He be riſen, aſcend He cannot: He muſt aſcend out of the grave, yet He can aſcend up to heaven. Reſurrexit muſt be paſt, yet Aſcendo can come. Aſcendo then puts His reſurrection paſt all peradventure: He needs ſay no more of that, of his riſing. But, as ſhe ſaw by his riſing that He had the keyes of hell and death, had unlocked thoſe doors and come out from thence; So, by aſcendo, He tells her farther, that he hath the Keyes of Heaven gate alſo, which he would now unlock, and ſo ſet open the Kingdome of Heaven to all Believers. 1 Apoc. 1. 18.

And yet, there is a further matter in aſcendo, to ſhew us what was the end of his riſing. Chriſt did not riſe, to riſe; no more muſt we. The reſurrection it ſelf is for an end; it is not the end: It is but a ſtate yet unperfect, but an entry to a greater good, which unleſſe it lead us and bring us to non habemur propoſitum, it is ſhort, ſhort of that it ſhould be. We muſt not then ſet up our reſt upon our riſing. There is ſomewhat more required than barely to riſe. What is that? Aſcendo: Chriſt roſe to aſcend; ſo are we to doe. And riſing is no riſing, no right riſing, we riſe not ex our right ſides (as we ſay) if that follow not upon it, if we aſcend not withall. For, to riſe from the bottom of the grave to the brink of it, to ſtand upon our feet again, and tread on the grave-ſtone, and no more, is but half a riſing; is but Lazarus's riſing. 2

To riſe up, up as high as heaven, that is to riſe indeed; that is Chriſts riſing: and that to be ours. As, to riſe is nothing but to aſcend out of the grave: So, to aſcend is nothing but to riſe as high as heaven: And, then we are truly riſen, when ſo riſen. Before, I ſaid there was no Goſpell till the Reſurrection: I now ſay, the reſurrection it ſelf is no Goſpell; (not of it ſelf) unleſſe aſcendo follow it. Reſurrexit, tell that to all the world: All that die in Adam, ſhall riſe in Chriſt, Miſcreants, Jewes, Turkes and all: No Goſpell that, properly. Tell the Chriſtian of more than ſo: tell him of aſcendo too, that goes withall, that pertaines to it. You muſt take that with you too, if it be Chriſts, if it be the right riſing, the reſurrection to life and not to condemnation. A

Mark this well: it is a materiall point. Better lye ſtill in our graves, better never riſe, then riſe and riſing not to aſcend. Of them that ſhall riſe, they that ſee they ſhall not aſcend, ſhall wiſh themſelves in their coffins again: Nay, they ſhall pray the mountaines to fall on them, and the hils to cover them, and bury them quick. So much doth this concerne us, that theſe two part not; that aſcendo attend us at our riſing. And therefore this you ſhall obſerve, that, in all this ſpeech or Text, Chriſt doth not ſo much as mention, as once name the word riſing or reſurrection, as if he made no great reckoning of it: But, in this one ſhort verſe here, in theſe few words, he is, at aſcendo twice; ſpeakes of that, mentions that, over and over again. All to teach us, aſcendo, is all in all. That reſurrexit is nothing, if it be nothing but reſurrexit; nor any account to be made of it, if aſcendo goe not with it, but, if aſcendo goe with it then it is. And, that it may goe with it, that to be all our care. Never take care for reſurrexit; that will come of it ſelf without any thought taking. Never trouble your ſelves with that. Take thought for aſcendo, ſet your minds there. Aſcendo, look well to that: Reſurrexit let that goe. Luke 23. 30.

A third reaſon there is of aſcendo, For, He ſaw upon theſe tydings, as ſhe did think, ſo they would ſay; O is he riſen, then ſhall we have his company again, as heretofore we had. But, by ſending them word of His aſcending, He gives them warning betimes; He roſe not, to make any abode with them, or to converſe with them on earth, as formerly he had; that ſo, they might have timely notice of it and know what they were to look for. For, this, he knew would be a hard leſſon. His riſing, they would like well, but his aſcending be againſt: would not abide to hear of that, to loſe his company at any hand. It was a conceit, that troubled them much: they were ſtill and ever addicted to his bodily being with them. Here, they would have kept him, built Him a Tabernacle, here; and by their good will never have let him gone from hence. All for manet nobiſcum, and for Domine ſi tu fuiſſes hic; all in Mary Magadalens caſe, had him here to ſee Him and to touch Him; and then, all had been well as they thought. 3. Mat 17. 4. Luke 24. 29. John 11. 32.

This was their errour: And to rid them of it, of this earthly mind of theirs, thus ſtriving to affixe and keep him here on earth, and that then all ſhould be well, he ſhewes them that they were quite wrong, and ſets them right. That for him to be here below on earth, that is not it: But for them to be with him there above in heaven, that is it: There it is right. And, never ſhall they, or we, be well, till there we be with him. And thither would he raiſe them and us, with this his aſcendo.

Yet, one more For, this very point, that Chriſt riſeth with aſcendo in his mouth; that no ſooner riſen, but makes ready for his aſcending ſtraight; this (I ſay) if there were nothing but this (the ſo immediate joyning it, ſo cloſe upon his riſing, one hard to the other, no mean between) were of it ſelf, enough to 4.

make the idle dream of the old and new Chiliasts to vanish quite; that phansie to themselves I wote not what earthly kingdome here upon earth, somewhat like Mahomets Paradise, and will not hear of ascendo, after they be risen, till a thousand yeares at least. This is none of Christs rising, I am sure: So, to be none of ours. As with him, So, with us; rising and ascending are to follow straight on upon the other.

Christ then doth ascend. And out of what Christ did, we learne what we to doe, Seeing, Christ stayed not here, we not to set up our stay here neither, not to make earth our heaven, not to place our felicity here below.

Col. 3. 1. The Gospell is (we see) when Christ was risen, his minde was upon ascendo presently. The Epistle is framed fit for it, That if we be risen with Christ, we would set our mindes and seek the things above where Christ is: that is, if we be risen with him, make no more adoe but ascend with him also.

All things in heaven and earth doe so; rising, they ascend presently. In heaven, the starres they be no sooner risen above the horizon, but they are in their ascendant, eo ipso, and never leave ascending, till they be in the highest point, over our heads, in the very top of the skie. In earth; the little spires that peep out of the ground, now at this time (nature's time of her yearly resurrection) they be no sooner out, but up they shoot, and never leave to aspire, till they have atteined the full pitch of their highest growth, they can ascend to. In our selves, though (I know) for earthly men to have earthly minds it is not strange γηλον ἔχοντες πατρα having clay to our father, and πρὸ πατρὸς χοῦν dust to our Sire, we should have χαμαιπετοῦν our soules should cleave to the dust, as Nazianzen excellently saith. Not strange (I say) that, so it is with us, yet, so it should not be. The very Heathen saw, that, though we be made of the earth, yet we are not made for the earth: That the heavenly soul was not put into the earthly body, to the end, the earthly body, should draw it downe to the earth; but rather, to the end, the soul should lift it up to heaven. And so much they gathered out of our Os sublime, and vultus ad sydera, the very frame of our body that beares up thitherward, and bodes (as it were) a kinde of ascending whither it lookes, and gives naturally. Nature doth teach this.

But grace by Christs example much better. If Christ rise, that we rise with Christ, Not, in body yet; but to compt our selves dead to sinne, and rise from that, and live to God (the first resurrection,) And if Christ ascend, we likewise to ascend: not to part with him, but to follow him as we may. Not yet in body; it Apoc. 20. 5. cannot be sursum corpora yet: it may be sursum corda, we may lift up our hearts thither, though. There our treasure is; if Christ be our treasure: there, our hearts to be; there we in heart to be at least, which is the first ascension, the πρωτοτόκια of it, the præludium, so.

There are two words in the Text, 1. Nondum ascendi, I am not yet ascended; and, 2 ascendo, yet I ascend though: which will very well fit us, if, while we are not at ascendi yet (that is, in body ascended) we be, for all that at ascendo (that is, ascend in mind) even as Christ here did. And Blessed is the man (saith the Psalme) cui in corde ascensiones, that hath the ascension in his heart, or his heart on it; That, Psal. 84. 5. while it is nondum ascendi with him, yet at times it is ascendo, lifts up his eyes, sends up his sighes, exalts his thoughts otherwhile, represents (as Christ doth) anticipates the ascension Voto & desiderio in will and desire, before the time it self come of the last and finall ascension. Thus much for ascendo.

IV.

Ad Patrem meum: The Ad quem.

Ascendo is a motion. Every motion hath an Unde, and a quò; a whence and a whither; a terminus à quo, and a terminus ad quem. The ad quem is (here) ad Patrem.

To ascend is, to Christ, his naturall motion: Heaven is his naturall place. Thence he came, Thither he is to goe again. Specially, his worke being done, he came for. That was consummatum est, with us, Chap. 19. 30. three dayes since. But, till he be in heaven againe, it is not consummatum est, with him. So, the motion is naturall.

And the Ad quem, ad Patrem, no lesse. Seeing, for the Sonne, to goe to the Father, is very kindly too; Chap. 14. 28. we may not be against it. Christ said, If you loved me, you would verily rejoyce, because I said, I goe to the Father. For very love to Christ, we cannot but rejoyce with him. In the ad quem, all is well if we consider that, But, so, is not, in the à quo. For, when all is said, make the best of it we can, ascendo is discedo, to goe up is to goe from; from them: And this is no good newes. For him, no sooner to come, but gone againe, and leave them to the wide world, it might trouble them, for all Tell my Brethren. For, by Brethren he might mean false, brethren, that had left him; and so would he them, now: and peradventure doe their errand in heaven to his father, and make them have but little thankes for it, at His hands. So that, this ascendo implying a nolo manere (in a manner) was as evill to them, as noli me tangere was to her.

What is then become of the Gospell we spake of? where, or what is their comfort, or ours, in this tyding? To deal plainely: when we seek it in ascendo, we find it not: Nor, in ad Patrem. Nor, in ad Patrem meum. None of these is it. But, in His & ad Patrem vestrum, there, we find it; there it is. There was (you will say) as much as this comes to, in fratres meos. It is true; it implied no lesse. But, Christ would not deliver this implicitè by way of implying, but explicitè, as explicate and plainely, as he could. And not once but twise. And it is a happy turn for us, he did so: For, this point can never be too plainly spoken to, too often repeated, too much stood upon. All the joy of the morning is in this vestrum. Tell them, I goe to the Father, that is not all: Tell them this too, As I goe to the Father, so the Father I go to, is their father, as well as mine; Not mine alone, but theirs also. And tell them again, that, if Patrem meum be the cause of my ascending (as here is none other set down;!) If I goe to him thus, because He is my Father; because He is theirs also, they also shall come after me, the same way, to the same place, upon the same reason.

And he doth expresse here the terminus ad quem by the Party to whom, rather then by the Place to which, because the Party will soon bring us to the Place, and to somewhat besides. To the Place: For, you ſhall ſee, what will follw of this; that his houſe, that heaven is now become Paterna domus to us, as our father's houſe; And who ſhall keep us from our father's houſe? No more ſtrangers now; but of the houſhold of God. And, in the Houſhold, not ſervants but children; and have thereto as good right and title, ſhall be as welcome thither every way, as any child to his own father's houſe here uſeth to be. God, through him, ſtanding no otherwiſe affected to us, then as a father to his child, as well diſpoſed, as willing, Matt. 3. 17. as ready to recive us. Chriſt his beloved Sonne, in whom he is ſo abſolutely well pleaſed as he alwaies heares him, hath prayed to him and obtained of him, that where He is, we may be alſo, and in due time aſcend Chap. 14. 3. up, whither he is now aſcended, Pandens iter coram nobis, opening the paſſage for us to follow him. Mic. 2. 13.

But, I told you, there was ſomewhat in the Perſon, more then in the Place. For, by vertue of this Patrem veſtrum, while we are here, if we cry Abba father (as now we may) He is ready to receive our prayers: Rom. 8. 15. and when we goe hence, ready to receive our perſons. While we are here, if at any time we repent, and ſay Ibo ad Patrem (with the child in the Goſpell) ready to receive us to grace: And, when we goe hence, we may ſay with Chriſt, Vado ad Patrem, ready to receive us to glorie. So, of ad Patrem veſtrum there is uſe here and there, both. Luk. 15. 18.

And, all this by meanes of Chriſt's reſurrection: beſides the generall vertue whereof, to make all men riſe (all, in the ſecond Adam that die in the firſt) there is further a ſecond ſpeciall vertue for us Chriſtians, to make us riſe, not onely from the grave, but riſe higher then ſo, even as high as to heaven it ſelf. And that we may have good right ſo to do, to make His Father ours, and his Father's houſe ours, that there we may dwel together fratres in unum. On which dependeth, and from whence riſeth all our hope of happineſſe for ever. And this is the joy of the Feaſt we celebrate, the loving kindneſſe of this morning, the glad tyding of Marie Magdalen's Goſpell. It is evangelium parvum (ſo they call it) but a little one, but it hat in it, in theſe few words couched, much matter both of high myſterie and of heavenly comfort.

There be of the Fathers, that, telling the words of the Meſſage (which are fifteen in number make them as ſo many ſtepps or rongs (as it were) of Jacob's Ladder, which we to aſcend by. There be others, that more properly and to the Text more agreeable obſerve theſe four, 1. Patrem meum, 2. Patrem veſtrum, 3. Deum meum, 4. Deum veſtrum, as ſo many wheeles, as it were, of Elias his chariot, in which he was carried up to heaven. Aſcendo the chariot; theſe, the four wheeles of it. 2 King. 2.

The truth is, there lie faire before us in it, four paires or combinations, by which four, aſcendo is here drawn in the Text. 1. Two ſingle: Patrem and Deum, one: 2. Meum and veſtrum, the other. Two double; 3. Patrem meum and Patrem veſtrum, one: and 4. Deum meum, Deum veſtrum; the other. I will but touch them briefly.

Father and God at large firſt, without any pronounes put to them at all. It was not ſo, Stylo veteri. There, in the Law, it was Dominus Deus. To change this, and to make it Stylo novo, Pater Deus; in place of Dominus putting Pater, making of God a Lord, God a Father; is worth the while. It mends the terme, and it mends the matter much; as much as a Father is better than a Lord Bonum Paſcha, bonus tranſitus: and we bound to our bleſſed Saviour, for making this Paſſover, for working but this change or alteration in God's ſtyle. 1. Patrem Deum: The firſt part. Exod. 20. 2.

A Father: How a Father? For, a Father in a ſenſe (we know) he may be ſaid, and is, to all things whatſoever. Father of the raine, and of the drops of dew (in Job.) But, of us men, of mankinde, more Job 38. 28. ſpecially, in that we bear his Image But, that is not it neither, that here is meant. That, is here meant, is aſcendo ad Patrem, a Father to aſcend to. Not for our prayers onely, but even alſo for our perſons to aſcend to. So a Father he is to none, but to Chriſt, and to the true Chriſtian.

And this now, a Father to aſcend to, is it that puts the difference betweene Him and all other fathers beſide Him. Father to aſcend to, ſuch fathers there are none: None ſuch here. Our fathers here, we deſcend to, go down to them; down, down to the grave. Him, and him onely, we goe up to, up to heaven, up even where Chriſt is ſitting at the right hand of God; and he, to that end, a father, even to make us aſcend Heb. 10. 12. thither to him.

Why would not Father ſuffice? Why is God added? Father is a name of much good will: But many a good father wants good means to his good will. God, is added, that he may not be defective that way; have means to his meaning. For, if he be a Father, firſt it is the voice of a father to his ſonne (in the Goſpell) omnia mea tua ſunt. Now then, if this Father be alſo God, and all his be ours, what can we deſire more than all God hath, all that ever God is worth; able to ſatisfie never ſo vaſt a deſire (this.) For ſo, if Luke 15. 32. heaven and the joyes of it be his, they be ours too; and then there lacks nothing but aſcendo, to go up and take poſſeſſion of them: and here (loe) it is, Aſcendo ad patrem.

Bound to him for this firſt, Patrem Deum. No whit leſſe bound for the ſecond; for putting to theſe pronounes poſſeſſives, Meum, and veſtrum (which is the ſecond ſingle combination.) For, till they came, till they in this wiſe were put to; Meum was meum, and Veſtrum was veſtrum; His was his, and Ours was ours: his; his owne; and ours, to our ſelves, and there an end. No relation either to other; no intereſt either in other. But, now, Meum is made veſtrum; and veſtrum, meum. His, ours; and ours his, enterchangeably. A bleſſed change may we ſay: His great Meum for our little veſtrum: Little ours for great his. Every one will ſee the odds between theſe. That (indeed) we are as much bound for meum and veſtrum, as for Patrem and Deum. Nay, more. For, as there is no comfort in heaven, without God; nor in God, without a Father: So, is there not any either in Father, Heaven, or God, without [ours] to give us a property in them. This then for the ſecond ſingle. Now to the two double. 2. Meum, veſtrum. The ſecond. paire.

Patrem meum, Patrem veſtrum The third paire. Iohn 14. 8.

Patrem meum ſtands firſt, and is firſt every way. But Patrem meum will do us no good. That which muſt do us the good, is the ſecond in place; but (to us) the firſt. Patrem veſtrum, that will ſerve; that alone will ſerve us, we need no more. Oſtende nobis Patrem & ſufficit (ſaith Saint Philip.) But, how that ſhould be compaſſed, and His meum ſhould be our veſtrum, that He ſhould be ours, hic labor eſt, that is all the matter.

Deum meum. Deum veſtrum. The IV. paire.

This leads us to the other, the laſt combination of all, of Deum meum and veſtrum. For, that His Father may be our Father, no remedy, but our God muſt firſt be his God. So, this fetches in that. One would not ſerve: there behooved to be twaine; elſe the chariot will not goe.

It will be beſt, ante omnia, to ſet forth, in theſe termes, what is proper, and what not; what Chriſt's and what ours. Much light we ſhall receive thereby.

Patrem meum. Deum meum.

Chriſt, on his part, ſaith My Father: and he ſaith alſo, My God. For him to ſay, My Father, is proper; we ſee reaſon for it. But for him, to ſay, My God, no reaſon at all, altogether unproper. For, how can God have a God?

Deum veſtrum: patrem veſtrum Iob 17. 14.

Chriſt, on his part, ſaith Deum veſtrum, your God; right and true (that) we are His poore creatures, He our God; ſo knowne, ſo acknowledged to be. But He ſaith further, Patrem veſtrum, your Father: how that can be ſaid, we ſee not. Alas we are but duſt and aſhes: Our lineage is well ſet forth by Iob: We muſt ſay to rottenneſſe, Thou art my father; And to the wormes, Ye are my mother; Ye are my ſiſter. No Father of ours he, not properly.

Patrem meum: Deum veſtrum. Deum meum. Deum veſtrum.

In exact propriety of ſpeech then, Father here referres to Chriſt: God to us. His Father, is right; ſo is, our God. We will never ſpend a word on them, let them goe. But, his God, no way right; no more than, our Father. Theſe two, it is ſure, are unproper, both. And if ever they ſhall be verified one of the other, it muſt be brought about by ſome other wayes and means. And, ſo it is; and by the ſame way that the one, by the very ſame the other. His Father, our Father, By his means. Our God, his God, by ours.

Deum meum.

To ſet them in right method, in their true order, Erunt noviſſimi primi; the laſt is to be firſt: we to begin at Deum veſtrum, the very laſt word of all, as it were the foot of the ladder, or the two ſmaller wheeles that go before. To make meum veſtrum; his, ours; Veſtrum is to be made meum, ours to be made his. Our God to become His God, firſt, that his Father may become our Father after. Him, that was our God, we to make his God; that him, that was his Father, He may make to be our Father.

Ephes. 4 9. Rom. 8. 15. Matth. 27. 46.

That this might proceed, he that doth here aſcend, was to deſcend, Deſcend, whither? Even to be one of us: and we were creatures; and ſo, being one of us, He to be a creature as well as we. So he was, and ſo he is. For, even the ſoul and body of Chriſt are in the rank of creatures; and, relation had to them, a creature he is, a God he hath, the ſame, that we (for there is but one:) and ſo He may truly ſay, Deum meum, Our God is his God. That we might aſcend to the higheſt heaven, he was to deſcend εἰς κατώτατα τῆς γῆς, to the loweſt parts of the earth: and ſo did. Deſcendo ad matrem with him, that aſcendo ad Patrem with us. That we might crie Abba Father, he was content to crie that ſtrange crie Eli, Eli, My God, My God, on the Croſſe.

So Chriſt might then ſay, and truly ſay, My God, no leſſe than My Father: his Father, as God; his God as man. As the Sonne of God, a God he hath not; a Father he hath: As the Sonne of man, a Father he hath not; a God he hath. A God (I ſay) then, he hath; but, never till then; never till He medled with us. But then, he had: and ſince he hath. He, that was ours, not his; is now his, as well as ours Theſe two wheels are ſet right.

Patrem veſtrum.

We have brought it to this, that Chriſt may ſay Deum, meum. After we have brought him to Deum meum. After we have brought him to Deum meum, we are half way; Our God is his. But now, how ſhall we get his Father to have him to be our Father? Firſt, his Father he was from all eternity: he, and none but he can ſay, and ſay propely, Patrem meum. But he is content to quit that (none but he) and to take us in; and he being our brother before, to make us his, now. Ours, in our eſtate of this mortall: His, in his eſtate of immortall life. For, here (now) riſing, and upon his aſcending, he adopts us; and, by adopting, makes us; and by making, pronounces us His brethren, and ſo children to his Father. Us, his children; Him, our Father, witneſſe fratres meos, and patrem veſtrum, both from his own mouth. Salvum ſit verbum Domini mei, by vertue whereof, it is now Abba Pater with us. Now Vado ad Patrem, we a Father of God (even as Chriſt that ſpake it) to pray to, to goe to. Meum and veſtrum both now in one. Then we had a Father of him, and ſince we have: But, till then, a God we had, but not a Father: at leaſt, not ſuch a Father of him as ſince we have. This, the bonum paſcha, the fœlix tranſitus, the bleſſed enter change we ſpake of.

Deum meum. Patrem veſtrum. Luke 23. 34. 46.

Who gets by this? Deum meum, His, his God, was his humiliation. He as low as we, nay lower then the loweſt of us, when he cried My God, My God. Deum meum, his humiliation, and Patrem veſtrum, our exaltation; by it, we are made, in caſe, as he, to riſe, to aſcend: to goe whither, to be where he is, for ever; to ſay, Ibo ad Patrem; to ſay, Vado ad Patrem; to ſay with him, Father forgive; and againe, Father, into Thy hands I commend My Spirit, In Patrem veſtrum are all theſe.

So by this time, we ſee the neceſſity of both theſe combinations, of both paire of wheeles; and that to our great comfort.

But,

But we are not ſo to look to our own comfort, but that withall we be carefull to preſerve his honour; that ſo, both may goe hand in hand together. And there is order taken for that too, by ſevering of each paire; that it is not noſtrum in one word ours: but meum, and veſtrum (in two words) mine, and yours: Yet, otherwiſe his, and otherwiſe ours; Both, as Father, and as God. Meum and Veſtrum. not Noſtrum.

As Father. His, by nature; by very generation: Ours, by grace, by meere adoption. As God (and there we are before Him) our God, by nature. His no otherwiſe, then as He took upon Him our nature.

But, his honour thus ſet ſafe, by this partition kept on foot, then let the wheels run, purſue the reſt, as farre as you pleaſe, make of it the moſt you can, for your beſt avile. That one and the ſame is both His and ours. One Father, one God, to Him and us both. Father, to Him; God, to us; God to Him; Father, to us, If we, a God; He one. If He, a Father; we, one. Our God, Chriſt's God, Chriſt's Father, our Father. There is aſcendo your chariot, and theſe are the four wheeles on which it moveth, and is carried up to Heaven.

But, where is Eaſter-day, what is become of it all this while? For, me thinks, all the time, we are thus about Father and Sonne, and taking our nature and becomming one of us, it ſhould be Chriſtmas by this, and not Eaſter (as it is) that this a meeter Text (one would think) for that Feaſt; and that (now) it comes out of ſeaſon.

Not a whit. It is Chriſt that ſpeaketh, and He never ſpeaketh but in ſeaſon; never, but to the purpoſe; never, but on the right Day.

A brother-hood (we grant) was begun then, at Chriſtmas, by his birth, as upon that Day, for loe then was he borne. But, ſo was he now alſo, at Eaſter: born then, too: and after a better manner born. His Reſurrection was a ſecond birth, Eaſter a ſecond Chriſtmas. Hodiè genui te, as true of this day, as of that. The Church appointeth, for the firſt Pſalme, this day, the ſecond Pſalm, the Pſalm, of hodiè genui te. The Apoſtle ſaith expreſly (Acts 13. 33.) When he roſe from the dead, then was hodiè genui te, fulfilled in him, verified of him. Then he was primogenitus à mortuis; Gods firſt begotten from the dead. And upon this latter birth doth the brother-hood of this day depend. Pſal. 2. 7. Col. 1. 18.

There was then a new begetting, this day. And if a new begetting, a new Paternity, and fraternity, both. By the hodiè genui te of Chriſtmas, how ſoon He was born of the Virgins wombe, he became our brother (ſinne except) ſubject to all our infirmities; ſo, to mortality, and even to death it ſelf. And, by death, that brother-hood had been diſſolved, but for this dayes riſing. By the hodiè genui te of Eaſter, as ſoone as he was born again of the womb of the grave, he begins a new brother-hood, founds a new fraternity ſtraight; adopts us (we ſee) anew againe, by his fratres meos; and thereby, hee that was primogenitus à mortuis, becomes primogenitus inter multos fratres: When the firſt-begotten from the dead, then, the firſt begotten in this reſpect, among many brethren. Before, he was ours: now, we are His. That was by the mothers ſide; ſo, he ours: This is by Patrem veſtrum, the Fathers ſide; So, we his. But half-brothers before; Never, of whole bloud, till now. Now, by Father and Mother both, fratres germani, fratres fraterrimi, we cannot be more. Rom. 8. 29.

To ſhut all up in a word: That of Chriſtmas was the fraternity riſing out of Deum meum, Deum veſtrum; So, then, brethren. This of Eaſter, adopting us to his Father, was the fraternity of Patrem meum, Patrem veſtrum: So, brethren, now.

This dayes is the better birth, the better brother-hood by farre: the fore-wheele, are the leſſe, the hinder, the larger, ever. For, firſt, that of ours was when he was mortall: But, his adoption he deferred, he would not make it, while he was mortall: reſerved it, till he was riſen again, and was even upon his aſcending, and then he made it. So, mortall he was, when he ours: But, now (when we his) he is immortall, and we brethren to him, in that ſtate, the ſtate of immortality. Brethren, before; but not to aſcendo: now, to aſcendo and all. Death was in danger, to have diſſolved that: But, death hath now no power on him, or on this, this ſhall never be in danger of being diſſo'ved any more. That, without this, is nothing.

But we ſhall not need to ſtand in termes of compariſon: ſince, then, it was but one of theſe; now, it is both. His Father is now become Our Father, to make us joynt-heires with him of his heavenly Kingdome: His God likewiſe, become our God, to make us partakers, with them both, of the Divine Nature. Patrem meum and Patrem veſtrum, Deum meum, and Deum veſtrum run both merrily together, and aſcendo upon them both.

Whereof (I mean, of the partaking of his divine Nature) to give us full and perfect aſſurance, as he took our fleſh, and became our brother, fleſh of our fleſh then; ſo He gives us his fleſh; that we may become His brethren, fleſh of His fleſh, now: And gives it us now upon this day, the very day of our Adoption into this fraternity. By taking our fleſh; ſo begun His: By giving His fleſh; ſo, beginnes ours. For requiſite it was, that ſince we drew our death from the firſt Adam, by partaking his ſubſtance; ſemblably and in like ſort, we ſhould partake the ſubſtance of the Second Adam, that ſo we might draw our life from Him; Should be ingraſted into him, as the branches into the vine, that wee might receive his ſap, (which is His Similitude:) Should be fleſh of his fleſh, not he of ours, as before, but we of his now: that we might be vegetate with his Spirit, even with his Divine Spirit. For, now in him, the Spirits are ſo united, as partake one, and partake the other withall.

And

And it hath been, and it is therefore an ordinance in the Church for ever, that, as upon this day, at the returning of it continually, his flesh and blood should be, in Sacramento exhibited to us; As to make a yearly solemn renewing of this fraternity, so likewise to seal to us the fruit of it, our rising; and not rising only, but, in rising as ascendo go withal. A badge of the one, a pledge of the other. For which cause, as it is called the living bread, for that, it shall restore us to life, and raise us up in the last day: So is it also, the bread that came down from heaven; came down from thence, to make us go up thither, and in the strength of it to ascend into God's holy hill, and there rest with him in his Tabernacle for ever. That so, the truth of the Feast, and of the Text both, may be fulfilled in us everlastingly, with God (Patrem ascensum) our Father: and with Christ (fratres Deus) our Brother; and with the blessed Spirit, the Love of them both one to the other, and of them both to us.

SERMON

Preached before the

Kings Majesty,

AT WHITE-HALL,

On the XIII. of April, A. D. MDCXXIII.

being EASTER-DAY.

ESAY, Chap. LXIII. Ver. I, II, III.

Quis est iste qui venit de Edom, &c.

WHo is this that cometh from Edom, with red garments from Bozra? He is glorious in his apparel, and walketh in great strength: I speak in righteousnesse, and am mighty to save.

Wherefore is thine apparel red, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-presse.

I have trodden the wine-presse alone, and of all the people there was none with me; for, I will tread them in mine anger, and tread them under foot in my wrath, and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my rayment.

EVer when we read, or hear read any Text or passage out of this Prophet, the Prophet Esay, it brings to our minde the Noble-man, Acts VIII. that sitting in his Chariot, read another like passage out of this same Prophet. Brings him to minde: and with him, his question, Of whom doth the Prophet speak this? of himself, or of some other? Not of himself, that's once: It cannot be Himself. It is he, that asks the question. Some other then it must needs be, of whom it is; and we to aske who that other was. Act. 8. 34

The tenour of Scripture, that Noble-man then read, was out of the LIII. Chapter, and this of ours out of the LXIII. Ten Chapters between. But, if Saint Philip had found him reading of this here, as he did, of that: he would likewise have begun at this same Scripture, as at that he did, and preached to him CHRIST: Onely with this difference: out of that, CHRISTS Passion; out of this, His Resurrection. For, He that was led as a sheep to be slain, and so was slain there, He it is, and no other, that rises and comes here back like a Lion, from Bozra, imbrued with blood, the blood of His enemies. Esay 53. 7

I have (before I was aware) disclosed, who this party is. It was not amisse, I so should; not to hold you long in suspence, but to give you a little light at the first, whom it would fall on. CHRIST it is. Two things there are that make, it can be no other but He. One is without the text, in the end of the Chapter next before: There is a Proclamation, Behold, here comes your SAVIOUR, and immediately, He that comes, is this Partie here, from Edom. He is our SAVIOUR, and besides Him there Chap. 62. 11.

is none. Even CHRIST the LORD. 2 The other is in the Text it self, in these words: Torcular calcavi solus, I have trod the wine-presse alone. Words, so proper to CHRIST, so everywhere ascribed to Him, and to Him only, as you shall not read them any where applied to any other: no, not by the Jewes themselves. So as, if there were no more but these two, they shew it plainly enough, it is, it can be none but CHRIST.

And CHRIST, when? Even this day, of all dayes. His coming here from Edom, will fall out to be His rising from the dead. His return from Bozra nothing but His vanquishing of Hell. We may use His words in applying it, Thou hast not left my soul in Hell, but brought me back from the deep of the earth again.) Nothing but the act of His rising again. So that, this very morning was this Scripture fulfilled in our ears.

Psal. 16. 10 71. 20.

I The whole text entire is a dialogue between two, 1 the Prophet; and 2 CHRIST. There are in it two Questions, and to the two questions two Answers. 1 The Prophets first question is touching the Party Himself, who he is; in these words, Who is this? To which, the Party Himself answers, in the same verse, these words, that am I, one that, &c.

II The Prophets second question is about his colours, why He was all in red (in the second verse:) Wherefore then is thy apparel, &c. The answer to that is (in the third verse) in these: I have trodden, &c. For I will tread them down.

Of CHRIST: Of His rising or coming back: of his colours: of the wine-presse, that gave Him this tincture, or rather of the two wine-presses: 1 the Wine-presse of Redemption, first; 2 and then, of the other Wine-presse of Vengeance.

I The first Question touching the Partie: who it is. Psal. 60. 6.

THe Prophets use to speak of things to come, as if they saw them present before their eyes. That makes their Prophecies be called Visions. In his vision here, the Prophet being taken up in spirit, sees one coming. Coming, whence? From the Land or Countrey of Idumæa or Edom. From what place there? From Bozra the chief City in the Land, the place of greatest strength. Who will lead me into the strong City? That is Bozra: Who will bring me into Edom? He that can do the first, can do the latter. Win Bozra, and Edom is won.

There was a crie in the end of the Chapter before: Behold, here comes your SAVIOUR. He looked; and saw one coming. Two things he descries in this Party. 1 One, His habit, that he was formosus in stolâ, very richly arrayed. 2 The other, His gate: that He came stoutly marching, or pacing the ground very strongly. Two good familiar notes, to descrie a stranger by. His apparel, whether rich or mean: which the world, most commonly takes notice of men, by. His Gate: for, weak men have but a feeble gate. Valiant strong men tread upon the ground so, as, by it, you may discern their strength.

Now, this Party He came so goodly in His apparel, so stately in His March, as if, by all likelihood, He had made some conquest in Edom (the place He came from;) had had a victory in Bozra (the City where he had been.) And the truth is, so He had. He saith it in the third verse, He had trodden down his enemies, had trampled upon them, made the blood even start out of them; which blood of theirs had all to stained His garments. This was no evil newes, for Esayes Countremen, the people of God; Edom was the worst enemy they had.

With joy then: but, not without admiration, such a Party sees the Prophet come toward him. Sees Him; but knows Him not: thinks Him not worthy the knowing: so thinking, and not knowing, is desirous to be instructed, concerning him. Out of this desire, asks, quis est? Not, of himself, (he durst not be so bold) Who are you? but of some stander by, Whom have we here? Can you tell, who this might be? The first question.

What is meant 1 By Edom. Mat. 2. 14.

But before we come to the question, a word or two of the place where he had been, and whence He came: Edom, and Bozra what is meant by them? For, if this Party be CHRIST; CHRIST was in Egypt a Child: but never in Edom, that we read; never at Bozra in all his life. So as here, we are to leave the letter. Some other it might be the letter might mean: we will not much stand to look after Him. For however possibly some such there was, yet it will plainly appear by the sequel, that the testimony of JESUS, as it is of each other, so it is the spirit of this prophesie. Apoc. 9. 10.

Go we then to the Kernel, and let the husk lie: let go the dead letter, and take we to us the spiritual meaning that hath some life in it. For, what care we for the literal Edom or Bozra, what became of them: what are they to us? Let us compare spirituall things with spirituall things: that is it must do us good.

I will give you a key to this, and such like Scriptures. Familiar it is in the Prophets (nothing more, than) to speak to their People, in their own language; than to exhresse their ghostly enemies, the both mortal and immortal enemies of their souls, under the termes and titles of those Nations and Cities, as were the known sworn enemies of the Common-wealth of Israel. As, of Egypt where they were in bondage: as of Babylon, where, in captivity: elsewhere as of Edom here, who maliced them more than both those. If the Angel tell us right, Rev. XI. there is a Spiritual Sodom and Egypt, where our LORD was crucified: and, if they, why not a spiritual Edom too, whence our LORD rose again? Put all three together, Egypt, Babel, Edom: all their enmities, all are nothing to the hatred, that Hell bears us. Apoc. 11. 8.

But yet, if you aſk, of the three which was the worſt? That, was Edom. To ſhew, the Prophet, here, made good choice of his place: Edom upon earth, comes neareſt to the kingdom of darkneſſe in Hell, of all the reſt. And that, in theſe reſpects:

1 Firſt, they were the wickedeſt people under the Sunne. If there were any Divels upon earth, it was they: if the Divel, of any Countrey, he would chooſe to be an Edomite. No place on earth, that reſembled Hell neerer: next to hell on earth, was Edom, for all that nought was. Malachi calls Edom, the border of all wickedneſſe; a people with whom God was angry for ever. In which very points, no enemies ſo fitly expreſſe the enemies of our ſoul, againſt whom the anger of GOD is eternal, and the ſmoke of whoſe torments ſhall aſcend for ever. Hell, for all that nought is. That, if the power of darkneſſe, and Hell it ſelf, if they be to be expreſſed by any place on earth, they cannot be better expreſſed than in theſe, Edom and Bozra. Malach. 1. 4. Apoc. 14. 11.

2 I will give you another. The Edomites were the poſterity of Eſau: the ſame is Edom. So, they were the neareſt of kinne to the Jewes, of all Nations; ſo, ſhould have been their beſt friends. The Jewes and they came of two brethren: Edom was the elder: that was the grief; that the people of Iſrael coming of Jacob the younger brother, had enlarged their border; got them a better ſeat and Countrey by farre, than they (the Edomites) had: Hence grew envie: and an enemy out of envie, is ever the worſt. So were they: the moſt cankred enemies that Iſrael had. The caſe is ſo between us and the evil ſpirits. Angels they were (we know) and ſo, in a ſort, elder brethren to us. Of the two intellectual natures, they the firſt created. Our caſe (now) CHRIST be thanked, is much better than theirs, which is that enraged them againſt us, as much and more, than ever any Edomite againſt Iſrael. Hell, for rancor and envie. Gen. 36. 1.

3 Yet one more: they were ready to do Gods people all the miſchief, they were able; and, when they were not able of themſelves, they ſhewed their good wills, though; ſet on others. And when they had won Jeruſalem, cryed Down with it, down with it, even to the ground: no leſſe would ſerve. And when it was on the ground, inſulted and rejoyced above meaſure: Remember the children of Edom; this is right the Divels property quarto modo. He that hath but the heart of a man, will even rue, to ſee his enemy lying in extreme miſery. None but very Divels, or Divels incarnate will do ſo: corrupt their paſſion, caſt off all pitie; rejoyce, inſult, take delight at ones deſtruction. Hell for their ἐμφυσιαν, inſulting over men in miſery. Pſal. 137. 7.

4 But will ye go even to the letter? None did ever ſo much miſchief to David, as did Doeg: he was an Edomite. Nor none ſo much to the Son of David, CHRIST; none bore more malice to him, firſt and laſt, than did Herod; and He was an Edomite. So, which way ſoever we take it, next the kingdom of darkneſſe was Edom upon earth. And Chriſt coming from thence, may well be ſaid to come from Edom. 1 Sam. 22. 9.

2. By Bozra.

But, what ſay you to Bozra? This: that if the Countrey of Edom, do well ſet before us the whole kingdom of darkneſſe, or region of death; Bozra may well ſtand for Hell it ſelf. Bozra, was the ſtrongeſt hold of that kingdom; Hell, is ſo of this. The whole Countrey of Idumea was called and known by the name of Uz, that is of ſtrength; And, what of ſuch ſtrength, as death? all the ſons of men ſtoop to him. Bozra was called the ſtrong City: Hell is as ſtrong as it every way. They write it was invironed with huge high rocks on all ſides: onely one cleft to come to it, by. And, when you were in, there muſt you periſh: no getting out again. For all the world like to Hell, as Abraham deſcribes it to him that was in it, They that would go from this place to you cannot poſſibly; neither can they come from thence to us; the gulfe is ſo great, no getting out. No Habeas corpus, from death; No habeas animam out of Hell; you muſt let that alone for ever. Pſal. 60. 9. Luk. 16. 26. Pſal. 49. 8.

Now then, have we the Prophets true Edom; his very Bozra, indeed. By this, we underſtand what they mean. Edom, the kingdom of darkneſſe and death: Bozra, the ſeat of the Prince of darkneſſe (that is) Hell it ſelf. From both which CHRIST, this day, returned. His ſoul was not left in Hell: His fleſh ſaw not (but roſe from) corruption. Pſal. 16. 10.

For, over Edom, ſtrong it was, yet David caſt his ſhooe over it, (that is, after the Hebrew phraſe) ſet his foot upon it, and trod it downe. And Bozra, as impregnable a hold as it was holden, yet David won it was led into the ſtrong City: led into it, and came thence again. So did the Son of David, this day from his Edom, death, how ſtrong ſoever, yet ſwallowed up in victorie, this day. And, from Hell His Bozra: how hard ſoever, it held (as he that was in it, found there was no getting thence) CHRIST is got forth, we ſee. How many ſouls ſoever there were left, His was not left there. Pſal. 108. 9. 1 Cor. 15. 54

And, when did He this? when, ſolutis doloribus inferni, He looſed the pains of Hell; trod upon the Serpents head, and all to bruiſed it; took from death his ſting; from Hell his victory (that is) his Standard, alluding to the Roman Standard that had in it the Image of the goddeſſe Victorie. Seized upon the Chirographum contra nos, the Rag-man roll, that made ſo much againſt us; took it, rent it, and ſo rent, nailed it to His Croſſe, made His Banner of it (of the Law cancelled) hanging at it Banner-wiſe. And having thus ſpoiled principalities and Powers, He made an open ſhew of them, triumphed over them in ſemetipſo, in His own perſon: (All three are in Col. 2.) and triumphantly came thence with the keyes of Edom and Bozra both, of Hell and of death, both at His girdle, as He ſhewes himſelf. Apoc. 1. And when was this? if ever, on this very day: On which, having made a full and perfect conqueſt of death, and of him that hath the power of death, that is, the Divel (Heb. 2.) He roſe and returned thence, this morning, as a mighty Conqueror, ſaying as Debora did in her ſong, O my ſoul, thou haſt trodden down ſtrength, thou haſt marched valiantly. Act. 2. 24. 1 Cor. 15. 55. Col. 2. 14. Coloſſ. 2. 15. Heb. 2. 14. Jud. 5. 21.

And coming back thus, from the debellation of the ſpiritual Edom, and the breaking up of the true Bozra indeed, it is wondred, Who it ſhould be: Note this: that no body knew CHRIST at His riſing; neither Mary Magdalen, nor they that went to Emmaus. No more doth the prophet here.

John 20. 14. Luke 24. 16.

1. Now, there was reaſon to ask this queſtion, for none would ever think it to be CHRIST. There is great oddes; it cannot be He. 1. Not He: He was put to death, and put into His grave, and a great ſtone upon Him, not three dayes ſince. This Party is alive, and alives like. His Ghoſt it cannot be: He glides not (as Ghoſts, ſay they, do) but paces the ground very ſtrongly.

2. Not He: He had His apparrel ſhared among the Souldier., was left all naked. This Party hath gotten Him on glorious apparrel, rich ſcarlet.

3. Not He: for, if He come, He muſt come in white, in the linnen, He was lapped in, and laid in His grave. This Party comes in quite another colour, all in red. So the colours ſuit not.

4. To be ſhort, not He: for He was put to a foile, to a foule foile, as ever was any: they did to Him even what they liſted; ſcorned, inſulted upon Him. It was then the houre and power of darkneſs. This Party, whatſoever He is, hath gotten the upper hand, won the field; marches ſtately, Conquerour-like. His, the day ſure.

The firſt anſw. That Party is Chriſt.

Well; yet CHRIST it is. His anſwer gives Him for no other. To his anſwer then, the Party (it ſeems) over-heard the Prophets asking, and is pleaſed to give an anſwer to it Himſelf: we are much bound to him for it. No man can tell, ſo well as He Himſelf, who He is. Some other might miſtake him, and miſ-inform us of Him: Now, we are ſure we are right. No error perſonæ.

His Name indeed, He tells not, but deſcribes Himſelf by two ſuch Notes, as can agree to none properly but to CHRIST. Of none can theſe two be ſo affirmed, as of Him they may. That, by by theſe two, we know, this is CHRIST, as plainly, as if His Name had been ſpelled to us. 1. Speaking righteouſneſs; and righteouſneſs referred to ſpeech, ſignifieth truth ever. No guile to be found in His mouth: and, omnis homo is, you know what. 2. Mighty to ſave: and, Vana ſalus hominis, vain is the help of man. Whoever ſpake ſo right as He ſpake? Or whoever was ſo Mighty to ſave as He? And this is His anſwer to quis eſt iſte.

1 Pet. 2. 22. Pſal. 115. 11. 60. 13.

That am I. One that ſpake righteouſneſs, and am mighty to ſave. Righteous in ſpeaking; mighty in ſaving, whoſe word is truth: whoſe work is ſalvation. Juſt and True of my word and promiſe; Powerful and Mighty in performance of both. The beſt deſcription (ſay I) that can be of any man: by his word and deed both.

1. His Natures. John 1. 1. Matth. 1. 21.

And ſee how well they fit. Speaking is moſt proper; that, refers to Him, as the Word: (in the beginning was the Word:) to His Divine Nature. Saving, that refers to His very Name JESUS, given Him by the Angel, as man, for that He ſhould ſave His People from their ſins: from which none have power to ſave, but He. There have you His two Natures.

2. His Office. Malach. 2. 7. Dan. 9. 25.

Speaking refers to His Office of Prieſt: the Prieſts lips to preſerve knowledge: the Law of righteouſneſs to be required at his mouth. Saving, (and that, mightily) pertains to him as a King; is the Office (as Daniel calls Him) of Meſſias the Captain. Righteouſneſs He ſpake by His preaching. Saving, that belongs firſt to his miraculous ſuffering; It being far a greater miracle for the Deity to ſuffer any the leaſt injury, than to create a new World, yea many. But, ſecondly (which is proper to the Text and Time) in His mighty ſubduing and treading down Hell and Death, and all the power of Satan. Prophetiza nobis (they ſaid, at His Paſſion) ſpeak who hit you, there: and Ave Rex, they ſaid too: Both in ſcorn, but moſt true, both.

Luke 22. 64. Matth. 27. 24.

3. The Benefits.

You may refer theſe two, if you pleaſe; to His two main benefits redounding to us from theſe two. Two things there are that undo us: Errour and Sin. From His Speaking we receive knowledge of His truth againſt errour. From His Saving, we receive the power of grace, againſt ſin, and ſo, are ſaved from ſins ſequele. Edom and Bozra both. This is His deſcription; and this is enough. A full deſcription of His Perſon, in His Natures, Offices, Benefits; in Word and in Deed. He it is, and can be none but He. To reflect a little on theſe two.

1. Mighty, not in ſpeaking.

You will obſerve, that His Speaking is ſet down ſimply; but in His Saving, He is ſaid to be Mighty, or (as the word is) multus ad ſervandum. So, mark where the multus is. He is not multus ad loquendum, one that ſaith much; and paucus ad ſervandum, and then does little, as the manner of the World is. Multus is not there, at His ſpeech. It is put to ſervandum; There, He is much, and His Might much, Much of might to ſave.

2. But, in ſaving. Eſay 55. 7.

That His Might is not put, in treading down or deſtroying. No, but multus ad ignoſcendum, in the fifty five Chapter before: and multus ad ſervandum, here. Mighty to ſhew mercy, and to ſave. Yet, mighty He is too, to deſtroy and tread down: Elſe had He not atchieved this victory in the Text. Mighty to ſave, implieth ever mighty to ſubdue; to ſubdue, them, whom He ſaves us from. Yet, of the twain, He chooſeth rather the term of ſaving (though both be true) becauſe ſaving is with Him primæ intentionis: So of the twain, in that He would have His Might appear rather. Mighty to deſtroy, He will not have mentioned or come in his ſtyle: but Mighty to ſave, that is his title; that, the quality, He takes delight in: delights to deſcribe himſelf, and to be deſcribed by.

3. Yet he teacheth too: and that firſt.

You will yet mark alſo, as the coupling of theſe two in the deſcription of CHRIST (for, not either of theſe, alone will ſerve; but between them both, they make it up) ſo, that they go together, theſe two, ever. He ſaves not any, but thoſe he teaches. And note, the order of them too. For, that that that ſtands firſt, he doth firſt; firſt teaches. Mighty to ſave he is; but whom to ſave? whom he ſpeaks righteouſneſs to, and they hear him, and return not again to their former folly. There is no phanſying to our ſelves, we can diſpenſe with one of theſe; never care, whether we deal with the former, or no, whether we hear him ſpeak at all: but take hold of the latter, and be ſaved with a good will. No: you cannot; but if you hear Him ſpeak firſt. He ſaith ſo, and ſets them ſo Himſelf.

And put this to it, and I have done this point. That, ſuch as is Himſelf, ſuch, if we hear Him, will He make us to be. And the more true and ſtoothfaſt any of us is of His word, the more given to do good and ſave, the liker to Him, and the liker to have our parts in His riſing. We know, quis eſt iſte now. This for the firſt part. We to be like Him in both.

II.

Now, the Prophet hearing Him anſwer ſo gently, takes to him a little courage, to ask Him one queſtion more, about His colours: He was a little troubled with them. If You be ſo Mighty to ſave, as You ſay, how comes it then, what ailes Your Garments to be ſo red? and addes, what kind of red? and he cannot tell, what to liken them better to, than as if He had newly come out of ſome Wine-preſs, had been treading Grapes, and preſſing out Wine, there. He calls it Wine; but the truth is, it was no Wine: It was very blood. New Wine, in ſhew; blood indeed; that upon His Garments. So much appeareth in the next verſe following. Where He ſaith Himſelf plainly, that Blood it was, that was ſprinkled upon His Cloaths, and had ſtained them all over. We know well, our reaſon leads us, there could be no Vintage, at this time of the year, the ſeaſon ſerves not: Blood it was. The ſecond queſtion. Why His apparrel is red?

But becauſe the Prophet made mention of a Wine-preſs, had hit on that Simile; taking occaſion, upon the naming it, He ſhapes Him an anſwer according: That (indeed) He had been in a Wine-preſs. And, ſo He had. The truth is, He had been in one: Nay, in two then. In one He had been, before this here. A double Wine-preſs (we loſe nothing by this) we find; CHRIST was in both. We cannot well take notice of the one, but we muſt needs touch upon the other. But, thus they are diſtinguiſhed. In that former, it was in torculari calcatus ſum ſolus: In this latter, it is Torcular calcavi ſolus. In the former, He was Himſelf trodden and preſſed: He was the Grapes and Cluſters Himſelf: In this latter here, He that was trodden on before, gets up again, and doth here tread upon, and here tread down, calcare and conculcare (both words are in the verſe) upon ſome others (as it might be the Edomites) The Preſs He was trodden in, was His Croſs and Paſſion. This, which He came out of, this day, was in His Deſcent and Reſurrection: Both, proper to this Feaſt; One to Good-friday, the other, to Eaſter-day. The Anſwer.

To purſue this of the Wine-preſs a little. The Preſs, the treading in it, is to make Wine: Calcatus ſum is properly of Grapes, the Fruit of the Vine. CHRIST is the true Vine, He ſaith it Himſelf. To make Wine of Him, He, and the Cluſters, He bare, muſt be preſſed. So He was. Three ſhrewd ſtreins they gave Him. One in Gethſemane, that made Him ſweat blood: The Wine, or Blood (all is one) came forth at all parts of Him. Another, in the Judgement Hall, Gabbatha; which made the blood run forth at His Head, with the Thorns; out of His whole body, with the Scourges; out of His Hands and Feet, with the Nails. The laſt ſtrein, at Golgotha: where, He was ſo preſſed, that they preſſed the very Soul out of His Body, and out ran Blood and Water both. Hæc ſunt Eccleſiæ gemina Sacramenta (ſaith St. Auguſtine) out came both Sacraments, the twine Sacraments of the Church. The firſt Wine-preſs. Chriſts calcatus ſum. John 15. 5. Matth. 26. 38. John 19. 13. 17.

Out of theſe preſſures ran the blood of the Grapes of the true Vine; the fruit whereof (as it is ſaid Judg. 9.) cheereth both GOD and man. GOD as a libamen, or drink-offering to Him. Man as the Cup of ſalvation to them. But to make this Wine, His Cluſters were to be cut; cut, and caſt in; caſt in, and trodden on; trodden and preſſed out: all theſe, before he came to be Wine in the Cup. As likewiſe, when he calls Himſelf, Granum frumenti, the Wheat Corn, theſe four, 1 the ſickle, the 2 flaile, 3 the milſtone, 4 the oven, He paſſed thorow: All went over Him, before He was made bread: The Shew-bread to GOD; to us, the Bread of life. Judg. 9. 13. John 12. 24.

But, to return to the Wine-preſs, to tell you the occaſion or reaſon, why thus it behoved to be. It was not idly done; What need then was there of it, this firſt preſſing? we find (1 Cor. 10.) Calix Dæmonicorum: The Divel hath a Cup. Adam muſt needs be ſipping of it: Eritis ſicut Dii, went down ſweetly, but poyſoned him: turned his nature quite. For Adam was by GOD, planted a natural Vine, a true Root; but thereby, by that Cup degenerated into a Wilde ſtrange Vine, which, inſtead of good Grapes, brought forth Labruſcas, Wild Grapes, Grapes of Gall: bitter Cluſters, Moſes calls them: Coloquintida, the Prophet, Mors in olla, and mors in calice: by which is meant, the deadly fruit of our deadly ſins. 1 Cor. 10. 21. Gen. 3. 5. Eſay 5. 24. Deut. 32. 32. 2 Reg. 4. 40.

But, (as it is in the fifth Chapter of this Propheſie) where GOD planted this Vine firſt, He made a Wine-preſs in it: So, the Grapes that came of this ſtrange Vine were cut and caſt into the Preſs; thereof came a deadly Wine; of which (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) In the hand of the LORD there is a Cup, the Wine is red, it is full mixt, and He powres out of it; and the ſinners of the Earth are to drink it, dreggs and all. Thoſe ſinners were our fathers, and we. It came to Bibite ex hoc omnes: They and we, were to drink of it, all one after another round. Good reaſon, to drink as we had brewed; to drink the fruit of our own inventions, our own words and works, we had brought forth. Pſal. 75. 8. Matth. 26. 27.

About,

About, the cup went: all ſtreined at it. At laſt, to Chriſt it came: He was none of the ſinners, but was found among them. By His goodwill, He would have had it paſs, Tranſeat à me calix iſte; you know who that was. Yet, rather than we, than any of us ſhould take it (it would be our bane, He knew) He took it; off it went, dregs and all. Alas, the myrrhe they gave Him at the beginning, the vinegar at the ending of His Paſſion, were but poor reſemblances of this cup, ſuch as they were. That, another manner draught. We ſee it eaſt Him into ſo unnatural a ſweat of blood all over; as, if He had been wrung and cruſhed in a wine-preſs, it could not have been more. This (loe) was the firſt wine-preſs, and Chriſt in it, three dayes agoe; and, what with the ſcourges, nails, and ſpears, beſides, ſo preſſed, as forth it ran (blood or wine, call it what you will,) in ſuch, ſo great quantity, as never ran it more plenteouſly out of any wine-preſs of them all. Here is CHRISTUS in torcu-lari, CHRISTS calcatus ſum.

Eſay 53.12. Mat.20.39.

Of which wine ſo preſſed then out of Him, came our Cup, the Cup of this day, the Cup of the New Teſtament in His blood, repreſented by the blood of the grape. Wherein long before, old Jacob foretold, Shilo, ſhould waſh his robe; as, full well He might have done, there came enough to have waſhed it over and over againe. So, you ſee now, how the caſe ſtands. That former, our cup due to us, and no way to Him, He drank for us, that it might paſs from us, and we not drink it. Ours did He drink, that we might drink of His. He, the cup of wrath, that we, the cup of bleſſing: ſet firſt, before God as a Libamen, at the ſight or ſenſe whereof He ſmelleth a ſavour of reſt, and is appeaſed. After, reached to us, as a ſoveraign reſtorative to recover us of the Divels poiſon (for we alſo have been ſipping at calix damoniorum more or leſs, wo to us for it; and no way but this to cure us of it.)

Luk.22.20. Gen.49.11. Eſay 51.22. 1 Cor.10.16.

By this time you ſee the need of the firſt preſs, and of His being in it. Into which, He was content to be thrown and there trodden on; all, to ſatisfie His Father, out of His Juſtice, requiring the drinking up of that cup, by us, or by ſome for us: and it came to His lot. And never was there Lamb ſo meek before the ſhearer, nor Worme ſo eaſie to be trodden on; never cluſter lay ſo quiet and ſtill to be bruiſed, as did CHRIST in the Preſs of His Paſſion. Ever He be bleſſed for it.

Now come we to the other of this day in the Text. This is not that we have touched, but another: Wherein the ſtyle is altered: no more calcatus ſum, but calcavi and conculcavi too. Up (it ſeems) He gat; and down went they, and upon them He trod. His enemies of Edom lay like ſo many cluſters under His feet; and He caſt His ſhooe over them, ſet His foot on them, and paſhed them to pieces.

The ſecond wine-preſs. CHRISTS 1 Calcavi.

If it had meant His Paſſion, it had been His own blood: but, this was none of His now; but the blood of His enemies. For, when the year of Redemption was paſt, then came the Day of Vengeance: then, came the time for that, and not before.

Pſal.108.9.

For, after the conſummatum eſt of His own preſſure, (ſic oportuit impleri omnem juſtitiam) and that all the righteouſneſs He ſpake had been fulfilled: then riſe up, riſe thou arme of the LORD (ſaith the Prophet) and ſhew thy ſelf mighty to ſave: He took Him to His ſecond attribute, to be avenged of thoſe that had been the ruine of us all, the ruine everlaſting, but for Him. To Edom, the Kingdome of death, He went, whither we were to be led Captives: yea, even to Bozra, to Hell it ſelf, and there brake the gates of braſs, and made the Iron barres flie in ſunder. He that was weak to ſuffer, became mighty to ſave. Of calcatus, He became Calcator. He that was thrown Himſelf, threw them now another while, into the Preſs, trod them down, trampled upon them, as upon grapes in a fat, till He made the blood ſpring out of them, and all to ſprinkle His garments, as if He had come forth of a wine-preſs indeed. And we, before, mercifully, rather than mightily, by His Paſſion; now mightily alſo ſaved, by His glorious Reſurrection.

Mat.3.15. Eſay 51.9. Eſay 45.2.

Thus have you two ſeveral vines; the natural and the ſtrange vine: the ſweet and the wilde: two Preſſes, that in Jury, that in Edom: two Cups, the curſed Cup, and the Cup of bleſſing: Of Wine or Blood. His own, His enemies blood: One ſanguis agni, the blood of the Lamb ſlaine: the other ſanguis Draconis, the blood of the Dragon, the red Dragon (Apoc. 12.) trod upon. One of His Paſſion, three dayes ſince: the other of His victory, as to day. Between His burial and His riſing, ſome doing there had been, ſomewhat had been done; ſomewhere He had been; in ſome New Wine-Preſſe, in Bozra, that had given a New tincture of Red to His rayment all over.

Both theſe ſhall you finde together ſet down in one and the ſame Chapter, in two verſes ſtanding cloſe one to the other, Apoc. V. 1 CHRIST repreſented firſt, as a Lamb, a Lamb ſlaine, died in His own blood: this is the firſt Preſs. 2 And immediately, (in the very next verſe) ſtraight repreſented again in a new ſhape, as a Lion, all be-bloody with the blood of His prey: A Lion of the Tribe of Juda; which comes home to this here. For Juda (it is ſaid) he ſhould waſh His robe in the blood of the grape. And ſo much for Torcular Calcavi.

Apoc.5.6. Gen.49.9.11. 55.

We muſt not leave our ſolus in any wiſe: that both theſe He did alone; ſo alone, as not any man in the world with Him in either.

2 Solus, alone.

Not in the firſt; there, preſſed He was alone. All forſook Him: His Diſciples firſt; alone for them. Yet, then, He was not alone; His Father was ſtill with Him: but after, Father and all: as appears by His cry, Why haſt thou forſaken me? Then, was He all alone indeed.

Mat.26.56. 27.46.

Not in the ſecond neither. The very next verſe, He complaines, how that He looked about Him round, and could not ſee any would once offer to help Him. Out of Bozra He got alone; from death He roſe, conquered, triumphed in ſemetipſo, Himſelf alone. The Angel indeed rolled away the ſtone: but, He was riſen firſt, and the ſtone rolled away after.

Verſ.5.

Ac-

Accordingly, we to reckon of Him: that ſince in both theſe Preſſes He was for us; He, and none but He: that His, and none but His be the glory of both. That ſeeing neither we for our ſelves, nor any for us, could bring this to paſs; but He and He only; He and He only might have the whole honor of both; have no partner in that which is only His due, and no creatures elſe at all, either in heaven or earth.

And, is Chriſt come from Bozra? then, be ſure of this, that He returning thus in triumph (as it is in the LXVIII. Pſalme, the Pſalme of the Reſurrection) He will not leave us behind, for whom He did all this, but His own will he bring againe, as He did from Baſan: as from Baſan, ſo from Bozra: as from the deep pit of the Sea, ſo from the deep pit of Hell. He that raiſed Jeſus, ſhall by Jeſus raiſe us up alſo from the Adama of Edom, the red mould of the earth, the power of the grave: and from the Bozra of Hell too, the gulf whence there is no eſcaping out. Will make us in Him (ſaith the Apoſtle) more than conquerers, and tread down Satan under our feet.

Pſal. 68. 22. 2 Cor. 4. 14. Rom. 8. 37.

You ſee, how Chriſts garments came to be red. Of the wine-preſs that made them ſo, we have ſpoken; but not of the colour it ſelf. A word of that too. It was His colour at His Paſſion. They put Him in purple: then it was His weed in deriſion: and ſo was it in earneſt. Both red it was it ſelf, and ſo, He made it more with the dye of His own blood. And the ſame colour He is now in again, at His Riſing. Not with His own, now; but, with the blood of the wounded Edomites; whom treading under His feet, their blood beſtained Him and His apparel. So, one and the ſame colour at both: Dying and Riſing, in red; but, with difference, as much as is between His own, and his enemies blood.

CHRIST'S garments, why red.

The Spouſe in the Canticles, asked of her Beloveds colours, ſaith of him; My Beloved is white and red; white, of his own proper: So he was, when he ſhewed himſelf in kinde, transfigured in the Mount; His apparel then ſo white, no Fuller in the earth could come neare it. White of himſelf: how comes He red then? Not of Himſelf, that, but for us. That is our natural colour, we are borne polluted in our own blood. It is ſinnes colour, that: for ſhame is the colour of ſinne. Our ſinnes, (ſaith Eſay, Chap. 1.) are as crimſon, of as deep dye as any purple. This, the true tincture of our ſinnes: the Edomites colour right: for Edom is red. The tincture (I ſay) of our ſin, original, died in the wool; and then again of our ſinnes actual, died in the cloth too. Twice died: ſo was Chriſt twice. Once in His own: again in His enemies: right dibaphus, a perfect full colour, a true purple, of a double dye, His too. So was it meet for crimſon ſinners, to have a crimſon Saviour: a Saviour of ſuch a colour it behoved us to have. Coming then to ſave us, off went His white; on went our red: laid by His own righteouſneſs to be cloathed with our ſinne. He to wear our colours; that we, His. He, in our red, that we, in His white. So we finde (Apoc. 7.) our robes are not only waſhed clean, but dyed a pure white in the blood of the Lamb. Yea, He dyed and roſe again both, in our colours; that we might dye and riſe too, in His. We fall now again upon the ſame point in the colours, we did before, in the cups. He to drink the ſoure vinegar of our wilde grapes, that we might drink His ſweet in the cup of bleſſing. O cup of bleſſing, may we ſay of this cup! O ſtolam formoſam, of that colour! Illi glorioſam, nobis fructuoſam: glorious to Him, no leſs fruitful to us. He, in mount Golgotha, like to us; that we, in Mount Tabor, like to Him. This is the ſubſtance of our rejoycing in this colour.

Cant. 5. 10. Mat. 17. 2. Mark 91. 3. Lam. 4. 14. Eſay 1. 18. Apoc. 7. 14.

One more: how well this colour fits Him, in reſpect of His two Titles, Loquens juſtitiam, and Multus ad ſervandum! Loquens juſtitiam, is to weare red: Potens ad ſervandum is ſo too. The firſt. To whom is this colour given? Scarlet is allowed the degree of Doctors. Why? for their ſpeaking righteouſneſs to us, the righteouſneſs of God, that which Chriſt ſpake. Nay, even they which ſpeak but the righteouſneſs of mans Law, they are honored with it to. But Chriſt ſpake ſo as never man ſpake, and ſo, call ye none on earth Doctor, but one: none in compariſon of Him. So, of all, He to wear it. This ye ſhall obſerve; in the Revelation, at the firſt appearing of the Lamb, there was a Book with ſeven ſeales. No man would meddle with it: the Lamb took it, opened the ſeales, read it, read out of it a Lecture of Righteouſneſſe to the whole world, the righteouſneſs of God, that ſhall make us ſo before Him. Let Him be arrayed in ſcarlet, it is His due: His Doctors weed.

From loquens juſtitiam, as a Doctor. John 7. 46. Rev. 5. 6.

This is no new thing. The Heathen King propounded it for a reward to any that could read the hand-writing on the wall. Daniel did it, and had it. Sed ecce major Daniele hic. Thus was it in the Law. This colour was the ground of the Ephod; a principal ingredient into the Prieſts veſture. Why? For, his lips were to preſerve knowledge; all to require the Law from his mouth. And indeed, the very lips then ſelves, that we ſpeak righteouſneſs with, are of the ſame colour. In the Canticles it is ſaid, His lips are like a ſcarlet thread. And the fruit of the lips hath God created peace: and the fruit of peace is ſowen in righteouſneſs: and, till that be ſowen and ſpoken, never any hope of true peace.

Dan. 5. 7. Mat. 27. Cant. 4. 3.

Enough for ſpeaking. What ſay you to the other, Potens ad ſervandum? which (of the twain) ſeems the more proper to this time and place? I ſay, that way, it fits Him too, this colour. Men of warre, great Captains, mighty to ſave us from the enemies, they take it to themſelves; and their colour it is, of right. A plain Text for it, Nah. II. Their valiant men (or Captains) are in ſcarlet. And I told you, Chriſt, by Daniel, is called Captain Meſſias, and ſo well might. So; in His late conflict with Edom, He ſhewed himſelf: fought for us, even to blood. Many a bloody wound it coſt him, but returned with the ſpoil of his enemies, ſtained with their blood: And, who ſo is able ble ſo to do, is worthy to wear it. So, in this reſpect alſo, ſo in both; his colours become him well.

Shall I put you in mind, that there is in theſe two, in either of them, a kind of wine-preſs? In mighty to ſave, it is evident: Troden in one preſs, treading in another. Not ſo evident in the ſpeaking of righteouſneſs. Yet even in that alſo, there is a preſs going. For, when we read, what do we but gather grapes here and there? and when we ſtudy what we have gathered, then are we even in torculari, and preſs them we do, and preſs out of them that which daily you taſte of. I know there is great oddes in the liquors ſo preſſed, and that a cluſter of Ephraim is worth a whole vintage of Abiezer: but, for that, every man as he may. Nay, it may be further ſaid, and that truly, that even this great title, [Mighty to ſave] comes under loquens juſtitiam. There is in the word of righteouſneſs a ſaving power. Take the word (ſaith St. James) graff it in you, it is able to ſave your ſouls: even that, wherein we of this calling, in a ſort, parcita e with CHRIST, while, by attending to reading and doctrine, we ſave both our ſelves and them that hear us; we tread down ſin, and ſave ſinners from ſeeking death in the error of their life.

1Tim.4.16.

But though there be in the Word a ſaving power; yet is not all ſaving power in that, nor in that only: there is a preſs beſide. For, this preſs is going continually among us; but, there is another that goes but at times. But, in that, it goes at ſuch times, as it falls in fit with the wine-preſs here. Nay, falls in moſt fit of all the reſt. For, of it comes very wine indeed, the blood of the grapes of the true vine, which in the bleſſed Sacrament is reached to us; and with it, is given us that, for which it was given, even Remiſſion of ſins. Not only repreſented therein, but even exhibited to us. Both which when we partake, then have we a full and perfect communion with CHRIST, this day: of His ſpeaking righteouſneſs in the Word preached: of His power to ſave in the holy Euchariſt miniſtred. Both preſſes run for us; and we to partake them both.

I may not end, till I tell you, there remaineth yet another, a third wine-preſs: that you may take heed of it. I will but point you to it: it may ſerve as ſoure herbs to eat our Paſchal Lamb with. The Sun (they ſay) danced this morning at CHRISTS Reſurrection: the earth trembled then (I am ſure:) there was an earthquake at CHRISTS riſing. So, there is trembling to our joy: Exultate in tremore, as the Pſalmiſt wills us. The vintage of the earth, when the time of that is come, and when the grapes be ripe and ready for it, One there is, that cryeth to him with the ſharp ſickel in his hand (Apoc. 14.) to thruſt it in, cut off the cluſters, and caſt them into the great Wine-preſs of the wrath of God. A diſmal day, that: a pitiful ſlaughter, then. It is there ſaid, the blood ſhall come up to the horſe-bridles by the ſpace of a thouſand ſix hundred furlongs. Keep you out; take heed of coming in that preſs.

Apoc. 14. 18, 19, 20.

We have a kind Item given us of this, here in the Text, in the laſt verſe. There be two acts of CHRIST: one, of being trodden, the other of treading down. The firſt is, for His choſen: the other againſt His enemies. One is called, the Year of Redemption: The other, the Day of Vengeance. The Year of Redemption is already come, and is now; we are in it: during which time, the two former wine-preſſes run, 1 of the Word: 2 and Sacrament. The Day of Vengeance is not yet come: It is but in his heart; ſo the Text is: that is, but in His purpoſe, and intent yet. But certainly, come it will, that day; and with that day, comes the laſt wine-preſs with the blood to the bridles: yet it come, and during our year of redemption, that years allowance, we are to endeavor to keep our ſelves out of it; for, that is the day of vengeance, of ira ventura, GODS wrath for ever. So as, all we have to ſtudy is, how we may be in at the firſt two, out at the laſt preſs: and the due Chriſtian uſe of the firſt, will keep us from the laſt.

Ver.4.

While then it is with us the year of Redemption; and before that day come; while it is yet time of ſpeaking righteouſneſs, that is, to day if ye will hear his voice: while the cup of bleſſing is held out, if we will take it; lay hold on both. That ſo, we may be accounted worthy to eſcape in that day, from that day and the vengeance of it: and may feel the fulneſs of his ſaving power in the Word ingraffed, which is able to ſave our ſouls; and in the cup of ſalvation which is joyned with it; and that to our endleſs joy. The year of Redemption is laſt in the verſe: with that the Prophet ends: With that, let us end alſo: and to that end, may all that hath been ſpoken arrive and bring us.

Pſal.95.7.

A SERMON PREPARED TO BE PREACHED ON EASTER-DAY,

ANNO DOM. MDCXXIV.

HEBR. Chap. XIII.

Deus autem pacis, &c.

Ver. 20. The God of peace, that brought again from the dead, our Lord Jesus Christ, the great Shepherd of the Sheep, through the blood of the everlasting Testament

21. Make you perfect in all good works, to do his will, working in you that which is pleasant in His sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise for ever and ever, Amen.

THese words [who hath brought CHRIST again from the dead] make this a Text proper for this Day. For, as this day, was CHRIST brought againe from thence.

And these words [the blood of the everlasting Testament] make it as proper every way for a Communion. For, there, at a Communion, we are made to drink of that blood. Put these together: 1 The bringing of CHRIST from the dead, 2 and the blood of the Testament, and they will serve well for a Text, at a Communion on Easter-Day.

I will touch in a word, 1 the Nature of the Text, 2 the Summe, and 3 the partition of it.

I The Nature of the Text.

For the Nature: It is a Benediction. The use, the Church doth make of it and such other like, is to pronounce them over the Congregation, by way of a blessing. For not only the power to pray, to preach, to make and to give the Sacrament; but the power also to bless you, that are GODS people, is annexed, and is a branch of ours, of the Priests Office. You may plainly read the power committed, the act injoyned, and the very form of words prescribed, all in the 6. of Numbers. There GOD saith, Thus shall you bless the people, (that is) do it you shall; and, thus you shall do it, in hæc verba. Neither was the act Levitical, or then first taken up: It was long before: While Levi was yet in the loines of Abraham, even then it was a part of Melchizedechs Priest-hood, and (if the bread and wine were no more but a refreshing) the only part, that we read of, to say Benedictus over Abraham, as great a Patriarch as he was. There is nothing else mentioned, to shew he was a Priest, but that.

Num. 6. 23. Chap. 7. 10.

This blessing they used first and last: but rather last. For (lightly) then, the people were altogether. They be not so, at first: but only a few, then. And here (you see) the Apostle makes it his farewel. With this he shuts up his Epistle; and with some other such, all the rest. And that, by CHRISTS example. The last thing that CHRIST did in this world, was: He lift up His hands, to bless His Disciples, and so went away to heaven. And so you shall find it was the manner in the Primitive Church: at the end of the Liturgie, ever to dismiss the assembly with a blessing. Which blessing, they were so conceited of, they would not offer to stirre (not a man of them) till bowing down their heads they had the bleſſing pronounced over them. As if ſome great matter had lyen in the miſſing of it: as if they had been of Jacobs mind, Non dimittam te niſi benedixeris mihi: they would neither let the Prieſt depart, nor depart themſelves, till they had their bleſſing with them: Such a vertue they held in it. The bleſſing pronounced, they had then leave to go with λάου ἀφετοι, in the Greek; Miſſa eſt fidelibus, in the Latine Church; and none went away before.

Gen. 32 26.

An evil cuſtom hath prevailed with our people: Away they go without bleſſing, without leave, without care of either. Mark if they run not out, before any bleſſing; as if it were not worth the taking with them.

Verſ. 17. Mat. 25. 34.

I marvell, how they will be Inheritors of the bleſſing, that ſeem to ſet ſo little by it. If they mean to hear Come ye bleſſed, they ſhould (methinks) love it better than by their running from it, they ſeem to do.

This would be amended. We are herein departed from the Primitive Chriſtians, with whom it was in more regard. Sure, there is more in the neglect of it, than we are aware of.

This bleſſing could not be delivered in better terms, than in thoſe, that came from the Apoſtles themſelves: which accordingly have been ſought up here and there in their writings: and, by the Church, ſorted to ſeveral dayes, which they ſeemed beſt to agree with. As this here, having Eaſter-day in it, was made an Eaſter-day benediction. For, the ſpecial mention in it of CHRIST brought again from the dead, doth in a manner appropriate it to this Feaſt, Utter it but thus: The God of peace, who did now, as upon this day, bring again Chriſt from the dead: do but utter it thus, and it will appear moſt plainly how well they ſuit, the Time, and the Text.

2. The Summe.

For the Sum. It is no more in effect, but ſhortly this. That GOD would ſo bleſs them, and us, as to make us fit for, and perfect in all good works. A good wiſh, at any time. But, why at this time ſpecially, upon mention of CHRISTS riſing He ſhould wiſh it, is not ſeen at firſt. Yet there is ſome matter in it; that, at CHRISTS riſing, He doth not wiſh our faith increaſed, or our hope ſtrengthned, or any other grace or vertue revived: but only, that good works might be perfected in us, and we in them. Surely, this ſorting them thus together, ſeems to imply, as if CHRISTS Reſurrection had ſome more peculiar intereſt in good works: as (indeed) it hath. And, there hath ever been, and ſtill are more of them done now, at this time, than at any other time of the year.

A general Reaſon may be given. That what time CHRIST doth for us ſome principal great work (as, at all the Feaſts, He doth ſome: and now at this time ſenſibly;) we to take occaſion by it, at that time, to do ſomewhat more than ordinary, in memory and honour of it. More particularly, ſome ſuch, as may in ſome ſort ſuit with, and reſemble the act of CHRIST then done. As it might be, when CHRIST died, ſin to die in us: when CHRIST roſe again, good works to riſe together with Him. CHRISTS Paſſion, to be, Sins paſſion: CHRISTS Reſurrection, good works Reſurrection. Good-friday is for ſin: Eaſter for good works: Good-friday, to bring ſin to death: Eaſter, to bring good works from the dead. And we, that were dead before to good works, by occaſion of this, to revive again to the doing of them: And not (as the manner is with us) ſin to have an Eaſter, to riſe, and live again; and good works to be crucified, lie dead, and have no Reſurrection.

3. The Diviſion.

For the Partition. Two verſes there are, and two Parts accordingly. 1 The Premiſſes, and 2 the Sequele. The Premiſſes are GOD; and the Sequele, good works. The former verſe is nothing but GOD, with his ſtyle or addition: The God of peace, who hath brought again, &c. The latter is all for good works, Make you perfect, &c. We may conſider them thus. Of the two, 1 One a thing done for us, in the former verſe. 2 The other a thing to be done by us, in the latter verſe. The bringing back CHRIST, the benefit done us by GOD: The applying good works, our duty to be done to Him for it.

I. The thing done is an act (that is) a bringing back. Which act is but one, but implieth another precedent neceſſarily. For, ἀναγαγὼν (which is a bringing back) implieth ἀγαγὼν, (which is a bringing thither.)

1. 2. To this act there is a concurrence of two Agents. 1 One, the Party, that brought: 2 The other, the Party that is brought. The Party that brought, is GOD, under the name or title of the GOD of peace. The Party, that was brought, is CHRIST; ſet forth here under the Metaphor of a Shepheard, the great Shepheard of the Sheep.

3. 4. The GOD of peace did bring again this Shepheard; from whence? and how? 3 From whence? From the dead. Then, among the dead He was, firſt. Firſt, brought thither: 4 How from thence? by what means? By the blood of a Teſtament everlaſting. All which is nothing elſe, but the Reſurrection of CHRIST extended at large through all theſe points.

II. The thing to be done. That GOD would ſo bleſs them, as to make them, 1 Firſt, fit to do; 2 and then to do good works. 1 Fit to do, in the word καταρτίσαι. To do: Wherein we conſider two things: 1 The doing, to which doing there is a concurrence of two Agents, 1 εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι ὑμᾶς, what we to do. 2 And ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, what he to do. 2 And then the work it ſelf expreſſed in two words, 1 θέλημα, and 2 εὐάρεστον: Θέλημα (that is) his Will: εὐάρεστον that which is well-pleaſing in his ſight. Theſe two be holden for two degrees: and the latter of the twain to have the more in it.

III. And laſt of all, the Sequele. Where is to be ſhewed, how theſe two hang together, and follow one upon the other. Firſt, the GOD of peace, and the bringing of CHRIST from death. Then how how the bringing of CHRIST from death concerns our bringing forth good works. Which being shewed, what this Feast of Easter hath to do with good works, will fall in of it self. That with CHRIST now rising, they also should now rise: They are thought as good as dead, that there may be a Resurrection of them, at CHRIST'S Resurrection.

THE God of peace, &c. Here is a long process. What needs all this setting out his style at length? Why goes he not to the point roundly? And, seeing good works doing is his Errand, why saith he not shortly, God make you given to good works; and no more ado? but tells us a long Tale of Shepheards, and Testaments, and I wote not what (one would think, to small purpose?) But sure, to purpose it is; The Holy Ghost useth to waste words, nor ever speaks but to the point (we may be sure.)

I. The thing done for us. The Party, by whom.

Let us see, and begin with his first title, the God of peace. Gods titles be diverse, as be his Acts: and his Acts are, as his properties be, they proceed from. And (lightly) the Title is taken from the property which best fits the Act it produceth. As, when God proceedeth to punish, He is called the righteous God: when to shew favour, the God of mercy: when to do some great work, the God of power. Now then, this seems not so proper; Should it not rather have been, the God of power which brought again, &c. To bring again from death, seems rather an Act of power, than of peace. One would think so. But being well look't into, it will be found to belong rather to peace. No power of His will be set on working, will ever bring again from death, unless He be first pacified, and made the LORD of peace. Of His power there is no question: Of His peace, there may be some. I shall tell you, why. For, all the Old Testament through, you shall observe, Gods great Title is the Lord of Hosts; which, in the New, you shall never read: but, ever since he rose from the dead, it is instead of it, the God of peace. To the Romanes, Philippians, Thessalonians, &c. and now here to the Hebrews, and still the God of peace. It is not amiss for us, this change. For, if the Lord of Hosts come to be at peace with us, His Hosts shall be all for us, which were against us, while it was no peace. So as, make but God, the God of peace, and more needs not. For, His peace will command His power straight.

His title, The God of peace.
Exod 9.27.
2 Co 1.3.
Psal.89.8.

When His Hosts were so about Him, it seemed Hostility: how came He then to lay away that Title of the Lord of Hosts, to become Deus pacis? That did He, by thus doing: He brought again one from the dead; and that bringing brought peace, and made this change, Stylo novo, the God of peace.

Rom.15.13.
Phil.4.9.
2 Thess.3.16.

This brings us to the other, the second Party: He is not named till all be done; and then He is, in the end of the Verse: our Lord and Saviour JESUS CHRIST. But, at first, He is brought in as a Shepheard. Think never the meaner of Him for that. Moses and David, the Founders of the Monarchy of the Jewes; Cyrus and Romulus, the Founders, one of the Persian, the other of the Romane Monarchy, were taken all from the Sheep-folds. The Heathen Poet calls the great Ruler of the Grecian Monarchy, but ποιμένα λαῶν (that is) the Shepheard of the people. CHRIST gives it to Himself, and God doth not disdain it in the LXXX. Psalme. And the name (howsoever it falls to us of the Clergy now) ab initio non fuit sic. Secular men, Joseph, Joshua, and David, were first so termed, and are more often so termed, in the Bible, than we.

2. The second Party. Our Lord Jesus. Pastorem, The Shepheard.
Psal.80.1.

The term of Shepheard is well chosen, as referring to the God of peace. Peace is best for Shepheards, and for Sheep. They love peace: then, they are safe; then, they feed quietly. Yet, not so, but that Shepheards have ventured far, to rescue the Sheep from the Bear, and from the Lyon, as did King David; and as the Son of David here, that ventured further than any, Who is brought in (here) in Sanguine, bleeding, howsoever it comes.

But, this Title was not so much for God, as for us: (Pastorem Ovium) and, in Ovium, are we; there come we in: we hold by that word. For so, there is a mutual Relation between Him and us: that we thereby may be assured, by this very term Relative, whither, and whensoever He was brought; all He did or suffered, it was not for Himself. For then, an absolute name of His own would have been put. All was for His Correlative, for Ovium (that is) for us. He is no wayes considered, in all this, as absolutely put, or severed from us, His Flock; but still with Reference and Relation unto us.

But, because others Enter-common in this and other His Names with Him, He bears it with a difference; Pastor Magnus, the Great Shepheard. Not (as Diphilus said to Pompeius Magnus) nostrâ miseriâ Magnus es; Great, by making others little: but Misericordiâ suâ Magnus; by making Himself little, to make us great.

Pastorem magnum, the great Shepheard.

The gradual points of His greatness, in respect of others are these. Great first; For, Totum is parte majus, Greater is He that feeds the whole, than they, that but certain parcels of the Flock. All else feed but peeces: So, they be but Petty Shepheards to Him. But He, the whole, main intire Flock: He, and none but He. So, He the Great Shepheard of the Great Flock.

Again, Greater is He that owes the Sheep He feeds, than they that feed the Sheep they owe not. All others feed His Sheep: None can say, Pasces Oves meas. His they be: and reason. For, He made them, they be the Sheep of His Hands: He feeds them, so the Sheep of His Hands, and of His Pasture both.

2. John 21.16. Psal. 95. 2. 100.3.

3. But, this is not the greatneſſe here meant. But Ecce quantam charitatem, ſee the great love to His
1 John 3 1. ſheep! Others ſell and kill theirs: He is ſo far from ſelling, or killing, as He (this Shepherd) was ſold and ſlain for them, though they were His own. Paid for them, bought them again; and then He brought them again. It may be, there were others had ventured their lives; but not loſt them, and ſo loſt them, as He did. Which makes Him not only Great, but Primæ Magnitudinis (that is) ſimply the Greateſt that ever was.

Of which Greatneſs two great proofs there are, in the two words, 1 Sanguis, and 2 Teſtamentum. Sanguis, a great Price; Teſtamentum, a great Legacy. Sanguis, what He ſuffered; Teſtamentum, what He did for them.

In ſanguine, through the blood, The next word is in ſanguine, a Shepheard, in His blood. So, this Shepheard ſweat blood, yer He could bring them back. It was no eaſie matter; it coſt blood: and, not any blood, (ſuch, as he could well ſpare) but, it coſt Him His life-blood. It could not be the blood of the Teſtament, but there muſt be a Teſtament: and, a Teſtament there cannot be, but the Teſtator muſt dye. So, He died, He was brought to the dead, for it. This blood brought Him to His Teſtament, which is further than blood.

The two Acts. We ſaid there were two Acts: 1 One expreſt, brought Him thence, ἀναγαγὼν· 2 The other implied, brought Him thither, ἀγαγὼν: But firſt, brought thither, before brought thence. We will touch them both. 1 why brought thither, and how? 2 and why brought thence, and how?

Brought thither. If, when He was brought thence, it was peace: when He was brought thither, it was none. How came it, there was none? What made this ſeparation? That did ſinne: ſinne brake the peace.

2 Cor. 5. 22. Why, ſin touched not Him, He knew no ſin. True: it was not for Himſelf, nor for any ſin of His. Whoſe then? Here are but two, 1 Paſtor, 2 and Ovium: Paſtor, He; Ovium, we. If not the Shepheards, then the Sheeps ſin: if not His, ours. And ſo it was: Peccata veſtra (ſaith God, in Eſay 59. 2. Eſay) and ſpeaks it to us. No quarrel He had to the Shepheard: nothing to ſay to CHRIST, as CHRIST. But he would needs be dealing with Sheep, and His Sheep fell to ſtraying; and light into the Wolves Den: And thither He muſt go, to fetch them, if He will have them.

Eſay 53. 6. For Ovium then, is all this adoe; and that is for us. For, all we (as Sheep) had gone aſtray. I may ſay farther; all we (as Sheep) were appointed to the ſlaughter. So it was, we ſhould have been carried thither, and the Lord laid upon Him the tranſgreſſions of us all; and ſo, he was carried for us: This Paſtor became tanquam Ovis, as a Sheep, for His Sheep; and was brought thither, and the wolves did to him whatſoever they would.

As if God had ſaid: away with theſe Sheep: Incidant in Lupos, quia nolunt regi à Paſtore, to the Wolves with them, ſeeing they will be kept in no Fold. But, that, the Shepheard indured not: but rather then they ſhould, He would. When it came to this; who ſhall go thither, Paſtor, or Ovium, the Sheep, or the Shepheard? Sinite hos abire (they be his own words) Let them go their way; let John 18 8. the Sheep go, and ſmite the Shepheard; ſentence him to be carried thither. The Sheep were to be, they ſhould have been: but, the Shepheard was. In ſanguine noſtro, it ſhould have been; In ſanguine Suo, His blood, it was. So, to ſpare ours, he ſpilt His own.

2. Thither now He is brought. Brought thither, by His own blood-ſhedding. We can underſtand Brought again thence. that, well: but not, how He ſhould be brought thence by His blood. Yet, the Text is plain, how He was brought again, in ſanguine, by His blood.

Firſt then, let us make God, the God of peace: and, when He is ſo, you ſoon ſee Him bring Him back again. That, which broke the peace (as we ſaid) the very thing that carried Him to the Croſs, took Him down thence dead, carried Him to His Grave, and there lodged him among the dead, was ſin. Away
Chap. 9. 22. with ſin then, that ſo there may be peace. But, there is no taking away ſin, but by ſhedding of blood; the blood, either of Paſtor, or of Ovium, one of them.

3. Why then, here is blood; even the Shepheards blood: and ſhed it is; and, by the ſhedding of it,
In ſanguine, By the blood. ſin is taken away, and with ſin Gods diſpleaſure. It is the Apoſtles own word (Epheſ. 2. 16.) Hatred was ſlain; and ſo, hatred being ſlain, peace followed of her own accord. He was our Epheſ. 2. 14. Col. 1. 20. peace (ſaith the Apoſtle) in one place: He made our peace, or pacified all by His blood, in another.

Now then, upon this peace, He, that was before carried away, was brought back again: And ſo, well might be. For, all being diſcharged, He was then to be inter mortuos liber, no longer bound, but Pſal. 88 5. free from the dead: not to be kept in priſon any longer, but, to come forth again. And, by His very blood, to come forth again. For, it was of the nature of a Ranſome; which being laid down, the Priſoner, that was brought thither, is to go thence, whither he will. For, a Ranſome hath Poteſtatem Eductivam or Reductivam, a power to bring forth, or bring back again from any captivity.

1 Sam. 2. 6. In both theſe bringings, God had His Hand: God bringeth to death, and bringeth back again. True (if ever) in this Shepheard. Brought Him to the dead, as the Lord of Hoſts. Brought Him from the dead, as being now pacified, and the God of peace. Out of His juſtice, God ſmit the Shepheard: out of His love to His Sheep, the Shepheard was ſmitten. But, Quem deduxit iratus, reduxit placatus, whom, of His juſt wrath againſt ſin, He brought thither; now having fulfilled all righ- remiſnes, he was to bring thence again. And ſo, brought back he was; and, the ſame way that he was carried thither. Carried, the way of juſtice, to ſatisfie for them, he had undertaken for. And having fully ſatisfied for them, was in very juſtice to be brought back againe. And ſo he was: GOD accepted his paſſion in full ſatisfaction, gave preſent order, for his raiſing again.

And, let not this phraſe, of Gods bringing back, or of CHRIST's coming back; of GOD's raiſing him, or of CHRIST's riſing, any thing trouble you. The Reſurrection is one entire Act of two joynt Agents, that both had their hands in it. Aſcribed one while to CHRIST himſelf, that he roſe, that he came back, to ſhew, that he had power to lay down his life, and power to take it again. Another while, to God; that he raiſed him, that he brought him back: to ſhew, that God was fully ſatisfied and well pleaſed with it; reach him his hand (as it were) to bring him thence againe. Joh. 10. 18.

To ſhew you the benefit that riſeth to us, by this his riſing. Brought thither he was, to the dead: ſo, it lay us upon: if he had not, we ſhould. We were even carrying thither, and that we might not, He was. Brought thence He was, from the dead: So, it ſtood us in hand: if He had not been brought thence, we ſhould never have come thence, but been left to have lien there World without end. Brought thither He would be: He, and not we: He without us. So careful He was, not to ſpare Himſelf, that we might be ſpared. Brought thence He would not be; not without His ſheep we may be ſure: He would bring us thence too, or He would not be brought thence without us. You may ſee Him, in the Parable, coming with His loſt ſheep on His ſhoulders. That one ſheep is the image of us all. So careful He was, to lay Him on his own neck, to be ſure: which is the true portraicture or repreſentation of His ἀναφορὰ. That, if the God of peace bring Him back, He muſt bring them alſo: For He will not come back without them. Upon His bringing back from death, is ours founded: in Him, all His were brought back. In His perſon, our Nature: in our Nature we all. Luk. 15. 5.

Think you, after the payment of ſuch a price, He will come back Himſelf alone, He will let the ſheep be carried thither, and not ſee them brought back again? He did not ſuffer all this (we may be ſure) to come away thence, and leave them behind Him. It was never ſeen, that any that paid after ſo high a rate for any, be it what it will, that when he had done, would not ſee it brought away, but loſe all his labour and coſt. No: as ſure as himſelf was brought, ſo ſure he will bring them, whom he would not part from; (He will die firſt.) Nothing ſhall part them now. Paſtor and Ovium, ſheep and Shepherd now, or no bargain. He with his flock, and His flock with Him; it with him, and He with it: He and they, or not he himſelf; both together, or not at all. Will you hear himſelf ſay as much? Father, my will is, that whither I go, whence I come, where I am, thither, thence, and there, thoſe be alſo.

But when he had brought us thence, what ſhall become of us (trow?) Will he leave us at random, to wander in the Mountaines? No: but, Ubi deſinit Paſtor, ibi incipit Teſtator, where the Shepherd goes out, the Teſtator comes in; which we find plainly in the word Teſtament. For (though peace be a fair bleſſing in it ſelf, if no more but it; and bringing back be worth the while, yet) here is now a greater matter than ſo. There is more in the blood than we are aware of. This is alſo meant: that there is the blood of a Teſtament, which bodeth ſome further matter. There ſhould need no Teſtament, if it were for nothing but to make peace. A Covenant would ſerve for that: My Covenant of peace would I make with thee (ſaith GOD.) Sanguis fœderis would have done that, if there had been no more but ſo. But here, it is the blood of a Teſtament. 4 Sanguine Teſtamenti, the blood of the Teſtament. Ezek. 37. 28.

It is Sanguis cum Teſtamento annexo; Blood, with a Teſtament annexed. Beſide the pacification and back-bringing, this Scripture offereth mere grace; even a Teſtamentarie matter to be adminiſtred for our farther behoof.

For, I aſk. Every drop of this blood is more worth than many worlds: Shall this blood then ſo precious, of ſo great a Perſon, as the Sonne of GOD, be ſpent, to bring forth nothing but pardon and peace? Being of ſo great a value, ſhall it produce but ſo poor an effect? Pity it ſhould be ſhed, to bring forth nothing, but a few ſheep from death. There is enough in it, to ſerve further, to make a purchaſe; which he may diſpoſe of to them, he will vouchſafe to bring again from the dead. For, when he hath brought them thence, how he will diſpoſe them, that would be thought on too.

I find then aſcribed to his blood, a price: not only of ἀπολύτρωσις (that is) a Redemption or Ranſome; but alſo περιποίησις (that is) of Perquiſition, or Purchaſe. And I find them both in one verſ. (Epheſ. 1. 14.) So that, this blood availed, as to pay our debt; ſo, over and above, to make a purchaſe: Served, not only to procure our peace, but, to ſtate us in a condition better than ever we were before. Not only brought us, but bought us: Nay, not only bought us, and brought us back; but bought for us further an everlaſting inheritance, and brought us to it.

Two powers were in it: 1 as ſanguis fœderis, the Blood of the Covenant, the Covenant of peace: for, in blood, were the Covenants made; that, with Abraham, in Gen. 15. that with Moſes, in Exod. 24. in blood both: And among the Heathen men, never any Covenant of peace, but in blood. 2 Now, for peace, this were enough: But, it is ſanguis Teſtamenti too, the blood of a Teſtament: which is founded upon better promiſes; bequeaths legacies; diſpoſeth eſtates: Matter for a higher nature, than bare peace. As the blood of the Covenant, ſo it pacifieth and appeaſeth: As the blood of the Teſtament, ſo it paſſeth over, and conveyeth beſides. Gen. 15. 9. Exod. 24. 8.

But

But ſay, it did not; it were for nothing elſe, but our peace: Yet, it is much better for us, that our peace go by Teſtament, rather than by a Covenant. Leagues, Covenants, Edicts of Pacification have oft been, and are (we ſee) daily broken. Small hold of them: A ſtronger hold than ſo, behoved us. A ſtronger hold there is not, than that of a Teſtament. That is holden inviolable, never to be reverſed. Nothing in rebus humanis is held more ſacred. So as, peace by a Teſtament, is far the ſurer of the twain.

Teſtamenti æterni, Of the everlaſting Teſtament. Mic. 5. 2.

Of which Teſtament, and the greatneſs of it, there is much to be ſaid. For, it is not as other Teſtaments, to be fully adminiſtred: This ſhall never be ſo; it is Everlaſting. Everlaſting: For, ſo is he that made it: His goings out are from Everlaſting. Everlaſting: For, ſo is the Teſtament it ſelf: Though it be executed in time, it was made ab æterno, and lay by him all the while. Everlaſting: For, ſo is the Blood wherewith it is ſealed: the vertue and vigour thereof doth ſtill continue as a fountaine in-exhauſt, never dry; but flowing ſtill as freſh, as the very firſt day, his ſide was firſt opened. We, that now live, come to it, of even-hand with the Apoſtles themſelves, that were then at the opening. And they that come after us, ſhall not come too late, but to full as good a match, as either they or we. Everlaſting: For, the legacies of it are ſo. Nor, as with us, of things temporal: Nor as of the former Teſtament of the land of Canaan, now grown a barren Wilderneſs: but of eternal life, and joy, and bliſs; of eternity it ſelf. And laſtly, Everlaſting: That we may look for no more: Our Goſpel is Evangelium æternum (Rev. 14.) None to come after it. This is the laſt; and ſo to laſt for ever.

Revel. 14. 6.

Now lay theſe together and tell me: Was he not the Great Shepherd indeed, that endured this carrying thither, whence this day he came? that paid this great Ranſome, purchaſed this great eſtate, made this great Will, diſpoſed theſe great Legacies, even his heavenly Kingdom to his little flock? was he not every way as good, as great (which is the true greatneſs: ὁ τῆς ἴσ, τὸ μέγα) here with us, men be good, becauſe they be great: with GOD they be great, becauſe they be Good: For this his great Love, his great Price, his great Teſtament, was he not worthy to wear his title of Paſtor magnus, of Paſtor, and of Teſtator, both? For ſo, both he was: And we, not only his Sheep, but his Legataries: both, in his Paſtor-ſhip, and in his Teſtator-ſhip: in his bringing forward, and in his bringing backward: No wayes to be ſevered from us. He procured no peace, ſhed no Blood, made no Teſtament; was neither brought to the dead, nor from the dead for himſelf, but for his flock: for us ſtill. All he did, all he ſuffered, all he bequeathed, all he was, he was for us.

And now, when all is done, then now (lo) he is the LORD JESUS CHRIST. Till then, a Shepherd wholly and ſolely: The more are we beholden to him. Then (lo) he tells us his name, that he is the great Shepherd, he that was brought back: the blood, his; his, the Teſtament. Truly called the Teſtament: There can no Inventorie be made of this. It hath not entred in the heart of man to conceive, what things GOD hath prepared for thoſe, that have their part in this Teſtament: above all that we can deſire or imagine. Upon earth, there is no greater thing than a Kingdome: and, no leſs than a Kingdom, it is his Fathers will to diſpoſe unto us. But, a Kingdom eternal, all glorious and bleſſed: far above theſe here.

Luk. 12. 32.

All this is a good hearing. Hitherto we have heard nothing, but pleaſeth us well. God at peace: The Shepherd brought to death, that we might not: and brought from death, that we alſo might be brought from thence: and not brought, and left to the wide world; but further, to receive thoſe good things which are comprized in His Teſtament. This is done: done by Him for us. Now, to that which is to be done; to be done by us. Not, for Him: (I ſhould not do well to ſay ſo) but indeed, for our ſelves. For ſo, for us, in the end, it will prove. Both what He did, and what we do our ſelves.

II. The thing to be done by us. 1 The fitting or doing.

That, which, on our part, the Apoſtle wiſheth us, is, that we may be ſo happy, as that God would in effect do the ſame for us, He did for Him: (that is) bring us back; back from our ſinful courſe of life, to a new, given to do good works.

The Reſurrection is here termed ἀναγωγὴ, a bringing back. So that, any bringing back from the worſe to the better, carryeth the Type, is a kind of a Reſurrection, referres to that of CHRIST: who died, and roſe, that ſinne might die, and that good works might riſe in us. Both the Time and the Text ſay upon us this duty, to ſee, if good works that ſeem to be dead and gone, we can bring life to them, and make them to riſe again.

The rule of reaſon is: Unumquodque propter operationem ſuam; every thing is, and hath his being, for the work, it is to do. And, theſe are the works; which we were born, and came into the world to do. The Apoſtle ſpeaks it plainly: we were created for good works, to walk in them (Epheſ. II. X.). And again: That we were redeemed, to be a people zealouſly given to good works (Titus II. XIV.) So, they come doubly commended to us, as the end of our Creation and Redemption, both.

In this Text (we ſee) it is Gods will, it is His good pleaſure, we do them: if we any thing regard either His will, or pleaſure.

In this Text, the Apoſtle prayes, that we may be made perfect, in them. So, unperfect we are, without them: unperfect we, and our faith both. For, by works is our faith made perfect (Jam. 2.) even as Abrahams faith was. And, the faith, that is without them, it is not only unperfect, but ſtark dead: ſo as, that faith needs a Reſurrection, to be brought from the dead again.

James 2. 22.

And,

And, whatſoever become of the reſt, in this Text it is, that He hath not left them out, nor unremembred in His Teſtament. They are in it: and divers good Legacies to us for them. Which, if we mean to be Legataries, we muſt have a care of. For, as His Blood ſerveth for the taking away of evil workes; So doth His Teſtament, for the bringing again of good. And, as it is good Philoſophy: Vnumquodque propter operationem ſuam. So, this is ſure; it is ſound Divinity; Vnus quiſque recipiet ſecundùm operationem ſuam. At our coming back from the dead (whence we all ſhall come) we ſhall be diſpoſed of according to them: Receive we ſhall, every man according to his works. And, when it comes to going, they that have done good works, ſhall go into everlaſting life; and they (not, that have done evil, but they) that have not done good, ſhall go, you know, whither. Let no man deceive you: the Root of Immortality, the ſame is the Root of Vertue: But one, and the ſame Root, both. When all is ſaid, that can be: Naturally, and by very courſe of kind, good works (you ſee) do riſe out of CHRISTS Reſurrection. Mat. 16. 27.

Make you perfect (ſo we read it:) which ſhewes, We are (as indeed we are) in ſtate of imperfection, till we do them. Nay, if that be all, we will never ſtick for that Cognoſcimus imperfectum noſtrum, we yield our ſelves for ſuch, for unperfect: And, that is well. But, we muſt ſo find and feel our imperfection, that as the Apoſtle tells us (in the VI. Chapter before) we ſtrive to be carried forward to perfection, all we may. Elſe, all our Cognoſcimus imperfectum, will ſtand us in ſmall ſtead. Καταρτίσαι, To make perfect. Pſal. 51. 4. Chap. 6. 1.

Why, is there any perfection in this life? There is: Elſe, how ſhould the Apoſtles Exhortation there, or his Bleſſing (here) take place. I wot well, Abſolute, compleat, conſummate perfection, in this life there is none: It is agreed of all hands: None may be out of it. Non puto me comprehendiſſe (ſaith Saint Paul) I count not my ſelf to have attained: No more muſt we; not attained. What then? But, this I do (ſaith he, and ſo muſt we;) I forget that which is behind, and endeavour my ſelf to make forward ſtill, to that which is before. Which is the perfection of Travellers, of way-faring men: the further onward on their journey, the nearer their journies end, the more perfect: which is the perfection of this life: For, this life is a journey. Phil. 3. 13.

Now, good works are, as ſo many ſteps onward. The Apoſtle calls them ſo; the ſteps of the faith of our Father Abraham, who went that way, and we to follow him in it. And the more of them we do, the more ſteps do we make; the further ſtill ſhall we find our ſelves to depart from iniquity, the nearer ſtill to approach unto GOD in the Land of the living: whither to attain, is the total, or Conſummatum eſt of our perfection. Phil. 4. 12.

But not to keep from you the truth, as it is: The nature of the Apoſtles word [Καταρτίζω] is rather to make fit, than to make perfect. Wherein, this he ſeems to ſay; That to the doing of good works, there is firſt requiſite a fitneſs to do them, before we can do them: Καταρτίζω, and ποιῆσαι are both in the Text. Fit to do them, yer we can do them. We may not think to do them hand over head, at the firſt daſh. In an unfit and indiſpoſed Subject, no Agent can work: Not GOD Himſelf but by Miracle. Fit then we muſt be. Καταρτίσαι, To make fit or even.

Now of our ſelves, as of our ſelves, we are not fit ſo much as to think a good thought, It is 2 Cor. 3. 5. Not ſo much as to will: For, it is GOD, that worketh in us to will (Phil. 2. 13.) if not theſe two, 1 Neither think, 2 Not will: then, not to work. No more we are. Neither to begin, (Phil. 1. 4.) nor having begun to go forward, and bring it to an end. Fit, to none of theſe. Then, made fit we muſt be. And, who to reduce us to fitneſs, but this GOD of peace, here, that brought again CHRIST from the dead!

Now, if I ſhall tell you, what manner of fitneſs it is, the Apoſtles word Καταρτίσαι (here) doth import: It is (properly) the fitneſs, which is, in ſetting that in, which was out of joynt: in doing the part of a good Bone-ſetter. This is the very true and native ſenſe of the word; Set you in joynt, to do good works. For the Apoſtle (Epheſ. 4. and Coloſ. 2.) tells us, that the Church and things Spiritual go by joynts and ſinews, whereof they are compact, and by which they have their action and motion. And, where there are joynts, there may be (and other-whiles, there is) a disjoynting or diſlocation: no leſs in things ſpiritual, than in the natural body. And that is when things are miſ-ſorted, or put out of their right places. Καταρτίσαι, To ſet in joynt. Eph. 4. 16. Col. 2. 19.

Now, that our Nature is not right in joynt, is ſo evident, that the very Heathen men have ſeen and confeſſed it.

And, by a fall things come out of joynt: and (indeed) ſo they did: Adams fall we call it, and we call it right. Sin, which before broke the peace; which made the going from or departure, which needed the bringing back; the ſame ſin, here now again, put all out of joynt. And, things out of joynt are never quiet, never at peace and reſt, till they be ſet right again. But when all is in frame, all is in peace: and ſo it refers well, to the GOD of peace, who is to do it.

And mark again. The putting in joynt, is nothing, but a bringing back again to the right place, whence it ſlipt: That ſtill there is good coherence with that which went before: The peace-maker, the bringer back, the boneſetter are all one.

The force or fulneſs of the Apoſtles Simile (out of joynt) you ſhall never fully conceive, till you take in hand ſome good work of ſome moment: and then you ſhall for certain. For, do but mark me then, how many Rubs, Lets, Impediments there will be, as it were ſo many puttings out of joynt, yer it can be brought to paſs. This wants, or that wants: one thing or other frames not. A ſinew ſhrinks, a bone bone is out, ſomewhat is awry: and what ado there is, yer we can get it aright? Either the will is averſe, and we have no mind to it; or the power is ſhrunk, and the means fail us; or the time ſerves not; or the place is not meet, or the parties to be dealt with, we find them undiſpoſed. And the miſery is, when one is got in, the other is out again. That, the wit of man could not have deviſed a fitter term, to have expreſſed it in. This for the diſeaſe.

What way doth GOD take, to ſet us right? Firſt, by our Miniſtry and Means. For, it is a part of our profeſſion under GOD, this ſame καταρτισμὸς, to ſet the Church in, and every Member that is out of joynt. (You may read it, in this very term (Epheſ. 4. 12.) πρὸς καταρτισμὸν.) And that we do, by applying outwardly this Teſtament, and the blood of it: Two ſpecial Splints (as it were) to keep all ſtraight. Out of the Teſtament, by the Word of Exhortation (as, in the next Verſe he calls it:)
Verſe 22. praying us to ſuffer the Splinting. For, it may ſometimes pinch them, and put them to ſome pain, that are not well in joynt, by preſſing it, and putting it home. But both by denouncing, one while the threats of the Old Teſtament, another while by laying forth the promiſes of the New, if by any means, we may get them right again. This, by the Teſtament, which is one outward means. The blood is another inward means. By it, we are made fit and perfect (chooſe you whether:) and that ſo, as at no time of all our life, we are ſo well in joynt, or come ſo near the ſtate of perfectneſs, as when we come new from the drinking of that blood. And thus are we made fit.

Εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι. The firſt Agent. Provided, that καταρτίσαι do end (as here it doth) in ποιῆσαι and ἐν ἔργῳ: that, all this fit making do end, in doing, and in a work: that ſome work be done. For, in doing it is to end, if it end aright; if it end, as the Apoſtle (here) would have it. For, this fitting, is not to hear, learn or know; but to do His will. We have been long at Teach me thy will, at that Leſſon: There is another (in Pſal. 143.) Teach me to do thy will; we muſt take out that alſo. Teach me thy will; and Teach me to do thy will, are two diſtinct Leſſons. We are all our life long about the firſt; and never come to the ſecond, to εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι. It is required, we ſhould come now to the ſecond εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι. We are not made fit (when we are ſo) to do never a whit the more: καταρτίσαι is to end in ποιῆσαι (which is) doing: and in ἔργον (that is) in a work.
Pſal. 143. 10.

Ἐν παντὶ ἔργῳ. In all good works. In work, and in every good work. We muſt not ſlip the Collar there, neither. For, if we be able to ſtir our hand but one way, and not another, it is a ſign, it is not well ſet in. His, that is well ſet, he can move it to and fro, up and down, forward and backward; every way, and to every work. There be that are all for ſome one work; that ſingle ſome one piece of GOD'S Service; wholly addicted to that, but cannot skill of the reſt. That is no good ſign. To be for every one, for all ſorts of good works, for every part of GOD'S Worſhip alike: for no one more than another: that (ſure) is the right. So chooſe your Religion; ſo practiſe your Worſhip of GOD. It is not ſafe, to do otherwiſe; nor to ſerve GOD by Synecdoche: but ἐν παντὶ, to take all before us.

Ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν. The ſecond Agent. But in the doing of all or any, beſide our part (εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι) here is alſo ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, a Worker beſides. For, when GOD hath fitted us by the outward means, there is not all. He leaves not us to our ſelves for the reſt: but to that outward application of ours, joyns His ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, an inward operation of His own inſpiring, His Grace; which is nothing but the breath of the Holy Ghoſt. Thereby enlightning our minds, inclining our wills, working on our affections, making us Homines bonæ voluntatis: that when we have done well, we may ſay with the Prophet; Domine, univerſa opera noſtra operatus es in nobis: LORD, all our good works Thou haſt wrought in us. Our works they be: yet, of thy working. And with the Apoſtle: We did them; yet not we, but Eſay 26. 12. 1 Cor. 15. 10. the grace of God that was with us. Both wayes, it is true: what He worketh by us, He works in us; and what He works in us, He works by us. For, συεργεῖ, συνεργῶ, take not away one the other, but ſtand well together. This for the doing.

2. The work. Now for the work. In every good work we do His will: yet (it ſeemeth) degrees there are. For, here is mention of θέλημα His will, and beſides it, of εὐαρεστον, His good pleaſure, and this latter Chap. 12. 28. ſounds, as if it did import more than a ſingle will. Ones good pleaſure, is more, than His bare will. So, in the Chapter before, He wiſheth λατρεύσωμεν εὐαρέστως, (that is) we may ſerve and pleaſe: (that is) may ſo ſerve, as that we may pleaſe. Acceptable ſervice then, is more than any, ſuch as it is. There is no queſtion, but that, as of evil works ſome diſpleaſe GOD more than other; ſo, of good works, there are ſome better pleaſing, and that He takes a more ſpecial delight in.

And, if you would know, what they be: above, at the XVI. verſe, it is ſaid, that, to do good, and to diſtribute, (that is) diſtributive doing good. It is more than an ordinary ſervice: it is a ſacrifice, every ſuch work. It is of the higheſt kind of ſervice, and that with that kind εὐαρεστεῖται (our word here) GOD is highly pleaſed. So doth Saint Paul call the bounteous ſupplying of his wants from Phil. 4. 12. the Philippians, θυσίαν δεκτὴν, a Sacrifice right acceptable and pleaſing to GOD, and ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας, a moſt delightful ſweet ſavour. And, that you may ſtill ſee, He looks to the Reſurrection, He ſaith: the Philippians had lien dead, and dry a great while, as in Winter Trees do uſe. But, when that work of bounty came from them, they did ἀναθάλλειν (that is) ſhoot forth, wax freſh, grow green again, as now at this ſeaſon plants do. That ſo, the very vertue of CHRIST'S Reſurrection did ſhew forth it ſelf in them. So fitting Natures Reſurrection time (the time of bringing things,

(as it were) from the dead again) with this of CHRIST. Which time is therefore the moſt pleaſing time, the time of the greateſt pleaſure of all the times of the year. So, we know, how to do that, is pleaſing in His ſight.

Yet, even this pleaſing, and all elſe, is to conclude (as here it doth) with through JESUS CHRIST our LORD: He is in, here too. In, at the doing: In, at the making them to pleaſe God, Ut faciat quiſque per Chriſtum, quod placeat per Chriſtum, that what by CHRIST is done, by CHRIST may pleaſe when it is done. In, at the doing, infundendo gratiam, gratiam activam, by infuſing or dropping in His Grace active; making us able and fit to do, and ſo to do them. In, at the pleaſing, affundendo gratiam, gratiam paſſivam, by pouring on His good grace and favour paſſive, as it might be ſome drops of His blood, whereby it pleaſeth being done. Gracing His work (as we uſe to ſay) in GODS ſight, that ſo, He of His Grace may crown it.

We have gone through with both points. Now comes the hardeſt point of all, the ſequele, to couple them, and make them hang well together. III.

Firſt then, they be aſcribed to the GOD of peace. There are but three things to be done in the Text, and peace doth them all. And, if peace; then GOD, by no other title than the GOD of peace. 1 Peace bringeth from death: For, War (I am ſure) bringeth to death many a worthy man. There is little queſtion to be made of this: that the GOD of peace doth the one; but the Divel of Diſcord doth the other. 1. The ſequele. 2.

Secondly, Peace ſets in joynt, War brings all out of joynt: War is not good for the joynts, as we ſee daily. Peace doth them no hurt. 3.

Thirdly, Peace makes us fit for good: War, for all manner of evil works (ſaith St. James in the III. Chap. Ver. XVI.) Therefore the God of peace, ſay we. (And, if He take it from us for a time, that He bring it quickly back to us again.) For when He was firſt brought into the World, among the living, at His birth, Janus was ſhut: the Angels, they ſung Peace upon Earth. And, when He was brought again from the dead, this day, He was no ſooner riſen, but the firſt news was, the Souldiers ran all away: A ſign of peace. And indeed, when he had ſlain hatred, it was moſt kindly then, to bring peace. As, this Evening, with His own mouth, He ſpake it once and twice, Pax vobis, over and over again: Which is the Apoſtles Benediction here. So, Reſurrection and Peace, they accord well. Luke 2. 14. John 20. 21.

Now for the ſequele of good works upon CHRIST's bringing from the dead. Being to infer good works; He would never put in all this, of CHRIST's bringing back again from the dead, if there had not been ſome ſpecial operative force to or toward them, in CHRISTS Reſurrection. If CHRISTS riſing made not for them, had not ſome ſpecial reference to them, ſome peculiar intereſt in them, all this had not been ad idem, but idle, and beſide the point quite. We muſt take heed of this Errour, to think, the Paſſion, or Reſurrection of CHRIST (though it be actus tranſiens, that with the doing paſſeth away) that it hath not a vertue and force permanent; that it left not behind it a vertue and force permanent to work continually ſome grace in us; as, in us; as, to think, His Reſurrection to be actus ſuſpenſus, an act to have his effect at the latter day, and in the mean time to ſerve for nothing, but to hang in nubibus (as they ſay.) But that, this day, it hath an efficacy continuing, that ſheweth forth it ſelf: And as the Rule is, in the ſoul, before it doth on the body. We will leave the Heathen to their Habits, and Habitualities: But, with us Chriſtians, this is ſure: Whatſoever, in us, or by us is wrought, that is pleaſing to GOD; it is ſo wrought by the vertue of CHRISTS Reſurrection. We have not thought of it perhaps; but, moſt certain it is, it is ſo. So GOD hath ordained it. Whatſoever evil is truly mortified in us, it is ſo, by the power of CHRIST's death; and thither to be referred properly. And, whatſoever good is revived or brought again anew from us, it is all from the vertue of Chriſts riſing again. All do riſe, and are raiſed, thence. The ſame power, that did create at firſt, the ſame it is, that makes a new creature. The ſame power, that raiſed Lazarus the brother, from his Grave of ſtone: the ſame raiſed Mary Magdalen the ſiſter, from her grave of ſin. From one, and the ſame power both. Which keepeth this method: Worketh firſt, to the raiſing of the ſoul, from the death of ſin; and after, in the due time, to the raiſing of the body, from the duſt of death. Elſe, what hath the Apoſtle ſaid, all this while?

Now, this power is inherent in the Spirit, as the proper ſubject of it: even the Eternal Spirit, whereby Chriſt offered firſt Himſelf unto GOD, and after raiſed Himſelf from the dead. Now, as in the texture of the natural body, ever there goes the Spirit with the blood: ever, with a vein (the veſſel of the one) there runs along an Artery (the veſſel of the other:) So is it in Chriſt, His blood, and His Spirit, always go together. In the Spirit is the power: in the power, vertually, every good work it produceth, which it was ordained for. If we get the Spirit, we cannot fail of the power. And, the Spirit, that ever goes with the blood, which never is without it.

This carries us now to the blood. The very ſhedding whereof upon the Croſs, Primum & ante omnia was the nature of a price. A price: firſt, of our Ranſome from death due to our ſin, through that His ſatisfaction. A price again, of the purchaſe He made for us, through the Vale of His merit, which by His Teſtament, is by Him paſſed over to us.

Now then, His blood, after it had, by the very pouring it out, wrought theſe two effects, it ran not waſte, but divided into two ſtreams. 1. One into the Laver of the new Birth (our Baptiſm) applied to us outwardly, to take away the ſpots of our ſin. 2. The other, into the Cup of the New Teſtament in His blood, which inwardly adminiſtred, ſerveth, as to purge and cleanſe the conſcience from dead works, that ſo live works may grow up in the place: So, to indue us with the Spirit, that ſhall enable us with the power to bring them forth, Hæc ſunt Eccleſiæ gemina Sacramenta: theſe are (not two of the Sacraments, but) the two Twin-Sacraments of the Church (ſaith St. Auguſtine.) And with us Titus 3. 5. Luke 22. 20. Chap. 9. 14.

there are two Rules. 1. One, Quicquid Sacrificio offertur, Sacramento confertur; what the Sacrifice offereth, that the Sacrament obtaineth. 2. The other, Quicquid Teſtamento legatur, Sacramento diſpenſatur; What the Teſtament bequeatheth, that is diſpenſed in the holy Myſteries.

To draw to an end; If this power be in the Spirit, and the blood be the vehiculum of the Spirit; how may we partake this blood? It ſhall be offered you ſtraight, in the Cup of bleſſing, which we bleſs in His Name. For, Is not the Cup of bleſſing which we bleſs, the communion of the blood of Chriſt (ſaith St. Paul)? Is there any doubt of that? In which blood of Chriſt is the Spirit of Chriſt. In which Spirit is all ſpiritual power: and namely this power, that frameth us fit to the works of the Spirit. Which Spirit we are all made, there, to drink of.

1 Cor. 10. 36.

And what time ſhall we do this? What time is beſt? What time better than that day, in which it firſt ſhewed forth the force and power, it had in making peace, in bringing back Chriſt, that brought peace back with Him, that made the Teſtament, that ſealed it with His blood; that dyed upon it, that it might ſtand firm for ever? All which were, as upon this day. This day then, ſomewhat would be done: ſomewhat more than ordinary, more than every day. Let every day, be for every good work, to do His will: But, this day, to do ſomething more than ſo, ſomething that may be well-pleaſing in His ſight. So, it will be kindly: So we ſhall keep the degrees in the Text: So, we ſhall give proof that we have our part and fellowſhip in CHRIST, in CHRISTS Reſurrection, in the vertue of CHRISTS Reſurrection: Grace riſing in us; works of grace riſing from it. That ſo, there may be a Reſurrection of vertue, and good works, at Chriſts Reſurrection. That as there is a reviving, ἀναβλαστησις, in the Earth, when all and every herbs and flowers are brought again from the dead: So, among men good works may come up too, that we be not found fruitleſs, at our bringing back from the dead, in the great Reſurrection: But have out parts, as here now, in the blood, ſo there then in the Teſtament, and the Legacies thereof; which are glory, joy and bliſs for ever and ever.

Acts Chap. II. Ver. I, II, III, IV.

And when the Day of Pentecost *was come, (*or, when the fifty days were fulfilled) they were all with one accord, in one place.

And there came suddenly from heaven the sound of a mighty VVind; and it filled the place where they sate.

And there appeared tongues cloven, as they had been of fire, and sate upon each of them.

And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

WE are this day (beside our weekly due of the Sabbath) to renew, and to celebrate the yearly memory, of the sending down the Holy Ghost. One of the Magnalia Dei (as they be termed after in the XI. Verse;) One of the great and wonderful benefits of God; Indeed, a Benefit, so great and so wonderful, as there were not tongues enow, upon earth, to celebrate it withall, but there were fain to be more sent from heaven, to help to sound it out throughly: Even a new supply of tongues from heaven. For all the tongues, in earth, were not sufficient to magnifie God for His goodness, in sending down to men the gift of the Holy Ghost. Verse 11.

This we may make a several benefit by it self, from those of Christs. And so the Apostle seemeth to do. Gal. 4. First, God sent His Son, in one verse, and then after God sent the Spirit of His Son, in another. Gal. 4. 4. 6.

Or we may hold our continuation still, and make this the last of Christs Benefits: For Ascendit in altum, is not the last; there is one still remaining, which is Dona dedit hominibus. And that is this dayes peculiar; wherein were given to men, many and manifold, both graces and gifts, and all in one gift, the gift of the Holy Ghost. Psal. 68. 18.

Howsoever we make it, sure it is, that all the rest, all the Feasts hitherto, in the return of the year, from His Incarnation, to the very last of His Ascension, though all of them be great, and worthy of all honour in themselves; yet, to us, they are as nothing, any of them, or all of them (even all the Feasts in the Calendar) without this Day, the Feast, which now we hold Holy to the sending of the Holy Ghost.

Christ

CHRIST is the Word; and all, of Him, but words ſpoken, or words written; there is no ſeal put to, till this day: The Holy Ghoſt is the Seale or Signature, In quo ſignati eſtis (Epheſ. 4. 30.) A Teſtament we have and therein many fair Legacies; but, till this day, nothing adminiſtred; The adminiſtrations are the Spirits, (1 Cor. 12. 4.) In all theſe of CHRISTS, there is but the purchaſe made, and paid for; and, (as they ſay) Jus ad rem acquired: But Jus in re, Miſſio in poſſeſſionem, Liverie, and Seizin; that is reſerved till this day: For the Spirit is the Arrah, the earneſt of the inveſtiture of all, that CHRIST hath done for us.

Eph. 4. 30. 2 Cor. 12. 4. 1 Cor. 5. 5.

Theſe if we ſhould compare them, it would not be eaſie to determine, whether the greater of theſe two; 1 That of the Prophet, Filius datus eſt nobis; 2 Or that of the Apoſtle, Spiritus datus eſt nobis: The aſcending of our fleſh, or the deſcending of His Spirit: Incarnatio Dei, or Inſpiratio hominis; The myſtery of His Incarnation, or the myſtery of our inſpiration. For, Myſteries they are both, and great Myſteries of Godlineſs both: and, in both of them, GOD manifeſt in the fleſh: 1 In the former, by the union of His Son: 2 In the latter, by the communion of His bleſſed Spirit.

Eſay 9. 6. Rom. 5. 5. 2 Tim. 3. ult.

But we will not compare them: they are both above all compariſon. Yet, this we may ſafely ſay of them: without either of them, we are not compleat, we have not our accompliſhment: But, by both, we have; and that fully, even by this dayes royal exchange. Whereby, as before, He of ours, ſo now, we of His are made partakers. He, cloathed with our fleſh, and we inveſted with His Spirit. The great Promiſe of the old Teſtament accompliſhed; That He ſhould partake our humane nature: and the great and precious Promiſe of the New, That we ſhould be Conſortes Divinæ naturæ; partake His divine nature: Both are, this day, accompliſhed. That the Text well beginneth with Dum complerentur; For, it is our Complement indeed: and not only ours, but the very Goſpels to. It is Tertullian's: Chriſtus, Legis; Spiritus Sanctus, Evangelij Complementum. The coming of CHRIST was the fulfilling of the Law: The coming of the HOLY GHOST, is the fulfilling of the Goſpel.

1 Pet. 1. 4.

Of which coming of the HOLY GHOST the report is here ſet down by Saint Luke; both of the 1 time, and the 2 manner of it. 1. The Time, in the firſt words: When the day of Pentecoſt was come. 2. The Manner, in all the reſt of the four Verſes.

The diviſion. I.

And the Manner, firſt on their parts, to whom He came: Of the preparation for His coming in the firſt verſe. And then, the manner of His coming in the other three.

II.

On their parts, to whom He came, how they ſtood prepared, how they were found framed and fitted to receive Him when He came, in theſe three: 1. They were all of one accord. 2. They were all in one place. 3 And both theſe (dum complerentur) even ſo long, till the fifty dayes were fulfilled.

1.

On His part, the manner of His coming to them thus prepared. 1 Firſt, as it is propounded in Type or Figure, in the ſecond and third verſes. 2 And then, as it is expounded in truth and in deed, in the fourth.

2.

1. In type or figure Symbolice; and that is two ways, agreeable to the two chief ſenſes, 1 the hearing, and 2 the ſight. 1 To the Hearing, by a ſound, in the ſecond verſe. 2 To the ſight, by a ſhew, in the third.

1 To the hearing by a ſound, in the ſecond. A ſound of a wind; A wind; 1 ſudden, 2 vehement, 3 that came from heaven, and 4 filled that place where they ſate.

2 To the ſight, by a ſhew in the third: There appeared, 1 Tongues; 2 cloven; 3 as it were of fire; 4 which ſate upon each of them. Thus far, the Figure.

2 Then in the fourth, followeth the thing it ſelf. Which verſe is (as it were) a Commentary of the two former. 1. Of the Wind inward, in the firſt part of it, and theſe words: They were all filled with the HOLY GHOST. 2. Of the Tongues outward, in the latter, and theſe words: They began to ſpeak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

The one, to repreſent the inward operation. The other, the outward manifeſtation of the Spirit. Thus ſtandeth the Order; Theſe are the Parts.

I. THE firſt point is the Time of His coming (that is) The day of Pentecoſt.

The Time. When the day of Pentecoſt was come.

1. Why that day? The day of Pentecoſt was a great Feaſt under the Law: And meet it was, this Coming ſhould be at ſome great Feaſt. 1 The firſt Dedication of CHRISTS Catholique Church on earth; 2 The firſt publiſhing the Goſpel; 3 The firſt proclaiming the Apoſtles Commiſſion, were ſo great matters, as it was not meet, they ſhould be obſcurely carried; ſtoln as it were, or done in a corner. Much lay upon them: and fit it was, they ſhould be done in as great an Aſſembly as might be. And ſo they were; even in a Concourſe (as in the V. Verſe it is) of every Nation under heaven; That ſo, notice might be taken of it, and by them carried all over the world, even to the utmoſt corners of the earth. Saint Paul ſaid well to King Agrippa: This is well enough known; This was not done in a corner.

Act. 26. 26.

2. At

2. At a great Feast, it was meet: but, there were many great Feasts; why at this Feast, the Feast of Pentecost?

It is agreed by all Interpreters old and new; (Cyprian* is the first, we find it in,) That it was to hold harmony, to keep correspondency between the two Testaments, the Old and the New. So it was, at CHRIST'S Death (we see.) He was slain, not only, as the Lamb was; but even, when the Lamb was slain too: On the Feast of the Passeover, then was CHRIST our Passeover offered for us.

2 As the Feast of giving the Law.
* Cyprian Ser. de Spiritu.
1 Cor. 5. 7.

Now, from that Feast of the Passeover, reckoning fifty dayes, they came to Sinai: And there on that day (the day of Pentecost) received they the Law: (a memorable day with them, a high feast, even for so great a Benefit: and is therefore by them called the Feast of the Law.)

And, even the very same day (reckoning from CHRIST our Passeover, fifty dayes) that the Law was given in Sinai, The very same day doth the new Law here go out of Sion (as the Prophet Esay foretold, Exibit de Sion Lex,) which is nothing else, but the promulgation of the Gospel, The Royal Law (as Saint James calleth it) as given by CHRIST our King: The other, but by Moses, a servant: And savoureth therefore of the Spirit of bondage, the fear of Servants; As this doth, of the Princely Spirit, the Spirit of ingenuity, and Adoption, the Love of Children.

James 2. 8.
Psal. 51. 12.
Rom. 8. 15.

On the Feast of Pentecost then; because then, was given the Law of CHRIST written in our hearts by the HOLY GHOST.

To this doth Chrysostom joyn a second harmony. That as, under the Law, at this Feast, they first put their sicle to the Corn; (Harvest, in that Climate, beginning with them in this Month:) the first fruits whereof they offered at Easter; and was called therefore by them Festum messis: in like sort we see, that this very day (the LORD of the Harvest so disposing it, who not long before lifting up His eyes Cujus, and looking on the regions round about, saw them white and ready to the Harvest) His first Work-men, the Apostles, did put in their first sicle into the great Harvest; ager est mundus, whereof the world is the field; and the several furrows of it, all the Nations under heaven. On the Feast of Pentecost, then second, because then began the great Spiritual Harvest.

2 The Feast of beginning of Easter.
John 4. 35.
Matth. 13. 38.
Verse 5.

To these two doth * Saint Augustine adde a third, taken out of the number in the very name of Pentecost, and that is fifty. Which, being all along the Law, the number of the Jubilee (which was the time of forgiving of debts, and restoring men to their first estates) it falleth fit with the proclaiming of the Gospel, (done presently here in the 38. Verse of this Chapter) which is an Act of GOD'S most gracious general free pardon of all the sins, of all the sinners in the world.

The Feast of Jubilee.
* August. ep. 119.

And no less fit falleth it for our Restitution, whereunto Cyril applieth excellently the XXX. Verse of the CIV. Psalme, Emitte Spiritum tuum & creabuntur, & renovabis faciem terræ. Shewing, there was first an emission of the Spirit into man, at his Creation; Which, being since choaked with sin, and so come to nothing: this day, there is here a second emission of the same Spirit into man, fully to restore, and renew him, and in him the whole Mass of the Creation. On the day of Pentecost last, because therein, is the true number and force of the true Jubilee. This for the choice of the time.

Cyril. Cat. 17.
Psal. 104. 30.

The Number thus setled, we descend to the second point, of the Manner. And first on their parts on whom the HOLY GHOST came: how He found them framed, and fit to receive such a Guest. It is called by the Fathers, Paraseeve SPIRITUS, The preparation (as there was one for the Passeover, so here) for Pentecost.

II. The Manner.
I. On their parts. Their preparation.

It is truly said by the Philosopher, That Actus activorum sunt in patiente dispositio; if the patient be prepared aright, the Agent will have his work, both the sooner and the better. And so consequently, the Spirit, in His coming; if the parties to whom He cometh, be made perspirable.

And this is three-fold, set down in these words, 1. They were all with one accord. 2. They were all in one place. A double Unity: 1 Unity of mind (so is ὁμοθυμαδὸν, θυμὸς:) or of hearts (so is accord, cordium.) 2 And secondly, unity of place. 3 And thirdly, these two, dum complerentur: Patiently expecting, while the fifty dayes were accomplished.

Unity is the first: unity of minde. And for it, take but any spirit, that is to give life to a natural body; Can any spirit animate or give life to members dismembred, unless they be first united and compact together? It cannot: Unity must prepare the way to any spirit, though but natural. A fair example we have, in EZEKIEL, Chap. XXXVII. A sort of scattered dead bones there lay: They were to be revived. First, the bones came together; every bone to his bone; then, the sinewes grew and knit them: then the flesh and skin, and covered them: and then, when they were thus united, then and not before, called He for the Spirit from the four winds, to enter into them and to give them life. No Spirit, not the ordinary, natural spirit will come, but where there is a way made and prepared by accord and unity of the body.

Ezek. 37. 7, 8, 9.

Now then take the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of all spirits, the third person in Trinity: He is the very essential Unity, Love, and Love-knot of the two Persons, the Father and the Sonne; even of GOD with GOD. And He is sent to be the Union, Love and Love-knot of the two Natures united in CHRIST; even of GOD with man. And can we imagine, that He will enter Essential (unity) but where there is unity? The spirit of unity, but where there is unity of spirit? Verily there is not, there cannot possibly be a more proper and peculiar, a more true and certain disposition, to make us meet for Him, than that quality in us, that is likeſt His nature and eſſence, that is unanimity. Faith, to the Word; and Love to the Spirit, are the true Preparatives. And there is not a greater bar, a more fatal or forcible oppoſition to His entry, than diſcord, and diſ-united minds, and ſuch as are in the gall of bitterneſs: They can neither give nor receive the HOLY GHOST. Diviſum eſt cor eorum, jamjam interibunt (ſaith the Prophet) their heart is divided, their accord is gone, that Cor is untwiſted; they cannot live, the Spirit is gone too.

Act. 8 23. Hoſ. 10. 2.

And do we marvel, that the Spirit doth ſcarcely pant in us: that we ſing and ſay, Come HOLY GHOST, and yet He cometh no faſter? Why, The day of Pentecoſt is come, and we are not all of one accord. Accord is wanting: The very firſt point is wanting, to make us meet for His coming. Sure, His after-coming will be like to His firſt: to them, that are (and, not to any, but them that are) of one accord.

And who ſhall make us of one accord? High ſhall be his reward in heaven, and happy his remembrance on earth, that ſhall be the means to reſtore this accord to the Church: that once we may keep a true and perfect Pentecoſt, like this here, Erant omnes unanimiter. I paſs to the ſecond.

2 In one place.

But ſuppoſe we were of one accord; is not that enough? May we not ſpare this other, of one place? If our mindes be one, for the place it skills not: it is but a circumſtance or ceremony, what ſhould we ſtand at it? Yes ſure; ſeeing the HOLY GHOST hath thought it ſo needful, as to enter it, we may not paſs it over, or leave it out. Not only, of one minde (that is) unanimity: but alſo, in one place too (that is, uniformity.) Both, in the unity of this Spirit, that is inward; and in the bond of peace too, that is, outward. An Item, for thoſe, whom the Apoſtle calleth Filij ſubſtructionis, that forſake the Congregation (as, even then, in the Apoſtles Times, the manner of ſome was) and do withdraw themſelves; to their perdition; to no leſs matter. GODS will is, we ſhould be, as upon one foundation, ſo under one roof: That, is His doing. Qui facit unanimes, &c. He that maketh men of one minde to dwell in one houſe. Therefore it is expreſly noted, of this Company here (in the Text) where they prayed, they prayed all together (Chap. 4. 24.) When they heard, they heard all together (Chap. 8. 6.) When they brake bread, they did it all together (Verſe 46.) All together, ever: not, in one place, ſome; and ſome in another: but, all ὁμοῦ τὸ αὐτὸ all in one and the ſelf-ſame place. For, ſay what they will, Diviſion of places will not long be without diviſion of minds. This muſt be our ground: The ſame Spirit, that loveth unanimity, loveth uniformity; unity even in matter of circumſtance, in matter of place. Thus the Church was begun; thus it muſt be continued.

3 While the fifty days were fulfilled.

To theſe, do the Fathers joyn a third: which they raiſe out of the word, Dum complerentur. A diſpoſition in them, whereby they held out, and ſtirred not, even till the fifty dayes were fulfilled. That former unanimity; this latter, longanimity. There is in us, a hot haſty ſpirit, impatient of any delay: what we would have, we would have out of hand: and theſe ſame Dum and Donec, and ſuch like words we love them not. This Spirit was even in theſe here (the Apoſtles themſelves) at the firſt, as we may ſee in the laſt Chap. Verſ. 6. where they ſhew it: Domine jamne vis? LORD wilt thou now? even now? by and by? But that ſpirit He caſt out, with Non eſt veſtrum, &c. Manete vos, dum. After which charge given, though at the inſtant of His aſcending, He promiſed He would ſend them the HOLY GHOST; yet they did not look for Him, the ſame afternoon; nor ſtayed but till the morrow after Aſcenſion Day; nor (as the Bethulians ſtint was) four or five dayes, at the fartheſt, and then waxed weary, and would wait no longer: But, as He willed them to wait, ſo they did wait; not five dayes, but five, and five: And ſo continued waiting, even uſque dum complerentur, till they were accompliſhed: And then brake not up neither, to keep Holy-day, but held on their waiting, Holy-days, and all.

Chap. 1. 7. Judith 7. 30.

We ſay before, this Feaſt had divers names: 1 The Feaſt of the Law, 2 The Feaſt of harveſt, 3 The Feaſt of Pentecoſt: We may put to a fourth (out of Deut. 16. 9.) It is there called 4 the Feaſt of Weeks. It is not houres will ſerve the turn, nor yet dayes: it muſt be weeks, and as many weeks as be days in a week, to make it Pentecoſt (that is) fifty dayes. Thus long they ſate by it (as it is in the next verſe) and carried patiently the LORDS leaſure, till He came unto them, Qui crediderit ne feſtinet (ſaith the Prophet Eſay) He that believeth, let him not be haſty: And, ſi moram fecerit, expecta Eum (ſaith Abacuk) If He happen to ſtay, ſtay for Him. And ſo we ſhall, if we call to mind this, that He hath waited for us and our converſion, more years, than we do dayes for Him. And this withal, veniendo veniet, ſtay He may for a time, but if we wait, come He will certainly; and when He cometh, Manebit vobis in æternum, He will never forſake us, but continue with us for ever. Dum complerentur ſhall have His accompliſhment.

Deut. 16. 9. Eſay 18. 16. Abac. 2. 3. Abac 2. 3. Joh. 14. 16.

And in this manner doth the Scripture bear witneſs of them, they were prepared, and that they ſped of the Spirit; and let us of like preparing, look for like ſucceſs.

The Manner, On His part. 1 His coming in type.

And now we come to the Manner, of His coming. And that, firſt in type ſenſibly; thus deſcribed. 1 There came a ſound; 2 There were ſeen tongues, which is a ſenſible kind of Coming.

Job 9. 11. Ch. 10. ver. 24.

And that is a coming rare, and nothing uſual with the HOLY GHOST; which as an inviſible Spirit, cometh (for the moſt part) inviſibly. So ſaith Job: He cometh to me, and I ſee Him not; He paſſeth hard by me, and I perceive Him not. It was thus here, for this once: But after, (we ſee in the tenth Chapter) He came upon Cornelius and his company; And after that, upon the Twelve at

Epheſus

Epheſus (in the 9th Chap.) But on neither, that ought could be ſeen or heard: Only diſcerned by ſome effect. He wrought in them. He that beſt knew the Spirit (CHRIST) ſets us down the manner of His coming; Spiritus ſpirat, ſed neſcis unde aut quo, He doth come and inſpire, but how or which way, that know you not. Chap 9 6. John 3 8.

Yet here, in this preſent caſe, for this once, it was meet, He ſhould thus come in ſtate; and that there ſhould be a ſolemn, ſenſible deſcending of it.

1. Meet: that no leſs honour be done to this Law of Sion, than to that of Sinai, which was publick, and full of Majeſty; and ſo was this to be.

2. Meet: That having once before been, and never but once, upon CHRIST the Head: it ſhould be ſo once more, on the Church too, the Body. It pleaſed Him to vouchſafe to grace the Church His Queen with like ſolemn inauguration to that of His own, when the HOLY GHOST deſcended on Him in likeneſs of a Dove; that ſhe might no leſs, that He Himſelf, receive from Heaven like ſolemn atteſtation.

3. Laſtly, Meet it was, it ſhould remain to the Memory of all Ages teſtified, that a day there was, when even apparantly to ſenſe, Mankind was viſited from on high: And that this wind here, and theſe Tounges came not for nought, at ſo high a Feaſt, in ſo great an Aſſembly.

This Coming then of His, thus in State, is ſuch, as it was both to be heard and ſeen. To the ear and the eye both. So ſaith Saint Peter of it after (Verſe 33.) Being thus exalted (ſaith he of CHRIST) and having received the promiſe of the Father, He hath ſhed forth this, which you now both ſee and hear. And with good reaſon, both: To both ſenſes is the HOLY GHOST preſented. To the ear, which is the ſenſe of faith: To the eye, which is the ſenſe of love. The ear, that is the ground of the Word, which is audible: the eye, which is the ground of the Sacraments, which are viſible.

To the ear, in a noiſe; To the eye, in a ſhew: A noiſe, of a mighty Wind; A ſhew, of fiery Tongues. The noiſe, ſerving as a Trumpet, to awake the World, and give them warning. He was come. The fiery Tongues, as ſo many Lights, to ſhew them, and to let them ſee the day of that their viſitation.

To begin with the firſt: There came a ſound. Which very ſound, is to ſhew, that the Spirit, whereof it is the fore-runner, is no dumb ſpirit but vocal. And ſo it is: the ſound thereof is not only gone into all Lands: but hath been heard, in all Ages; before the Flood it ſounded in [a] Enoch a Prophet, and [b] Noe a Preacher of righteouſneſs. All the Law long, it ſounded in them, by whom [c] Moſes was preached every Sabbath day. The very beginning of the Goſpel, was with a ſound, [d] Vox clamantis: and but for this ſound Saint Paul knoweth not, how we ſhould do; [e] How ſhould they believe (ſaith he) in Him, of whom they have not heard? and without a ſound, there is no hearing. But, we ſhall come to this again in the opportunion of the tongues. There came a ſound.

c Chap. 15. 21.
e Rom. 10. 14.

There came a ſound: and not any ſound; it will not be amiſs, to weigh what kind of ſound is expreſſed in the word here uſed [ἦχος] you know, what ſound an Echo is: a ſound at the ſecond hand, a ſound at the rebound. Verbum DOMINI venit ad nos; The Word of the LORD cometh to us: there is the firſt ſound, To us: and ours is but the Echo, the reflection of it to you. GODS firſt, and then ours ſecond. For, if it come from us directly; and not from Him to us firſt, and from us then to you (echo-wiſe) it is to be ſuſpected. A ſound it may be; the HOLY GHOST, cometh not with it: His fore-runner it is not; for that is ἦχος. A ſound, Echo-wiſe.

There came a ſound, and it was the ſound of a wind: and this too, very fitly. For, the wind, which is here the type of the HOLY GHOST, of all the Creatures, doth beſt expreſs it. A ſound of a wind.

1. For firſt, of all bodily things, it is the leſt bodily, and cometh neareſt to the nature of a ſpirit: inviſible as it is.

2. And ſecondly, quick and active, as the Spirit is. Of the wind it is ſaid, Uſque adeo agit, ut niſi agat non ſit: ſo active it is, as no ſtirring the Aire, no action, no wind: even ſo, no operation, no Spirit. So like, as both have but one name: nay, all three but one: 1 The wind in the wide world, 2 the breath in our bodies, 3 and the Spirit in the Myſtical Body, (the Church:) and much ado we have, to diſtinguiſh them in many places; they be taken ſo one for another.

Now, this wind that came and made this ſound, is here deſcribed with four properties. 1 It fell ſuddenly: 2 It was mighty or violent: 3 It came from heaven; 4 It filled that place where they ſate; that place, and no other. Of which, the two firſt are ordinary, and (like the wind) common, 1 To be ſudden, 2 and to be violent. The other two, not ſo, but diſlike: 3 To come from Heaven, 4 and to keep it ſelf within one place; and that of no great compaſs. 1. It came ſuddenly.

It fell ſuddenly, ἄφνω ἐγένετο· ſo doth the wind. It riſeth oftentimes in the midſt of a calme; giveth no warning, but ruſheth up of a ſudden; and even ſo doth the Spirit: For, that [a] cometh not by obſervation neither (ſaith our SAVIOUR;) you can make no ſet Rules of it; you muſt wait for it, as well when it cometh not, as when it comes. [b] Many times it is found of them that ſeek it not; and therefore little account make of it; and therefore little deſerve it; [c] Cecidit ſuper eum Spiritus, is ſo common in both the Old, and New Teſtament, as we can make no doubt of this. Which ſhew th, it falls ſuddenly; it creeps not: Serpentis eſt ſerpere. Commonly, motions that come from the Serpent, creep upon us: but, Neſcit tarda molimina Spiritus ſancti gratia (ſaith Ambroſe.) [d] Velociter currit Sermo Ejus, His Word runneth very ſwiftly, and [e] His Spirit cometh with the wings of the A Wind. 1. That came ſuddenly.

wind. And therefore ſudden (ſaith Gregory) becauſe things, if they be not ſudden, awake us not, affect us not; but, Repentina valde mutant, ſudden things ſtart us, and make us look up. And, therefore ſudden (ſaith he again) that men may learn, not to deſpiſe preſent motions of grace, though ſuddenly riſing in them; and though they can give no certain reaſon of them: but take the wind while it bloweth, and the water, while the Angel moveth it; as not knowing, when it will, or whether ever it will blow again, or ſtirre any more. It is ἔφνω ἐγένετο, it fell on a ſudden.

2. A vehement Wind. It was a mighty or vehement wind. The wind is ſo; and the Spirit is ſo: both in this well ſorted together.

Of the wind, it is a common obſervation, that being nothing elſe but a puffe of Aire, the thinneſt, the pooreſt, and (to our ſeeming) of the leaſt force of all creatures, yet groweth it to that violence, and gathereth ſuch ſtrength, as it [f] rattles together the great ſhips of Tharſis, as [g] it rents and rives in ſunder Mountains and Rocks: pulls up Trees; blowes down huge Piles of building: hath moſt ſtrange and wonderful effects, which our eyes have often ſeen: and all this but a little thin Aire.

[g] 1 Reg. 19.11.

And ſurely, no leſs obſervable, or admirable (nay, much more) have been, and are the operations of the Spirit. Even preſently after this, this Spirit, in a few poor, weak and ſimple inſtruments (GOD knoweth) waxed ſo full and forcible, as it [h] caſt down ſtrong holds, brought into captivity many an exalting thought, [i] made a conqueſt of the whole world, even then, when it was bent fully in main oppoſition againſt it: as it hath ſet all men in a maze to conſider, how ſo poor a beginning ſhould grow to ſuch Might, that, Wiſdom, and Learning, and Might, and Majeſty, and all have ſtooped unto it: and all was but GODS [k] little finger; all [l] the breath of His Mouth. Verily, the wind was never ſo vehement as the Spirit hath been and is, in His proceeding.

[i] 1 John 5. 4.
[k] Luk. 11. 10.

These two are common with the wind; and for theſe two, it might have been no more, but even a common wind. The other two are not ſo; but ſhew it to be more than a wind: 3 The coming from Heaven, 4 the filling but of that one place. In theſe two, it is diſlike; as in the former two, like the ordinary wind that bloweth.

3. It came from Heaven. It came from Heaven. Winds (naturally) come not from thence, but out of the Caves and Holes of the Earth: they blow not downward, but move laterally from one Coaſt or Climate to another. To come directly down, not only de ſurſum, from above (ſo it may be, from the middle Region of the Aire) but de Cælo, from Heaven it ſelf; that, is ſupernatural, ſure, that, is a wind out of GODS own Treaſury indeed: that, points us plainly to Him, that is [m] aſcended up into Heaven, and now ſendeth it down from thence.

And therefore ſendeth it from Heaven, that it may fill us with the breath of Heaven. For, as the wind is, ſo are the blaſts, ſo is the breath of it: and, as is the Spirit, ſo are the motions, it uſeth; the Reaſons, it is carried by.

To diſtinguiſh this wind from others, is no hard matter. If our motions come from above; if we fetch our grounds there, de Cœlo, from Heaven, from Religion, from the Sanctuary; it is this wind: but thoſe, that come from earthly reſpects, we know their cave; and that there is nothing but natural in them. This wind came thence, to make us heavenly-minded [n], ſapere quæ ſurſum, to ſet our affections on things heavenly [o], and to frame the Rules of our Converſation agreeable unto Heaven. So we ſhall know, what wind blowes; whether it be de Cœlo, or de Hominibus: whether it be Defluxus Cœli, or Exhalatio Terræ; from Heaven, or of Men; a breath from Heaven, or a Terrene Exhalation.

4. It filled that place only. And like to this is the fourth: It filled that place where they ſate. That place, where they: That place, not the places about. That place it filled: the other felt it not. And this is another plain diſſimily, To blow but in one place: and ſheweth it to be more than ordinary. The common wind, all places within his Circuit, it aireth all alike; one as well as another, indifferently. This here ſeemeth to blow Electivè; as if there were ſenſe in it, or it blew by diſcretion. For, it blew upon none of the Neighbour-houſes; none of the places adjacent, where theſe men were not. That, and only that Room it filled, where they were ſitting.

And this [of blowing upon one certain place] is a property very well fitting the Spirit; Vbi vult ſpirat. To blow in certain places, where it ſelt will; and upon certain perſons, and they ſhall plainly feel it, and others about them, not a whit. There ſhall be an hundred or more in an Auditory; one ſound is heard, one breath doth blow: at that inſtant, one or two and no more; one here, another there; they ſhall feel the Spirit, ſhall be affected, and touched with it ſenſibly: Twenty on this ſide them, and forty on that, ſhall nor feel it; but ſit all becalmed, and go their way no more moved than they came. Vbi vult ſpirat, is moſt true.

And that Vbi is not anywhere, but where theſe men ſate; that is, it is a peculiar wind, and appropriate to that place where the Apoſtles are, that is, the Church: elſewhere to ſeek it, is but folly: The place, it bloweth in, is Sion: and, in Sion, where men be ſo diſpoſed, as we ſhewed ere-while; that is, where there is concord and unity, the dew of Sion, Ibi mandavit Dominus benedictionem. There, GOD ſendeth this wind; and there He ſendeth His bleſſing with this wind, which never leaveth us till it bringeth us to life for evermore, to eternal life. So doth Salomon deſcribe the nature of the wind: That it goeth forth, and that it compaſſeth round about, and then laſt, That it returneth, per circuitus ſuos: So doth this, it cometh from heaven, and it bloweth into the Church, and thorow, and thorow it, to fill it with the breath of Heaven: and as it came from Heaven to the Church, ſo it

ſhall return from the Church, into Heaven again, per circuitus ſuos: and whoſe ſails it hath filled with that wind, it ſhall carry with it along per circuitus ſuos; even to ſee the goodneſs of the Lord in the Land of the living, there to live with Him and His Holy Spirit for ever.

So we have briefly the four properties of this wind, and of the Spirit whoſe Type it is: 1 That it is ſudden, in the firſt coming; 2 That it is mighty in proceeding; 3 That it cometh from Heaven; 4 That it cometh into the Church; to fill it with the Spirit of Heaven, and to carry it thither whence it ſelf cometh. Thus much for the ſecond, The firſt Type.

This wind brought down with it tongues, even imbrem linguarum, a whole ſhowre of them, which is the next point, Of the ſhew which appeared. By which appearing, it appeareth plainly, that the wind came not for themſelves only, but for others too beſide: In that here is not only ſent a wind, which ſerveth for their own inſpiration; but there be alſo ſent tongues with it, which ſerve for elocution (that is) to impart the benefit to more than themſelves. 2. To be Seen: There appeared Tongues, &c.

It ſheweth, that the Holy Ghost cometh, and is given here, rather as gratia gratis data, to do others good; than as gratia gratum faciens, to benefit themſelves. Charitas diffuſa in corde would ſerve them, Charity poured into their hearts; but gratia diffuſa in labiis, Grace poured into their lips, that is not needful for themſelves, but needful to make others, beſide them, partakers of the benefit. The wind alone, that is to breath withall; the grace of the Holy Ghost whereby our ſelves live: but, the wind and tongues, that is to ſpeak withall; the grace of the Holy Ghost, whereby we make others live, and partake of the ſame knowledge to life. An union of the wind and tongue here on Earth, expreſſing the unity of the Spirit and Word in Heaven: that, as the wind or breath in us is to ſerve the tongue; ſo is the Spirit given, to ſet forth the Word, and the Holy Ghost to ſpread abroad the knowledge of Christ. Rom. 5. 5. Pſal. 45. 2.

Where, it is not unworthy your obſerving neither, that as in the natural body, one and the ſame breath of our's, is Organon both vitæ and vocis, is the inſtrument both of life and voice; the ſame that we live by, is the ſame that we ſpeak by: Even the very like is in the body Myſtical; and both the vital breath, and the vocal, come both (as we here ſee) from the Holy Ghost.

This alſo ſtandeth of four parts, as did the former. For, there appeared, 1 Tongues, 2 Cloven, 3 as it were of fire, 4 ſitting upon each of them.

The tongue is the ſubſtantive, and ſubject of all the reſt. It is ſo: and God can ſend from Heaven no better thing; nor the Divel from Hell no worſe thing, than it. The beſt Member, we have (ſaith the Prophet;) The worſt Member, we have (ſaith the Apoſtle:) Both, as it is imployed. 1. Tongues. Pſal. 108. 1. James 3. 6.

The beſt, if it be of God's Cleaving; if it be of His Lightning with the fire of Heaven; if it be one that will ſit ſtill, if cauſe be. The worſt, if it come from the Divels hands. For, he, as in many other, ſo in the ſending of tongues, ſtriveth to be like God: as knowing well, they are every way as fit inſtruments, to work miſchief by, as to do good with. There be tongues of Angels (in 1 Cor. 13. 1.) and if of good Angels, I make no doubt but of evil; and ſo, the Divel hath his tongues.

And he hath the Art of Cleaving. He ſhewed it in the beginning, when he made the Serpent, Linguam Biſulcam, a Forked Tongue, to ſpeak that, which was contrary to his knowledge and meaning, They ſhould not dye; and as he did the Serpents, ſo he can do others. Gen. 3. 4.

There is fire in Hell, as well as in Heaven; that, we all know.

Only, in this, they agree not, but are unlike; his tongues cannot ſit ſtill, but flie up and down all over the World, and ſpare neither Miniſter, nor Magiſtrate, no nor God Himſelf.

But if we ſhall ſay to our tongue, as David did to his, Awake up my glory (that is) make it the glory of all the reſt of our Members; it can have no greater glory than this, to be the Organ of the Holy Ghost: to ſet forth, and ſound abroad the knowledge of Christ, to the glory of God the Father. And, ſo uſed, it is heavenly; no time, ſo heavenly as then; in no ſervice, ſo heavenly as in that. Pſal. 108. 2.

Not to inlarge this point further, there is no new matter in it. This here (of the tongues) is as that before of the ſound; both are to no other end, but to admoniſh them of their office, whereto they here received Ordination: even to be tongues, to be trumpets of the Counſel of God, and of His love to mankind, in ſending His Son to ſave them.

Here is wind to ſerve for breath; and here are tongues now; and what ſhould let them to do it? That which before they received in charge audibly, Ite, Prædicate; the very ſame they here received viſibly, in this apparition, which is after expounded thus; Cœperunt loqui, by vertue of theſe tongues they began to ſpeak. Mark 16. 15.

Tongues and cloven tongues. And that very cleaving, of right neceſſary uſe, to the buſineſs intended. For, that of their's was but one whole entire tongue, that could ſpeak but one poor language, the Syrian they were bred in. There was not a cleft in it. So, could they ſpeak their mind to none but Syrians; and by that means, ſhould the Goſpel have been ſhut up, in one corner of the World. 2. Cloven tongues.

τὸ κοινώνικον is the goodneſs of all that is good; even the imparting it to the good of the common. To the end then, this great good of the knowledge of the Goſpel, might be diſperſed to many Nations, even to every Nation under Heaven; To that end, Clove He their tongues: to make many tongues, in one tongue; to make one man to be able to ſpeak to many men, of many Countries, to every one in his own language; If there muſt be a calling of the Gentiles, they muſt have the tongues of the Gentiles, wherewith to call them. If they were debters, not only to the Jews, but to the Grecians; nay, not only to the Grecians, but to the Barbarians too, then muſt they have the tongues not only of the Jewes, but of the Grecians, and of the Barbarians too, to pay this debt, to diſcharge the duty of Ite, Prædicate, to all.

Chap. 20. 21. Rom. 1. 14. Mark 16 25.

And this was a ſpecial favour from GOD, for the propagation of His Goſpel far and wide, this diviſion of tongues: and it is by the Ancient Writers (all) reckoned a plain reverſing of the curſe of Babel, by this bleſſing of Sion: ſince they account it all one (and ſo it is) either, as at the firſt, for all men to ſpeak one language; or, as here, one man ſpeak all. That is here recovered, that there was loſt; and they inabled for the building up of Sion in every Nation, to ſpeak ſo, as all might underſtand them of every Nation.

But this withall we are to take with us: that, with their many tongues, they ſpake, one thing, and that Univocè. With one mouth (Rom. 15. 6.) With one voyce (Chap. 4. 24.)

Rom. 15 6. Chap. 4. 24.

With diverſe tongues to utter one and the ſame ſenſe, that is GOD'S cloven tongue; that, is the diviſion of Sion, ſerving to edification.

With one tongue, æquivocè, to utter diverſe ſenſes, diverſe meanings; that, is none of GODS; it is the Serpents forked tongue, the very diviſion of Babel, and tendeth to nothing but confuſion.

Tongues cloven, and as they had been of fire. As they had been: to keep a difference in theſe (as before, in the wind;) and to ſhew, that they were not of our Elementary fire. For, it is added, ſate upon them: which they could not have done, without ſome hurt; without ſcorching them, at leaſt, if it had been ſuch fire, as it is in our Chimneys. But it was ἐοικὸς, as it were ours: (that is) in ſhew, earthly; in deed, celeſtial: And as the wind, ſo the fire from Heaven; of the nature of that (in the III. of Exod.) which made the buſh burn, and yet conſumed it not.

Exod. 3. 2.

Where firſt we are to obſerve again, the conjunction of the tongue and fire. The ſeat of the tongue is in the head; and the head of the Church is CHRIST. The native place of heat (the quality, in us, anſwering to this fire) is the heart: and the heart of the Church is the HOLY GHOST. Theſe two joyn to this work: CHRIST, to give the tongue; the HOLY GHOST, to put fire into it. For, as in the body natural, the next, the immediate inſtrument of the ſoul, is heat, it worketh all the Members over; even ſo, in the Myſtical body, a vigour there is, like that of heat, which we are willed to cheriſh, to be [a] fervent in the Spirit, to [b] ſtir, and to [c] blow it up: which is it, that giveth efficacy to all the ſpiritual operations.

[a] Rom. 12. 11. [b] 1 Theſſ. 5. 19. [c] 2 Tim. 1. 6.

To expreſs this quality, it appeareth in the likeneſs of this Element; even to ſhew, there ſhould be an efficacy, or vigour, in their Doctrine, reſembling it; Quod igneus eſt illis vigor, that the force of fire ſhould ſhew forth it ſelf in their words: both in the ſplendor; which is the light of knowledge to clear the miſt of their darkned underſtanding; and in fervour, which is the force of ſpiritual efficacy, to quicken the dulneſs of their cold and dead affections.

And indeed, the World was then ſo overwhelmed with ignorance and errour; and ſo over-grown with droſs, and other bad matter, by Paganiſm, it long had been, that their lips did need, to be touched with a Coal from the Altar. Tongues of fleſh would not ſerve the turn, nor words of Aire: but there muſt be fire put into the tongue, and ſpirit and life into the words, they ſpake; a force more than natural (that is) the force of the Spirit: even to ſpeak ſparks of fire inſtead of words, to drive away the darkneſs, and to refine the droſs of their Heatheniſh Converſation ſo long continued.

Eſay 6. 6.

Our SAVIOUR CHRIST ſaw this, and ſaid: Every ſacrifice then had need to be ſeaſoned with fire: but there was no fire to do it with. Therefore He addeth, in another place: I came to ſend fire upon Earth; and, this day, He was as good as His word, and ſent it.

Mark 9. 49. Luke 12. 49.

And with ſuch a tongue, ſpake He Himſelf, when they ſaid of Him, Did not our hearts burn within us, while He ſpake unto us by the way? With ſuch a tongue Saine Peter, here in this Chapter: for ſure, there fell from Him ſomething like fire on their hearts, when they were pricked with it, and cried, Men and Brethren, what ſhall we do?

Luke 24 32. Verſ. 37.

And even to this day yet; in them, that move the dead and dull hearts of their hearers, and make them to have a lively apprehenſion of things pertaining to GOD, there is a remainder of that, which this day was ſent; and they ſhew plainly, that yet this fire is not clean gone out.

But this is not alwayes, nor in all, with us; no more was it with them; but, in thoſe of their hearers, which had ſome of the anointing, and that will eaſily take the fire; in them good will be done: Or at leaſt, where there was ſome ſmoaking flax, ſome remainder of the Spirit, which without any great ado will be kindled anew. Them, it doth good: the reſt, it did not. This for the fire.

1 John 2. 27. Matth. 12. 20.

4. And ſate on each of them. Verſe 2. Verſe 3. Pſal. 78. 57.

Theſe ſate upon each of them. In which ſitting, is ſet down unto us, their laſt quality, of continuance and conſtancy. The vertue is περιστᾶσαι, fiery tongues ſitting: the vice oppoſite διαστᾶσαι, fiery tongues flitting. They did not light and touch, and away, after the manner of Butterflies; but both they ſate themſelves (in the former Verſe;) the tongues ſate on them (that is) they abode ſtill, and continued ſtay'd and ſteddy, without ſtirring or ſtarting aſide (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) like a ſwarving Bow.

Of our SAVIOUR CHRIST Himself, how to know Him, GOD Himself gave St. John Baptist a privy sign; and it was this: On whomsoever thou seest the Spirit lighting, and abiding on Him, John 1.33. that is He: Lighting is not it, though it be the HOLY GHOST: but, lighting and abiding; that is the true sign.

The same our SAVIOUR is, this day, said: That ascending on high, He gave gifts unto men: Psal. 68.18, 19. and to what end? that the LORD their GOD might dwell among them. Mark that; Dwell: not might stay and lodge for a night, as in an Inne, or Hostry, and then be gone in the Morning; but, Dwell: (that is) have His habitation, take up His residence among them.

The GOD, or that Person of the Deity, He there saith, shall dwell, is the HOLY GHOST: One of whose chief Attributes (in the Psalme) is, that He is רוח נכון a constant Spirit: (and, if Sanctus come of Sancio, there is as much fid in the Latine word, as in the Hebrew:) Constant, not Desultory: and His fire not like the foolish Meteor, now in, now out, but permanent still, like the fire on the Altar. Psal. 51.10. Levit. 6. 12.

So in vigour, as His vigour, is not brunts only, or starts, impetus; but, habitus, that it holdeth out habit-wise. Not only like the sparks, before, which will make a man stir for the present; but, leaving an impression, such an one as iron red hot leaveth in Vessels of wood; a fire-mark never to be got out more. Such doth the HOLY GHOST leave in the memories: In æternum non obliviscar, I shall never forget it. Psal. 119.93.

And such did it leave in the hearts of the first Christians, that could never be got out of their hearts by their persecutors, till they plucked out hearts and all.

With this salt, as well as with that fire (saith CHRIST) must every Sacrifice be seasoned. Not only with that fire, to stir it up; but with this salt, to preserve it; By this vertue (in the former verse) they were disposed to the Spirit: and now here, you see again, by the Spirit, they are disposed to this vertue: And not only disposed to it, but rooted, and more and more confirmed in it; that we may learn to esteem of it accordingly. Mark 9 49.

And thus have we (as before, heard what the sound, so now) seen, what the sight can shew us, even all four: 1. Tongues, that they might preach: 2. Cloven, that they might preach to many: 3. Fire, that they might do it effectually: 4. And sitting, that so effectually as not flittingly, but that it might be an efficacy, constant, abiding, and staying still with them: So forcible, that continual.

Now are we to know, what all this amounts to; what is the signatum, or thing signified of both these signs: What was wrought in them, by inward concurrence with this outward Resemblance. And that followeth in the fourth verse; wherein, there is a Commentary of this wind, and a gloss of these tongues. Of the wind, in the fore-part: They were all filled with the HOLY GHOST. Of the tongues, in the latter; they began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

But, the time being already spent, I will not so far presume, as to enter into it: It would ask too long a treaty.

It remaineth now, that first we offer up our due praise and unfeigned hearty thanks, giving to Him that is ascended upon high, for sending, this day, this blessing upon that His Church, the Mother of us all. The fruit whereof, even of this wind, and of these tongues, in the effect of them both (the blowing of the one, and the speaking of the other) we all feel to this day, so far as Christendom is wide. It is the duty of the day.

First then this: and then withall secondly, to endeavour that we may have this day some feeling of this dayes benefit, our selves; and some way find our selves visited with the same Spirit.

I told you, after this first, there is no more visible coming to be looked for: but that, after His accustomed usual manner, invisibly He ceaseth not to come still, nor will not to the Worlds end.

Even in this Book, after this time here, three several times (in the fourth, tenth, and nineteenth Chapters;) and at three several places (Jerusalem, Cæsarea, Ephesus) The same Spirit came upon the faithful people, and yet nothing heard nor seen; only discerned after, by the impression, it left behind it. And this coming is still usual with Him; and this we may hope for; hope for, and have, if we labour and dispose our selves for it.

And we may direct our selves, how to do this, by those three places, I even now alledged. 1. In the fourth Chapter, 31. Verse. As they prayed, the Spirit came upon them: 2. In the tenth, Verse 44. While Peter yet spake, the Spirit fell upon them: 3. In the nineteenth Chapter, Verse 6. As they received the Sacrament, the Spirit was sent on them. In which three, are plainly set down to us, these three means to procure the Spirits coming: 1. Prayer, 2. The Word, 3. The Sacraments.

I know well, it was the Sacrament of Baptisme in the place last alledged: but that is all one. In one Verse, doth the Apostle name them both, as of equal power (both) for the purpose; (1 Cor. 12. 13.) Uno Spiritu baptizati estis; (and, before he ends the verse) & uno Spiritu poti. Baptized in the Spirit, There is their's at Ephesus; but made drink of the same Spirit, that is this of ours here. For, ex similibus sumus & alimur. Ours here (I say) where we do drink of the Spirit, if aright we receive it; in which respect he calleth it the spiritual drink (1 Cor. 10, 3.) because we do even drink the Spirit with it.

And even in this very Chapter before the end, it is noted by St. Luke as a special means, whereby they invited the Spirit to them again and again; Their continuing in the Temple with one accord, and breaking of bread. Of one accord, we spake at the first, as an effectual disposition thereto: And this Sacrament of breaking of bread is the Sacrament of accord; as that, which representeth unto us perfect unity in the many grains kneaded into one loaf; and the many Grapes pressed into one Cup; and what it representeth lively, it worketh as effectually. 1 Cor. 10, 17.

How-

Howſoever it be, if theſe three, 1. Prayer, 2. The Word, 3. The Sacraments be every one of them as an Artery, to convey the Spirit into us; well may we hope, if we uſe them all three, we ſhall be in a good way to ſpeed of our deſires. For, many times we miſs, when we uſe, this one, or that one, alone; where it may well be, GOD hath appointed us to give it by neither, but by the third. It is not for us, to limit or appoint him, how, or by what way, He ſhall come unto us, and viſit us; but, to offer up our obedience, in uſing them all; and uſing them all, He will not fail but come unto us, either as a wind, to allay in us ſome unnatural heat of ſome diſtemper'd deſire in us to evil; or as a fire to kindle in us ſome luke-warm, or ſome key-cold affection in us to good: Come unto us, either as the Spirit of truth, lightning us with ſome new knowledge; or as the Spirit of holineſs, reviving in us ſome vertue or grace; or as the Comforter, miniſtring to us ſome inward contentment, or joy in the HOLY GHOST; or, in one or other certainly He will come. For, a compleat obedience on our part, in the uſe of all His preſcribed means, never did go away empty from Him, or without a bleſſing: Never did, nor never ſhall.

Never: but not on this day, of all dayes; the day, wherein Dona dedit hominibus, He gave gifts unto men. It is Dies donorum, His giving day, His day of Donatives: Some gift He will give, either from the wind, inward; or from the tongue, outward; ſome gift He will give.

There be nine of them ſet down, Nine manifeſtations of the Spirit (1 Cor. 12.) ſome of them nine. There be nine more ſet down, nine fruits of the Spirit (Gal. 5.) ſome of them nine: Some gift He will give.

1 Cor. 12. 8. Gal. 5. 22. Only let us diſpoſe our ſelves by the uſe, not of this one, or that one, or two, but of all the means, to receive it by. Inwardly, by unity, and patient waiting His leaſure, as theſe here: Outwardly, by frequenting thoſe holy duties, and offices, all which (we ſee) ſucceeded with thoſe there in the three places remembred.

And, in theſe, the bleſſed Spirit ſo diſpoſe us, and in them ſo bleſs us, as we may not only by outward celebration, but by inward participation, feel and find in our ſelves, that we have kept to Him, this day, a true Feaſt of the coming of His Spirit, of the ſending down the Holy Ghoſt: Which Almighty GOD grant, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE Kings Majesty,

AT GREENWICH,

On the XXIV. of May, A.D. MDCVII,

being WHIT-SUNDAY.

Acts Chap. II. Ver. IV.

Et repleti sunt omnes Spiritu Sancto, & cœperunt loqui variis linguis, prout Spiritus Sanctus dabat eloqui illis.

And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

THIS day hold we holy to the Holy Ghost, by whom all holy dayes, persons, and things are made holy. And with good reason, hold we it: He that maketh all holy dayes, it is meet should be allowed one; Himself. And if we yield this honour, to this and that Saint; much more to the Saint-maker; to Him, that is the only true Canonizer of all the Saints in the Calendar. 1

2. This honour were we bound to yield Him, if there were nothing besides: but, seldome shall ye find a Feast, wherein, with his honour, there is not joyned the remembrance of some memorable benefit then vouchsafed us; as (here) this Feast is not to the Holy Ghost simply; but, to the sending or coming of the Holy Ghost: to the Holy Ghost sent. 2

3. Sent: not, as in former times, qualified or by measure, but even in plenitudine, in plenteous manner, fully. In is said, They were filled with the Holy Ghost.

4. Filled: not to hold, but to set over. For, so many tongues, so many pipes to derive it to others, that, by preaching, they might impart the Spirit they received: preaching being nothing else (as the Fathers observe out of the 11. of Numb.) but the taking of the Spirit of the Preacher, and putting it on the hearer: or to express it by the type of fire) the lighting of one torch by another; that so, it might pass from man to man, till all were lightned. Num. 11. 25.

For

For this holy Spirit, thus ſent, plenteouſly ſent, ſent to them, and by them, to all and to us, are we here met to render our thanks to GOD: even to imitate Him; to ſend, this day, tongues into heaven, there to laud and magnifie Him, who as this day ſent theſe tongues into earth.

* At Penteco ſt A. D. 1606.

Now, of this benefit, (ſo far as the two types in the former verſes) * hath formerly been treated, and we are now to ſupply what was then left in remainder.

The Summe.

This fourth verſe then, is nothing elſe but a Commentary of the former; what in them was ſet forth in figure, is here expreſſed in plain terms. The types were of two ſorts, according to the two chief ſenſes; 1 Audible to the eare, in the ſound of winde; 2 Viſible to the eye, in the ſhew of tongues. Theſe two are expounded in the two moities of this Verſe. The former, the Commentary of the wind, in theſe words: They were filled with the holy Ghoſt. The latter, the gloſs of the tongues, in theſe: And they began to ſpeak with tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

The Diviſion.
2.

For the firſt. The place was filled with a winde from heaven. The filling of the place was a ſign of the filling the perſons in the place; the winde was a ſign of the Spirit; the wind from heaven, of the holy Spirit: which Spirit filled the Perſons, no leſs than did the winde the room they ſate in. Two points there be in it: 1 One of the Gift it ſelf, in Spiritu ſancto. 2 The other of the meaſure of the gift, in Repleti ſunt.

I. 2. 3. 4.

For the latter: four things were in the type, 1 Tongues, 2 cloven, 3 ſitting, 4 of fire; all four here expreſſed, and ſuited. 1 Tongues: they began to ſpeak. 2 Cloven: with other tongues. 3 Sitting: as the Spirit gave them. 4 Fire: ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, (utterance, it is turned; it is more.) Theſe are the Heads. But, for that there is no ſpeaking of the Spirit, without the Spirit, no hearing neither; to the end that ſpeaking and hearing of Him, He may help our infirmities, &c.

I. The Commentary of the Winde.

THe truth anſwering the type, per omnia, as there were in that, two; 1 the Wind, and 2 Tongues: ſo are there here, two; 1 the Spirit, 2 and ſpeech. Spirit, becauſe ſpeech without ſpirit, is but a dead ſound like the * tinckling of a Cymball: Speech; becauſe ſpirit without ſpeech, is but as the Spirit that CHRIST caſt forth, [b] and illud erat mutum, a dumb ſpirit; none the better for it. Which made the HOLY GHOST come in ſpirit and ſpeech: not in ſpirit only, but, in ſpirit, and ſpeech.

Of both parts joyntly. Spirit and ſpeech both.

b Luke 11. 14.

But in ſpirit firſt, and then ſpeech. So is the order. The HOLY GHOST begins within, a centro, and worketh outward: alters the minde, before it change the ſpeech: giveth another heart, before another tongue: works on the ſpirit, before on the phraſe or utterance: ever, ſo. It is preposterous, and all out of order, to have the tongues come, before the wind; where they do, it commonly falls out in ſuch, all their Religion is in common phraſes and terms well got by heart, and nothing elſe. This for their joyning, and for their order.

But Spirit firſt in order.

I. Of the parts ſeverally.

Now of either, apart. Of the ſpirit firſt, which they were filled with; After, of their filling; that is, 1 firſt of the Gift it ſelf; 2 then of the Meaſure. That, they were filled with, is ſet down in two words; 1 ſpiritu and 2 ſancto. Firſt, that it was ſpirit; then, that that ſpirit was holy. A ſpirit; for, men may be filled, and not with the ſpirit: Holy, for, there is a ſpiritu without ſancto. We muſt needs put the difference; ſpirit and holy, are the two diverſe things.

I. The Gift.

1 It was a Spirit.

With the ſpirit: for men may be filled, and not with the Spirit. That which enforceth this note, is, a ſpeech at the 13. verſe, there they ſtick not (ſome,) this, that was the ſpirit indeed, to reproach with the term of new wine. Theſe men are full, (ſay they,) full, they grant: but, with wine, a liquor though full of ſpirit, yet no ſpirit though. It was falſe as it fell out: yet, this it worketh, that if the ſpirit may be taken for a humour, why not a humour for the Spirit likewiſe? And not the humour of the vine only: but, the Philoſopher (in his Problemes) tells us, that look whatſoever operation wine hath, the ſame have ſome humours in our bodies, with a little fermenting. The Prophet Eſay ſeemeth to ſay the ſame in two places: that men may be drunk, and not with wine; their own humour will do it as well.

A ſpirit, not An humour.

Eſay 29. 9, 51, 52.

I wiſh, it were not true, this: that humours were not ſometimes miſtaken, and miſ-termed the ſpirit. A hot humour flowing from the gall, taken for this fire here, and termed (though untruly) the ſpirit of zeale. Another windy humour proceeding from the ſpleene, ſuppoſed to be this winde here, and they that filled with it (if no body will give it them) taking to themſelves the ſtyle of the godly brethren. I wiſh, it were not needful, to make this obſervation. But, you ſhall eaſily know it, for an humour: Non continetur termino ſuo; Its own limits will not hold it: They are ever mending Churches, States, Superiors; mending all, ſave themſelves: alieno, non ſuo, is the note to diſtinguiſh an humour.

2 The Holy Spirit. Not our Own ſpirit.

With the Spirit; yet, not every ſpirit. I told you, there was a ſpiritu without ſancto; and I mean not the wicked ſpirit (away with him, we will not once mention him;) but, two other: 1 There is a ſpirit in a man (ſaith [a] Elihu) that is, our own ſpirit; and many there be, [b] qui ſequuntur ſpiritum ſuum, that follow their own ghoſt, inſtead of the Holy Ghoſt: for, even that ghoſt taketh upon it, to inſpire, [c] and fleſh and blood (we know) have their Revelations.

a Job 32. 8.
b Ezek. 13. 13.
c Mat. 16. 2.

The other is, that the Apoſtle calleth [d] ſpiritum mundi, the worlds ſpirit (or worldly ſpirit) [e] qui poſuit mundum in corde ſuo (ſaith Solomon) hath ſet up and ſhrin'd the world in his heart: thence

2 Not the world's ſpirit.

d 1 Cor. 2. 12.
e Eccl. 3. 11.

thence riſe all his reaſons, by them he frames and meaſures Religion. Up ſhall the golden calves, to uphold the preſent eſtate: down ſhall Chriſt, [f] ne veniant Romani, that the Romans come not, and carry us all away. Either of theſe is peradventure Sæcr ſpiritus, as the Poet calleth auri ſacra fames; but neither is ſanctus. [g] S. Peter oppoſeth the firſt (of private Reſolution) to the Holy Ghoſt: [h] S. Paul the ſecond (of worldly wiſdome) to the ſpirit of GOD. The winde (before) had four qualities: two of them (1 ſuddenneſs, and 2 vehemency) are paſſed by. Every winde, every ſpirit hath them. And commonly, other ſpirits are more violent, and make a greater noiſe, than the true ſpirit. The other two, 1 of coming from heaven, 2 coming for the Church; from the holy Heaven, to the holy Church; are both, in ſancto, and ſapere quæ ſurſum; being wiſe from thence, and regard to Religion and the Church; are the two beſt Characters to diſcern the Holy Spirit by.

Now ye will underſtand of your ſelves (I ſhall not need to tell you;) when we ſpeak of the holy ſpirit, as it filleth us, we mean not the Eſſence or Perſon of the Holy Ghoſt that filleth heaven and earth (ſaith the Prophet;) and there is no going from it, (ſaith the Pſalmiſt:) but only certain impreſſions of the ſpirit. The Pſalmiſt calleth them Gifts (Pſal. LXVIII. XVIII.) The Apoſtle, Graces (I Cor. XII. VII.) which carry the name of their Cauſe: ſo that (in the Dialect or Idiom of the Scriptures) to be filled with them, is to be filled with the Spirit. To ſhew this, otherwhile they be joyned: the ſpirit and power of Elias (that is) the power of the ſpirit; the Wiſdome and ſpirit of STEPHEN, (that is) the wiſdom of the ſpirit.

The holy Spirit, that is, His Graces.
Jer. 23. 24. Pſa. 139. 7.
Luk. 1. 17. Act. 6. 10.

And, becauſe theſe Gifts and Graces be of many points (more points of this Wind than there be of the Compaſs) and as it were many ſpirits in one, ſix, (ſaith [a] Eſay) ſeven, (ſaith [b] Saint John:) they are all recapitulate under theſe two. 1. Under the wind is repreſented the ſaving grace, which all are to have (ſo to ſerve GOD, that they may pleaſe Him;) as neceſſary to all; and without which, we can be no more, in our ſpiritual life, than we can, without our breath, in our natural. This is general to all. It is ſaid repleti ſunt omnes: the hearer muſt have it, as well as the ſpeaker. It muſt aire and dry up the ſuperfluity of our nature; elſe, the fire will not kindle in us, but turn all to ſmoak. Of this Spirit are thoſe nine points (Gal. 5. 22.) 2. The other, (repreſented in the Tongues,) ſet forth unto us another kind of Grace, principally meant and ſent for the benefit of others: given therefore in Tongues, which ſerve to teach; and in fire, which ſerveth to warm others: to ſhew they are given and received, for the good of others, rather than of themſelves. And of this Spirit are the points reckoned up, (1 Cor. 12. 7.)

Gal. 2. 22.

And now we know, what it was they were filled with, let us come to the meaſure, Repleti ſunt. It was not ſpiritus tranſiens, but implens: a wind, not that blew thorow them, (as it doth thorow many of us, I know not how oft) but, that filled them: they were the fuller for it. Which word [of filling] wanteth not his ſpecial force: refer we it to their eſtate now, compared with what it was before, Repleti ſunt; or to their eſtate in this point, compared with other ſince, and namely with our ſelves, Repleti ſunt illi.

1 Repleti ſunt compared with their former eſtate.

With their own eſtate firſt. For, there is no queſtion, they were not empty or void of the ſpirit, before this coming. They had not been baptized by CHRIST; He had not breathed on them, and bid them receive the HOLY GHOST, in vain: If, before this, they had dyed, none would have doubted of the eſtate of their ſouls. This filling then (firſt) ſheweth us, there be divers meaſures of the Spirit: ſome ſingle, ſome double portions, as appeareth by ELISHA's petition: not all of one ſize or ſcantling. That, as there are degrees in the wind, Aura, ventus, procella; a breath, a blaſt, a ſtiffe gale: ſo are there in the Spirit. One thing; to receive the ſpirit, as on Eaſter-day; another, as on Whit-Sunday. Then, but a breath: now, a mighty winde: then, but received it; now, filled with it. Sprinkled before, as with a few drops, Ezekiels ſtillabo ſpiritum; but, now comes Joels Effundam ſpiritum (which very Text is alledged at the XXVIII. Verſe after by Saint Peter) poured out plenteouſly, and they baptized (that is) plunged in it. Imbuti ſpiritu, covered with ſome part of it; ſo were they before: here now, they be induti ſpiritu, cloathed all over with power from above, as CHRIST promiſed (Luke XXIV. XLIX.) To conclude: the HOLY GHOST came here (ſaith Leo) cumulans, non inchoans; nec novus opere, ſed dives largitate: rather by way of augmenting the old, than beginning a new. Though (to ſay the truth) both ways He came here. The rule of the Father is (Hierome and Cyril have it) Where the HOLY GHOST was before, and is ſaid to come again, it is to be underſtood, one of theſe ways: 1 Either of an increaſe of the former, which before was had; 2 or of ſome new not had before, but ſent now for ſome new effect. Breath they had before: breath and winde are both of one kind: differ only ſecundùm magis & minus: to be filled is but to receive only in a greater meaſure: therefore greater, becauſe their work was now greater. Before but to the loſt ſheep of Iſrael: now to all the ſtray ſheep in all the mountains of the whole earth.

Joh. 20. 22.
Ezek. 20. 46.
Joel 2. 28.

Mat. 10. 6.
Joh. 16. 16.

But, beſide that increaſe, here is a new form too. Which is a ſign of a new gift, utterly wanting in them before, and wherewith now, and never till now, they were furniſhed, to ſpeak to all Nations, of all tongues under heaven. Thus far, compared with themſelves.

Now, repleti ſunt illi. Illi, with reference to others ſince, and (if you will) to our ſelves. They, in the ſucceeding ages, and we, to this day, receive the ſpirit too, or elſe it is wrong with us. But, both they before us, ſhort of the Apoſtles; and we ſhort of them, by much. It fareth herein,

2 Repleti ſunt illi, with reference to others

Psa.133.2. as it doth in the pouring forth of an ointment, (the Psalme so likeneth it:) No ointment at the skirts, or edges of a garment, doth run so fresh, and full, as on the head, and beard; where it was first shed: ever, the further it goeth, the thinner and thinner the streams be. Therefore it is said, Repleti sunt illi; and even illi wants not his force, they were filled, they. We, but a Hin, to their Epha; but an handful, to their heap; but a ramisme, to their Baptisme. They filled: had as much, as they could hold: We have our measure, such as it is; but full we are not. None of us so full, but we could hold more.

1 Reason. Psal.68.18. Eph.4.8. And, two reasons there are rendred: 1 One, such a Pentecost, as this, never was but this; never the like before, nor since. It was CHRIST'S Coronation day, the day of placing him in his Throne, when He gave these gifts unto men. That day, all magnificence was shewed, the like not to be looked for ever after.

2 Reason. Then again, to say truth, our task-work is not so great, that we need require such a filling. We have to deal with but a handful of men, in comparison; and those brought up in Religion, and (as it were) broken to our hands. They, with the fulness of the Gentiles, all mankind; wild as then, and enraged; filled full of malice against them; and their doctrine by the evil spirit: that they needed the good spirit, to fill, to encounter such opposition. The case (you see) differs much. It was happy for the World, they had this overflowing fulness of the spirit. It is enough for us, we have the measure spoken of, 2 Cor, 12. 9. Sufficit tibi gratia, grace sufficient for us: and let that content us. And thus much for the commentary of the wind. Now, to the gloss of the tongues.

The gloss of the tongues. And they spake. *Psa 39.3. They were filled; and, in sign they were filled, it is added, they ranne over. The * fire was kindled in them, by this winde; and in sign thereof, they speak with their tongue. Indeed, pity they should be thus full, and have no means to vent it: have a spirit to fill, and not a tongue to empty, or impart it. Therefore, the tongues were requisite. The winde would have served them, if they had been to be Christians only: But, they were to be Apostles (that is, Ambassadours) and such must have tongues, needs. But, two imperfections were in their tongues: 1 They were but single: He cleft them, and made them able to deal with many. 2 Their tongues were wateriſh and weak: He gave them the force and operation of fire; to kindle such a light, as should burn to the worlds end. In a word: where they knew neither how, nor what to speak, He gave them both: both sicut, how; and ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, what: He gave them both, and so made them perfect Apostles. These four, 1 courage, 2 language, 3 discretion, and 4 learning.

The dependance of Repleti, and locuti their skill. First, a word of the dependance of Repleti, and locuti: They were filled, and then they began to speak. It is well they began not before; but were filled first, and then spake after. This, is the right order. Somewhere, some fall a speaking, I will not say before they be full, or half-full; but while they be little better than empty, if not empty quite. There, is not repleti sunt, & cœperunt loqui: cœperunt loqui begins the verse with them; Repleti sunt is skipped over. Ever, emptying presupposeth filling: Repleti hath reference to the cisterne; Locuti to the cock. The cisterne would be first looked to, that it have water store, before we be too busie, to ply the cock. Else, follow we not the Holy Ghost's method: Else, it may be cœperunt loqui, but not sicut dedit spiritus: He giveth leave to none, to speak empty.

It is but a Grammer note (that of Hieromes) but it is to the purpose, upon the word quem docebo scientiam (Esay 28.) that doceo, if it have his right, would have a double Accusative: not only quem, whom (that is) an auditory; but scientiam, what (that is) knowledge. So as, he that hath not scientiam, should not have quem; and they that get themselves whom to teach, and have not scientiam, what to teach, go they never so oft into the Pulpit, it is not sicut dedit Spiritus; the HOLY GHOST gave them neither Mission nor Commission. He ever taketh order for repleti, before He giveth licence for cœperunt loqui.

1 Cœperunt loqui. Their courage. And this for their skill. But, he that reads the Fathers Writings, shall find they refer this cœperunt loqui, no less to their boldness, than to their hability: began, not only, posse, to be able, in respect of their skill, but audere, to dare, in regard of their courage. Before, neither courage, nor skill; now, both: that any man might see, there was a new spirit come into them. In saying [they began] it is, as if before they had been tongue-tyed; had never spoken. No more they had: never as they spoke now; never, with that confidence. Before, they did not speak out, they durst Mat.26.69. not; they spake between the teeth, hoarsly, as if they had lost their voice. A poor Damosel did but ask St. Peter a question, he faultered presently, could not speak a right word. Every thing, then, took away their voice. But, after this mighty Wind, had filled them and blowen up the fire, and they warmed with it; then (saith Augustine) In omni prætorio, in omni Consistorio, in every Judgement-place, in every Consistory, then, they spake what they had heard and seen, even before Kings, and were not abashed. It confirmed them; it gave them sides, and strength. Which so sudden change, from so great pusillanimity, to so great courage and constancy, was sure Psa.77.10. mutatio dexteræ Excelsi, a change wrought by the hand of the most High. No other hand could work it.

2 Linguis, &c. Their language. And (that we may know, that not only the tongues wrought in them, but even the cleaving also had his effect, they began, not only to speak; but, with other tongues: other, than ever they had learn-learned. For, look what tongue ſoever it was, beſide the Syriack, it was another tongue, it was not theirs: they had but one till now; any other they could not skill of. But now, on a ſudden, Greek, Latine, Arabick, Perſian, Parthian, none came amiſs: yet, never were they taught them; but came to them, as it were with a cleft only. A great miracle, in it ſelf: And a great inabling to them. For, by this means, every Apoſtle, look how many tongues he would ſpeak, ſo many Apoſtles was he, as ſerving for ſo many ſundry men, as muſt elſe have been uſed for the ſpeaking ſo many ſundry tongues, to ſo many ſundry Nations. Whereby, as the line of the Creator is ſaid to have gone in to all Lands, (Pſalm 19. 4.) ſo is the ſound of the Apoſtles ſaid likewiſe to have gone as far (Rom. 10.) The one, to proclaim the creation; the other, the redemption of the world. And ſo, by ſpeaking all tongues, they have gathered a Church, that ſpeaketh all tongues; a thing much tending to the glory of GOD. For, being now converted to CHRIST, they ſend up daily to Heaven, ſo many tongues; there to praiſe His name: as He, this day, ſent down to earth, to convert them withall to His truth. And indeed, it was not meet, one tongue only ſhould be imployed that way, as (before) but one was: It was too poor and ſlender; like the muſick of a monochord. Far more meet was it, that many tongues; yea, that all tongues ſhould do it; which (as a conſort of many inſtruments) might yield a full harmony. In which, we behold the mighty work of GOD: that the ſame means of divers tongues, which was the deſtroying of Babel, the very ſame is here made to work the building of Sion: that means, that ſcattered them, from the Tower of Confuſion; the very ſame, to reduce them, to the fold of unity: that ſo, the curſe might be taken away, and a bleſſing come in place, the confuſed tongues being united into GOD's glory; and there being neither ſpeech nor language; but His praiſe is heard among them. The Nations being once converted to the faith (moſt of them) this gift is ceaſed: ceaſed ſo far, as by immediate inſpiration: though, in part to attain it, by our endeavours, and GOD's bleſſing upon them, is found ſtill of good uſe. For, even to this day, it is holden for requiſite, there be one cleft (at leaſt) in the tongue; and we able to ſpeak one tongue more, than our mothers taught us. Better yet, if the cleft, which GOD hath made in His Word; in the tongues of the Old and New Teſtament, be it in our tongues too. That hath ſtill a neceſſary ſervice; and maimed are we, without it: For, we muſt (elſe) receive the embaſſage from GOD, by an Interpreter, which is not ſo convenient. But, enough of the cleft of the tongues.

Gen. 11. 7.

Now, that this might not prove to vain-glory (as it did after, in ſome at Corinth) it is well added, Sicut dedit Spiritus, which is the third:) that they began to ſpeak, not, as their own vanity carried them, but as the HOLY GHOST directeth them. Their tongue was but the pen; He, the Writer. His wind blew the fire, ſtaked it, and made it more or leſs, as need was. The tongues ſate on them, and He in the tongues, holding (as it were) the reins in His hand; guiding and moderating their ſpeech; making them keep time, meaſure, and manner: time, when; meaſure, how much; manner, how to ſpeak. Which ſicut is the gift of diſcretion; many times as much worth as dedit, the Gift it ſelf. Sure, theſe are two: 1 Dedit is one thing, the Gift; 2 Sicut another, the uſe of the gift. To many is given to ſpeak, but not with the right Sicut. Two diſtinct things be they: and howſoever we do with the one, we ſhall find a needful uſe of prayer to obtain the other. We may begin to ſpeak when we pleaſe: but, who ſhall give us our Sicut? Sure, none but the Spirit: Of Him we muſt receive this, or elſe we ſhall never have. Let that ſuffice.

3. Their diſcretion. Sicut dedit ſpiritus.

Laſt then, that we miſtake not, what it was He gave them to ſpeak; (for, all this while, it is not ſaid, what.) That they began to ſpeak is ſaid; and wherewith, with other tongues; and how, as the Spirit gave them utterance. Leſt therefore we might miſtake, it was quicquid in buccam, any thing that took them in the head, it skilled not what: he tells us, what it was, in the laſt word; that He give them ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, Utterance, we read; it is of larger contents, a more pregnant word, and more full of ſignificancy.

4. Their learning: As the Spirit gave them utterance.

They began to ſpeak as the Spirit gave them. Why not there ſtay, what needed any more? Yes: more (it ſeems) needed; there goeth more unto it, than ſo; Speaking will not ſerve the turn: elſe, λαλῆσαι had been enough, and not any word more put to it. He foreſaw, that to ſpeak, and only to ſpeak, would be enough for ſome. So we go up for an hour and ſpeak, be it to the purpoſe or no, it is all one. For the common man it skills not, it contents him well enough: But, the HOLY GHOST is not content with λαλῆσαι: It is not every ſpeaking; but, a kind of ſpeaking it muſt be, and that kind is ἀποφθέγγεσθαι.

The Word, I wiſh well weighed. Chryſoſtome, Oecumenius, the Interpreters (all) weigh it, and aſſure us, it is no ſlight, or light word, but verbum talenti, a word of weight, of a talent weight. To tell you, what it was: You have heard of Apophthegmes; (So do both Greeks, and Latines, call wiſe and weighty ſententious ſpeeches:) that word [Apophthegmes] is the true and proper derivative, of this ἀποφθέγγεσθαι here. Such the Spirit gave them to utter. Not the crudities of their own brain, idle, looſe, undigeſted geer (GOD knoweth:) No, but pithy and wiſe ſentences: thoſe be ſicut dedit Spiritus, ſuch as the HOLY GHOST gave them. It is after ſaid in (the 11. verſe) that by vertue of this, when they ſpoke, they ſpoke Magnalia: Magnalia, great and high points, not Trivialia, baſe and vulgar ſtuffe, not worth the time it waſteth, and keeth from the hearer. Yet now, all is quite turned: and we are come to this, that this kind of ſpeaking, is only from the Spirit of GOD: and the other (ſaid here to be given by the HOLY GHOST) is ſtudy or affectation, or I wot not what; but, Spiritus non dedit, that is certain.

Tit. 1. 9. 1 Pet. 4. 11. Eſay 6. 7. 50. 4. Well, Saint Luke ſaith ἀποφθέγγεται is that, the Spirit giveth. So ſaith Saint Paul, λόγῳ καὶ διδαχῇ, Speech according to learning: ſo Saint Peter, ſuch ſpeech as may ſeem or beſeem the very oracles of GOD: as may work light in the underſtanding, or fervour in the affection: thoſe two ſhew it fire. The fire of the Old Teſtament, the burning coale wherewith the Seraphim touched Eſay's mouth, and gave him (as he ſaith) linguam eruditam, a learned tongue; not only a tongue, but a learned tongue. As the fire of the Old; ſo, of the New. So (I am ſure) wes our SAVIOURS promiſe, Dabo vobis os & ſapientiam, He would give them a mouth and wiſdome. Luk 21. 15. Not a mouth only, but, a mouth and wiſdome. Put theſe two together, 1 a mouth and wiſdome, 2 and a learned tongue, and you know, what is ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, and you know what is meant by a tongue of fire. For, fire cannot ſpeak chaff, it conſumes it (we ſee;) therefore, if it be chaff, it is no fiery tongue that ſpeaks it.

And where it is required, that not only the tongue have this fire, but that it ſit and bide by us; ſure it is, that volubility of utterance, earneſtneſs of action, ſtraining the voice in a paſſionate delivery, Phraſes and Figures, theſe all have their heat, but they be but blazes. It is the evidence of the Spirit, in the ſoundneſs of the ſenſe, that leaves the true impreſſion: that, is the tongue, that will ſit by us; that, the fire, that will keep ſtill alive. The reſt comes in paſſion; move for the preſent, make us a little ſermon-warme for the while; but, after, they flit and vaniſh, and go their way, Eccleſ. 12. 11. true mark leave they none. It is only verba ſapientum clavi (ſaith the Wiſe-man) the wiſdome of the ſpeech, that is the naile, the naile red-hot, that leaveth a mark behind, that will never be got out. Enough (I truſt) to ſerve them that do λαλεῖν, as their own ſpirit; from them that do ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, as the ſpirit of GOD giveth them: and to ſtop their mouths for ever, that call it not ſpeaking by the Spirit, unleſs never a wiſe word be ſpoken. So have we the Gloſs of the tongues: 1 The tongues themſelves in cœperunt loqui: 2 Cloven, in linguis aliis: 3 Sitting, in the Spirits ſicut: 4 Fire, in ἀποφθέγγεσθαι: the truth anſwering the type, in every point: ſhewing us, what was in them; and what they ſhould be that hold their places: able to ſpeak more tongues than one; to ſpeak diſcreetly, and to ſpeak learnedly.

The Application. And now, to draw to an end. Let us return to our Pentecoſt-duty, to glorifie GOD, for the HOLY GHOST thus ſent, theſe two ways: 1 As the Spirit (within) filling; 2 As the tongues (without) uttering. The tongues, they are a peculiar to one kind of men, though all now invade them, and talk even too much. Of them firſt. Where the Apoſtle expoundeth that of the Pſalme Going up on high, He gave gifts unto men; he tells us what thoſe Gifts were: He gave ſome Eph. 4. 8, 11. 12, 13. Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Evangeliſts: and he ſtays not there, but tells us, that part of that Gift were Paſtors, and Teachers, whereof there were none at CHRISTS Aſcenſion, but they were ordained after, for the ſucceeding ages. Intending (as it ſeemeth) a part of our Pentecoſtal duty ſhould be, not only to give thanks for them, He firſt ſent, on the very day; but even for thoſe, He ſent ever ſince; and for thoſe, He ſtill ſendeth, even in theſe days of ours. To thank Him, for the Apoſtles; thank Him for the ancient Doctors, and Fathers; thank Him for thoſe we have, if we have any ſo much worth. And are theſe the Gifts, which CHRIST ſent from on high? was St. Paul well adviſed? Muſt we keep our Pentecoſt in thankſgiving for theſe? Are they Zach. 11. 12. worth ſo much, trow? we would be loth to have the Prophets way taken with us (Zach. 11,) that it ſhould be ſaid to us, as there it is: If you ſo reckon of them indeed, let us ſee the wages you value them at; and when we ſhall ſee, it is but eight pound a yeare; and having once ſo much, never to be capable of more; may not then the Prophets ſpeech there well be taken up: A goodly price theſe high Gifts are valued at by you! And may not He juſtly (inſtead of Zachary, and ſuch as he is) ſend us a ſort of fooliſh ſhepheards; and ſend us this ſenſeleſſeneſs withall, that, ſpeak they never ſo fondly, ſo they ſpeak, all is well; it ſhall ſerve our turn as well as the beſt of them all? Sure, if this be a part of our duty, this day, to praiſe GOD for them, it is to be a part of our care too, they may be ſuch, as we may juſtly praiſe GOD for: Which, whether we ſhall be likely to effect, by ſome courſes as of late have been offered, that leave I to the weighing of your wiſe conſiderations.

But leaving this, which is peculiar but to ſome, let us return to the HOLY SPIRIT common to all, and how to be filled with it. A point which importeth every one of us: this day eſpecially; when firſt, certain it is, we are not to content our ſelves (as Bernard well ſaith) quibuſvis anguſtiis, with every ſmall beginning, and there to ſtick ſtill; to think, if we have never ſo ſmall a breath of it, and that but once in all our life, that, that is enough; we may ſit us down ſecurely, and take no more thought, but rely upon that, for that will do it: but to aſpire ſtill, as we may, nearer and nearer, to this meaſure here; and know, that repleti ſunt was not ſaid for nothing. Which how to do, we may take ſome light from the Text. The two types, He came in, being bodily, ſerve to teach us, we are not to ſeek after means meerly ſpiritual, for attaining it: but truſt, as here He viſited theſe, ſo will He us, and that per ſigna corporea (ſaith Chryſoſtome.) For had we been ſpirit, and nothing elſe, GOD could and would immediately have inſpired us that way: but conſiſting of bodies alſo (as we do) it hath ſeemed to His Wiſdome moſt agreeable, to make bodily ſignes, the means of conveying the graces of His Spirit into us. And that, now the rather, ever ſince the Holy One Himſelf and Fountain of all holineſs (CHRIST, the Son of GOD) partaketh of both Body and Spirit; is both Word and fleſh. Thus it is: that, by the Word we are ſanctified; & per lingvam verbi patrem (ſaith Chryſoſtome) even by thoſe tongues here, John 17. 17. But no leſs; by His fleſh and body, Heb. 10. 10. And indeed, this beſt anſwereth the term filling; which is proper to food; & Spiritus eſt ultimum alimenti, the uttermoſt perfection of nouriſhment. In which reſpect He inſtituted Eſcam ſpiritualem, ſpiritual food; to that end ſo called ſpiritual, not ſo much for that it is received ſpiritually; as for that, being ſo received, it maketh us, together with it, to receive the Spirit, even potare Spiritum (it is the Apoſtles own word.)

Spirit

1 Tim. 4. 4.
1 Cor. 10 3.
Joh. 6. 63.
1 Cor. 12. 13.

In a word: our Pentecoſt is to be, as theſe types here were. They were for both ſenſes: 1 The eare, which is the ſenſe of the Word; 2 and the eye, which is the ſenſe of the Sacrament, viſibile verbum, ſo it is called. Meant thereby, that both theſe ſhould ever go together, as this day; and as the type was, ſo the truth ſhould be. And, for our example, we have themſelves and their practice in this very Chapter: who, on this Feaſt, joyned together the Word (at the 14.) and the breaking of bread (at the 42. verſe.) And ſo let us too: and truſt, that by filling up the meaſure of both types, we ſhall ſet our ſelves in a good way, to partake the fulfilling of His promiſe, which is, to be indued with power from above, as they were: at leaſt, in ſuch ſort, as He knoweth meet for us. Which Almighty GOD grant we may.

Preached before the

Kings Majesty,

At WHITEHALL,

On the XXVII. of May, A. D. MDCX.

being WHIT*SUNDAY*.

IOHN, Chap. XIV. Ver. XV, XVI.

Si diligitis Me, mandata mea servate,

Et ego rogabo Patrem, & alium Paracletum dabit vobis, ut maneat vobiscum in æternum.

If ye love Me, keep my Commandments,

And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever.

THEY are CHRISTS words to His Apostles, they touch the coming of the Holy Ghost; of whose coming this Text is a promise: A promise of a prayer to procure the Comforter sent them. Which Comforter, who it is, is told us, Ver. 26. the Comforter which is the Holy Ghost. Let this be said to the honour of it. An Angel served to annunciate Christs coming: No Angel would serve for this Annunciation; Christ Himself did it: thought not Himself too good to do it. A special high benefit therefore it is, we may be sure. And this Comforter (the Holy Ghost) was by the Father sent, and by them received; and so, the prayer heard, and the promise performed all as this day. Which day we yearly hold holy in thankful remembrance of the HOLY GHOST promised to be sent, and sent.

The Holy Ghost is the Alpha and Omega of all our Solemnities. In His coming down, all the Feasts begin; at His Annunciation, when he descended on the blessed Virgin: whereby the SON of GOD did take our nature, the nature of man. And, in the Holy Ghosts coming they end, even in 2 Pet. 1. 4. His descending this day upon the sons of men; whereby they actually become partakers θείας φύσεως, of His Nature, the Nature of GOD. Of which His last and great coming, in this Text is the promise, and at this time the performance: that, as promise and performance, so the Text and Time agree.

Every promise is glad tydings; but every promise is not Gospel: nor is it good to make a Text of it, while it is in suspence: But, when it is dixit & factum est, so said, and so done, then it is a Gospel, and may be preached on. Being then made good this day, the Church hath made it the Gospel of this day; it being Festum solutionis, the Feast whereon it was to be, and whereon it was paid.

This

This promise grew thus. They were to be deprived of CHRIST's presence: He to be gone. They were troubled with: troubled at the very heart. In that state, they needed comfort. A Comforter He promiseth them. His promise is in manner of a Deed; not absolute, but as it were with Articles on both parts per modum Syngraphæ. A Covenant on His part; A condition on theirs. He covenants two things: the one supposed, love: If ye love me. The other imposed, Then keep my Commandments. These two on their part well and truly performed and kept, He stands bound to pray, and praying to procure them a Comforter, another in His stead: And, that they might not be every other while to seek for a new, one that should not leave them, as He did, but abide with them for ever.

Many are the benefits that come to us by the Holy Ghost; and so, His titles many: He is here expressed in the title of a Comforter. Comfort never comes amiss: but it is most welcome to men in their estate (here) troubled in mind. It may be, our estate is not yet, as theirs was; and we have our terrenas consolatiuncul as, which yet serve our turn well enough. But, there is none of us, but the day will come, when we shall need Him and His comfort. It will be good to look after Him: and the sooner, the better. He came here (we see) before the third houre of the day, that is, nine in the Morning: let us not put Him off, till nine at Night. It will be too late, to seek for our oyle, when the Bridegroom is coming. Acts 2. 15. Matth. 25. 1.

Those Articles were here drawn, for them: but, he that liketh the same conditions, may have title to the same Covenant to the Worlds end. For, to the Worlds end, this Covenant here holdeth; and the Holy Ghost offered to be sent (though not in visible manner, as this day; it was meet, it should be, with some Solemnity at his first coming for the more credit, yet) sensibly to them that receive Him. No day excepted: yet, this day pleadeth a special interest.

It will then not be amiss, if we take instructions, what is required on both parts, so many as are desirous to be partakers of His heavenly comfort, which (I trust) is the desire of us all, that so with comfort we may celebrate this Festum Paracleti, this Feast of the Comforter.

Thus, they will rise to be treated of. 1. The condition first. 1 Their Love, 2 Their looking to His Commandments keeping. 2. Then the Covenant: 3 CHRISTS Intercession. 4 His Fathers giving: 5 Giving the Comforter: 6 Another Comforter. Where, both will come to be touched: but, His diversity. 7 At last His perpetuity, or abode with them for ever. The division. I. II.

THE Condition stands first, as first commended to our care. For of our part we had need have care: On His, we need not. And, let me say this of it: No condition could have been devised mor e proper and fit for this Feast: Both parts of it. I. The condition.

First, If you love me, Love; and this is Festum Charitatis, the Feast of Love; and He, whose the Feast is (the Holy Ghost) Love it self, the essential Love and Love-knot of the two persons of the God-head, Father and Son. The same the Love-knot between God and Man; and yet more specially between CHRIST and His Church. Properly, as Faith referreth to Christ the Word; So doth Love, to the Spirit, and comfort to love. It is the Apostle: Si quod solatium Charitatis, If there be any comfort, it is in love. What condition could be more fit? 1. Their Love. Phil. 2. 1.

And the second is like to it; as fit every way: Keep my Commandments. For ye shall read in Exodus, that, at this Feast of Pentecost, the Commandments were given. The very Feast it self institute, in remembrance of the Law then given: then very meet they be remembred of them at this Feast. And the Holy Ghost sent, inter alia, that they may be written not in stone, but in their hearts; not with the letter, but, with the Spirit: and the Spirit not of fear, but love; as, by whom the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts. Which love is the fulfilling of the Commandments, and they all abridged in this one word Diliges. So, whether we regard the Feast, or the Person, or the Office of Him to whom we hold the Feast, the Condition is well chosen. Rom. 31. 10.

To begin then with the first: If ye love me. Love is not so fit here, as If is unfitting. For, If, is as if there were some if, some doubt in the matter, whereof GOD forbid there should be any. It would be without if. Thus rather: Forasmuch as you love Me, Keep my, &c. That they and we love Him, I trust shall not need to be put in Hypothesi — Et erat tum dignus amari: seeing He is so well worthy of our love, that we too blame, if we endure any if, any question to be made of it. I. Love.

It grieveth me to stand long in this condition; to make an If of it, at Pentecost. Take the Feasts all along, and see, if by every one of them, it be not put past If. Christmas-day; for us, and for our love, He became flesh, that we might love Him, because, like us He took our nature on Him. New-years-day; knowing no sin, He was made sin for us; sealed the Bond with the first drops of His blood; wherewith the debt of our sin light upon Him. Candlemas-day; He was presented in the Temple, offered as a live Oblation for us, that so the obedience of His whole life might be ours. Good-friday, made a slain Sacrifice on the Cross that we might be redeemed by the benefit of His death. Easter-day; John 1. 14. 2 Cor. 5. 21. Luk. 2. 22.

1 Cor. 15. 20. Heb. 6. 20. day; opened us the Gate of Life, as the first-fruits of them that rise again. Ascension-day; opened us the Gate of Heaven; thither, as our Fore-runner entered, to prepare a place for us. And this day seals up all by giving us seisin of all that He hath done for us, by his Spirit sent down upon Earth. And after all this, come ye in with If ye love Me? Shall we not out with Si, strike out (If) and make the condition absolute? Shall we not to St. Pauls If, If any man love not the LORD JESUS, let him be Anathema Maranatha, All say, Let him be so?

1 Cor. 16. 22.

Mat. 5. 46. If we love them that love us, what singular thing do we; since the very Publicani do the like? That, if our love be but as the Publicans, there would be no If made of it, for He loved us.

And not because we loved Him, but He loved us first. Et nulla major ad amorem provocatio quàm prævenire amando: Nimis enim durus est, qui amorem etsi nolebat impendere, nolit rependere. No more kindly attractive of love, than in loving to prevent: For, too hard mettal is he of, that though he like not to love first, will not requite it and love again, either first or second.

1 John 3. 1. John 15. 13. Specially, since His love was not little, but such as St. John makes an Ecce quantam Charitatem of, see how great love! How great? So, as none greater; For, greater love hath no man, than this, to give his life for his friends. No man greater, but He: For His was beyond. To give His life, is but to dye any sort of death; But Morte Crucis, to dye as He dyed, that is more. And, for such as were

Rom. 5. 10. His friends, is much: But, Cùm inimici essemus, is a great deal more. And yet is it If? Put it to the Esay 5. 4. Prophets question, Quid debuit facere? And add to it (if ye will) Quid debuit pati? What should He have done, and what suffered? If He did it not, if He suffered not, make an If of His love: but if He did both, out with it.

But the Publican will be the Publican, and the World the World: their love is mercenary sale Ware; si nihil attuleris, no profit, no love. To take away that If, even thither He will follow us, and apply Himself to that. And if we will make port-sale of our love, and let it go by who gives more; He will out-bid all. All, by the last word, In æternum. For, whatsoever we may have here, if it were a Kingdom, it is not for ever. But this Comforter that shall abide with us, is but a pledge of that Bliss and Kingdom of His wherein we shall abide with Him eternally. Let any offer more for our love, and carry it.

Verily, Bonum, si non amatur, non cognoscitur, said the Heathen; But more true of CHRIST, If we love Him not, we know Him not. If we did but know, what He is in Himself; what, to us: what He hath already done, what He is ready to do for us still, we would take it evil, a case should be put, and yield to it without more ado.

Why so we do: take it evil, an if is made: yield to it, we love Him all. Yet great reason there was, we shall see, CHRIST should so put it, being to infer the second. For, at that, there will be some sticking: which would not be, if we were not defective in this former; of love. If our love were not light, His Commandments would not be heavy. If love were as it should be, nothing is heavy to it; Amor erubescit nomen difficultatis, Love indures not the name of difficulty, but shames to confess any thing too hard for it. De internis affirmare tutum (saith the Heathen) It is safe affirming of any thing within us, where no man can convince us; for, none is privy to it but our selves. How many shall we hear say, I have ever affected, wished you well, born you good will, and never a word true? Forasmuch then, as there be two loves (saith St. John) one in word and tongue, and that is feigned;

1 John 4. 20. and another in deed and truth, and that is right: and that CHRIST conditioneth not, If ye say ye

James 2. 18. love me; but if ye love me indeed: We must come to St. James assay, Ostende mihi, Shew me thy Faith: and as well, shew me thy love, by some ostensive sign. So did CHRIST to us.

1 John 3. 1. Ecce quantam Charitatem ostendit! Behold how great love (not, He verbally protested, but) really shewed! and so, they to do the like; to shew it.

Why, thus they shew it: He is going away, and they be very sad for it: which sheweth, they love Him, and would keep him still. But, that may be a sign, they love themselves, in that they are to have some good by His stay with them.

2. Their keeping His Commandments. That may deceive you. But, will you have a sign infallible? Take this: His Commandments. His Word. He that keeps it, loves Him: true in the affirmative. He that keeps it not, loves Him not: true in the negative. This then is the second condition: If ye love Me (not, keep Me still; but) Keep My Commandments. Let your heart be troubled, not, if ye keep not Me; but, if you keep not them: Not, if not Me; Me, that is, My flesh: but, not Me; Me, that is, My Word, whereof the Commandments are an abstract. The Word is the better part of Me, better than My flesh: strive to keep that; be troubled, for not keeping that; and then, your love is past If, true indeed.

And is this the other part of the condition? This somewhat troubleth us: for who can do this, Keep the Commandments? as good condition with us, to flie or walk on the Sea. We are even as well able to do the one, as the other. So upon the matter, all this promise falls out to prove nothing: the Condition cannot be kept, and so the Covenant void. No HOLY GHOST, or Comforter to be hoped for, or had: we are but deluded.

Deluded! God forbid: CHRIST loves us too well, to delude us. He will never do it. A Melius inquirendum would be had, to look a little better into it, and not so lightly lose our interest in such a gift as the Holy Ghost. It stands us so in hand to get the condition made good: else we forfeit our estate in the promise.

If

If we be to be relieved, it is, by the word Mea; that they be His. And ſome alteration there is plainly in them, by Him, and His coming. It is not ſaid, for nought (and that, by way of oppoſition) that the Law came by Moſes, but grace came by Him, and grace for grace; that is, not only grace active which we receive, which relieveth us in the keeping them; but grace paſſive too, which we find with Him, which relieves in abating the rigour, when we are called to accompt about them. You ſhall find an alteration, in this very point. The Apoſtles would not preſs the Gentiles to be circumciſed: being circumciſed, St. Paul teſtifieth, they become debters, to keep the whole Law: A yoke (ſaith St. Peter) that neither they (the Apoſtles) nor their fathers were able to bear; it was ſo heavy. This, as they came by Moſes. But after CHRIST, with His grace, came; and His grace with Him; when they came to be His, Mandata Ejus (ſaith St. John) gravia non ſunt, they are not heavy. And Himſelf, that beſt knew the price of it, ſaith plainly of His yoke, that it is eaſie, and it were hard to gain-ſay Him. John 1. 17, 16. Gal. 5. 3. Acts 15. 10. 1 John 5. 3.

This qualifying then groweth two wayes: 1. One, that the Law, at the very giving it by Angels, was (ſaith St. Paul) ordinata in manu Mediatoris, ordained to be in the Mediatours hand (that is, CHRIST) whoſe hands are not ſo heavy, as Moſes were. 2. The other, that Pater omne judicium dedit Filio (ſaith Himſelf) His Father hath made Him Judge of the keeping or not keeping them. All judicial power and proceeding concerning them, is committed over to Him. Gal. 3. 19.

By the firſt, that they are ordained to be in His hand, He may take them into His hands when He will; and having them in His hands, order them and eaſe them as pleaſeth Him. Lex in manu Mediatoris, is it we muſt hold by. If a bruiſe in the Reed, Moſes would break it quite. If the flax ſmoak, and flame not out, he would quench it ſtrait. So will not He: His hand will not break the one: nor His foot tread on the other. To Mary Magdalen, He ordained, that fecit quod potuit ſhould ſerve, and he would require no more. Credo Domine, adjuva incredulitatem meam, I believe Lord, help my unbelief; a belief mixed with unbelief, would never have indured Moſes aſſay: In Manu Mediatoris, it did well enough. Thus He ordained; he that neither doth them, nor prepareth himſelf, Non fecit, neque præparavit (Luke 12.) he ſhall be puniſhed: But if he prepare, ſtir up himſelf, have a care, a reſpect unto them, that (it ſeemeth) in Manu Mediatoris, will be taken. That if there be (ſaith the Apoſtle) prompta voluntas, a ready will; a man ſhall be accepted according to that, he hath; and not according to that, he hath not. For, the Mediator is Man, and hath had experience of mans infirmities: He knoweth our metal and our mould, and what our condition will bear. He knoweth, there is that conflict in us, we cannot do what we would. And indeed, why ſhould concupiſcence to evil be reputed ſin, on the worſe part; and a like deſire (concupivi deſiderare mandata tua) not be as well reckoned, foraſmuch on the better part, though it be not full out according to the purification of the Sanctuary? Thus, as, in His Hands ordained. 2 Cor. 8. 12. Hebr. 4. 15. 5. 2. Pſal. 119 40.

Then again, as, in His Court, to be judged. For the Court may alter the matter much, as with us here it doth. Sedens in ſolio juſtitiæ (as, to ſome) in His Tribunal ſeat of ſtrict juſtice, there ſitting, ſentence will proceed otherwiſe, than Si adeamus Thronum gratiæ, if we have acceſs to Him in His Throne of grace, where we may obtain mercy and find grace. And St. James brings us good tydings, that Super-exaltat, &c. The Throne of grace is the Higher Court; and ſo an Appeal lieth thither, to whom He will admit. To cruel men (ſaith He) there ſhall be judgement without mercy: which ſheweth, judgment with mercy ſhall be to ſome other, to whom He will vouchſafe it. Hebr. 4. ult. James 2. 13.

And thus, it muſt ſtand upon Mea, and Manu Mediatoris, and the Throne of grace, or elſe, even thoſe here (the Apoſtles) it will go wrong with them, they will hardly be relieved in their claim of a Comforter. For, within twenty four houres and leſs, it came indeed to an If, their love: They loved Him not ſo well, but they loved their own ſafety better: fell away, and fled away, and denied Him; even he, that ſaid, he loved Him beſt. Mat. 26. 33, 69.

And what, kept they His Commandments? Sinned they not? In multis, omnes (ſaith Saint James) in many things, all: and if they ſhould ſay otherwiſe (ſaith Saint John) that they had no ſin (not, they were ſomewhat proud, and there were no humility, but) they were very lyars, and there were no truth in them. So that, keeping the Commandments, and having of ſin, muſt ſtand together, or elſe they kept them not. James 3. 2. 1 John 1. 8.

But, this they kept (and ſo may we too;) they were troubled, their hearts were troubled for not keeping them: and at the Throne of grace, that was accepted; and the not keeping not reckoned a breach of the Commandment, if we be troubled for it.

Again, (as, well ſaith Saint Auguſtine) Amongſt His Commandments this is one, which we muſt not fail duly to keep; and that is, the Commandment of daily praying Dimitte nobis, forgive us our not keeping, which helps all the reſt. We keep (Lord) help our not keeping, as well as I believe (Lord) help my unbelief. A true indeavour with an humble repentance (for ſo he reſolves) and then Omnia mandata facta deputantur, quando quod non fit ignoſcitur: All are accounted as kept, when what is not, is pardoned out of His mercy; and ſo the reſt rewarded out of His bounty, that alloweth a dayes wages for an houres work, as to them that came at the eleventh houre to the Vineyard, that is, at five of the Clock after-noon. Thus will it be with us in hope: Thus was it with them. For, the Covenant held, and the Prayer went forward, and the Comforter came notwithſtanding. Mark 9. 24. Mat. 20. 6.

II. The Covenant.

NOW to CHRISTS part. Rogabo Patrem & dabit: that CHRIST will pray, and his Father give.

give. And there is nothing more effectually ſheweth, they were ſhort in their Condition, than theſe two words, 1 Rogabo, and 2 Dabit. The Father ſhall give: It is His free gift, not due debt, upon deſert of the former. And Dabit roganti, give it to Chriſts prayer, rather for Rogation weeks ſake with Him, than for any work of Supererogation with them. But, it cometh from GODS bounty, and CHRISTS intreaty; without which, our love and commandment-keeping would not carry it: They are not ſufficient to weigh it down pondere meriti; it muſt come rogatu Chriſti, or not all. Then, not to lean on them: CHRIST it is, and His interceſſion, we take to. Not, you ſhall love, and keep my Commandments, and then My Father ſhall be bound; but, and then CHRIST ſhall pray, and the Father will give, if Chriſt pray; and not otherwiſe.

But, a doubt here ariſeth: May we love Chriſt, or keep His Commandments, before we have the Holy Ghoſt, without whom firſt had, it is certain, we can do neither? How ſhall we love Chriſt or keep His Commandments, that we may receive the Holy Ghoſt, when unleſs we firſt receive, we can neither love Him, nor keep them; nay not ſo much as ſay, Jeſus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt? Nay, not ſo much as think that, or any other thought that is good? How ſaith He then, Keep, and I will give, when He muſt give, or we cannot keep?

This ſcruple will ſoon be removed by Habenti dabitur. A promiſe may be made tam habenti, quàm non habenti, as well to him that hath a thing already, as to him that hath it not at all. To him that hath it already, in a lower or leſs; may be promiſed to have it in a more ample meaſure, or more high degree, than yet he hath: or to him, that hath it in one kind, that he may have it in ſome other. To all (ſave Chriſt) the Spirit is given in meaſure: Where there is meaſure, there are degrees: where there be degrees and more or leſs, the more may well be promiſed to him, that hath the leſs. To him that hath it in the degree of warm breath, it may well be promiſed in tongues of fire. To him that hath it as the firſt fruits, which is but an handful, it may well be promiſed as in the whole ſheaf, which filleth the boſome. But (that which is more agreeable to this Text here) we conſider the Spirit (as Saint Peter) multiformem, the Spirit, in his graces; or the graces of the Spirit, as of many kinds. Of many kinds; for, our wants and defects are many. Not to go out of the Chapter: In the very words, He is called the Spirit of truth: and that is one kind of grace, to cure us of Errour. In the 26. verſe after, the Spirit of holineſs, which is his common name, which ſerveth to reduce us from a moral honeſt life, to a holy, and wherein the power of Religion doth appear. And here he is termed the Comforter, and that is againſt heavineſs and trouble of mind. To him that hath Him as the Spirit of truth, which is one grace, He may be promiſed as the Spirit of holineſs, or comfort, which is another. It is well known, many partake him, as the Spirit of truth in knowledge, which may well be promiſed them (for ſure, yet they have Him not) as the Sanctifying Spirit. And both theſe wayes may be had of ſome, who yet are ſubject to the Apoſtles diſeaſe here, heavy and caſt down, and no chearful ſpirit within them. So, they were not clean deſtitute of the Spirit at his promiſe making, but had him; and ſo well might love Him, and in ſome ſort keep His Commandments, and yet remain capable of the promiſe of a Comforter for all that. So that CHRIST may proceed to His prayer, that His Father would ſend them the Comforter.

Mat. 13. 12. John 3. 34. 1 Pet. 4. 10.

3. Chriſts interceſſion.

Where we begin with matter of Faith. For, we have here the Article offered to us, and ſet down in the three Perſons, 1 Ego, 2 Ille, and 3 Alium: 1 I, 2 He, and 3 Another. 1 I will pray the Father, that is CHRIST the Son. 2 And He ſhall give it, that is, the Father, (His Perſon is named.) 3 Alium, another third Perſon beſides, that is, Paracletum, the HOLY GHOST. 1 One praying; 2 the other prayed to; 3 the third prayed for. 1 Filius orans; 2 Pater donans; 3 Spiritus conſolans. The Son praying; the Father granting; the Spirit comforting: A plain diſtinction.

And CHRISTS prayer ſets us to ſeek His other nature. For here He intreats, as inferiour to His Father, in ſtate of Man: but (in the twenty ſixth verſe) as equal to His Father, in the nature of GOD, joyns in giving with like Authority. Rogabo, as Man: Dabo, as GOD.

Finding the Father giving here, and the Son giving there, we have the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt from both; quem mittet Pater, whom the Father ſhall ſend, in the twenty ſixth of this; quem ego mittam, whom I will ſend, in the twenty ſixth of the next. Called therefore the Spirit of the Father, Mat. 10. 12. and again, called the Spirit of the Son (Gal. 4. 6.) the Spirit of both, as ſent and proceeding from both.

And laſt the equality of the Holy Ghoſt. For, ſending and procuring, He muſt ſend and procure them one equal to Himſelf; as good every way; or elſe, they had changed for the worſe, and ſo pray Him to to let His prayer alone; they were better as they were; they ſhall be at loſs.

4. His Fathers giving.

CHRIST will pray: and if He pray, great likelihood there is, He will ſpeed. He that is ſued to, is eaſie to intreat; He is a Father: and He that doth ſue is gracious to prevail, He is a Son. Pater à Filio rogatus, great oddes, the ſuit is half obtained, yer begun. Specially His Suit being not faint or cold, but earneſt and inſtant, as it was. He ſued by word, and it was clamore valido, with ſtrong crying in an high key: & lachrymis, and He added tears (ſaith the Apoſtle) and they have their voyce. And yet ſtaid not there, but His blood ſpeaks too; cries higher, and ſpeaks better things than the blood of Abel. And the effect of His prayer, was not only Pater condona, Father forgive them; but Pater dona, Father give them the Holy Spirit to teach, ſanctifie and comfort them (Chap. 17. 17.) This was His prayer, and His prayer prevailed: as good as His word He was. His Father ſhould ſend, He ſaid; and His Father did ſend, and the Holy Ghoſt came: witneſs this day.

Hebr. 5. 7. 12. 24. Luke 23. 24.

And

And came in that ſort, He undertook: even in that kind, whereof they had moſt need: (moſt welcome to them, as their caſe then ſtood:) under the term of Paracletus a Comforter. If we ask, Why under that term? To ſhew the peculiar end for which He was ſent, agreeable to the want of their private Eſtate, to whom He was ſent. 5. Giving the Comforter.

If they had been perplexed, He would have prayed for the Spirit of truth. If in any pollution of ſin, for the Sanctifying Spirit. But they were (as Orphans) caſt down and comfortleſs: Triſtitia implevit cor eorum, their hearts full of heavineſs: no time, to teach them now, or frame their manners: they were now to be put in heart. The Spirit of truth or holineſs would have done them ſmall pleaſure. It was comfort, they wanted; a Comforter to them was worth all.

Many good bleſſings come to us by the Holy Ghoſts coming: and the Spirit in any form, of truth or holineſs (or what we will) by all means worthy to be received, even all His gifts: but a gift in ſeaſon goes beyond all; carrieth away the name from all the reſt. Every gift then, in His time. When troubled with Erroneous opinions, then the Spirit of truth: when aſſaulted with tentations, then the Spirit of holineſs: but, when oppreſſed with fear or ſorrow, then is the time of the Holy Ghoſt the Comforter. Sorrow doth chill, and make the ſpirits congeal: therefore He appeareth in fire, to give them warmth; and in a tongue the inſtrument of comfort, by miniſtring a word in due ſeaſon; and cloven, that it might meet with diſmayes of all ſorts, and comfort them againſt all.

And ſo did it: and that apparently. For, immediatly upon the receiving it, they were thought to be full of new wine. That was but an Errour; but ſo comforted they were, as before being exceeding fearful, they grew exceeding full of Courage and Spirit; ſo as, even when they were ſcourged piteouſly, Ibant gaudentes, they went away, not patiently induring, but even ſenſibly rejoycing; not as men evil intreated, but as perſons dignified, having got a new dignity, to be counted worthy to ſuffer for CHRIST'S Name. Acts 5. 41.

A Comforter then: and two things are added: 1 Alium, and 2 qui manebit in æternum. 1 Another Comforter, and 2 that ſhall abide with them for ever. Both which are verified of Him, even in regard of CHRIST: but much more in regard of other earthly, fleſhly, worldly Comforts and Comforters whatſoever. Another: which word preſuppoſes one beſides: ſo that two there be. 3 One they have already: and now another they ſhall have (which is no evil news.) For thus inſtead of a ſingle, they find a double comfort. But both they needed. 6. Another Comforter.

This ſets us on work to find the firſt: and we ſhall not need to ſeek far for Him. Speak to them of a Comforter, and they underſtood it not, but of CHRIST: all their comfort in Him: loſe Him and loſe all. Indeed, CHRIST was one: was and is ſtill. And the very term of Paracletus is given Him by St. John: and though it there be turned an Advocate, upon good reaſon; yet the word is the ſame in both. CHRIST had been their Comforter, while He was their Bridegroom, and they the children of the Bride-chamber. But, expedient it was, He ſhould go; for, expedient it was, they had one in Heaven: and expedient withall, they had one in Earth, and ſo another in His ſtead. 1 John 2. 1. Mat. 9. 15.

For the firſt: even now abſent, He is our Comforter ſtill, that way, we named right now: that is, our Advocate, to appear for us before GOD, there to anſwer the ſlanderous allegations of him that is the accuſer of us and our Brethren. And a Comfort it is, and a great Comfort, to have a good Advocate there, in our abſence: For, then we be ſure, our cauſe ſhall take no harm. 1. Apoc. 12. 10.

But ſecondly, If as an Advocate, He cannot defend us, becauſe the accuſation oft falleth out to be true, if Moſes accuſe us to; yet a ſecond Comfort there is, that as a High Prieſt for ever, He is entred into the holy places made without hands, there by His interceſſion, to make atonement for them as ſinners, whoſe innocency, as an Advocate, He cannot defend. 2. John 5. 45. Hebr. 7. 17. 9. 11.

And to both theſe, He addeth a third, at the beginning of this Chapter. That His leaving them, is but to take up a place for them, to be ſeized of it in their names, whom, He will certainly come again, and receive to it; there, to be for ever with Him. 3. Ver. 2.

And in the mean time, He will take order, we ſhall have ſupply of another: in abſence of His Body, the ſupply of His Spirit. That if we look up, we have a Comforter in Heaven, even Himſelf; and if we look down, we have a Comforter on Earth, His Spirit: and ſo are at an Anchor in both.

For, as He doth in Heaven, for us: So doth the Spirit on Earth in us, frame our petitions, and make interceſſion for us, with ſighs that cannot be expreſſed. And, as CHRIST is our Witneſs in Heaven; ſo is the Spirit here on Earth, witneſſing with our ſpirits that we pertain to the Adoption, and are the Children of GOD. Evermore in the midſt of the ſorrowes that are in our hearts, with His comforts refreſhing our ſouls; Yet not filling them with falſe comforts; but (as CHRIST'S Advocate here on Earth) ſolliciting us daily, and calling upon us, to look to His Commandments, and keep them; wherein ſtandeth much of our comfort, even in the teſtimony of a good conſcience. And thus theſe two; this one, and this other; this ſecond, and that firſt, yield plentiful ſupply to all our wants. Rom. 8. 25, 26. Rom. 8. 16.

A ſecond Note of difference, is in the tenure they ſhall have of this other; that He ſhall ſtay with them ſtill, which, of CHRIST they had not. For, this is the grief; when we have one that is our comfort, that we cannot hold Him: and this their fear, that when they have, another, ſtill they ſhall be changing, and never at any certainty. Chriſt, as Man, they could not keep. Given He was by the Father; but, given for term of years; that term expired, He was to return. Therefore His abode is (Chapter 1. verſe 14.) expreſſed by the word ἐσκήνωσεν, the ſetting up of a Tent, or Tabernacle to be taken down again, and removed within a ſhort time: No dwelling of continuance. But, the HOLY GHOST ſhall continue with us ſtill, and therefore He is allowed a Temple, which 7. To abide for ever. 1 Cor. 3. 16. 6. 19.

is permanent, and never to be taken down. We have in Him, a ſtate of perpetuity, to our endleſs comfort.

Howbeit, it may well be thought, Alium and manebit in æternum, are not put ſo much, for Chriſt, to make a difference from Him; as for theſe ſame other Terrena conſolatiuncula, petty poor comforts, and ſolaces of the World: which GOD hath given us, and we may uſe; but we muſt look after Paracletum alium, another, and another manner Comforter, when all is done. For, of theſe, it may be, we ſhall feel ſome comfort, while we be in health, and meetly good eſtate, and in caſe not much to need it. But, let us come into their caſes here, the heart troubled, the mind oppreſſed, the Spirit wounded; and then, what earthly thing will there be, can miniſter any ſound comfort to us? It will not be: we muſt needs ſeek for this Paracletum alium here, at any hand. What ſpeak I of the mind? If but ache come into a joynt, we know, we have tried them and found them, they are not able to drive away the leaſt pain from the leaſt part. And how then, when ſickneſs cometh, and ſorrow, and the pangs of death, what comfort in theſe? Comfort! Nay, ſhall we not find diſcomfort in the bitter remembrance of our intemperate uſing them, and little regard of the true Comforter? Shall we not find them (as Job found his friends) like Winter-brooks, full of Rain in Winter, when no need of it, when it rains continually; but, in Summer, when need is, not a drop in them. So, when our ſtate of body and mind is, that we can ſuſtain our ſelves without it, then (perhaps) ſome they yield: but, when ſorrow ſeizeth on the heart, then none at all. In the end, we ſhall ſay to them as he did, miſerable comforters are ye all. Wherefore another comforter we are to ſeek, that may give us eaſe in our diſeaſe of the mind, and in the midſt of all our ſorrows and ſufferings make us ire gaudentes, go away rejoycing. No other will do it but this: that, when we have Him, we need look no further.

Job 16. 2.

The other is likewiſe a difference: of ſtaying with us for ever. For ever? the weak poor comfort we have by the Creatures here (ſuch as it is) we have no hold of it: it ſtayes not, not for ever, nay, not for any long time. There be two degrees in it: 1 Non in æternum, that is too plain. 2 Nay, not manent nobiſcum, they ſtay not with us: fugiunt à nobis, they flie from us many times in a moment; as Salomons fire of thorns, a blaze, and out ſtraight.

Nay, if they would tarry with us, would they not tire us? Even Manna it ſelf, did it not grow loathſome? Do we not find, that when we are ready to ſtarve for hunger, and have meat to drive it away; if we uſe it any while, the meat is as irkſome as the hunger was, and we are as hungry for hunger, as ever we were for meat? That we may not be cloyed, we change them; and even thoſe, we change them for, within a while, cloy us as faſt. What ſhall we do? where ſhall we find comfort aright? Ever per quod faſtidio occurritur, faſtidium incurritur: ſo that, if they would tarry, we muſt put them away: the not tarrying of them with us, that is, the change of them, is it, that makes us able to indure them.

Numb. 11. 6.

Well then; comfort us they cannot, when we need it: we muſt pray for Alium. If they could, they cannot ſtay: not, for any ſpace; much leſs, for ever. If they could, their very ſtay would prove faſtidious, and yield us but diſcomfort. Seeing then, we cannot intreat them to ſtay with us; and if we could, in the evil day, they could not ſtead us; but, then fail us ſooneſt when our need is greateſt; Let us ſeek for another, that through ſickneſs, age and death, may abide with us to all Eternity, and make us abide with Him in endleſs joy and comfort.

The Application to the Sacrament.

Such is this here, which CHRIST promiſed, and His Father ſent this day: and which He will ſend, if CHRIST will ask: and CHRIST will ask, if (now we know the Covenant, and ſee the Condition) we will ſeal to the Deed.

To a Covenant there is nothing more requiſite, than to put to the Seal. And we know the Sacrament is the Seal of the New Covenant, as it was of the Old. Thus, by undertaking the duty He requireth, we are intitled to the comfort which here He promiſeth. And, do this, He would have us, as is plain by His Hoc facite.

And ſure, of all the times in our life, when we ſettle our ſelves to prepare thitherwards, we are in beſt terms of diſpoſition to Covenant with Him. For, if ever we be in ſtate of love toward Him, or toward one another; then, it is. If ever troubled in ſpirit, that we have not kept His Commandments better; then, it is. If ever in a vowed purpoſe and preparation, better to look to it; then, it is. Then therefore of all times moſt likely to gain intereſt in the promiſe, when we are beſt in caſe, and come neereſt to be able to plead the condition.

Beſides, it was one ſpecial end, why the Sacrament it ſelf was ordained, our comfort; the Church ſo telleth us; we ſo hear it read, every time to us: He hath ordained theſe Myſteries, as pledges of His love and favour, to our great and endleſs comfort. The Father ſhall give you the Comforter: Why He giveth Him, we ſee: How, He giveth Him, we ſee not. The means, for which, He giveth Him, is Chriſt.: His intreaty by His Word, in prayer; by His fleſh and blood in Sacrifice: For, His blood ſpeaks; not, His voyce only. Theſe, the means for which: And the very ſame, the means, by which, He giveth the Comforter: by CHRIST the Word; and by CHRISTS body and blood, both. In tongues, it came: but the tongue is not the inſtrument of ſpeech only, but of taſte, we all know. And, even that Note hath not eſcaped the Ancient Divines; to ſhew, there is not only comfort by hearing the Word, but we may alſo taſte of His goodneſs, how gracious He is, and be made drink of the Spirit. That not only by the letter we read, and the Word we hear; but by the fleſh we eat, and the blood we drink at His Table, we be made partakers of His Spirit, and of the comfort of it. By no more kindly way, paſſeth His Spirit than by His fleſh and blood, which are Vehicula Spiritus, the proper carriages to convey it. Corpus aptavit ſibi, ut Spiritum aptaret tibi: CHRIST fitted our body to Him, that He might fit His Spirit to us. For, ſo is the Spirit beſt fitted, made remeable, and beſt exhibited to us, who conſiſt of both.

This is ſure: where His fleſh and blood are, they are not examines; ſpirit-leſs, they are not, or without life; His Spirit is with them. Therefore was it ordained, in thoſe very Elements, which have both of them a comfortable operation in the heart of man. One of them (bread) ſerving to ſtrengthen it, or make it ſtrong: and comfort cometh of confortare, which is to make ſtrong. And the other (wine) to make it chearful or glad: and is therefore to be miniſtred to them that mourn, and are oppreſt with grief. And all this, to ſhew that the ſame effect is wrought in the inward man, by the holy Myſteries, that is, in the outward, by the Elements: that there, the heart is eſtabliſhed by grace, and our ſoul endued with ſtrength, and our conſcience made light and chearful, that it faint not, but evermore rejoyce in His holy comfort. Pſal. 104. 15.

To conclude: where ſhall we find it, if not here, where, under one, we find CHRIST our Paſſeover offered for us, and the Spirit our Penteceſt thus offered to us? Nothing remaineth, but the Father Himſelf: And of Him we are ſure too. Filium in pretium dedit, Spiritum in ſolatium: Se ſervat in præmium. His Son He gave, to be our price; His Spirit to be our comfort: Himſelf He keepeth to be our everlaſting reward. Of which reward there, and comfort here, this day and ever may we be partakers, for him that was the price of both, Jeſus Chriſt.

PREACHED
BEFORE THE
Kings Majesty,
AT WINDSOR,
On the XII. of May, A. D. MDCXI. being WHIT-SUNDAY.

IOHN, Chap. XVI. Ver. VII.

Sed Ego veritatem dico vobis: Expedit vobis, ut Ego vadam: Si enim non abiero, Paracletus non veniet ad vos; si autem abiero, mittam Eum ad vos.

Yet I tell you the truth: It is expedient for you, that I go away: For, if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but, if I depart, I will send Him unto you.

BUT if I go, I will send Him unto you. And He did go, and He did send Him; and, this day He did send Him. So that, between this Text and this Feast, there is that mutual reference and reciprocation, that is between promissio missionis, and missio promissionis; the promise of the sending, and the sending of the promise: The promise of the sending, the substance of the Text; and the sending of the promise the substance of the Solemnity: It being the Solemnity of mittam, and veniet (both in the Text) the sending and coming of the Holy Ghost.

CHRISTS words they be: and all is nothing else, but a setting forth, or demonstration of the non veniet: Of non veniet, the not coming; and of Expedit, the Expediency of CHRISTS going, and consequently of this Feast.

There seems to be a question here, whether best, the Comforter come, or not come: that is, whether any Whit-suntide, or no? The question of His coming grew out of another, of CHRISTS going; whether best CHRIST go, or not go: That is, whether any Ascension-day, or no. The Apostles were all mainly against His going, and so opposed hard against the Ascension. But CHRIST here resolveth the point thus: If they were against the Ascension, they lost Festum Paracleti, a Feast, which they might not miss out of their Kalendar: and so with promising them, this perswades them, to bear with that; to yield to the Ascension, in hope of Whit-suntide.

Which two Feasts are both in the Text, and the two main points of it: Here is an abeam, a going, and here is a veniet, a coming: CHRISTS going, that is the Ascension; the Holy Ghosts coming, that that is Pentecoſt (the day which we now celebrate) as it were ἀντιβαμβεύμα, one to make amends for the other. And ye ſhall obſerve, it is uſual. Anon after Chriſtmas-day, and the poor eſtate of Chriſts birth, there cometh the Epiphany with a ſtarre, and great mens oblations, as by way of compenſation. Preſently after Good-friday, and the ſorrow of His Paſſion, Eaſter-day followeth ſtraight, the day of His triumph, to revive us again. And even ſo here, upon His Aſcenſion, or going from us, there enſueth Whitſunday, the mends together withall. No impedit, without an expedit: no abeam, but a mittam: no going away, to bring a loſs; but a coming too, to make a ſupply.

The truth is: Aſcenſion-day, though to Him it were a day of glory; yet, to them it could not be; but a day of ſorrow. It was a going to His Father; but, it was a going, from them. Going from them, they were to loſe Him; and loſs breeds ſorrow; and a great loſs (as this was) great ſorrow. It did ſo; the very next words before theſe are, Your hearts are full of ſorrow. And Ver. 6. good reaſon: 1. To part with, to forgo any friend, is a grief. Not without ſome grief, doth the Apoſtle recount, that even Demas was fallen off, and had forſaken Him. 2. And, if any friend, how 2 Tim. 4. 10. much more of ſuch a friend, as CHRIST was to them? It was a Feſtival, all the while, and they the Children of the Bride-chamber, ſo long as He was with them. To forgo ſuch an one, muſt fill up the mea- Mat. 9. 15. ſure, a good way.

3. But to fill it full; if to part with ſuch an one be grievous, at any time; then, to part with Him; then, He to leave us, and we Him, when we have moſt need of Him, when troubles are at hand is above meaſure grievous. And at hand they were (ver. 2) perſecutions to riſe, and they to be in that caſe, that they that cut their throats, ſhould think they did God good ſervice. If needs He would leave them, He ſhould ſtay, till faire weather: Now, a tempeſt is toward; then, to be left, is the worſt time that may be.

Now, joyne all theſe, 1 of a friend; 2 of ſuch a friend; 3 at ſuch a time, to be deprived; and tell me, if there were not great reaſon, ut triſtitia impleret cor eorum, their hearts ſhould be full of ſorrow, For His going: Non expedit ut abeas. This for them.

Now for CHRIST: we ſhall ſee, quàm incerta providentia noſtra. It falleth out mony times, men are grieved with that, which is for their good: and earneſtly are ſet on that, which is not expedient for them. It was their caſe, in deſiring, CHRIST might not go. All was out of miſtaking. Therefore CHRIST begins: But I tell you the truth: (as much to ſay) you are in an errour all this while: your hearts be full of ſorrow, becauſe your heads are full of errour. You conceive of my ſtay as beneficial to you, but falſly: I tell you true, it is ſo far from that, as, impediet, it will hinder you, turn to your loſs. You apprehend my going, as an hindrance; but erre. 1. I tell you true, expedit vobis, it ſhall be your gaine. 2. This gain, and loſs, are ſet down both: 1 The loſs, in the not coming: 2 the gaine, in the coming of the Comforter, this day. 3. This coming, or not coming, depends upon Chriſts going, or His ſtay. Non veniet niſi, if Chriſt go not, He cometh not: veniet ſi, if CHRIST go, He cometh. Seeing then, ye ſhall be loſers by my ſtay, and gainers by my going, be not for my ſtay: My ſtay will deprive you of Him: non veniet. Be not againſt My going, my abſence will procure you Him: Mittam. I love you not ſo evil, as to ſtay with you for your hurt. Be not you grieved; be not againſt that, which is for your good.

The manner, of this anſwer is, 1 Firſt retorquendo (holden ever to be the beſt.) You think, it will hinder you: I ſay συμφέρει, it will benefit you, that I go. 2 Then, to prove it; He proceeds, abducendo ad abſurdum. For why, if I go not, there will follow a main inconvenience, which by no means is to be admitted, and that is, Non veniet Paracletus. The expedience of veniet, we deduce out of the inconvenience of non veniet.

This inconvenience, if He go not. What if He go? He will come certainly: For, He will be ſure to ſend Him. Now chooſe, whether I ſhall go, and you have Him: or ſtay, and you want Him. The anſwer is clear: have Him ye muſt; want Him ye may not. So, if this be the caſe; If no Aſcenſion, no Pentecoſt: we yield, Aſcendat Chriſtus, ut deſcendat Paracletus.

Where we have to conſider of theſe: 1. Of the reaſon: It is expedient, expedient for you, I go. The Diviſion. I.

Then, of the two. 1 The inconvenience of non veniet, the HOLY GHOST not coming: 2 And of the neceſſity of ſi non abiero, that CHRIST muſt go, that He may come. II.

And laſt, of Veniet and Mittam, His coming and Chriſts ſending. Where we are to Treat, 1 of Paracletus, His name and nature firſt; 2 and then of the time, and manner of His ſending. III.

THere is no act of our Saviour Chriſts, but ever at the firſt view, there ſheweth forth; no ſpeech, but ever at the firſt hearing, there ſonndeth ſome vertue in it. As here, in this, that vertue which the Apoſtle (2 Cor. 1. 10.) calleth ἐπιείκεια, His mildneſs and equity; the beams of that vertue brake forth in this. 1 Herein is equity: This very firſt, that He would yield to yield them a reaſon of His departure: Not uſe His authority (as well He might) I. The Reaſon, it is expedient, come, come, and go at His pleasure, who could ask Him why? but even condescends to render them (though far His inferiors) a reason of His going and coming; which (sure) He was no way bound to do.

2. And what reason? that is next. It is not Licet, what is lawful for Him; but Expedit, what is expedient or meet to do.

3. And thirdly, His expedit is not expedit mihi, but expedit vobis: meet or expedient, not for Himself, but for them, to whom He renders it.

There was, amongst the heathen, one, that would have His will stand for reason. And was there none such, among the people of GOD? Yes: we find (1 Sam. 2.) one, of whom it was said: Thus it must be, for Hophni will not have it so, but thus. His reason is, for, he will not: And GOD grant, none such be found among Christians.

I. A reason given. 1 Sam. 2. 16.

2. Not licet; but expedit. 1 Cor. 6. 12. 10. 23.

But, among Christians, there were, that stood with Saint Paul, upon licet: what they might do, this was lawful for them, and who should abridge them of it; St. Paul may well seem to have had relation there, to his Masters reason here, where He teacheth them a better rule, if they could hit of it: That licet is not it; expedit is CHRIST'S, and is the true Christians reason.

3. Not expedit mihi, but expedit vobis. Chap. 11. 50.

And not expedit, at large. For so, we know not whom it refers to. It may be to Himself, expedit mihi; as, all the worlds reasons tread inward. No: but expedit vobis, for them, their profit and benefit, rather than His own. We find one before, in this Gospel Chap. 11.) and He was the High Priest, that made His, from expedit; but, it was expedit nobis: so reasons Caiaphas, there. But, CHRIST our High Priest taketh it the other way. I do it, because it is expedient for you, that I do it. And, the Apostle followeth Him in that too: Heb. 13. Use your Rulers (your spiritual Rulers) so as they may do their office with joy, not with grief; ἀλυσιτελὲς, for that is not good for you: not for you (hear you) and let them go. Well, certainly herein is equity; herein is mildness, in these two first words. It was, to his Father, and to His glory He went: He would not do it, but acquaint them with the reason of it: and that reason was, He would not do it, but that it was for their good. I have enough, from these three, if we learn to avoid 1 Hophnies non vult enim, to make our vult our enim; And the 2 Corinthians standing with him, upon his licet; 3 And frame our Rule, by expedit: and that, not Caiaphas expedit nobis, but CHRIST'S expedit vobis: for you, it is good; you the Disciples: and make that the rule of our going out and coming in. This for Expedit vobis.

Heb. 13. 17.

II. The inconvenience of non veniet.

If it be good, and good for them, they will not hinder it; Nemo impedit, quod expedit: That lesson will soon be learned, to yield to that, which is for our behoof. All the matter will be, to bring [expedit vobis] and [ut ego abeam] together: to understand that good: how [Ego abeam] can be expedient for them. Indeed it is hard to conceive. This we can well conceive: Expedit vobis, ut ego veniam, expedient it is, that I come; and say with the Apostle, etiam veni, yea, come Lord, come quickly. And this we can also Expedit vobis, ut ego maneam, expedient it it is, that I tarry, and say with them (Luke 24.) mane nobiscum Domine; yea, tarry with us good Lord. It is more than expedient, for thee, so to do. But Expedit vobis ut ego abeam, expedient, I go my way, and leave you, Durus est hic sermo, it is a hard saying and who can endure it, That it should be good for them, or for any, to have Christ, go from them or forsake them?

Luk. 24. 29.

And sure, the proposition is not so hard, but the reason that induced it is as hard, and more, if more may be: The Comforter will not come. Be it so: let Him not come; stay you. In te satis nobis, we are well enough, we desire no other Comforter. And the other moveth not neither, unless I go: why, may He not stay, and he come notwithstanding? What hinders it, but we may enjoy both together? Two difficulties, which must be cleared, or we cannot proceed.

Non veniet, that may be answered with, Ne veniat. But, He is a Comforter. No comforter to CHRIST; no loss so great, as to lose Him: if we may keep Him, we care not: Ne veniat. Stay His Ascension, we fear not Pentecost. But, He is in earnest, and tells us for a truth, It is altogether expedient, the HOLY GHOST come: So expedient, Ut expedit, ut ego abeam, potius quàm ille ne veniat: Better I go than he not come; of the twain, better I spared than he. So it must be; else he saith nothing: else the balance hangs even; one, as good as the other, they may take which they will; say, they were well enough, as they are. But weigh the Feasts together, Ascension, and Pentecost; the expedience of Ego abeam, and the expedience of Ille veniet; better CHRIST depart, than the HOLY GHOST stay from us. This sets before us and shews us the greatness of this Days benefit: consequently, the highness of this Feast: not only, that it is equal, to any of those precedent; (that the HOLY GHOST is equal to Christ, else should we be at an after-deal, and change for our loss: No, Saint Augustine prayeth well, Domine da mihi alium te, alioqui non dimittam te, give us another as good as your self, or we will never leave that, or consent that you leave us:) But, that some inequality there is; else they might stand, as they are, seeing they should be never the better: but sure, as the case standeth, more for their behoof, than Christ Himself.

I. The inconvenience of non veniet.

We shall never see it in kind, the experience of veniat, the absolute necessity of His coming, till we see the inconvenience of non veniet; that it by no means may be admitted; we cannot be without Him. First then, absolute necessity it is; in both the main principal works of the Deity, all three persons co-operate, and have their concurrence. As, in the beginning of the creation, not only dixit Deus was required, which was the Word; but ferebatur Spiritus, the motion of the Spirit, to give the Spirit of life, the life of Nature. As, in the Genesis, so in the Palingenesie of the world, a like necessity: not only the Word should take flesh; but flesh also receive the Spirit, to give life, even the life of grace to the New Creature. It was the counsel of GOD, that every person of the Trinity, should have his part in both; in one work, no less than the other, and we therefore baptized into all three. Gen 1. 3. Gen 1. 2. Joh. 1. 14. Gal. 6. 15.

all

But I add secondly; more than expedient it is, the work of our salvation be not left half undone, but be brought to the full perfection; which, with non veniet, cannot be: if the Holy Ghost come not, CHRIST'S coming can do us no good; when all is done, nothing is done. No, said not He Consummatum est? Yes: and said it truly in respect of the work it self; but quoad nos, in regard of us and making it ours, non consummatum est, if the HOLY GHOST come not too. Shall I follow the Apostle, and humanum dicere, speake after the manner of men, because of our infirmitie: GOD Himselfe hath so expressed it: A word is of no force, thought written (which we call a deed) til the seale be added: that, maketh it authentical, GOD hath borrowed those very termes from us: CHRIST is the word; the HOLY GHOST the Seale, in quo signati estis, Ephes. IV. XXX. Nisi veniat, if the Seale come not to, nothing is done. Joh. 19 30. Rom. 8. 15.

2 Yea, the very will of a Testator, when it is Sealed, is still in suspence, till administration be granted: Christ is the Testator of the New Testament: The administration is the Spirits, 1 Cor. XII. If that come not, the Testament is to small purpose. Heb. 9. 15. 1 Cor. 12. 3. 11.

3 Take CHRIST as a Purchaser: the purchase is made, the price is paid; yet is not the state perfect, unless there be investiture, or (as we call it) livery and seisin: that maketh it compleat. Perquisitio, that very word is CHRISTS: but the investiture is by the Spirit, II Cor. V. V. If He come not, we lack that: that, we may not lack; and so not lack Him. What will ye, that I say? Unless we be joyned to Him, as well as He to us; as He to us, by our flesh, so we, to Him by His Spirit: nothing is done. The exchange is not perfect, unless, as He taketh our flesh, so He give us His Spirit: as He carrieth up that to heaven, so He send this down into earth. Ye know, it is the first question the Apostle asked: Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? If not, all else is to no purpose: without it, we are still (as Jude calleth us) animales, Spiritum non habentes, natural men, but without the Spirit. And this is a certain rule, Qui non habet, He that hath not His Spirit, is none of His; Christ profiteth him no thing. Act. 19. 2. Jude ver. 19. Rom. 8. 9.

Shall I let you see one inconvenience more, of non veniet? As nothing is done for us, so nothing can be done by us, if He come not. No means on our part, avail us ought. 1 Not Baptisme; for nisi ex Spiritu, if He come not, well may it wash soile from our skin, but no stain from our soul: no Laver of regeneration, without renewing of the Holy Ghost. 2 No Preaching, neither, for, that is but a letter that killeth, except the Spirit come too, and quicken it. 3 No Sacrament; we have a plain Text for it: The flesh profiteth nothing, if the Lord and giver of life (the Spirit) be away. 4 To conclude, no prayer: for nisi, unless the Spirit help our infirmity, and make intercession with us, we neither know how, nor what to pray. So, the Spirit must come to all: and it goeth through; neither can ought be done for us, or by us without it. Away then with ne veniat: we cannot say it; we may not think it: We cannot spare this first. Another veniat there must be; a second Advent, besides CHRISTS. CHRISTS Advent begins all: this, ends all our solemnities. Come He must: and we must all agree, to say, Veni Creator Spiritus: the inconvenience of non veniet we cannot endure. 2 Cor. 3. 6. Joh. 6. 63. Rom. 8. 26.

But then, there ariseth a new difficulty upon Si non abiero. We see a necessity of His coming: but, we see no necessity of CHRISTS going. Why not Christ stay, and yet He come? Why may not CHRIST send for Him, as well as send Him? Or, if He go, come again with Him? Before, it was, Ne veniat ille, mane tu: now, it is, Veniat ille, et mane tu. Why not? Are they like two buckets; one cannot go down, unless the other go up? If it be so expedient, He come, CHRIST (I trust) is not impedient, but He may come. The necessity of Si non abiero.

CHRIST (sure) and He are not ἀσύμφυτα, incompatible: they may be, and abide together well enough. We believe, He was conceived by the HOLY GHOST: then, no antipathy between them. At His Baptisme, He was known by this, that the Spirit rested and stayed upon Him: why not now, as well? We see not, how this holdeth: If I go not, He will not come. It cannot be denied, they two can stay together, well enough; and the time shall come, we shall enjoy them both together, and the Father with them. That time is not yet: now, it is otherwise. Not for any let in themselves; that is not all: but, for some further matter and considerations noted by the Fathers, for which, it was expedient, CHRIST should go, that the Holy Ghost might come. John 1. 32.

First, for veniet. The HOLY GHOST cannot come, as He should, He should come as GOD. The stay of CHRIST would have been a let of the manifestation of His God-head. To manifest His God-head, being to shew great Signes, and work great Wonders, if CHRIST had still remained and not gone His way, they would not well have been distinguished, and great odds have been ascribed to Christ. So, the Holy Ghost have wanted that honor and estimation due to Him: an impeachment it would have been, to his Divinity. But Christ ascending; all such imaginations cease. 1 On the Holy Ghosts part.

2 On Christs.

From mittam Eum: a little impeachment it would have been, to Christs equality with His Father. For, He not going to send Him, but staying still here, the sending of the Spirit would have been ascribed to the Father alone, as His sole Act. This would have been the most: that the Father, for His sake, had sent Him; but He, as GOD, had had no honour of the sending. Being ascended and glorified, mittam will straight be conceived: Quem mittet Pater, & quem mittam à Patre: that with the Father, He sends Him equally, and we alike beholden to them both.

John 14.26. 15.26.

3 On theirs, as their case was to be.

A third is in vobis, on their part also. As their case was to be, it was (so) meet, even in regard of them. They were to be sent abroad into all coasts; to be scattered all over the earth to preach the Gospel, and not to stay together still, in one place. His corporal presence would have stood them in small stead: He could have been resident but in one place, to have comforted some one of them; St. James at Jerusalem: as for John at Ephesus, or Thomas in India, or Peter at Babylon; as good (for them) in heaven as in earth; all one. The Spirit, that was to succeed, was much more fit for men dispersed. He could be, and was present with them all, and with every one, by Himself, as filling the compass of the whole world.

4 On theirs, as their case was then.

This as their case was to be. But, the Fathers rather pitch upon their estate as presently it was: Vobis, that is, vobis sic dispositis: for you, that is, you so disposed, as I find, you are. So, it is ad homines: to them affected in such sort, as then they were. Whereby he giveth us to understand; some are in that case; as it is expedient, Christ withdraw Himself from them. And is there any vobis, can any man be in that case, it should be good for Christ to depart for him? It seemeth so. We see oftentimes, the case so standeth, even in regard of this life; that, from some, it is good their meat be taken, and yet is meat the stay of their life; that, from some, it is good their blood be taken, yet blood is natures treasure, and that holdeth us in life; that, from some, light be taken, in some disease of the eyes, yet is light the comfort of this life. All this we conceive, Expedit, ut cibus, ut sanguis, ut lux abeat; and all this better, than expedit ut Christus abeat; we may spare them all, better than Him.

1 For His bodily presence.

Yet CHRIST it is, that telleth it us, and telleth it us for a matter of great truth: these were: (and whose case is better than these?) But, if these, some there are, in that case, it may be said to them truly, It is expedient I be gone. And what case may that be? Even that case, that maketh the mother many times withdraw her self, from her young child, whom (yet) she loveth full tenderly, when the child groweth foolishly fond of her: which grew to be their case just. Christs flesh, and His fleshly presence, that, and none but that. So strangely fond they grew of that, as they could not endure He should go out of their sight: Nothing, but his carnal presence, would quiet them. We know, who said: If thou hadst been here Lord: as if, absent, He had not been, as able to do it, by His Spirit, as present by His Body. And a Tabernacle they would needs build Him, to keep Him on earth still; and ever and anon they were still dreaming of an earthly kingdome, and of the chief Seats there, as if their consummation should have been in the flesh. These phansies (indeed, errors) they fell into, about the flesh: they had need have it taken from them. The Spirit was gone quite: they had more need, to have Him sent. This was, at no hand, to be cherished in them: they were not to be held as children still, but to grow to mans estate, to perfect age and strength; and so consequently to be weined from the corporal presence of His flesh; nor to hang all by sense, to which (it is too true) they were too much addicted. The corporal therefore to be removed, that the spiritual might take place: the visible, that the invisible: and they, not in sight or sense, as hitherto; but, in spirit and truth, henceforth to cleave unto Him. To say (with the Apostle) If we have known CHRIST after the flesh, yet now henceforth we know Him so no more. This was for them: And we should have been no better, as now we are; the flesh will but hinder the spirit; even the best.

Joh. 11.21.

Mat. 17.14.

2 Cor. 5.16.

2 For His spiritual presence.

This, for His Bodily presence. But, the Fathers go yet further; and inquire, whether this also be not true, in His spiritual presence: and resolve, that, even in regard of that, it is no less true. To some vobis, it is expedient, that, even after that manner also, CHRIST go from them. And who are they?

As grown faint.

1. One Vobis; when men grow faint in seeking, and careless in keeping Him (as in Cant. 3.) lie in bed, and seek Him. Gone He was; and meet, He should so be, to teach them to rise and seek; to watch and keep Him better.

Cant. 3.1.

As overweening.

2. Another Vobis, when men grow high-conceited and overweening of themselves, and their own strength; and say (with David) non movebor, as if they had CHRIST pinned to them; and (with Peter) Etsi omnes, non ego. It is more than time, CHRIST be gone from such, to teach them to see and know themselves better.

Psa. 30.7. Mat. 20.33.

But, if CHRIST leave us, if He withdraw His spiritual presence, we fall into sinne; and that cannot be expedient for any. Good, that I have been in trouble; for before I was troubled, I went wrong: but, not good for any, to fall into sin. Yes indeed: Audeo dicere (saith Saint Augustine) I dare avow it, Expedit superbo, ut incidat in peccatum (there are the very terms) it is expedient they fall into some notorious sin (as David, as Peter did) that their faces may be filled with shame, and they, by that confusion, learn to walk with more humility. The Messenger of Satan, that was sent the Apostle, to buffet him, was of this nature, and to no other end sent, but to prevent this malady. In a word: CHRIST must withdraw (no remedy) that we may grow humble, and being humble, the HOLY GHOST may come: for He cometh eueth to none, reſts on none, giveth grace to none, but the humble. So we ſee, Chriſt may be, and is, even according to His ſpiritual preſence, withdrawn from ſome perſons, and for their good. Chriſtus abit, ut Paracletus veniat: and that many ways meet it is, it ſo ſhould be. This makes us ſay, Go Lord, Set up thy ſelf above the heavens, and thy glory, over all the earth. 1 Pet. 5. 5. Pſal. 108. 6.

Psa. 119.67.

Esay 57.15.

If He go not, the Holy Ghoſt will not come. But, if CHRIST go, will He come? ſhall we not be left to the wide world, without both? will the Comforter come? He will: for, CHRIST will not fail but ſend Him. If He take His body from our eyes, He will ſend His Spirit into our hearts. But, ſent He ſhall be; here is mittam Eum, And ſo He did. CHRIST ſent Him, and He came; and in memory of this Veniet & mittam, hold we this Day. He did, to them: but, will He alſo to us? He will. And, ſhall we ſee fiery tongues? That, is not Chriſts promiſe, to ſend fiery tongues; but Illum, Him, the Comforter. And, Comfort it is, we ſeek. It is not the tongues, or fire, we care for, or will do us good. We conceive (I truſt) after two manners, He came, as this day: 1 One viſible, in tongues of fire that ſate upon their heads: 2 The other inviſible, by inward graces, whereby He poſſeſſed their hearts: The former was but for Ceremony at firſt; the other is it, the real matter, Illum, Him. And Him, this day as well as that, this day and ever, He will not fail to ſend. Always, we are to think, His promiſe and His prayer were not for theſe only, but for all that ſhould believe on Him, by their word, to the worlds end.

III. Of Mittam Eum. 1 Eum the Perſon.

Now this laſt point (theſe two, 1 Mittam, 2 Illum) we are ſpecially to look to. CHRIST is gone, once for all. We have no hold now, but of this promiſe, I will ſend Him. That we take heed, we forgo not Him, and loſe our part in the promiſe too. A great part of the world is (ſure) in this caſe: CHRIST is gone, and the Comforter is not ſent. Not this: for I ſpeak not of the worlds comfort, the rich mans (Luk. 16.) qui habeat hic conſolationem, who had his comfort, here in good fare and bravery, and all manner delights of the fleſh, fleſh-comforts: but, this here is Paracletus qui eſt Spiritus. 1 Illum, that is, Spiritus ſanctus. Luke 16. 25.

And becauſe all Religions promiſe a Spiritual comfort; it is ſaid further, Paracletus qui eſt ſpiritus veritatis: No ſpirit of error, but the ſpirit of truth. And becauſe all Chriſtians (though counterfeit) claim an intereſt in Spiritus veritatis; yet further, it is added, Paracletus qui eſt Spiritus ſanctus: He is no unclean Spirit, but one ſanctifying, and leading us into an holy and cleane life. This is the true Comforter (and none other) that Chriſt promiſeth to ſend. 2 Paracletus, Chriſt will ſend Him. But (that we miſtake Him not) not, unleſs we call for Him, and be ready to entertain Him: For [cletus] is in Paracletus; Of which let me tell you, theſe three things: It is the chief word of the Text, and chief thing of the Feaſt. It is tranſlated Comforter: that tranſlation is but ad homines, for their turn, to whom He ſpeaks; for, as their caſe was, they needed that office of His, moſt. But, the true force of the word Paracletus is Advocatus (not the Noun, but the Participle) one called to, ſent for, invited to come, upon what occaſion, or for what end ſoever it be. For what end ſoever it be, the perſon ſent for, is Paracletus (properly) pro eâ vice; for that time and turn; Advocatus. But, becauſe the ſpirit of the world, ruleth in this world, the worldly affairs come thickeſt, our affections in that kind ſo many and oft; it is come to paſs, that the Lawyer hath carried away the name of Advocatus from the reſt; and they grown to be the Paracleti of this world, called for even from the Prince to the Peaſant, and conſulted with, none ſo often. The Phyſician, he hath his time and turn of advocation, to be a Paracletus too; but nothing ſo oft: for Barnabas (which is interpreted the ſon of conſolation) never, till both Zenas the Lawyer, and Luke the Phyſitian have given us over; never called for, but when it is too late. Act. 4. 35.

But firſt, from mittam Paracletum, this we have. Mittam, Chriſt will ſend: but Paracletum, if you ſend for Him. Veniet, come He will, but not come, unleſs called: nor ſent, but ſent for. If we call Him, veniet, He will come: if we ſend for Him, He will ſend Him. That, is our duty; but what is our practice? We miſs in this firſt, we call not for Him. We find no time for Him, He is fain to call for us, to Ring a Bell for us, to ſend about to get us; and then are we Advocati, not He. When we ſend for Him, He is Paracletus: when He, for us, then we are, and not He: (if we be that, if we be Advocati, and not rather avocati; every trifling occaſion being enough, to call us away.) Thus we ſtumble at the very threſhold: and do we yet marvail, if Chriſt, ſend Him not, nor He come? 1 Our duty, to call for Him for Comfort.

Men are ſent for, for ſome end: and divers are the ends, thereafter as our need is. We ſend not for them, only when we are in heavineſs, to comfort us; but when we are in doubt, to reſolve us: which is the ſecond ſignification, and ſo [Paracletus] is turned advocate, or counſellour (1 John 2. 1.) And the Holy Ghoſt looketh to be ſent for, for both: for counſel, as well as for conſolation: for both; he is good for both. Yea, many are His uſes: and therefore He thinketh much to be ſent for, but for one, as if He were good for nothing elſe. If we be in doubt, He is able to reſolve us: if perplexed, to adviſe and to guide: if we know not how, to frame our petition for us: If we know not, to teach; if we forget, 2 For counſell to remember us: And not only one use (as we phansie) if we be out of heart, to comfort us.

[a] Joh. 4. 5. [b] Act. 2. 3. [c] Joh. 3. 8, [d] Joh. 2. 20. [e] Joh. 15. 26. [f] Esay 11. 2.

And, because his uses be many, His types are so. [a] Water sometimes, sometimes [b] fire: One while [c] winde, one while [d] oyntment: and according to our several wants we to send to Him, for fire, to warme; for winde, to coole; for water, to clense us; for oyle, to supple us. And, as His Types, so His names: the [e] Spirit of truth, the [f] Spirit of counsel, the Spirit of holiness, the Spirit of comfort: And according to His several faculties, we to invocate (or call for) Him, by that name, that is most for our use or present occasion. For all these, He looks, we should send for Him.

Our error is, as if He were only for one use or office; for comfort alone: so, in all others, we let Him alone; and if never in heavinesse, never look after Him, or care once to hear of Him. But, He is for advice, and direction also. No les; Paracletus, a Counsellour, than Paracletus, a Comforter: He is not sent by CHRIST, to comfort only. Ye may see, by the very next words: the first thing He doth, when He cometh, is, He shall reprove; which is farre from Comforting. But sent He is, as well to mediate with us, for GOD: as, with GOD, for us. GODS Paracletus, His Sollicitor, to call on us for our duty; as our Paracletus, or Comfortor, to minister us comfort, in time of need.

Our manner is, we love to be left to our selves, in our consultations to advise with flesh and blood; thence to take our direction, all our life: and, when we must part, then send for Him, for a little comfort, and there is all the use, we have of Him. But, he that will have comfort from Him, must also take counsel of Him; have use of Him as well against error and sinful life, as against heavinesse of minde. If not, here is your doom: where you have had your counsel, there seek your comfort: he that hath been your Counsellour, all the time of your life, let him be your Comforter, at the hour of your death. And good reason: He will not be Paracletus at halves; to stand by at all else, and only to be sent for in our infirmity.

Base it is, to send for Him, never but when in extream need: but, even otherwise extra casum necessitatis, for entertaining of acquaintance and to grow familiar, as we use to do those, we delight in. The word [ ] giveth as much: He should be near us, by us, one ordinary; not a stranger, to call or send for a great way off. It is so expedient, that He may know us throughly, and we Him: the best and neerest way to find sure comfort, when most we shall need it. For he that should minister it soundly indeed, had need be familiarly acquainted with the state of our souls, that he may be ready and ripe, then. To go to a Lawyers reading, and not hear it, serves us not for our worldly doubts: nor to hear the Physick Lecture, for the complaints of our bodies. No: we make them Paracletos, we call them to us, we question with them in particular, we have private conference, about our estates. Only, for our souls affaires, it is enough to take our directions in open Churches, and there delivered in gross: private conference we endure not; a Paracletus there, we need not. One we must have, to know throughly the state of our lands or goods: One we must have, entirely acquainted with the state of our body: In our souls, it holdeth not. I say no more: it were good it did. We make him a stranger, all our life long; He is Paraclitus (as they were wont to pronounce him;) truly Paraclitus, one whom we declined, and looked over our shoulders at: And then, in our extremity, suddenly He is Paracletus; we seek, and send for Him, we would come a little acquainted with Him. But, take we heed of Nescio vos; It is a true answer: We take too little a time, to breed acquaintance in. Nescio vos (I fear) they find, that so seek Him: Paracletus, they do not; Paraclitus, rather.

2. His sending: 1 The Time. Mittam.

This, of Paracletus. Now, of Mittam, the 1 time and the 2 manner: both are to the purpose. The time, that when He sends, we make ready for Him. The time of the year was this time, in the Spring, the fairest and best part of it. The time of the moneth, the third day: (so they deduce, from the fifteenth day, the day of the Passeover, and so fifty days, it will so fall out by calculation:) that is, the beginning of the moneth. The time of the day, it was before the third houre (that is, nine of the clock in the morning plainly.) So it was still prime. These teach us, it would be in our prime, the time of health and strength, when we lay the grounds of our comfort; not to tarry, till the frost and snow of our life; till the evil dayes come, and the yeares approach, whereof we shall say, We have no pleasure in them, He, in the spring: we in the end of the year. He, in the beginning of the moneth: we, in the last quarter; nay, even pridie calendas. He, before nine in the morning: we, not till after nine at Night. If we will keep time with Him, we know what His time is of sending.

Act. 2. 5.

Eccles 12.

2 The manner. Per Paracletum.

The manner is best: and it is in the body of the word. As the Spirit of truth, by preaching: as the Holy Ghost, by prayer; the Paracletus (we know, what He meaneth) per paracletin, by invitation. As the Dove to baptisme, the Winde to Prayer (Aperui os & attraxi Spiritum, Psal. 119. 131.) the tongue, to a Sermon; the Paracletus, to Paraclesis, as it were a refreshing: (so, friends meet and nourish love and amity one with another.) And, even humanum dicere, after natural men, when our spirits are spent and we wax faint, to recover them (or never) in the natural man, it is done, no way more kindly, than by nouriſhment: ſpecially, ſuch as is apt to breed them (as, one kind is more apt than other.) There is a ſpiritual meat, and a ſpiritual drink, (ſaith the Apoſtle:) in which kind, there is none ſo apt to procreate the Spirit in us, as that fleſh and blood, which was it ſelf conceived and procreate by the Spirit, and therefore full of ſpirit and life, to them that partake it. It is ſure; to invite and allure the Spirit to come, there is no more effectual way; none, whether CHRIST will ſend Him, or whether He will come, more willingly, than to the preſence of the moſt holy Myſteries. And namely, at this feaſt; concerning which, our Saviour Chriſts voice is to ſound in our ears, Si quis ſitiat; veniat ad me: If any thirſt, let him come to me and drink: Which he meant and ſpake (ſaith St. John) of the Spirit, Joh. 7. 39. which was to be given at that time eſpecially, when He was newly glorified. De meo accipiet (ſaith Chriſt of Him:) and it is nowhere more truly fulfilled, that he ſhall take of Chriſts, and give it us, than it is done, of that, which is His moſt intrinſecally. That was, this very day; and no better opportunity, no fitter time, to receive the Spirit, than the day of the Spirit; the day of CHRISTS ſending, and of His coming. When ſhall He be ſent or come; if then, He do not? But, keeping the time, and obſerving the manner, we truſt in His promiſe, and call upon Him; that ſo He will ſend Him; and upon the Holy Ghoſt, that ſo He will come. And as we be His Paracleti, His gueſts, ſo He will be ours, dwelling with us with His aſſiſtance, and being in us by His graces, to life eternal. Which Almighty GOD grant, &c. Verſe 14.

1 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

Preached before the

KINGS MAJESTY,

At WHITE-HALL,
On the XXXI. of May, A. D. MDCXII.
being WHITSUNDAY.

ACTS Chap. XIX. Ver. I, II, III.

And it came to pass, &c. That Paul came to Ephesus, and found there certain Disciples,

And said unto them, Have ye received the HOLY GHOST, since ye believed?

And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard, whether there be an HOLY GHOST.

And He said unto them, Unto what were ye then baptized? And they said, Unto Johns Baptisme.

HEre is a question, Have ye received the Holy Ghost? And here is an answer to it: Nay not so much as heard, whether any Holy Ghost, or no. There is no fitter time, to ask and resolve this question of His receiving, than this day, the day, He was received visibly: nor to amend this answer (Not, whether any or no,) than this day, on which He declared Himself to the world, when it was both heard and seen, that there was an Holy Ghost.

Act. 2. 33.

The part Narrative.

The Narrative is thus, briefly. Saint Paul came to Ephesus, and there he found certain Disciples. At the first meeting, the very first question he asks, is Si recepistis, Whether they had received the Holy Ghost? Mark it well. It is the first point, he thinks meet to be enquired of, or to inform himself concerning.

The first question.

The answer.

The Apostle (no doubt) hoped for an answer affirmative from them: That they had received Him. Theirs is a strange negative: That, not only they had not received Him; Sed neque, But were so far from that, as they had not so much as heard, whether there were any to receive: whether, there were any, at all. Whom they should have received, Him they had not heard of. This was a great rudeness. And yet Disciples they were, and Disciples that had believed, and believed a good while since. And they were twelve (it is said at the seventh verse) that is, a full Jury; and yet put the Holy Ghost upon their Verdict, that, they return, is an Ignoramus.

The second question.

The Apostle, little looked for such rudeness, at Ephesus, the most civil place of all Asia. This answer almost posed him; yet, he gives them not over. Nay, he must not leave them thus. Whether one, or no: This answer (of force) begets another question, to find where the error was. Disciples they were, and and therefore baptized; baptized, and yet had not heard of the Holy Ghoſt? He muſes how, or into what they had been baptized, and asks them that. They tell him, into Johns baptiſme, and further they had not gone. Of Johns Baptiſme I will not now ſtand to enlarge; This is certaine, a Baptiſme it was, wherein (it ſeemes) there was no mention, nor no hearing of the Holy Ghoſt. The anſwer.

Now by this time, their rudeneſſe, that ſeemed ſtrange at the firſt, is not now ſtrange when the reaſon of it is knowne. And it might ſeeme in ſome ſort to excuſe them, in that, they were but at Johns Baptiſme: and ſo it did. But, yet to accuſe them withall, that they were but at Johns Baptiſme: (for it was now more than twenty yeares ſince John was dead) that, all this while, they were no further; that (as He ſaith to the Hebrewes) conſidering the time, whereas they might have been Teachers, they had need to be catechiſed, in the very rudiments of Religion. The error. Heb. 5. 12.

Yet * quencheth he not this flax, though it did but ſmoak; beares with them, rates them not, but teacheth them; firſt, that as John was to CHRIST; ſo was Johns baptiſme to Chriſts baptiſme, in manner of a Parate viam, or introduction, in venturum, to one that was to come, and they, no otherwiſe to conceive of it. The rectifying. * Mat. 12. 20.

It was Apollo's caſe (in the Chapter before, Verſe 25.) He knew not but Johns baptiſme neither, at the firſt. And theſe (it may well be) were His Diſciples. But as Aquila, there taught, Him: So doth the Apoſtle theſe here, the way of truth more exactly. And ſo, being taught they were baptized with a baptiſme, where, they both heard of, and received the Holy Ghoſt. Verſe 5. 8.

Thus doth end the Narrative part. And therein, he gives us an example in himſelf, of his owne rule to Timothy. If we meet with ſuch, as theſe at Epheſus, raw and evil catechiſed Chriſtians, that we grow not abrupt, but exerciſe our office, in all long-ſuffering and doctrine: not in doctrine alone, but in long-ſuffering and doctrine. For without ſuffering, and ſuffering long other whiles, all our doctrine will do but little good. The Apoſtles patience. 2 Tim. 4. 2.

Out of all this, we gather theſe points. Firſt, the neceſſity of Receiving the Holy Ghoſt; in that, it is his firſt care, his firſt queſtion he asks. Of the other Perſons in the God-Head, it is enough we hear of them and believe in them: Of the Holy Ghoſt it is not ſo. To hear of Him, or beleeve in Him, will not ſerve, but we are to receive Him to. To know not onely Quod ſit, that He is, but to certifie our ſelves, Quod inſit, that He is in us: For He ſhall remaine with you and ſhall be in you (it is CHRIST.) But then, receive we cannot, unleſſe firſt we heare: heare, that there is one to receive, or ever we receive Him. Firſt, notice of His being, and then ſenſe of His receiving. And indeed, the hearing of Him is a way to His receiving: For, though, not every one that heares, receives: yet none receives, but he heares firſt. So, that ground muſt firſt be layd. The part diſpoſitive. Joh. 14. 17.

And to lay that ground, no better way than the Apoſtle here directs us to, by his ſecond queſtion; get us to our baptiſme. Ask, into what we were baptized? There we ſhall not faile, but reſolve our ſelves, that one there is, receive Him after, as we may.

Now, but that the Apoſtle had a better conceit of theſe, here, than there was cauſe, and ſo erred of charitie, ſuppoſing theſe Diſciples better Schollers than they were; Hee would have begun with the latter, and firſt asked them, If ever they heard of Him: and then after, if they had received Him. For, that is firſt in nature, An ſit, then An inſit. The right order.

There then let us begin. I am ſorrie and aſhamed, that we ſhall need deale with An ſit: Yet (I know not how) as theſe dayes of ours grow from evill to worſe, and from worſe to worſt of all: it is no more than needs. Not that I doubt of any ſuch, who (as theſe here at Epheſus) have not heard of the HOLY GHOST: For (no doubt) long yer this, His ſound is gone out into all lands: but rather, ſuch other (as Saint Paul found at Epheſus too) I can tell them no better, than he doth, Beaſts in the ſhape of men. That have heard, and yet take to themſelves, (a Chriſtian libertie (they call it) and that forſooth, humbly, ſimply, and modeſtly; but in deed) an unchriſtian licenciouſneſs, proudly, loudly, and malapertly; to call in queſtion what they liſt: and, to make Quere's of that which the Chriſtian world hath long ſince reſolved, and ever ſince believed, concerning GOD, CHRIST and the Bleſſed Spirit: no leſſe matters. Rom. 10. 18. 1 Cor. 13. 30.

So then, to theſe two parts, we reduce all: The Hearing of him firſt: Then 2 The receiving of Him. 1. The Hearing, and therein, 1 Where we ſhall hear of Him? and 2 What we ſhall hear of Him? Where we ſhall hear of Him? At our Baptiſme: 2 And What we ſhall hear of Him there: That one there is (at leaſt) and I truſt, ſomewhat elſe beſides. The Diviſion. I.

2. Then, the Receiving of Him; And in it, three points: 1. Firſt, that this queſtion muſt be anſwered to, and ſo we bound to receive him, And that, either affirmativè, or Negativè. We have, or we have not. 2. Then, Have We received Him? How to know, if we have. 3. Have We not received Him? How to procure, if we have not. In the former, of Hearing: is matter of faith. In the latter, of Receiving: matter of moral duty. Both, meet to be intreated of, at all times, but at no time ſo fit, and ſo proper, as at this Feaſt. II.

There

The hearing.

THere is no receiving of Him that is not. Therefore, no talk of receiving: no place, for the first question, Have ye received? till the latter be first resolved, Is there one to receive? For resolution whereof, He might have sent them, to the very beginning of

Gen. 1. 2. Genesis, where they should have heard, the Spirit of GOD moved on the face of the waters. Or to the Law; where the same Spirit came down upon the seventy Elders.

Num. 11. 26. Or to the Psalmes; where they should have heard David say of Him, Emitte Spiritum & creabuntur, Send forth thy Spirit, and all shall be made. And Spiritum Sanctum ne auferas, Take

Psal. 104. 30. Psa. 51. 11. not thy Holy Spirit from me. Or, to the Prophets: The Prophet Esay: CHRIST'S first Esay 61 1. Joel 1. 28. Text; Luke 4. The Spirit of GOD is upon me. The Prophet Joel: Saint Peters Text this day, I will powre My Spirit upon all flesh.

Luke 1. 35. Luke 3. 22. Or if ever they had heard of our SAVIOUR CHRIST, Saint Paul might have sent them, to His Conception: Where they should have heard the Angel, say, Spiritus Sanctus superveniet in te, to the Blessed Virgin. To Christs baptisme, where, He came upon Christ in a visible shape. To his promise so * often iterate, of Sending them, the Holy Ghost. To his Ca-

Act. 5. 13. Him by St. Peter, He had lyed to the HOLY GHOST: and straight upon it; he had not lyed to man, but to GOD directly.

2. At Baptisme. 1 That one there is.

All this, he might; yet, this he did not, but takes a plaine course, sends them to their baptisme, (still supposing it, to be CHRISTS Baptisme, they were baptized with, the only true Baptisme.) And, seeing the Apostle, upon good advice, took that for the best way; we Cannot follow a better direction: and so, let us take it. We mean not (I trust) to renounce our Baptisme. By it, we are, that we are. And, at it, we shall not fail, but heare, There is a Holy Ghost. Expres mention of Him, is directly given in charge, in the set form of Baptisme, prescribed by our SAVIOUR: That all should be (as we all are) baptized, in the name

Mat. 28. 19. of the Father, the Sonne and the Holy Ghost.

Yea, I adde further: He could no better refer them; than to baptisme. For, a special prerogative hath the Holy Ghost, in our baptisme, above the other two Persons. That Laver, is His Laver properly; where, we are not only to be baptized into Him (as into the Tit 3. 5. other two) but also even to be baptized with Him: which is proper, to him alone. For, be-

Joh. 3. 5. sides the Water, we are there, to be born anew of the Holy Ghost also, else is there no entring for us into the kingdome of God.

2. Cant. Eunom. l. 2 De Spirit. Sanct. This for Baptisme. But let me also tell you a saying: It is St. Basils, and well worth your remembring. He beginneth with, In hoc baptizamur, and proceedeth three degrees further, all rising from thence naturally: they be but the train of baptisme.

1. First. Et quomodo baptizamur, ita & credimus. As we are baptized, so we beleeve. As is our baptisme, so is our belief. And our beleefe, is there (at our baptisme) repeated from point to point. A point whereof, is, I beleeve in the Holy Ghost, And, we desire to be baptized in that faith. There He is now again, at our baptisme.

Yea, before we come so farre: even, at Christs conceiving, there we heare of Him first, Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost. So, three several times, we there hear of Him. 1 Which was conceived by the Holy Ghost. 2 I beleeve in the Holy Ghost. and 3 In the name of the Holy

1 Cor. 13. 2. Ghost. At our baptisme, all three. And in the mouth of three witnesses, is every point sufficently estabished.

2. Saint Basil proceeds: Et quomodo credimus, ita & glorificamus. As from Baptisme, to Beleef: So from beleeving, to giving glory. And there, he flatly avoweth (which all the Christian world knew to be true, nor was there ever Heretik found, so bold as to deny it) That the Δοξολογία (as they call it) that is, the use of saying, Glory be to the Father, and the Sonne and the Holy Ghost; this form of concluding Psalmes, and Hymnes, and thanksgivings, was ever received, and retained in the Church, from the beginning; as with us, still it is. So was Baptism, so was thanks for the baptized party (the new member of the Church;) so, all concluded. So that way, we hear of Him there, again.

3. Yet one more, and it is His last. Et quomodo glorificamus, sic & benedicimus. As we glorifie GOD so we blesse men: As we give glory to Him: so we receive blessing from Him. How? the form is often heard, and well known, it is the Apostles: The grace of Christ our Lord, the

2 Cor. 13. 13. Love of GOD His Father; Communio, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost, to be with us. So, after Baptism; So, after Sermon; So, is the congregation ever dismissed. Then, there we glorifie Him.

And

And in Him we there are bleſſed. And ſo, we hear of Him, once more; quòd ſit, that a Holy Ghoſt there is.

Upon the matter: no Baptiſme; no Belief, GOD no glory, men no bleſſing, but ſtill we hear of Him. So as, if any but ſee baptiſme, hear but the Creed, be at the daily Service, hear the Church rendring glory to GOD, receiving bleſſing from the Biſhop or Prieſt: by ſome of theſe, or all of theſe, they cannot chooſe but hear of the Holy Ghoſt. There is then no ſaying, for us, Sed neque audivimus: Away with that, And ſay with Saint Baſil, In hoc baptizamur, there we begin, Et quomodo 1 baptizamur ſic credimus, 2 Et quomodo credimus ſic glorificamus, 3 Et quomodo glorificamus ſic benedicimus. So, we are 1 baptized, in Him; 2 and as we are baptized, ſo we believe; and 3 as we believe, ſo glorifie we God; and 4 as we glorifie God, ſo bleſs we men; bleſs, and are bleſſed. Theſe four, they are all here, and they are not far ſet, they have no curious ſpeculation in them, they will ſerve for any honeſt or good hearted Chriſtian, to reſt in, and they need go no further, than In quo ergo baptizati eſtis.

Thus, we are referred, and we know, where we are ſure to hear of Him. But, if we ſtay a little upon [In quo baptizati] and look better into it, this is not all, but we ſhall find further, not only that ſuch an one there is, but take more perfect notice of Him; And firſt, that He is GOD. And by no other, but by the ſame ſteps we went before. 2 That He is GOD.

GOD, firſt. For that, we cannot be baptized into any name, but GOD'S alone, the Apoſtle diſputes it at large, 1 Cor. 1. that it cannot be, that it is not lawful, to be baptized into S. Peters name, or into his, or into any name elſe, but GOD'S only. But, in His name, we are baptized: even in the name of the Holy Ghoſt, that, proves Him GOD. 1.

GOD, ſecondly. For we believe in Him. We there profeſs it. Et nemini Chriſtianorum unquam dubium fuit; nos in Deum, non in Creaturam, credere (ſaith Athanaſius ad Epiſcopos Afric.) Never any Chriſtian doubted of this, that we believe not in any Creature, but in GOD alone. Believing then in Him, we acknowledge Him to be GOD. 2.

GOD, thirdly. For, we aſcribe to Him glory. And glory is proper to GOD only: So proper, that He ſaith expreſly, Alteri non dabo, He will not part with it, to any other. But we render Him glory, and With the Father and the Son, pariter together, He is worſhipped and glorified: Therefore, GOD with them, even in that reſpect. 3. Eſay 42.8.

Laſtly, GOD, from bleſſing alſo: for, that is one of Gods peculiars: To bleſs in His name: by putting His name, upon children, old and young, and upon the Congregation, to bleſs them. But, with His name, we bleſs, no leſs, than with the reſt. Therefore, as they, ſo He; GOD above all; as to bleſs, ſo to be bleſſed for ever. 4. Num. 6 27.

And upon theſe four we reſt. Theſe four, 1 To be baptized into Him, 2 To believe in Him, 3 To aſcribe glory to Him, 4 To bleſs by Him, or in His name, They are acts, ſuch acts, as cannot be given to any, but to GOD only; and ſo evidently, we there heare of Him, that He is GOD alſo. And ſuch are the two acts, in the Creed of Conſtantinople, To be Lord and giver of life, and To ſpeak by the Prophets. Such are many other attributes, and works (that cannot agree to any, but GOD) aſcribed to the Holy Ghoſt; which might be, and which elſewhere have been alledged: But now we are to keep us to our Baptiſme, and go no further.

And if we will ſtay yet, but a little, at our Baptiſme; and hearken well: as we hear that He is GOD; ſo ſhall we, that, He is GOD in unity. For there, we hear but, In nomine, but, of one name. Now as the Apoſtle reaſoneth (Gal. 3. 16.) Abrahæ dictæ ſunt promiſſiones, & ſemini ejus. Non dicit Seminibus, quaſi in multis; ſed tanquam in uno, Semini ejus. To Abraham and his ſeed, were the promiſes made. He ſaith not, To the ſeeds, as of many; but to his ſeed, as of one. So we, are baptized, Non in nominibus, quaſi multis, ſed, in nomine, quaſi uno: not in the names, as of many, but in the Name, as of one. One name, and one nature, or eſſence. Unum ſumus (ſaith CHRIST) of two of them: Unum ſunt, ſaith Saint John, of all three. This we hear there. 3 GOD in unity. Joh. 10.30. 1 Joh. 5.6.

Unum ſunt; but not unus. For, as from the name, we reduce the unity: So, from the number (Three) do we, the Trinity. One in name and nature: yet diſtinct between themſelves. Diſtinct in number, as in our baptiſme. The Father, Sonne, Holy Ghoſt. And that number, diſtinct to the ſenſe, as at Chriſts Baptiſm, the Father in the voice, the Sonne in the flood, the Holy Ghoſt in the ſhape of a Dove. And that ſhewed to be, a diſtinction of perſons, in Chriſts promiſe. 1 Ego, the Perſon of Chriſt: 2 Patrem, the Perſon of the Father, 3 and Paracletum, the Perſon of the Holy Ghoſt. The Holy Ghoſt (I ſay) diſtinct from the Father; The Lord and His Spirit hath ſent me, Eſay 48. 16. From the Sonne Paracletum alium, by alium, the Sonne one, He another. And diſtinct, as a Perſon: For (to omit other perſonal acts, which properly agree to none but a reaſonable nature determined: As [a] To be the Lord, [b] To ſpeak, [c] teach, [d] reprove, comfort, [e] be a witneſs, [f] place Biſhops, [g] make Decrees in council:) That which we hear of at our Baptiſm, aſcribed to Him, to conceive the humane nature of Chriſt, is an act ſo perſonal, as, in propriety of ſpeech, can agree to none, or be affirmed of none, but of an intire Perſon. This we heare. 4 Diſtinct, Joh. 14.16. In Perſon. Joh 14 16. [a] 2 Cor. 17.18. [b] Act. 11.12. 13.2. [c] 1 Joh. 2,17. [d] Joh. 4. 16. 16.7.8. [f] Act. 20.28. [g] 15. 28.

A perſon then, diſtinct by Himſelf, yet (as a perſon) not, of or from Himſelf. And, this we hear, from the very term it ſelf [of Spiritus.] For even as filius alicujus, ſo Spiritus, alicujus, eſt, ab aliquo: proceed from Him, whoſe Son, or Spirit they are; So the Son of GOD, and Spirit 4 Proceeding.

rit of GOD, do from GOD: GOD of GOD, either. Eo ipſo than, that He is Spiritus Domini. He proceeds without more ado.

5 From the Father and the Son. Joh. 15. 26. Joh. 20. 22. Joh. 16. 13, 14.

Proceeds: and from both. 1 From the Father, the Conſtantinopolitan Council, from the expreſs words, who proceedeth from the Father: 2 From the Sonne; The Council of Toledo the eight, from the viſible ſign, where the Sonne breathed on the Apoſtles, and willed them, from Him to receive the Holy Ghoſt. And Non à ſemetipſo loquetur, ſed de meo accipiet, ſt eweth fully as much. Briefly· Sent by the Father, John 14. 26. Filioque, and by the Sonne too, John 15. 26. And ſo, the Spirit of the Father, Matth. 10. 30. Filiique, and by the Son too, Gal. 4. 6.

6 Breath-wiſe. Pſa. 104. 30.

Proceeding from them; and not by way of generation: (That is Chriſts proper; He is often termed, the Only Begotten, and ſo, none but He) but by way of, Emitte Spiritum, Emiſſion, ſending it forth: that is (out of the very body of the word ſpirit) by ſpiration, or breathing. One breathing, yet from both: even as the breath (which carrieth the name and reſemblance of it) is one, yet from both the noſtrils, in the body natural.

All theſe are expreſſed, or implied, in our Baptiſme. And now laſtly (to return home to our purpoſe) proceeds from them, to come to us: is breathed from them, to inſpire us: Sent, by them, to be given us: Per Spiritum ſanctum qui datus eſt nobis, by the Holy Ghoſt which is given us: given to receive, and ſo, to be received of us. Which openeth the way, and maketh the paſſage over, to the ſecond queſtion, Si recepiſtis, Have ye received? And ſo, (as we ſee) the two parts, follow well and kindly, one upon the other. For, this now, is the laſt thing to be heard of Him; that, it is not enough, to hear of Him: but, that we are to receive Him alſo: and to give account to St. Paul, that we have ſo done.

Rom. 5. 5.

So then, we have now cleared the firſt queſtion, at our Baptiſm: and have heard. 1. That ſuch a one there is. 2. And that He is GOD. 3. GOD, in unity of name. 4. Yet, in number, diſtinct; and diſtinct as a Perſon by Himſelf. 5. A perſon by Himſelf, yet not of Himſelf, but proceeding. 6. Proceeding from both Perſons; that ſtand before Him, the Father and the Son. 7. And that breath-wiſe. And ſo, we have done with that. But yet, we have not done, though. For, the other queſtion muſt be anſwered too; no remedy, it imports us. For, as good not hear of Him at all, as hear, and not receive Him.

II. The ſecond part.

Thither then, I come. Si Recepiſtis? Have ye received the Holy Ghoſt? Wherein theſe three points. 1. That we are liable to this queſtion, and to the affirmative part of it, that we have, and ſo are bound to receive Him: For ſo, ſi, preſuppoſeth. 2. If we ſo have, how to know it. 3. If we have not, how to compaſs it.

1. The neceſſity.

How much it importeth us, to receive Him, we may eſteem, by this, that S. Paul makes it his article of Imprimis, begins with it, at the firſt, as the moſt needful point.

Two things are in it. Firſt, that receive we muſt. Secondly, that it muſt be the Holy Ghoſt, we are to receive.

1. Of receiving.

Receive? What need we receive any Spirit, or receive at all? May we not, out of our ſelves, work that, will ſerve our turns? No: For holy we muſt be, if ever we ſhall reſt in His holy Hill: for without holineſs, none ſhall ever ſee GOD. But holy we cannot be, by any habit moral, or acquiſite. There is none ſuch in all moral Philoſophy. As, we have our faith, by illumination: ſo, have we our holineſs, by inſpiration: receive both; both from without.

Heb. 12. 14.

To a habit the Philoſophers came, and ſo Chriſtians may: but that will not ſerve, they are to go farther. Our habits acquiſite will lift us no farther, than they did the Heathen men: no farther than the place, where they grow, that is, earth and nature. They cannot work beyond their kind (nothing can;) nor riſe higher, than their ſpring. It is not therefore Si habitum acquiſiſtis: but, ſi ſpiritum recepiſtis, we muſt go by.

2. Of receiving the Holy Ghoſt. 1 Pet. 1. 4.

But then, why recepiſtis Spiritum Sanctum, the Holy Ghoſt? No receiving will ſerve, but of Him? The reaſon is, it is nothing here below, that we ſeek: but, to heaven we aſpire. Then, if to heaven we ſhall, ſomething from heaven, muſt thither exalt us. If Partakers of the divine nature, we hope to be (as, great and precious promiſes we have that we ſhall be) that can be no otherwiſe, than by receiving one, in whom the divine nature is. He being received, imparts it to us, and ſo makes us conſortes divinæ naturæ; and that is the HOLY GHOST.

For as an abſolute neceſſity there is, that we receive the Spirit, elſe can we not live the life of grace; and ſo conſequently, never come to the life of glory. Recepiſtis Spiritum gives the life natural. Recepiſtis Spiritum Sanctum, gives the life ſpiritual.

1 Cor. 15. 45.

1. There holdeth a correſpondence, between the natural and the Spiritual. The ſame way the world was made, in the beginning, by the Spirit moving upon the waters of the deep: the very ſame, was the world new made, (the Chriſtian world, or Church) by the ſame Spirit moving on the waters of baptiſme.

2. And look, how in the firſt Adam, we come to this preſent life, by ſending the breath of life, into our bodyes. So, in the ſecond, come we to our hold, in the other life, by ſending the Holy Ghoſt into our ſoules.

3. By that Spirit, which CHRIST was conceived by; by the ſame Spirit the Chriſtian alſo muſt be. Not to be avoided, abſolutely neceſſary all theſe; it cannot be otherwiſe.

Ano-

Another neceſſity of His receiving. For, [a] The houſe will not ſtand empty long. One Spirit or other, holy, or unholy, will enter and take it up. We ſee, the greateſt part of the world by far, are entred upon, and held, ſome by the [b] ſpirit of ſlumber; that paſs their time (as it were in a ſleep) without any ſenſe of GOD, or Religion at all. Others by the [c] ſpirit of giddineſs; that reele to and fro, and every year are of a new Religion. Others, by [d] the ſpirit of error; given over to believe lyes through ſtrong illuſion. And they that ſeem to know the truth, ſome with the [e] unclean ſpirit, ſome with [f] the ſpirit of envy, or ſome ſuch (for they are many:) that, a kind of neceſſity there is to entertain and receive the good ſpirit; that ſome or other evil ſpirit, from GOD, ſeize not upon us. From which GOD deliver us. 2.

A third neceſſity there is, we receive Him: for that, with Him, we ſhall receive, whatever we want, or need to receive, for our ſouls good. And here, fall in all His Offices. By Him, [g] we are regenerate at the firſt, in our baptiſm. By Him after [h] confirmed, in the impoſition of hands. By Him after [i] renewed to repentance, when we fall away, by a ſecond impoſition of hands. By Him, [k] taught all our life long; that we know not; [l] put in minde of what we forget; [m] ſtirred up in what we are dull; [n] helped in our prayers; [o] relieved in our infirmities, comforted in our heavineſs: in a word, [p] ſealed to the day of our Redemption, and [q] raiſed up again in the laſt day. Go all along; even from our Baptiſm, to our very Reſurrection, and we cannot miſs Him; but receive Him we muſt. 3.

And on the other ſide, Si non recepiſtis, without Him received, receive what we will, nothing will do us good: Receive the Word, it is but [r] a killing letter; receive Baptiſm, it is but [s] Johns Baptiſm; but a [t] barren element; receive His fleſh, [t] it profiteth nothing; receive CHRIST, it will not do; for [u] Qui non habet Spiritum CHRISTI, hic non eſt ejus, He that hath not His Spirit is none of His. So, CHRIST renounces him, He hath no part in him. To receive CHRIST, and not the HOLY GHOST, is to no purpoſe. To conclude, if we receive not Him, we be but [x] animales, ſpiritum non habentes; only men of ſoul, having not the Spirit, [y] Et animalis homo, the natural man that never received the Spirit, neither perceiveth, nor receiveth the things of God, hath nothing to do with them. So that, Spiritum non habentes, is enough, and there needs no more (but only that) to condemn us. All this, laid together, we ſee, Recepiſtis ſpiritum, is no more than needs; and it muſt needs have an anſwer.

The next point is, how to certifie our ſelves, whether we have received this Spirit or no. I ſay 1 Whether the Spirit, firſt: 2 And then, whether that Spirit be the Holy Ghoſt, after. 2. If we have received, how to know it. 1 Whether received the Spirit.

Of the Spirit the ſigns are familiar. For if it be in us, (as the natural Spirit doth) At the heart it will beat: At the mouth, it will breath; At the pulſe it will be felt. Some one of theſe may; but all theſe will not deceive us.

At the heart we begin; for that is firſt, [a] Dabo vobis cor novum, & ſpiritum novum. A new heart and a new ſpirit we ſhall find. [b] We ſhall be renewed in the ſpirit of our mind. Sane novum ſuperveniſſe Spiritum, nova deſideria demonſtrant (ſaith Bernard:) That a new ſpirit is received, no better way, to know, than by new thoughts, and deſires. That he that watches well, the currant of his deſires and thoughts, may know, whether, and what ſpirit it is, he is led by, old or new. Therefore our SAVIOUR CHRIST breathed into them, when he firſt gave them the HOLY GHOST, that they might receive Him, there within, even [c] in viſceribus, in the inward parts. [d] A timore tuo Domine concepimus ſpiritum ſalutis: We ſhall know the Spirit is conceived, by the fear of God in our hearts; it is, as the Syſtole or drawing in to refrain us from evil. And we ſhall know it, by [e] Charitas Dei diffuſa eſt in cordibus noſtris, the love of GOD there ſhed abroad in our hearts. Which is, as the diaſtole or dilating it out, to all, that good is. 1 The heart.

But then, this every one may ſay; All is well within: and their word muſt be taken, we cannot gain-ſay them. For no man knows, in ſo ſaying, whether they ſay true or no. Therefore we go ye further, and ſay: Idem eſt vitæ & vocis organon, the breath that ſerves us for life, or to live by; the ſame ſerves us alſo for the voice, or to ſpeak by. So, that way ye ſhall know it. For if [f] in ore ipſorum non eſt ſpiritus; no breath be to be perceived in their mouths, if they [g] ſpeak not through their throats, they are but Idols and no better. Will ye ſee it at the Mouth? [h] Credidi, propter quod locutus ſum, ſaid he: And habentes eundem Spiritum, if we have the ſame ſpirit, (ſaith the Apoſtle) we ſhall do no leſs. This we know for certain, that upon this day, the Holy Ghoſt came in the ſhape of tongues, and they are for ſpeech. And this likewiſe, that, upon the receiving the Holy Ghoſt, theſe here (in the Text) and generally all other, ſpeak, and that with new tongues, not ſuch as they ſpake with before. The miracle is ceaſed: but the moral, holdeth ſtill; where the Holy Ghoſt is received, there is ever a change in the dialect, a change from [k] curſed, unclean, corrupt communication, unto [l] ſuch as becometh Saints. 2 The ſpeech.

But then again, becauſe even birds may be, and are ſometimes taught, to ſpeak, (and that, holy phraſes for a need;) therefore further yet to the pulſe we go, and touch it. To the hand, to the work, and enquire of that. The Holy Ghoſt was firſt given and received by the [m] breath inward, for the heart. Then, by [n] fiery tongues, for the ſpeech. But ever after, and here in this place, the Holy Ghoſt (we know) was given and received, by [o] laying on of hands: and that, to admoniſh us, that by impoſita, and by admota manus, by lifting up, and laying to our hands, we may know, we have received Him: we have had laying on of hands, if we uſe laying or putting our hands to any good work. 3 The Work.

o Act. 8. 17.

As for what is in the heart; [p] Quis cognoscit illud? who knows it? not we our selves: our own hearts, oft deceive us. And there is [q] a verbis confitentur, confess at the mouth, with a factis negant, deny with the deeds: and that deceives too. But there is [r] opus fidei, the work of faith, from [s] fides quæ operatur, faith that worketh, that is, Saint Pauls faith; that can [t] shew it self by his working, that is, Saint James faith: and there, may well be the Spirit. But without works, there, it may not be. For without works, S. James is flat, it is but [u] a dead faith, the carcass of faith, and there is no Spirit in it. No Spirit, if no work. For usq; adeo proprium est, operari Spiritui, ut nisi operetur, nec sit: so kindly it is, for the Spirit to be working, as if it work not, it is not. There is none, to work: Spectrum est, non Spiritus, a flying shadow it is, a Spirit it is not, if work it do not.

p Jer. 17.9. q Tit. 1.16. r 1 Thes. 1.3. s Gal. 5.6. t Jam. 2.18. u Jam. 2.24.

And yet I cannot deny, works there may be and motion, and yet no Spirit: as, in artificial Engines, Watches, and Jacks, and such like. And a certain artificial thing there is in Religion (we call it Hypocrisie) that by certain pins and gins, makes shew of certain works and motions, as if there were Spirit, but surely Spirit there is none in them. Vain men they are, that boast of the Spirit without the work: Hypocrites they are, that counterfeit the work, without the Spirit. You shall easily discover these works, that they come not from the Spirit, by the two signs, in Psame 51. נבון and גריבה, constant, and [x] free. They that come from cunning, and not from the Spirit, ye shall know them by this, they be every foot out; they are not constant, they continue not uniform long, and when the barrel is about, or the plummets down, they stay. But howsoever, long they will not hold, but vanish like the cloud, dry away like the dew of the morning, לאבריה no constancy.

Vers. 10. 12. Hosea 6.4.

And ye shall know them again, by the other note גריבה which makes the difference, between the Creatures, and the Spirit. For the Creatures are produced from without: The Spirit doth emanare, proceed from within. So these, they have principium motus ab extra, that that makes them go, is something, some Engine without; they flow not freely, they come not kindly, as from within לאבריה no natural motion, Ingenious but not ingenuous. Ingenuity and constancy, the free proceeding, the constant continuing of them, will soon disclose, whether they come from a Spirit or no; will soon shew they come from the art of Hypocrisie, not from the Spirit of true piety.

2 Whether received the Holy Ghost.

And these will serve, to know whether from a Spirit. Now, whether that Spirit be Holy or no. For divers times doth the Apostle distinguish, and say: We have not received this Spirit, but that; as Rom. 8. 15. 2 Tim. 1. 7. and namely, 1 Cor. 2. 12. that we have not received the Spirit of the world, but the holy Spirit which is of God. This same Spirit of the world, it is sacer Spiritus (for there is no touching it) but not sanctus. Sacer, as he is called sacra fames: for sancta fames he could never have called it. That Spirit of the world, be it from policy, or be it from Philosophy, both are res sacræ (and sanctæ also may be, as they may be used) but of themselves secular they are, and from men: Holy, or from heaven they are not. But this Spirit, this Winde must blow from heaven, not from our caves here beneath. And so you shall soon discern it. Do but mark the coasts, whence and whither it bloweth, the motive and the mark, and you shall distinguish it straight. For if, from a secular reason; if, to an end beneath; virtus ab imo it may be, virtus ab alto it is not.

Act 2.2.

For example, I do forbear to sinne: what is my motive? Because (as Micah saith) it is against Omri's statutes, some penal law; I shall incur such a penalty, be liable to such an Action, if I do not: It is well; but all this, is but the spirit of the world: E prætorio, non sanctuario, bloweth out of Westminster-Hall, not out of the sanctuary.

Luk. 24.49. Mic. 6. 16.

I go further, to a better Spirit; Though there were no penal Law, I forbear to sinne, because it is a brutish thing, and so against reason: and ignominious, and so against my credit and reputation. Nay then, further yet; because, I shall thereby endanger my soul, for that it will bar me of heaven, or be a means to bring me to hell (for the Heathen men took notice of both these places:) all this while this is no more, than the Spirit of the Philosophy schooles will teach: no more than might be taught in the School of Tyrannus, before Saint Paul ever came in it. It bloweth (this wind) out of Aristotles Gallery, not out of the Sanctuary yet: E Lycenio, non sanctuario. But, if with eye to GOD, I forbear: because in so doing, I shall offend Him, and do evil, against the rule of his Justice, the reverence and Majesty of His Presence, the awful regard of His Power, the kind respect of His Bounty and Goodness; This now, cometh from the sanctuary, this wind bloweth from heaven; this is right sanctus indeed.

C. Ver. 9.

Verse 25. Gen. 11.9.

This is the Line. Again, look to the Level. If it be Demetrius's end, here in the Chapter, Isthinc est acquisitio nobis, by this we have our advantage. If it be theirs, paremus nobis nomen, so I shall make my name famous upon earth, or any of that level, it is but of the world: sacer spiritus, not sanctus. But, if of our well doing, GOD His will be the center, and His glory the circumference: we do it, not that our will, but His be done; not, our name, but his be hallowed: the act is holy; and the Spirit is of the same kind. Otherwise, philosophical, politick, moral it may be: theological, religious, holy it is not. Our line and our level, or inducements, or impediments to our doings, mark them, what coast they come from, and whether they bend, ye shall easily conclude; as before, whether recepistis Spiritum; so here, whether recepistis sanctum or no.

And

And thus we know, whether we have received. But, if we have not, how then? How may we (by the grace of GOD) so dispose our selves, as we may receive Him. And now we are come to the duty of the day: For this, is the day of His receiving.

2. If we have not received, how to procure it.

The ways are two: 1 One, that we lay no bars to keep Him from us. 2. The other, that we use all good means to allure Him to us.

First, that we fall not into Saint Stephens challenge, that we * resist not the Holy Ghost, and His Coming. And resist Him we do, if we lay any impediments in His way; nay, if we remove them not: As the manner is, as they do, that draw the Curtains, or open the Casements, that would take in breath.

1 The removing impediments. * Act. 7. 51.

Of these, I find three of note: quit they must be all, or no receiving Him.

One, and a chief one, is Pride. For the HOLY GHOST will not [a] rest, but upon the lowly, saith Esay: nor GOD, give grace, but to the humble [b] (saith Solomon.) That we therefore pray to Him, that giveth grace to the humble, to give us the grace to be humble, that so we may be meet to receive Him. For, at His first coming He came as a Dove, and did [c] light upon Him, that was Himself, humble and meek, like a Dove, and willeth us to learn that lesson of Him, as that which will make us meet to receive the Dove which He received, whose qualities are like His, of a meek and quiet spirit; which howsoever the world reckon of it, is with GOD a thing much set by.

1 Pride. a Esay 57. 15. b Prov 3. 34. c Mat. 3. 16. d Mat. 11. 29. 1 Pet. 3. 4.

In the beginning, the spirit moved upon the waters and at Baptism, it doth so: And our SAVIOUR CHRIST speaking of the graces of the spirit, doth it in terms of water: and water (we know) will ever to the lowest place. Pride then is a bar, and humility a disposing means, to the prime receiving of the HOLY GHOST. Joh. 7. 39.

Another impediment is Carnality. For spiritual, and carnal, are flat opposite. Quod sabbum est, mundum est, ever: No holiness without cleanness. So that, the unclean spirit must be cast out, yet the HOLY GHOST received. A clean box it must be, that is to hold this Ointment. The Dove lights on no carrion. Into our Bodies, as a Temple, He is to come: as into a stewes, he will not. And that which we said right now, of water, we here repeat again. The spirit in the beginning moved there, and at Baptism came thither again; and his gifts are as streames of water; and water (we know) is a cleanser. To keep our selves clean, is a means; to pour our selves out into riot and excess, is a bar, keeps Him far away from us.

2 Carnality. 1 Joh. 2. 27. 1 Cor. 6. 19.

But the third is ex totâ substantia, against the HOLY GHOST: and that is, the spirit in us, that (as Saint James saith) lusteth after envy; after envy, or malice, or whatsoever savoureth of the gall of bitterness; in which whosoever are, S. Peter saith plainly, they have no part or fellowship, either in giving, or receiving of the HOLY GHOST. The HOLY GHOST, as, in the body, He expresseth by the breath, and in that form given by CHRIST: so in the soul, by mutual and reciprocal love; which is (as it were) the lives-breath of the soul. So is His Nature, and so is His Sign: the Dove brought an Olive branch, and that is the sign of love and amity: and so is His Office, to shed abroad love in our hearts: And how can that be received, if malice be not first of all voided out? They are as opposite; as S. Lukes fire from heaven, and S. James fire from hell: one must be quenched, or the other will not burn.

3 Malice. Acts 8. 23. Gen. 8. 11. Rom. 5. 5. Acts 2. 3. Jam. 5. 6.

Now these being removed, 1 Pride, 2 Lust, and 3 Malice, and so a place made; we are to invite the Spirit, by all good means he loveth, and as it were to gather wind as much as we can. To that end to get us to the place, and to visit it oft, where this aire breatheth: and, that is (as we find; (Numb. XI. XVI.) The door of the Sanctuary. If any be stirring, if any be to be found, there it is. No place on earth which the Holy Spirit more frequenteth, hath duer commerce with, than the Holy places, where the remembrance of His name is put; for thither He will come to us and bless us with His blessing.

2 The using the means. Exod. 19. 24.

Being there, it is but an easie lesson, yet David thinks meet to teach it us, by his example; Os meum aperui, & Spiritum attraxi, To open our mouth and draw it in. And that opening is by prayer. Zachary calleth it Spiritum precum; the spirit, that is, the active inspiration or attraction of it, where we express our desire to draw him in. Which very attraction or desire hath a promise, by the mouth of our Saviour Christ Himself; that His heavenly Father will give the Holy Ghost αἴτουσιν αὐτὸν to them that will make petition, seek and sue, open their mouth, and pray for it.

1 Prayer. Psal. 119. 131. Zach. 12. 10. Luke 11. 13.

Then secondly, look, how the Breath and the Voice in naturalibus go together; even so do the spirit and the Word in the practice of Religion. The [a] HOLY GHOST is Christs spirit, and [b] Christ is the Word. And of that Word, the Word [c] that is preached to us, is an abstract. There must then needs be a nearness, and alliance, between the one and the other. And indeed (but by our default) The Word and the Spirit (saith Esay) shall never faile, or ever part; but one be received, when the other is. We have a plain example of it this day, in S. Peters auditory (Act. 2.) and another, in Cornelius and his family (Acts 10.) even in the Sermon time, the Holy Ghost fell upon them, and they so received Him.

2 The word. a Rom. 8. 9. b Joh. 1. 14. c 1 Pet. 1. 15. Esay 59. 21.

Yea, we may see it by this, that, in the hearing of the Word, where He is not received, yet He maketh proffers, and worketh somewhat onward. Upon Felix, took him with a shaking, and further would have gone, but that he put it over to a convenient time, which convenient time never came. And upon Agrippa likewise, somewhat it did move him, and more it would, but that he was content to be a Christian, ὀλίγῳ, to take his Religion, by a little (as it were upon a knives-point) and was afraid to be a Christian in multo, too much a Christian.

Acts 24. 25. Acts 26. 28.

That

That we ſee not this effect, that with the Word the Spirit is not received as it would be, the reaſon is, it is no ſooner gotten, than it is loſt. We ſhould find this effect, if after we had heard the Word, we could get us a little out of the noiſe about us, and withdraw our ſelves ſome whither, where we might be by our ſelves, That when we have heard Him ſpeak to us, we might hear what He would ſpeak in us. When we have heard the voice before us, we might hear the other behinde us, hæc eſt via. When, the voice that ſoundeth; the other of Job, vocem audivi in ſilentio: there, hear Him, reprove, teach, comfort us, within. Upon which Texts are grounded the ſoliloquies, the communing with our own ſpirits, which are much praiſed by the Ancients; to this purpoſe: for, in meditatione exardeſcit ignis, by a little muſing or meditation, the fire would kindle and be kept alive, which otherwiſe will dye. And certain it is, that many ſparkles kindled, for want of this, go out again ſtraight: for, as faſt as it is written in our hearts, it is wiped out again: as faſt as the ſeed is ſown, it is picked up by the fowles again, and ſo our receiving is in vain, the Word and the Spirit are ſevered, which elſe would keep altogether.

3. The Sacrament

Laſtly, as the Word and the Spirit; ſo the Fleſh and the Spirit go together. Not all fleſh, but this fleſh, the fleſh that was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, this is never without the Holy Ghoſt, by whom it was conceived: ſo that, receive one, and receive both. Ever with this blood there runneth ſtill an arttery, with plenty of Spirit in it: which maketh, that we eat there eſcam ſpiritualem, a ſpiritual meat, and that in that Cup, we be made drink of the Spirit. There is not only impoſitio manuum, but after it, poſitio in manus; putting on of the hands, but putting it into our hands. Impoſitio manuum, putting on of hands, in Accepit panem & calicem: And poſitio in manus, putting it into our hands, in Accipite, edite, bibite. And ſo, we in caſe, to receive body, blood, Spirit and all, if our ſelves be not in fault.

1 Cor. 10. 3. 12. 13.

All together joyntly.

Now then if we will invite the ſpirit indeed; and if each of theſe, by it ſelf in ſeveral, be thus effectual to procure it: put them all, and bind them all together, Accipite verba; take to your words, Hoſees words, words of earneſt invocation. Suſcipite inſitum verbum, receive or take to you the Word (S. James word) graffed into you, by the Office of Preaching. Accipite corpus, accipite ſanguinem; take the holy myſteries of His body and blood, and the ſame, the holy arteries of His bleſſed Spirit. Take all theſe in one, (the attractive of Prayer; the Word, which is ſpirit and life; the bread of life, and the cup of Salvation:) and is there not great hope, we ſhall anſwer S. Pauls queſtion, as he would have it anſwered, affirmativè? Have ye received? Yes; we have received him. Yes ſure. Then, if ever; thus, if by any way. For on earth, there is no ſurer way, than to joyn all theſe: and He ſo to be received, if at all.

Hoſ. 14.7. Jam. 1.21.

So, we began with hearing outward, and we end with receiving inward. We began with one Sacrament, Baptiſm; we end with the other, the Euchariſt. We began with that, where we heard of him; and we end with this other, where we may and ſhall (I truſt) receive him. And Almighty GOD grant, we ſo may receive Him at this good time; as in His good time, we may be received by Him, thither, whence He this day came of purpoſe to bring us, even to the holy places made without hands, which is His heavenly kingdom, with God the Father who prepared it, and God the Son who purchaſed it for us. SERMON
BEFORE THE
Kings Majesty,
AT WHITE-HALL,
On the XXIII. of May, A. D. MDCXIII,
being WHIT-SUNDAY.

EPHES. Chap. IV. Ver. XXX.

Nolite contristari, &c.

And grieve not (or, be not willing to grieve,) the Holy Spirit of God; by whom ye are sealed unto the day of Redemption.

THis Request, or Counsel, or Caution, or Precept (or what ye will call it) of the Apostles, is sure very reasonable: The Holy Ghost, by whom we are sealed to the day of Redemption, that we would not grieve Him.

Not the HOLY GHOST. He is the Spirit of the Great and High God: And so, for His Dignities sake. Not Him again, as by whose means we have our signature against the great Day of Redemption: And so, even for His benefits sake. These two, 1 for His Greatness, or 2 for His Goodness; Greatness in Himself, Goodness to us: For either of these, or for both of these, we would be so respective of Him, as not to grieve Him, Not to grieve Him. He might well, and (as one would think) should rather have said yield him all cause of joy and contentment: It had been but reason, so. Now, that, He doth not move: only this; that we would not minister unto Him any cause of grievance: And what could He say less? To such a Person, and for such a Benefit, it is but even a small pleasure. If not rejoyce him, yet Grieve him not. And it is so reasonable, I see not how well it can be Denyed Him.

Now then as we see it is but reasonable (this Request;) So is it exceeding fit for this time. It is for the Holy Ghost: And this is the Holy Ghost's Feast. It mentioneth His Sealing (for a reason:) And this is (as I may call it) His first Sealing-day: this the day, on which the Spirit of GOD first set His Seal upon the Fathers of our faith, the blessed Apostles. On which He then did, and on which He ever will, though not in like manner, yet in like effect (it being His own day) visit us from on high, if by some grievance or other, we disappoint Him not, and so drive Him away.

So, what easier request than this, Nolite contristari? And what fitter time to move for the Holy Ghost, than upon His own Feast, and upon His Sealing-day? And this is the Summe,

The

The diviſion. The parts fall out evidently two, 1 The Party, for whom this Requeſt is preferred: 2 And a Duty, or (it is not worth making a duty) rather a common ordinary Courteſie to be done Him. 1. The Party, The Holy Spirit of GOD, by whom we are ſealed to the Day of Redemption. 2. The Duty (or what ye will call it) Nolite contriſtari.

I In the Party, two Motives there be: 1 His Perſon, and 2 His Benefit. 1. His Perſon in theſe: The Holy Spirit of GOD. 2. His Benefit in theſe: By whom ye are ſealed to the Day of Reaemption. His Perſon ſet forth in the original, with very great energy: ſuch, as our tongue is not able to expreſs it fully enough. For it is not Πνεῦμα ἅγιον Θεοῦ, but with greater emphaſis;

1. but three words, and three Articles, every word his ſeveral Article by it ſelf, τὸ πνεῦμα, τὸ ἅγιον, τοῦ Θεοῦ. The Spirit, not a Spirit; and not Holy, but The Holy; nor of GOD, Θεοῦ; but of ὁ Θεός, The GOD, that is, the only, living and true GOD. All, The's; never an A among them.

2. Then, His Bounty or Benefit vouchſafed us: By whom, we have our ſealing to the Day of Redemption. Wherein, theſe four points come to be weighed: 1. Of Redemption. Firſt, What and how it is. 2. Then, that it hath a Day; the Day of our Redemption. 3. That, againſt that Day, we are to be Sealed. 4. That, the Holy Ghoſt keepeth that Seal; and His Office, it is to paſs it to us. This is the Benefit.

Now, either of theſe is a Motive of it ſelf. 1 His Perſon: Grieve not the holy Spirit of GOD, and there ſtay: for, that, of it ſelf, is reaſon enough: 2 Or, leave out His Perſon, ſet that by, and ſay, but even, Him, Who ſeals unto you, ſo great a favour, as to ſave you, at the great Day: Him (be He what He will, GOD, or Man, Spirit or fleſh, holy or common) grieve Him not. This is reaſon enough too: Grieve Him not, for His own: If not for His own, yet not, for His Seals ſake.

II. The Duty followeth. To this Perſon great, and of great bounty beſide (to ſpeak as Naaman's Servants did to him) Si rem grandem dixiſſet Apoſtolus; if the Apoſtle had enjoyned us ſome great piece of ſervice, we ought not to have thought much of it. How much more then, when he ſaith, but this, Do not grieve Him (and there is all?) which is no poſitive, or actual piece of ſervice, of pains, or of peril; only a privative, of diſ-ſervice (as they call it) which is ever as little as can be required: Non contriſtari.

1. Non contriſtari: or at leaſt, Nolite contriſtari; for, there be two degrees: 1. That we
2. do it not. 2. That willingly we do it not. That we have a will not to do it. Which reading, offers more grace. For, much depends upon our willingneſſe, or not willingneſſe to it.

In both which, we have 1 firſt to weigh, whether we can grieve Him, or He be grieved: (that ſo we may underſtand the phraſe, and take it right.) 2 Then, how it is, we do it, and what thoſe grievances be; that ſo, we may take notice of them, and be careful to avoid them.

3. 3. Laſt of all, the fitting it to the Time and ſhewing it ſeaſonable. For, by occaſion of the Perſon, His Feaſt; and by occaſion of the day of Redemption, the Day of Sealing alſo will fall in; and the intended action, with it. Which (as we ſhall ſhew) is it ſelf a kind of Signature. Do it not; This time, do it not: It is His own Feaſt, now; It is His Sealing-day, this; Now then, Nolite contriſtari. Thus lie the Parts. Of which, that what ſhall be ſpoken, &c.

I. Grieve not.

TWo ſorts of perſons there be, that (if we be well adviſed) we would be loth to grieve: 1 Great Perſons; 2 and ſuch as carry the reputation of being Good. Not Great, in regard of their power: They may do us a diſpleaſure: The motive of fear. Not good, in regard of their bounty: Others are, and we may be, the better for them: the motive of hope. If He be Great, though He Seal us nothing, no wiſdom, to offend Him. If He be to ſeal us a favour (though otherwiſe He be not great) for His favours ſake favour Him ſo much, as grieve Him not. Either of theſe available; but where they meet, there is vis unita. Specially, if we add, In quo vos; that our parts be in it; and Signati eſtis, that either He already hath, or is ready to do it for us: The motive of love, and of the greateſt love, the love of our ſelves. Then it comes home indeed. Theſe three meet all in this Party. 1. He is τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον τοῦ Θεοῦ. 2. Sigillum habet. 3. In quo vos.

I. Not the Spirit of GOD.

I begin with Quantus, how great. He is the Spirit of GOD. And were it but the Spirit of man, our own Spirit; Sins of the greater ſize, would be forborne, as for other divers, ſo even for this reaſon, that they be gravamina ſpiritus, grievances againſt our own ſpirit; which, every one feels, whoſe conſcience is not ſeared. And if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Eſchew them, for that they breed ſingultum & ſcrupulum cordis, the up-braiding or yexing of the heart (as [a] Abigail excellently termeth it,) or (as [b] Solomon) vulnus ſpiritus, the wound, or gall of the Spirit; or (as [c] Eſay) compunctionem, the prick or ſting of conſcience; or (as our [d] Saviour Himſelf) a worme, which once bred, never dies, nor, never leaves gnawing: he had ſaid enough. But this, even the Heathen could have ſaid too.

The

The Apoſtle doth like an Apoſtle; tels us truly, there is a greater matter longs to it than ſo. There is a farre higher Spirit than ours, than any in man (our Spirit is nothing to it) the Spirit of GOD: they be grievances againſt it.

To ſpeak then of the Spirit of GOD: [a] GOD is a Spirit; and GOD hath a Spirit. Hath many, created, in His power, and at His command: but hath one, one above all, uncreated, intimum ſubſtantiæ, of His own ſubſtance: Known ever, by the article ὁ, (as S. Baſil obſerveth) the Spirit, the ſoveraigne Spirit: Styled ever, with this addition, His own Spirit, the Spirit not of any Saint, in concreto, or in abſtracto, but even of GOD himſelf. The Spirit of GOD. a Joh. 4.24. b Eſay 48.16.

Our Saviour CHRIST teacheth us, to take notice of Him, as we do of the Wind; By His effect. For the wind: it is a body of ayre, but ſo thin and ſubtile, as it is next neighbour to a Spirit. We ſee ſoul rule here in the world ſometimes, houſes blown down, trees blown up by the roots. When we ſee this, we know ſtraight, this cannot be done without ſome power. And that power (we are ſure) cannot ſubſiſt of it ſelf (it is an accident:) muſt (needs) have his inherence in ſome ſubſtance. That ſubſtance, if it be viſible, we call it a body: if inviſible, a Spirit. So our Saviour tels us, Spiritus eſt qui ſpirat; It is the Wind did this, blew all theſe down. Joh. 3.8.

And even ſo, of the Spirit of GOD, when (as upon this day) they that could ſcarce ſpeak one tongue well, on a ſudden, were able perfectly to ſpeak to every Nation under heaven, every one in his own tongue: this (we know) could not come to paſſe but by ſome power. And ſure we are, that power muſt have for His Subject, ſome ſubſtance: And not any viſible or bodily; Then, ſome Spirit it muſt be: And no Spirit in the world could effect this: And ſo the Spirit of GOD.

But the relation of theſe tongues depends upon S. Lukes credit. There was after, a more ſtrange and famous operation, which in all Stories we find. The Temples of Idols blown down all the world over: yet the world it ſelf blown quite about, turned up-ſide down (as it were) from Paganiſme, and the worſhip of Heathen gods to the truth of Chriſt in Religion. And that, maugre the ſpirit of the world, which bluſtred, and bent it ſelf againſt it, totis viribus, This we find: And for certain, this work and this power could not come from any other Spirit, but the Spirit of GOD only. Thus we take notice of Him by His effects: and of his Greatneſſe by the greatneſſe of his effects.

2 The Holy Spirit.

The Spirit of GOD; and the Holy Spirit: what needs this? To make Him great (as the world goes) what needed Holy? Or, if a title muſt be added, to that end, there were other ſtyles many, in the eye of fleſh, more magnificent and likely to ſhew Him for Great, than this of Holineſſe. The Spirit of Principality, of Courage, Power, Government; divers other. And all theſe, are from Him too; He the fountain of all. So the Apoſtle tels, 1 Cor. 12. And, though the Spirit be all theſe; yet choyce is made of none of all theſe, but only of this one [Holy] from among them all, τὸ ἅγιον. And His title is not The High and Mighty: nor, The Great and Glorious: but only, The Holy Spirit. Nor, do the Seraphins and Powers of Heaven cry, Magnus, or Celſus, or Fortis, thrice; but Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus; Holy and thrice Holy, to GOD Himſelf: making choice (I doubt not) of His Soveraign Attribute, to laud and magnifie His glorious Name by. Which teacheth us a leſſon (if we would learn it) That, it is the Attribute in GOD, which of all other, He doth; and which of all other, we ſhould moſt eſteem of. And by vertue of this (if we kept right) Places, and Times, and Perſons, and things ſacred ſhoul be in regard accordingly. For this we may be ſure of: were there in GOD's titles, a title of higher account; the Spirit of GOD ſhould have been ſtyled by it. But in GOD, Holy, Holy, is before Lord of Hoſts: His Holineſſe, firſt; His Power, after. Verſ. 4.11. Eſay 6.3. Eſay 6.3.

3 The Holy Spirit of God. Exod 28.36.

Thus, have we two reaſons de non gravando: 1 Firſt, were He but the Holy Spirit, for that He would be ſpared. For, without all queſtion, He is the more to be ſet by, byreaſon of that Attribute: It is GOD's cheif, as ye may ſee in the High Prieſts forehead, as ye may hear, out of the Angels mouths.

2 Then again, that He is GOD's; and not a Spirit, but The Spirit of GOD; we will forbear Him ſomewhat (I truſt) for His ſake, whoſe He is. Put theſe two together. Eſay 6.3.

And to theſe two for a ſurpluſage joyn that, He is not only Dei, but Deus; Of God, but God alſo: and then, we have our full weight for this part, for His Greatneſſe.

And this we ſhewed, laſt Feaſt. We are Baptized into Him: We believe in Him: We yield Him equal glorifying: We bleſs by Him or, in His name no leſſe than of the other two: So, in the Deity, He is: And a Perſon He is: For, to Seale (which he is ſaid here to do;) to ſeale, is ever an act perſonall. Thither then, I now come, even from His Greatneſſe to His Goodneſſe.

2. The Holy Spirit of God, by whom ſealed.

For He is not great, as the Great CHAN: but, He is Good withall. And Great, and Good withall, that carries it ever; If, In quo vos come to it, that this goodneſſe reach to us.

And ſure, this Party His (Greatneſſe ſet apart) is, to us, the Authour of many a benefit. No perſon of the three hath ſo many, ſo divers denominations as He; And they be all, to ſhew the manifold diverſity of the gifts, He beſtoweth on us. They count them. 1. [a] His רוּחַ מְרַחֶפֶת or agitation, which maketh the vegetable power in the world. 2. His [b] נֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה Spirit or ſoul of life, in the living Creatures. 3. His [c] נְשָׁמַת חַיִּים heavenly Spirit of a double life, in mankind. 4. Then, that in [d] Bezaleel, that gave him excellency of art. 5. That in [e] the LXX. Elders, that gave them excellency of wiſdome to govern. 6. That in [f] Balaam and the Sybils, that gave them the Word of Prophecy, to foretell things contingent. 7. That of the [g] Apoſtles (this day) that gave them skill, to ſpeak all tongues. All theſe are from Him. All theſe he might, but doth not reckon up any of them. And that, becauſe, though they be from the Holy Spirit of GOD, yet not from a Gen. 1.2. b Gen. 1.20. c Gen 2.7. d Exod. 31.13. e Num. 11.26. f Num 24.14. g Act. 2.5,8.

Him, as Holy; but, as the Spirit of GOD only, without eye or reference to this Attribute [Holy] at all.

But from the Holy Spirit (or the Spirit, as He is Holy) cometh the gratum faciens, the gift of gifts, the gift of grace, which He beſtoweth on His Saints and ſervants, and maketh them ſuch, by it. We wave all the former, all the gratis data, and take our ſelves only to this. And here again, there come in upon us as many more. 1. The grace [a] reproving and checking them within (when they are ready to go aſtray) Spiritus reflans, the wind againſt them, [b] not ſuffering them to go into Aſia or Myſia (when they ſhall do no good there) but making them even wind-bound as it were. 2. Spiritus afflans, the wind with them, [c] guiding them, and giving them a good paſs into all truth. 3. The grace [d] teaching them what they knew not, and calling to their minds, that they did know, and have forgot. (And ſo, Spiritus diffians, blowing away and ſcattering, as it were, the miſts of errour and forgetfulneſs.) 4. The grace [e] quickning them and ſtirring them up, when they grow dull, and even becalmed. 5. The grace inſpiring, and [f] inditing their requeſts, when they know not what, or how to pray. 6. The Spirit breathing, and [g] ſhedding abroad his love in their hearts: which makes them [h] go bound in the ſpirit, and (as it were) with full ſail to Jeruſalem (when it is for His ſervice.) 7. And laſt, the Spirit [i] ſealing them an aſſurance, of their eſtates to come: which is the moſt ſoveraign of all the ſeven; as that, which doth ſanctifie (that is) ſever and ſet us apart, from the reſt of the World, and proprios dicare, make us His own peculiar.

Now, this Benefit we find (here) woven and twiſted with another: For, two are mentioned, 1 redeeming, and 2 ſealing. We muſt look to ſuum cuique. Both, are not the HOLY GHOST's: One belongs to CHRIST. His, the Office to redeem, and that day (the day of Redemption) His. The other, to the Holy Ghoſt. The ſeal is His; and His, the day of ſealing. We are to paſs both theſe Offices. To be redeemed, queſtionleſs: But, take this withal; it is not enough, that (to be redeemed) if by this ſeal alſo, it be not paſſed to us.

Of theſe then briefly. 1. Redemption there is. 2. That, hath a day. 3. Againſt that day, we to be ſealed. 4. The Holy Ghoſt hath that ſeal: He is to do it; that Office is His.

CHRIST's is firſt: we muſt then go a little from the Holy Ghoſt: we will come to Him again, ſtraight.

1 Redemption.

Oft we have heard; in Redemption, there is emption (a buying) and Re (that is) back: a buying back of that, which formerly hath been loſt, or made away.

It is of two ſorts: 1 Real, and 2 Perſonal. Redemption real, of our eſtates, lands, or goods; Redemption perſonal, of our own ſelves, ſouls and bodies. This, in the Text, ſeemeth to be perſonal: In quo vos, by whom you; you your ſelves: there is not mention of any poſſeſſions. And ever, of the twain, this is the greater. You know, who ſaid skin for skin, all that a man hath, to redeem himſelf. But indeed, upon the matter; this Redemption, is of both. For, CHRIST's Redemption, is not of one half; but, a total entire Redemption both of Perſons and Eſtates.

Job 2. 4.

Now, mens perſons come to need redeeming, by Captivity: And in that caſe, there muſt be a ranſome. Mens eſtates, come to need it, upon a ſale out-right: and in that, there needs a new Purchaſe.

We were gone both ways. Both are in the 7. to the Rom. at the 23. Verſe, There is a Law in our members leading us captive: when, either we are taken, and carried away by ſtrong hand, with a tentation: or over-wrought by the ſleights of the enemy. At the 14. verſe: there is a ſale, Carnal and ſold under ſin: when, for ſome conſideration, as we think (but many times, ſcarce valuable) we make away our eſtates, by our own voluntary act.

CHRIST Redeemes us from both. His Ranſome ye ſhall find, 1 Tim. 2. 6. Ἀντίλυτρον. And His Purchaſe, Chap. 1. 14. Redemptionem περιποιήσεως; that is of Purchaſe, plain. His purſe went not for either, but His Perſon. His death, as the High Prieſts, freed us from captivity; His blood, as the blood of the Covenant was the price, that cleared our eſtate, from all former bargaines and ſales.

Num. 35. 28.

2 The Day of Redemption.

This Redemption hath a Day. But by this reckoning, that Day ſhould be paſt. The Day of His Paſſion, was the Day of that payment, and that is paſt: How can we be ſealed againſt it, then? But (if ye mark it well) Lightly, there are more dayes, than one, go to a full Redemption: Two, at leaſt: And, till the ſecond come, the Redemption is not compleat.

In the Real: there is one day of 1 paying the mony; another, of 2 putting in poſſeſſion, ever. That (lightly) is not the ſame day; but ſometimes, a good while after.

In the Perſonal: 1 One day, when concerning a Priſoner, a condemned man, it is graciouſly ſaid by His Majeſty, he ſhall not dye. 2 Another, when this is put under Seal, and brought to the priſon, for his releaſe: And poſſibly, a good diſtance, between theſe.

I know, all is counted as good as done, when the money is paid, or the word ſpoken: But, the Priſoner lieth by it ſtill; and the poſſeſſion is out of our hands, till the ſecond day cometh: So, that is the Day of Redemption conſummate.

And

And even ſo, ſtands it with us. The Ranſome was paid down; the ſentence reverſed, the day of His Paſſion. The putting us in poſſeſſion, the perfect ſetting us free; that hath another day, not yet come. For, out of poſſeſſion we are as yet; and, in a kind of priſon, we are ſtill. The firſt day, the pay-day, is paſt; we hold a memory of it, of all dayes, on Good-friday. But Himſelf tells us, of another day after that (the day of His ſecond appearing) and, when that comes, then He bids us lift up our heads and look up cheerfully; for then our Redemption draws nigh, is even hard at hand; (that is) our full, perfect, plenary Redemption, indeed. And till that come, for all the firſt fruits of the Spirit, We groan ſtill, as ſubject to vanity and corruption (our priſon-irons, as it were) and all the creatures together with us, do the like. Thus far Redemption, and the Day of it: And thus far CHRIST'S Office. Luke 21.28. Rom.8.22,23.

Now between theſe two Redemption-dayes (the firſt and the ſecond) cometh in the Seal. And, againſt that ſecond day come (which is in truth, the very Day of full Redemption) it will ſtand us in hand, to provide, we be ſealed, and have this mark of ſeparation. It is exceeding material. No claim of Redemption without it. In vain ſhall we ſay, we are redeemed; unleſs, we then have this ſeal to ſhew. Therefore, not to reſt upon Redemption with a blank, or the conceit of that: but know, there is a further matter ſtill (even obſignati eſtis) and look to that. For, when that Day comes, all will go by it. In very deed (upon the point) the Day it ſelf goes by it: for, if ſealed, then a Day of Redemption: If otherwiſe, then no Day of Redemption, but a Day of utter deſolation. 3 Ye are ſealed againſt that day.

Ye have a type of this, in the old Teſtament (Ezek. 9.) Six fellows came forth with Axes, to make havock and deſtroy. There goes one before, and makes a Tau in the fore-heads of ſome certain perſons: they, and none but they, ſpared: the reſt, hewed in pieces, every mothers Son. Ezek.9.4.

The like again, in the New Teſtament (Apoc. 7.) the four Angels hold the four winds, ready to deſtroy the earth. But firſt goeth one with a ſeal; and a proclamation there is, to make ſtay, till we have ſealed ſome: and (that done) as for the reſt, deſtroy them and ſpare not. As much to ſay: theſe with the ſeale, are they, to whom the Redemption ſhall be applied, and for whom only, it is available. Paſs over theſe: theſe are mine; I ſee my ſeale upon them. The reſt, neſcio eos; I find not my mark, I know them not. Do with them, what ye will. Rev.7.2.

And (becauſe I ſpake of paſſing over) in the Paſſe-over, it was ſo; both acts, there, The Lamb ſlain, there is Redemption: the poſts ſtroken with Hyſſope dipped in the blood, there is the ſignature. Anſwerable to theſe two, with us; Redemption by the SON of GOD at Eaſter: and the ſealing by the HOLY GHOST at Whitſuntide. Exod.12.6, 7.

But, further yet: theſe with the ſeal, not only ſave them, deſtroy them not: but, let them alſo enter into my reſt, my glory, my joy. I did not only ranſome their perſons; but, I redeemed alſo their eſtates: purchaſed an eſtate of bliſs, for them, and in their names. This was prepared by the FATHER, Redeemed by the SON, and now, the conveighance of it ſealed by the HOLY GHOST: Let them poſſeſs it. Heb.4.11. Mat.25.21. Mat.25.34.

And by this, ye ſee, how great matters both perſonal and real, depend upon this Seal: how much it importeth us, not to miſs it. What reckoning we now make of it, how light, it skills not: The day will come, if we had the whole world to give, we would to be found with Seale upon us.

This ſeale (which makes up all, and without which nothing is authentical) is in the diſpenſing and diſpoſing of the Holy Ghoſt. We are therefore of neceſſity to paſs His Office alſo: that ſo, all the Trinity may co-operate, and every Perſon have a hand, in the work of our Salvation. Remember, I have told you heretofore, that CHRIST, without the Holy Ghoſt, is as a Deed, without a ſeal; as a Teſtator, without an Executor. It is ſo: For all he hath done; Redemption, or no Redemption goeth by this ſeal: all, that CHRIST hath wrought for us; by that, the Holy Spirit doth work in us. And the Apoſtle, as he ſaith here, He the party, by whom ye are ſealed, to the day of Redemption: So he might have added, and without whom, ye are left blanck, for the day of deſtruction. For, by and from Him we have it: and by and from any other, we have it not. 4 By whom ye are ſealed.

And, if it be not to be had, from any other: We may well think it excludeth our ſelves, and our own ſpirit. There were (I wot well) in the heathen, and may be in the Chriſtian, other good moral vertues: But, they will not ſerve, to ſeal us againſt the day, here ſpecified. One may have them all, and be never the nearer, at the day of Redemption. That, which is, then, to ſtand us in ſtead (let us not deceive our ſelves) we ſpin it not out of our ſelves, as the Spider doth her web: It is of the nature of an aſpiration, or of an Impreſſion. It is from without; as breathing, and, as ſealing is. And it is the breath of this Spirit (the Spirit of GOD:) and the print of His ſeale, muſt do this. From without, it cometh, from the Spirit of GOD, not our own ſpirit. That we phanſie not, we may have it, ſome other way, from our own ſelves. It is He, that hath made us, and not we our ſelves, GOD the Father: It is He, that hath redeemed us; and not we our ſelves, GOD the Son: and, it is He that hath ſealed us, and not we our ſelves, GOD the Holy Ghoſt: That the whole glory may redound to the bleſſed Trinity; and he, that rejoyceth, may rejoyce in the LORD.

Then to end this point. 1. There is a day in coming. 2. A day of Redemption to ſome it is; and may prove ſo, to us. 3. To us it may, if we be found ſealed. 4. Found ſealed we cannot be, but by the Holy Ghoſt's means, we muſt be beholden to Him: He keeps the Seale: He ſets it to. 5. To Him we ſhall be beholden, and He will ſet it to, if we Grieve Him not. Why then, this brings us directly to the duty, Nolite contriſtari, Grieve Him not.

II. The duty.

This Party, whoſe favour may thus much ſtead us; and that, againſt a time we ſhall ſo much ſtand in need of it; what can we ſay, or do worthy of Him? We (no doubt) will riſe ſtraight in our magnifical loftie ſtyle, and ſay, What? Why, work Him all poſſible joy and jubilee; and all too little. Sure, it were ſo to be wiſhed. But hear you, Interim, I would (ſaith the Apoſtle) we would but do thus much for Him, and not grieve Him. Even as, in another place touching GOD's Name; we in our riſing vein would ſay, GOD's Name. What, but glorifie it, make it famous, renowned everywhere? Ye ſay well, ſaith He; In the mean time, I would His Name might not be evil ſpoken of by your means. Let your lætificat, and glorificat alone, and but even Nolite contriſtari. The Apoſtle pleads but for that; that will content Him: And I would, He might not fail of that, till the other come.

1. Grieve not.

1 Tim. 6. 1.

And that (I truſt) He ſhall not fail of, Non contriſtari. We will never ſtand with Him for this. It is but a ſmall matter, this, but even rationabile obſequium, a requeſt of great modeſty; rather a courteſie, than a duty, Not to grieve.

Rom. 12. 1.

1 Not any man. Prov. 3. 29.

Not to grieve? Why reaſon would (ſaith Solomon) we ſhould not grieve any of our Neighbours, ſeeing they dwell by us, and do us no hurt. But (as I ſaid) not the great, if there be any wiſdome: nor the good, if there be either grace, or good nature in us.

2 Not GOD. Eſay 7. 13.

Well, howſoever we deal with men, here (high or low, good or otherwiſe) in any wiſe take heed of offering it, to GOD. Why (ſaith Eſay) Is it not enough for you to grieve men, but will ye grieve my GOD alſo? Provoke we Him (ſaith the Apoſtle) Are we ſtronger than He? As if he ſhould ſay, that were extream folly.

3 Not the Spirit of GOD. Mat. 12. 32.

But yet one ſtep further: I ſay, and CHRIST ſaith as much: If God, yet not the Holy Spirit of GOD though, not that Perſon. Sinnes and grievances againſt the other two, may and ſhall; ſin againſt Him, ſhall never be forgiven. Grieve not Him then, at any hand.

1 Whether we can grieve.

But I ask: Can we grieve the Spirit of God, that is, God? Can He be grieved? Indeed, they be two Queſtions: 1 Can we? and 2 can He? I ſhould anſwer ſomewhat ſtrangely (but truly) to ſay, we can, and He cannot. For we may (on our parts) grieve; (that is) do what in us lieth, to grieve Him. And with Him, the endeavour, is all; and to do what we can, habetur pro facto, though the effect follow not. This, we can: So badly demean our ſelves; as, if it were poſſible by any means in the world, that grief could be made to fall into the divine Eſſence (let Him look to it) we would do that, ſhould provoke it in Him; that, ſhould even draw it from Him. Let Him thank the high ſuper-eminent perfection of His nature, that is not capable of it: If it were, or any way could be, we would put Him to it.

Mat. 5. 28.

Now, I find in the Goſpel (from our SAVIOUR's own mouth) he that looketh on a woman with luſt after her, hath (on his part) committed adultery with her: (the woman in the mean while, remaing chaſt, as never once thinking of any ſuch matter.) Then, if the one party may be an Adulterer, and the other (as I may ſay) not adultered: why not, in like ſort, one grieve, and yet the other not grieved? Alwayes, this uſe we may make of it, ad exaggerandam peccati malitiam, to aggravate ſome ſins, and ſhew the heinouſneſs of ſome ſinners, that do (on their part) all they can, to do it; and that is all one, as if they did it. This is * Tertullians.

* Contra Marcion. l. 2.

How to underſtand this phraſe.

But, GOD forbid, it ſhould lie in the power of fleſh, to work any grief in God: or, that we ſhould once admit this conceipt, the Deity to be ſubject to this, or the like perturbations, that we be. And yet, both this paſſion of grief, and divers other (as, anger, repentance, jealouſie) we read them aſcribed to God in Scripture: And, as aſcribed in one place, ſo denied as flatly in another. One where it is ſaid, It repented God, He had made Saul King: In the ſame place by and by after, The ſtrength of Iſrael is not as man, that He can repent. One, where GOD was touched with grief of heart: Another, There is with Him the fulneſs of all joy for ever; which excludeth all grief quite.

1 Sam. 15. 11. Gen. 6. 6. Pſa. 16. 11.

How is it then? How are we to underſtand this? Thus: That when they are denied; that is to ſet out unto us, the perfect ſteddineſſe of the Nature divine, no wayes obnoxious to theſe our imperfections. And that is the true ſound Divinity.

Rom 6. 19.

But, when they are aſcribed, it is for no other end, but even humanum dicere, for our infirmity, to ſpeak to us our own language, and in our own termes: ſo to work with us the better. Lightly, men do nothing ſo ſeriouſly, as when they do it in paſſion: Nor indeed any thing throughly at all, or (as we ſay) home, unleſſe it be edged with ſome kind of affection. Conſequently, ſuch is our dull capacity, we never ſufficiently take impreſſion, God will do this, or that to purpoſe; except He be ſo repreſented unto us, as we uſe our ſelves to be, when we go through with a matter. In puniſhing, we pay not home, unleſſe we be angry: When GOD then is to puniſh, He is preſented unto us as angry, to note to us,

He

He will proceed as effectually, as if He were ſo indeed. We are not carefull enough (we think) of that we love, unleſſe there be with our love, ſome mixture of jealouſie: When GOD then, would ſhew, how chary He is of the entireneſſe of our love towards Him, He is ſaid, to be a jealous GOD. We alter not what once we have ſet down, but when we repent: When GOD then, changeth his courſe formerly held, he is made, as if He did repent (though, ſo to do, were ever His purpoſe.) And ſo here: we withdraw not our ſelves, from whom we have converſed with before, but upon ſome grievance: When the Spirit of GOD then withdraweth himſelf for a time, and leaves us, He is brought in as grieved. For that if it were otherwiſe delivered, it would not ſo affect us, nor make in us the impreſſion, that this way it doth. So that, Grieve Him not, that is (in direct termes) Give Him not cauſe to do that, which in grief men uſe to do, to withdraw Himſelf, and to forſake you. If ye do, believe this; He will as certainly give you over, as if He were grieved in earneſt. This is from Saint Auguſtine.

By this time, we know how to conceive of this phraſe aright. Now, how to have uſe of it. And of this humanum dicit, this uſe we may have. Firſt, upon theſe places, where we thus find affections attributed to God, Our rule is ever, to reflect the ſame affection upon our ſelves, which is put upon Him; to be jealous over our ſelves, to be angry, or grieved with our ſelves, for that, which is ſaid to anger, or to grieve GOD. And that, upon this Soliloquy with our ſelves, That, how light ſoever we ſeem to make of ſin, yet in that, it is ſaid, thus to grieve GOD's Holy Spirit, it muſt needs be ſome grievous matter certainly. And yet (methinks) it toucheth not the Spirit of GOD though: He ſhall loſe nothing by it. He needs not to grieve at it. Of the twain, it ſhould rather ſeem to concern us; we may come ſhort of our Redemption, by the means; and (a worſe matter than that) be caſt into eternal perdition. The loſs is like to be ours. And is this ſaid to grieve the Holy Spirit of GOD; and ſhall it not grieve us, whom it more nearly concerneth? Shall we be ſaid to grieve Him with it, and not our ſelves be grieved for it? This, or ſome, to like effect. How to have uſe of this phraſe.

Then, it teacheth us (this phraſe) withal, what in this caſe we are to do, when it happeneth. Sure, even that, which we would do, to one grieved by us (whom we make ſpecial account of, and would be right loth to loſe his favour:) never to leave, but to ſeek, by all means, to recover him; by ſhewing our ſelves ſorry, and grieved, for grieving of him; by vowing, never to do the like more; by undertaking any thing, that may win him again. The only way to remedy it, is, to take us to the ſame affection: As here, that it grieve us to do any thing, may turn Him to grief, or, if we have done it, never ceaſe to be grieved with our ſelves, till we have recovered Him; His favour, and His grace again.

2 How we do grieve Him.

Now then, were it not well, to take notice of theſe grievances, that we might avoid, not offer them: and ſo fulfill the Apoſtles Nolite Contriſtari? Divers there be. But one of them, we cannot but take notice of (This verſe is ſo hemmed in with it, on both ſides.) Our verſe begins with [And] which couples it, to the former. And the very ſame that is in the former, is repeated over again, in the next after. And this it is: To ſet a ſeal upon our lips, from foul language, bitterneſs, curſing, ſwearing without any ſenſe at all. That theſe, come not out of our mouths. That we leave theſe in any caſe; and then, follows our verſe, And grieve not the Holy Spirit: as if He pointed us to theſe, and ſaid, Theſe are ſuch, whereby we grieve the Spirit of God, and all good men, that hear them. (And that is one ſpecial way to grieve the Spirit, to grieve good men, in whom it is.) His very coming (this day) in ſhape of tongues, ſheweth, He would have the print of His ſeal upon that part, upon the tongue: and His fire from heaven, breath; not this fire from hell, thus ſparkle from it. S. James makes ſhort work: If any would be holden for religious, and refrain not his tongue from theſe, that mans religion is (to be prized) as, little worth. This, from [And] the firſt word, the Copulative to the bordering verſe, which I could not avoid. And grieve not. James 3. 6. James 1. 26.

But I chooſe rather to hold my ſelf to the point of ſealing, within the Text; and the grievances againſt it: which I reduce to theſe two: 1 Either, Before when we are not yet ſealed, but are to be, when He offers to do it: 2 Or, After, when we are already paſt his hand, and his ſeal upon us. There are grievances, both ways. How in the act of Sealing.

Firſt, the Spirit of God doth come, and offer to ſeal us: our part were to invite Him to come if He did not; but if He come, to be glad of it; but in any wiſe, to be willing, withal. Otherwiſe, Ipſum nolle, contriſtari eſt. For if we be not willing, but refuſe and ſhift Him off ſtill, is it not juſtum gravamen? But, even as there were, that, when Chriſt ſet His foot on land, and offered to come to them, intreated Him, He would be gone again: ſo when the Holy Ghoſt makes the like proffer, He hath his Gergeſites too, that can ſpare Him and His ſeal both. Men are (I know not how) even loth and (as it were) afraid; think it a diſgrace to them, many (and, that would be called men of ſpirit) that any ſeal or mark of holineſs, ſhould be ſet, or ſeen upon them. Content with a Label, without any ſeal to it, all their life long. And of thoſe Label-Chriſtians, we have meetly good ſtore. As the Spirit of God, they like Him well enough to have their breath, and life, and moving from Him: yea, arts and tongues too, if He will: But, as the Holy Spirit, not once to be acquainted with Him. And what is this plain, but their ſpeech, Cauſe the holy one to ceaſe from us? But yet I do not ſay [not at all:] For, if He will come and ſeale them, ſome quarter of an hour before they dye; for that, they will not ſtand with him. But they deſire to wear the Signature of the fleſh, or of the world, of pride, or of luſt, as long as they are able to ſtand on their legs. Animales, all their life: and ſpiritum habentes, at the hour of their death. Clinici Chriſtiani, 1 Before it, I. Mat. 8. 34. Eſay 30. 11. Jud. 19.

ſtiani, beddered Chriſtians, (as the Primitive Church calleth them) when the fleſh leaves them, let the ſpirit take them and ſeal them: Then the ſeal (and ye will,) but, not before. But, this is an indignity, and cannot be well taken. He will not endure, thus to be trifled with and ſhifted off, when He would: and if, then He ſeals us not; when we would, we have our mends in our own hands.

But ſecondly, ſay we be willing He come: Is it not our part, againſt He comes, to diſpoſe our ſelves, and be ready wrought, to receive the figure of His ſeal? Then, if either He find us ſo indurate, in malice and deſire of revenge, or ſins of that ſort; that, as good offer him a flint to ſeal, which will take no print: Or, on the other ſide, find us ſo diſſolved (as it were) and even molten in the ſins of the fleſh, that, as good offer Him a diſh of water to Seal, that will hold no figure: Both come to one: 1 Not to ſuffer Him, to do it; and 2 not to be in caſe, to receive it: 1 Not diſpoſed to it; Or, 2 indiſpoſed for it. And can he chooſe, but reckon this as a ſecond gravamen, and go His way, and leave us as He found us?

After it. 1. Theſe two, before we be: Two more, when we be ſealed. For, when we have well and orderly received it; then doth it behove us, carefully to keep the ſignature from defacing or bruiſing: If we do not, but carry it ſo looſely, as if we cared not what became of it; and, where we are ſignati to be cloſe and faſt, ſuffer every trifling occaſion to break us up; have our ſouls lie ſo open, as all manner of thoughts may paſs and repaſs through them: Is not this a third? When one ſhall ſee a poor Countrey-man, how ſollicitous he is, if it be but a bond of no great value, to keep the ſeal fair and whole: But if it be of higher nature, as a Patent, then to have his box, and leaves and wooll, and all care uſed, it take not the leaſt hurt: And on the other ſide, on our parts, how light reckoning we make of the Holy Ghoſts ſeal; vouchſafe it not that care, do not ſo much, for it, as he, for his Bond of five Nobles, the matter being of ſuch conſequence: This contempt, muſt it not amount to a grievance? Yes, and that to a grave gravamen, a grievous one. For this is even Margaritas porcis right.

2. But yet further: If having received this ſeal upon us, we ſo far forget our ſelves as we be brought, to let His æmulus, the fiend, the evil ſpirit, (whom He can by no means endure) even to Super-ſigillare, ſet his mark over it, ſeal upon ſeal; put his print, with his image and Superſcription, above and upon the HOLY GHOSTS: This is ſo foul a diſgrace, as He can never brook it. And ſhall we once conceive, but, upon ſo bad uſage as this, He will do, what men grieved uſe to do, ſay preſently, migremus hinc, away, here is no place to ſtay, and ſo leave us, with our new image upon us?

And if ſo, a worſe matter, than all yet. For, He no ſooner gone, but in His place another will come, and, as he hath ſealed us, ſo ſeize on us: and, not alone neither, but company with Him, Seven more worſe than Himſelf; and the end of that man, worſe than His beginning, a thouſand-fold. Theſe they be then, theſe four: Not to offer theſe, is Non contriſtari. Luk. 11. 26.

2. Nolite contriſtari. But then, if our hap be ſo evil, as we do; yet that we remember, Nolite, do it not willingly: Have a will, not to do it. If we fall into any of the former four, 1 neglect to receive Him, when He cometh: 2 diſpoſe not our ſelves, as we ſhould, againſt He cometh: Happen to 3 bruiſe, or marre our ſeal: Yea 4 admit a ſealing upon it (of the world upon GOD, the fleſh upon the Spirit, prophane upon Holy:) yet let not our will be to it: At leaſt, not our whole will; not our full conſents. Let it but happen per accidens (as we ſay) either ſurpriſed with the violence, or wearied with the importunity of the tentation; or circumvented with the ſleights of the Serpent: but ever carry voluntatem (if it may be;) or elſe (as in the Schools they call it) velleitatem de non contriſtando. A great matter depends on this: For, wilfully to do it, that is indeed, to grieve; if it be not more, even to work deſpite to the Spirit of Grace. Heb. 10. 29.

Application to the time. Now, to draw to an end. This requeſt never comes ſo fit, as on this Day. For there is in the Text, a day of redeeming; and there is by like analogy, a Day of ſealing. As that, CHRIST'S: ſo this, the Holy Ghoſts Day. Now, if the ſealing-day be the Holy Ghoſts; then, reciprocè, the Holy Ghoſts Day, that is the Day of ſealing. And this is the Holy Ghoſts Day. And not only, for that originally ſo it was; but for that it is to be intended, ever, He will do His own chief work, upon His own chief Feaſt; and opus Dei, the days work, upon the Day it ſelf. So that, now we are come about, to our firſt grievance, Not to refuſe Him: not at any time; but not, at His own time; not then, when He ſits in His office, and offers to ſet His ſeal on us.

Application to the Sacraments And, that, He now doth. For, when we turn our ſelves every way, we find not (in the Office of the Church) what this Seal ſhould be, but the Sacrament; or what the print of it, but the grace there received, a means to make us, and a pledge, or carneſt to aſſure us, that we are His. 2 Cor. 5. 5.

The outward ſeal ſhould be a thing viſible, to be ſhewed: And the Sacrament is the only viſible part of Religion, and nothing ſubject to that ſenſe, but it. This I find, that the School-men, when they numbred ſeven, thoſe ſeven were the ſeven ſeals: So, for ſeals, they have been ever reputed. But what doubt we? One of them, is by the Apoſtle named a ſeal, in expreſs terms: The ſeal of righteouſneſs. And, if one, then the other: Both are of like nature. Only this difference between them (for which we have great cauſe, highly to magnifie the goodneſs of GOD:) That, where the one ſeal, (the ſeal of Baptiſm) can be ſet to but once, and never repeated more; this other ſhould ſupply the defect thereof, as whereby, if we have not preſerved the former figure entire and whole, we might be (as it were) new ſigned over again. And that, not once alone, and no more; but, that it ſhould be iterable: whereby it cometh to paſs, that of this ſealing, there be many days; many days, to ſeal us well, and make us ſure againſt that one Day, the Day of Redemption. GOD therein providing for our frailneſs. As indeed, without it, a great many of us, I know not how we ſhould have done. Rom. 4. 12.

A ſeal of Redemption. This then, is the Seal. I add further, that it may be rightly called, the ſeal of our Redemption, as whereby the means of our Redemption is applied unto us: the Body and the Blood, one broken, the other shed, of Him, whom GOD sealed to that end, even to redeem us. Joh. 6, 27.

And by, and with these, there is grace imparted to us; which grace is the very breath of this Holy Spirit, the true and express Character of His seal, to the renewing in us, the image of GOD, whereunto we are created. And with grace, which serveth properly (pro tota substantia) to and for the whole substance of the soul, the two streams of it, one into the understanding part, the other into the seat of the affections. Into the understanding part, the assurance of faith and hope: Into the part affective, the renewing of charity, the ostensive part of this seal, In quo cognoscent omnes, by which all men may know, and sine quo cognosci nemo, without it no man, that we are sealed aright, and are truly His. This grace we are thus to receive there: Only, that we [a] receive it not in vain: [b] be not wanting to it, after: [c] neglect it not: [d] Quench it not: [e] fall not from it: but [f] stand fast, and continue in it: Be careful to [g] stir it up: Yea, [h] to grow and increase in it, more and more, even to the consummation of it, which is glory. Glory, being nothing else, but grace consummate: the figure of this stamp, in His full perfection. The print of this seal. Joh. 13. 35.

e Gal. 5. 4.

Resolve then, not to send Him away (on His own Day) and nothing done; but, to receive His Seal, and to dispose our selves, as pliable and fit to receive it. And, that shall we but evil do, may not at all, unless it please Him, to take us in hand, and to work us ready for it. To pray Him then, so to do, to give us hearts of wax, that will receive this impression: And, having received it, to give us careful minds withal, well to look to it, that it take as little harm, as our infirmity will permit. That so we may keep our selves, from this unkind sin, of grieving Him, that hath been and is so good to us. Which, the GOD of mercy grant us, for His Son, and by His Spirit, to whom, &c.

Preached before the

KINGS MAJESTY,

At GREEN-WICH,
On the XII. of June, A. D. MDCXIV.
being WHITSUNDAY.

PSAL. LXVIII. Ver. XVIII.

Aſcendiſti in altum, &c.

Thou art gone up on high; Thou haſt led captivity captive, and received gifts for men: yea, even [a] the rebellious haſt Thou led, that the LORD GOD might dwell [b] there.

[a] Or, for thine enemies.

THIS is CHRIST (the Prophet here ſpeaketh to.) That He it is, the Apoſtle is our warrant (Epheſ. 4. 8.) There, he applies it to CHRIST: Thou art gone up (ſaith the Prophet here) in the ſecond perſon: He is gone up (ſaith the Apoſtle there, of Him) in the third.

To CHRIST then: And to CHRIST gone up, or aſcended: and therefore aſcended, they be the laſt words of this Verſe, that GOD, might dwell among us. Which cannot be applied to CHRIST Himſelf in perſon, for then, He was not to go up on high, from us: but to ſtay here ſtill below with us. Therefore, GOD here, is GOD the HOLY GHOST: who this day, came down, after CHRIST was gone up, to be not only among us, but even in us, (ſaith our Saviour:) To be in us and abide with us for ever. So, the Text begins, with the aſcending of CHRIST: and ends, with the deſcending of the Holy Ghoſt. And, that was upon this day: And ſo, we are come to CHRISTS hodiè impleta eſt, This day is this Scripture fulfilled; the beſt application of every Text.

Joh. 14. 17, 16.

Luk. 4 21.

The Summe. Our books tell us, the Scripture will bear four ſenſes: All four be in this; and a kind of aſcent there is in them.

1. Firſt, after the letter, and in due conſequence to the word immediately next before this (the laſt word of the Verſe) which is, Sinai. It is a report of Moſes's aſcending thither. For, he, from the bottom of the red Sea, went up to the top of Sinai, leading with him the people of Iſrael, that long had been captive to Pharaoh: and there received gifts, the Law, the Prieſthood (but above all) the Ark of the Covenant, to be the pledge of GODS preſence among them. This is the Litteral.

2. This of Moſes, by analogy, doth King David apply to himſelf. To his going up to Mount Sion, and carrying the Ark up thither. For all agree, this Pſalm was ſet, upon that occaſion. The very beginning of it, [Let God ariſe, &c.] ſheweth as much: The acclamation ever to be uſed, at the Arks removing, as is plain by Num. 10. ver. 35. Now, this was done immediately upon His conquest of the Jebusites: whom a little before he had taken Captives, and made tributaries there. What time also, for honor of the solemnity, dona dedit, he dealt bread and wine, to all the people, gift-wise (as we find 1 Chron. 15.) This is the Analogical: as Moses to Sinai, so David to Sion. 2 Sam. 5. 2 Sam. 6. 19. 1 Chron. 16. 3

From these two, we arise to the Moral sense: thus. That, as whensoever God's people are carried captive, and made thrall to their enemies; as then, God seemeth to be put down and lie foiled for a time; that one may well say, Exurge at Deus to Him: So, when He takes their cause in hand, and works their deliverance, it may well be said, Ascendit in altum, He is gone up (as it were) to His high throne, or judgement-seat, there to give sentence for them. Ever, the Church depressing is (as it were) God's own humiliation; and their deliverance (after a sort) His exaltation. For, then He hath the upper hand. And this is the Moral. 3.

Now from this we ascend to the Prophetical sense, to the testimony of Jesus which is the Spirit of all Prophecy. For, if in any Captivity (as of Egypt, of Babylon) God be said to be down: And, in any strange deliverance (such as those were) to be got up on high: in this of Christ, of all other, it is most pregnantly verified. That, the highest up-going; higher than Sion, or Sinai far: That, the most gracious Triumph, that ever was. When the Principalities and powers, that had carried, not Israel, but mankind, all mankind into captivity; they as Captives, were led before His Chariot: attended, as it is in the next verse before, with twenty thousands of Angels. What time also, the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost were shed forth plenteously upon men; which was, this very day: and God, not by a wooden Ark, but by His own Spirit came to dwell among them. 4. Rev. 19. 10. Vers. 17.

And, in this sense, the true Prophetical meaning of it, doth the Apostle deliver it to us; and we, to you. That, God, which ever and at all times, doth then, and at that time did most specially shew the valour of His victory, and the bounty of His triumph, when He went up on high, &c.

To put that in other order, which is it self, well ordered already, were but to confound it. The order, as it stands, is very exact. 1 Christs ascending, first: 2 Then, the Manner. 3 And last, the end of it. 1 The Ascending, in these: Thou art gone up, &c. 2 The Manner, is triumph-wise; and that two wayes: 1 Leading His Captives before Him: 2 Scattering His gifts about Him: 3 And then thirdly, all to the end, that God, by His spirit (the true Ark of His presence indeed) might rest with us for ever. Or, you may (if you please) of these four, make two moities: and give the two former, to Christs ascending; the two latter, to the Holy Ghosts ascending, in dona dedit hominibus; the peculiar of this Day. The division. I. II. III.

THou art gone up, a Motion: and, on high, a Place. Christ, in His ascendent going up; Christ, on high, is a good sight. A better sight to see Him so, tanquam aquila in nubibus, than tanquam vermis in pulvere; an Eagle in the clouds, than a worm in the dust, as a great while we did. To see a cloud to receive him, than a gravestone to cover Him. Better, leading Captivity, than Himself led Captive: Better, receiving gifts for men, than receiving wrong from them. Yet, it is strange, S. Paul (Eph. 4.) commenting upon this verse (whereto we shall often have recourse,) as we are looking at His going up on high, pulls us back, and tells us of His being here down below: In that he ascended, what is it (saith He) but that He descended first? A note, out of season, one would think. But, he best knew, what was proper and pertinent; and that is, that Christs going up, is ascensus post descensum. I. Christs Ascending: The motion. Act. 1. 9. 1 From whence; Eph. 4. 9.

And this, as it is for His glory: (For, when one hath been down, then to get up, is twice to get up) Far more, for His glory, than if He never had been down. And, the lower He hath been down, the more glorious is His getting up. Bis vincit qui victus vincit; being overcome, to overcome, is twice to overcome: For so, he overcomes his overcomers, (and that is a double victory) As, for His glory; so, for our good. For, His being above, before He was below, is nothing to us. But being below first, and then, that He went up, that is it we hold by. As the Son of God, he came down: As the son of man, he went up. If, as the son of man; there is hope, that the sons of men may do the like.

But, always remember, there must be a descent before. Ascendit Angelus, & factus est diabolus: Why? He never descended first, and therefore is now in the bottom of Hell. But, He that first descended, and ascended after, is now in the top of heaven. To teach us, this high top must have a deep root. He that is thus high now, was once low enough. We to be as he was, before we be as he is. Descending, by humility; condescending, by charity. For, he that so descends with Him, he it is, and none other, that shall ascend up after Him. This is Saint Paul, upon Ascendisti, His Motion.

Now, will you hear him upon in altum, on high, the pitch of his motion? On high, is somewhat a doubtful term: if it be but to some high mountain (as they thought of Elias) it is on high, that. How high then? The Apostle takes the true altitude for us. Neither, to Sion, nor to Sinai, set one upon the other, and Pelion upon Ossa too; it is higher yet. So high (saith St. Luke) 1 The place whither, Or high. 2 King. 2. 16.

till a cloud came and took him out of their ſight. And what became of him then? That the Apoſtle ſupplies: He came ὑπεράνω: ὑπὲρ above, ἄνω aloft: ὑπεράνω ὑπὲρ πάντων τῶν ὑπερῶν, above all the heavens, even the very higheſt of them.

Luke 19. Epheſ. 4. 10.

Keeping juſt correſpondence between his high, and his low. That, was ad ima terræ, to the loweſt parts of the earth, than which none lower, none beneath them. This was ad ſumma Cœli, the higheſt top of the heavens, than which none higher, none above them.

So, Exurgat Deus, the firſt verſe is not enough: that was but from the lower parts of the earth, to the upper parts of it. Aſcendat in altum, Let him go up on high; ſet up thy ſelf O Lord above the heavens; there is His right place. And ſo now, He is where he ſhould be. This for in altum.

Pſalm 57. 5.

But, we muſt not ſtand taking altitudes: This is but the gaze of the Aſcention. The Angels blamed the Apoſtles; that blame will fall upon us, if we make but a gaze of it. What is there in it, hominibus, for us men?

Act. 1. 11.

Firſt, is He gone up on high? We may be ſure then, all is done and diſpatched here below. He would not hence re infectâ, till his errand were done, He came for. All is diſpatched: for look to the Text: He went not up till the battel fought, and the victory gotten. For the next point is, Captivity is led captive. So, no more for Him here to do: Conſummatum eſt. And after it was conſummatum eſt for us, no reaſon but it ſhould be conſummatus ſum with Him alſo.

John 19. 30. Luke 13. 32.

But though all be done here, all is not there; there above, whither He is gone. There is ſomewhat ſtill to be done for us. We have our cauſe there to be handled, and to be handled againſt a falſe and ſlanderous adverſary (ſo Job found him.) By means of His being there on high, habemus Advocatum, (ſaith Saint John) we have an Advocate, will ſee it take no harme. And what were ſuch an one worth in place where?

Job 1. 10. 1. 5. 1 John 2. 1.

But as our caſe is (for the moſt part) we rather ſtand indeed of a good High-Prieſt, to make interceſſion; than of a ready Advocate, to put in a plea for us. And he is there likewiſe to that end: on high within the ſanctum ſanctorum, as a faithful High-Prieſt, for ever to appear, and to make an attonement with God for our tranſgreſſions. Thus, there, all is well.

Heb. 2. 17.

But how ſhall we do here, if he be gone up on high from us? Not a whit worſe: Aſcendor cœli, auxiliator, ſaith Moſes, Deut. 33. 26.) By being there, He is the better able to help us: to help us againſt our enemies. For, in that He is on high, He hath the vantage of the high ground; and ſo able to annoy them, to ſtrike them down, and lay them flat (as Saint Paul found it:) yea, yea, to raine down fire and brimſtone, ſtorme and tempeſt upon them.

To help us againſt our wants. Wants, both temporal; (for; from on high, He can ſend down a gracious raine upon his inheritance to refreſh it:) and ſpiritual; for from on high He did ſend down the gifts and the graces of the ſpirit, the dona dedit of this Feaſt, and of this Text, both. Look to the Text. He is ſo gone up, that our enemies are His captives: we ſhall not need to fear, they can go no farther than their chain. And, though He be gone, dona dedit, He is ready to ſupply us, upon our need, with all gifts requiſite. We ſhall not need to want: for, no good thing will he withold from them, that have, Aſcentiones in corde, that have their hearts upon Him and upon His aſcention: that lift up their hearts to Him there.

There is yet one, and I keep that (for it ſhall be the laſt.) In that He is aſcended into heaven, Heaven is to be aſcended to: By the new and living way, that is prepared through the veile of His fleſh, a paſſage there lieth thither. They talk of diſcoveries, and much ado is made of a new paſſage found out to this or that place: what ſay you to this diſcovery in altum, this paſſage into the land of the living? Sure, it paſſes all. And this diſcovery is here: and upon this diſcovery, there is begun a commerce, or trade of entercourſe, between heaven and us. The commodities whereof, are theſe gifts: (we ſhall after deal with them) And a kind of agencie: Chriſt being there, for us; and the ſpirit here, for God; either Agent for other. It is the happieſt news, this, that ever came to mankind. For, hominibus, for mankind it is, He is gone up: far, that is to be repeated to all three, and every of them ἀπὸ κοινοῦ 1 He is gone up on high, for men; 2 Led captivity captive, for men, 3 as well, as received gifts for men.

Heb. 10. 20. Pſal. 27. 22.

His going up then, is not all for Himſelf; ſome part (and that no ſmall) for us. For, thither He is gone, ut præcurſor noſter (Heb. 6.) as our fore-runner or harbenger, Pandens iter ante nos (ſaith the Prophet Mica) To make way before us. To prepare a place, and to hold poſſeſſion of it in our names (ſaith He Himſelf.) Till (ſay the Angels) as He was ſeen to go up, ſo ſhall he likewiſe be to come down again. Once more to deſcend (it is his laſt:) and upon it, His laſt aſcending into His high Tribunal-ſeat; there, as our favourable Judge, to give us the Ite benedicti, the immediate warrant for our aſcentions. And ſo he ſhall take our perſons thither, where He now is in our perſon, that where he is, we may be there alſo. And thus much, for His going up on high.

II.

The manner of His aſcending. In Jubilee. Pſal. 47. 5.

Now, the Manner, how He went. Aſcendit Dominus in jubilo, ſaith the XLVII. Pſalme, a proper and peculiar Pſalme for this day. For, this is the fiftieth day, and fifty is the number of Jubilee: we muſt look for a Jubilee ever at Pentecoſt. He went up in Jubilo. Now, to a Jubilee, there go two acts: 1 The releaſing of priſoners, one. 2 And the new giving or granting eſtates gratis (dona dedit) the other. And both are here.

In triumph.

He went up in triumph, as a Romane victor up to the Capitol; as David, after his conqueſt, up to Sion: ſo He, to the Capitol in Heaven, to the Sion that is above, the high and holy places made without hands. Now, two actus triumphales there were: 1 One, Captives led bound before the Chariot:

2 The

2 The other, casting abroad of new coine, or (as they called them) missilia, among the multitude. And these two are in this. This the manner of his going up, like the Jewes Jubilee, like the Heathens triumph. 1 First then, of His valour in his victory, leading his Captivity. 2 Then, of His bounty in his triumph; dispersing His gifts.

1. Leading captivity captive.

Of the first. Here is a Captivity led in Triumph. A triumph is not but after a victory: nor a victory, but upon a battel: and (ever) a battel presupposeth hostility; and that, some quarrel, whereupon it grew. His Ascention is His triumph; His Resurrection His victory; His death His battel; His quarrel is about hominibus, about us men, for another captivity of ours, that had happened before this.

I ask then, what was this Captivity here? Of whom? when taken? when led? (For, taken it must be, before it can be led in triumph.) Some interpret it by Satan; say, it was by him, and the powers of darkenesse. Some other, that it was Adam and all his progeny: and so, we are in it too. And both say well: they and we are taken together. For, when they were taken Captives, we that then were in their hand and power, as captives to them, were taken together with them. So both were taken, and by Christ, both: but not both alike. Both were taken, but not both led. They were taken, and led: we are taken and let go. And not let go barely, but rewarded with gifts, as it is in the Verse. Both these are within the compasse of this Psalme.

To begin with this of the Verse; we find it more particularly set down, Col. 2. There, of the Principalities and powers of hell, it is said, Christ spoiled them, made a shew of them, triumphed over them in His own person. Col. 2. 15.

With these He had battel at His death; and then He seemed to lose the field. But, up again He got at His Resurrection: and then got the day, carried the victory clear. For lo, as with a trumpet, the Apostle soundeth the victory, Absorpta mors est in victoria, death is swallowed up in victory. 1 Cor. 15. 44.

But what was the quarrel? That, began about us, hominibus: (In every branch, we must take in that word.) for no other quarrel had He, but that these, whom He leads away captive here, had led us captive away before.

And the quarrel was just: for, we were His: twice his. 1 His once, by creation, the work of His hands. 2 His again now, by redemption, the price of His blood; He had no reason to lose that, was His quite. It stood not with His honour, to see them carried away without all recovery. Psal. 138. 8. Esay 64. 8. 1 Cor. 6. 20. 1 Pet. 1. 15, 19.

But how came we captives? Look to Gen. 3. There we find Lex membrorum, (as Saint Paul calleth it;) fleshly lusts (as Saint Peter;) a garrison that lieth in us, even in our loines, and fight against our soules. They surprised Adam (and, of whom one is overcome, his captive he is.) So was he led away captive, and in him all mankind. The effect whereof we see, at Christs coming. The spirit of error had (in a manner) seised on all the world. And, if Error had taken his thousand, Sinne had his ten thousand (we may be sure:) And this was the first captivity, under the power of Satan. For, sinne and error are but leaders under him; take to his use: and so all mankind held captive of him at his pleasure. And, O the thraldom and misery, the poor soul is in, that is thus held and hurried under the servitude of sinne and Satan! The Heathens pistrinum, the Turkie gallies are nothing to it. If any have felt it, he can understand me, and from the deep of his heart will cry, Turne our captivity O Lord. Gen. 3. 6. Rom. 7. 25. 1 Pet. 2. 11. 1 Pet. 2. 19. Psal. 116. 4.

Will ye then see this Captivity turned away, and those, that took us, taken themselves? Look to His resurrection, Agnus occisus est, is true; like a lamb he died; but that was, respect had to His Father. To him, he was a Lamb in all meeknesse, to satisfie his justice, and to pay him the ransome for us, and for our enlargement, whose prisoners justly we were. That paid, and justice satisfied, the hand-writing of the Law that was against us, was delivered him, and he cancelled it. Then had he good right to us. But death, and he that had the power of death, the Divel, for all that, would not let him go, but detained him still wrongfully. With them, the Lamb would do no good: So, he took the Lion. Died a Lamb, but rose a Lion, and took on like a Lion indeed; broke up the gates of death, and made the gates of brasse flie in sunder: trod on the Serpents head and all to bruised it, came upon him, took from him his armour wherein he trusted, and divided his spoiles. (So it is in the Gospel: So, in this Psalme.) Till He had right, He had no might, was a Lamb. But, he had no sooner right, but he made his might appear; was a Lion: Et vicit Leo de tribu Juda. His right was seen in His death; his might, in his Resurrection. Revel. 5. 12. Col. 2. 14. Heb. 2. 14. Luke 11. 22. Revel. 5. 5.

Ye see them taken: Now, will ye see them led. Of this victory, this (here) is the triumph. And, if ye will see it more at large, ye may, in the Prophet Hosee 13. and out of him, in the Apostle (1 Cor. 15.) death led captive without His sting: Hell led, as one that had lost the victory: The strength of sinne, (the Law) rent, and fastened to His crosse, ensign-wise: The Serpents head bruised borne before him in triumph, as was Goliahs head by David returning from the victory. And, this was his triumph. Hosee 13. 1 Cor. 15. 55, 56.

So then, upon the matter, here is a double captivity, a first and a second. 1. A first, and in it captivans, they; and captivata, we. 2. A second, and in it captivans, he; and captivata, they. They took us, and he took them. And this is the Jubilee; that he that was overcome, did overcome; and they that had overcome, were overcome themselves. That captivans is become captivata; and captivata, is brought out of Captivity, and set at liberty. For the leading of this Captivity, was the turning away of ours.

The five Kings, (Gen. XIV.) took Sodom, and carried Lot away prisoner: Comes me Abraham upon them, takes the five Kings, and Lot in their hands: So Lot, and they (both) became Abrahams captives. The Amalekites (1 Sam. XXX.) took Ziklag, Davids town, his wives, children, and all his people. David makes after them, takes Amalek, and with them, his own flock too: and so became master of both. So did the Sonne of Abraham, and the Sonne of David, in this captivity, here.

For all the world, as an English ship takes a Turkish Gallie, wherein are held many Christian captives at the oare. Both are taken, Turks, and Christians; both become prisoners to the English ship. The poor souls in the Gally, when they see the English ship hath got the upper hand, are glad (I dare say) so to be taken: they know, it will turn to their good, and in the end to their letting go. So was it with us, we were the children of this captivity. They to whom we were captives, were taken captive themselves, and we with them. So, both came into Christs hands: They and we, his prisoners both. But with a great difference. For, they are carried in triumph, to their confusion (as we see) and after condemned to perpetual prison and torments. And we, by this new captivity, rid
Rom. 8. 21. of our old, and restored to the liberty of the sonnes of God. So that, in very deed, this captivity fell out to prove our felicity: we had been quite undone, utterly perished, if we had not had the good hap, thus to be come Christs prisoners.

It is not good (simply) to be taken captive: but thus, it is. For, felix captivitas capi in bonum: He is taken in a good hour, that is taken for so great a good. A happy captivity then, may we say: indeed, so happy, as no man can be happy, if he be not thus taken prisoner by Christ. It is the only way to injoy true liberty. And this, for this great captivity here led.

Other inferior captivities there be, in this life, and those not lightly to be regarded neither: But, this of Mankind is the maine: the rest, all derived from this, and but pledges of it. We have lived to see, that Ascensor Cœli, was Auxiliator noster, and Ductor Captivitatis nostræ, even this way.

In LXXXVIII. the invincible Navie had swallowed us up quick, and made full accompt to have led us all into captivity. We saw them led, like a sort of poor captives round about this Isle, sunk and cast away, the most part of them, and the rest sent home again with shame. Eight years since, they that had vowed the ruine of us all; and, if that had been, the thraldom of this whole Land: they were led captives in the literal sense, (we saw them) and brought to a wretched end before our eyes. So, He, that here did, still can, and still doth lead captivity captive for the good of his. Take these as remembrances here below; but look up beyond these to our great captivum duxisti here: And make this use of both, that we, both these wayes, being delivered, out of the hands of our enemies, and Luke 1. 74. 75. from the slavery of Satan, might serve him, whose service is perfect freedom, in righteousnesse and holinesse before him, all the dayes of our life.

And this for the first point of Ascensio in Jubilo, (a principal part whereof, was the releasing of captives.) And so much for the triumph of His victory: Now for the bounty of His Triumph. In that, His valour; valour in leading captivity: in this, His magnificence, magnificence in distributing gifts.

Scattering His gifts. Accepit dona. All this while there hath been nothing but going up: Here now, there is something coming down, even Love with his handful of gifts, to bestow them on us: which is the second part; even His largenesse or bounty, as it were the running of the Conduits with Wine, or the casting abroad of His new coine, among the lookers on, on this, the great and last day of the Feast, the conclusion or shutting up of His Triumph. This is the day of dona dedit in kind, and dona dedit, the high honour of this Feast. Alwayes the height of His place, the glory of his triumph, makes Him not forget us, we see by this. He sends these for a token, that He is still mindful of us.

Four points there be in it. 1 Received, first: 2 Then, gifts: 3 Thirdly, for men: 4 And last, an enlargement of this last word men; for such men, as of all men, seemed least likely to get any of them, Even for His enemies.

Received. The Prophet here saith, Dona accepit; the Apostle he saith, * dona dedit; and both Accepit, Dedit. true: Accepit & dedit; for, accepit ut daret: He did give; what he received: for, He received
* Ephes. 4. 8. to give. So, what He received with one hand, he gave with the other. For, He received not for Himself, but for others; Not, to keep, but, to part with them again. And part with them he did, witnesse this day, the day of the giving.

Received, from whom? Whosoever the party was, He received them from, he seems to stand well-
Joh 20. 17. affected to us. It is the Father. And we see, he said true of him, I go up to my Father, and to your Father; that is, yours as well as mine. Which appeareth, in his Fatherly goodnesse, ready to part with them to us; Yet, not immediately to us; but, by him, to us: that, seeing by whose hands they come, we might know, know and acknowledge both, for whose sake, both he giveth, and we receive them. We, of him: he, of his Father; but, for us, and for our use.

2. Dona. Received gifts. Alas poor captives! Never think of any: Tantùm libera nos is all, they say. Free us only, and we desire no more. This one gift is enough, will richly content them, even the gift of liberty, we even now speak of. Enough for them; but, not enough, for him, The Scripture
James 4. 6. offereth greater grace. He will let them go, but not let them go away empty. Send them away rewarded, and not with one gift, but plurally, dona; with many. So many, as in the next verse, he saith they be even laden with them. And, not give them again their former estate freely (the Jubilee of the Law,) but, a farre better than that was, even in Heaven, which is farre beyond the Lawes, and is indeed the Iubile of the Gospel.

To speak of these gifts in particular, one hour-glasse will not serve, they be so many. To recapitulate Dona in Dono, all in one: It is the gift of gifts, the Gift of the Holy Ghost, the proper Gift or Missile of this day. O si scires Donum Dei (saith our Saviour of it) if we but knew this Gift! And God grant, we may know it (that is) that we may receive it; for then we shall, but otherwise we shall never know it: For, Nemo scit nisi qui acceperit; but he that receiveth it, no man knoweth it. Joh. 4. 10. Rev. 2. 17.

But, God it is, this Gift. The Text is direct: This giving is, to the end, God may dwell with us. That cannot be, if He that is given, were not God. So then, Man He carried up to Heaven: God He sent down to Earth: Our flesh is there, with GOD; His Spirit, here, with us. Felix captivitas, we said before; Felix cambium, may we now say: A happy captivity, that, a blessed exchange for us, this.

This is but one: it is expressed plurally; Dona, many: There be many in it. It is, as the Arke of the Covenant: the Arke was not empty, no more is this. The two Tables, that teach the heart; the hidden Manna, that feedeth the soul; the Censer, that perfumeth all our prayers; the Rod, which makes us do (as it self did) of withered and dead, to revive and flourish again. Great variety of gifts there are in it, and all are feathers of the Dove mentioned in the Psalme (Ver. 14.) either the silver feathers of her wing; or the golden of her neck. For, all are from her. They are reduced all to two: 1 The gifts (1 Cor. 12.) 2 The Fruits (Gal. 5.) The gifts known by the terme gratis data: the fruits pertaining to gratum faciens. But the gratum faciens being to every man for himself: the gratis data, for the benefit of the Church in common: These latter are ever reckoned the proper, and most principal dona dedit of this day. And indeed, they are all in all. For, by them are the Siens planted, on which the other (the fruits) do grow. 1 Cor. 12. 4. Gal. 5. 22.

And so it is. For, what were the true and proper gifts this day sent down, were they not a few tongues? And those tongues had heads, and those heads belonged to men, and those men were the Apostles. Upon the point, these gifts, in the end, will fall out to prove men: The gift ever leading us to the Office, and the office to the Persons, by whom it is born. Acts 2. 3.

In the place (Ephes. 4.) where the Apostle comments upon this Verse, and upon this word gifts: aske him, what the gifts be? He will tell us, Ipse dedit quosdam Apostolos, He gave some Apostles, some Prophets, some Evangelists: These were of the gifts. These three now are gone, their date is out. But, in the same period, He puts Pastors and Doctors too; and them we have still, and they are all the remains, that are now left, of the dona dedit of this day. A point, I wish to be well thought on: that, for these gifts, this Feast is holden; that for these, we keep this high holy-day. Ephes. 4.

What, and are these such goodly gifts? Yea, the Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, we grant: For, we love to build Sepulchres, as well as the Pharisees: They must be dead, yet we esteeme them. O if we had lived in the Apostles dayes, we would have made otherguess account of them, that we would. We know, how our Fathers then did; we would even have done the same. For these, we have left, it is daily heard and seen, how poor a rate we set on them. This we finde: The Apostles themselves, were fain to magnifie their own Apostleship, and to say: Well they hoped, the day would come, when their peoples faith were as it should be, that they also should be esteemed according to their measure; that is, better than they were. So that, they were undervalued. I will not say the same of these, which are all, that are now left of this dona dedit: that of these Holy-day gifts, there is but a working-day accompt. Yet, these are they, that daily do rescue men and women laden with sinnes, and so captives to Satan, from Satans captivity, and take them prisoners to Christ. These they, by whose means and ministery, are wrought in us those impressions of grace, which we call the fruits of the Spirit, the price whereof is above all worldly gifts whatsoever. And, if God dwell amongst us, these be they, by whose doctrine and exhortation we are edified, (that is) framed and reared up, a meet building for Him. 2 Cor. 10. 14.

Truly if we did but seriously think of Ipse dedit, who gave; of Spiritus Sanctus posuit, who placed them; Nay, if but of the Feast it self we hold; it would be better than it is, if not for theirs, for the very Feasts sake. For, why keep we it? For these dona dedit, plain. And how prize we them? I list not tell, how meanly. This I say then: Either esteeme them otherwise, or what do we keep it? Put down the Feast, wipe the day of Pentecost out of the Kalender, keep it no more hardly. Never keep so high a feast, for so low a matter. But, if we will keep it, make better reckoning of Dona dedit hominibus, than hitherto we have, or presently we do. Acts 20. 28.

Now, the parties for whom all these: Hominibus. Ascendit, duxit, dedit, all for hominibus, for men. For men, He ascended up on high; For men; He led captivity; For men, He received these gifts. They, the cisterne into which all these three streames do flow. As God, of God, He received them; that, as Man, to man, He might deale them. I will tell you Saint Pauls note upon this word (and indeed, it is the only cause, for which He there bringeth in this verse:) The number, that it is, hominibus, not homini. To men, among them: To every one, some; Not to any one, all. For, no one man is hominibus; and hominibus it is, He deales them to. None, so compleat, but he wants some: none so bare left, that he wants all. A note (if well digested) which would cause this fastidious disdaine to cease, we have one of another. The spoiles are divided to them of the houshold (Verse 12.) come not all to one mans hand: 3. Hominibus.

Heb. 2. 4. hand: They be μεριςοὶ, (Heb. 2.) by proportion and measure, part and part. So that, any man, though he want this gift or that; have not all; if we have but some to do good, and do good with that some, need not be dismayed. He is within the verge of Christs bounty, of dona dedit hominibus,

4. Etiam inimicis The last, is the enlargement of his largesse of this clause in the Grant: for men; Yea, for some men, some special men (may some say) such as Abrahm, and David, Gods friends: but not for His enemies; nor for such, as I. Yes: אפילו בסרים even for His enemies; even for His Rebels (so is the nature of the word) even to them, this day, is He willing to part with His gifts. His enemies? why, the Divels themselves are no more, but so, but His enemies: what, for them? No: it is hominibus, etiam inimicis; It is not dæmonibus: So, they are out cleare. But, for men, though His enemies, there is hope in this clause. And O the bountifulnesse of God, that there is hope even for them, that He so farre enlargeth the gifts of His feast!

Luke 24. 47. Will ye but hear his Commission given about this point? This it is: that remission of sinnes (the chief gift of all) in His Name, be proclaimed to all Nations, (And, all Nations then (in a manner) were within the Apostles Cum inimici essemus.) But, that is not it, but the last words that follow: that this Proclamation should be made, beginning at Jerusalem. At Jerusalem? why, there all the injuries were done Him, all the indignities offered Him, that could possibly be offered Him, that could possibly be offered by one enemy to another. Begin there? why the stones were yet moist with His blood, so lately shed, so few dayes before, as scarce dry at the Proclamation-time. Well yet, there begin: this is etiam inimicis indeed. Enough, to shew, He would have His enemies should be the better for this day: festum charitatis, this right.

And now ye will see this put in execution? This very day, soo soone as ever these gifts were come, Saint Peter thus complains, that Holy and Just One, ye have beene the betrayers and murtherers of Him (that is inimicis (trow I) in the highest degree.) Well yet, repent and be baptized, and your sinnes (yea even that sinne also) shall be done away, and ye shall receive the gift of the HOLY GHOST. They, that had laid him full low, past ever ascending (as they thought) even they have their parts in His Ascention. They, that bound him as prisoner, He looses their captivity. They, that did damna dare to him, He doth dona dare to them. All to shew, Etiam inimicis is no more than the truth: and what would we more? Then let no man despaire of his part in these gifts, or say I am shut out of the Grant: I have so lived, so behaved my self; never dwell with God, I? Why, what art thou? A captive? Nay, art thou an enemy? Why, if de hominibus, etiam inimicis; if a man, though an enemy, this Scripture will reach him, if he put it not from him. The words are so plain: for men, yea though His very enemies.

Verse 1. See then, what difference is between the two Feasts: The Resurrection (the first verse of the Psalme) Let God arise, and let his enemies be scattered, (that is) Inimici dæmones, or men, that put Him from them. But now, at this, Let God arise, and let his enemies (that were, and would not be) be gathered, and let those that hate him, (and now hate themselves for it) flie unto him. It is the Feast of Pentecost to day. This is the day for etiam inimicis: To day, He hath gifts even for them too. And thus much for the latter part, and so for the whole Triumph.

III. The end, that God might dwell among men. The end now, why all this. Hominibus, for men, that God may dwell among men. GOD, that is the whole Trinity, by this Person of it. Why? dwelt He not among men before? He did. I know not well, whether it may be called dwelling; but sure never so did before, as since these gifts came from Him.

1. Dwell, not visit. Did not dwell (they call it visiting) then: went and came, and that was all. But, since, He came to settle Himself, to take His residence, not to visit any longer, but even to dwell among them.

2. Among men, at large. Psal. 76. 8. Gen. 9. 27. Ephes. 4. 10. Nor among men, before; but, among some men. He was cooped up (as it were) Notus in Judæâ Deus, and there was all. Since, the fulnesse of the Gentiles is come in; Japhet into Shems tents: All Nations, His neighbours are interessed in Him and his Gifts, alike. Saint Paul upon this verse, He ascended, Ut impleret omnia. Impleret, His: omnia, ours. Filled with His gifts, He: full, all; that is, all the compasse of earth full of his fulnesse.

It is for love, φιλανθρωπία, for His love of men, that makes him desire thus to dwell with us. This is evident, by this captivitas soluta, and these dona distributa; by this Captivity led (that is) by his fighting for it: by these gifts given (that is) by his bidding for it; that all this He doth, and all this He gave, and all for no other end but this. So as, quid requirit Dominus? on his part: quid retribuam Domino? on ours; all is but this, ut habitet nobiscum Deus, that the true Arke of his presence (his Holy Spirit) may finde a place of rest with us.

Our duty. 1 Chron. 6. 41. What shall we do then? shall we not yeeld to Him thus much, or rather, thus little? If he have a minde to dwell in us, shall we refuse Him? It will be for our benefit: we shall finde a good neighbour of him. Shall we not then say (as they did to the Arke) Arise O Lord into thy resting place.

But

But first, two things would be done. 1 The Place would be meet: 2 And the uſage or entertainment according. For the Place, Never look about for a ſoile, where: The place, are we our ſelves. He muſt dwell in us, if ever He dwell among us. In us (I ſay) not beſide us: שבינה is the word, and ſo it ſignifieth, Sic inter nos ut in nobis. To prepare him a place.

And if ſo, then Locus and Locatum would be ſutable. A Dove He is: He will not come but ad tecta candida, to no foul or ſooty place. Ointment He is: poured He will not be, but into a clean, and ſweet; not into a ſtinking or loathſome phial. To hold us to the word: GOD he is; and Holy is his title: So would his place be, an holy place; and, for GOD, a Temple. You know, who ſaith, Templum Dei eſtis vos: Know ye not, ye are the Temples of God, if He dwell in you? 1 Cor. 3. 16.

2. To entertain Him. Verſe 16.

But it is not the place (though never ſo commodious) makes one ſo willing to dwell, as doth the good uſage, or reſpect of thoſe, in the midſt of whom it is. Here will I dwell, for I have a delight (ſaith He.) It would be ſuch, as to delight Him (if it might be: but ſuch, as at no hand to grieve Him. For then, He is gone again; Migremus hinc, ſtraight, and we force Him to it. For, who would dwell, where He cannot dwell, but with continual grief?

And, what is there, will ſooner grieve Him, and make Him to quit us, than diſcord or diſ-union? Among divided men, or minds, He will not dwell. Not, but where unity and love is. In vaine, we talk of the Spirit without theſe. Aarons ointment, and the dew of Hermon (both types of Him) ye know what Pſalme they belong to: It begins with habitare fratres in unum. It is in this Pſalme before (verſe 9.) where men are of one minde in an houſe, there He delights to be. This very day, they that received Him, were ὁμοθυμαδὸν, with one accord, in one place. That ὁμοθυμαδὸν is the Adverb of the Feaſt. And the Apoſtle, in his comment on this verſe: No better way (ſaith he) to preſerve the unity of the Spirit (or the Spirit of Unity, chooſe you whether) than in the bond of peace. To ſay truth, who would be hired to dwell in Meſech, where nothing is but continual jarres and quarrels? Such places, ſuch men, are even as torrida Zona, not habitable by the Spirit, by this Spirit. But for the other ſpirit, the ſpirit of diviſion, they are: Ut habitet Damon inter eos, a fit place for the Divel, to dwell among ſuch. Think of this ſeriouſly, and ſet it down, that at Salem is his Tabernacle: and Salem is peace, and ſo the Fathers read it, In pace factus eſt locus Ejus. Make Him that place, and he will ſay, here is my reſt, here will I dwell, for I have delight therein. Pſal. 133. 1. Ephes. 4. 3. Pſal. 120. 5. Pſal. 76 2.

We ſaid even now: to dwell among us, He muſt dwell in us: And, in us, He will dwell, if the fruits of His Spirit be found in us. And, of His fruits, the very firſt is Love. And the fruit is, as the tree is. For, He himſelf is love, the eſſential Love, and Love-knot of the undivided Trinity.

Now, to work love (the undoubted both ſigne and means of His dwelling) what better way, or how ſooner wrought, than by the Sacrament of Love, at the Feaſt of love, upon the Feaſt-day of Love, when Love deſcended with both his hands full of gifts, for very love, to take up His dwelling with us? By the Sacrament.

You ſhall obſerve: there ever was, and will be, a near alliance, between His dona dedit hominibus, and His dona reliquit hominibus; The Gifts He ſent, and the Gifts he left us. He left us the gifts of his body and bleod. His body broken, and full of the characters of love, all over. His blood ſhed, every drop whereof is a great drop of love. To thoſe which were ſent, theſe which were left (love, joy, peace) have a ſpecial connatural reference, to breed and to maintain each other. His body, the Spirit of ſtrength; his blood, the Spirit of comfort: both, the Spirit of Love.

This Spirit (we ſaid) we are to procure, that it may abide with us, and be in us. And what is more intrinſecal in us, abideth ſurer, groweth faſter to us, than what we eat and drink? Then, if we could get a ſpiritual meat, or get to drink of the Spirit, there were no way to that. And behold, here they be. For, here is ſpiritual meat, that is, breeding the Spirit; and here we are all made drink of one Spirit, that there may be but one ſpirit in us. And we are all made one bread, and one body, kneaded together, and preſſed together into one (as the Symboles are, the bread and the wine;) So many as are partakers of one bread, and one cup, the bread of life, and the cup of bleſſing, the Communion of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. And, in figure of this, even King David dealt theſe two (bread and wine) in a kinde of reſemblance to ours, when the Arke was to be brought home, and ſeated among them; the Arke in type. And we to do the ſame, this day, when the Arke in truth did come, and will come to take up His reſt in us. 1 Cor. 10 34. 1 Cor. 12 13. Johh 5. 33. 1 Cor. 10. 16. 1 Chron. 16. 3.

Will ye now hear the end of all? By this means God ſhall dwell with us (the perfection of this life:) and He dwelling with us, we ſhall dwell with him (the laſt and higheſt perfection of the life to come.) For, with whom God dwelleth here, they ſhall dwell with him there, certainly. Grace He doth give, that he may dwell with us; and glory he will give, that we may dwell with him. So may he dwell, he with us: ſo may we dwell, we with him, eternally. So, the Text comes about round. It began with an aſcenſion, and it ends with one: began with Chriſts; ends with ours. He aſcended, that God might dwell with us; that God dwelling with us, we might, in the end aſcend and dwell with God. He went up on high, that the Spirit might come down to us below; and, that coming down, make us go the ſame way, and come to the ſame place, that he is. Sent him down to us, to bring us up to him.

Where, we ſhall no leſſe truly than joyfully ſay: This is our reſt for ever. To which reſt, Aſcenſor cœli, Ductor captivitatis, Largitor donorum, he that is gone up to heaven, the Leader of captivity, the Great Receiver, and Giver of theſe Gifts, vouchſafe to bring us: That, as this Feaſt is the period of all the Feaſts of the year; So this Text, and the end of it, to dwell with God, may be the end of us all: of our deſires, here; of our fruition there. Which, &c.

SERMON

Preached before the

KINGS MAJESTY,

AT GREEN-WICH,

On the XXIX. of May, A. D. MDCXV.

being WHITSUNDAY.

Luke Chap. III. Ver. XXI. XXII.

Now it came to passe, when all the people were baptized, and that Jesus also was baptized, and did pray, the heaven was opened:

And the Holy Ghost came down upon him, in a bodily shape like a Dove, and there was a voice from heaven saying, Thou art my beloved Sonne, in whom I am well pleased.

The Feast of the Holy Ghost.
The Coming down of the Holy Ghost upon Christ.
Dignius.
Antiquius.
Communius.

THis is the feast of the HOLY GHOST. And here have we in the Text, a visible descending of the HOLY GHOST.

Another there was, besides this, Acts II. But this hath the vantage of it, three wayes: 1 The worthinesse of the Person. Here it descends upon CHRIST, who alone is more worthy than all those there. 2 The priority of Time; This here was first, and that other, the HOLY GHOST but at the second hand. 3 The generality of the good: That other was proper but to one calling (of the Apostles) only. All are not Apostles; all are Christians. This of CHRISTS concerns all Christians; and so the more general by far.

The Feast of Baptisme.
The Baptisme day of the first Christian.
Acts 2. 41.
The Baptisme-day of the Apostles.
Acts 2. 3. 41.

That it is of baptisme, is no whit impertinent neither; for this is the Feast of Baptisme. There were three thousand, this day baptized by the Apostles (the first Christians that ever were.) In memory of that Baptisme, the Church ever after held a solemne custome of Baptizing at this Feast. And many, all the year, reserved themselves till then; (those except, whom necessity did cause to make more haste.)

But, upon the point, both Baptismes fell upon this day. That, wherewith the Apostles themselves were baptized, of fire. And that, wherewith they baptized the people, of water. So that even this way, it is pertinent also.

CHRISTS baptisme a high mystery.
The presence of the whol Trinity
1 At the Creation.
Gen. 1. 1, 2, 3.
2 At Christs Christning.

To look into the Text, there is no man but at the first blush will conceive there is some great matter in hand. 1 First, by the opening of heaven: for, that opens not, for a small purpose. 2 Then, by the solemne presence of so great estates at it: for, here is the wholy Trinity in person. The Sonne in the water, the Holy Ghost in the Dove, the Father in the voice. This was never so before, but once: Never but twice, in all; in all the Bible. Once in the Old Testament, and once in the New. In the Old, at the creation, the beginning of Genesis. There finde we GOD, and the Word with GOD creating, and the Spirit of God moving upon the face of the waters. And now here again, at CHRIST'S christening in the New.

The

The faces of the Cherubins are one toward the other: (that is) there is a mutual correſpondence between theſe two. That was at the creation: this, a creation too; If any be in CHRIST, he is a new creature of this new creation. That was the Geneſis, (that is) the generation of the World: this, the παλιγγενεσία (the Apoſtles word) that is, the regeneration, or ſpiritual new birth, whereby we be born againe the Sonnes of God. And better not born at all, than not ſo born againe.

Exod 5.20. That a New Creation. 2 Cor. 5.17. That, a new generation. Tit. 3.5.

This then, being every way as great; (indeed, the greater of the twain) meet it was, they all ſhould preſent themſelves at this, no leſs than at that; and every one have His part in it (as we ſee, they have.) All (I ſay:) ſeeing the Commiſſion for Baptiſme was to run in all their Names, and it ſelf ever to be miniſtred accordingly.

The Commiſſion for us. Mat. 28.19. The execution of it.

To lay forth the members of the diviſion: A double Baptiſme we have here: Double for the Parties, and double for the Parts.

The Diviſion. 1 CHRISTS. 2 The Peoples.

For the Parties; we have here two Parties. Firſt the People. Then CHRIST.

CHRISTS and the Peoples.

For the Parts; we have here two parts. For this firſt (both of CHRIST and the People) was but Johns Baptiſme, was but Baptiſmus fluminis (as they call it) water-baptiſme. But, there is another part beſides to be had, even Baptiſmus Flaminis, the Baptiſme of the HOLY GHOST.

In water. In the HOLY GHOST.

That ſecond part is ſet down in a ſequele of four:

1 For firſt, after Johns Baptiſme, CHRIST prayes. 2 Then, after His prayer, Heaven opens. 3 After heaven open, the HOLY GHOST deſcends. 4 Laſtly, after His deſcent, comes the voice. And theſe four make up the other part, and both together a full Baptiſme.

Of theſe then in order. 1. Of the Peoples Baptiſme. 2. Of CHRISTS baptiſme. CHRISTS 1: by water, and then 2 by the HOLY GHOST. In which, the four: 1 CHRISTS prayer, 2 Heaven open, 3 the Dove, and 4 the Voice. 2.

I.

IT came to paſs that when, &c. Two Baptiſmes we have here: 1 The Peoples firſt, 2 Then CHRIST'S. How it ſhould come to paſs, the People ſhould be baptized, we ſee good reaſon: but not how it ſhould come to paſs, that CHRIST alſo. The People, they came confeſſing their ſinnes; and ſo needed the baptiſme of repentance: ſo was Johns Baptiſme. For; the People not being βαπτιζόμενοι, baptized, but (to uſe the Apoſtles word) βυθιζόμενοι, even ſouſed over head and eares in their ſins, in many fooliſh and noyſome luſts, which drown men in perdition, Tanquam ſus à volutabro, they had need to be waſhed from the wallow of their ſin, they had long lien in.

I. The Peoples Baptiſme. Mat. 3.6. For their ſins. Act. 19.4. 1 Tim 6.9. 2 Pet. 2.22.

And not only for their ſinne: even their righteouſneſs (take it at the beſt) even that, was not ſo clean, but it needs come to baptiſme: Utpote ſtillantes quotidie ſuper telam juſtitiæ, ſaniem concupiſcentiæ (they be Pope Adrians own words:) As dropping every other while, upon the web of thoſe few good works we do, ſuch ſtuff; the Prophet reſembles it to ſo homely a thing, as I liſt not tell you, what it is: but it is pannus menſtruatus, engliſh it who will. Reaſon then, for the People: And not only for fex populi, but even flos populi, to be baptized. It might well come to paſs, that.

For their very righteouſneſs. In quarum Sententiam. Eſay 64.6.

Yea reaſon, that even they, who of all the reſt, ſeem leaſt to need it; the Peoples children, ἀρτιγέννητα βρέφη, the poor new-born babes. For, being conceived of unclean ſeed (Job) and; warmed in a ſinful womb (David:) at their birth, polluted no leſs in ſinne, than in their blood (Ezekiel;) there is not * Infans unius diei ſuper terram (as the Seventy read it) not a child a day old, but needs baptiſmus lavacri, if it be but for baptiſmus uteri; the baptiſm of the Church, if it be but for the baptiſm it had in the womb. Let the people then be baptized in GOD'S name, good and bad, men and children and all.

The people's childrens baptiſme. 1 Pet. 2.2. Job 14.4. Pſa. 51.5. Ezek. 16.6. *Job 14.4.

II.

Sed quid facitis Baptizantes Jeſum? (As Bernard asks at His Circumciſion, Quid facitis circumcidentes puerum hunc? What do you circumciſing Him, in whom nothing ſuperfluous? So here) What do you baptizing Him, in whom nothing unclean? What ſhould He do being baptized? How comes that to paſs? Go waſh your ſpotted lambs and ſpare not: this Lamb is immaculate, hath not the leaſt ſpot upon Him. Qui non fecit peccatum (it is Paul;) Qui non novit peccatum (it is Peter:) Neither did, nor knew ſin: He hath none to repent of; what ſhould He do at the baptiſm of repentance?

II. CHRISTS baptiſme. It may ſeem CHRIST was not to be baptized. 1 Pet. 1.19. 1 Pet 2.22. 2 Cor 5.21. Acts 19.4. Mat. 3.14. Pſa. 114.3.

One might well ask, Why did not the Baptiſt repel Him finally? Not ſay: I have need to be baptized of thee, (that is) Thou haſt no need to be baptized of me: that was too faint; that was not enough: But, Thou haſt no need to be baptized at all. Yea, one might well ask the water (with the Pſalmiſt;) Why it fled not; and Jordan, Why it was not driven back, at this Baptiſme?

Yet CHRIST was baptized. It may ſeem of very humility. Joh. 13. 15.

Yet the Verſe is plain; that, with the People, CHRIST alſo was baptized.

How came this to paſs? Why baptized? Why with the People?

Was it this; though he needed it not, yet for exemplum dedi vobis, He would condeſcend to it, to give all a good example of humility, as He did at His Maundie, when He waſhed His Diſciples feet?

Indeed, I muſt needs ſay, great Humility there was in it; as at His Circumciſion, to take on Him the brand of a Malefactor: ſo here, to ſubmit Himſelf to the waſhing proper to ſinners only. 2 Then again, not to take it alone, but to take it at the hands of one ſo far inferiour to Him, as he reckoned not himſelf worthy to ſtoop and unlooſe His ſhoo-latchet. 3 Again, that not baptized only, but baptized with the People. Not, Saint John come and baptize Him, at home; but, with the multitude, the meaneſt of them: they, and He together. And when? Not upon a Day by Himſelf, but, when they. And where? not in a baſon by Himſelf, but even in the Common River, with the reſt of the meiny. When, and where, they; Then, and there, He.

Not of humility, but of Juſtice. Mat. 3. 15.

This (ſure) was great Humility; and to it we well might, and gladly we would aſcribe it: but that, Himſelf will not let us ſo do. For when the Baptiſt ſtrained courteſie at it, he bade, Let be, Thus it behoved, implere omnem juſtitiam. Juſtitiam (mark that:) No courteſie, but Juſtice; He makes a matter of juſtice of it; as if juſtice ſhould not have been done (at leaſt, not all Juſtice) if He had not been baptized.

The Juſtice in Chriſt two ways conſidered. 1 Cor. 15. 22.

Why, what juſtice had been broken? what piece of it, if He had not? To ſhew you, how this comes to paſs; we are to conſider CHRIST, as having two capacities (as they term them.) So are we to conſider Him (the ſecond Adam:) For ſo do we the firſt Adam: as a perſon of himſelf, and, as the Author of a Race, or Head of a Society. And, even ſo do we, CHRIST: Either as totum integrale, a perſon entire (they call it a body natural;) or, as pars Communitatis (which they call a body politick) in conjunction, and with reference to others: Which others are His Church; which Church is His body. They His body, and He their Head (ſo told us often, by the Apoſtle.) And, as by Himſelf conſidered, He is Unigenitus, the only begotten, hath never a brother: ſo, as together with the people, He is Primogenitus inter multos, the firſt begotten among many brethren.

Eph. 1. 22, 23. Joh. 3. 16. Rom. 8. 22.

Not as by himſelf from us.

To apply this to our purpoſe. Take CHRIST by Himſelf, as ſevered from us, and no reaſon in the world, to baptize Him. He needed it not. Needed it not? Nay, take Him ſo; Jordan had more need come to Him, than He to Jordan, to be cleanſed. Lavit aquas Ipſe, non aquæ Ipſum, the waters were baptized by Him, they baptized Him not: He went into them, Ut aquæ nos purgaturæ prius per Ipſum purgarentur (it is Epiphanius) that they which ſhould cleanſe us, might by Him firſt be cleanſed. It is certain; ſo, He received no cleanneſs, no vertue; but vertue He gave, to Jordan, to the waters, to the Sacrament it ſelf.

In Anchorate.

But as part of one body with us. Heb. 2. 14.

But then, take Him the other way, as in conjunction cum populo, they and He one body, and the caſe is altered. For, if He be ſo cum populo, with them, as He be one of them; as He be, a part of a body with them (a principal part I grant, yet a part though) reaſon would, He do as they do, part and part alike. Inaſmuch (ſaith the Apoſtle) as the children were partakers of fleſh and blood, He alſo took part with them. And ſo, inaſmuch as they baptized, He alſo took ſuch part as they, both went to baptiſm together. For (ut pars toti congrua) a kind of juſtice there is in it, they ſhould ſo do.

Not only as part with us, but as for us alſo. Gal. 3 27. Eph. 5. 6. 2 Cor. 5. 21.

But if we look a little further, then ſhall we find greater reaſon yet. A part He is; and parts there be, that in ſome caſe undertake for the whole; as the arm, to be let blood, for all the body. And it came to paſs, that ſuch a part He was; He undertook for us. For, in His baptiſme He puts us on; as we put Him on, in ours. Take Him then, not only as cum populo, but as pro populo; not only, as nobiſcum, but as pro nobis: Put Him in the caſe, the Prophet doth, Poſuit ſuper Ipſum iniquitates omnium noſtrûm, put upon Him the tranſgreſſions of us all: Put Him as the Apoſtle puts Him, Factus eſt peccatum pro nobis, make Him ſinne, for us; put all our ſinnes upon Him; and then, it will come to paſs, He will need baptizing: He will need that, for me and thee, that for Himſelf He needed not, and baptiſme in that caſe, may well be miniſtred unto Him.

To waſh off our ſinnes. Eſay 40 16.

Nay then, as in another caſe the Prophet ſaith, that all Lebanon was little enough to find wood for a Sacrifice: So may we in this, that all Jordan is little enough to find water to His baptiſme. A whole River too little, in that caſe. For, being firſt baptized (as I may ſay) in ſo many millions of ſins, of ſo many millions of ſinners (in ſo foul a puddle;) well might He then be baptized, if it were but to waſh away that His former foule baptiſme. Well might it come to paſs then.

What baptiſme waſheth ſinnes off. Not water. a Job 9. 30. b Jer. 2. 22.

One only ſcruple remains: How Jordan or any water could do this; waſh away ſinne? To clear it ſhortly; the truth is, it could not. It is no [a] water-work, without ſomewhat put to it, to help it ſcoure. But, nothing on Earth: Not, if you put to it [b] Nitre, much Sope, Fullers earth, the herb borith (ſay the Prophets) all will not do; it will not off, ſo. Therefore, this of His in Jordan did not, could not do the feat, otherwiſe, than in the vertue of another to follow. For, after this was paſt, He ſpake of another baptiſme, He was to be baptized with. And that was it indeed: That, the fountain, that was opened to the houſe of Iſrael, for ſin and for uncleanneſs: that was baptiſmus ſanguinis. For, without blood, without the mixture of that, there is no doing away ſin.

Chap. 12. 50. Zach. 13. 1. Heb. 9. 22.

And

And ſo was He baptized. And He had trinum merſionem: 1 One in Gethſemane, 2 One in Gabbatha, 3 and a third in Golgotha. [a] In Gethſemane, in His ſweat of blood. [b] In Gabbatha, in the blood, that came from the ſcourges and thornes: and in [c] Golgotha, that which came from the nailes and the ſpeare. Specially, the ſpeare: There, met the two ſtreams of [d] water and blood, the true Jordan, the bath or laver, wherein we are [e] purged from all our ſinnes. No ſinne of ſo deep a die, but this will command it, and fetch it out. This in Jordan, here, now, was but an undertaking of that, then; and in vertue of that, doth all our water-baptiſme work. And therefore, are we baptized into it: not into His water-baptiſme, but into His Croſs-baptiſme; not into His baptiſme, but into His death. So many as are baptized, are baptized into His death: It is the Apoſtle, *Rom.*6.3.

But the baptiſme of blood.

e Joh. 1. 7.

To take our leave of this point. This may be ſaid: If it be Juſtice, that CHRIST come to baptiſme: much more, that the People. And how then comes it to paſs, that there is ſuch ſacrilegious pride in ſome of the people, that (as if no ſuch thing were) ſet ſo light by it as they do? and that, not Johns (as this was,) but CHRISTS own baptiſme? Be ſure of this, if CHRIST did thus, to countenance and credit Johns baptiſme, becauſe it was the ordinance of GOD: much more his mind is, to give countenance, and to have countenance given, to his own, which is GODS ordinance, of a far higher nature.

Our duty out of Chriſts baptiſm.
Chap. 7. 30.

And, if the LORD thought not much to come to the baptiſme of his ſervant: He will think much, if the ſervant come not to the baptiſme of his LORD. This of his then is but a leſſon to us, to invite us thereto: and we to take it as the voice, that ſpake to S. Paul (Act. 22. 16.) Et nunc quid moraris? Surge, ablue peccata tua: And now, why ſtay you? why protract you the time? Up, waſh away your ſinnes, with all the ſpeed you may. For, if when the people was baptized, CHRIST was ſo: much more ſtrongly it holds; when CHRIST himſelf is ſo, that then, the people ſhould and ought to be baptized.

The ſecond part of Chriſts baptiſm.

NOW CHRIST is baptized. And no ſooner is he ſo: but, he falls to his prayers. Indigentia mater orationis (we ſay:) Want begets Prayer. Therefore, yet there wants ſomewhat. A part, and that a chief part of baptiſme is ſtill behind.

VI.

There goes more to baptiſme, if it be as it ſhould be, than baptiſmus fluminis: yea (I may boldly ſay) there goes more to it, if it be as it ſhould, than baptiſmus ſanguinis: Chriſt came in water and blood; not in water only, but in water and blood: that is not enough, except the Spirit alſo bear witneſs. So baptiſmus Flaminis is to come too. There is to be a Trinity beneath, 1 water, 2 blood, and 3 the Spirit, to anſwer to that above: but (the Spirit's baptiſme coming too) in the mouth of all three, all is made ſure, all eſtabliſhed throughly. This is it, he prayes for as man.

1 Joh. 5. 7. 8.
Deut. 19. 15.

For, the baptiſme of blood, that was due to every one of us (and each of us to have been baptized in his own blood; to have had three ſuch immerſions;) that, hath Chriſt quit us off. When he was asked by the Prophet, How his robes came ſo red? He ſayes, He had been in the Wine-preſs; but, there he had been, and that He had trod alone: Et vir de gentibus non fuit mecum, And not one of the people with him, none but he, there; in that: ſpares us, in that.

The baptiſm of blood we are quit of.
Eſay 63. 23.

But the other two parts he ſets down preciſely to Nicodemus (and in him, to us all;) 1 Water, 2 and the Holy Ghoſt: Now, the Holy Ghoſt we yet lack. So doth S. Paul, baptized in the Sea; and in the Cloud: by the Sea, meaning the elementary part; by the Cloud, the celeſtial part of baptiſme. Now, that of the Cloud, we have not yet. So doth S. Peter: the doing away the ſoile of the fleſh (that, Jordan can do) but that, wherewith the conſcience (or ſoul) ſhould be preſented before GOD; that is ſtill wanting. And the baptiſme of the body, is but the body of baptiſme; the ſoul of baptiſme, is the baptiſme of the ſoul. Of the ſoul, with the blood of Chriſt, by the hand of the Holy Ghoſt: as, of the body, with water, by the hand of the Baptiſt: without which, it is but a naked, a poor, and a dead element.

But not either of water, or of the Holy Ghoſt.

Gal. 4. 9.

S. Paul tells us (Col. 2.) that beſides the Circumciſion, that was the manufacture, there was another; made without hands: There is ſo, in baptiſme, beſides the hand ſeen, that caſts on the water; the vertue of the Holy Ghoſt is there, working without hands, what here was wrought.

Col. 2. 11.

And for this, Chriſt prayes: that then it might, might then, and might ever, be joyned to that of the water. Not in his baptiſme only, but in the peoples; and (as he afterwards enlarges his Prayer) in all others, that ſhould ever after believe in his Name. That, what in his (here) was, in all theirs might be; what in this firſt, in all following; what in Chriſts, in all Chriſtians: Heaven might open, the Holy Ghoſt come down, the Father be pleaſed to ſay over the ſame words, toties, quoties, ſo oft, as any Chriſtian mans child is brought to his Baptiſme. Chriſt hath Prayed, now.

CHRISTS prayer for the Holy Ghoſt.
Joh. 17. 20.

See the force of his Prayer. Before it, Heaven was mured up, no Dove to be ſeen, no voice to be heard, Altum ſilentium. But ſtraight upon it (as if they had but waited the laſt word of his Prayer) all of them follow immediately.

2.

Heaven opens firſt. For, if when the lower heaven was ſhut up three yeares, Elias was able with his Prayer to open it (it is our Saviour, in the next Chapter following) and bring down rain: The Prayer of Chriſt (who is more of might, than many ſuch as Elias) ſhall it not be much much more of force, to enter the Heaven of heavens, the higheſt of them all, and to bring down thence, the waters above the heavens, even the heavenly graces of the Holy Spirit.

The opening of heaven.

For ſo, when our Saviour cried (John 7.) If any be athirſt, let him come to me, and I will give him of the Waters of life: This (ſaith S. John) He ſpake of the Spirit. For, the Spirit and his graces are the very ſuperceleſtial water: one drop whereof, infuſed into the waters of Jordan, will give them an admirable power, to pierce even into the innermoſt parts of the ſoul: and to baptize it; (that is) not only take out the ſtains of it, and make it clean, but further, give it a tincture, luſtre, or gloſs: for, ſo is baptiſme properly, of βάπτω, taken from the Dyers fat, and is a dying or giving a freſh colour, and not a bare waſhing only.

2 To ſhew, baptiſm is from heaven. Chap. 20. 5.

By a door open Apoc. 4. 1.

Alwayes, the opening of heaven opens unto us, that no baptiſme without heaven open: and ſo, that baptiſme is de cœlo, non ab hominibus, from heaven, not of men. So was it here: So is it to be holden for ever. 2. And from heaven: nor clanculùm (as Prometheus is ſaid to get his fire) but ἀνεῳγότα, orderly, by a fair door ſet open; in the view of much people: for, that all were preſent, ſaw the impreſſion in the skie. Which door was not mured up again: For, we find it ſtill open, Apoc. 4. and we find, that keyes were made, and given of it, after this. 3. And all this; that, there might not only be a paſſage for theſe down: but for us up. For, heaven gate, ab hoc exemplo, doth ever open at baptiſme; in ſign, he that new cometh from the Font, hath then right of entrance in thither. Then (I ſay) when by baptiſme he is cleanſed: For before, Nihil inquinatum, Nothing defiled can enter there.

Out of heaven open, what. Pſa. 48. 8.

Out of heaven now open, ſomewhat is ſeen, and ſomewhat heard. 1 Seen: a Dove deſcend; the Apparition. 2 Heard; Tu es filius meus; the voice. Under one, the teſtimony Viſus & Auditus, of hearing and ſight both: that, Sicut audivimus, ſic & vidimus, that, as we ſee, we heare, and back againe, as we heare, ſee: which is, as much as can be, to make full faith.

The Apparition 1 The Holy Ghoſt.

1. The Apparition. Wherein the points are ſix: 1. The Holy Ghoſt.] Firſt, that perſon: For, the Perſon, by whom CHRIST was conceived; by the ſame, it was moſt convenient, Chriſtians ſhould alſo be. But to go higher: The Perſon, that was Author of Geneſis the generation, meeteſt to be Author likewiſe of regeneration. The ſame perſon, and in the ſame element: The element, whereof all were made, and wherewith all were deſtroyed after; that, with the ſame, all ſhould be ſaved again: the water it ſelf, now becoming the Ark; the drowning water, the ſaving Ark, as S. Peter noteth. That, as then by His moving on the waters, he put into them a life and heat to bring forth: ſo now, by his coming down upon them, he ſhould impregnate them to a better birth. That, as his title is, the Lord and giver of life, he might be the Giver of true life (that is) eternal life: whereto this life of ours is but a paſſage or entry; and not otherwiſe, to be accounted of.

2 Came down. Pſal. 139. 7.

2. The Holy Ghoſt came down:] that is to ſay, in his ſign or ſymbole, the Dove. Otherwiſe, the Spirit of God neither goes up, nor comes down: it is everywhere; beneath, as well as above: but (by a familiar phraſe in Scripture) what the Dove did, that repreſented him; that, is he ſaid, to do.

3 Upon him. Gen. 1. 2. John 1. 33.

3. Came down upon Him:] which is a degree yet further, than in Geneſis. There, he did but move or flutter over the waters (enough, for that effect, then:) here, he cometh nearer, lights and abides upon him: (which argues a greater work in hand.) And which argues too, a greater familiarity to grow, between the Spirit and our nature: For, a bird (we know) is familiar, when it doth ſo; light upon one, and ſtay too. But, all this he doth, not to make him to be ought; but to ſhew him only to be. Upon us when he comes, it is to confer ſomething: Not ſo, upon him: from the firſt minute of his conception, he had the Spirit without meaſure. To confer nothing; only to declare, that this was He, that to Johns water-baptiſme, ſhould have power to add the Holy Ghoſt, and ſo make it his own for ever after.

John 3 34.

4 In a bodily ſhape. Joh. 1. 33.

4. Upon him in a bodily ſhape.] For, his coming being to bear witneſs to John, and to all, that this was he: Convenient it was, he ſhould appear, and ſo have a bodily ſhape, to come into the face of the Court, and there to be ſeen, and taken notice of, as witneſſes uſe to be. And one end it was, why his baptiſme was ſet, at the time when all the peoples was; that ſo, all the people might ſee, and ſo take notice of the Holy Ghoſt, and indeed of the whole Trinity.

5 In the ſhape of a Fowle. Exod. 25. 20. Eſay 6 2. Joh. 3. 8. Pſal. 18. 10.

5. What ſhape then? of what creature? All things quick in motion, as Angels, as the Wind (whereto he is elſewhere compared) are ſet forth with wings: the wings of the wind. Of one with wings then; as moſt apt, to expreſs the ſwiftneſs of his operation, in all his works; but ſpecially, in this. None of the other kind of creatures, though never ſo light of foot, can ſufficiently ſet forth the quickneſs of his working. He goes not: he flies, he: Neſcit tarda molimina; that he doth, he is not long in doing: therefore, in ſpecie volatilis, in the ſhape of a thing flying.

6 In the ſhape of a Dove. Cant 5. 12.

6. And among thoſe of that kind, in the ſhape of a Dove, as fitteſt for the purpoſe in hand. Not ſo much, for that it is noted to love the waters well (ſpecially clear waters, as theſe now be, after Chriſt hath purified them;) That is not all: But indeed, ſpecial choice is made of it, to ſet forth to us the nature and properties of the Holy Ghoſt: which have many wayes reſemblance with thoſe of this creature.

And I will not go to Pliny for them, nor to any heathen Writer of them all. For the Word of God, the Word of God hath ſufficient. To that, we will hold us.

There

There the firſt Dove we find, is Noah's Dove with the Olive-branch in her bill, a ſign of peace, peace, which is the very firſt-fruits of the Spirit. It is Tertullians note, this: That, as after the deluge (the worlds baptiſme, as it were) the firſt meſſenger of peace, was the Dove: So is it here again juſt; after Chriſts baptiſme, the deluge or drowning of that which indeed drowned the world (that is) of ſinne, the very ſame apparition of the Dove, and with another manner of peace than that; but, with peace, in both.

1. Noahs Dove, for the Olive branch. Gen. 8. 11. Rom. 8. 23. Gal. 5. 22.

2. Next have you Davids Dove, for the colour: Penna Columbæ deargentatæ, with feathers ſilver-white: to note candor columbinus, white as a Dove, not ſpeckled as a bird of divers colours. And (to the ſame effect) Solomons Spouſe, for the eye: three ſeveral times, there ſaid to have, oculus columbarum, eyes ſingle and direct as a Dove; not leering as a Fox, and looking divers ways: Oculos Columbinos, not Vulpinos.

2 Davids dove, for the colour. Pſa. 68. 13. Jer. 12. 9. Solomons, for the eye. Cant. 1. 14. 4. 1. 5. 12.

3. Then Eſay's Dove, for the voice: Gemebat ut Columba, in patience mourning; not in impatience murmuring or repining: For, carmen amatorium, her voice. And no other voice to be heard, from the firſt Church. Now, they are aſhamed of that voice: it is not gemebant ut columba, but rugiebant ut urſi; to groyn they begin like Bears, but not mourn any more like Doves. No ſuch voice to be heard now: that, put to ſilence.

3 Eſay's Dove, for the voice. Eſay 38. 14. Eſay 59. 11.

4. At laſt our Saviour Chriſts own, that is, innocent as Doves: harmleſs, both for bill and claw: not bloody or miſchievous. Who ever heard of a Dove, that drew blood, or did any miſchief to any?

4 Chriſts Dove, for bill and claw. Mat. 10. 16.

Now, qualis ſpecies, talis Spiritus, ſuch as the ſhape was, ſuch is the Spirit: and theſe all four properties of it, in the Holy Ghoſt. 1 He a Spirit, that loves [illegible] men of one accord (as was ſeen this day.) 2 Et qui fugit fictum, cannot abide theſe new tricks, meer fictions indeed, feined by feined Chriſtians; party propoſitions, half in the mouth, and half in the mind. 3 And when He ſpeaketh, ſpeaketh for us with ſighs not to be expreſſed, ſuch is His Love, and ſo earneſt. 4 And hurts none: when he is a Dove (as here:) No not, when he was fire; but innoxius ignis, even then.

The properties of the Spirit, like. Act. 2. 1. Sap. 1. 5. Rom. 8. 26. Act. 2. 4.

2. Even as theſe in the Spirit, that came down: ſo the very ſame, in CHRIST, upon Whom He came down. The Spirit a Dove, and CHRIST a Lamb; like natur'd both; what the one, in the kind of Beaſts; the other, in the kind of Foules: that we may ſee, the Holy Ghoſt lighted right. Super quem? upon whom ſhall my Spirit reſt? ſaith GOD in Eſay: and he anſwers, ſuper humilem, On the humble and meek. Humble and meek? Why, Diſcite à me, Learn both thoſe of Me (ſaith CHRIST) For I am both, and a Maſter profeſſed in them both. 2 The Spirit of the olive-branch (that is) peace, on Him: For ipſe eſt pax noſtra, He is our peace. 3 The Spirit that loves omnt fictione carentes (that is) all that hate aquivocations, on Him: For, never was there guile found in His mouth. 4 And laſtly, the harmleſs Spirit, on Him: for, He was ſo, too; would not break a bruiſed reed (He) nor quench flax, though it did but ſmoak. Do no hurt at all.

The like properties were in Chriſt. Joh. 1. 29. Eſay 57. 17. 66. 2. Mat. 11. 29. Eph. 2. 14. 1 Pet. 2. 22. Mat. 12. 20.

3. Thirdly, what He is in himſelf: and what He is, on whom He deſcended: that, the very ſame, ſuch for all the world, doth He make His Church, homogenea cum homogeneis, like nature, like properties, per omnia. And, it is not ſo much (all this) to ſhew His nature, as to ſhew His operation: Not, what he found in CHRIST, as what he works in Chriſtians: Quâ animâ animet, quos ſpiritus ſpiret, what ſoul He puts into them, what manner Spirit he makes them of: That he even endues them, with theſe qualities of the bird, whoſe ſhape he made choice of to preſent himſelf in. Qua ſpecie, in him: ſhews quo ſpiritu, in us. To wit, It makes them peaceable, to love ſingleneſs in meaning, ſpeaking, and dealing, to ſuffer harm, but to do none.

The like properties to be in Chriſtians. Pſa. 58. 13.

Peace, ſincerity, patience, and innocency, theſe be the ſilver-feathers of this Dove: They be vertues, and (which is more) virtutes baptiſmales, the very vertues of our baptiſme: No Chriſtian, to be without them: to be found in all, where the humidum radicale of baptiſme, is not clean dried up.

The Holy Ghoſt is a Dove, and he makes CHRISTS Spouſe (the Church) a Dove: a term, ſo oft iterate in the Canticles, and ſo much ſtood on, by S. Auguſtine and the Fathers, as they make no queſtion, no Dove, no Church. Yea, let me add this: S. Peter, when the keyes were promiſed, never but then, but then (I know not how) he is called by a new name, and never but there, Bar-jona, that is, Filius columbæ. But ſo he muſt be, if ever he will have them. And his Succeſſors, if they claim, by any other fowle; painted keyes they may have, true keyes they have none; For ſure I am, Extra Columbam out of that Church, that is, ſuch and ſo qualified, non eſt columba, there is no Holy Ghoſt; and ſo no remiſſion of ſinnes. For they go together, Receive the Holy Ghoſt; whoſe ſinnes ye remit, they are remitted.

Chriſts Church a Dove. Cant. 2. 10, 14. 5. 2. 6. 8. Mat. 16. 17. Joh. 20. 22, 23.

And, what ſhall we ſay then, to them, that will be Chriſtians (that they will) and yet have nihil Columbæ, nothing in them of the Dove; quit theſe qualities quite; neither bill, nor eye, nor voice, nor colour: what ſhall we ſay? This; that Jeſuites they may be: but Chriſtians (ſure) they be none. No Doves eyes; Fox-eyed they: Not ſilver-white feathers, but particoloured; No gemitus Columbæ, but rugitus Urſi: not the bill or foot of a Dove, but the beak and claws of a Vulture: No Spirit of the Olive-branch, but the ſpirit of the bramble, from whoſe root went out fire to ſet all the Forreſt on a flame.

They that make the Church no dove. Judic 9. 15.

Ye may ſee, what they are, that even ſeek and do all, that in them lies, to chaſe away this Dove, the Holy Ghoſt. The dove (they tell us) that was, for the baby-Church; for them, to be humble, and meek, ſuffer and mourn, like a Dove: Now, as if with Montanus, they had yet, Paracletum alium, another Holy Ghoſt to look for, in another ſhape, of another faſhion quite, with other qualities; they hold, theſe be no qualities for Chriſtians, now: Where indeed (they grant) for the baby-Chriſtians: for the three thouſand thousand first Christians, this day; (poor men) they did all in simplicitate Cordis. And so, to Plinies time: harmless people they were (the Christians) as he writes, did no body hurt. And so, to Tertullian's, who tells us plainly, what hurt they could have done, and yet would do none. And so, all along the Primitive Churches time, even down to Gregory, who in any wise, would have no hand in any mans blood. But the Date of these meek and patient Christians is worne out; long since expired: and now, we must have Christians of a new edition, of another, a new fashion'd Holy Ghosts making; Gregory the seventh (Saint Gregory the seventh forsooth) who indeed, was the first, that instead of the dove, hatched this new misshapen Holy Ghost, and sent him into the world.

For, do they not begin to tell us in good earnest (and speak it in such assemblies and places, as we must take it for their Tenet) that they are simple men, that think, Christians were to continue so still: they were to be so, but for a time; till their beaks and talons were grown, till their strength was come to them, and they able to make their party good: and then, this dove here, might take her wings, flie whither she would, and take her ease: then, a new Holy Ghost to come down upon them, that would not take it, as the other did: but take arms, depose, deprive, blow up: instead of an Olive-branch, have a match-light, in her beak, or a bloody knife.

A calling into question of this shape of a Dove.

Methinks, if this World go on, it will grow a question problematike; In what shape it was most convenient, for the Holy Ghost to have come down? Whether as he did, in the meek shape of a dove? Or whether, it had not been much better, he had come in some other shape, in the shape of the Roman Eagle, or some other fierce fowle, de vulturino genere.

Sure, one of the two they must do: either call us down a new fashion'd Holy Ghost, and institute us a new baptisme (and if both these new; I see not, why not a new CHRIST too:) or else, make a strange Metamorphosis of the old; clap Him on a crooked beak, and stick him full of Eagles feathers, and force Him, to do contrary to that He was wont, and to that, his nature is.

1 Cor. 12. 4.

But lying men may change; may, and do: but the Holy Ghost is unus idemque Spiritus (saith the Apostle) changes not, casts not his bill, mouts not his feathers: His qualities at the first, do last still, and still shall last to the end, and no other notes of a true Christian, but they.

A renouncing of this baptism.

1 Sam. 15. 23.

It is rather like to prove true, that Samuel long since said, Rebellion is as the sinne of witchcraft: For Witches (they say) begin, are initiated, with renouncing of their baptisme. And sure, these prick pretily towards it: For, (say what they will) they be in the way to it, when they plainly disclaim, and renounce his qualities, that was the Author of it. For these baptismal vertues, they, that take them away, do what in them lieth, to take away Holy Ghost, and baptisme and all.

I know they will flie to the fire (of this day) and say, he came in another shape. True, but for another purpose. It was to make Apostles, that; not, Christians as this here. Christians are made in a cooler element. And, we have no Apostles to make now: GOD send us to make good Christians; yield no worse souls to GOD, than this Dove here did, so many hundred years together, till new Jesuits came up, and old Christians went down.

But, give them their fire: it will do them small pleasure, it will not light them a match, nor give fire to their train. When it came (that) and did no hurt; It sate upon them all, but not so much as singled any one of them. Let them shew, this fire, ever blew up any. True, it gave them courage (they needed it, they were to undertake the whole world) but within bounds of modesty, still (we ought to obey GOD rather than man:) Not in lucy and trayterous terms, of old hats or rotten figs: non est vox columbæ hæc; rugitus ursi, rather.

Esay 59. 11.

In a word, this was none of Elia's fire: and you remember, they that harped upon that string, who said to them, You know not what Spirit you are of; Not, what shape appeared at your baptisme: Not Noahs Raven, that delights in dead carcases; but his Dove. That shape came down upon Christ: the same, comes down upon all that are baptized, with His baptism; and are inspired, with the same Spirit, that He was. This for the apparition.

Luke 9. 54, 55.
Gen. 8. 7.

4. The Voice.

Now to the voice. Accedat verbum, ad elementum. The Dove was but a dumb shew, and shews, what is done in us: The Voice, that speaks plainly, and declares, what is done for us, in our baptisme. The Dove, what the Spirit makes us. The Voice, from whom the Father takes us.

We saw CHRISTS humility before, in yielding to be baptized. This heaven oracle here, pronounced of Him, is in a sort, a reward of his former humility. There He was among a rabble of sinners, even in the midst of them. One that had seen Him so, would have taken Him, for none other. This Dove, and this voice from heaven, testifying so great things of Him (no sinner, no servant, but the very Son of GOD, His Love, His Joy, the In quo, for whom we all fare the better) this so honourable anelogy, makes full amends, for that. He lost nothing by his humility. No more did the Baptist, by his Non sum dignus neither. That hand, which he held not worthy to touch his shooe; was dignified, to touch His head, and to poure water on it. Thus they both of them fulfilled righteousness: and both of them had a glorious reward for it.

1. First the Holy Ghosts coming, then the voice. Gen. 1. 3, 4.

But first mark. Till the Spirit is come, the Voice comes not: all depends, on this dayes work (the Holy Ghosts coming.) He is the medius terminus: between Christ in Jordan, and the Father in heaven. He it is, that makes the Father speak, Tu (that is) Tu, super quem Spiritus, Tu es Filius. Thou (that is) Thou, on whom the Spirit in this shape comes down, Thou art my Son: that, to go before. So was it in Genesis: The Spirit moved upon the face of the waters, and then Et dixit Deus: but, no dixit Deus, before the Spirit be there first.

2. The Voice, not for Christ, but for us. Joh. 12. 30.

Then, that non propter Me voxista (as Christ elsewhere saith) This voice came not for Him, but for us. Spoken to Him indeed; but, to Him, not in His own, but sustaining our persons. It were fond, to imagine otherwise: that this Voice, or any of the rest, He needed for Himself. Either to have heaven opened to him: it was no time shut. Or the HOLY GHOST come down to him: as GOD, the Holy Ghost proceeded from Him; as Man, He proceeded from the Holy Ghost, they never parted company. Least of all the Voice, Tu es filius: who knew not that? It was said, and sung, long before, in the Psalm, Thou art my Son. So, all were for us; Voice, and all. Indeed, His whole baptisme, is not so much His, as ours. Psa. 2. 7.

The meaning is, Thou (Christ) in their persons, art this: Thou art; and for thy sake, all that are in thee, all, that by baptisme have put thee on, all and every of them, are to me, as thou thy self art: Filii, dilecti, complacentes. The meaning of Thou art my Son. Gal. 3. 27.

Will ye see what is in them? In Filii first.

1. Enemies we were, Rom. V. Now are we no enemies: but in league with Him, in the new league (or covenant) never to be altered, as the former was. 2 So may we be, and yet strangers still: Nay 2 no strangers, but naturalized now, and of the Common-wealth of Israel. 3 And, that may we be too, and yet forreiners though, and no Citizens, without the Franchise: Yes, 3 now enfranchised also, and Citizens with the Saints. 4 Well, though of the City: not of the family though: Yes, 4 Domestici DEI, of His very Household, now. 5 Of His Household? so we may, and yet be but servants there: Nay, 5 no servants now, but Sonnes, by vertue of this Tu es Filius. So many degrees do we pass, yer we come to this Filius. Go forward now. 6 All sinners are not beloved, Cham was not; Sonnes and beloved Sonnes, a new degree, a fixt. 7 And yet again, all we love, we take not pleasure in. Even beloved Sonnes, offend sometime, and so please not. The Father (in the XV. Chapter after) loved his wilde riotous sonne, but too well; yet, small pleasure took he, in him, or his courses. But Complacitum est (the seventh) that makes up all: a son, a beloved son, his Fathers delight and joy; there is no degree higher. And such are we, by baptisme, made to GOD in Christ, through the renewing of the Holy Ghost.

Rom. 5. 10. Heb. 8. 9. Eph. 2. 12, 19. Eph. 2. 19. Eph. 2. 19. Joh. 8. 34. Gal. 5. 7. Gen. 9. 25. Chap. 15. 20.

Filij. This is a new Tenour now; the old stile is altered. The Voice, that came last from heaven before, ran thus; Ego sum DOMINUS, and that inferres, Tu es Servus (that is the best, that can be made of it.) But here now, it is Tu es Filius, and that necessarily inferres, Ego sum Pater: For hæc vox Patrem sonat, this is a Fathers voice to his Childe. A great Change: Even from the state of servants (as by creation and generation we were; and so still, under the law) into the state of Sonnes, as now we are, being new Creatures in Christ, regenerate and translated into the state of Grace, wherein we stand. The change of the stile from servus. Exod. 20. 2. Gal. 5. 5. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Rom. 5. 2.

And not only a great Change, but a great Rise also. At the first, we were but washed from our sinnes, (there was all:) but here, from a baptized sinner, to an adopted Sonne, is a great ascent. He came not down, so low; but we go up, as high for it. For, if Sonnes, then Heires (saith the Apostle) so goes the tenour in heaven: Heires and joynt heires of heaven, with Christ (that is) for the possession and fruit of it, full every way as Himself; and this He brings us to, before He leaves us. The rise from a sinner to an heire. Gal. 5. 7. Rom. 8. 17.

We speak much of adoption: would you know, when it was, where, and by what words? Why, now; Here it is: These, the very adopting words; by them, the act of adoption, actually executed. This, the very Feast of Adoption. A feast therefore, to be held in high account with us; as high as we hold this, (to be the adopted children of God.) Rom. 8. 15. Gal. 5. 5.

But we must remember, not only that we are, but in quo, all this: to whom we owe it all (that is) to Christ (the natural Son.) In Him it is, and out of Him, it proceeds to come to us. In whom I am well pleased.

The Fathers do ponder this (In quo) to good purpose: that is not, Qui placet, Who pleases me well, or (which is all one) With whom, I am well pleased: (yet so He might have said) but In whom. And, that is more, than both. Who pleases me, or With whom I am pleased, goeth no further than himself, His own person: But, In whom (that is) for whose sake, with others. To whom, I bear such favour, as not only Himself pleaseth me: but in Him, and for Him, others please me also. In whom more than with whom.

Again: If it had been Qui, it had shewed, but what, by nature He is: But this In quo, sheweth to what end, He was sent; to be, the In quo, to bring all this about; Even, that in Him (the Sonne beloved, and well pleasing:) we, that neither were sonnes, but servants, (and those but bad ones neither:) Nor beloved, but full unlovely: and in whom no pleasure at all, displeasure rather: that, in Him we might be received to grace, and made by adoption, what He Himself is. Who, or with whom, His nature. In whom, His end.

The In quo, what we are in Him, we best conceive, by the sine quo, what we are without Him. For sine quo, but that He, with the People; none of all these, had come to them. Heaven shut still: no Dove seen: No Tu es Filius ever heard: we had rotted away in our sinnes without Baptisme: the evil spirit had seized on us, instead of the Holy Ghost: No Sonnes, but cast out, with the evil servant, into utter darkness. In whom best seen by without whom. Joel 2. 18. 1 Sam 16. 14. Mat. 25. 30.

But In quo, GOD so highly well pleased with Him, as, at the very contemplation of Him, but turning to Him, and beholding Him, He layes down all His displeasure, and is pleased to accept us, and our poor and weak obedience; and further, to be so pleased with it, as even to reward it also, In quo complacitum est. Psa. 84. 9.

Complacitum est; and here Baptisme leaves us, and would GOD, there we might hold us; and it might never be, but complacitum est. But, when we fall into sin, specially some kind of sin, we put it in hazard: A turning from Baptisme to the Eucharist.

hazard: for He is not: He cannot then, be well pleased with us. How then? His favor we may not finally loſe; and, to baptiſm we may not come again. To keep this Text in life: Complacitum eſt, It hath pleaſed the Holy Ghoſt, as He applied Chriſts blood to us in baptiſm, one way: ſo out of it, to apply it to us, another way; as it were, in ſupplement of baptiſm. In one verſe, they be both ſet down, by the Apoſtle, 1 In uno Spiritu baptizati, 2 In uno Spiritu potati. And whom He receiveth ſo to His Table, to eat and to drink with Him, (and every one that is well prepared, He ſo receiveth) with them, He is well pleaſed again, certainly. On this day of the Spirit, every benefit of the Spirit, is ſet forth and offered us, and we ſhall pleaſe Him well, in making benefit of all. Specially of this, the only means, to renew His complacency, and to reſtore us thither, where our baptiſm left us.

1 Cor. 12. 13.

The ſame voice the ſecond time for us alſo. Matth. 17 5. Matth. 17. 2.

I end; only this: This voice, it came once more. Two ſeveral times, it came: 1 Once here at His baptiſm: 2 and again, after, at His tranſfiguration in the Mount: Where He was not only ſaid to be, but then and there, ſhewed to be, in glory, as the Son of God indeed; His face like the Sunne, His rayment like the lightning. And both of theſe, pertain to us likewiſe: the firſt is ſpoken of us; when by baptiſm we are received into Him, for the poſſibility and hope, we have of it, thereby: But time will come, when this ſecond ſhall be ſpoken, and verified of us, likewiſe. What time, He ſhall change our vile bodyes, and make them like to His glorious body, as then it was, and as now it is: the heaven ſhall open, and He receive both them, and us, to eternal bliſs: where we in Him, and He in us, ſhall have a perfect complacency for ever, &c.

BEFORE THE

Kings Majesty,

At GREEN-WICH,

On the XX. of May, A. D. MDCXVI,

being WHIT-SUNDAY.

JOHN Chap. XX. Ver. XXII.

Hæc cum dixisset, insufflavit; & dixit eis: Accipite SPIRITUM SANCTUM.

And when He had said that, He breathed on them; and said unto them: Receive the HOLY GHOST.

EVER, as upon this day, somewhat we are to speak of the HOLY GHOST, and of His coming. And this also, here, is a coming of the HOLY GHOST. And, not a coming only, but a coming in a Type, or form, by the sense to be perceived. And so, suits well with the coming of this Day. For, so, this Day He came.

Three such comings there were in all. Once did our Saviour receive the HOLY GHOST, and twice did He give it. Give it on earth in the Text; and after, from heaven, on the day. So, three in all. At CHRISTS Baptisme, it came upon him, in the shape of a Dove (Luke III.) At this Feast, it came upon His Apostles, in the likeness of tongues of fire (Acts II.) And here now, in this, comes breath-wise; having breath for the Symbolum to represent it. The tongues have been heard speak: the Dove hath had his flight: And now this, third of breath falleth to be treated of. Luke 3.22. Acts 2.3.

It is the middle (this) of the three. That of Baptism went before it: That serves to make Christians. This of breath comes after it: This serves to make them (as I may say) Christian-makers: such, whose ministery CHRIST would use, to make Christians: make them, and keep them: make them so, by baptism; and keep them so, by the power of the keys, here given them (in the next words) for the remission of sins. Verse 23.

And as it follows well after that of baptism; So it goes well before the other of tongues. For, first there must be breath, before there be tongues, wherewith the speech is to be framed. The tongues but fashion the breath into certain sounds, which without breath they cannot, and when that fails, their office is at an end. So, first breath; then, tongues. And another reason yet. It is said in the VII. Chapter, the Spirit was not to be given them till CHRIST was glorified: and glorified He was in part, at His Resurrection. Then therefore given in part, as here we see. But much more glorious, after, by His Ascension: Given therefore Chap 7. 39.

then, in full measure. Here, but a breath; there, a mighty winde. Here, but afflatus, breathed in; there, effusus, poured out: The Spirit proceeding gradually. For, by degrees they were brought on, went through them all, all three. Baptized, and so made Christians: breathed into, and so made what we are; had the tongues set on them, and so made Apostles properly so called.

But three things may be said of this here 2 1: That, of all the three comings (first) it is the most proper. For, most kindly it is for the Spirit, to be inspired; to come, per modum spirationis, in manner of breath: inasmuch as it hath the name a spirando; and is (indeed) it self, flamen the very breath (as it were) proceeding à Patre filioque. So, one breath by another.

2 Then, the most effectual it is. For, in both the other (the Dove, and the tongues) the Spirit did but come, but light upon them. In this, it comes (not upon them, but) even into them, intrinsecally. It is insufflavit, it went into their inward parts, and so made them in deed Secundus men inspired by GOD, and that within.

3. And last, it is of the greatest use. Both the other were but for once, Baptisme, but once for every one: the tongues but once, for all. This is toties quoties; so oft as we sin (and that is oft enough) we need it: look how oft that, so oft have we use of this breath here breathed (as the next verse sheweth) for peccatorum remiseritis, the remission of sins.

The Sum. Now, what is here to do, what business is in hand, we cannot but know, if ever we have been at the giving of Holy Orders. For, by these words are they given, Receive the Holy Ghost: whose sins ye remit, &c. were, to them; and are, to us, even to this day, by these and by no other words. Which words, had not the Church of Rome retained in their ordinations, it might well have been doubted (for all their Accipe potestatem sacrificandi pro vivis & mortuis) whether they had any Priests at all, or no. But, as GOD would, they retained them, and so saved themselves. For, these are the very operative words, for the conferring this power, for the performing of this act.

Which act is here performed, somewhat after the manner of a Sacrament. For here is an outward Ceremony (of breathing) instar elementi; and here is a Word coming to it, receive ye the Holy Ghost. That some have therefore yielded to give that name or title to Holy Orders. As (indeed) the word [Sacrament] hath been sometime drawn out wider, and so Orders taken in: and other some, plucked in narrower, and so they left out; as it hath pleased both the old and the later Writers. And, if the Grace here given had been gratum faciens (as, in a Sacrament, it should:) and not (as it is) gratis data, but in office or function: And again, if the outward Ceremony of breathing had not been changed (as it hath plainly) it had been somewhat. But, being changed after into laying on of hands, it may well be questioned. For we all agree, there is no Sacrament but of CHRIST'S own institution: And that, neither matter nor form, He hath instituted, may be changed.

The division. Yet two parts there be evidently: 1 Insufflavit; and 2 Dixit: 1 He breathed, and 2 He said:

I. Of these two then, first joyntly, and then severally. From them joyntly, two points. Of the God-head of our SAVIOUR first: and then, of the proceeding of the Holy Ghost from Him.

II. Then severally. First insufflavit: And in it three points: 1. Of the breath, and, the symbolizing of it with the Holy Ghost: 2. Secondly, of the parties: [a] He that breathed, Christ: [b] They, that breathed into, the Apostles. 3. And last, of the act it self: [a] sufflavit, breathing, [b] insufflat, breathing into them. After of dixit, the Word said: 1 Accipite, of the receiving. 2 Then, of the thing received, which is [a] Spiritum, the Spirit. [b] And not every, or any spirit, but Sanctum the Holy Ghost. [c] And (because that may be received many ways) which way of them, it is here received.

I. Of the two parts joyntly. 1 The God-head of Christ: Dixit.

WE proceed first joyntly out of both, and begin with matter of faith. Two Articles of it: 1 The Godhead of CHRIST; 2 the Proceeding of the Holy Ghost from the second Person.

The first, rising out of the two main parts: For, as insufflavit argues His Manhood: So, dixit doth His Godhead: His saying, Receive the Holy Ghost: For, hæc vox hominem non sonat: No man, of himself, can so say, Verus, Homo, qui spirare, True Man, by His breathing. Verus Deus, qui Spiritum donare: True GOD, by his bidding them take, and so giving them the Holy Ghost. To give that gift, to breath such a breath, is beyond the power of men, or Angels: Is more, than any can do, save GOD only.

For, that We say them also, in our Ordering, the case is far different. We say them not, as in our own, but as in His Person. We bid them, from him receive it; not, from our selves. This point will again fall in afterwards.

1 The proceeding of the Holy Ghost. Next, we argue for the Holy Ghost proceeding from Him; and that evidently. For, as He gave of His breath: so did He of the Spirit. The breath, from His humanity: the Spirit from His Deity. The breath into their bodies: the spirit, into their souls. The outward act teaches visibly without, what is invisibly done within.

Thrice was the Holy Ghost sent, and in three forms, 1 of a Dove, 2 of breath: 3 of Cloven Tongues. From the Father, as a Dove; from the Son, as breath; from both, as Cloven Tongues. The very cleft shewing, they came from two. At Christs Baptisme, the Father sent Him from heaven, in shape of a dove. So, from the Father he proceedeth. After (at his rising here) CHRIST, by a breath, sends Him into the Apostles. So, from the Son he proceedeth. After, being received up into the glory of his Father, he, together with the Father, the Father and he both, sent Him this day down, in tongues of fire. So, from both, he proceedeth. Proceeding from the Father, totidem verbis (Chap. 15.26.) And proceeding (here) from the Son, ad oculum, really. Not, in words only: we may believe our eyes: we see him so proceed. Enough, to clear the doint, à Patre filioque.

This

This proceeding, as it holds each other-where, ſo ſpecially, in this of quorum remiſeritis, the remiſſion of ſinnes, for which, it is here given. For, in that, of all other, the Holy Ghoſt proceeds from CHRIST, moſt properly. For, inaſmuch as the remiſſion of ſinnes came from and by CHRIST, very meet it was, He ſhould have the diſpenſing of His own benefit; and the Remitter of ſinnes, proceed from Him alſo. One, by the blood out of His veines; The other, by the Spirit out of his arteries; and He, as bleed the one, ſo breath the other. He, that ſhould ſeale the acquittance, from Him that laid down the money. That (howſoever in other reſpects, in this ſure) from Him and none but Him, the Holy Ghoſt to proceed.

With reference to quorum remiſeritis.

Proceed: and proceed by way of Breath, rather than any other way: that, to be the ceremonie, or ſymbolum, of it.

I proceed now to the ſecond Combination, of breath, and the HOLY GHOST. It is required in a ſigne, that choice be made of ſuch a one (as near as may be) as may beſt ſute and ſerve to expreſſe that, is conferred by it. Now, no earthly thing comes ſo near, hath ſuch alliance, is ſo like, ſo proper for it, as the breath. I make two ſtands of it: 1 Breath and the Spirit: 2 CHRISTS breath and the Holy Spirit.

II. Of the parts ſeverally. 1. Of inſufflavit: The breath.

First, breath is aire; and aire, the moſt ſubtile and (as I may ſay) the moſt bodileſſe body that is; approaching neareſt to the nature of a ſpirit, which is quite devoid of all corporiety. So, in that, it ſutes well.

1. The Symbolizing of breath with the ſpirit.

But we wave all, ſave only the two peculiars of the HOLY GHOST ſet down in the Nicene Creed. 1 One, the Lord and giver of life; 2 the other, who ſpake by the Prophets.

For firſt, the Spirit giveth life: and breath is the immediate next means ſubordinate to the Spirit, for the giving it: for the giving it, and for the keeping it, both Giving; for the firſt, GOD breathed into Adam, ſpiraculum vitæ, and ſtraight factus eſt in animam viventem, he became a living ſoul. Gen. 2. 7. Keeping; for, if the breath go away, away goes the life too: both come, both go together.

And as the Spirit it is, that quickneth: ſo, it is the Spirit, that ſpeaketh, evidently. Dead men be dumb; all. And, the ſame breath, that is organum vitæ, is organum vocis, too. That, we live by, we ſpeak by alſo. For, what is the voice, but verbum ſpiritu veſtitum, the inward word (or concepit) cloathed with breath or aire, and ſo preſented to the ſenſe of hearing? So vehiculum Spiritus it is in both.

2. Of Chriſts breath with the Holy Ghoſt.

And, as the breath, and the Spirit: So CHRISTS breath, and the Holy Spirit. Accipite Spiritum gives to man the life of nature: Accipite Spiritum Sanctum to the Chriſtian man the life of grace.

And the ſpeech of grace too. For, this breath of CHRIST was it, by which the cloven tongues (after) had their utterance. He ſpake by the Prophets: and the Apoſtles, they were but as Trumpets, or Pneumatical Wind-inſtruments; they were to be winded. Without breath they could not; no breath on earth able ſo to wind, that their ſound might go into all lands, be heard to the uttermoſt parts of the earth. None but CHRISTS, ſo farre; So, that was to be given them. This breath hath in it (you ſee) to make a good Symbole for the Spirit: And CHRISTS breath, for the Holy Spirit. Rom. 10. 18.

It may be, at large, all this: but, how, for the purpoſe, it is here given for (remiſſion of ſinnes?) What hath breath to do with ſinne? Not nothing. For, if you be adviſed, per afflatum ſpiritus nequam it came; by an evil breath: and per ſufflatum Spiritus Sancti, it muſt be had away. The breathing, the peſtilent breath of the Serpent, that blew upon our firſt parents, infected, poyſoned them at the firſt: CHRISTS breath entring, cures it: and (as ever his manner is) by the ſame way it was taken, cures it, breath by breath.

For the better conceiving of the manner, how; Ye may call to minde that the Scriptures ſpeak of ſinne ſometime, as of a froſt: otherwhile, as of a miſt, or fog that men are loſt in, to be diſſolved and ſo blown away. For, as there be two proceedings in the wind, and according to them, two powers (obſerved by Elihu, Job 37.) forth of the South, a wind to melt and diſſolve: out of the North, a wind to diſpel and drive away. And, as in the wind of our breath, there is flatus, a blaſt, which is a colour, and which blows away: and halitus, a breath, that is warme, and by the temperate, moiſt heat, diſſolves: Anſwerable to theſe, there is in this breath of CHRIST, a double power conferred; and both, for the remiſſion of ſinnes: and that, in two ſenſes, ſet down by Saint John: 1 The one of Ne peccetis, aſtringent, to keep men from ſinne, and ſo remiſſio peccandi: 2 The other Siquis autem peccaverit: but if any do ſinne, to looſe men from it, and ſo remiſſio peccati. Shewing them the way, and ayding them with the means to clear their conſcience of it (being done;) remitting that is paſt, making the more remiſſe, that is to come: As it were to reſolve the froſt firſt, and turne it into a vapour: and, after it is ſo, then to blow it away. Eſay 44. 22. Job 37. 9. 1 John 2. 1.

And, other reaſons there be aſſigned (why thus, in breath apt and good: 1 One, to ſhew the abſolute neceſſity, the great need we have of this Power: how evil we may be without it: As evil as we can be without our breath, ſo evil can we be without a means for the remiſſion of our ſinnes; ὃ μᾶλλον ἀναγκαῖον ἢ ἀέρα. It is Saint Baſil. The Chriſtian man he lives not by the aire that he breaths, more than he doth by it. Our own breath not more needful, than this breath of Chriſts: His loving kindneſſe in it, better than the life it ſelf, and we no longer to draw our breath, than to give Him thanks for it. This for the neceſſity. Pſal. 63. 3.

rella (which ſome would think perhaps, more meet) to carry all before it. They know not the Holy Ghoſt, that ſo think: they remember not the Dove. Violence, in his work, He could never skill of; His courſe had ever been otherwiſe. And, not his only, but theirs, whom he proceeds from.

1 King. 19. 11, 12. Let them but go to Elias's viſion, and inform themſelves of this point. There came firſt a boiſterous whirle-wind (ſuch an one, as they wiſh for) but no GOD there. After it, a ratling earth-quake: And after it, crackling flaſhes of fire: GOD was in none of them all. Then came a ſoft ſtill voice: There comes GOD. GOD was in it; and by it, you may know where to find Him.

Pſal. 72. 6. And as GOD, ſo CHRIST: How comes He? He ſhall come down like the dew in a fleece of wooll; and that is ſcarce to be heard. Eſay 42. 2. He, He ſhall not roar nor cry, nor his voice be heard out into the ſtreet. How unlike them, and their Novices, that will needs bear his Name!

And how the Holy Ghoſt comes here, we ſee. None of all the three perſons, but in gentle milde manner.

It is againſt them (this) that take delight in theſe bluſtering Spirits, and think them the only men; cannot skill of another. No river they, but the great Euphrates, that runs with a huge noyſe. Eſay 8. 6. The waters of Silo, run too ſoft for them. Well, the waters of Silo (though) the Prophets commend to us: and to them Chriſt ſends us, and it is they, when all is done, Pſal. 64. 4. whoſe ſtreames ſhall make glad the City of GOD. This is ſure, no ſpiritual grace is ever ſo truly wrought by theſe ſpirits, that take ſo on, till Eccl. 7. 8. they be out of breath. The aire they beat, the heart they pierce not. The quiet calme breath ſhall Job 4. 16. do it to better purpoſe, than theſe that crackle like thornes under a pot. This breath will thither, to the heart directly: and ſin, never ſo kindly diſſolved, as by audivi vocem in ſilentio (that way.) Tell me not of the mighty winde and the fire; that, was for Apoſtles. We are none; three degrees lower. And that wind they uſed very ſeldome (though:) once or twice perhaps: but, this they uſed continually. I report me to their Acts, and to their Epiſtles. For, the wind comes but at times; but, the breath is continually at all times. And this is ſure, when the mighty wind and the fire came, it may be, Saint Peter uſed it once or twice, and Saint Paul as oft: but, this of the breath, they uſed more, nay moſt of all, and by it did more good, than by the other.

For as for this, let it not trouble you, that it is but breath; and breath, but aire, and ſo (one would think) too feeble; (As indeed what feebler thing is there in man, than it?) the more feeble, the more fit to manifeſt His ſtrength by. For, as weak in appearance as it is, by it were great things brought to paſſe. By this puffe of breath, was the world blown round about. About came the Philoſophers, the Orators, the Emperors. Away went the miſt of error, down went the Idols, and their Temples, before it.

1 From whom: CHRIST.

Which gives us a good paſſage from the Breath to the Breather, Him that is the Nominative caſe to inſufflavit. For, we are not to look to the breath altogether, but ſomewhat too, from whoſe mouth it comes, whoſe breath it is. And Chriſts it is. He it is, that gives the vigour and vertue to it. The touch of His finger, the breath of His mouth, verue goes from it, ſinne cannot ſtand fore it, it ſends it going, blows it away like a little duſt.

Take this with you too. It is not CHRIST'S breath, any breath of his, but his breath now, after his riſing, and ſo His immortal breath. A mortal he had, which he breathed out, quando emiſit Spiritum, when He gave up the Ghoſt upon the Croſſe. All the while he was mortal, he held his breath. Till it was more than ſo, he breathed it not; till it had in it, the vigour and power of immortality: which neither ſinne can endure, but ſcatters ſtraight; nor the man of ſinne, for he alſo ſhall be conſumed with the breath of his mouth, Otherwiſe, unleſſe it be this of Chriſts, there is nothing in our breath to work this effect: not in any mans, to thaw a froſt, or to ſcatter a miſt. The ſoyle of ſin is ſo baked on men, they ſo hard frozen in the dreggs of it, our winde cannot diſſolve it. Hear the Prophet, after he had been long blowing at the ſinnes of the people: The bellows (ſaith he) are burnt, the iron of them conſumed, the Founder melts in vaine; for all his blowing, the droſſe will not away (Jer. 6. 29.) But I (ſaith God) let me take it in hand, let me but blow with my winde, and I ſcatter thy tranſgreſſions as a miſt, and make thy ſinnes like a morning cloud to vaniſh away. Turne we then to him, whoſe divine power, whoſe immortal breath can do it: do it by himſelf, and if by himſelf, by others alſo, into whom he will inſpire it; whom in that regard, the Prophets calleth GOD'S Jer. 15. 19. mouth, to ſeparate the precious from the vile.

Chriſt after His reſurrection Mat. 27. 50.

2 Theſ. 2. 8.

Which being of his breath immortal, doth farther ſhew, both that there is nothing in this power, but pertains rather to a better life, than to this mortal of ours (even to that, which is the life of the world to come:) and that it ſhall never die (this power) but hold, as long as there is any ſinne to be forgiven. Had it been his mortal breath, we might have feared the failing; now ſhall it never faile, ſo long as there is any, to open his mouth to receive it. It is His immortal breath.

2 The Parties to whom.

This for the Party from whom. Now for the in eos, thoſe into whom it came. Much bound we are to our Bleſſed Saviour, for thus ſending; and to the Holy Ghoſt for being thus ſent, for ſeeing us furniſhed, with a power, we ſo much ſtand in need of. For, ſinning as we do, and even running our ſelves out of breath in it, and the wages of that being eternal death: what caſe were we in, but for this Rom. 6. 23. breath? I ſee not how we ſhould do without it. To ſay therefore with them in the Goſpel, Matth. 9. 8. Benedictus Deus qui dedit talem poteſtatem, bleſſed be GOD for ſending ſuch a power, for ſending it at all.

1 To men.

But then ſecondly, qui dedit talem poteſtatem hominibus, that he gave it to men: For, as the Sonne of man, he gave it; and as man, to men he gave it; To the Sons of men upon earth, that we Rom. 10. 6. need not ſend up and down, and caſt, Who ſhall go up to heaven for us and fetch it thence? That if an Angel ſhould come to us, as to Cornelius there did, he hath not this power to impart, he can but bid us ſend to Joppa for Peter: He hath it, men have it, Angels have it not. Acts 10 32.

In eos, is more yet: to men, and to ſuch men, ſuch ſimple men (for ſo they were GOD wot) a full infit and indiſpoſed matter to receive it. Ideots (it is Saint Lukes word) men utterly unlearned: And of no ſpirit or courage at all (the breath but of a Damoſel, quailed the beſt of them.) Probatur Deus per Apoſtolos (ſay the Schoolmen) if there were nothing elſe, his very Apoſtles were enough to prove him to be GOD; For O Lord our Saviour, how excellent is thy name in all the world! Thou, that out of the mouths of thoſe that were little better than babes, haſt ordained thy praiſe, and ſtilled thine enemies, and put them all to ſilence. 2 In eos, to ſimple men. Acts 4. 13. Pſal. 8. 12.

But, there is a worſe matter than that. Not only Simple; but (which is farther off yet) ſinful men they were. Take their own confeſſions. Saint Peters: Go forth from me O Lord, for I am a ſinful man; Saint Pauls, Sinners, whereof I am the chiefeſt. Saint Iames, In many things we offend all; put himſelf in the number of them that offended many times. Saint Johns; If we (I for one) ſay we have no ſinne (what then, we are proud, there is no humility? No; but) we are liars, and there is no truth in us. Even to ſuch, to ſinners, this power given to forgive ſinnes: to them, that for ſinne, were in fear themſelves to be condemned. 3 To ſinful men. Luke 5. 8. 1 Tim. 1. 5. James 3. 2. 1 John 1. 8.

Nay (which is not lightly to be paſſed by) all this done, even at the very time, when they were ſcarce crept out of their ſinne, but three dayes before committed, in ſo wretchedly forſaking Him: and ſome more than ſo, and after would ſcarce beleeve, He was riſen, when they ſaw Him: and even then, did he thus breath on them, and made them, that he did. Now bleſſed be GOD, that at all gave ſuch power to men, to ſuch men, ſuch ſimple, ſuch ſinful men, inſufflavit in eos. To ſecure us, be the men what they will, that have received it, No ſinne of man, ſhall make the power of GOD of none effect. This, for in eos.

To the Act now, It is firſt ſufflavit, breathed; and that was, to keep correſpondence with His Father at the firſt. By breathing into Adam, the Father gave the ſoul; the Author of the life natural: Ad idem exemplum, the Sonne (here) by breathing gives the Holy Ghoſt, the Author of the life ſpiritual, the ſame paſſage, and the ſame ceremony held by both. 3. Of the Act. a Sufflavit.

But inſufflavit is more; breathed in it, into them. This (in) ſhews, it pertains within, to the inward parts, to the very conſcience, this act. His breath goeth (ſaith Solomon) ad interiora ventris, and his word with it (ſaith the Apoſtle) through, to the diviſion of the ſoul and Spirit: Thither goeth this breath: and thither, is farther than man can go. For, howſoever the acts and exerciſes of outward Juriſdiction may be diſpoſable, and are diſpoſed by humane authority, yet; this not ſo, of forum internum: Somewhat there is ſtill that comes ſom CHRIST, and none but CHRIST; ſomewhat, that as it comes higher, ſo it goes deeper, than any earthly power whatſoever. This inward inſpiring, brings us to CHRIST's Deity again. The Kings of the Nations, ſend they can, and give power they can, but aſpire, they cannot. Array whom they will (as Aſſuerus) with rich attire; arme them at all points, indnere, in that ſenſe; but not endue the ſoul with gifts and graces within, not arme their minds with valour and vertue; at leaſtwiſe, not with virtus ex alto: Only GOD, whom he calls, he gives the inward talents to; and CHRIST, whom he ſends, he ſends his Spirit into. This argueth GOD plainly, and ſo CHRIST to be GOD. b Inſufflavit. Prov. 18. 8. Heb. 4. 12.

Always this inſufflavit ſhews, as wherewith he would do it (the Spirit;) ſo, what it is he would work, work upon, and renew. For, if we be renewed in the Spirit of our minds, the whole man will be ſo, ſtraight upon it. There is no indication to that: for, the change of the whole man is a certaine ſigne, the Spirit is come into us. As of Saul, it is written, when the Spirit came into him, he was changed into quite another man; no more the ſame Saul, he was before: A new, another Saul then. Which holds, not onely in particular men, but even in the whole world. For, when this breath came into it, in interiora, it was caſt in a new mold preſently, and did even wonder at it ſelf, how it was become Chriſtian. For, the outward rigorous means of fire, impriſonment, of the whip, of the terrour of the Magiſtrates ſword: Pilates, Have not I power to crucifie thee, and power to looſe thee? Theſe daunt men, make them aſtoniſhed, make metum peccati, fear to commit the outward act of ſin. But, odium oportet peccandi, non metum facias, if ſinne ſhall ever truly be left, it muſt come of hatred, not of feare. So, it goes away indeed. And there it is, ſinne muſt be met with, if ever it ſhall rightly be put away, the Spirit to be ſearched, and inward hearty compunction wrought there. And that is, by this breath of Chriſt, piercing thither or not at all. So much for the [in.] Ephes. 4 3. John 19. 2.

And now to, & dixit. The words be three, the points according, three, too, 1 Accipite, it is to be received: 2 Spiritum, a Spirit it is, that is to be received. 3 Sanctum, and that Spirit is the Holy Ghoſt. 4 Whereto we adde, the Holy Ghoſt after what manner; for there be more than one. Et dixit.

Accipite, agrees well with breath. For, that is received, we open our mouths and draw it in, our Syſtole, to meet with His Diaſtole. 1. Accipite.

For this Accipite: it is certain, that at the breathing of this breath the Spirit was given. He gave them what he bade them take; he mocked them not. They received the Holy Ghoſt then, and (if ye will) really. Yet was not the ſubſtance of His breath tranſubſtantiate into that of the HOLY GHOST: None hath ever imagined that: yet ſaid He truly, Accipite Spiritum, and no leſſe truly in another place, Accipite Corpus. Truly ſaid by Him, and received by them, in both. And no more need, the bread ſhould be changed into His body, in that; than, His breath into the HOLY GHOST in this: No, though it be a Sacrament (for, with them both are ſo) yet, as all confeſſe, both truly ſaid, truly given, and truly received, and in the ſame ſenſe, without any difference at all. This for them.

1 Accipite, not concipite. Pſal. 90. 9.

For us, Accipite ſheweth firſt, it comes from without; it grows not within us; a breath inſpired, not a vapour aſcending; not educta è, but inducta in. It is not meditati ſumus ſicut aranea, we ſpin it not out of our ſelves, as the Spider doth her web. It is not concipite, but accipite: Receive it we do; Conceive it we do not. It were too fond to conceive (ſeeing our breath is made of ayre, and that is without us) that the Spirit ſhould be made of any thing that is within us.

2 Accipite, not aſſumite. Heb. 5. 4.

We ſay again: it is accipite, not aſſumite. Aſſumit, qui nemine dante accipit, He aſſumes, that takes that, is not given. But nemo aſſumit honorem hunc, This honour no man takes unto him, or upon him, till it be given him. As, quod accipitur non habetur, in the laſt; So, quod accipitur, datur, in this. And both theſe are againſt the Voluntaries of our age, with their taken-on callings. That have no mitto vos; unſent, ſet out of themſelves. No accipite, no receiving; take it up of their own accords, make themſelves what they are: Sprinkle their own heads with water; lay their own hands on their own heads; and ſo take that to them, which none ever gave them. They be Hypoſtles; So doth Saint Paul well term them as it were the mock-Apoſtles.) And the term comes home to them, for υἱοὶ ὑποστολῆς, they be Filii ſubtractionis right: work all to ſubtraction, to withdraw poor ſouls, to make them forſake the fellowſhip (as even then, the manner was.) This brand hath the Apoſtle ſet on them, that we might know them and avoid them. Heb. 10. 30.

We may be ſure CHRIST could have given the Spirit without any ceremony; held his breath, and yet ſent the Spirit into them without any more ado: He would not: An outward ceremony He would adde; for, an outward calling He would have. For, if nothing outward had been in His, we ſhould have had nothing but Enthuſiaſts as them we have notwithſtanding:) But then we ſhould have had no rule with them: All by divine revelation: Into that they reſolve. For, ſending, breathing, laying on of hands have they none. But if they be of CHRIST, ſome muſt ſay mitto vos; ſent by ſome; not run of their own heads. Some ſay accipite; receive it, from ſome; not finde it about themſelves, have an outward calling, and an outward Accipite, a teſtimony of it. This for accipite.

a Spiritum. The Spirit. John 6. 63. 2 Cor. 3. 6. Jude 19. Epheſ. 4. 23.

Spiritum. A Spirit it is, that is to be received, and much is ſaid in this word (Spirit) it ſtands as oppoſed to many. 1 The ſpirit and fleſh (CHRIST, John 6.) 2 The Spirit and the Letter. S. Paul, 2 Cor. 3.) 3 The Spirit and the Soul (S. Jude.) 4 The Spirit and the minde (Epheſ. 4.) 5 The Spirit and a habit. 6 The Spirit and a Sprite, Spiritus and ſpectrum. 7 The Spirit and Hero's Pneumatica, that is ſome artificial motion or peece of work with gins within it. To all theſe.

1 Not the fleſh.

1. Not the fleſh (ſaith our SAVIOUR:) and if not the fleſh, not any humour, for they are of the fleſh: Neither they, nor their revelations profit ought to this work.

2. Not the letter Jer. 22. 18.

2. Not the Letter (ſaith S. Paul:) not the huſk or chaffe: we have too much of them every day. Quid paleæ ad triticum? they rather take away life than give it: A handful of good grain were better than ten load of ſuch ſtuffe.

3. Not the ſoul.

3. Nor animales Spiritum non habentes (ſaith Jude) men that have ſouls only; and they ſerve them, but as ſalt to keep them, that they rot not. They to have no part or fellowſhip in this buſineſſe; meere natural men; no ſpirit in them at all. Somewhat there is to be in us, more than a natural ſoul: φύσις is one thing: φύσικος is another. Some inſpiring needs, ſomewhat of Accipite.

4 Not the mind

4. Nay, ſaith S. Paul, be ye renewed in the ſpirit of your minds. For, the minde is not all: Nor men to think ſo, if they once have got true poſitions, true Maximes in their minde, then all is well. If the ſpirit be not alſo renewed, it is nothing.

5. Not an habit.

5. The Spirit, not an habite gotten with practice, and loſt again with diſ-uſe (as are the Arts and moral vertues) againſt the Philoſophers. For, though this be vertue, yet it is not virtus ex alto (this.) No habitual, but a ſpiritual vertue this.

6. Not a Sprite. Gen. 1. 2.

6. Spiritus, non ſpectrum: for that is a flying ſhadow void of action; doth nothing. But the Spirit, the firſt thing we read of it, it did hover and hatch, and make fruitful the waters, and fit to bring forth ſomething of ſubſtance.

7. Not Hero's Pneumatica. 2 Tim. 3. 5.

7. And laſt (which is by writers thought to be chiefly intended) CHRIST'S Spirit, not Hero's Pneumatica; not with ſome ſpring or device, though within, yet from without; artificial, not natural: but the very principium motus to be within. Of our ſelves, to move: not wrought to it, by any gin, or vice, or skrew made by Art: Elſe, we ſhall move but while we are wound up, for a certain till the plummets be at the ground, and then our motion will ceaſe ſtraight. All which (but theſe laſt ſpecially) are againſt the automata, the ſpectra, the puppets of religion, Hypocrites. With ſome ſpring within, their eyes are made to rowle, and their lips to wag, and their breaſt to give a ſob: all is but Hero's Pneumatica, a vizor, not a very face; an outward ſhew of godlineſſe, but no inward power of it at all. It is not Accipite Spiritum.

b Spiritum Sanctum. 2 Pe. 1. 20. 1 Cor. 2. 12.

Thirdly, I ſay it would be known farther, what ſpirit: For, Accipite it may be; ſomewhat they may have taken; it may be, a ſpirit. But, whatſoever it is, it is not yet home, unleſſe ſanctum come too. Sanctum it would be, if it be right. To be a man of ſpirit (as we call them, that be active and ſtirring in the world) will not ſerve here, if that be all. I have formerly told you, there is a ſpiritum without ſanctum: ſpirit and holy are two things. Two other ſpirits there be beſides: and they well accepted of, and in great requeſt. 1 One which S. Peter calls the private ſpirit: 2 The other, that S. Paul calls the ſpirit of the world: Which two will conſort well together, for their owo turnes, and for ſome worldly end: but neither of them with this. For, they are oppoſed to the Holy Ghoſt both.

1. Not Spiritum ſanum.

The private ſpirit firſt. And are there not in the world ſomewhere, ſome ſuch as will receive none, admit of at no hand no other Holy Ghoſt but their own ghoſt, and the idol of their own conceit, the viſion of their own heads, the motions of their own ſpirits; and if you hit not on that, that is there in their hearts, reject it, be it what it will: that makes their breasts the Sanctuary; (in effect) say with the old Donatists, Quod volumus sanctum est, that they will have holy, is holy, and nothing else? Men (as the Apostle speaks of them) causelesse puft up with their fleshly minde? His word is to be marked: φυσιοῦσθαι, there; φύσιοι, here: inflati, they; afflati, these: They puffed up, these inspired. If it make to swell, then is it but wind; the Spirit doth it not; inspirat, non inflat. The word is insufflavit, a [sub] that beareth downward, and carries not up. So Spiritum sanctum, is not spiritum suum. Col. 2. 18.

Nor spiritus mundi is not Spiritus CHRISTI. Else doth Saint Paul wrong to oppose them. It is too sure, such a spirit there is as the spirit of the world: and that the greatest part of the world live and breathe, and move by it; and that it doth well sometimes, but without any reference to GOD, or CHRIST, or HOLY GHOST. For, even the acts they do of Religion, are out of worldly reasons and respects: Herods reason, Videns quia placeret populo; saw, the world would that way: Demetrius's reason, Periclitatur portio nostra, It may prove dangerous to their worldly estate. The Sichemites, Oh set forward that point of Divinity; for then, all they have is ours. See we not, whence this wind blows, from what spirit this breath comes? and from Spiritus mundi, plainly. And I know not how, but as if CHRIST's mouth were stopped, and His breath like to fail Him, the world begins to fare, as if they had got a new mouth, to draw breath from; to govern the Church, as if Spiritus prætorii would do things better than Spiritus Sanctuarii, and mans law become the best means to teach the fear of GOD, and to guide Religion by. In vain then is all this act of Christs; He might have kept his breath to himself. But, it will not so be. When all is done, the Spirit must come from the Word, and the Holy Ghost from CHRIST's mouth, that must do this, govern the Church. Thither we must for Sanctum, even to the Sanctuary, and to no other place. 2. Nor Spiritum mundi. Acts 12. 23. 19. 27. Gen. 34. 23.

And, a certain note it is (this) to discern the Holy Spirit of GOD, from the spirit of what you will. From CHRIST it comes, if it be true; He breaths it. It cannot but be true, if it come from him, for he is the Truth. And as the Truth, so the Wisdome of GOD: that, if it savour of falshood, of folly, it came not from him; he breathed it not. But, his Breath shall not faile; shall ever be able to serve his Church, without all the ἰδία ἐπίνοια, of the private Spirit, and without all the additaments of spiritus mundi. And if we gape after them, we make this Accipite more than needs: And if we do so, I know not what shall become of us. John 14. 8. 1 Cor. 1. 3.

But, the Holy Ghost may be received more wayes than one. He hath many Spiramina: πολυτρόπως, in many manners, he comes: And multiformis gratia, he comes with. He and they carry the name of their cause: and to receive them, is to receive the spirit. There is a gratum faciens, the saving grace of the Spirit, for one to save himself by, received by each, without respect to others: and there is a gratis data (whatever become of us) serving to save others by, without respect to our selves. And there is χάρις διακονίας, the Grace of a holy calling: For it is a grace, to be a conduit of grace any way. All these; and all from one and the same Spirit. Which way it is received. 1 Per. 4. 10. 2 Cor. 8. 4.

That, was here conferred, was not the saving grace of inward Sanctimonie: they were not breathed on, to that end. The Church to this day, gives this still in her Ordinations, but the saving grace the Church cannot give: none but GOD can give that. Nor, the gratis data it is not. That came by the tongues, both the gift of speaking divers languages, and the gift of σωφρονεῖν, speaking wisely, and to the purpose: And (we know) none is either the holier, or the learneder, by his Ordination.

Yet a grace it is. For, the very Office it self is a grace: Mihi data est hæc gratia (saith the Apostle in more places than one; and speaks of his Office and nothing else.) The Apostle-ship was a grace, yet no saving grace. Else, should Judas have been saved. Clearly then, it is the grace of their Calling (this) whereby they were sacred, and made persons publick, and their acts authentical; and they enabled to do somewhat about the remission of sinnes, that is not (of like avail) done by others, though perhaps more learned and vertuous than they, in that they have not the like mitto vos, nor the same Accipite that these have. To speak with the least: As the act of one that is a publick Notary, is of more validity, than of another that is none, though (it may be) he writes a much fairer hand. And this) loe) was the grace here, by breathing conferred to them: of Spiritum, a Spiritual; of Sanctum, an holy Calling, and deriv'd from them to us, and from us to others, to the worlds end. Ephes. 2. 7. &c.

But take heed, we suck no errour out of this word Holy; No more than we do out of the word Annointed. When time was, it was shewed, the annointing was no inward holinesse, or ability to govern by, but the right of ruling only. So, here, it is no internal quality infused, but the grace only of their spiritual and sacred function. Good it were, and much to be wished, they were holy and learned all; but if they be not, their Office holds good though. He that is a sinner himself, may remit sinnes for all that, and save others he may, though himself be not saved. For, it was not propter se, he received this power, to absolve himself; but (as the next word is) quorumcunque, any others whosoever.

Some ado we have to pluck this out: but out it must. For, an errour it is, an old worn errour of the Donatists: and but new dressed over by some fanatical spirits, in our dayes, that teach in corners. One, that is not himself inwardly holy, cannot be the means of holinesse to another. And where they dare too, that: One, that is not in state of grace, can have no right to any possession or place. For they of right belong to none, but to the true children of GOD: that is, to none but to themselves.

Fond ignorant men! For hath not the Church long since defined it positively, that the Baptisme, Peter gave, was no better than that which Judas: and exemplified it, that a seale of iron will give as perfect a stamp, as one of gold? That as the Carpenters that built the Arke, wherein Noah was saved, were themselves drowned in the Flood: that as the water of baptisme, that sends the child to Heaven, is it selfe cast down the kennel: Semblably is it with these: and they that by the Word, the Sacraments, the Keyes, are unto other the conduits of grace, to make them fructifie in all good works; may weil so be, though them themſelves remain unfruitful, as do the pipes of wood or lead, that by tranſmitting the water, make the garden to bear both herbs and flowers, though themſelves never bear any. And let that content us, that what is here received, for us it is received, that what is given them, is given them for us; and is given us, by them. Sever the Office, from the men: leave the men to GOD, to whom they ſtand or fall: let the Ordinance of GOD ſtand faſt. This breath, though not into them for themſelves, yet goeth into and through every act of their Office or miniſtery, and by them conveigheth His ſaving grace into us all.

But leſt we grow diſcontent, that ſome do receive it, and that we all do not ſo (for, this being the Feaſt of the Holy Ghoſt, and of receiving it, it may grieve any of us, to go his way and not receive it:) I will ſhew, it is not ſo. For, though as this breath, we cannot all; and, as the fiery Tongues, much leſſe: (theſe are but for ſome ſet perſons:) yet will I ſhew you a way, how to ſay Accipite Spiritum to all, and how all may receive it.

Matth. 26. 26. And that is by accipite corpus meum. For, Accipite corpus, upon the matter, is Accipite Spiritum, inaſmuch as they two never part, not poſſible to ſever them one minute. Thus, when or to whom we ſay Accipite Corpus, we may ſafely ſay with the ſame breath, Accipite Spiritum; and as truly every way. For, that Body is never without this Spirit; he that receives the one, receives the other; he that, the body, together with it, the Spirit alſo.

And receiving it thus, it is to better purpoſe than here in the Text it is. Better (I ſay) for us. For, in the Text it is received, for the good of others; whereas (here) we ſhall receive it, for our own good. Now, whether is the better, remiſſion of ſinnes, to be able to remit to others, or to have our own remitted? To have our own; no doubt. And that is here to be had. To the eſtabliſhing of our hearts with grace, to the cleanſing and quieting our conſciences. Which ſpiritual grace we receive in this ſpiritual
1 Cor. 10. 4. John 15. 5. food, and are made to drink (I will not ſay of the ſpiritual Rock, but) of the ſpiritual Vine that followeth us, which Vine is CHRIST. To that then let us apply our ſelves. Both are received, both are holy,
Matt. 26. 28. both co-operate to the remiſſion of ſinnes. The body: Matth. 26. The Spirit here evidently. And there is no better way of celebrating the Feaſt of the receiving the HOLY GHOST, than ſo to do, with receiving the ſame body that came of it at his birth, and that came from it now at His riſing again.

And ſo receiving it, He that breathed, and He that was breathed, both of them vouchſafe to breath into thoſe holy Myſteries a divine power and vertue; And make them to us the bread of life, and the Cup of Salvation. God the Father alſo ſending His bleſſing upon them, that they may be His bleſſed means of this thrice bleſſed effect. To whom all, three Perſons, &c.

BEFORE THE

Kings Majesty,

At Haly-Rud House, in Edinburgh,
On the VIII. of June, A. D. MDCXVII.
being WHIT-SUNDAY.

LUKE, Chap. IV. Ver. XVIII, XIX.

SPIRITUS DOMINI, super Me, &c.

The SPIRIT of the LORD is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me, that I should preach the Gospel to the poor: He hath sent Me, that I should heal the broken-hearted, that I should preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, and that I should set at liberty them that are bruised.
And, that I should preach the acceptable year of the LORD.

WE are fallen here upon CHRISTS first Sermon, preached at Nazareth: and upon his very Text. This I have read you, was his Text, taken out of the Prophet Esay, 61. Chapter, Verse 1. There was no fear, CHRIST would have ranged far from his matter, if he had taken none; yet, he took a Text, to teach us thereby, to do the like. To keep us within; not to fly out, or preach much, either without, or besides the book.

And he took his Text for the Day, as is plain, by his application (verse 21.) This day, is this Scripture fulfilled in your eares. This Day this Scripture. Our Masters Scripture was for the Day: So would ours be.

For the day: and for the present occasion. For, among the Writers, it is generally received, that when our Saviour made this Sermon, that year, it was with the Jews, the year of Jubilee. And that therefore, He told them, It was fulfilled in their eares, they might hear the Trumpets sound to it. If it were so; this Text of the acceptable year, was as apposite, as could be chosen. That (it seemes) He turned the book purposely to find it: Out of it, to speak to them of the true Jubilee.

And if it were ſo (the year of Jubilee) it was the laſt, that ever they held. For, before fifty years came about again, they were ſwept away: Temple, Sacrifice, Jubilee, People, and all. The Jubilees of the Law then failing, being come to their period, comes Chriſt with His; with a new Jubilee of the Goſpel, the true one (as, whereof thoſe of theirs were but ſhadowes only:) which Jubilee of the Goſpel, was the acceptable year, which Eſay here meant.

The Sum. Will ye then give me leave now, to ſay of this Text of our Saviours, The Scripture ſuits well with this day: is fulfilled in it three ways? In the 1 coming of the Spirit: 2 the end for which; To ſend to proclaim: 3 the matter which, to proclaim a Jubilee: 4 And a fourth, I will add, of a preſent occaſion, as fit every way.

1. Firſt, it is of the coming of the Spirit. And, this day, the Spirit came. And the coming of the Spirit, in the Text here upon Chriſt, was the cauſe of the coming of the Spirit, this day, upon the Apoſtles. From this coming upon Him, came the coming upon them: Super Petrum, ſuper Jacobum, ſuper all the reſt; upon them, and upon us all, from this ſuper me. All our anointings are but drops from His anointing: All our miſſions, and commiſſions, but quils (as we ſay) out of this Commiſſion (here) miſit Me. Sicut miſit Me, Ego mitto vos: He ſent Me; As He
Joh. 20. 1. ſent Me, I ſend you. By that, and by no other Commiſſion, did they or do we, or ſhall ever any come.

2. That firſt, and this ſecond: the Miſit, and the Ad. Why came the Spirit on Chriſt? To ſend Him: ſend Him, to what? Ad evangelizandum. And why came the Spirit on the twelve, this day, but for the very ſame end? And it came therefore, for the purpoſe, in the ſhape of tongues. It is the office of the tongue, to be a Trumpet to proclaim. It ſerves for no other end.

3. To proclaim, what? the acceptable year of the Lord, that is, the Jubilee. Now fifty is the number of the Jubilee; which number agreeth well with this Feaſt, the Feaſt of Pentecoſt. What the one, in years; the other, in dayes. So that, this is the Jubilee (as it were) of the year (or the yearly memory of the year of jubilee) that, the Pentecoſt of years; this, the jubilee of days. Theſe three for the Day.

4. And may we not add a fourth, from the preſent occaſion? I take it, we may; and that not unfit neither, as peculiar to this very Year, rather than to any other. There falleth out (lightly) but one jubilee in a mans age. 1 And this preſent year is (yet) the jubilee-year of Your Majeſties Life and Reign. 2 And this day is the jubilee-day of that year. 3 And yet further, if we take not jubilee, for the time, but for the joy, (for the word Jubilee is taken, as for the time of the joy, ſo for the joy of the time;) and ſo refer it to the late great joy and jubilee, at Your Majeſties receiving hither to Your Nazareth (the countrey where You were brought up) which then was fulfilled in your eares: Our eares (I am ſure) were filled full with it. So that firſt and laſt the Text ſuits with the day, and both ſuit well, with the preſent occaſion.

To return to our Saviour: Who ſtanding now with His loynes girt, ready to go about the errand, He came for; (as the manner is) He was firſt to read His Commiſſion. This it is (the words I have read) drawn and ready penned for Him, long before, by the Prophet Eſay here, who had the honour to be the Regiſter of this, and divers other inſtruments, touching Chriſts Nature, Perſon, and Offices. And, upon the reading of this, He entred in His Office.

II. You may plainly know, it was his Inauguration (this,) or firſt entring on His Office, by the proclamation following, of opening the Goale, and letting the Priſoners go free: So is (ever) the faſhion of Princes, to make the joy general, of their coming to their Kingdomes; to releaſe thoſe, that ſtand committed; to grant free and general pardons to all, that will ſue for them; to be at the charge of miſſilia, certain new pieces of coine, to be caſt abroad among the people.

Acts 7. 52. Accordingly, were there this day of the Spirits coming, by one Sermon of S. Peters three thouſand ſet at liberty, that had been captives before, under Satan. A largeſs of new tongues (as it were miſſilia) caſt down from heaven. A general pardon proclaimed, even for them that had been the betrayers, and murtherers of the Son of God, if they would come in. That it was indeed a right day of Jubilee. And this, is the Sum of all.

The diviſion. The parts as they lie, are theſe: 1 Firſt, of the Spirits being on Chriſt: 2 Anointing Him: 3 Sending Him. Theſe three.

I. 2. Then, whereto He was ſo anointed and ſent; to preach the Goſpel, or glad tidings (glad tidings or Goſpel, both are one:) and that even to the poor.

III. 3. Thirdly, whereof the tidings is: of an excellent Phyſician: a Phyſician of the heart, one that can cure a broken heart.

IV. 4. Of theſe hearts. 1 How they came broken firſt, and there are three ways here ſet down. 1 By being Captives: 2 by being in a dark dungeon, where their ſight was even taken from them: 3 by being there in irons, ſo as they were even bruiſed with them. Three, able (I think) to break any mans heart alive.

2. Then; how they came cured. And that is by good news. Two proclamations, (for κηρύξαι to proclaim, is twice repeated.) 1 One containing a particular remedy of thoſe three ſeveral maladies: 1 Of a party, one with a Ranſome, or Redemption for the captives: 2 with an engine, or poole to knock off their irons: 3 with the keyes of the prison, to let them out. And this to begin with. 2 Then (to conclude with) a second Proclamation, that makes up all; of a year of Jubilee; and so, of restitution of them to their former forfeited estates, by God's accepting them to favour, this acceptable time.

This, is the Summe of Christs Commission here read. And indeed, a brief of His Offices all three. 1 In preaching the glad newes of the Gospel, of his Propheſie: 2 In granting pardon, and enlarging prisoners, of His Kingdom. 3 In proclaiming a Jubilee, of His Prieſt-hood (for, that, the peculiar of the Prieſts Office.) So, all are in, that pertain to Christ. And all, that, to Jesus too: Who sheweth Himself Jesus, in nothing so much, as in being the Physitian of a broken contrite heart.

WE cannot better begin, than with the Blessed Trinity. In the three first words, the three Persons reasonable clear. 1 The Spirit, 2 He, whose the spirit (Domini:) 3 on whom the Spirit, super Me. I. Of the Spirits being on Christ.

The Spirit, that is, the Holy Ghost. He, whose the spirit, God the Father. He, on whom the spirit, our Saviour Christ. He, the super quem (here.)

These three distinct: 1 the spirit, from the 2 Lord, whose the spirit is: the spirit, that was upon, 3 from him, it was upon. Yet, all three in one joynt concurrence, to one and the same work, the Jubilee of the Gospel.

Upon Me, is Christs Person. But, His person only according to one of His Natures; His humane. The spirit was not upon Him, but as He was man. These three, 1 To be sent, 2 to be anointed, 3 to have a super eum, favour of inferiority (all) to the Sender, Anointer, superiour. And so (indeed) for us, He became lower than, in Himself, was. In the similitude of sinful flesh, had a spirit, to anoint Him In formâ servi had a Lord, to send Him about the message here. Rom 8. 3. Phil. 2. 7.

But that Christ suffer not in His honour, we supply: that the Spirit, who is here said to be Spiritus Domini, is else-where said to be Spiritus Christi (a Rom. 8.) b The spirit of the Father (Matth. 10.) And the spirit, of the c Sonne, both (Gal. 4.) The spirit that sent Him here, sent by Him elsewhere, d Whom I will send (John 15.) This sets him up right again. As the one shews Him to be Man; so the other, to be God. And, as God, He hath no superiour: No Lord, to own Him: No spirit, to anoint Him.

a Rom. 8. 9. b Mat. 10. 20. c Gal. 4. 6. d John 15. 26.

And (if I mistake not) a kind of inckling of thus much, is even in the very words. The word [Lord] in Esay, is Plural; and so, more persons than one, whose the spirit is, and from whom He proceeds. And if you would know how many; In Esay the words be two: so not a single proceeding, from one: but, a double, from two, as the word is double. Saint Basil saith it short, ὡς θεὸς, χορηγεῖ· ὡς ἀνθρωπος, λαμβάνει: As God, He sends it; as Man, He receives it. Upon Him, as Man; from Him, as God.

Of Him then, as Man, three things here are said; the spirit 1 was upon Him: 2 anointed Him, 3 sent Him. But it is said: the spirit is upon Me, because He hath anointed me: So as, the anointing is set, as the ἕνεκα or cause, why He was upon Him. And then, that, (His anointing) as the cause, is first in nature. But it cannot be conceived, but the spirit must be also upon him, to anoint Him, the spirit is the Unction: the spirit then was upon Him, two several times, for two several ends. 1 To anoint Him: And, after He was anointed, to send Him, the second. Of this anointing we are to touch, 1 when it was: 2 with what it was: 3 and how it comes to be termed anointing. 2. His anointing.

When was he thus anointed? Not now, or here, first: but long before; even from the very time of His conceiving. When the Word became flesh, the flesh, with the Word and (by means of it) with the whole Deity, was anointed all over; and by vertue thereof, filled with the fulnesse of all grace. For, this we are to hold: that Christ was ever Christ (that is) ever anointed, from the very first instant of all; He was never unanointed, no tone moment. 1 When was it. John 1. 14.

Anointed with what? I have already told you, with the Deity, by vertue of the Personal union of the second Person of the Deity. Why then is the Holy Ghost called the Unction? Why is Christ expressely said to be anointed with the Holy Ghost? Why not, with the Father as well? 2 With what.

Why not: To retain to each Person, His own peculiar, His proper act, in this common work of them all: or (as the Hebrews speak) to keep every word upon his right wheele.

Father, is a terme of nature. So, to the Father we ascribe, what the Son hath by nature. For, that He is the Son, is of nature, not of grace.

But, that the Man-hood is taken into God, that was not of nature, but of grace. And, what is of grace, is ever properly ascribed to the Spirit. There are diversitits of graces, all from the same spirit. And the proceeding of grace from it, not as by nature, but Ubi vult, blows where it lists freely. All then, of grace, proceeding from the spirit: Accordingly, the Conception of Christs flesh, and the sending it with the fulnesse of grace (or anointing it) is ascribed to the Spirit. 1 Cor. 12. 4. John 3. 8.

But, this enduing with grace, how comes it to be called anointing? For nothing, but for the resemblance it hath, with an ointment. An ointment is a composition (we know:) the ingredients of it, oile and sweet odours. By vertue of the oile, it sokes even into the bones (saith the Psalme:) but, it works upon the joynts add sinews, sensibly; makes them supple and lithe, and so the more fresh and 3 How called. anointing. Psal. 109. 18.

active to beſtir themſelves. By vertue of the ſweet odours mixt with it, it works upon the ſpirits and Pſal. 45. 8. ſenſes; cheeres him, and makes him glad, that is anointed with it. And not him alone, but all that are Cant. 1. 3. about and near him, qui in odore unguentorum, that take delight in his company, to go and to run with him, and all for the fragrant ſweet ſent they feele to come from him.

Of which two, the oile repreſents the vertue of the power of the Spirit, piercing thorow (but gently) like Oyle. The Odours, the ſweet comfort of the graces, that proceed from the HOLY GHOST. Nothing more like. And this for his Anointing.

His ſending. Now the ſame ſpirit, that was thus upon Him, at His Conception, to anoint Him; was even now upon Him again, to manifeſt, and to ſend Him. When? At His Baptiſme (a little before.) Not ſecretly, as then at His conception. but in a viſible ſhape upon Him, before a great concourſe of people:
Luke 3. 22. (to ſhew: there ought to be an outward Calling) what time, the Dove laid that, which in it, is anſwerable to our hands, upon Him.

Not, to endue Him with ought: (that was done before, long:) but, to manifeſt to all, this was He, this the Party, before anointed, and now ſent, that they might take heed to Him. It was the Holy Ghoſts firſt Epiphanie (this:) He was never ſeen before: But, Chriſts ſecond Epiphanie. The other, at His birth, or coming into the world: This now, at His calling, or ſending into the world. That firſt, To enable him, to his Office: This, to deſigne him to it. By that, furniſhed for it: by this ſent, ſevered, and ſet about the work, He came for.

But, before we come to the work, let us firſt reflect a little upon theſe: they ſerve our turn; are for our direction. Theſe (both) were done to Chriſt, to the end He might teach the Church, that the ſame were to be on them, who in Chriſts ſtead are imployed in the ſame buſineſſe, ad Evangelizandum. The Holy Ghoſt to be upon them; upon them, to anoint them, and to ſend them, both: but, firſt, to anoint; then, to ſend them. To be, and in this order to be. Unleſſe they be firſt anointed, not to be ſent; and, though never ſo anointed, not to ſtart out of themſelves, but to ſtay till they be ſent.

The ſpirit to be upon them; the ſame, that upon Chriſt, though not in the ſame, but in a broad and a large difference or degree of being. Upon Him without meaſure; Not ſo, on us: but, on ſome, Jeſſe (the meaſure of the Hin;) on ſome, more (the meaſure of the Epha:) but every one, his Omer at leaſt. Some Feathers of the Dove (as it were) though not the Dove it ſelf; not the whole ſpirit entire, as upon Him.

On His head, the whole box of cintment was broken, which from Him ran down upon the Apoſtles, ſomewhat more freſh and full; and (ever) the farther the thinner, as the nature of things liquid is: but, ſome ſmall ſtreams trickle down even to us, and to our times ſtill.

This on-being, ſhews it ſelf firſt, in that which ſtands firſt (the Anointing.)

I ſhall not need tell you, the Spirit comes not upon us now, at our conception in the womb, to anoint us there. No: we behove to light our lamps oft, and to ſpend much oyle at our ſtudies, yer we can attain it. This way, come we to our anointing, now, by books: This Book chiefly; but, in a good part alſo, by the books of the Ancient Fathers, and Lights of the Church, in whom the ſcent of this cintment was freſh, and the temper true; on whoſe writings it lyeth thick, and we thence ſtrike it off, and gather it ſafely.

You will mark; the anointing is ſet, for the cauſe; the ſpirit is upon Me, becauſe He hath anointed Me. Then, ſublatâ cauſa, and à ſenſu contrario, the ſpirit is not upon me, becauſe He hath not anointed Me. Again, becauſe he hath anointed Me, he hath ſent me. And then it follows, becauſe He hath not anointed Me, He hath not ſent me. No ſpeaking of the ſpirits on-being; no talk of ſent by Him, without it. Where be they then, that ſay; the leſſe anointing, the more of the ſpirit? Indeed, the more blinde, the more bold; and ſo, the fitter to go on ſome other errand (pehaps) but not this.

No no: the Spirit makes none of theſe dry miſſions; ſends none of theſe ſame inuncti, ſuch as have never a feather of the Doves wing, not any ſpark of the fire of this day, not ſo much as a drop of this Pſal. 45. 8. cintment. You ſhall ſmell them ſtraight, that have it; the Myrrhe, Aloes, and Caſſia will make you glad. And you ſhall even as ſoone finde the others. Either they want odour: Anointed, I cannot ſay, but beſmeered with ſome unctious ſtuffe (go to, be it oile:) that gives a glibneſſe to the tongue to talk much and long, but no more ſent in it, than in a dry ſtick; no odours in it at all. Either odours they want (I ſay:) or, their odours are not laid in oile. For, if in oile; you ſhall not ſwell them ſo for a few ſet forms; if they be anointed, not perfumed or waſhed (for, ſuch Divines we have.) If it be ſome ſweet water, out of a caſting bottle, the ſent will away ſoone; water-colours, or water-odours will not laſt; But, if laid in oile throughly, they will: fear them not. To them that are ſtuffed (I know) all is one: they that have their ſenſes about them, will ſoone put a difference.

But what? If He be anointed, then turn Him off hardly with no more ado, without ſtay for any ſending at all? Nay, we ſee here, only anointing ſerved not Chriſt himſelf: He was ſent, and outwardly ſent beſides. Meſſias he was, in regard of his anointing: Shilo, He was too, in regard of his ſending. If John 9. 7. you love your eyes, waſh them in the water of Shilo, that is by interpretation, Sent. Or (to ſpeak in the Heb. 3. 1. ſtile of the Text) as he was Chriſt for his anointing; So was he an Apoſtle, for His ſending, ſo is he called (Heb. 3.) the Apoſtle of our profeſſion, with plain reference to ἀπόστολος here, the word in the Text.

Unction then is to go before, but not to go alone; miſſion is to follow: and no man, though never
Heb. 5. 4. ſo perunctus, eo ipſo, to ſtir, niſi qui vocatus erit ſicut Aaron, Unleſſe he be called as was Aaron; unleſſe he be ſent as Chriſt here was: for fear of Currebant & non mittebam eos, in the Prophet; Or of,

of, How ſhall they unleſſe they be ſent, in the Apoſtle. For his life, he knew not (if neither Aaron, nor CHRIST) how any might ſtep up, without calling, ſending, ordaining, laying on of hands: all are one. Jer. 23. 21. Rom. 10. 15.

And mark well this, that the Holy Ghoſt came upon Chriſt alike for both: that there is the Holy Ghoſt no leſſe in this ſending, than in the anointing. The very calling it ſelf, is a grace expreſly ſo called, Rom. 12. Epheſ. 3. and in divers places elſe. Every grace is of the Holy Ghoſt, and goeth ever, and is termed by the name of the Holy Ghoſt uſually. And in this ſenſe, the Holy Ghoſt is given and received in holy Orders, and we do well avow that, we ſay, Receive the Holy Ghoſt. Rom. 12. 3. Epheſ. 3. 7.

But, we have not all, when we have both theſe; for, ſhall we ſo dwell upon anointing and ſending, as we paſſe by the ſuper me, the firſt of all the three, and (ſure) not the laſt to be looked after. A plain note it is, but not without uſe, this ſituation of the Spirit; that he is ſuper. For if he be ſuper, we be ſub. That we be careful then to preſerve him in his ſuper, to keep him in his due place (that is) above. In ſigne whereof, the Dove hovered aloft over Chriſt, and came down upon him: And in ſigne thereof, we ſubmit our heads, in anointing to have the oile poured upon; we ſubmit our heads in ordaining, to have hands laid upon them. So, ſubmit we do in ſigne that ſubmit we muſt: That, not only miſſion, but ſubmiſſion is a ſigne of one truly called, to this buſineſſe. Somewhat of the Dove there muſt be (needs:) meekneſſe, humblenеſſe of minde.

But lightly you ſhall finde it, that thoſe that be neque uncti neque luti, neither anointed nor ſcarce well waſhed; the leſſe ointment, the worſe ſending, the farther from this ſubmiſſive humble minde. That above? Nay, any above? Nay, they inferiour to none. That above, and they under? Nay under no Spirit: no ſuper, they. Of all Prepoſitions, they endure not that, nor ſuper: all equal, all even at leaſt. Their ſpirit not ſubject to the ſpirit of the Prophets, nor of the Apoſtles neither (if they were now alive:) but bear themſelves ſo high, do tam altum ſpirare, as if this Spirit were their underling, and their ghoſt above the Holy Ghoſt. There may be a ſprite in them, there is no Spirit upon them, that endure no ſuper, none above them. So, now we have all, we ſhould: Unction, out of unxit; miſſion, out of miſit; ſubmiſſion, out of Super me.

II. The end whereto.

Forward now. Upon me. How know we that? Becauſe He hath anointed me: Anointed, to what end? To ſend: Send, whereto? That follows now. Both whereto, and whom to. 1 Whereto? To bring good tydings: 2 Whom to? To the poor.

1. To bring good tydings.

1, Whereto? If the ſpirit ſent Chriſt, He will ſend Him with the beſt ſending: and the beſt ſending, is to be ſent with a meſſage of good newes: the beſt, and the beſt welcome. We all ſtrive to bear them; we all love to have them brought. The Goſpel is nothing elſe, but a meſſage of good tydings. And Chriſt, as in regard of His ſending, an Apoſtle, the Arch-Apoſtle; So in regard of that he is ſent with, an Evangeliſt, the Arch-Evangeliſt. Chriſt is to anoint; this, is a kind of anointing: and no Ointment ſo precious, no Oile ſo ſupple, no Odor ſo pleaſing, as the knowledge of it; called therefore by the Apoſtle, Odor vitæ, the Savour of life unto life, in them that receive it. 2 Cor. 2. 16.

2. To the poor.

2. Send with this, and to whom? To the poor. You may know, it is the ſpirit of God by this. That ſpirit it is: and they that are anointed with it, take care of the poor. The ſpirit of the world, and they that are anointed with it, take little heed to evangelize any ſuch, any poor ſouls. But in the tydings of the Goſpel, they are not left out: taken in by name (we ſee.) In ſending thoſe tydings, there is none excluded. No reſpect of perſons with God: None of Nations; to every Nation, Gentile and Jew: None of Conditions; to every condition, poor and rich. To them, that of all other are the leaſt likely. They are not troubled with much worldly good newes: Seldome come there any Poſts to them with ſuch. But the good newes of the Goſpel, reacheth even to the meaneſt. And reaching to them, it muſt needs be general (this newes:) If to them, that of all other leaſt likely, then certainly to all. Etiam pauperibus is (as if He had ſaid) even to poor and all, by way of extent, ampliando. But, no wayes to ingroſſe it, or appropriate it to them only. The tydings of the Goſpel are as well for a [a] Lydia the purple-ſeller; as for [b] Simon the tanner: For the [c] Areopagite, the Judge at Athens, as for the [d] Jaylour at Philippos: for the [e] Elect Lady, as for widow [f] Dorcas: [g] For the Lord Treaſurer of Æthiopia, as for the [h] Begger at the beautiful gate of the Temple: [i] for the houſhold of Cæſar, as for the [k] houſhold of Stephanas; yea and (if he will) for [l] King Agrippa too. Acts 10. 34.

a Acts 16. 15. b Acts 10. 6. c Acts 17. 34. d Acts 16. 30. e 2 John 1. f Acts 9. 36. g Acts 8. 27. h Acts 3. 2. i Phil. 4. 22. k 1 Cor. 1. 16. l Acts 26. 28.

But if you will have pauperibus a reſtringent, you may; but then, you muſt take it for poor in ſpirit, with whom our Saviour begins His Beatitudes in the Mount: the poverty to be found in all. As indeed, I know none ſo rich, but needs theſe tydings: all to feel the want of them in their ſpirits: No Dices quia dives ſum; as few ſparks of a Phariſee as may be, in them, that will be intereſſed in it. Matth. 5. 3. Revel. 3. 17.

III. The tydings of a Phyſitian for broken hearts.

Well, we ſee to whom: what may theſe newes be? Newes of a new Phyſitian, Καρδιακὸς, Medicus cordis, one that can give Phyſick to heal a broken heart. And newes of ſuch an one is good newes indeed. They that can cure parts leſſe principal, broken armes or legs, or limbs out of joynt, are much made of, and ſent for far and near: What ſay you to one, that is good at a broken heart? make that whole, ſet that in joynt again, if it happen to be out? So they underſtood it plainly, by their ſpeech to him after, Medice cura teipſum. Verſe 23.

The heart (ſure) is the part of all other, we would moſt gladly have well. Give me any grief to the grief of the heart (ſaith one that knew what he ſaid:) Omni cuſtodia cuſtodi cor (ſaith Solomon) keep thy heart above all: if that be down, all is down: look to that in any wiſe. Nows it is moſt proper for the Spirit to deale with that part: it is the fountain of the ſpirits of life, and whither (indeed) none Eccluſ. 15. 17. Prov. 4. 23.

none can come, but the ſpirit, to do any cure to purpoſe: that, if Chriſt, if the ſpirit take it not in hand, all cures elſe are but palliative; they may drive it away for a while, it will come again worſe than ever. Now then, to Medice cura (as Chriſt after ſaith) to this new cure.

IV. Of the hearts. 1 How they came broken.

In every cure our rule, is firſt to look to de cauſis morborum, how the heart can be broken; then after, de methodo medendi, the way here to help it.

How comes the heart broken? The common hammer that breaks them, is ſome bodily or worldly croſſe, ſuch as we commonly call heart-breakings. There be here in the Text, three ſtrokes of this hammer, able (I think) to break any heart in the world.

1 By being captives. Pſal 137.2.

1. Captivity. They be captives firſt; and captives and caitives, in our ſpeech ſound much upon one. It is (ſure) a condition able to make any man Hang up his Harpe, and ſit weeping by the waters of Babylon. There, is one ſtroke.

2. In a dark dungeon.

2. There follows another worſe yet. For, in Babylon though they were captives, yet went they abroad, had their liberty. Theſe here are in Priſon: And in ſome blinde hole there, as it might be in the dungeon, where they ſee nothing. That (I take it) is meant by blinde here in the text: Blinde, for want of light; not for want of ſight, though thoſe both come to one, are convertible. They that be blinde, ſay they are dark: and they that be in the dark, for the time are deprived of ſight, have no manner uſe of it at all, no more than a blinde man. Now, they that row in the Galleyes, yet this comfort they have, they ſee the light: and if a man ſee nothing elſe, the light of it ſelf is comfortable. And a greak ſtroke of the hammer it is, not to have ſo much as that poor comfort left them.

Eccleſ. 11.7.

3 And bruiſed with irons there.

3. But yet are not we at the worſt; One ſtroke more. For, one may be in the dungeon and yet have his limmes at large, his hands and feet at liberty. But ſo have not thoſe in the text, but are in irons; and thoſe ſo heavie and ſo pinching, as they are even πθραυσμένοι, bruiſed and hurt with them. See now their caſe. 1 Captives; and not only that, but 2 in priſon. In priſon, not above, but in the dungeon, the deepeſt, darkeſt, the blindeſt hole there; no light, no ſight at all: 3 And, in the hole, with as many irons upon them, that they are even bruiſed and ſore with them. And tell me now, if theſe three together be not enough to break Manaſſes, or any mans heart, and to make him have cor contritum indeed.

They be: but what is this to us? This is no mans caſe here. No more was it any of theirs, that were at Chriſts Sermon: yet Chriſt ſpake to the purpoſe, we may be ſure. We may not then take it litterally, as meant by the body: Chriſt, meant no ſuch captivity, dungeon or irons. That He meant not ſuch, is plain. He ſaith, He was ſent to free Captives, to open priſons: But, He never ſet any captive free, in His life, nor opened any goale, (in that ſenſe) to let any priſoner forth. Another ſenſe then, we are to ſeek. Remember ye not, we began with the Spirit? the buſineſſe, the Spirit comes about, is ſpiritual, not ſecular. So, all theſe ſpiritually to be underſtood. As (indeed) they are all three appliable to the caſe of the Spirit; and a plain deſcription of all our ſtates, out of Chriſt, and before He take us in hand.

Rom. 7. 24.

1. There is captivity there, wherein men are held in ſlavery under ſinne and Satan, worſe than that we now ſpeak of. Saint Paul knew it: ſpeaks of it, Rom. 7. and when he hath ſo, crieth out, Wretched man that I am, who ſhall rid me of it! Verily, there is no Turk ſo hurries men, puts them to ſo baſe ſervices, as ſinne doth her captives: Give me one that hath been in her captivity, and is got out of it, & ſcit quod dico, he can tell, it is true I ſay.

Pſal. 88.8. Pſal. 142.7.

2. There is a priſon too: not Manaſſes priſon. But aske David, who never came in any goale; what he meant, when he ſaid, I am ſo faſt in priſon, as I know not how to get out. And that you may know what priſon that was, he cries, O bring my ſoul out of priſon! A priſon there is then, of the ſoul no leſſe than of the body. In which priſon were ſome of thoſe that Chriſt preached here to: Saint Matthew ſaith, they ſate in darkneſſe and in the ſhadow of death, even as men in the dungeon do.

Mat. 4. 16. Pro. 5. 22. Acts 8. 23.

There are chaines too, that is alſo the ſinners caſe; He is even tied with chaines of his own ſinnes (ſaith Solomon) with the bonds of iniquity (Saint Peter) which bands are they, David thanks GOD for breaking in ſunder. There need no other bonds, we will ſay, if once we come to feel them. The gals, that ſin makes in the conſcience, are the entering of the iron into our ſoul.

Pſal. 106.16 Pſal. 105.18.

But you will ſay, we feele not theſe neither, no more than the former. No do? Take this for a rule: If CHRIST heale them, that be broken-hearted; broken-hearted we behove to be, yer He can heale us. He is medicus cordis indeed; but it is cordis contriti. It is a condition ever annexed (this) to make us the more capable; and likewiſe a diſpoſition it is, to make us the more curable. The ſame pauperibus (before) and this contritis now, they limit Chriſt's cure; his cure, and his Commiſſion both: and unleſſe they be, or until they be, this Scripture is not, nor cannot be fulfilled in us: In our eares, it may be; but in our hearts, never.

That, as ſuch as come to be healed by his Majeſty, are firſt ſearched, and after either put by, or admitted as cauſe is: ſo there would be a Scrutiny of ſuch, as make toward CHRIST. What, are you poor? poor in ſpirit? (for the purſe it skills not:) No, but dicis quia dives, in good caſe: CHRIST is not for you then; He is ſent to the poor. What, is your heart broken? No, but heart-whole, a heart as brawn: then are you not for this cure. In all Chriſts Diſpenſatory, there is not a medicine, for ſuch a heart; a heart like brawn (that is) hard and un-yeelding.

Pſal. 119.70.

CHRIST himſelf ſeemes to give this Item, when He applies it after: Many Widows, Many Lepers (ſaith He:) and ſo many ſinners: Elias ſent to none, but the poor Widow of Serepta; Eliſæus au healed none, but only Naaman, after his ſpirit taine down, was broken. No more doth Chriſt, but ſuch as are of a contrite heart.

Verily, the caſe as before we ſee it ſet down, is the ſinners caſe; feele he it, feele he it not. But if any be ſo benummed, as he is not ſenſible of this; ſo blinde, as dungeon or no dungeon, all is one to him; if any have this Scirrhum cordis, that makes him paſt feeling, it is no good ſigne: but it may be, our hour is not yet come, our cure is yet behind. But, if it ſhould ſo continue, and never be otherwiſe, then were it a very evil ſigne. For what is ſuch a ones caſe, but (as Solomon ſaith) as the Oxe that is led to the ſlaughter without any ſenſe, or the foole that goes laughing when he is carried to be well whipped? What caſe is more pitiful? Prov. 7. 22.

You will ſay: we have no hammer, no worldly Croſſe to break our hearts. It may be. That, is Manaſſes hammer, the common hammer (indeed:) but, that is not King Davids hammer, which I rather commend to you; the right hammer to do the feat, to work contrition in kinde. The right, is the ſight of our own ſins. And, I will ſay this for it: that I never in my life ſaw any man brought ſo low with any worldly calamity, as I have, with this ſight. And theſe, I ſpeak of, were not of the common ſort, but men of ſpirit and valour, that durſt have looked death in the face. Yet when God opened their eyes, to ſee this ſight; their hearts were broken, yea, even ground to powder with it, contrite indeed.

And this is ſure; if a man be not humbled with the ſight of his ſins. It is not all the croſſes or loſſes in the world will humble him aright.

This is the right. And without any worldly croſſe, this we might have, if we loved not ſo to abſent our ſelves from our ſelves, to be even fugitivi cordis, to run away from our own hearts; be ever abroad, never within: if we would but ſometimes redire ad cor; return home thither, and deſcend into our ſelves; ſadly and ſeriouſly to bethink us of them, and the danger we are in, by them, this might be had: And this would be had, if it might be. If not, in default of this (no remedy) the common hammer muſt come; and God ſend us Manaſſes hammer, to break it, ſome bodily ſickneſſe, ſome worldly affliction, to ſend us home into our ſelves. But ſure the Angel muſt come down and the water be ſtirred, elſe we may preach long enough to uncontrite hearts, but no good will be done, till then. Eſay 46. 8. John. 5. 4.

I have been too long in the Cauſe: but, the knowledge of the Cauſe, in every diſeaſe, we reckon half the cure. To the healing, now.

The word for heale, in Eſay (where this Text is) ſignifies to binde up. The cure begins with ligature, the moſt proper cure, for fractures, or ought that is broken. Nay, in wounds and all, as appeareth by the Samaritan. The fluxe is ſo ſtayed, which if it continue running on us ſtill, in vaine talk we of any healing. It is not begun till that ſtay and run no longer. The ſin that Chriſt cures, He binds up, He ſtayes (to begin with.) If He cover ſinne, it is with a plaiſter. He covers and cures together, both under one. Luke 10. 34.

This word [broken-hearted] the Hebrews take not, as we do, we broken for ſin, they broken of, or from ſinne. And we have the ſame phraſe with us; To break one of the evil faſhions, or inclinations, he hath been given to. So, to break the heart. And ſo muſt it be broken, or ever it be whole. Both ſenſes: either of them doth well, but both together beſt of all.

2. How they are cured.

This done, now to the healing part. The Heathen obſerved long ſince: ψυχῆς νοσέσης εἷς ἰατὴρ λόγος, the ſouls cure is by words: and the Angel ſaith to Cornelius, of Saint Peter, He ſhall ſpeak to thee words by which thou and thy houſhold ſhall be ſaved. Acts 10. 6.

And by no words ſooner, than by the ſound of good tydings. Good newes, is good phyſick ſure (ſuch the diſeaſe may be:) and a good meſſage, a good medicine. There is power in it both wayes. Good newes, hath healed; evil newes, hath killed many. The good newes of Joſephs welfare, we ſee, how it even revived old Jacob: And, the evil of the Arke of God taken, it coſt Eli his life. Nothing works upon the heart more forcibly, either way. By good tydings. Gen. 45. 27. 1 Sam. 4. 18.

What are theſe newes, and firſt how come they? By κηρύξαι they come: no ſecret whiſpered newes from man to man, in a corner: No flying newes. They be proclaimed, theſe, ſo authentical. Proclaimed: And ſo they had need; for if our ſinnes once appear in their right forme, there is evil newes certainly: Let the Divel alone with that, to proclaime them, to preach damnation to us. Contraria curantur Contrariis, we had need have ſome good proclaimed, to cure thoſe of his. Proclaimed.

Two Proclamations here are, one in the neck of another. Of which the former, in the three branches of it, applieth in particular, a remedy to the three former maladies; Is the Topique medicine (as it were:) the later is the Panacea, makes them all perfectly whole and ſound.

1 The firſt proclamation.

The firſt Proclamation. To the Captive firſt, that there is one at hand with a ranſome, to redeem him. This will make him a whole man.

2. To them in the dungeon; of one to draw them forth thence, and make them ἀναβλέψαι, ſee the light again.

3. To them in chaines; of one to ſtrike off their bolts and looſe them, to open the priſon-doore, and let them go: ἀποστεῖλαι, to make Apoſtles of them, and ſend them abroad into the wide world. It is the fruit of Chriſts ἀποστολὴ, this ἀποστεῖλαι; Chriſts Apoſtleſhip was, and is, to make ſuch Apoſtles.

Now

Revel. 1. 18. Now, this is nothing but the very ſumme of the Goſpel: 1 Of one coming with a ranſome in one hand, to lay down for us the price of our redemption from Satans captivity. 2 And with the keyes of hell and death in the other. Keyes of two ſorts: 3 One, to undo their fetters and looſe them; the other, to open the dungeon and priſon-door (both the dungeon of deſpaire, and the priſon of the Law) and let them out of both. There can be no better newes, nor kindlier phyſick in the world, 1 than word of redemption to captives: 2 than to ſee the light again, to them in the Limbo: 3 than of enlargement, to them in bands: but ſpecially, than of a diſmiſſion, from priſon, dungeon, irons and all. And this is proclaimed here, and publiſhed by Chriſt in his Sermon at Nazareth: and was after performed and accompliſhed by him, at his Paſſion in Jeruſalem.

2 The ſecond proclamation. This is good newes indeed: but here comes better. It is ſeconded with another Proclamation, that makes up all. For in very deed; they that by the firſt proclamation were ſo releaſed, for all that; and after all that, what were they, but a ſort of poor ſnakes, turned out of the Goale, but have nothing to take to? Coming thither, they were turned out of all that ever they had. That, their caſe, though it be leſſe miſerable, yet is miſerable ſtill: the languor morbi ſtill hangs upon them.

We lack ſome reſtaurative for that. Here comes (now) phyſick, to cure that and make them perfectly well. A ſecond κπρύξαι, that they ſhall be reſtored, to all that ever they had. How ſo? For harke: here is the acceptable year, that is, a Jubilee proclaimed. And then, even of courſe they are (by force of the Jubilee) ſo to be. The nature of the Jubilee was ſo, you know. Then not only all bond ſet free; all priſons (for debt) ſet open; but beſide, all were reſtored then, to their former mortgaged, forfeited, or any wayes aliened eſtates, in as ample manner, as ever they had, or held them at any time before.

A reſtitution in integrum; a re-inveſting them in what they were born to or were any wayes poſſeſſed of: that, if they had ſold themſelves out of all, and lay in execution for huge ſummes (as it might be ten thouſand talents,) then, all was quit; they came to all again; in as good caſe, as ever they were in all their lives. There can be no more joyfull newes, no more cordial phyſicke, than this. The yeare of Jubilee? why, that time, ſo acceptable, ſo joyful, as it hath even given a denomination to joy it ſelfe. The height of joy is Jubilee; the higheſt terme to expreſſe it, is Jubilate: that goes beyond all the words of joy whatſoever.

And this comes well now: for, the Jubilee of the Law drawing to an end, and this very year being now the laſt, Chriſts Jubilee, (the Jubilee of the Goſpel) came fitly to ſucceed. Wherein, the primitive eſtate, we had in Paradiſe, we are re-ſeiſed of anew. Not the ſame, in ſpecie, but as good, nay better. For, if for the terreſtrial Paradiſe by the flood deſtroyed, we have a celeſtial, we have our own again, (I trow) with advantage.

A year it is called (to keep the terme ſtill on foot, that formerly it went by.) Only this difference: the year (there) was a definite time; but here, a definite is put for an indefinite. This year is more than twelve moneths. In this acceptable year, the Zodiaque goes never about. On this day of Salvation the Sunne never goes down. For in this, the Jubilee of the Goſpel paſſeth that of the Law: that, held but for a year, and no longer: But, this is continual, laſts ſtill. Which is plaine: in that,
2 Cor. 6. 2. divers years after that of Chriſts, the Apoſtle ſpeaks of it, as ſtill in eſſe: Even then, makes this proclamation ſtill, Behold this is the day, Behold, now is the acceptable time. Whereby we are given to underſtand, that Chriſts Jubilee, though it began, when Chriſt firſt preached this Sermon,
Revel. 4. 6. yet it ended not with the end of that year (as did Aarons) but was Evangelium æternum: As alſo perpetui jubilæi; Everlaſting good newes of a perpetual Jubilee, that doth laſt, and ſhall laſt, as long as Acts 3. 21. the Goſpel ſhall be preached, by Himſelf, or others ſent by Him to the end of the world, the time of reſtoring all things.

It is called acceptable, by the terme of the benefit, that hapned on it, which was, our acceptation. For then, we and all mankind were made (not δεκτοὶ, that is, acceptable, but as the word is) δεκτοὶ, that is, actually accepted, or received by God: Out of whoſe preſence we were before caſt. And being by Epheſ. 1. 4. him ſo received, we did our ſelves receive again, the earneſt of our inheritance, from which by means of the tranſgreſſion we were before fallen.

There is much in this terme [accepting.] For, when is one ſaid to be accepted? Not, when his ranſome is paid, or the priſon ſet open; not when he is pardoned his fault, or reconciled, or become friends:
Luke 15. 20. 22 but when he is received with armes ſpread; as was the loſt child in the Goſpel; ad ſtolam primam (as the terme is, out of that place.) Three degrees there are in it; 1 Accepted to pardon, that is συγχώρησις:
2 Sam. 13. 39. 14. 33. 2 Accepted to reconciliation, that is καταλλαγή: and further, 3 Accepted to repropitiation, that is ἱλασμός, to as good grace and favour as ever, even in the very fulneſſe of it. They ſhew it, by three diſtinct degrees in Abſaloms receiving: 1 Pardoned he was, while he was yet in Geſhur: 2 Reconciled, when he had leave to come home to his own houſe: 3 Repropitiate, when he was admitted to the Kings preſence and kiſſed him. That made up all, then he had all again. And that is our very caſe.

Nay indeed, that is not all. It is more than ſo: δεκτὸς (here) is in the Text of Eſay רעון: and that Matth. 17. 5. imparts more. For, that word, is ever turned by εὐδοκία, and that is Chriſts own acceptation (in whom I am well pleaſed) and the very terme of it. And he that is ſo accepted, I know not what he would have more.

This is the benefit that fell at this time: and for this, that fell on the time, the time it ſelf, it fell on, is, and cannot be but acceptable; even eo nomine, that at ſuch a time, ſuch a benefit hapned to us. And in this reſpect it ever hath, and ever ſhall be an acceptable welcome time, this; and holden as an high Feaſt: like as the benefit is high, that befell us on it. Feſtum, a feaſt, for the pardon: Feſtum duplex, for the reconciliation: Feſtum magis duplex, for the being perfectly accepted to the favour of God, and by it reaccepting again our prime eſtate.

Nay (laſt) it is called not only Annus acceptus, but Annus Domini acceptus, or acceptus Domino: not only, the acceptable year; but, of the Lord, or to the Lord; (for ſo the Hebrew reads it, with the ſigne of the Dative; as if to GOD Himſelf it were ſo.) And, to Him, ſo it is; and to His holy Angels in heaven, ſo it is. For, if the receiving any one contrite ſinner, by repenance, be matter of joy to the whole Court of Heaven; if the receiving of but one; what ſhall we think of the general receiving of the whole maſſe, which this day was effected? Luke 15.10.

Now, if to heaven, if to God himſelf it be ſo; To earth, to us, ſhall it not be much more, whom much more it concerneth (I am ſure?) God getteth nothing by it; we do: He is not the better for it, we are: Ever, the receiver, then the giver. The giver, more glory; but the receiver more joy. That if it be the joy of heaven, it cannot be but the Jubilee of the earth, even of the whole earth: Jubilate Deo omnis terra. Pſal 66 1.

The Jubilee (ever) it began with no other ſound, but even of a Cornet, made of the hornes of a Ram. Of which hornes they give no other reaſon, but that it was ſo, in reference to the hornes of that Ram, that in the thicket was caught by the hornes, and ſacrificed in Iſaacs ſtead, even as Chriſt was, in ours. To ſhew, that all our Jubilee hath relation to that ſpecial ſacrifice, ſo plainly prefiguring that of Chriſts. Which feaſt of Jubilee began ever, after the High Prieſt had offered his ſacrifice, and had been in the Sancta Sanctorum. As this Jubilee of Chriſt alſo took place, from His entring into the holy places made without hands, after His propitiatory Sacrifice offered up for the quick and the dead, and for all yet unborne, at Eaſter. And, it was the tenth day, that: and this (now) is the tenth day ſince. Levit. 25. 9. Joſh. 6. 4. Gen. 22. 13. Heb. 9. 11.

The memorial, or myſtery of which ſacrifice of Chriſts, in our ſtead, is ever Caput lætitiæ, the top of our mirth, and the initiation of the joy of our Jubilee. Like as accipiam calicem ſalutaris, our taking the cup of Salvation, is the memorial of our being accepted, or received and taken again to Salvation. Wherewith let us alſo crown this Jubilee of ours. That ſo all the benefits of it, may take hold of us: ſpecially the red-integration of the favour of God, and the aſſurance or pledge of our reſtitution to thoſe joyes, and that Jubilee, that only can give content to all our deſires when the time ſhall come of the reſtoring of all things. A

BEFORF THE

Kings Majesty,

AT GREENWICH,

On the XXIV. of May, A.D. MDCXVIII.

being WHITSUNDAY.

ACTS Chap. II.

Sed hoc est, quod dictum est, &c.

Verse 16. But this is that, which was spoken by the Prophet Joel.

17. And it shall be in the last days (saith God) I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall propheſie, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dreame dreames.

18. And on my servants, and on mine hand-maids, I will pour out of my Spirit, and they shall propheſie.

19. And I will shew wonders in heaven above, and tokens in the earth beneath, blood, and fire, and the vapour of smoke.

20. The Sun shall be turned into darkneſſe, and the Moone into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come.

21. And it shall be, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord, shall be saved.

THese words may well serve for a Sermon, this day: they were a part of a Sermon, preached as this day. The first Whitson-sermon, that ever was: the first Whitsunday, that ever was. Saint Peter preached it. And this was his Text, out of the second Chapter of the Prophet Joel. As Christ, the last year, out of Esay: so Peter, this, out of Joel. Both took Texts: both, for the day, and for the present occasion.

The occasion of this here, was a lewd surmise given out by some, touching the gift of tongues, this day sent from heaven.

It shall be my first note. That look, how soone GOD from heaven had sent His fiery tongues upon His Apostles; the Divel from hell presently sent for his fiery tongues, and put them in the mouths of his Apostles, to disgrace and scoffe at those of Gods sending.

Ye may hear them speak (at the thirteenth verse:) Well fare this same good new wine; these good fellowes fellowes have beene at it, and now they can ſpeak nothing but outlandiſh: ſome little broken Greek or Latine they had, and now out it comes.

Thus, that which was indeed grande miraculum, they turned into grande ludibrium. Of the great Myſtery of this day, they made a meere mockery. Thoſe, that were baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, they traduced, as if they had ſouſed themſelves in new wine. Here is the Holy Ghoſt welcome into the world. This uſe doth the Divel make of ſome mens wits and tongues, to pour contempt on that, which God poureth forth, all that ever they can; even to work deſpite to the Spirit of Grace. Matth 3.11. Heb.10.29.

Being to make an apology for himſelf, and the reſt, (and indeed, for the Holy Ghoſt) Saint Peter firſt prayes audience (at the 14. verſe.) Then tells them ſoberly, they miſſe the matter quite (at the 15.) It was too early day, to faſten any ſuch ſuſpition, upon any ſuch men as they were (to be gone, before nine in the morning.) But, this he ſtands not on, as not worth the anſwering. The ſumme.

Here (at this Verſe) he tells them, it was no liquour, this ſpecially, no ſuch as they furniſed. If it were any, if they would needs have it one, it was the Prophet Joels, and none other, ſomething poured on, nothing poured in. Nothing, but the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt. This is it that was ſpoken by the Prophet Joel.

So, habemus firmiorem ſermonem propheticum: and this, which ſeemed to happen thus on the ſudden, it was long ſince foretold; and he alledges for it this text of the Prophet, that ſuch a thing there ſhould come to paſſe, an effuſion of the Spirit, and that a ſtrange one. And this they would finde it to be; this Prophecie (of the Spirit poured) this day fulfilled in their eares. 2 Pet. 1.19.

Of which Text, the ſpecial points be two: 1 Of the Spirits pouring: 2 Of the end whereto. The Diviſion.

The firſt I reduce to theſe four. 1 The Thing: 2 the Act: 3 the Party by whom: 4 the Parties upon whom. 1 De Spiritu meo, is the thing. 2 Effundam, the act. 3 Dicit Dominus, the party by whom. 4 Super omnem carnem, the parties upon whom it is poured. I.

Then the end whereto. And in that four more. The laſt end of all in the laſt word of all, ſalvabitur. That is the very end: and a bleſſed end, if by any means we may attain to it. Then are there three other conducting to this. Two main ones; and one acceſſory, but yet as neceſſary as the other. 2 Cloſe to it, in the end, there is calling on the Name of the Lord: He that calleth on the Name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved. 3 And fartheſt from it at the beginning, there is prophetabunt, to call upon us to that end: And my ſervants ſhall prophecie. 4 And, between both theſe, there is a Memorandum of the Great Day of the Lord. Which is not from the matter neither, nor more than needs. For then (at that day) we ſhall ſtand more in need of ſaving: if we periſh then, we periſh for ever. And the mention and memory of that Day, will make us not deſpiſe prophecying, nor forget invocation; but be both more attentive in hearing of prophecie, and more devout in calling on the Name of the Lord. So, it may well go for a third conducting means to our ſalvation.

Now to bring this to the Day. This (it is ſaid) ſhall be in the laſt dayes. Which with S. Peter here; and with S. Paul (Heb. 1. 1.) yea and with the Rabbins themſelves, are the dayes of the Meſſiah. So, of our Meſſiah CHRIST (to us) and of none other. Of whoſe dayes, this is the very laſt. For, having done His errand, He was to go up again, and to ſend His Spirit down, to do His, another while: which is the work of this day. As His firſt then, the taking of our fleſh, ſo His laſt, the giving of his Spirit: the giving it abundantly, which is the effundam here.

It remaineth, that we pray to Him, who thus, of His Spirit poured forth this day, that He would vouchſafe on the ſame day to pour of it on us here: that we may ſo hold this Feaſt (the memory of it) and ſo hear the words of this Prophecie, as may be to his good acceptance, and our own ſaving in the great Day, the Day of the Lord.

I.

OF the thing poured firſt. De ſpiritu meo, the Spirit of GOD. Firſt of Him, to give Him the honour of His own Day. Of the Spirits pouring. De Spiritu.

The Spirit, is of Himſelf Author of life, and here is brought in, as Author of Prophecie. They both are in the Nicene Creed; 1 the Lord, and Giver of life, 2 and who ſpake by the Prophets. Life and ſpeech have but one inſtrument, the ſpirit or breath both. Of it, theſe four,

1. Prophecie can come from no nature but Rational: The Spirit then, is natura rationalis. And determinate it is, diſtinct plainly here two wayes: 1 The Spirit, from Him whoſe the Spirit is; Him that ſayes, de Spiritu meo. 2 That which is poured, from Him, that poureth it; Fuſus à Fuſore. Being then natura rationalis determinata, He is a Perſon (for a perſon is ſo defined.)

2. Secondly, effuſion is a plain proceeding of that, which is poured: as ſpiration is ſo too, in the very body of the word ſpirit. So, a Perſon proceeding.

3. Thirdly, being a Perſon, and yet being poured out, He behoves to be God. No Perſon, Angel or Spirit, can be poured out, can be ſo participate. Not at all: but not upon all fleſh, not dilated ſo farre, GOD only can be that. So, the Perſon, the proceeding, the Deity of the Holy Ghoſt (all) in theſe words. And not a word of all this mine: but thus deduced, by S. Ambroſe, and before, by Dydimus Alexandrinus, S. Hieromes Maſter.

4. But fourthly, you will mark: It is not my Spirit, but of my Spirit. The whole Spirit, fleſh could not not hold: not all flesh. And parts it hath none. 1. Understand then, of my Spirit, that is, of the gifts and graces of the Spirit. Beames of this light: streames of this pouring. Otherwhere, others: here, the gift of prophecy and tongues.

Luke 4. 18. The Text of the last year.

2. Which de Spiritu is also said, to keep the difference between CHRIST and us. Upon him, the Spirit was: The Spirit of God upon me, last year. Upon us, not the Spirit: but, de Spiritu, of my Spirit only, this year.

2. The Act, Effundam.

The next is the act, effundam: In it four more: 1 The quality, in that it is compared to a thing liquid, fusil, poured out; This seemes not proper. Pouring is, as it had been water; He came in fire. It would have been kindled, rather than poured. True, Saint Peter in proper termes makes his answer referre to their slander: and that was, that it was nothing but new wine, a liquor. Their objection being in a thing liquid, his answer behoved to be accordingly. And well it might, so: CHRIST had so expressed it: both lately in His promise, Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost within few dayes: And formerly, under the termes of waters of life (John 7.) where Saint Johns exposition is, This he spake of the Spirit. Not (then) given, but to be given, straight upon CHRISTS glorifying, which is now this very day. The Holy Ghost then, is not all fire.

Cap. 1. 5.

John 7. 39.

And this quality falls well within the two graces, of 1 prophecie, and 2 invocation, here given. 1 Prophecie: Moses (the great Prophet) likened itto the dew falling upon the herbs, or the raine poured on the grasse (Deut. 32.) And that likening is so usual, as [מורח Moreh] the word in Hebrew for raine, is so for a Preacher too; that it poseth the Translators, which way to turn it: and even in that very Chapter of Joel, whence this Text is taken.

Deut. 32. 2.

2 And, invocation is so too; a pouring out of prayer, and of the very heart in prayer.

3 And the third of the latter day may be taken in too. Then there shall be a pouring forth also of all the Phials of the wrath of GOD.

Verse 23.

2. The quality then first: the quantity, no lesse. For, pouring is a signe of plenty: effundam, not aspergam (the first prerogative of this day.) For, the Spirit had been given before this time: but never with such a largesse, sprinkled, but not poured. Never till now, in that bounty, that now. This was reserved for Christ. For, when there was copiosa sanguinis effusio on His part, there was likewise to be copiosa Flaminis effusio, on the Holy Ghosts. He, as liberal of his grace; as Christ of his blood. That there might be to us copiosa redemptio, betweene them both, it is effundam copiosè in both.

Psal. 103. 7.

3. Effundam tels us farther, the Spirit came not of himself: nor till He was thus poured out. It is no effluet, but effundam. Sic oportet implere, that so, order might be kept, in Him (in the very Spirit) and we by Him taught to keep it. Not to start out, till we be sent; nor to go on our own heads, but to stay till we be called. Not to leake out, or to run over; but to stay till we be poured out in like sort. Seeing CHRIST would not go unsent, Misit me, last year: Nor the HOLY GHOST run unpoured, this year: it may well become us to keep in, till we be poured and sent any year. And yet, the Spirit is no lesse ready to run, than GOD is to poure it. One of these is no barre to the other. Ecce ego, mitte me. Ecce ego, Behold I am ready (saith Esay;) and yet, mitte me, Send me, for all that. Effluence, and Effusion; Influence, and infusion will stand together well enough.

4. Lastly, effundam is not, as the running of a spout. To poure, is the voluntary act of a voluntary Agent, who hath the vessel in his hand, and may pour little, or much; and may chuse whether He will pour out any at all, or no. As shut the heaven from raining: So, refrain the Spirit from falling on us.

2. And when He poures, He strikes not out the head of the vessel, and lets all go: but moderates His pouring, and dispenses His gifts. Pours not all, upon every one, nay, not upon any one, all: but upon some in this manner, upon some in that: Not to each, the same. And to whom the same, not in the same measure though: but, to some, five; to some two, to some but one talent. The Text is plain for this. There are diverse assignations in it: 1 To diverse parties; sonnes, servants, old men, and young men: 2 Of diverse gifts; propheſies, visions, and dreames. 3 And them, of diverse degrees: one clearer than the other; the vision, than the dreame. Singulis prout vult, at the Pourers discretion; to each as pleaseth Him best.

Matth. 25. 15.

1 Cor. 12. 11.

3. The party pouring. Dicit Dominus. Psal. 110. 1.

The Party pouring is Dicit Dominus, the Lord that said. But, Dixit Dominus Domino meo: The Lord said to my Lord: Which of these? The later (Domino meo) My Lord, Davids Lord, and ours Dominum nostrum, in our Creed (that is) CHRIST. How appears that? directly at the thirty third verse after, He being now exalted by the right hand of God, and having received the promise of the HOLY GHOST from the Father, He hath poured out this that we now see and hear. CHRIST then. And not the Father? Yes, he too: For, of Him, Christ is said to receive it. Not only Dixit Dominus Domino meo; but, dedit Dominus Domino meo. And so, as in the nineteenth of Genesis, pluit Dominus à Domino: From the Lord, the Lord poured it. And but one effundam, with but one effusion both; and with one spiration, He came from both. Both, with one effusion poure him: Both, with one spiration breath Him. It is expressely so set down, Revelation Chap. 22. The fountain of the water of life issued from the seat of God and of the Lamb. So have you here the whole Trinity: 1 Quis, 2 Quid, 3 à Quo; the Father, by the Sonne, or the Sonne from the Father, pouring out the Holy Ghost.

2. And may we not also finde the two natures of Christ here? Effundam is fundam ex. I will poure out: Out of what? what the cisterne into which it first comes, and out of which it is after derived ved to us? That, is the flesh or humane nature of Christ: On which it was poured at his conception, fully to endow it; For in Him the fulnesse of the Godhead dwelleth bodily (mark that, bodily.) And it was given to him without measure, and of all his fulnesse we all receive. From this Cisterne, this day, issued the Spirit, by so many quils, or pipes (as it were) as there are several divisions, of the graces of the Holy Ghost. And so now we have both à Quo, and ex Quo. The Divinity, into this Humanity, pouring the Spirit, which from His flesh, was poured down, this day, super omnem carnem, upon all flesh. Which fitly brings in the next, Super omnem carnem. Col. 2. 9. John 1. 10.

4. The parties upon whom. Super omnem carnem. 1 Cor. 9. 9.

On whom this pouring is (which is the last point:) Super omnem carnem. In which there are three points, as the words are three: 1 Carnem first (that is) men. For doth GOD take care for Oxen (saith the Apostle) or for any flesh, but ours? No, not for any flesh; but the flesh which the Word did take. And, for that He doth.

But, we are Spirit too, as well as flesh: and, in reason, Spirit on Spirit, were more kindly. There is nearer alliance between them.

Yet you shall finde the other part (flesh) is still chosen.

1. Super carnem. Esay 40. 6.

1. First, to magnifie His mercy the more, that part is singled out, that seemeth farther removed; nay, that is indeed quite opposite to the Spirit of GOD here poured out. For, what is flesh? It is proclaimed (40. of Esay) It is grasse. And not gramen, but fœnum, that is grasse withering, and fit for the Sithe. Is that the worst? I would it were: But caro peccati, sinful flesh sets it farther off, yet. Upon sinful flesh, He should have poured somewhat else, than His Spirit.

So, two oppositions: 1 Flesh and Spirit absolutely in themselves. 2 Then, sinful flesh, and the Holy Spirit. All which commends His love the more, thus to combine things so much opposite. This first.

2. Super. Hos. 2. 15. Verse 33. John 4. 14.

And withal (that, which right now I touched) to shew the introduction to this conjunction of these so farre in opposition either to other, even Verbum caro factum, that made this symbolisme. By which, a gate of hope was opened to us (by His incarnation) in spem, of our inspiration, which this day came in rem. For, His flesh exalted to the right hand of God, remembred us, that were flesh of his flesh, and derived down this fountain of living water to it, saliens in vitam æternam; springing, and raising us with it, whence it came (for water will ever rise as high as the place from whence it came) that is, up to heaven, up to eternal life.

2. Super. Luke 3. 23. John 20. 22.

2. Super, upon it, Upon it, is without, on the outside of it. Had not fundam in, been better than fundam super: Into them, than upon them? Not a whit.

Indeed, both wayes, I finde the Spirit given. At CHRISTS baptism, the Dove came upon him. At His resurrection, insufflavit, He breathed into them. And so hath He parted His Sacraments: Baptism is effundam super, upon us, from without: the Holy Eucharist, that is comedite; that goeth in. Upon the matter, both come to one. If it be poured on, it yokes in, pierces to the very centre of the soul (as, in Baptism, sinne is washed thence, by it.) If it be breathed in, it is no sooner at the heart, but it works forth, out it comes again: Out at the nostrils in breath, out at the wrest in the beating of the pulse. So both (in effect) are one.

1. But it is Super here, for these reasons: First, that we may know, the graces of the Spirit, they are ἐξωθεν, from without. In us, that is, in our flesh, they grow not: neither they nor any good thing, else. And not only ἔξωθεν, from without; but Saint James his ἄνωθεν, too, from above, from the Father of lights. Both these are in Super: and but for these we might fall into a phansie, they grew within us, and sprung from us, which GOD knoweth) they do not. James 1. 17.

2. Another reason is, for that [upon] is the Proposition proper to initiation, into any new office. So is the manner, by some such outward ceremony upon, to initiate. By anointing, or pouring oyle upon. By induing [induemini] putting some robe or other ensigne upon. By imposition or laying hands, upon. All upon. Baptism (which is the Sacrament of our initiation) is therefore so done. So, the Dove came upon CHRIST. The tongues (here) upon these, to enter them, either, into their new offices. Verse 3.

A third (last but not least) to enure them to this Proposition super, which many can but evil brook. No super, no superiority they; all even, all equal; fellows and fellows. The right hands of fellowship, if you will; but not so much, as imposition of hands, super. For if super, then sub follows: if upon, then we under; if above, then we beneath. But no sub with some: submit neither head nor spirit to any. Yet, super Me, said CHRIST last year: and it may become any that became Him: it may well become super carnem. Super then must stand, and be stood upon: Confusion will come, if it be not. Gal. 2. 9.

2. Super omnem carnem. Psal. 147. 20.

Super carnem, super omnem carnem. Upon flesh, and upon all flesh. Not, some one: not Jewes flesh alone: In regard of whom, this omnem is here specially put in. For, they had in a manner ingrossed the Spirit before, by a non taliter omni. And yet, upon them too; for, upon their sonnes, and their daughters (as it followeth:) but upon them, now, no more than upon any other. This is a second prerogative of this Day. The first, effundam, that is. 1 Before, sparingly sprinkled; now, plentifully poured. 2 Now again, super omnem: Before, upon but some; now indifferently, upon all.

For so, when we say all, we mean, none is excluded, but now may have it, He hath put no difference betwen them and us (saith Saint Peter.) Non est distinctio (saith Saint Paul.) The partition is thrown down now. Go but to the letter of the Text, All flesh. 1 No Sex barren; upon sons and upon daughters: so either Sex. 2 No age: upon young men and upon old: The one, visions; the other, dreams. Acts 15. 9. Rom. 10. 12. Ephes. 2. 14.

dreames. 3 No condition: on ſervants, as well as ſonnes; on handmaids, no leſſe than daughters. 4 No Nation: for (if ye mark) the Spirit is poured twice: upon their ſonnes, in this; and again, upon His ſervants, in the next verſe. His ſervants, whether they be their ſonnes or not; whoſe ſonnes ſoever they be: though the ſonnes of them, that are (perhaps) ſtrangers to the firſt covenant, (And yet, even then, GOD had ever his ſervants, as well, out of that Nation, as in it.)

Acts 2. 5. Pſal. 76. 1. 67. 2

Now, in ſigne that thus [upon all fleſh,] they heard them ſpeak the tongues of all fleſh, even of every Nation under heaven. That, where before, a few in Jurie; now many, all the world over: No longer now, Notus in Judea Deus: His way ſhould be known upon earth, his ſaving health among all Nations.

Yet not promiſcue though, without all manner limitation. No: the Text limits it. I muſt again put you in mind, of the two pourings mentioned in it. One, the ſuper omnem carnem, in the 15. verſe; The other, the ſecond; ſuper ſervos meos, in the next (the 18.) And ſuper ſervos meos is the qualifying, of ſuper omnem carnem. Upon all fleſh (that is) all ſuch as will be my ſervants; as will give in their names to that end; as will call upon me: Quicunque invocaverit, ſo concludes Joel. As will believe and be baptized; ſo concludes Saint Peter, here, his Sermon. This gives them the capacity, makes them veſſels meet to receive this effuſion. By which, all Turks, Jewes, Infidels, are out of the omnem: and counterfeit Chriſtians, too; that profeſſe to ſerve Him, but all the world ſees whom they ſerve. And by this, much fleſh is cut off from omnem carnem. But ſo with this qualifying, upon all. For, any other, I know not. And this for the pouring.

II. The end wherto. Salvabitur.

And now, Utquid effuſio hæc? To what end, all this? For it is not to be imagined this pouring was caſual, as the turning over of a tub: nor, that the Spirit did run waſte: then it were, utquid perditio hæc? An end it had. And that follows now: And your ſonnes, &c. The Spirit is given to many ends; many middle, but one laſt; and that laſt in the laſt word, ſalvabitur; the end then of this pouring, is the ſalvation of mankind. Mankind was upon the point to periſh, and the Spirit was poured, as a precious balme or water, to recover and to ſave it. So, the end of all is (and mark it well) that the Spirit may ſave the fleſh, by the ſpiritualizing it. Not the fleſh deſtroy the Spirit, by carnalizing it. Not the fleſh weigh down the ſpirit, to earth, hither: but the ſpirit lift up the fleſh, thither, to heaven, whence it came.

Meant to that end. 1 Prophecie. 2 Prayer.

To this laſt, here are three middle conducing ends more. 1 Prophecie firſt: 2 Invocation laſt: both which are well here repreſented; three wayes: 1 In the tongues (the ſymbole of the HOLY GHOST, this day:) The one, Prophecie, being Gods tongue to us: the other, Invocation, being our tongue to GOD. 2 In the Spirit (both being acts of the Spirit, or breath:) Prophecie breathes it into us: Prayer breathes it out again. 3 In the pouring: Both pourings (after a ſort:) that, which Prophecie doth infuſe, pour in at the eare; Invocation doth refundere, or pour forth back again in prayer, out of the heart.

And beſide theſe two, a third there is, which is wedged in between them both, as ſtirring us, firſt and laſt, both to hear Prophecie more attentively, and to practice invocation more devoutly (which I wiſh may never depart out of our minds) the memory of the later day.

3. Memory of the latter day.

Thus they ſtand, ſubordinate. That men may be ſaved, they are to call upon the Name of the Lord (that at leaſt.) That they may ſo call to purpoſe, they are to be called on to it, and directed in it, by Prophetabunt. And that they might perform this, to all fleſh, they were to ſpeak with the tongues of all fleſh; which was the gift (here) of this day (without juſt cauſe ſcoffed at) but, tongues are but as the cask, wherein Prophecie (as the liquor) is contained: I will ſet by the empty cask, and deale with Prophetabunt, the liquour in it only.

1 Prophetabunt. Prov. 29. 28. Eſay 32. 14, 15

Prophecie ſtands firſt in the Text, Without which (ſaith Solomon) the people muſt needs periſh. That ſaying (of the Prophet Eſay) is much uſed by the Fathers; Tenebræ & palpatio, donec effunderetur ſuper nos ſpiritus de excelſo. All is dark: men do but grope, till the Spirit be poured on us from above, to give us light, by this gift of Prophecie.

This terme is kept by Joel, as well when he ſpeaks of GOD's ſervants (that is) of us, as when of them and their ſonnes: And ever after, in the New Teſtament, it is retained ſtill as an uſual terme, by the Apoſtle, to the Corinthians, Epheſians, Theſſalonians, all his Epiſtles through.

But not in the ſenſe of foretelling things to come. For, ſo can it be verified only upon Agabus, Saint Philips daughters, and upon Saint John: which are too few, for ſo great an effuſion, as this. That (indeed) was the chief ſenſe of it, in the Old Teſtament: And well, while CHRIST was yet to come. CHRIST He was the ſtop of all Prophetical predictions. Then, it had his place, that. But now, and ever ſince Chriſt is come, it hath in a manner left that ſeaſe (at leaſt, in a great part) and is not ſo taken in the New.

Rom. 10. 13, 14

The ſenſe, it is there taken in (to expound this place of Peter, by another of Paul, citing this very ſame Text of the Prophet, Rom. 10.) is & prophetabunt (here) by quomodo prædicabunt there, propheſying (that is preaching.) Whereby, after a new manner, we do propheſie (as it were) the meaning of ancient Propheſies: not make any new, but interpret the old, well; take off the veile of Moſes face. Finde CHRIST, finde the Myſteries of the Goſpel, under the types of the Law; apply the old prophecies, ſo as it may appeat, the ſpirit of prophecie is the teſtimony of JESUS: And, he the beſt Prophet now, that can do this, beſt.

Exod. 34. 33. 2 Cor. 3. 13. Revel. 19. 10.

Verſe 31. Pſal. 16. 10. Verſe 34.

This ſenſe, we prove by theſe in the Text. The ſpirit was poured on them, and they did propheſie. What did they? How propheſied Saint Peter? He foretold nothing: All he did, was, he applied this place of the Prophet, to this Feaſt. And a little beneath, the paſſage of the 16. Pſalm to Chriſts reſurre- reſurrection. And, after that, the place of another Pſalme to His aſcenſion. Pſal. 110. 1.

And the reſt (on whom it was poured too) how propheſied they? All (we read) they did, was loquebantur Magnalia Dei, they uttered forth the wonderful things of God, but foretold not any thing, that we finde. So as, to propheſie (now) is to ſearch out, and diſcloſe the hidden things of the Oracles of God, and not to tell before-hand, what ſhall after come to paſſe. Verſe 11.

But, what ſay you to Viſions and dreames here? Little: they pertain not to us. The Text ſaith it not. You remember the two pourings: 1 One upon their ſonnes: 2 The other upon his ſervants. This later, is it by which we come in. We are not of their ſonnes; we claim not by that, God make us His ſervants; for, by that word, we hold.

Now, in this later pouring, on his ſervants (which only concerns us) viſions and dreams are left out quite. If any pretend them now, we ſay with Jeremy (Cap. 23. Verſe) 28. Let a dream go for a dream, and let my word (ſaith the Lord) be ſpoken as my word: Quid palea ad triticum, What mingle you chaffe and wheat? We are to lay no point of Religion upon them, now: Propheeie, preaching is it, we to hold our ſelves unto now. As for viſions and dreams, tranſeant; let them go.

But then, for prophecy in this ſenſe of opening or interpreting Scriptures; is the ſpirit poured upon all fleſh, ſo? Is this of Joel a proclamation for liberty of preaching; that all, young and old, men-ſervants, ana maid ſervants, may fall to it? Nay: the ſhee-ſex, Saint Paul took order, for that betimes; cut them off, with his Nolo mulieres. But what for the reſt? may they? For, to this ſenſe hath this Scripture beene wreſted by the Enthuſiaſts of former ages; and ſtill is, by the Anabaptiſts now. And by miſtaking of it, way given to a foul error, as if all were let looſe, all might claim, and take upon them (forſooth) to propheſie. 1 Cor. 14. 34.

Nothing elſe this, but a malicious device of the Divel, to pour contempt upon this gift. For, (indeed) bring it to this once, and what was this day falſly ſurmiſed, will then be juſtly affirmed, muſto pleni (or cerebro vacui, whether you will; but muſto pleni) drunken Prophets then, indeed; howbeit not with wine (as Eſay ſaith) but with another as heady a humour, and that doth intoxicate the brain as much as any muſte or new wine: Even of ſelf-conceited ignorance, whereof the world grows too full. But it was no part of Joels meaning, nor Saint Peters neither, to give way to this phrenſie. Eſay 1. 22.

No? it it not plain? the Spirit is poured upon all fleſh. True, but not upon all, to propheſie though. The Text warrants no ſuch thing. In the one place it is: And, your ſonnes ſhall: In the other, And my ſervants ſhall: But, neither is it, all their ſonnes: nor all his ſervants ſhall. Neither (indeed) can it be. There muſt be ſome ſonnes, and ſome ſervants, to propheſie too: to whom theſe Prophets may be ſent: to whom this propheſie may come. All fleſh may not be cut out into tongues; ſome left for eares: ſome auditors needs. Elſe a Cyclopian Church will grow upon us, where all were ſpeakers, no body heard another. Ἀκόσει ἀδεὶς ἀδὲν ἀκόσῃ.

How then, ſhall the ſpirit be poured upon all fleſh? well enough. The Spirit of propheeie, is not all Gods ſpirit; he hath more beſide. If the ſpirit or grace of propheeie upon ſome: the ſpirit of grace and prayer (in Zachary) upon the reſt. So, between them both, the ſpirit will be upon all fleſh, and the propoſition hold true: Prophetabunt muſt not make us forget invocaverit. All the ſpirit goes not away in propheſying; ſome left for that too: and there is the Quicunque (Quicunque invocaverit) and no where elſe. Zach. 12. 10.

But if Saint Peter will not ſerve, Saint Paul ſhall: He is plain, Ye may all propheſie one by one: What, the ſkippers of Holland and all? I trow not. But (all) there, is plain. All, that is, all the Prophets. And, I wiſh, with all my heart (as did Moſes) that all Gods people were Prophets: but till they be ſo, I wiſh they may not propheſie; no more would Moſes neither. Now, in the ſame Epiſtle, Saint Paul holds it for a great abſurdity, to hold, all are Prophets. With a kind of indignation he takes it, What are all Prophets? No more than all Apoſtles; as much t'one as t'other. Then if all be not Prophets; all may not Propheſie (ſure.) For, with the Apoſtle in the ſame place, the operation (that is, the act of propheſying) the adminiſtration (that is, the office or calling) and the grace (that is, the enabling gift) theſe three, are ever to go together. No act in the Church lawfully done, without them all. Then the Apoſtles [you all may] is, all you may that have the gift. 1 Cor. 14. 31. Num. 11. 29. 1 Cor. 12. 29.

And not, you that have it neither (the gift) unleſſe you have the calling too: For, as God ſent gifts, ſo He gave men alſo, ſome Apoſtle, ſome Prophets. Men for gifts; as well, as gifts for men. Miſit, in Chriſt, as well as unxit (laſt year.) And, in His ſervants, vocavit, as well as Talenta dedit. Not to be parted, theſe. 1 Cor. 12. 28. Matth. 25. 14.

I conclude then. Et prophetabunt: but ſuch as have been at the door of the Tabernacle, as have been the ſonnes of the Prophets; men ſet apart for that end. And yet even they alſo, ſo as they take not themſelves at liberty, to propheſie whatſoever takes them in the tongue; the dreams of their own heads, or the viſions of their own hearts; but remember their ſuper, and know, there be ſpirits alſo, to whom their ſpirits be ſubject. So much for the ſeventeenth and eighteenth Verſes. 1 Cor. 14. 32.

The meane between both.
The later day.

But how now come we thus ſuddenly, to the ſignes of the later day, and to the day it ſelf? For they follow cloſe (you ſee.) It is ſomewhat ſtrange, that from Et prophetabunt, he is ſtraight at Doomsday, without more ado.

The reaſons which I finde, the Fathers render of it, are theſe: Firſt, the cloſe joyning of them, is to meet with another dream that hath troubled the Church, much. And that is, that it may be, there will be another pouring yet, after this, and more Prophets riſe ſtill. Every otherwhile, ſome ſuch upſtart ſpirits there are, would fain make us ſo believe. Here is a diſcharge for them.

No (ſaith Joel) look for no more ſuch dayes as this, after this: Therefore to this day, he joynes immedimediatly; from this day, He goes presently to the later day, (as if He said, you have all you shall have.) When this pouring hath run so farre as it will, then cometh the end; when this is done, the world is done; no new spirit, no new effusion; this is the last. From CHRISTS departure, till His return again; from this day of Pentecost (a great day and a notable) till the last great and notable day of all, between these two dayes, no more such day. Therefore, in the beginning of the Text, He called them the last dayes, because no dayes to come after them. No pouring to be looked for from this first day, of those last. No other but this, till dies novissimus novissimorum, the very last day of all; till He pour down fire to consume all flesh, that, by the fire this day kindled by these fiery tongues, shall not be brought to know Him, and call upon His Name.

A second is, being to speak by and by of salvabitur, that we should be saved, He would let us see, what it is we should be saved from. That helpeth much, to make us esteem of our saving. Saved then from what? From blood, and fire, and the smolder of smoke; that is, from the heavy signes here: And from that (which is after these, and beyond all these farre the great and terrible day of the Lord. This sight of unde, from whence, will make us apprize our saving at a higher rate, and think it worth our care, then, in that day to be saved.

And last, it is set here, per modum stimuli, to quicken us, Ut scientes terrorem hunc, saith Saint 1 Cor. 5. 11. Paul, that entering into a sad and sober consideration of it, and the terror of it, we might stir up our selves by it, to prepare for it. And set it is between both, to dispose us the better to both. To that which is past (& prophetabunt) to awake our attention to that: and to that which follows (invocaverit) to kindle our devotion in that; and so by both, to make sure our salvation.

The day of the Lord, the Prophet calls it (Dies Domini,) as it were opposing it, to dies servi, to our dayes here. As if he said, these are your dayes, and you use them (indeed) as if they were your own. You pour out your selves into all riot; and know no other pouring out but that: you see not any great use of prophesying; think it might well enough be spared: you speak your pleasures of it, and say, musto pleni, or to like effect, when you list; These are your dayes. But, know this, when your's are done, GOD hath His day too, and His day will come at last; and it will come terribly when it comes.

Jer. 5 31. When that day comes, how then? Quid fiet in novissimo, the Prophets ordinary question, What will ye do at the last? How will you be saved, in die illo, in that Day?

We speak sometime of great dayes here: alas, small in respect of this. There is matter of fear sometime in these of ours: Nothing to the terror of this: Great it is, and notable, as much for the fear, as for any thing else in it. This, a terrible one indeed, & quis poterit sustinere? who can abide it? saith Joel in this very chapter. Look to it then. On whom He poureth not His Spirit here, on them He will pour somewhat else there, even the Phials of his wrath: possibly before, some; but then all, certainly.

And that you may not only hear of this day, but see somewhat to put you in mind of it, Ecce Signa: terrible signes shall come upon earth, sword and fire: from the sword pouring out of blood; from fire, a choaking vapour of smoke, or (as the Hebrew is) a pillar of smoke: which then doth palmizare, goeth up straight like a pillar or a palm-tree, when the fire increaseth more and more: for when It abateth, it boweth the head and decayeth; which this shall never do.

Nay farther, wonders in heaven. For these tongues of heaven thus despised, heaven shall shew it self displeased, too; the lights of heaven (as it were) for a time put out, for contempt of the heavenly light, this day kindled. The Sunne dark, as if he hid his face: the Moone red as blood, as if she blushed, at our great want of regard, in this, a point so nearly concerning us.

For (indeed) these Eclipses, though they have their causes in nature, as the raine-bow also hath: Yet, what hinders, but as the rain-bow, so they may be signes too, and have their meaning in Scripture, assigned; and even this meaning here? This I see, that all flesh are smitten with a kind of horror and heavinesse, when they happen to fall out: as if they portended somewhat, as if that they portended, were not good: for dies atri, they have been and are reckoned, all the world over.

Matth. 23. 8. But these are but the beginnings of evils, scarce the dawning of that day: But, when the day it self cometh, the great day, then it will pour down, and who (saith Joel) may abide it? A fair Item for them, that despise Prophecies; and so doing, make void the Counsel of GOD, against their own souls.

I have much marvailed, why on this Sunday (Whit-Sunday, as we call it) the day of the White Sun, the Prophet should present the Black Sun thus, unto us. But the Prophet did nothing, but as inspired by the HOLY GHOST: which makes me think, he thought the fire of that day, would make the fire of this burn the clearer: and, that pouring down make this pouring passe the readier: that he thought that day, a good meditation for this, and for such I commend it to you, and so leave it: And come to invocaverit, the only means left us now, to escape it.

I dare not end with Prophetabunt, or with this; I dare not omit, but joyn invocaverit to them.
3. For what? From Prophetabunt, come we to Salvabitur straight, without any medium between? No,
Quomodo invocaverit. we must take Invocaverit in our way: no passing to salvation, but by and through it. For what, is the pouring of the spirit, to end in preaching; and preaching to end in it self (as it doth with us, a circle of preaching, and in effect nothing else) but poure in prophesying enough, and then all is safe? No: there is another yet, as needful, nay more needful to be called on (as the current of our Age runs) and that is, Calling on the Name of the Lord.

This, it grieveth me to see, how light it is set; nay, to see how busie the Divel hath been, to pour contempt on it, to bring it in disgrace with disgraceful termes: to make nothing of Divine Service, as if it might be well spared, and invocaverit (here) be stricken out.

But mark this Text well, and this invocation we make so slight account of, sticks close, is so locked fast to Salvabitur: closer and faster, than we are aware of.

Two errors there be, and I wish them reformed: One, as if prophesying were all we had to do, we might dispense with invocation, let it go, leave it to the Queere. That is an error: Prophesying is not all; Invocaverit is to come in too: we to joyn them, and joyntly to observe them, to make a conscience of both: It is the Oratory of prayer poured out of our hearts, shall save us, no lesse than the Oratory of preaching, poured in at our eares. 1.

The other is, of them that do not wholly reject it, yet so depresse it, as if incomparison of prophesying, it were little worth. Yet (we see) by the frame of this Text, it is the higher end: the calling on us by prophecie, is but that we should call on the Name of the LORD. All prophesying, all preaching, is but to this end. And indeed Prophecie is but gratia gratis data: and (ever) gratis data is for gratum faciens; a part and a special part whereof is invocation. There is then, as a conscience to be made of both; so a like conscience to be made of both: not to set up the one, and magnifie it, and to turn our back on the other, and vilifie it. For, howsoever we give good words of invocation, yet what our conceit is, our deeds shew. 2.

I love not to dash one religious duty against another; or (as it were) to send challenges between them. But, as much as the Text saith, so much may I say: and that is, that it hath three special prerogatives, by this verse of the Prophet.

First, it is effundam (ours) properly; and effundam spiritum meum, the pouring out of our spirit (to answer that of GOD's Spirit in the Text.) Prophetabunt is not ours, none of our act, but the act of another. The streame of our times tends all to this. To make Religion nothing, but an auricular profession, a matter of ease, a meer sedentary thing: and our selves, meerly passive in it; sit still, and hear a Sermon, and two Anthems, and be saved: as if, by the act of the Queere, or of the Preacher, we should so be (for, these be their acts) and we do nothing our selves, but sit and suffer: without so much as any thing done by us, any effundam on our parts at all; not so much as this, of calling on the Name of the Lord.

2. The second: This hath the quicunque. We would fain have it, quicunque prophetiam audiverit, he that hears so many Sermons a week, cannot choose but be saved: But it will not be. No: here stand we preaching, and hearing Sermons; and neither they that hear prophesying, nay, nor they that prophesie themselves, can make a quicunque of either. Witnesse, Domine, in nomine tuo prophetavimus, and LORD thou hast preached in our streets, and yet it would do them no good: Nescio vos, was their answer for all that. Matth. 7. 22. Luke 13. 26.

And yet how fain would some be a prophesying? It would not save them, though they were: and is it not a preposterous desire? we love to meddle with that pertains not to us, and will do us no good: that, which is our duty, and would do us good, that care we not for.

Tongues were given for prophecie. True: but, no quicunque there, for all that: but to whom none are given to prophecie, to them yet are there given to invocate. And there comes it in, the quicunque lies there; De Spiritu meo super omnem carnem, here it comes in; at invocation, not at the other. Let it suffice; it is not quicunque prophetaverit here, Quicunque invocaverit it is. The Prophet saith it, the Apostles say it both, πας ὃς ἂν: Peter, here; Paul, Rom. 10. 13.

Last, this is sure; invocaverit is ἐχόμενον σωτηρίας, it stands neerest, it joynes closest to salvabitur: Both one breath, one sentence: the words touch, there is nothing between them. Salvabitur is not joyned hard to prophetabunt; it is removed farther off. To invocaverit it is, a degree nearer at least, Nay, the very next of all.

The Text shews this (in a sort) but the thing it self more: for when all comes to all, when we are even at last cast, salvabitur or no salvabitur, then, as if there were some special vertue in invocaverit, we are called upon, to use a few words or signes to this end, and so sent out of the world with invocaverit in our mouths. Dying, we call upon men for it; living, we suffer them to neglect it. It was not for nothing, it stands so close, it even touches salvation: It is (we see) the very immediate act next before it.

And yet I would not leave you in any error concerning it: To end this point; shall invocaverit serve then? needs there nothing but it? no faith, no life? Saint Paul answers this home: He is direct (Rom. 10.) How can they call upon him unlesse they believe? So, invocation presupposeth faith. And as peremptory he is, 2 Tim. 2. Let every one that calleth on (nay, that but nameth) the name of the Lord, depart from iniquity: so, it presupposeth life too. For, if we incline to wickednesse in our hearts, God will not hear us. No invocation (that) not truly so called; a provocation rather. But put these two, faith and recedit ab iniquitate to it, and so, who so calleth upon him, I will put him in good sureties, one Prophet, and two Apostles, both to assure him, he shall be saved. Rom. 10. 14. 2 Tim. 2. 19. Psal. 66. 18.

And that is it, we all desire, to be saved. Saved, indefinitely. Apply it to any dangers, not in the Day of the Lord only, but even in this our Day: For, some terrible dayes we have even here. I will set you of one; The signes here tell down, bring it to my mind: A day we were saved from (the Day of the Powder-treason) which may seeme here in a sort to be described, blood and fire, and the vapour or smoke: a terrible day sure, but nothing to the Day of the Lord. 4. Salvabitur.

From that we were saved: but we all stand in danger, we all need saving, from this. When this day comes, another manner of fire, another manner of smoke. That fire never burnt; that smoke never roſe: but, this fire ſhall burn and never be quenched; this ſmoke ſhall not vaniſh, but aſcend for ever. I ſay no more, but, in that, in this, in all, Qui invocaverit, ſalvus erit: Invocation rightly uſed, is the way to be ſafe.

Revel. 19. 3.

This then I commend to you. And of all invocations, that which King David doth commend moſt, and betake himſelf to, as the moſt effectual and ſureſt of all: and that is, Accipiam calicem ſalutaris, & nomen Domini invocabo: To call on his Name, with the cup of ſalvation taken in our hands. No invocation, to that. That, I may be bold to adde (which is all that can be added) Quicunque calicem ſalutaris accipiens, nomen Domini invocaverit, ſalvus erit. Another effundam yet, this.

1. Why, what vertue is there in the taking it, to help invocation? A double. For whether we reſpect our ſins, they haxe a voice, a cry, and an aſcending cry, in Scripture aſſigned them, they invocate too. they call for ſomewhat; even for ſome fearful judgement to be poured down on us: and I doubt, our own voices are not ſtrong enough, to be heard above theirs.

But blood, that alſo hath a voice: eſpecially innocent blood, the blood of Abel, that cries loud in GOD's ears: but nothing ſo loud as the blood whereof this cup of bleſſing is the communion; the voice of it will be heard above all: the cry of it will down any cry elſe. And, as it cries higher: ſo it differs in this, that it cries in a far other key; for far better things than that of Abel: not for revenge, but for remiſſion of ſins; for that, whereof it is it ſelf the price and purchaſe, for our ſalvation in that great and terrible day of the Lord, when nothing elſe will ſave us, and when it will moſt import us; when if we had the whole world to give, we would give it for theſe four ſyllables, ſalvabitur, ſhall be ſaved.

Heb. 12. 24.

2. But it was not ſo much for ſin, David took this cup; as to yield God thanks for all his benefits. In that caſe alſo, there is ſpecial uſe of it: and both fit us. As the former, of drowning of our ſins cry; ſo this alſo. For, to this end, are we here now met to render publickly and in ſolemne manner, our thanksgiving, for His great favour this day vouchſafed us, in pouring out His Spirit; and with it, His ſaving health upon all fleſh, all that call upon him: then, to take place, when we ſhall have ſpecial uſe of it, in the Great Day, the Day of the Lord. And very agreeable it is, per hunc ſanguinem, pro hoc Spiritu, for the pouring out of this his Spirit, to render Him thanks with the blood, that was poured out to procure it [And this is our laſt effundam, and a real effundam too:] For this effuſion, of both, the one and of the other, and for the hope of our ſalvation, the work both of the one, and of the other.

To the final attainment whereof, by His holy word of Prophecie, by calling on his Name, by this Sacrament of His blood poured out, and of His Spirit poured out with it, He brings us, &c.

SERMON PREACHED

BEFORE THE

Kings Majesty,

At GREENWICH,

On the XVI. of May, A. D. MDCXIX.

being WHIT-SUNDAY.

ACTS, Chap. X. Ver. XXXIV, XXXV.

Aperiens autem Petrus os suum, dixit: In veritate comperi, quia non est personarum acceptor Deus:
Sed in omni gente, qui timet Eum, et operatur justitiam, acceptus est illi.

Then Peter opened his mouth, and said: Of a truth I perceive, that God is no accepter of persons:
But in every Nation he that feareth Him, and worketh righteousnesse, is accepted with Him.

I Forgot not, that we celebrate, to day, the coming of the Holy Ghost: and I go not from it. You shall find in the next Chapter, at the fifteenth, that, to this Text, belongeth a Coming of the Holy Ghost.

For, at the uttering of these very words, as Saint Peter began to speak them, the Holy Ghost fell upon all that heard them. It (is indeed) the second solemne coming of the Holy Ghost. That, in the second chapter, was the first; and this, the second that ever was.

Of which twain, this is the Coming that comes home to us: and that, two wayes: 1 One, in respect of the Parties, on whom: 2 The other, in respect of the Time, when. The Parties: For, those, whom the Holy Ghost came on before, were Gentiles indeed, but yet Proselytes, that is, half Jewes: Out of every Nation under heaven; but that came to Jerusalem to worship: and the same was the case of the Eunuch in the eighth Chapter, and not a right Gentile among them. But here now, are a sort of very Gentiles indeed, in puris naturalibus, such as we and our Fathers were: No Proselytes, ever. This Centurion, the Ante-signanus, the standard-bearer to us, and to all that were meere Heathen men indeed; and this coming, our coming properly. Never, in kinde; never, to very Gentiles indeed, till now. Acts 8. 17.

Verſe 1. It is well ſorted (you ſee:) On the Jewes and Proſelytes, at Jeruſalem, their City: On the Gentiles, at Cæſarea, Cæſars City, and of the Cities in Paleſtine, fitting the Gentiles beſt.

1. Well obſerved it is about the calling of the Gentiles, That that, in the Old, and this in the New Teſtament, they came (both) from one place; from Joppe, both. Thence, looſed Jonas to Ninive: Thence, ſet out Peter to Cæſarea.

Jon. 1. 3. Verſe 5.

2. Secondly: that, Cæſarea is the Ninive (as it were) of the New Teſtament. Ninive, was the City of the great King of the Gentiles, at that time: Cæſarea Cæſars City, as great a King over the Gentiles, as this; from whom went a commandment, that the world ſhould be taxed.

Eſay 36. 13. Luke 2. 1.

3. Thirdly: that, was performed, by Jonas; this by Bar-jonas: So, is Saint Peter called by our Saviour, when he made his confeſſion, that CHRIST was the Sonne of GOD: and that was at Cæſarea. Where, what he confeſſed, then, he comes to preach, now. That of Jonas, an Omen (as it were) of this (here) of Saint Peter. Jonas and Bar-jonas from Joppe they went both: Both from one place; both to one end; both, to convert the Gentiles; to ſhew, that GOD had given them alſo repentance to life.

Mat. 16. 17, 13. Acts 11. 18.

Jonas 3. 4. Alway, this, the better. For Jonas at Ninive, he ends with Ninive ſhall be deſtroyed. Bar-jonas, at Cæſarea, with Acceptus eſt illi: that, the end of the Text. Or, if you will go to the end of the Sermon, the end is, ſhall obtain remiſſion of ſins, as good as it, every way.

Verſe 43. 2.

2. So the Parties fit well: The Time, as well. The Holy Ghoſt here came upon them, as they were at a Sermon, even as we now are. Peter opened his mouth; they ſtood attentive; the HOLY GHOST came down. That, to be here, is a diſpoſition to receive the HOLY GHOST. And, it may pleaſe GOD, the like may befal us, being occupied now, as they then were.

The Summe. Of that Sermon, theſe are the firſt words. Of which words, what can be ſaid more to their praiſe, than that which the Angel ſaith of them, the next Chapter at the fourteenth verſe? That Peter being ſent for, ſhould at his coming, ſpeak words to Cornelius, by which both he, and his houſhold ſhould be ſaved. Thoſe words, the Angel there ſpake of, that Peter ſhould ſpeak, are theſe, I have read: GOD of his goodneſſe ſend them the ſame effect.

In veritate comperi, ſhews, they are a compertum eſt, and that is authentical with a Teſte: So is this Teſte Cornelio & tota familia; witneſſe he and his whole family and friends. Such are moſt praiſed; for they are animata exemplo, have a ſoul put into them by example. Specially, when they be ſo reduced to a ſingular, as that ſingular afterward is reduced to a general: Both which are in this. Beſt preaching of a Text, when the Commentary ſtands before it; as here: For, what is in the Text propounded, was fulfilled in the auditory, yer they went.

As fulfilled in them in particular, ſo extended to all in general: for it hath an omni gente put to it: that nothing was done to him there, but the ſame ſhall be done to any other. Any, of any Nation, that ſhall be found in like ſort diſpoſed, as (we find) he was: that is, whoſe prayers and almes ſhall come up into remembrance before God. God ſhall not be wanting to them, but provide them of farther means requiſite to their ſalvation.

It is a thing well befitting the providence of God; all His creatures, when he hath made them, to ſee them provided of ſuch things, as are needful for them. As He doth (ſaith the Pſalme) for the young ravens; (ſaith the Goſpel) for the poor ſparrows valued, two of them, at a farthing: Naturas rerum minimarum non deſtituit DEUS, the ſmalleſt things that be, he leaves them not deſtitute?

Pſal. 147. 9. Matth. 10. 29.

If not them, His half-farthing creatures, much leſſe men (as He is pleaſed to ſpeak with the leaſt) more worth than many ſparrows. So, God argues with Jonas; if he made ſuch ado for his gourd, which ſprung up in one night, and withered in another, ſhould not God ſpare Ninive, wherein there was ſo many thouſands, that knew not their right hand from their left, Gentiles though they were.

Jon. 4. 10, 11.

And, if his care extend to all men, and He make His raine to fall, and his Sunne to ſhine upon the evil and unkind, ſhall He not bring the raine of his Word, (as Moſes calls it, Deut. 32.) to fall on them, and make His Sun of righteouſneſſe (as Malachi calls it) to ariſe upon them that fear him? A view whereof we may take in this family here: even of the Sun of righteouſneſſe, the White Sun, riſing upon one that feared God, with all his houſhold, gave much almes, and prayed to God daily.

Matth. 5. 45. Deut. 32. 2. Mal. 4. 2.

Written by him, this: but not written for him only, that it was Whit-ſunday with him; but for us alſo, to whom it ſhall likewiſe be, if we be de gente Corneliâ, expreſſe and follow him in that, which was accepted of him.

The Diviſion. Two points we have to proceed on: 1 The firſt, here is a point newly perceived by Saint Peter. 2 The ſecond, What that was. A point newly perceived in theſe, 1 In veritate comperi, of a truth I perceive. 2 What the point was in theſe, that in every Nation, &c.

I. In that Saint Peter ſaith, Truly I now perceive, as if before he had not, (as indeed he had not: For, he was in the mind before, that but in unâ gente; but now he perceives, that in omni gente is the truer tenet:) That, even to Saint Peter, there were ſome things incomperta, ſomething not perceived at firſt, that came to be perceived after.

II. Then, an inſtance: What that was. And it was, about GODS accepting; Both wayes: Privativè, what God accepts not; Poſitivè, what He accepts. Accepts not perſons, that is once: But accepts of ſuch as fear him, and work righteouſneſſe, of what Nation ſoever (be he an Italian;) of what condition ſoever (be he a Centurion;) All is one.

Of which two, the one [fear] is an affection within, of the heart. The other [worketh righteouſneſſe] is an action without, of the hand, Cornelius's heart, and Cornelius's hand: theſe they be. Whence we ſhall learn three points more: 1 One, how we may be accepted to God, if we be, as Cornelius here was; and I would, we ſo were: 2 The other, that, when all is done, all is but accepting though. Except He could, to our fear and works both, and ſo, is not bound; but accept He will though, of His grace and goodneſſe, and (as it follows immediately the next verſe) for His words ſake which he ſent, preaching peace, by Jeſus, who is Lord over all.

The laſt, whereunto accepted: and that (as appeareth in the XLVII. verſe) was to the Sacrament, and by it, to the remiſſion of ſins, and to the receiving the Holy Ghoſt in a more ample meaſure. Opus diei, the proper of this Day. III.

OF a truth I perceive. He that ſaith, Of a truth I perceive now, in effect (as it were) ſaith before, He did not ſo. For, I perceive now, is the ſpeech of one that is come to perceiving of that, which before he perceived not. I. A point new perceived.

On this we pitch firſt. That ſo great an Apoſtle, for all Tu es Petrus, and Rogavi pro te, and Paſce oves meas, doth ingenuouſly confeſſe, that (now) he had found that, which till now he had not. For, ſince the beginning of the Chapter, he had not. So that all his comperi's were not yet come in. By like, his chaire was not yet made, or he had not yet taken hanſel of it. But how it comes to paſſe after; at Rome, I know not: at Cæſarea, we ſee, it was not ſo. And they, that in the next Chapter, called him coram, to anſwer this Sermon: Sure they ſeeme (as then) not to have been fully perſwaded, that S. Peter could perceive all things, and not miſſe in any. Comperi. Matth. 16 18. Luke 22. 32. John 21. 16. Chap. 11. 2.

Job though in miſery, yet in ſcorn ſuith to ſome in his time, Indeed you, you are the only men, you perceive all. Moſes did not ſo: there was a caſe, wherein he was neſciens quid de ea facere deberet, Moſes knew not what he ſhould do, Numb. 15. There was a caſe, whereof Eliſha was fain to ſay, & dominus non nunciavit mihi; God had not ſhewed it him (2 Reg. 4.) But when God did, might not Moſes and he both have ſaid, as Peter doth here, Of a truth, before I did not, but now I do perceive? Yea, but this is Old Teſtament. Job 12. 2. Numb. 15. 34. 2 Kings 4. 27.

And, was it not in the New? There Caiaphas he ſaith, Tuſh, you perceive nothing: He perceived all. But Cephas he ſuith, he perceived not all: For, here he now ſaith, he perceiveth ſomething, and all his comperi's came not at once. So ſaith Peter; and ſo Paul, All our knowledge is in part, and ſo is all our propheſying too, and put himſelf in the number. Job 11. 49. 1 Cor. 13. 9.

Of a truth then we perceive, Saint Peter comes nothing near his Succeſſor (that would be.) He perceives all that is to be perceived: at once: can have nothing added to his knowledge, from the firſt inſtant, he is ſet down in Cathedrâ; can have no new comperi; his comperi's come in all together; gets Caiaphas's knowledge by ſitting in Cephas's chaire.

(They begin to ſcorne this themſelves, now, and pray him to get a good General Councel about him, and he ſhall perceive things never the worſe.)

But, it is not this only, they differ in: In ſomething beſide. For, Peter took Cornelius up from the ground; His Succeſſor let Cornelius's Lord and Maſter, lye ſtill hardly. Not a Captain of Cæſarea, he; but even Cæſar himſelf. Of a truth we may perceive nothing like Cephas in this neither. Verſe 26.

The woman at the Well-ſide, ſaid, the Meſſias when he comes he will tell us all. Yet, when he came, he told them not all at once. Even to Tu es Petrus, He ſaid Tu neſcis modo, ſcies autem poſt hæc, and of thoſe Poſt hæc's, this here was one. As they ſhould be able to bear (for, all, they were not then able:) And as it ſhould be for them; for, it was not for them to know all, not the times and the ſeaſons, and ſuch other things as the Father had put in his own power. John 4. 25. John 13. 7. John 16. 12. Acts 1. 7.

I ſpeak it for this, that even ſome, that are farre enough from Rome, yet with their new perſpective, they think, they perceive all. GODS ſecret decrees, the number and order of them clearly; are indeed too bold, and too buſie with them. Luther ſaid well, that every one of us hath by nature a Pope in his belly, and thinks he perceives great matters. Even they, that beleeve it not of Rome, are eaſily brought to believe it of themſelves. And out they come with their Comperi's, with their great confidence propound them. But, Comperi is one thing: but in veritate comperi, another comperi, they may ſay, and that may be doubted of: but, but in veritate comperi, that is it.

We may take up the Text a point further. In veritate comperi will bear two ſenſes. 1 One I perceive that, I did not, before: 2 The other, I perceive that, the contrary whereof, I did conceive before. Not to perceive, is but to be ignorant: But Saint Peter, in this, had not only been ignorant, but had poſitively held the quite contrary; ad oppoſitum, Quod non ex omni gente at any hand. At the fourteenth verſe before, for the Jewiſh meats (we ſee) he conteſts with God: Not I Lord; No heathenish meat; I never eat any. And at the twenty eighth, no leſſe unlawful to eat with Heathen men.

Ignorance is but privative: this; is poſitive, and ſo, an error. An error in the great Myſtery of godlineſſe, a part whereof was preached unto the Gentiles; that they alſo had their part in Chriſt. And, this is not his error alone: The Apoſtles and Brethren ſeeme to have been in the ſame; they convented him for his new Comperi, and he was fain to anſwer for it. That for the time, generally it was (this error;) and (for ought we know) Saint Stephen, that was ſtoned before this, departed the world, in the opinion of In unâ, not omni gente: for, then (ſure) this truth was not perceived, not received publickly.

Then

Then not every error repugnant to Gods election. Why every error, more than every ſinne? God is able to pardon and not to impute error in opinion, as well as error in practice; and nonne errant omnes qui operantur malum (ſaith Solomon) Do not all erre that do evil? yes ſure. Did not the High Prieſt offer, as well for the errors, as for the tranſgreſſions of the people? And is not Chriſt made to us, by God, Wiſdome, againſt the one, as well as righteouſneſſe againſt the other? It was Saint Peters caſe here.

Prov. 14. 22. Levit. 5. 15. 1 Cor. 1. 30.

This only we are to look to; that with Saint Peter, we be not wilful, if there come a clear comperi: but as ready to relent in the one, as to repent of the other. That, when we be ſhewed our error, we open our eyes to perceive it; and when we perceive it with Saint Pettr here, we open our mouths to confeſſe it. And that we do it with an open mouth, and not between the teeth, but acknowledge it plainly, it was otherwiſe than we thought. I verily thought (ſaith Saint Paul) I ought to do, that which now, all the world ſhould not make me to do. This is Saint Pauls; I now comprehend, or rather am comprehended (for καταλαμβάνομαι will bear both) of which before I could not. This is Saint Peters retractation. Conclude then, if we happen to be in ſome points otherwiſe minded, God will bring us to the knowledge, even of them. Only in thoſe whereto we are come, and whereof we are agreed on all ſides, that we proceed by one rule, make a conſcience of the practice of ſuch truths, as we agree of; and thoſe we do not, ſhall ſoone be revealed unto us, and we ſhall ſay even of them, In veritate comperi.

Acts 26. 9. Phil. 3. 12.

II.

What that Point is Privative.

1 God is no accepter of perſons

What is meant by perſons.

1 Sam. 16. 6.

What was this, that Saint Peter formerly had not, but now did perceive? That God is no accepter of perſons. Let us take with us, what is meant by Perſons. For, he that feareth God is a perſon; Cornelius was a perſon; ſo were all the perſons in his houſhold. The word in all the three tongues, is taken as we take it, when we ſet perſonal againſt Real, oppoſe the cauſe to the perſon: under it comprehending whatſoever is beſide the matter or cauſe. The Greek and Hebrew properly ſignifie the face; that (we know) ſhews it ſelf firſt, and if it ſhew it ſelf well, is muta commendatio, carries us, though it ſay never a word; as in Eliab, the goodlineſſe of his perſon moved even Samuel. Under the face then, we underſtand, (as I may ſay, and as we uſe to call it in apparel) the facing: under the perſon, all by-reſpects that do perſonate, attire or maſk any, to make him perſonable; ſuch as are the Countrey, Condition, Birth, Riches, Honour, and the like. And this perſon thus taken, of a truth we daily perceive, that in omni gente men accept of this, and in a manner, of nothing elſe but this: all goes by it. Well, with God, it is otherwiſe, and with men it ſhould be: God accepts them not, nor of any men, for them. This is the comperi.

Deut. 10. 17. Job 34. 19. 1 Sam. 16. 7. 2 Chron. 19. 7.

And is this it? Why, this was no news. Was Peter ignorant of this? It is not poſſible; I will never believe, but he had read the five books of Moſes: why there it is expreſly ſet down (Deut. 10.) totidem verbis. Why, by the very light of nature Elihu ſaw it, and ſet it down too, Job 34. No not the perſon of Princes. In Samuels choiſe of David, there it is, 1 Sam. 16. And King Jehoſaphat gave it in his charge. 2 Chron. 19. and in other places beſide: and how could he but know this?

You will ſay: Saint Peter knew it before; but not with a comperi, as now he doth. And (indeed) many things we know, by book, by ſpeculation (as we ſay) and in groſſe, which when we come to the particular experience of, we uſe to ſay, yea, I know it indeed, as if we had not known it, at leaſt not ſo known it before. The experimental knowledge, is the true comperi in veritate, when all is done. Was this it?

No: for, had he not experience of this, and lay away his book? Have not all experience daily? That God, in dealing his gifts of nature: Outward, Beauty, Stature, Strength, Activeneſſe: inward, Wit to apprehend, Memory to retain, Judgement to diſcern, Speech to deliver: that He puts no difference, but without all reſpect of perſons, beſtows them on the child of the mean, as ſoon, as of the mighty? So is it in wealth and worldly preferment, He lifts the poor out of the duſt; Nay (you will bear with it, it is the Holy Ghoſts own terme) the dunghil, to ſet him with Princes. So is it, in his judgements, which light as heavie, yea more heavie otherwhile, on the great, than on the ſmall; and ſhew that that way and every way, there is with him no reſpect of perſons. And, no man hath better experience of this, than he that ſpake it, than Peter himſelf, that without any reſpect, of a poor Fiſher-man, was accepted to be an Apoſtle, the chief of the Apoſtles. Saint Paul ſaith well: What they were in times paſt, it makes no matter, God accepts no mans perſon: This they are now.

Psal. 113 7. Gal. 2. 2. Gal. 2. 6.

What ſhall we ſay then? That, though he could not but know the general truth of this; yet was he once of the mind, that this general truth might admit of ſome exceptions; one at the leaſt. Not, of perſons, true: but Nations are not Perſons; it held not in them. Of one Nation, God accepted before others, and that Nation was the Jewes. You only have I known of all the Nations of the earth (ſaith God in Amos.) And Non taliter fecit omni Nationi: which non taliter, they took to be of the nature of an entaile, to Abrahams ſeed; that God was tied to them, and ſo to accept of In unâ gente, before and more than of all the reſt.

Amos 3. 2. Psal. 148. 20.

This had runne in Saint Peters head, and more than this. But now, here comes a new Comperi: He perceives, he was wrong: And if you aske, how he perceived it? By relation of Cornelius's viſion of the Angel; and by conferring it with his own. He ſaw, his viſion was now come to paſſe: Moſes's unclean birds and beaſts are become clean all; all, to be eaten; now: and the Gentiles whom he held for no leſſe unclean, to be eaten with, and to be gone in unto. All in one great ſheet; omni gente and all. That the Nation alſo comes to be underſtood under the word perſon, no leſſe than the reſt; and none to be reſpected or accepted of God, for being in one corner of the ſheet, (that is, of one countrey) more than of another; that in CHRIST, neither Jew nor Gentile; all is one: and the black[a] Æthiopian, or

or the [b] white Italian, [c] the Areopagite in his long robe; or the Centurion in his short mantle of military habit; all conditions, all Nations, are in all persons. God hath shut up all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. And good reason for it, if it be but that of the Apostles own framing (Gal. 3. 17.) If the Law which came four hundred years after, could not disannul the Covenant made with Abraham so long before; by the same, nay, by a better consequence, neither could the Covenant with Abraham make the promise of God of none effect; the promise, that was made in Paradise, more than four times four hundred years before that of Abrahams, to the woman, and to her whole seed.

b Verse 2. c Acts 17. 34. Rom. 12. 32.

The vision, Saint Peter saw, was at Joppe: he was gone as farre from Jewrie, as there was any land, hard to the Sea-side, to the very parting place, where they loosed usually, when they went to the lands of the Gentiles. Jonas loosed thence. And, in a Tanners house it was: That, as to Simon the Tanner it was all one, he made leather indifferently, of the Badger, as well as of the sheep skin; as the skins were to Simon the Tanner, so the meat should be to Simon the Apostle. And it was a linnen sheet; which very linnen shewed, they were all clean: For, in linnen the Jews wrapped the first-borne of their cleane beasts, if any hapned to die before they came to be offered, and so buried it: but, at no hand, any uncleane beasts ever in linnen. But now, in linnen, all: that, if one cleane, all: And so, no person, Calling, Countrey excepted to, or accepted of, more than another.

Well then, no person. But, we like not this destructive Divinity, that tells us what He doth not, and tells us not, what He doth accept. If not the person, nor the persons Nation, What? Accepts He nothing? Yes: In every Nation, if any person there be that feareth God, and worketh righteousnesse, He that brings these with him, is (to God) a person acceptable; Such, He will not let lye, but take them up, and lay them up, where ever he finds them.

2 Positive: Whom God accepteth, In every Nation he that feareth, &c.

Solomon in effect, said as much long before, at the end of his long Sermon, the book of the Preacher. Will ye (saith he) hear the Summe of all Sermons? Fear God (there is he that fears Him) and keep his Commandments (that is, he that works righteousnesse) hoc est totum hominis (read some) there is all man hath, that God will accept of; Or, Hoc est omnis homo (read other, and inferre, Si hoc est omnis homo, manifestum, quod sine hoc nihil est omnis homo:) This, is man, all that he is. For, whatsoever besides this, he is, is as it it were not: This is all things, for without this, with all his person and personableness, he is nothing in Gods sight. This preached Solomon, at Jerusalem, to the Jew; and this, Peter, at Cæsarea, to the Gentiles: hoc est omnis homo, this is all for men, saith Solomon; Omni genti, for every Nation, saith Peter.

Eccles. 12. 13.

That feareth God, and worketh righteousnesse: Both these, and not the one without the other. Neither fear, which is dull and works not; for, of such He accepts not: Nor works, if they come not from within, from our hearts, from His true fear in our hearts, but be personate only, as were those of the Pharisee. We begin then there, within: For, any thing that is personate in Religion, and proceeds not from thence (μώρρωσις, Saint Pauls mask or vizor of godlinesse, Saint Peters ἐπικάλυμμα, cloak of Christian liberty) God plucks them off: He is so farre from accepting them, as he casts them from Him, He cannot abide them.

Feareth and worketh joyntly.

2 Tim. 3. 5. 1 Pet. 2. 16.

I forgot to tell you, why not the person: God Himself tells Samuel, that He looks not as man looks; Man looks upon the outside, the face and the seeing; God looks to that which is fartheſt from the person; to that which is within, at the center (that is) the heart. The inwards were Gods part, in every sacrifice, reserved ever to Him alone. By reserving them, He shews what it is, He chiefly accepts of. We must then look to that, first. He first looks at the heart, and in the heart, to the affection; (for, the heart is the seat of affections) and of all affections, that of fear; and, of all fears, to the fear of God.

1 Sam. 16. 7.

Of GOD; why, how comes God to be feared? Fear is not, but of some evil; and, evil, in GOD, there is none. Not, for any evil in Him; but for some evil; we may expect from him, if we fear not to offend Him, by doing that which is evil in His sight. Which punishment yet, is not evil of it self; for punishment, is the work of justice: but, we call it, as we feel it, malum pœnæ: And, it were fear, and Him, for it; or any that can inflict it.

Power and Justice are of themselves, fearful: Power, to all men; Justice, to evil men. But, Justice, armed with power, that, keeps all in awe. Now, in GOD, there is power: Gods power is manifest even to Heathen men. It is a part of the γνωστὸν τοῦ θεοῦ, that which may be known of God (His Power) and go no farther but to the work of Creation, saith the Apostle (Rom. 1. 20.) Every man feirs the mighty: for, what He will do, we know not; what He can do, we know, and that ever presents it self first.

And, in God, there is Justice, and the voice of justice, if thou do evil, fear. Which Justice of God, is manifest likewise without Scriptures, by the Law written in our hearts, the hearts even of the Heathen themselves, saith the same Apostle (Rom. 2. 15.) whereby they are either a law to themselves (the better sort of them, Cornelius, here) or, if not, their own thoughts accuse them for it; and their consciences bear witnesse against them, and at a Sessions holden in their hearts, they condemn themselves. Which Sessions is a forerunner of the great general Sessions that is to ensue.

Rom. 13. 4.

Scientes igitur terrorem hunc (saith Saint Paul still, 2 Cor. 5.) Knowing then this fearful judgement, we perswade men, and men are perswaded, either to eschew evil yet undone, or to leave it if it be undone, that it be not found in our hands, not taken about us.

2 Cor. 5. 11.

This fear, to suffer evil for sin (malum pœnæ) makes men fear to do the evil of sin (malum culpæ:) what they fear to suffer for, they fear to do. Keeps them from doing evil at all, makes them avoid it: or keeps them from doing evil still, makes them forsake it. It prevailed not only with Job in the the old; but with the Ninivites: It prevailed not only with Cornelius, in the New, but even with Felix; made him tremble, though it had not his full work, for he was not so happy, as to hear Paul out, but put it off till another time, which time never came.

John 3. 5. Acts 24. 26.

I.

Fear first. He that feareth Him. Gen. 3. 10.

First fear: and why fear first? Because it is first. It is called (and truly, for so truly it is) the beginning of our wisdome, when we begin to be truly wise. In Adam, it was so. The first passion we read of, that was raised in him, that wrought upon him after his fall was, I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid. There began his Wisdome, in his fear. There began he to play the wise-man, and to fore-think him of his folly committed. Fear is φίμωσις φόβου (as it is well called) of the nature of a bridle to our nature, to hold us in to refraine from evil, if it may be: if not, to check us and turne us about, and make us turn from it. Therefore, Fear GOD, and depart from evil (lightly) go together, as the cause, and the effect; you shall seldome find them parted. So they, because it is first, it is to stand first, and first to be regarded.

Prov. 3. 7.

Another reason, is because it is most generall. For, it goes through all, heathen and all. It goes to omni gente; there is qui timet. For, that they have so much faith, as to fear, appears by the Ninivites plainly. Nay, it goes not only to omni gente, but even to omni animante too, to beasts and all; yea, to the dullest beast of all, to Baalams beast: he could not get her (smite her, spurre her, do what he could to her) to run upon the point of the Angels sword: that they are in worse case than beasts that are void of it. So, first it riseth of all, and farthest it reacheth of all.

Num. 22. 23.

And, this fear, I would not have men think meanly of it. It is (we see) the beginning of wisdome; and so, both Father and Sonne, [a] David and [b] Solomon call it. But, if it have his full work, to make us depart from evil, it is wisdome complete, and that from GOD's own mouth, [c] Job 28. Therefore [d] Hsay bids us make a treasure of it, and [e] Blessed is the man, that is ever thus wise, that feareth alwayes: It is Solomon, Prov. 28. For, howsoever the world go, [f] this I am sure of, (saith he) it shall go well with him that feareth GOD, and carrieth himself reverently in His presence.

c Job 28. 28.
d Esay 33. 6.
f Eccles. 8. 12.

And, care not for them, that talk, they know not what, of the spirit of bondage. Of the seven spirits, which are the divisions of one and the same Spirit, this day here sent down; the last the chiefest of all, is the Spirit of the fear of GOD, Esay 11. So it is, the Alpha and Omega, first and last, beginning and end. First and last (I am sure) there is soveraign use of it.

Rom. 8. 15. Esay 11. 2.

Nor regard them not, that say, it pertains not to the New Testament; phansying to themselves, nothing must be done, but out of pure love. For, even there it abideth, and two soveraign uses there are still of it, those two which before we named, [1] One, to begin; [2] the other, to preserve,

1. To begin: We set it here as an introduction, as the dawning is to the day. For on them, that are in this dawning, that fear His name, on them shall the Sunne of righteousnesse arise. It is Malachi saith it: it is Cornelius here sheweth it. As the base Court, to the Temple: Not into the Temple at first step, but, come through the Court first. As the needle, to the thred (it is Saint Augustine:) that, first it enters, and draws after it the thred, and that sewes all fast together.

Mal. 4. 2.

Where there happens a strange effect, that, not to fear, the next way is to fear. The kind work of fear, is to make us cease from sin. Ceasing from sin brings with it a good life; a good life, that ever carries with it a good conscience; and a good conscience casts out fear. So that, upon the matter, the way, not to fear, is to fear: and, that GOD, that brings light out of darknesse, and glory out of humility, He it is, that also brings confidence out of fear.

2. This, for the introduction. And ever after, when faith is entred and all, it is a soveraign means to preserve them also. There is (as I have told you) a composition in the soul, much after that of the body. The heart, in the body, is so full of heat, it would stifle it self and us soone, were it not, GOD hath provided the lungs, to give it coole ayre, to keep it from stifling. Semblably in the soul, faith is full of Spirit, ready enough of it self to take an unkind heat, save that fear is by GOD ordained, to coole it and keep it in temper, to awake our care still, and see, it sleep not in security. It is good against saying in ones heart, [a] Non movebor (saith the Psal.) Good against [b] Et si omnes, non ego: Saint Peter found it so. Good (saith Saint Paul against [c] Noli altum sapere. And these would marre all, for the humble fear of God: by that all is kept right.

c Rom. 11. 20.

Wherefore, when the Gospel was at the highest, work out your salvation with fear and trembling (saith Saint Paul) Passe the time of your dwelling here in fear (saith Saint Peter.) Yea, our Saviour himself (as noteth Saint Augustine) when he had taken away one fear, Ne timete, Fear not them that can kill the body, and when they have done that, have done all, and can do no more; in place of that fear, puts another, but fear Him, that when he hath slain the body, can cast soul and it into hell fire: and when He had so said once, come over again with it to strike it home, Etiam dico vobis; Yea, I say unto you, fear Him.

Phil 2. 12. 1 Pet. 1. 17. Mat. 10. 28.

So then, this of fear, is not Moses's song only, it is the song of Moses and the Lamb both. Made of the harmony of the t'one, as well as t'other. A special straine, in that song of Moses and the Lamb, Apoc. 15, you shall finde this: Who will not fear thee O Lord? He that will not, may sibi canere, make himself musick; he is out of their queer, yea the Lambs queer; indeed, out of both.

Apoc. 15. 4.

This have I little stood on; for that, methinks, the world begins to grow from fear too fast: we strive to blow this Spirit quite away; for fear of carnificina conscientiæ, we seek to benumme it, and to make it past feeling. For these causes, fear is, with GOD a thing acceptable, we hear: And; that the Holy Ghost came down, where this fear was, we see. So it is, Saint Peter affirms it, For certaine, of a truth: So it is, Saint Peter protests it. Let no man beguile you, to make you think otherwise: No, no; but Fac, fac vel timore pœnæ, si nondum potest, amore justitiæ: Do it man, I tell thee, do it, though it be for fear of punishment, if you cannot yet get your self to do it for love of righteousnesse. One will bring on the other, A timore Domini concepimus Spiritum salutis: (It is Esay.) By it, we shall conceive that, which shall save us. These very words shall save us, said the Angel, and so they did: Here, in Cornelius, we have a fair president for it. And so, now I come to the other. Esay 26.18. Verse 6.

2. But works withal: And worketh righteousnesse.

For, I aske, Is GOD all for within: accepts He of nothing without? Yes, that He doth. Of a good, righteous work too, if it proceed, from His fear in our hearts. Fear is not all then: No, for it is but the beginning (as we have heard;) God will have us begin, but not end there. We have begun with qui timet eum; we must end with & operatur justitiam, and then comes acceptus est illi, and not before. For, neither fear, if it be fear alone; nor faith, if it be faith alone, is accepted of Him; but timet and operatur (here) with Peter; and fides qua operatur (there with Paul:) fear and faith (both) that worketh, and none else. If it be true fear, if such as God will accept, it is not timor piger, a dull lazie fear: His fear that feared his Lord and went and digged his talent into the ground, did nothing with it; Away with his fear and him into utter darknesse. God will have his talent turned, have it above ground. He will not have his Religion invisible within. No; shew me thy faith (saith Saint James;) thy fear (saith Saint Peter here) by some works of righteousnesse: Else, talk not of it. He will have it made appear, that men may see it, and glorifie him for it that hath such good and faithful servants. Gal. 5. 6. Mat. 25.18,30. James 2.18.

And they observe, that it is not [that doth] but [that worketh righteousnesse;] Not facit, but operatur. And, what manner of work? Saint Peters word is ἐργαζόμενος here: and for ἐργαζόμενος, ἔργον will not serve; it must be ἐργασία, which is a plain trade. Discite bene agere (saith Esay) learn it, as one would learn an handicraft, to live by: Learn it, and be occupied in it; make an ἐργασία, that is, even an occupation of it. CHRISTS own occupation, who (as Saint Peter tells us straight after) pertransiit bene faciendo, Went up and down, went about doing good, practising it, and nothing else: for that is ἐργάζεσθαι. Esay 1.17. Verse 38.

Worketh righteousnesse. This righteousnesse; to know what it is (beside the common duties of our calling, either as Christians in general; or particular, as every mans vocation lies) we cannot better informe our selves of it, than from this party, he speaks of (from Cornelius) and what the works were, he did. And they are set down at the second verse: where, after Saint Luke had said, he feared God, to shew his works of righteousnesse he addes, 1 he gave much almes, and 2 prayed to God continually; and at the 30. verse, that he was found 3 fasting at the ninth hour (that is) three, at after-noon. In these three, 1 Almes, 2 Prayer, and 3 Fasting, stood his works of righteousnesse: In these three; for besides these we finde not any other. They be the same, and in the same order, as they were figured in the three Oblations of the Magi, first fruits of the Gentiles, there in the Gospel, as the Fathers alot them: 1 Gold, that is, for Almes; 2 Incense, that is Prayer; and 3 Myrrhe, bitter myrrhe, for works of Mortification, as Fasting and such like; as bitter to the flesh, as myrrhe to the taste: both bitter, but wholesome, both. But (without all figure) they are the same three, and stand just in the same order, that here they do, where our Saviour teacheth them literally, and that under the name of Righteousnesse (Mat.6.) 1 Almes, first: that he begins with at the first verse, and so here, it is first: 2 then, to Prayer next, at the fifth verse: 3 and after that, to fasting, even as it is here too. Cornelius's works were these three: 1 gave almes, 2 Prayed duly, 3 was found at his fast by the Angel. This is all we finde; more we finde not specified: and these are enow, these would serve, if we would do them. These, in him, were; the same, in us, will be accepted. Matth. 6. 1. 5. 16. Verse 2. 3.

II. Of Gods acceptation He, &c. is accepted.

And now, of Gods acceptation. Accepting is but a queint terme borrowed from the Latine. It is no more than receiving or taking. 1 First then, clear it is, He will take them; but, where they be to take: But where they are not, take them He cannot. In vain shall we look for acceptation of that, which is not. We are then to see, there be some given; some, for Him to take. Take us He cannot, if there be not Cornelius's hand to take us by: Come up in remembrance they cannot, if none were done to remember: For, memoria est præteritorum, and all ours are yet to come (I fear) in phantasia rather than in memoria. Our almes, alas they are shrunk up pitifully: Prayer, swallowed up with hearing Lectures: and for the third, feast (if you will) continually; but, fast, as little as may be; and, of most I might say, not at all. The want of these, the bane of our Age. He stretcheth out his hand to receive almes; he bowe h down His eare to receive Prayer; He beholdeth with His eyes, to take us fasting: There is none to give them, and so He cannot receive them. But, by this, acceptus est (here) we see, how we might be accepti.

It is beside the Text; yet if ye aske, Here is fear, and here are works, where is faith all this while, without which it is impossible to please God, or to be accepted of him? Had he no faith? Yes, he would not have spent his goods, or chastened his body, without some faith: at least, call upon GOD he could not, on whom he believed not. Heb. 11. 6. Rom. 10.

Therefore he believed, sure: The Gentiles Creed at least, That a GOD there is; that sought he will be; that, he will not faile them that seeke him, but both regard and reward them.

The Ninivites Creed at least: in whose fear, there was faith and hope too: Quis scit, Who can tell, whether GOD may not turn and spare, and accept of a poor Gentile? There is nothing known to the contrary, and there be presidents for it.

And so he turned, and set himself to seek God, by the three wayes we remembred. And thou Lord never failest them that seek thee, but acceptest them, not according to that they have not, but according to that they have, though it be but a willing minde, they have. God forbid, but concupiscence should Psal. 9. 10. 2 Cor. 8.12.

be of equal power to good, that it is to evil. If you will reach it farther, to faith in Christ: living in garrison among the Jewes, he could not chooſe but have heard ſomewhat of Him, to move him, to throw himſelf down before Him, and he took him up, Acceptus eſt illi.

Eſa. 42. 3. The flaxe did but ſmoke, Chriſt quenched it not. Cracks there were in the reed, but He brake it not though; but kindled the one, and bound up the other: and in that little ſtrength he had, took him, as He found him, and took order, thus to bring him nearer the wayes of his ſalvation.

And, but accepted. But now leſt one error beget another, and the laſt prove worſe than the firſt, take this with you. When all is ſaid that can be ſaid, all is but accepting for all this. That he was, and we ſhall be accepted; that gives us ſome heart: And, that is but accepted, that takes away all ſelf-conceit of our ſelves. For, I know not how, if we be but accepted, we take upon us ſtraight, and fall into a phanſie, that well worthy we were, or elſe we ſhould not. Altum ſapere comes, and we ſwell ſtraight; inſomuch as we cannot be gotten to accept of this acceptus eſt, to accept of any acceptation, but grow to a higher ſtraine of merit and condignity, and I wot not what. To prick this bladder, all is ſhut up with this ἀξίως. Out of which word, we are to take notice of this: it is neither our fear, nor our works, all is but Gods gracious acceptation.

And it is not, as they well obſerve, ἀκτέος, but ἀκτός: not ἀκτέος, acceptandus, is to be accepted of Him; as if GOD could neither will nor chooſe; No, it is ἀκτὸς, only, that is, but acceptabilis, at moſt, but a capacity that He may be; layes no neceſſity, that He muſt be accepted.

The Schoolmen expreſſe it well, at times; By, non deerit Deus, GOD will not be wanting to ſuch, will accept them: But, non tenetur Deus, He is not ſo bound, but, if He would, He might refuſe, and that He doth not, it is but of his meere goodneſſe: All are but accepted.

The Fathers, thus; (I name Saint Auguſtine for the Latine:) Hoc habet, non pondus humani meriti, ſed ordo conſilii divini: That thus it is, it is no weight or worth of mans merit; it is but the very order and courſe of Gods dealing: His favourable dealing, that and nothing elſe, that there is any accepting at all. The Greek Fathers, thus; (I name Chryſoſtome for them:) It is ὑπεροχὴν, not ἀξία, (that is) dignatio, not dignitas: dignatio Acceptantis, not dignitas operantis. Digni habebuntur, ſaith the Goſpel, and the Epiſtle both; the Goſpel, Luke 20. the Epiſtle, 2 Theſ. 1. God accounts them worthy, and His ſo counting makes them worthy: makes them ſo, for ſo they are not of themſelves, or without it; but, by it, ſo they are. His taking our works of righteouſneſſe well in worth, is their worth.

Luke 20. 35. 2 Th. 1. 2. 5.

There was another Centurion (beſide this in the Apoſtle) the Centurion in the Goſpel; the Elders of the Jewes were at dignus eſt, about him; dignified him highly: but, he indignified himſelf as faſt, was at his non ſum dignus twice, neither worthy that CHRIST ſhould come to him, nor that he to CHRIST. And even thus it was ever with all from the beginning: Job (another timens Deum, his like was not upon earth, yet thus he) Etſi juſtus fuero, non levabo caput; All were he juſt, he would down with his creſt for all that; and what? Et deprecabor judicem meum, and plead nothing, ſtand upon no termes, but deale only by way of ſupplication; and that is the ſafeſt way. And why ſo? For Verebar omnia opera mea (ſaith he) he durſt not truſt any of them. And why not? For the continual dropping of our corruption, upon the webb of our well-doing, ſtaines it ſo, as if he would ſtand ſtreining them, he that now doth accept them, might juſtly except to them; for many exceptions there lye againſt them. He that takes them might let them lie, as not worth the taking up; For, if he ſhould ranſack them they would ſcarce prove worth the taking up; but yet take them up he doth, and reward them; Both, for the praiſe of the glory of his grace: To the glory of the praiſe of which grace be all this ſpoken.

Job 1. 8. 10. 15. 9. 15. 9. 28. Epheſ. 1. 6.

All which tends to this (for our work is this, our labour this, this is all in all, to get men to do well, and yet not weene well of their well-doing:) To joyne firſt timet and operatur, to fear, and yet to do good; and when we have done good, yet to fear, with Job, for Davids reaſon, cognoſcimus imperfectum noſtrum. Then to joyne again, Operatur, and acceptus eſt. For, that is it if we could hit on it: we cannot; but, that is it, though. For think you, we can get men to this? No? do we evil, we will not know it, we excuſe, we leſſen it. Do we well, we know it ſtraight; Nay, we over-know and over-priſe it. No remedy, merit it muſt be, and hire it muſt be: Reward, we cannot skill of; Acceptus eſt is nothing, Accepted will not ſerve: we will know, how we ſhall be accepted, of merit or of grace. Fond men! ſo we be accepted, though of grace, are we not well? What deſire we more, but to be taken and not refuſed? The Law that ſaith: Say not, it is for my righteouneſſe: The Prophets ſay, it is not for your ſakes: The Apoſtle ſaith, if you ſeek to eſtabliſh your own righteouſneſſe, you are gone. Yea, Chriſt himſelf ſaith, if you talk much of it (with the Phariſee) Lord this I am, and this I do; there is not the pooreſt Publican that goes by the way, but he ſhall be juſtified before you. And therefore be entreated, I pray you, to accept of acceptus eſt: that ſets all ſafe; that, brings all to God, and there leaves it.

Deut. 9. 4. Ezek. 36. 22. Rom. 10. 3. Luke 8. 11, 14.

For, if this fearer, this worker be accepted and not in himſelf, in whom then? who is it? The Apoſtle tels us directly, He hath made us accepted in his beloved, His beloved Sonne: So Paul. And Saint Peter immediately in the very next words (that follow upon theſe) you know the Word, that was in the beginning and made all, and that in the fulneſſe of time was ſent and healed all; Miſit Verbum & ſanavit eos. In Him and through Him all are accepted that have had, or ſhall have the honour and happineſſe ever ſo to be. In whom then, we are accepted, we ſee.

Epheſ. 1. 6. Pſal. 107. 20.

Now

Now laſtly, to what; and ſo an end. That being ſo accepted or received (whether you will: both are one) you may receive, what? plain it is, it follows, the Sacrament. But they to receive the firſt Sacrament, that of Baptiſme; for they were yet in their Paganiſme, un-baptized. But they that are Chriſtians already, and paſt the firſt, there remaineth for them to receive, none but the ſecond. And that then, is it. And, that, bound they are to receive. For, though by ſpecial privilege ſome are aſperſi Spiritu quos aqua myſtica non tetigit, ſprinkled with the Holy Ghoſt, before they had the ſprinkling of water; of which number was Cornelius, and thoſe in the Text: though, while they were at the Sermon, the Holy Ghoſt came upon them; yet, to the Sacrament they came though, we ſee. That, was to them, and is, to us all, the ſeal of Gods acceptation. That firſt, was theirs, but the chief and laſt, is this of ours. To what end accepted.

For, this is indeed the true receiving, when one is received to the table, to eat and drink, to take his repaſt there: yea, ad accipiendum in quo acceptus eſt, to take, and to take into Him, that body, by the oblation whereof, we are all ſanctified, and that blood in which, we have all remiſſion of ſins. In that, ended they: in this, let us end.

And thes accepting we deſire of God: and deſiring it in an acceptable time, He will hear us; and, this is that acceptable time. For, if the year of Pentecoſt, the fiftieth year, where the acceptable years, as Luke 4. 21. then, the day of Pentecoſt the fiftieth day, this day, is the acceptable day for the ſame reaſon. Truly acceptable, as the day, whereon the Holy Ghoſt was firſt received; and whereon we may receive him now again: Whereon, acceptus eſt is fulfilled both wayes: we, of Him received to grace; and He of us, His fleſh and blood, and with them, His ſpirit. He receiveth us to grace, and we receive of Him grace, and with it, the influence of His Holy Spirit, which ſhall ſtill follow us, and never leave us, till we be accepti indeed, that is, received up to Him, in His kingdom of glory. Whither, bleſſed are they that ſhall be received. Heb. 10. 28. Epheſ. 1. 7.

1 JOHN, Chap. V. Ver. VI.

Hic est, qui venit per aquam & sanguinem, JESUS CHRISTUS: non in aqua solum, sed in aqua & sanguine. Et Spiritus est, qui testificatur, quoniam Spiritus est veritas.

This is that JESUS CHRIST, that came by water and blood: not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witnesse: for, the Spirit is truth.

THIS is JESUS CHRIST; and it is the Spirit. So, the verse (you see) linketh CHRIST and the Spirit together; is a passage, from the one to the other. Linketh them, and so (consequently) linketh this Feast of the Spirit present, with those of CHRIST that are gone before; and under one, sheweth the convenience of having the Spirit, an Article in our Creed; and of having this day, a feast, in our Calendar.

For, though CHRIST have done all, that He had to do; all is not done, that is to do, till the Spirit come too. We have nothing to shew; we want our teste; a special part of our evidence is lacking: that when all is done, if this be not; nothing is done. Christ without water, water without blood; His water and blood; and He, without the Spirit, availe us nothing. The spirit we are to have: and, this day we have it: and, for the having it this day, we keep a Feast. As those hitherto, for Christ, complementum legis; so this, for the Holy Ghost, complementum Evangelii, which was not complete, donec complerentur dies Pentecostes, till the dayes of Pentecost were fulfilled: till this day was come and gone.

Saint John is every where all for love. Here, in this Chapter (I know not how) he is hit upon faith. Which, with him, is rare: so, the more to be made of. Specially in this age, wherein it is grown the vertue of chief request. And indeed Ἠ χαεῖαν τὴ πίςις ἐςὶν, ἐὰν πίςις ᾖ, an excellent vertue is faith, if it be faith. For, as there is (saith Saint Paul) γνώσις ψευδώνυμος, a knowledge falsely so called, so is there a faith: for faith is it self but a kind of knowledge.

How shall we then make faith, of our faith? Of it self, it is but a bare act (faith) a thing indifferent:

rent: the vertue, and the value of it is, from the object it believeth in; if that be right, all is right. And, that is right, if it have for this object, not Jesus Christ barely; but (as Saint John speaketh) That Jesus Christ. That Jesus Christ, is somewhat a strange speech, as if there were another. Is there so? Yes, (2 Cor. 11. 5.) ye have alium Jesum, and (Gal. 1. 7.) aliud Evangelium; Not that, but another Jesus: Not this, but, another Gospel.

And as, not that, but another Jesus; So Christ Himself tells us, you shall have, not that, but another Christ. Another, nay many other; yet there is but one true, Matth. 24. 24. Lo here is Christ, lo there He is. Go into the desart, there you shall have Him: Get you to such a conventicle, and there you shall not misse of Him. Go but to one City, I could name, you shall have Christs enough; and scarce a true one, among them all.

Well then, what shall we do, to sever the precious from the vile, That Jesus Christ, from others; set the Hic est ille, upon the right Christ? This (saith Saint John:) These two wayes: 1 That Jesus Christ, that comes in water and blood joyntly; not, in either alone, Hic est ille: If, but in one, he is another Jesus. 2 That Jesus that hath the Spirit to bear him witnesse, is the true; this Witnesse if He want, Hic non est ille. Under one, we shall learn Christ aright. For, as one may learn a false Christ, so may he be the true Christ falsly. You have not so learned Christ, saith the Apostle (Ephes. 4. 20.) that is, not amisse, you have not; meaning, some other bad. And, as learn Christ aright, so learn to do the Spirit his right: not to shoot him off, but know, he is to have a chief Holy day, in our Fasti, as He hath a part, and a principal part, in the Teste of whosoever shall be saved. Jer. 15. 19.

The Summe. The Summe is, three Items we have: 1. That we take not Pseudo Christum pro Christo: the false Christ for the true; that is, one that comes in His name, but is not He.

2. Neither, when we have the true one, that we take not Semi Christum pro Christo: a moity, or part of Christ, for the whole.

3. When we have the whole, that we take Him not, without His Teste (and that is the Spirit:) For, as good not take him at all.

The Division. Three parts I would lay forth: 1 There is Christs part. 2 There is the Spirits part. 3 There is the Sacraments part. Christs part, His double coming, in 1 water, and 2 blood. In it, these: 1 That Christ was so to come. 2 That Christ did so come. 3 Not only did, but doth so come daily to us. 4 As He comes to us in both, so we to come to him for both; and (ever) to take heed of the error, of either alone, of turning non solum, into solum. I.

Then the Spirits part. 1 Of His witnesse. Of the truth of it. 1. Of His witnesse. 1 That a witnesse there is to be. 2 That a witnesse there is. 3 Nay, not one, but three. 4 Of which, the Spirit is one and the chief witnesse: His witnesse to 1 Jesus, 2 Christ that came; 3 to the water, to the 4 blood, He came in. This, of His witnesse. Then, of the Truth of it; and withal, how to discern the Spirit, that is, the Truth. II.

And last, the reversal to this. That, as not these, without the Spirit; So, not the Spirit, without these (that is) not without the Sacraments, which are the monuments and pledges of these. And so, that we endeavour, that the Spirit on this day (the day of the Spirit) may come to us, and give His witnesse, that CHRIST is come to us, and come to us in them, in them both, to our comfort both here, and eternally. III.

THus it is written, and thus it behoved, that He that was to come, Jesus the Saviour of the world, when He came, should come in water and blood. His name was so called (Jesus) saith the Angel, to shew He should save His people from their sinnes, To save us from them, by taking them away: For, Hic est omnis fructus (saith Esay, and it is a ground with us,) All the fruit we have, is the taking away of our sinne. Take that away, the rest will follow of it self: that (indeed) is all in all. I.

Christs part: 1 That He was to come in water and blood. Matth. 1. 21. Esay 27. 9.

To take away sinne, two things are to be taken away. For in sinne, are these two: 1 Reatus, and 2 Macula (as all Divines agree) the guilt, and the foyl or spot. The guilt to which Punishment is due: The spot, whereby we grow loathsome in Gods eyes, and even in mens too. For, even before them, Shame and Reproach follow sin. Take these two away, and sinne is gone. And there is no people, under heaven, but have sense of these two; and no religion is, or ever was, but laboured to remove them both.

To take away foyle, water is most fit: To take away guilt, blood. No punishment, for any guilt, goes farther than blood. Therefore had the heathen their lustrations, for the foyle; which were ever by water (--donec me flumine vivo Abluero,) and their expiations, for the guilt, by shedding of blood ever (sanguine placatis,) without which they hold no remission of sins. Num. 8. 7.

The Jewes they likewise had their sprinkling water for the uncleanesse: had their slaine sacrifice, the blood whereof done on their posts, the destroyer passed by them, the guilt by it being first taken away. Exod. 12. 22.

But the Prophet tells us, No water (no, not snow-water, and put to it nitre and borith and fullers sope, never so much) can enter into the soul, and take away the steines of it. And the Apostle he tells us; It was impossible, the blood of bulls and goates should satisfie for the sinnes of men. The water had not the vertue to get out those spots: nor the blood, the value, to make satisfaction to God, for mans trespasse, Jer. 2. 22. Heb. 10. 4.

Donec

Gen.49.10. Donec venit qui venturus erat, Till He came that was to come; Philo, with a blood, and a water, which (because it was the blood and water of the Sonne of God; and so of God) by his divine power, infused into both, gave the water such a piercing force, and gave the blood so inestimable high a value, as was able to work both: to put an end to that which never the washings, nor offerings of nature, or of the Law could rid us of. Thus in water and blood was He to come, that was to take sin away.

2. That he did so come. Thus was He to come, and thus did He come: did come diverse wayes. In blood, the blood of His Circumcision; In water, the water of His Baptisme. Began so, and so ended: In water, the water of his strong crying and teares, whereby He made supplication to GOD for us; in blood, the blood of His passion, the blood of Gethsemane, His bloody sweat; the blood of Gabbatha, of the scourges and thornes; the blood of Golgotha, of His hands and feet digged. Thus came He.

Mat.26.36. John 19.13.17

Yet is it none of these, Saint John pointeth to: (these were at several times:) but, he points to His coming in both toget her at once. This place of the Epistle, refers to that place of the Gospel, where at once, with one blow, His side being opened, there came forth blood and water, both. Blood, Sanguis testamenti (saith Zach. 9. the Blood of His Testament, whereby He set His guilty prisoners free. Water (saith the same Zachary 13.) fons Domui Israel; a fountain which he opened to the house of Israel, for sinne, and for uncleannesse. The one, blood, the λύτρον, the ransome or price of the taking away the guilt; the other, water, the λοετρον, lauer of our new birth, from our original corruption.

John 19.34. Zach.9. 11. Zach.13.1.

Hæc sunt Ecclesiæ gemina sacramenta (saith Augustine.) These are (not two of the Sacraments: so there might be more, but) the twin-sacraments of the Church. So, but two of that kinde; two famous memorials left us; in Baptisme, of the water; in the Cup, of the New-Testament, of the blood, He then came in.

3. That he comes so still. Thus did CHRIST come: did and doth still. For the word is not ἐλήλυθε, referring to the time past, but ἔρχων, which respecteth even the present also. Came not once, but still and ever cometh so. The water still runs; for He opened a fountain never to be drawn dry; And His massa sanguinis is not spent neither; For, it is sanguis aterni fœderis, and so æternus: of the everlasting Covenant; and so, it self lasting for ever.

And that, this His coming to us, he means, the order sheweth. For, when it came from him it came in another order; blood came first, and then water: see the Gospel. But here in the Epistle, when He comes to us, water is first, and then blood. Blood and water, the order quoad se: Water and Blood, quoad nos. Ever to us, in water first.

John 19.34.

But what means this, not in water only, but in water and blood? To say [in water and blood,] was plain enough one would think. Our rule is in Logick, Non sufficit alterum, oportet utrumque fieri in copulativis. Our rule in Divinity, What God hath joyned, let no man presume to sever. Yet, when He had said, in water and blood, He comes over with them again, with his non in quâ solum, Not in water only, but in water and blood. What means this, but to make it yet more plain, that there might be no mistaking, no slipping off the collar; that one of them will not serve the turn; but, as once He came, so still and ever we is to come in them both.

Matth.19.6.

4. That we are to come to Him for both. And as He to come to us, so we to come to Him. He to us in both, we to Him for both. He not to us, in either alone; we not to Him, for either alone. For, if for either alone, we make superfluous His coming in the other; we question his wisdome, as if He came in more than needed, as if any thing He came in might well enough be spared. No, we need both, we have use of both, and so to come to Him for them both.

Apoc.3.24. Among the profunda Satanæ, this was one; when he could not κωλυειν keep Him out: by a new stratagem, he fought λύειν τὸν Ἰησοῦν, solvere Jesum (as the Fathers read the verse of the Chapter next before) that is, to take Him in pieces. When he could not prevail in setting up a false, he set some on work, to take in sunder the true.

Was it not thus? Did they not solvere dissolve, take in sunder His Natures: made Him come as only man; as Samosatenus: made Him come as only God, as Sabellius? Dissolved they not His person; made Him come in two, as Nestorius? And is not this (here) a plain dissolving also? He coming entirely in both, to take Him by halves, take of Him what they list, what they think will serve their turnes, and leave the other and let it lie? So take pars pro toto, a piece of Jesus for the whole, as if they meant to be saved by Synecdoche.

Which very taking Him in pieces, makes him, that he is not the true. For if the coming in both twain, make Him Hic est ille; the taking away of either, turnes Him into alium Jesum; and so, Hic non est ille. This you may call Jesus Christ, but this is not that Jesus Christ, Saint John his Εὐαγγέλιον, taught us. There was a sort of Heretick, in the Primitive Church, were so all for water, cared so little for His coming in blood, as they ministred the Communion in nothing but water, and are therefore called Hydropocastatæ, or Aquarii. There were others: But it were a world to rake up old errors: what need we? Have we not now, that frame to themselves a Christ without water, or a Christ without blood, and so seeme to hold aqua sola, or solus sanguis, against Saint Johns, non in sola (flat.)

1. Ephes. 4.19. See you some, that pour out themselves into all riot, and follow uncleannesse even with greedinesse? CHRIST in water would do well for such; and they care least for it; by their good will would have none come upon them; would not be clean, would be as they are, as swine in their wallow all their life long. No water, they; but blood, as much as you will. Frame to themselves a CHRIST without water, all in blood.

This is that CHRIST, that cometh: How comes He? what brings He? Comes He in blood, brings He good store of that, that we may strike off the guilt of our old score? He is welcome coming so. But

He

He comes with water too. Nay, they can ſpare that (with the Gergeſites, to pray Him to be gone, to depart from their coaſts) they love blood without water, are all for comfort (as they call it) nothing for cleanneſſe of life. In ſolo Sanguine, theſe. Matth. 8.34.

See you ſome other (not many, but ſome) carefull to their weak power, to containe themſelves, yet through humane frailty overtaken otherwhile? CHRIST in blood comes for theſe, for theſe in ſpeciall, and alas they dare not come near it (not His blood) as utterly unworthy of it. Theſe are but few, in compariſon of thoſe other, the ſoli-ſanguines. Yet, ſome ſuch there are, and for them hath S. John directed the letter of this Text in this order which it ſtands, that CHRIST came not in water alone, but came in blood, too. 2.

Timorous trembling conſciences think, they have never water enough: if they find about them any unclean thing, they are quite caſt down, utterly dejected ſtraight: as if that CHRIST were John Baptiſt, that came in water alone: nay, were turned into Moſes, that had his name of being taken out of the water; as if He came all in water, nay were all water, had not a drop of blood in Him. Theſe ſeem to hold in aqua ſola; whereas CHRIST hath both water and blood, of each alike much, no leſſe of the one, than of the other: Came in blood, and came in it for them, and to them doth moſt readily apply it, that make moſt ſpare of it.

But, the greater number by farre, are thoſe, in the other extreme, that are nothing timorous, farre enough from that, diſſolute, and care not how many foul blotches they have, ſo they may have the guilt and puniſhment taken away: hear, there is remiſſion of ſinnes in His blood, ſo lie at His veins continually like horſe-leeches, ſo as if it were poſſible, they would not leave a drop of blood in Him. As for his water, they have no uſe of it, nor deſire not to have any, let that run waſte, are all for blood, would not care, if all the water were dreined from Him, nay if (as the waters of Egypt) all His were turned into blood. Forgiven, that they would be; Cleane, they care not to be: as much blood, as little water as you will. Both theſe would be looked to, but this later more, as the predominant error of our age, wherein the water is even at the low-water-marke. Now, for theſe, we return the non ſolum (as by good warrant we may) both wayes; It is equally true, Not in blood alone (hear you) but in blood and water. Will you have no water? then muſt you have no CHRIST: For CHRIST came in water. And further adde, that as in water and blood both, ſo in water firſt (for ſo it lieth in the Text) and that which ſtands firſt, we to paſſe through firſt; water, quoad nos, is the firſt before blood: There to begin in GOD's name. Take that with you too.

They then, that have learned CHRIST aright, are to come to Him for both. With the woman of Samaria, LORD give us of this water: with them of Capernaum, LORD, give us of this bread, of this Cup of the New Teſtament in Thy blood. To come to Him for blood, for the forgiveneſſe of our ſinnes through faith in His blood. To come to Him for water aſwell, for the taking out of the ſteines. Yea (even as Eſay ſaid) Hauritis aquas cum gaudio de fontibus Salvatoris, even with joy to draw waters from the fountains of our Saviour: with more joy ſo draw water, than to draw blood from Him. John 4. 15. 6.34. 1 Cor. 11.25. Eſay 12.3.

But (indeed) to look well into the matter, they cannot be ſeparate; they are mixt; either is in other. There is a mixture of the blood in the water; there is ſo, of the water in the blood: we can miniſter no water without blood: nor blood, without water. In baptiſme we are waſhed with water: That water is not without blood. The blood ſerves inſtead of nitre. He hath waſhed us from our ſinnes in His blood (Apoc. 1.5.) (waſhed.) They made their robes white in the blood of the Lamb (Apoc. 7.14.) No waſhing, no whiting, by water, without blood. And, in the Euchariſt, we are made drink of the blood of the New Teſtament: but, in that blood, there is water: for the blood of CHRIST puriſieth us from our ſinnes. Now, to purifie, is a vertue properly belonging to water, which yet is in the blood: and purifying refers to ſpots, not to guilt, properly. So, either is in other; therefore, the conceit of ſeparation, let it alone for ever. 1 John 1.7.

To take heed then of dreining Chriſts water from His blood; or abſtracting His blood from His water; of bringing in Reſtringent (ſola) into either. Every one of us, for his own part, thus to do. But howſoever men frame phanſies to themſelves (as frame they will, do what we can) that our doctrine be looked to; we are not to teach Jeſus Chriſt, but That Jeſus Chriſt, that thus came in both. That our Divinity then, on the one ſide, be not wateriſh, without all heart or comfort; preſenting Chriſt in water only, to make fear, where none is. Nor, on the other, that we frame not our ſelves a ſanguine Divinity, void of fear quite, and bring in Chriſt all in blood, blood and nothing elſe, with little water, or none at all; for fear of Ex nimiâ ſpe deſperatio.

Faith, as it juſtifieth (ſaith Saint Paul) there is blood: So it puriſieth the heart (ſaith Saint Peter;) there is water. Hope, as it (ſaveth ſaith Saint Paul;) blood: So it cleanſeth (ſaith Saint John;) water. In vaine we flatter our ſelves, if they do the one and not the other. Do we make grace of none effect? that, we may not (Gal. 2. ult.) Do we make the Law of none effect by faith? that, we may not neither (Rom. 3. 10.) nor, this day ſpecially, the Feaſt of the Law, and Spirit, both: but rather eſtabliſh it. Beſt, if it could be ſet right, the Song of Moſes and of the Lamb: it is the harmony of heaven. If we teach Ne peccetis (water;) to teach alſo (blood) ſiquis autem peccaverit (with Saint John.) If we ſay ſalvus factus eſt (blood;) to ſay Noli amplius peccare (water) withall, with Chriſt Himſelfe. Gal. 3. 8. Acts 15. 9. Rom. 8.20. 1 John 3.3. Apoc. 15. 4. Rom. 15.34. 1 John 2. 1. John 5.14.

This is that Jeſus Chriſt, and the true Doctrine of Him: neither diluta, and ſo evil for the heart; nor tentans caput, and ſo fuming up to the head: neither Scammoniata, tormenting the conſcience: nor yet Opiata, ſtupifying it, and making it ſenſeleſſe. And ſo much, for Chriſts double coming.

Well,

II. The Spirits part.

Well, when Christ is come, and thus come, may we be gone, have we done? Done! we are yet in the midst of the verse, before we make an end of it, it must be Whitsuntide. The Spirit is to come too. So, a new qui venit; that comes in both those, and comes in the Spirit, besides. And a new non solum; not in water and blood only, but in the Spirit withall.

John 19.30. 1. His Witnesse.

Not, that Christ said not truly, Consummatum est, that He hath not done all. Yes, to do that was to be done, CHRIST was enough, needs no supply; The Spirit comes not, to do; comes but to testifie. That inter alia, is one of his Offices.

a A witnesse. there is to be.

And a Witnesse is requisite. There is no matter of weight with us, if it be sped authentically (especially a Testament) but it is with a Teste. And GOD doth none of His great works but so: of which, this Coming is one, even the greatest of all. Neither of His Testaments, without one. As GOD in nature left not Himself without witnesse (saith the Apostle:) So neither Christ, in grace. As then, in the Old Testament, Ad Legem & Testimonium (saith Esay 8.) So, in the New, Ad Evangelium & Testimonium, to the Gospel, to Christ and the testimony, calls S. John here CHRIST also to have his Teste. We to call for it, and if it be called for of us, to be able to shew it.

Acts 14.17. Esay 8.26.

b A witnesse there is: Nay, three. Deut. 17.6.

A witnesse there needeth then, and a witnesse there is. One, nay three. In ore duorum; that is, in every matter nothing without two at least. But in this, so many, so high a matter, GOD would enlarge the number, have it in ore trium, have it full, no fewer than three: three, to His part, three, to ours.

At the ordering of it in heaven, three there were, the 1 Father, the 2 Word, and 3 the Spirit: that the whole Trinity might be equally interessed in the accomplishment of the work of our Salvation, and it passe through all their hands. And at the speeding it in earth, three more: 1 The Spirit, and 2 Water, and 3 Blood to answer them, that all might go by a Trinity, that Holy, Holy, Holy, might be thrice repeated. The truth herein answereth to the Type. For under the Law, nothing was held perfectly hallowed, till it passed three, the 1 cleansing water, first; the 2 sprinkling of blood, second; 3 and last, that the holy oyle were upon it too (the holy oyle, the Holy Ghosts type:) but when any thing anointed with all three, then had it His perfect halydome, then it was holy indeed. And even so passe we through three hands all. 1 Gods, as men; 2 Christs, as Christian men, Blood notes the redemption: 3 And the Spirit as spiritual men, which pertains to all. If any be spiritual, he knows this: and you that be spiritual do this (saith the Apostle:) For, Christians that be animales spiritum non habentes, S. Jude tells us, there is no reckoning to be made of them.

Gal. 6. 1. Jude 19.

c The Spirit a witnesse.

To let the other go. The Spirit is a witnesse, to JESUS CHRIST, that came in water and blood: Witnesse, to JESUS CHRIST, that came: witnesse, to His water and blood, He came in. In a witnesse it is required, he be Testis idoneus: will you see, quam idoneus, how apt, how every way agreeing? The Spirit and Jesus agree: Jesus was conceived by the Spirit. The Spirit and Christ agree: in the word Christ, is the Spirit, For [CHRIST] is anointed. Anointed with what? with the Holy Ghost, the true unction, and the truth of all unctions whatsoever. The Spirit and water agree: the Spirit moved on the face of the waters. The Spirit and blood agree: The Spirit of life is in the blood; the vessels of it, the arteries, run along with the texture of the veines, all the body over.

1. To Jesus Christ that came. 2. To the water and blood, He came in. Gen. 1. 2. Lev. 19.11. To His coming John 1. 32.

To His coming, this Spirit agreeth also. When He came, as Jesus, the Spirit conceived Him. When He came, as CHRIST, the Spirit anointed Him. When he came, in water, at his Baptisme, the Spirit was there: came down in the shape of a Dove, rested, abode on Him. When He came, in blood, at His Passion, there too: It was the eternal Spirit of GOD, by which He offered Himself without spot unto GOD (Heb. 9.4.) So, the most fit that can be, to bear witnesse to all; Præsens interfuit, & vidit & audivit, was present, heard, and saw, was acquainted with all that passed: none can speak to the point so well as He.

The Spirit, the chief witnesse.

The Spirit is a witnesse, is true every way: But, why is it said, It is the Spirit that beareth witnesse, seeing they both (water and blood) bear it too? it is water, it is blood that bear witnesse also. They (indeed) are witnesses: but, it is the Spirit, He it is that is the principal witnesse, and principally to be regarded, before the rest. Here, He comes in last; but, He is (indeed) first: and so as first, is placed at the eighth verse, where they are orderly reckoned up. And good reason. He is one of the three, both above in heaven, and beneath in earth: third, there above: first, here beneath: a witnesse, in both Courts, admitted ad jus testis in both, for His special credit in both: the medius terminus (as it were) between heaven and earth, between God and man.

Gal. 4. 9. John 6.63.

Besides it is said, It is He, He it is that beareth witnesse. For, it is neither of the other, will do us any good without Him: the whole weight lieth upon him. Not the water without the Spirit, it is but nudum & egenum elementum. Not the blood without the Spirit, no more than the flesh without the Spirit, non prodest quicquam (as said He, whose the flesh and blood was, CHRIST Himself.)

Acts 18. 13. Matth. 26.

Will you see a proof without it? CHRIST came to Simon Magus in water, he was baptized: CHRIST came to Judas, in blood, he was a communicant: but Spirit there came none to testifie: they were both never the better. The better? nay, the worse; Simon perished in the gall of bitternesse, Judas bibit mortem de fonte vitæ, from the cup of blessing drank down his own bane. All, for want of Et spiritus est. So is it with the word, and with any means else.

Acts 8.23. 1 Cor. 1.16.

But let the testimony of the Spirit come, the water becomes a Well, springing up to eternity; the flesh and blood, meat that perisheth not, but endureth to life everlasting.

John 4.14. John 6.17.

And even in nature we see this: Water, if it be not aqua viva, have not a spirit to move it, and make it run, it stands and putrifies: and blood, if no spirit in it, it congeals and grows corrupt and foul, as the blood of a dead man. The spirit helpeth this, and upon good reason doth it. For, CHRIST being conceived by the Spirit, it was most meet, all of Christ should be conceived the same way. That which conceived Him, should impregnate his water, should animate His blood, should give the vivificat, the life and vigour to them both. It is the Spirit then, that giveth the witnesse.

Now, in a Witnesse, above all it is required, he be true: the Spirit is so true, as He is the the truth it self. The Sririt, the truth? Why CHRIST saith of Himself, I am the truth. All the better: for, Verum vero consonat, one truth will well sort with, will uphold, will make proof one of another, as these two do prove either other reciprocally. The Spirit, CHSISTS proof: CHRIST, the Spirits: Every spirit that confesseth not CHRIST, is not the true Spirit. The Spirit CHRISTS; CHRIST, if He have not the Teste of the Spirit: is not the true CHRIST. Alwayes, the Truth is the best witnesse. And, if He be the Truth, on His Teste, you may bear your self. Not so, on water, or blood: without Him, they may well deceive us, and be falsa and fallacia, as wanting the Truth, if He, if the Spirit be wanting.

2 The truth of His witnesse. John 14. 6.

1 John 4. 3.

It will then much concern us, to be sure, the Spirit, on whose testimony we are thus wholly to rely, that that spirit be the truth. And, it is the main point of all, to be able to discern the Spirit, that is the truth: because, as there is a Spirit of truth, so there a spirit of error abroad in the world; yea, many such spirits: and the Apostle who tells us of alium Jesum, in the same verse tells us of alium spiritum too. We be then to try, which spirit is the truth, that so the spirit on whose witnesse we rest our selves, be the truth. How take we notice of the spirit? How knew they the Angel was come down into the poole of Bethesda, but by the stirring and moving of the water? So by stirring up in us spiritual motions, holy purposes and desires, is the Spirits coming known. Specially, if they do not vanish again. For if they do, then was it some other flatuous matter, which will quiver in the veines, (and unskilful people call it the life-blood,) but the Spirit it was not. The Spirits motion, the pulse, is not for a while, and then ceaseth; but is perpetual, holds as long at life holds, though intermittent sometime, for some little space.

That trueth to be knowne. 4.

1 John 4. 6.
2 Cor. 2. 12. 4.

By His spiritual motions. John 5. 8.

Yet hold we it not safe, to lay overmuch weight upon good motions, which may come of diverse causes, and of which (good motions) there are as many in hell, as in heaven. The surest way is to lay it on that, our SAVIOUR and His Apostles so often lay it, that is, on Spiritus vivificat. The life is ever the best indicant signe of the spirit. Novum supervenisse spiritum, nova vitæ ratio demonstrat, that a new Spirit is come, a new course of life is the best demonstration.

By newnesse of life.

2 Cor. 3. 6.

Now, life is best known by vital actions. Three the Scripture counteth: 1 Spiritus ubi vult spirat, by breath: 2 Spiritus manifestè loquitur, by speech: 3 Omnia hæc operatur unus idemq; spiritus, by the work: (these three.)

The notes of that life. John 3. 8.
1 Cor. 12. 11.

1. The neareſt and moſt proper note of the Spirit is ſpiration, or breathing. In breathing there is a double act: 1 there is a Systole, a drawing in of the ayre (and that is cold) agreeth with Christ in water: there comes a coole breath ever from the water. 2 And there is a Diastole, a sending forth of the the breath; and that (we know) is warme, and agreeth with Christ in blood. For blood is it, that sendeth a warme vapour into all the limmes.

1 Breath.

Agreeable to these two, have you the two Spirits, which upon the matter, are but the two acts of one and the same Spirit: 1 Inspired, the Spirit of fear, Esay 11. 2. The fear of GOD. 2 Out-breathed, the spirit of faith, 2 Cor. 4. 12. Faith in Christ. Fear comes in water: so saith Solomon; the fear of GOD is fons vitæ, the well-spring of life (Prov, 14. 27.) that is water. Faith comes in blood; per fidem in sanguinem Ipsius (Romans 3. 15.) through faith in His blood. So, is every one that is borne of the Spirit. And to blow out faith still, and never draw in fear, is suspicious, is not safe. The true spiration, the breathing aright, consisting of these two, is a signe of the right Spirit.

John 3. 8.

The next signe in the same verse too: And you hear the noise of it. For, so the Apostle saith, the Spirit speaks evidently: that is, His noise and speech is evidently to be distinguished, from those of other spirits. His coming in tongues this day, sheweth no lesse. Which signe speech doth best and most properly sort here, with a witnesse. For, a witnesse, what he hath to testifie, speaks it out vocally.

Acts 9 1.
Ephes. 4. 29.
Mat. 14. 70.

What noise then is heard from us (What breathe we? What speaks the Spirit manifestly from our mouths? If cursing, and bitternesse, and many a foul oath, if this noise be heard from us: If we breathe minas & cædes, blustter out threatning and slaying (that noise:) If σαπρὸς λόγος, rotten, corrupt, obscene communication come out of our mouths; we are of Galilee, and our very speech bewrayeth us. This is not the breath of the Spirit; this, He speaks not: evidently He speaks it not. It is not the tongue of heaven, this: Not ficus dedit Spiritus eloqui, no utterance of the Spirits giving. Some of CHRIST'S water would do well, to wash these out of our mouths. The speech sounding of the Spirit, is a signe of the true Spirit.

Action.
1 Cor. 12. 11.
Mat 12. 43.
James 4. 5.
1 Cor. 2. 12.

The last (but the surest of all) omnia hæc operatur spiritus. And the work is as clearly to be distinguished, as the speech. Each Spirit hath his own proper work, and is known by it. No man ever saw the works of the Divel come from the Spirit of GOD. Be not deceived, the works of uncleannesse come from no Spirit, but the unclean spirit. The works of Cain, from the spirit of envie: The works of Demas, from the spirit of the world. All the grosse errors of our life from the spirit of error. But this this is the Spirit of Truth. And the breath, the speech, the operations of Him, bear witnesse, that He is so. Now, if He will depose, that the water and blood, CHRIST came in, He came in, for us; and we our parts in them: in them, and in them bote: and so deposing, if we feele His breath, hear His speech, see His works according, we may receive His witnesse then: For, His witnesse is true.

Now, that upon this day, the day of the Spirit, the Spirit may come and bear this witnesse, to Christs water and blood; there is to be water and blood, for the Spirit to bear witnesse to. So was there (ever) as this day, in the Church of Christ. Water: a solemne Baptisme in memory of the first three thousand, this day, baptized by Saint Peter. And blood: never a more frequent Eucharist, than at Pentecost, in honour of this Spirit, to which Saint Paul made such haste with his almes and offerings. Witnesse the Acts 20.16. great works done by Pentecoſtall oblations: which very oblations remain in ſome Churches to this day.

3. The Reverſal. So are we now come to the Reverſal, to the laſt non ſolum; and here it is. Not in the Spirit alone, but in water and blood, reciprocè. As not theſe, without the Spirit: ſo neither the Spirit without theſe, that is, without the Sacrament, wherein theſe be. So have we a perfect circle now. Neither in water, without blood; nor in blood without water; nor in them alone without the Spirit; nor in the Spirit alone without them.

This day, CHRIST comes to us in blood, in the Sacrament of it (ſo.) But (as we ſaid before) either is in other: Blood is not miniſtred, but there is an ingredient of the purifying vertue of water withal in it: So, He comes in water, too. Yea, comes in water firſt; ſo lie they in the Text: water to go before, with us. So did it, at the very inſtitution it ſelf, of this Sacrament. The pitcher of water, and he that carried it, was not in vain given for a ſigne: went not before them, that were ſent to make ready for it, for nothing.

Mar. 14.13.

It had a meaning, that water; and it had an uſe. Their feet were waſhed with it, and their feet being clean, they were clean every whit. Many make ready for it, that ſee neither water nor pitcher; it were well, they did: their feet would be waſhed; ſo would their hands, in innocencie, that are to go to his Altar. In innocencie, that is, in a ſtedfaſt purpoſe of keeping our ſelves clean: ſo, to come. For, to come, and not with that purpoſe, better not come at all. To find a feeling of this purpoſe before, and to mark well the ſucceſſe and effect, that doth follow after. For, if it faile us continually, Chriſt did not come. For, when He comes, though it be in blood, yet He comes with water at the ſame time. Ever in both: never in one alone.

John 13.10.

Pſal. 26.6.

His blood is not only drink, to nouriſh; but medicine, to purge. To nouriſh the new man, which is faint and weak (GOD wot;) but to take down the old, which is rank in moſt. It is the proper effect of His blood; it doth cleanſe our conſciences from dead works, to ſerve the living God.

Heb. 9.14.

Which if we finde it both, Chriſt is come to us, as He is to come. And the Spirit is come, and puts His Teſte. And if we have His Teſte, we may go our way in peace; we have kept a right Feaſt to Him, and to the memory of His coming.

Even ſo come LORD JESUS, and come O bleſſed Spirit, and bear witneſſe to our Spirit; that CHRISTS water, and His blood, we have our part in both; both, in the fountain opened for ſin and for uncleanneſſe, and in the blood of the New Teſtament, the Legacy whereof, is everlaſting life in thy Kingdome of glory. Whither CHRIST, that paid the purchaſe; and the Spirit, that giveth the ſeiſin, vouchſafe to bring us all.

BEFORE THE

Kings Majesty,

At GREENWICH,

On the XX. of May, A. D. MDCXXI.

being WHIT-SUNDAY.

JAM. Chap. I. Ver. XVI, XVII.

Nolite itaque errare fratres mei dilectissimi:
Omne datum optimum, & omne donum perfectum desursum est, descendens à PATRE luminum, apud quem non est transmutatio, nec vicissitudinis obumbratio

Erre not my dear brethren.
Every good thing, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the FATHER of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadowing by turning.

AND, if every good giving, and every perfect gift, what giving so good, or what gift so perfect, as the gift of gifts, this dayes gift, the gift of the Holy Ghost? There are in it, all the points in the Text. It is from above; It descended visibly this day: and from the Father of lights; so many tongues, so many lights; which kindled such a light in the world on this day, as to this day is not put out, nor shall ever be, to the worlds end.

First, the HOLY GHOST is oft stiled by this very name or title, of the Gift of God. If ye knew the gift of God, (saith our Saviour) to the woman at the Wells side. What gift was that? It is plain there, the water of life. That water was the Spirit: This He spake of the Spirit (saith Saint John, who knew his mind best) as then, not yet given; but since (as upon this day) sent into the world. John 4 10. John 7. 39.

Secondly, This gift is both good and perfect: so good, as it is de bonis optimum, of all goods the best: and of all perfects, the most absolutely perfect: the gift of perfection, or perfection of all the gifts of God. What should I say? Not to be valued (saith Saint Peter) not to be uttered (saith Saint Paul) as Acts 8 20. 2 Cor. 9. 5.

if all the tongues that were on earth before, and all that came down this day, were little enough, or indeed were not enough, nor able any way to utter or expreſs it.

Thirdly, nay it is not one gift among many (how compleat ſoever) but it is many in one, ſo
Pſal. 68. 18. many tongues, ſo many gifts; as, ſo many grapes, in a cluſter; ſo many grains, in a Pomegranate. In this one gift, are all the reſt. Aſcending up on high, dona dedit, He gave gifts: all theſe dona were in hoc donо; all thoſe gifts in this gift; every one of them folded up as it were incluſivè. The Father, the fountain; the Son, the Ciſtern; the Holy Ghoſt, the Conduit-pipe, or pipes rather (for they are many) by and through which, they are derived down to us.

1 Cor. 2. 4. Fourthly, and laſtly, not only in Him, and by Him, but from Him too. For He is the gift and giver both. There is great variety of gifts (ſaith St. Paul) but it is one and the ſame Spirit, that maketh diſtribution of them to every man ſeverally, even as Himſelf pleaſeth. Both the thing given, and the Party that giveth it, all derived to us from Him, wrought in us by Him, and by us to be referred to Him.

At the time of any of Gods gifts ſent us by Him, to ſpeak of Scriptures of this nature, cannot ſeem unſeaſonable: but, of all other, at the time of this gift, moſt properly. Dona dedit hominibus; what day was that? even this very day. Dies donorum hic; ſo many tongues, ſo many gifts. This day (I ſay) whereto Donum Dei, and Donum Diei fall together ſo happily. We have brought it to the Day.

The Summe. It will not be amiſs to touch the end a little, which the Apoſtle aimeth at in theſe words. It is the 1 Joh. 2. 7. old, it is the new Commandment, Mandatum vetus & novum, to make us love God. The point whereto the Law and the Prophets drive; yea, the Goſpel and the Apoſtles, and all. We cannot love Him well, whom we think not well of: We cannot think well of him, whom we think, evil comes from. Then, to think ſo well of GOD, as not to think any evil: not any evil: no, but inſtead thereof, all good cometh to us, from Him. So thinking, we cannot chooſe but we muſt love Him.

And to this end (at the thirteenth verſe before) S. James had told us plain, God is not the author of evil: Not tempted Himſelf, nor tempting any to it. As at that verſe, not the Author of evil: So at this, the Author of all, and every good. Men, when their braines are turned with diving into Gods ſecrets, may conceipt as they pleaſe: but, when all is ſaid that can be, No man can ever entirely love him, whom he thinks ſo evil of, as to be the Author of all evil. We are (with S. James) to teach, and you to believe that, will procure you to love God the better; not that, will alien your minds, or make you love him the worſe. That therefore, S. James denies peremptorily: No evil, nemo dicat, Let no man ſpeak it, let it not once be ſpoken. But let this be hardly, That all the good we have or hope for, deſcends down from Him. And that S. James (here) affirms as earneſtly: Erre not my dear brethren. It is to erre, to think otherwiſe: for that abſolutely, Every good
Rom 15 30. giving, and again over, Every perfect gift, there is not one of them all, but from Him they come. And ſo, we in all duty to love Him, from whom all manner good proceedeth. This is His end, Love; and that falls fit and is proper to this Feaſt, the Feaſt of Love. For, Love is the proper effect of the Spirit (Per charitatem Spiritus;) the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Ghoſt, this day given unto us.

The Diviſion. The verſe, to the Chapter, is a clear and a ſtrict propoſition, but hath in it the force or energy, to Jam. 3. 11. make a compleat Argument. For, if all good from God, then no evil. S. James layes it for a ground: Salt or bitter water, and ſweet, cannot iſſue both from one fountain; Nor the works of darkneſs, from the Father of lights, never.

But we take it only as a propoſition, with a little Item, at the end of it. If we ask queſtions of Art concerning it, Qua, Quanta, Qualis? Qua? It is Categorical: Quanta? It is univerſal? Qualis? Firſt, it is affirmative: then, true, [erre not] goes before it. So true, as to think the contrary is a flat errour.

I. The rules of Logick divides a Propoſition to our hands, into the forepart (in Schools, they call it Subjectum:) and into the after-part, which they call prædicatum. 1. The Subjectum here is Omne datum, &c. The prædicatum, deſurſum eſt, &c. The Subject is double, 1 Datum bonum, and 2 Donum perfectum, with an univerſal note to either: Every good, and every perfect, to be ſure, to take in all, to leave out none. 2. The prædicatum, that ſtands of three points: 1 Whence: 2 How: and 3 From whom; from the Father of lights.

II. Then comes the Item (I told you of) proviſionally, to meet with an objection, a thought that might riſe in our hearts peradventure: That is, it may be, as the lights of the world, or the children, have their variations, their changes, ſo the Father alſo may have them. But that he puts us out of doubt of too, with as peremptory a negative: Be it with the lights as it will; with the Father of lights, with GOD, there is no variation, no change; No not ſo much as a ſhadow of them. In effect, as if he ſhould ſay: from the Father of lights, which is unchangeable; or from the unchangeable Father of lights: and ſo it ſhall be meer affirmative; but that, there is Major vis in negatione, Denial is ſtronger.

And all theſe he brings in, with a Nolite errare: and that not without juſt cauſe. For, about this verſe and the points in it, there are no leſs than ſeven ſundry errours. I ſhall note you them as I go, that you may avoid them. Together with ſuch matter of duty as ſhall incidently fall in from each. Specially, touching the gift of the day, the gift of the Holy Ghoſt.

To

I.

Of the Propoſition.

TO take the Propoſition in ſunder. The ſubject firſt: and that is double; 1 Datum, and 2 Donum: and either of them his proper Epithet; 1 Good, and perfect. Jointly, of both together firſt: after, ſeverally of either part.

1 The Subject thereof double.

1 Datum, and 2 Donum.

I.

Of Datum, and Donum joyntly

Datum, and Donum, they both come of Do; Given they are both. Where (firſt) becauſe it is the Feaſt of Tongues, to ſet our tongue right. For, the world and the Holy Ghoſt ſpeak not one language: Not with one tongue both. There ſhould not elſe have needed any to have been ſent down. The world talks of all, as had: the Holy Ghoſt, as given. Look to the Habendum (ſaith the world) the having: that is the Spirit of the Worlds. Religion, look to Donum and Datum, the giving: that is His. The Heathen calls His virtue ſo, a habit; that, comes of habendo. The Chriſtian (by Saint James here) dare, dapsum, datum and donum, all which come of Dando. Thus doth the Holy Ghoſt frame our Tongues to ſpeak, if we will ſpeak with the tongues of this day. They that do not, they are of Galilee, and their ſpeech bewrayeth them ſtraight.

Will you hear one of them? You know who ſaid, Soul thou haſt enough (haſt) and you know who ſpake otherwiſe, quid habes quod non accepiſti? What but that you have received? Receiving and giving (you know) are relatives; which, the other little thought of. You may know each, by their dialect.

Luke 12.19.
1 Cor. 4.7.

From the beginning: Eſau he ſaid, Habeo bona plurima frater mi, I have goods enough: that is his phraſe of ſpeech; that, the language of Edom. What ſaith Jacob at the ſame time? Eſau asking him, what were all the droves he met, They be (ſaith he) the good things that GOD hath given me. Have (ſaith Eſau:) Given me (ſaith Jacob.) Nonne habeo? Have not I power to crucifie thee, and have not I power to deliver thee? You may know it, it is Pilates voice. But our Saviour He tells him: Non haberes poteſtatem; Power ſhould he have had none, if it had not been given him, and given him from above: St. James his very phraſe (here) from CHRIST's own mouth. So muſt we ſpeak if we will ſpeak as CHRIST ſpake.

Gen. 33.9.
Gen. 33.6.
Joh. 10.10.
Joh. 19.11.

The I. Error.

This then is the firſt errour. To have our mind run, and our ſpeech run, all upon having. Men are all for having, think and ſpeak of what they have; without mention or whence, or how, or from whom they might receive it, or that it is given them at all. Nolite errare, Be not deceived; for, all that you have, is datum or donum, all; and they both are of free gift; given, all. Thus the tongue that ſate this day on S. James's head, taught him to call them. Thus far joyntly; now ſeverally.

Of each ſeverally.

1 Datum.

For there is a cleft in theſe tongues. The cleft is Datum and Donum. Would not wrap them all up in one word, but expreſſes them in two. Somewhat there is, in that. We may not admit of any idle Tautologies in Scripture. Two ſeveral ſorts then they be (theſe two) not oppoſite, but differing only in degree, as more and leſs. Every gift is a giving: Not every giving, a gift: Every perfect, good; not every good, perfect. We are not to think, either all our ſinnes, or all our gifts to be of one ſize. S. Matthews talent is more than S. Lukes pound; Cæſars penny, than the Widows two mites, yet good money all, in their ſeveral values. Of theſe two, 1 Datum, and 2 Donum; 1 Bonum, and 2 Perfectum; one is greater or leſs than another.

He begins with the leſs, Datum. Weigh the word, it is but a Participle: they have tenſes, and tenſes, time. So, that is only temporal. 1 Datum.

But Donum imports no time: ſo, a more ſet terme; hath more ſubſtance in it, is fixed or permanent. One (as it were) for term of years: The other, of the nature of a perpetuity. A Datum, that which is ſtill in giving; that, periſhes with the uſe, as do things tranſitory; and be of that ſort, that Job ſpake, GOD hath given, and GOD hath taken away. Donum is not ſo, but of that ſort, that CHRIST ſpeaks, in Maries choice, ſo given, as it ſhould never be taken from her. So, one referres to the things which are ſeen, which are temporal: the other, to the things not ſeen, that are eternal. One, to the body, and to this world: the other to the ſoul rather, and the life of the World to come.

Luke 10.42.

We ſhall diſcern it the more clearly, if we weigh the two Adjectives, 1 Good, and 2 perfect: they differ. Every good is not perfect. We know, the Law is good (ſaith the Apoſtle:) but we know withal, the Law bringeth nothing to perfection; ſo, not perfect. Nature (quâ natura) is good, yet unperfect: and the Law, in the rigour of it, not poſſible; through the imperfection of it. Nature is not, the Law is not taken away; good both: but grace is added to both, to perfect both: which needed not, if either were perfect. This worlds good; ſo doth S. John call our Wealth. Nay, bread, fiſh, and egges, we give our children, our SAVIOUR Himſelf calleth good gifts. But what are theſe? not worthy to be named, if you ſpeak of Donum Dei æternum, and the perfections there.

1 Bonum.
1 Tim. 1.8.
Heb. 7.19.
John 3.17.
Mat. 7.9, 10.

Before I was aware, I have told you, what is perfect, the glory, the joyes, the crown of heaven. For, when that perfect is come, all this unperfect ſhall be done away. But S. James ſeems not to ſpeak of that: he ſpeaks in the preſent, and of the preſent, what now is, what perfect in this life. And this (lo) brings us to donum dei, the gift of the Holy Ghoſt. For, to be partakers of the

2 Perfectum.
1 Cor. 13.10.

Divine

Divine nature, is all the perfection, we can here attain. No higher, here. Now, to be made partakers of the Spirit, is to be made partakers of the Divine nature. That is this days work. Partakers of the Spirit, we are, by receiving grace; which is nothing else but the breath of the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of grace, grace into the entire substance of the soul, dividing it self into two streams: 1 One goes to the understanding, the gift of faith; 2 The other to the will, the gift of charity, the very bond of perfection. 1 The tongues, to teach us knowledge; the fire, to kindle our affections. The state of grace, is the perfection of this life; to grow still from grace to grace, to profit in it. As to go on still forward, is the perfection of a traveller, to draw still nearer and nearer to his journeys end. To work to day and to morrow, as CHRIST said, and the third day to be perfect, perfectly perfect.

2 Pet. 1. 4.
Col. 3. 14.
Luke 13. 32.
1 Cor. 13. 12.

Omne datum, as much as omne Donum.

Now, as we are to follow the best gifts (it is S. Pauls counsel) the best, the most perfect: so are we to take notice too of the good, though not all out so perfect, as S. James adviseth us: knowing this, that be it giving, or be it gift; be it good, or be it perfect; He puts an Omne to both, comes over twise, 1 Every good, 2 Every perfect: both we receive, both are given us. Set down that. There was among the Heathen, one that went for wise, that said, To become rich, he would pray and sacrifice to Hercules; but to be vertuous or wise, he would do neither, neither to Hercules, nor to any god of them all; he would be beholden for that, to none but himself. Look in this cleft, he took to himself the more, left God the less. This was a gross errour: so gross I will not bid you take heed of it. But there be, that will not stand with God for the greater: but for the less, that they may be bold with, and take those to themselves. This is an errour too: Erre not thus. No; datum hath his omne, as well as donum; the good no less than the perfect; given both, one as well as the other. S. Paul puts us to it with Quid habes? that is, nihil habes: What have you? that is, you have nothing, but you have received it, but hath been given you. Δόσις and Δόσις are relations; one conferres the other.

The 2. Error.
1 Cor. 4. 7.

Away then with this second errour. He that made the Elephant, made the Ant; He, that the Eagle, the flie; He that the most glorious Angel in Heaven, the poorest worme that creeps on the earth. So, He that will give us the Kingdom of heaven, He it is, that gives us every piece of bread and meat, and puts us to acknowledge it: in one and the same prayer making us to sue, for regnum tuum, and for panem nostrum. Be not deceived to think otherwise. And hear you, you are to begin with datum, Not to despise the day of small things: It is the Prophets counsel: to learn to see God in them. Cæsars Image, not only in his coyn of Gold, but even upon the poor penny. See God in small, or you shall never see him in great; in good, or never in perfect. This for the subject. There is a cleft: all are not of one sort: some less, some greater: Greater or less, both are given. Not less had, and great given, but given both. And every one of both kinds, of the one kind as well as of the other.

The Prædicatum.

We have talked long of good; * Who will shew us any good? there be many that will say, nay there is not any but will say. That will S. James here. And first to shew us, turns our eye to the right place whence it comes. That is ἄνωθεν from above. There are two in this ἄνωθεν: 1 ἀπὸ, from, 2 and ἄνω, above. From: that is, from somewhere else, not from our selves: From without; and not out of us, from within. Aliunde ἔξωθεν: and that aliunde is from ἄνω above, not from κάτω, those lower parts upon the earth.

1 whence they come.
Deorsum.
* Psal. 4. 6.

Erre not then, either of these two ways: 1. First, not to reflect upon our selves, to look like Swans into our own bosomes. It grows not there, out of your selves: It is the gift of God (saith S. Paul) The very giving gives as much. Of our own we have it not.

The 3. and 4. Errours.
Eph. 2. 6.

2. If we look forth, let it not be about us, either on the right hand, or on the left, or any place here below. Look up: turn your eye thither. It is an influence; it is no vapour; an inspiration, no exhalation: thence it comes, hence it rises not: our spirit lusts after envy, and worse matter (James 4. 4.) Why should thoughts arise in your hearts? (saith Christ) If they arise, they are not good; if they be good, then they come down from above. Saint John Baptist is direct: A man can receive nothing, unless it be given him; and given him from above. And, of all other, not the gift of this Day: The Dove, the tongues came from on high both. From our selves, is one error: from any other beneath here, is another. Erre not then, the place is desursum, without and above us.

Luk. 24. 38.
Joh. 3. 27.

2. How they come.
Descendens.

Next, the manner, how; that it descends: for, even that word wants not his force. Descending is a voluntary motion: it concludes the will and the purpose of him, that so descends. It is no casualty; it falls not down by chance: It comes down, because it so will; a will it hath: Et ubi vult spirat, it blows not, but where it will: and it distributes to every one (the Spirit) but prout vult, as it pleaseth Himself, not otherwise.

Joh. 3. 8.

And this you may observe: the Scripture maketh choice (ever) of words sounding this way. He gives it, he casts it not about, at all adventure. He opens His hand, it runs not through His fingers. Sinum habet facilem, non perforatum: His bosome is open enough, yet hath no hole in it, to drop through against His will. He sent his Word (it came not by hap,) that is, Christ. And I will send you another Comforter, that is, the Holy Ghost. Nor He neither. Of his own will he begat us: they be the words that follow.

Act. 10. 36.
Joh. 15. 26. Vers. 10.

The V. Error.

It is the fifth errour, to ascribe to fortune either datum or donum. Erre not then: as the place is from above, so the manner, descendens, not decidens; they come, they are not let fall.

Whence,

Whence, we see, and how: Now, from whom. The party in a word is GOD. He had said as much before (Verse 5.) If any lack wisdome, let him ask it of God; How comes He (here) to use this somewhat unusual term, the Father of lights? It had been (to our thinking) more proper to have said, from GOD the Author of all good things. No, there is reason for it. For say; they are, they came down from above: when we cast up our eyes thither, we can see no further, our sight can reach no higher than the lights; than the lights there above. And so, some you have, that hold, they come from them, de luminibus, from the lights: that such a conjunction or aspect of them, such a constellation, or horoscope, such a position of such and such Planets, produce very much good. This is in Astrology, but not in Theology. μὴ πλανᾶσθε (of which word come the Planets) saith S. James, Wander not after the wandering stars: de luminibus, is not it; de Patre luminum is the right. So, the Father of lights was purposely chosen, to draw us from the lights. That, not they, they are not (not the children;) The Father, he it is, from whom they come, The lights: No, them He made to do service. Nay, the Angels above them, He made to be ministring spirits for our good. Be not deceived, with this neither: To lift up our eyes to the host of Heaven, and no further, but beyond them, to the Father of them all, and then you are where you should be.

1. From whom A patre luminum.

Why luminum of light.

Heb. 1. 14.

The VI. Error.

This may be one reason. But further if you ask, why not rather of all good, as He began; why is He gone from that term, to this of light? The answer is easie. If we speak of gifts, light it is princeps donorum Dei, the first gift GOD bestowed upon the world, and so will fit well. If of good; the first thing of which it is said, vidit Deus quod bona, was light: and so fit, that way too. If you speak of perfect; so perfect it is, as it is desired for it self, we take comfort in seeing it, we delight to see it, though we see nothing by it, nothing but the light it self (observed by Solomon, Eccles. xi. 5.)

Gen. 1. 3, 4.

And for good: such is the nearness of affinity, such (I may say) the con-naturality between light and good, as they would not be one without the other. All that good is, loves the light; would come to the light, would be made manifest, desires no bushel to hide it, but a candlestick, to shew it forth to all the world. That they might be searched with Lanthorns; to have the secrets, the hidden corners of their hearts looked into, that the Father of Lights would grant them so to be.

Joh. 3. 21. Mat. 5. 15.

For perfect: so perfect a thing is the light, as God Himself is said to be light: 1 Joh. 1. 5. His Son our Saviour, to be light of lights, the true light that lighteth every one that cometh into the world. His Spirit, light; so is our Collect: God which as upon this day hast taught the hearts of thy faithful people, by sending to them the light of thy Holy Spirit. The Angels that be good, be Angels of light. Yea whatsoever here on earth is perfect: the King is called, the Light of Israel; The Apostles called, Luces mundi; and the Saints of God, where ever they be in the World, shine as lights in it. That upon the matter, Father of good, and Father of light, is all one.

Joh. 1. 9.

2 Sam. 21. 17. Mat. 5. 14.

Pater luminis would have served, if we respect but this; but the nature. What say you to the number? It is luminum: why, of lights in the plural? That is, to give light to what we said before, of the divers degrees of the givings, and of the gifts of God. In the firmament, there is one light of the Sun, another of the Moon, and yet another of the starres: and, in the starres, one differeth from another in glory. Good every one, though not so perfect, one as another. He that made the bright sun in all his glory, He made the dimmest starre; all alike from Him; He like the Father of all.

Why luminum, not luminis.

1 Cor. 15. 40.

Besides, He sets them down in the plural [lights] for that the opposite (tenebræ) is a plural word (and indeed hath no singular) for, they are many, and so need many lights to match them. There is the senses outward darkness, there is the darkness of the inward man; both the darkness of the understanding by ignorance and errour, and the darkness of the will and heart by hatred and malice, 1 Joh. 2. 9. There is the darkness of adversity in this world, the hither darkness; there is some little light in it: And there is the blackness of darkness, the utter darkness of the world to come, no manner light at all. Nothing to be seen; but, to be heard; nor to be heard, but weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth.

Jude 13. Mat. 8. 12.

To match these so many darknesses there behoved to be as many lights; and so, Pater luminum comes in, not luminis. As, to match the many miseries of our nature, there were as many mercies requisite; ann so he, Pater misericordiarum, not misericordiæ (with the Apostle) of many, not of one alone. We need the number, as well as the thing; to have a multitude, a plurality of mercies, to have plenteous redemption, to haue χαριν πολυποικιλον, great variety of grace, and that over-abundant grace, that we might rest assured, there is enough and enough, in the Father of lights, to master and to over-match any darkness of the Prince of darkness, what or how many soever.

Psa. 130 7. 1 Pet. 4. 10. 1 Tim. 1. 14.

Shall I shew you these lights? Not the visible, of the Sun, Moon, and Starres, or fire or candle; I pass them. Besides them there is two in us; 1. The light of Nature, for rebelling against which, all that are without CHRIST, suffer condemnation. Solomon calls it the candle of the Lord searching even the very bowels (Proverbs 20.) which though it be dimme and not perfect, yet good it is: though lame, yet (as Mephibosheth) it is Regia proles, of the blood royal. 2. There is the light of GOD's Law: Lex, Lux (saith Solomon) totidem verbis, Prov. 6. and his Father, a lanthorne to his feet. Nay, in the nineteenth Psalme what he saith at the fourth verse, of the sun at the eighth he saith the same, of the Law of God; lights, both. 3. The light of prophecy, as of a candle that shineth

3 Why Pater, not Author. Now this only remaineth, why he is not called the Author, but the Father of these? In this is the manner of their descending. And that is, for that, they proceed from Him per modum naturæ, as the child from the Father; per modum emanationis, as the beams from the Sun. So both Father and light, shew the manner of their coming. Proper and natural for Him it is to give good. Good things come from Him as kindly, as do they: therefore said to be, not the Author, the Lord and giver, but even the very Father of them. It is against his nature to do otherwise; to pro-create or send forth ought, but good: His very loines, his bowels are all goodness. Father of darkness He cannot be, being Father of lights, nor of ought that is evil. For they two (dark and evil) are as near of kin, as light and good. This is the message (saith S. John) that we heard of him, and that we declare to you, that GOD is light, and in

Eph 6. 12. good, from the smallest spark to the greatest beam, from the least good giving to the best and most perfect gift of all, to Him, to the Father of lights. II. And all this may be: and yet all this being (it seems) some reply may be made and stand with the
The Item. Apostles term of lights well enough. That, what befalls the lights the children, may also befall the Fa-
The VII. error. ther of them. The great and most perfect light in this world, is the Sunne in the firmament; and two things evidently befall him, the two in the Text: παραλλαγὴ variation He admits, declines, and goes down and leave us in the dark; that is His parallaxe, in His motion from East to West. And, turning He admits; turns back, goes from us, and leaves us to long winter nights; that is His τροπαί; in His motion from North to South. One of these he doth every day: the other every year. Successively removing from one hemisphere to the other; when it is light there, it is dark here. Successively turning from one Tropike to another; when the days be long there, they be short here. And, if we shall say any thing of the shadow here, that way we lose Him too in part, by interposing of the clouds, when the day is over-cast. So, the night is His parallaxe: the winter His τροπαί, dark weather His shadow at least. Shadows do but take Him away in part, that is not good. But darkness takes Him away clean; that, is perfectly evil.

That it may be even so with the Father of lights, as with this it is. Good and evil come from Him alternis vicibus, by turn; and as darkness and light successively, from them. That it may fare with Him as with the Heathen Jupiter: who had (say they) in his Entry, two great vats, both full, one of good, the other of evil; and that he served them out into the world, both of the good and of the evil as he saw cause; but commonly for one of good, two of evil at least.

It was more than requisite, he should clear this objection. So doth he; denieth both (all three if

Jer 2. 17. us. It is the ship that moves, though they that be in it think the land goes from them, not they from it. Seems there any variation, as that of the night? It is umbra terræ makes it; the light makes it not. Is there any thing resembling a shadow? A vapour rises from us, makes the cloud; which is as a pent-house between, and takes Him from our sight. That vapour is our lust: There, is the apud quem. Is any tempted? it is his own lust doth it; that, entises him to sin, that brings us to the shadow of death. It is not God. No more than He can be tempted, no more can He tempt any. If we find any change, Psal 39. 6. the apud is with us, not Him; we change, He is unchanged. Man walks in a vain shadow: His wayes are the Truth. He cannot deny Himself.

Every evil, the more perfectly evil it is, the more it is from below: Either rises from the steam of our nature corrupted; or (yet lower,) ascends as a gross smoak, from the bottomless pit, from the Prince of darkness, as full of varying and turning into all shapes and shadows, as God is far from both, who is uniform and constant in all His courses.

Shall

Shall we now caſt up all into one ſum, the errors by them, and the verities by themſelves, and oppoſe each to each? The firſt error: to be all for having; never ſpeak of it. The verity: that all is giving, or gifts, to be for it. The ſecond error: to think, great matters only are given, the meaner we have of our ſelves. The verity: perfect, as well as good; and good as perfect, they be given both. The third error: to think, they are from us, not elſewhere from others. The verity: they are ἔξωθεν, they grow not in us, we ſpin them not out of our ſelves. The fourth error: they be from below; we gather them here. The verity: they be from ἄνω, that is above, not here beneath. The fifth error: to think that from thence they fall promiſcuè, catch who catch may, hap-hazard. The verity: they fall not by chance; they deſcend by providence, and that regularly. The ſixth error; they deſcend then from the ſtarres or planets. The verity: not from them, or either of them, but from the Father of them. The ſeventh and laſt error: to think, that by turns, he ſends one while good, otherwhile bad, and ſo varies and changes. The verity: He doth neither. The lights may varie; He is invariable: they may change, He is unchangeable: conſtant alwayes, and like Himſelf. Now our leſſons from theſe.

1. And is it thus? And are they given? Then, quid gloriaris? let us have no boaſting. Are they given, why forget you the giver? Let Him be had in memory, He is worthy ſo to be had. 2. Be the giving, as well as the gift; and the good, as the perfect, of gifts, both? Then acknowledge it in both, take the one as the pledge, make the one as a ſtep to the other. 3. Are they from ſomewhere elſe, not from our ſelves? Learn then to ſay, and to ſay with feeling, Non nobis Domine, quia non à nobis. 4. Are they from on high? Look not down to the ground then, as Swine to the Acrones, they find lying there, and never once up to the Tree they came from. Look up: the very frame of our body gives that way. It is natures check to us, to have our head bear upward, and our heart grovel below. 5. Do they deſcend? Aſcribe them then to purpoſe, not to time or chance. No Table to fortune (ſaith the Prophet.) 6. Are they from the Father of lights? Then never go to the children: A ſignis cœli nolite timere: Neither fear nor hope for any thing from any light of them all. 7. Are His gifts without repentance? Varies he not? Whom He loves, doth He love to the end? Let our ſervice be ſo too, not wavering. O that we changed from Him, no more than He from us? Not from the light of grace, to the ſhadow of ſin, as we do full often.

The Duty.

Eſay 65 11. Jer. 10. 2. Rom. 11. 29. Joh. 13. 1.

But above all, that which is ex tota ſubſtantia, that if we find any want of any giving or gift, good or perfect, this Text gives us light whither to look, to whom to repair for them: To the Father of lights. And even ſo let us do. Ad Patrem luminum, cum primo lumine. Let the light every day, ſo ſoon as we ſee it, put us in mind to get us to the Father of lights. Aſcendat oratio, deſcendet miſeratio, let our prayer go up to Him, that His grace may come down to us: ſo to lighten us in our wayes and works, that we may in the end, come to dwell with Him, in the light which is φῶς ἀνέσπερον, light whereof there is no even-tide, the Sun whereof never ſets, nor knows tropike, the only thing we miſs, and wiſh for in our lights here, primum & ante omnia.

But, if we ſue for any, chiefly for the beſt, the moſt perfect gift of all, which this day deſcended and was given. This day was, and any day may be, but chiefly this day will be given to any that will deſire, as our Saviour promiſeth (Luke 11.) and will be as good as His word.

Luk. 11. 13. Jam. 4. 3.

Within us there is no Spirit but our own, and that luſts after envy, and other things as bad: from beneath it cannot be had: It is donum cœleſte; Simon, if he would give never ſo largely for it, cannot obtain it. It deſcended ad oculum this day, it was ſeen to deſcend, and ſo will.

Which deſcents from on high, from the Father of lights (there in the tongues of light) light on us to give us knowledge, a gift proportioned to light: and to give us comfort, a gift proportioned to light. By faith, to lighten, By grace to ſtabliſh our hearts.

1 Cor. Chap. XII.

Diviſiones vero gratiarum, &c.

*Or Diviſions. Ver. 4. *Now there are * Diverſities of Gifts, but the ſame* Spirit.

5 And there are diverſities of adminiſtrations, but the ſame Lord.

6. And there are diverſities of operations, but God is the ſame, which worketh all in all.

7. But the manifeſtation of the Spirit is given to every man, to profit withal.

A TEXT read at this Feaſt, of the Churches own choice: who (I will ever preſume) beſt knoweth, what Text will beſt fit every Feaſt; and ſo this. It begins (you ſee) and it ends in the Spirit, whoſe proper Feaſt this is. The Spirit is in the firſt verſe; and again the Spirit is in the laſt: firſt, and laſt, here we find him.

And if we will look well into it, we ſhall (in effect) find that, which hapned this Day, though in other terms. Here have you in this Text, gifts, as it might be the tongues, which came from Heaven this Day: For, what were thoſe tongues but gifts? And here have you again diviſions, as it might be clefts, in the tongues: For what is to cleave, but to divide? And, if you lack fire: here have you in the laſt verſe, manifeſtation, which is by light. For, the uſe of light, is to make manifeſt. So have you the Holy Ghoſt in cloven tongues of fire, in ſome more general terms: the gifts, the tongues, the diviſion, the cleft, the manifeſtation, the fire. Thoſe gifts, firſt divided, then made manifeſt, and that by the Spirit, amounting to the ſubſtance of the Feaſt: that there can be no queſtion, but the Text ſuits to the time, fully.

The

The Use we have of the whole Text, is; that in all humble thankfulneſs, we are to acknowledge the great goodneſs of the whole Deity entire, and of every perſon in it; So ſeriouſly taking to heart the Churches (that is, all our) good, as (we ſee) they do in a ſort meet here, and aſſemble themſelves, all three, each for his part to contribute, one, gifts; another, callings; a third, works. And then commit over the manifeſtation of all to the Spirit, ad utilitatem, to the profit (that is) to the general good of the Church, in whoſe good, is the good of us all. The Summe.

Now albeit, to authorize and to countenance the Feaſt the more, the whole three Perſons do here preſent themſelves, in a joynt concurrence to this work of diſtribution; yet, (you ſee) the Holy Ghoſt hath here a double part, and in that reſpect a prerogative above the other twain. For, the Spirit is in, at both. In, at the diviſion; and ſo are the reſt. And again, in, at the manifeſtation; ſo are none of the reſt. But, He there; and He alone. For, the tongues are His; and they are too manifeſt: So to him alone we owe the manifeſting. So, His, and ſo His the honour of the day, which is Feſtum linguarum, the Feaſt of tongues, or (if you will ſo call it) the Feaſt of manifeſtation. In very deed, the Holy Ghoſts Epiphany; allowing, as Chriſt, one, ſo Him another.

The Sum of all, is: That Chriſts errand being done, and he gone up on high, the Spirit this day, viſibly came down, for Him and in His name and ſtead, to take the charge, and to eſtabliſh an order in the Church: which order or eſtabliſhment is here ſet down. And think not it holds in the Church alone, but that in it is repreſented unto us a true pattern or mould of every other well compoſed Government. For, happy is the government, where the Holy Ghoſt beſtoweth the gifts, Chriſt appoints the places, and God effecteth the work, Works all in all.

And as Rectum is index ſui & obliqui, A ſtrait rule will diſcover as well what is crooked, as what is ſtrait, both: So under one have we here, as the lively image of a well ordered Society (for the preſerving of three aright, makes all well;) So withal the manifold obliquities and exorbitances in the Church, in the common-wealth every where; which ariſe from the errors about theſe three, 1 the gifts not regarded, 2 the places not well filled, 3 the works not workman-like performed. The not looking to of which three, hath brought, and is like more and more, to bring all out of courſe.

The Text (if ever any) is truly tripartite, as ſtanding evidenily of three parts: every one of the three, being a kind of Trinity. 1 Perſonal. 2 Real, and 3 Actual. The Diviſion. I. II. III.

1. Perſonal, theſe three, 1 the ſame Spirit, 2 the ſame Lord, 3 The ſame God. 2. Real, theſe three: 1 Gifts, 2 Adminiſtrations, or offices, 3 operations, or works. 3. Actual, theſe three; 1 Dividing, 2 manifeſting, 3 and profiting. Three diviſions from three, for three. The three real, they be the ground of all, the 1 gift, 2 offices, and 3 works: The three perſonal; 1 The Spirit, 2 Lord, and 3 God, are but from whence thoſe come. The three Actual, are but whither they will: 1 Divided; 2 So divided, as made manifeſt; 3 So made manifeſt, as not only 1 to make a ſhew, but ἀγῶ to ſome end; 2 That end to be, not σύμφορα, the hurt or trouble; but σύμφερον, 3 The good, not private, of our ſelves, but common, of all the whole body of the Church.

I. The Trinity perſonal.

FIrſt, and before all things, we find here, and finding we adore the holy bleſſed and glorious Trinity: the Spirit in plain terms, the other two in no leſs plain, if we look to but the VI. verſe of the V. Chapter before, where the Apoſtle ſaith: To us there is but one God, the Father of whom are all things, and we of Him; and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom are all things, and we by Him. So, by God is intended the Father, the firſt Perſon: by Lord, the Son, the ſecond: by the Spirit, the third, the uſual term or title of the Holy Ghoſt, all the Bible through. Theſe three, as in Trinity of Perſons here diſtinct; So, in Unity of Eſſence, one and the ſame. For though to each of theſe three, there is allowed a [the ſame;] yet come to the Deity, and they are not three [the ſames] but one the [ſame;] one, and the ſame God-head, to be bleſſed for ever.

1. Once before, are theſe three known thus ſolemnly to have met; at the creating of the world. 2 Once again, at the Baptiſm of Chriſt, the new creating it. 3 And here now the third time, at the Baptiſm of the Church, with the Holy Ghoſt. Where, as the manner is at all baptiſms, each beſtoweth a ſeveral gift, or largeſs, on the party baptized (that is) on the Church; for whom, and for whoſe good; all this dividing and all this manifeſting is. Nay, for whom and for whoſe good, the world it ſelf was created, Chriſt Himſelf baptized, and the Holy Ghoſt this Day viſibly ſent down.

The Trinity perſonal I deal with firſt, that we may know, where and from whom, all the reſt iſſue and proceed. All errors are tolerable, ſave two; about Alpha, the firſt letter, and Omega the laſt; about primum principium, and ultimus finis; the firſt beginning, whence all flow, and the laſt end, whereto all tend. We erre againſt the firſt, when we derive things amiſs: we erre againſt the ſecond, when we refer them amiſs: Divide them right, and refer them right, and all is right. And the right deriving is (as here) to bring all from the bleſſed Trinity.

From this Trinity perſonal, comes there here another (as I may call it) a Trinity real, of 1 gifts, 2 adminiſtrations, and 3 operations. I will tell you, what is meant by each. 1. By gifts, is meant the inward indowing, enabling, qualifying, whereby one, for his skill is meet and ſufficient for ought. A particular whereof to the number of nine, it ſet down, at the VIII, IX, and X. Verſes after. 2. By administrations, is meant the outward calling, place, function, or office, whereby one is authorised lawfully to deal with ought. Of these likewise you have a list to the number of eight at the XXVIII. verse after. 3. By operations, is meant the effect, or work done, wrought, or executed by the former two (the skill of the gift, and the power of the calling:) But these, are infinite (works:) no setting down of them; only so to be ranged, as every calling to know his own proper work, and so to deal with it.

So have you three quotients from three Divisors: 1 gifts, 2 offices, 3 works, from the 1 Father, 2 Son, and 3 Holy Ghost, referendo singula singulis. 1 Gifts, they from the Spirit: 2 Offices, they from Christ, the Lord: 3 Works, they from God the Father. The Spirit, He gives wherewith: Christ, He appoints wherein: the Father, He works where-about. The Spirit gives all to all: Christ, He appoints all for all: God the Father works all in all.

You are not (here) to think these three so limited, as that all and every of them, every of the three, come not from all and every Person of the Trinity. They come, all, from all. Our rule is the works of the Trinity (all, save those that reflect upon and between themselves inwardly) all outward, to any without them are never divided. What one doth, all do.

James 1. 17. Ephes. 4. 8. To make it plain in these. Gifts here are ascribed to the Spirit: But S. James saith, Every one of them comes from above from the Father: and S. Paul, he saith; Christ, when He ascended up on high, he gave gifts unto men. So, the gifts come from the other two Persons, no less than from the Spirit. Offices are here assigned unto the Lord (that is) Christ: yet, by and by (at the XXVIII. verse) it is said of God the Father, that He ordained Apostles, and so goes on there, with other Offices of the Church. And in Acts 20. 28. of the Holy Ghost it is said, Posuit vos Episcopos, that he placed them Bishops; and they are chief Offices. So that, Offices are from the other two, as well as from Christ. Works, they are

Joh. 5. 17. here appropriate to GOD (that is) the Father: yet in John V. with one breath Christ saith, My Father worketh hitherto, and so do I work as well as He: and in this Chapter, straight after (at the eleventh verse following) thus we read, All these things worketh one and the same Spirit. So, works as they are from the Father, so are they from the other two. And so all and every of the three Persons, equally interessed, in all and every of the three.

How is it then? How come they thus to be sorted? Sure rather in a kind of apt congruity than otherwise; only in a fit and convenient reference to the peculiar, and (if I may so call it) the personal attributes, which most properly suits with each Person whence they flow; As thus. The Spirit is the essential love of the Father, and the Son. Love then is his personal property: and love is bounteous; and from bounty come gifts. So, the gifts, they, from the Spirit. Christ, He is the essential Wisdom of the Father: and Sapientis est ordinare; that, is Wisdoms Office, saith the Philosopher: So, the ordering of Places, or Offices, falls to him. GOD, we call Him the Father Almighty; which sheweth, Might or power is His proper Attribute; and power it is, that worketh: So, the work is His peculiar. And thus come they, thus sorted. And so well we may repair to each severally for his several: Yet, with no exclusive to the rest; but to all, for all joyntly, for all that. This needs not trouble any.

No more needs their order in standing: The Holy Ghost first; and the Father last; otherwise then in Baptism, or in the Doxologie. The works appropriate to the Father, though they be in execution last, yet are they in intention first. It is (as in a solemn train) novissimi primi, the last go first, and primi novissimi, the first come last: and yet are first in order, though last in place. It is sure, the Work is the end of both the rest, and of all. Unumquodque propter operationem suam: Every thing, be it what it will, gift or place, is and hath his being for the work it hath to do. So, the Work is the chief of the three, and He the chief, whose the work is, let His standing be where it will.

II. The Trinity Real. To the doing whereof, there be required three things. And where there be more than one required, our books teach us, ever to consider them, first conjunctim, joyntly, altogether; then seriatim, each in order, as they stand; and lastly, seorsim, every one asunder by it self.

1. Of them joyntly. Joyntly then. To the doing of ought there is requisite, 1 hability of the party, 2 authority for the party, 3 and diligence in the party. 1 Meet and sufficient men; 2 they, orderly called, and placed; 3 diligent and painful at their business. To supply these, here are, 1 A gift wherewith, 2 a place wherein, 3 a work whereabout to imploy both: and none to take on him the work, except first in a calling; nor to take on him a calling, except he first have a gift meet for it. The Spirit is free of His gifts; by which, ability: Christ, He invites us to some calling; wherein, authority: God, He cals upon us to be at work: wherein, diligence is to be shewed.

Our duty it shall be to come, to be at these three doles, or divisions; to have our share in them. Out of the first: 1 Every one to get himself furnished with some gift. 2 Out of the second: to see himself bestowed in some calling. 3 Out of the third: having both these, to apply himself to some work; and namely, that work, that belongs to his calling. In a word; every one to find himself with a gift, in a calling, about a work. Not having the gift, not to affect or enter the calling; nor having the calling, not to venture upon the work.

By all means we are to avoid to frustrate this meeting of the Trinity. To do them this honour, to think all the three absolutely needful, and not any of the three more than needs. The Wisdom of GOD, as it is never wanting in any thing that needs; so neither is it lavish in any thing more than needs. And indeed, to hold any of the three superfluous, is (in effect) to call in question, whether some person in the Trinity be not superfluous; namely, that person, whose division we seem to set so light by.

All

All three then are to be had: We cannot miss any of them. If we miss the gifts, all will be done unskilfully; if the calling, all disorderly; if the work, all unprofitably, and to no purpose. Then, not to leave out, or to leap over the gift, that is a contempt of the Spirit: Nor the calling, that is a trespass against GOD the FATHER: Nor the work, that is an affront to GOD Himself. So much for conjunction: now for seriation.

All to be had, and in this order to be had, was here they stand marshalled. The gifts first, then, the calling to authorize; then, the work to make up all. But the gift, before the calling, and the calling, after the gift: the gift and calling both, before we be allowed to take any work in hand. The number not barred, the order not inverted. Neither the calling, before the gifts, nor the work, before the calling and gifts both be had. But every one and each, in his order, and turn. This order kept, the Church will flourish, the Common-Wealth prosper, and all the world be the better. We have done with conjunction, and seriation; and now we fall to division, to the several divisions. And first, to the Spirits (that is) the gifts, and the nature of them.

2. Of them seriatim, in their order.

The word is χαρίσματα. It is a word of the Christian style; you shall not read it in any Heathen Author. We turn it, Gifts. Gifts is somewhat too short: χάρισμα is more than a gift. But first, a gift it is. It is not enough with us Christians, that a thing be had with the Heathen man, if it is: he cares for no more: he cals it his. Sure he is, he hath it; and that is all he looks after: The Christian adds further, how he hath it: hath it not of himself, spins not his shred as the Spider doth, out of himself, but hath it of another, and hath it of gift. It is given him: Unicuique datur. (It is the 11. verse.) To every one is given. So, instead of Aristotles word, ἕξις, habite, he puts Saint James's word, δόσις or δώρημα, it is a gift, with him.

3. Of each severally. 1 χαρίσματα. The Gifts.

James 1. 17.

And how a gift? Not do, ut des; give him as good a thing for it, and so was well worthy of it: No, but of free gift. And so S. James his word δόμημα, which is no more but a gift, he adds S. Pauls here, χάρισμα, wherein there is χάρις, (that is) grace, and so a grace-gift, or gift of grace. This word, the pride of our nature digests not well: ὄφελε, and μεγάλα touch near: Nature is easily puft or blown up: but χάρισμα hath a prick in it for the bladder of our pride: as if either of our selves we had it, and received it not; or received it, but it was because we earn'd it. No: it is gratis accepistis on our part: and gratis data, on His: freely given of Him, freely received by us; and that is χαρισμα right.

Mat. 10. 8.

Freely given by Him; Who is that? The Spirit. The natural man sees, he hath a soul; and that is all the Spirit he takes notice of, and is therefore called animalis homo (that is) nothing but soul; that, is all his Spirit. The Christian takes notice of another Spirit, that is not his own; (that is) GOD's Spirit, the Holy Ghost: and that he is beholden to Him, who is one and the same Spirit. Else so many men, so many spirits. But this is but one and the same Spirit.

Given by the Spirit.

Verse 11.

Which one, and the same Spirit makes also against Paganism. For, they had nine Muses, and three graces, and (I wot not how many) Gods and Goddesses besides. We go but to one. All ours come from one, from the same Spirit. All our multitude is from Unity. All our diversity is from identity. All our divisions from integrity; from one and the same entire Spirit. A free gift from the free Spirit, a gift of grace from the Spirit of grace. So, from GOD, not from our selves; for CHRIST, not for our selves: by the Spirit, not by either our nature, or industry, not alone: For, without the Spirit, all our nature and industry will vanish, and nought come of them.

Thus it stands. The Heathen man thanks his own wit and study, for his learning; and we seclude them not: but this we say: When all is done with all our parts naturall, and all our acts habituall, if the Holy Ghost come not with His graces spiritual, no good will come of them. Therefore we to seek after spiritual gifts, and ζηλοῦτε (it is the Apostles word) zealously to seek them. For, though the Spirit give; yet we must sue and pray for them. Zachary makes but one Spirit of these two, 1 Grace, and 2 Prayer. Prayer, as the breathing out: Grace, as the drawing in: Both make but one breathing. To pray, then: and (more than to pray) to stir them up; the word is ἀναζωπυρεῖν, to blow them, and make them burn, as is used to be done to fire; and as is to be done to the fiery tongues of this day: Else you will have but a blaze of them; and all else, but cinders, cold and comfortlesse geer (GOD knows.) But so all are to be suiters, and to labour, to have a part in this dealing.

Zech. 12. 10.

From the Spirit then they come: but by way of division. Not, so, as some, all; some, never a whit; but by way of division. The nature whereof is, neither all gifts, to one; nor one gift, to all: But (as it follows) ἑκάστῳ, unicuique, to each some: neither donum hominibus, one gift to all men: nor dona homini, all gifts to one man: but dona hominibus, gifts to men: Every one his part of the divident; For such is the law of dividing.

By way of Division.

Verse 7.

Which division is of two sorts: 1 either of the thing it self in kind, 2 or of the measure. 1. The kind; which the Apostle speaks of in the seventh Chapter, and seventh verse; To every one is given his special, and proper gift; to one in this kind, to another in that. GOD so tempering, as the natural body, that in it, the eye should not have the gift to go, but to see; and the foot not to see, but to go; And as the great body of the world; In it, Hirams country should yield excellent timber and stone, and Solomons Country, good wheat and oyl, which is the ground of all commerce: So, the spiritual body; that in it, Paul should be deep learned, Apollo should be of better speech: one need another; one supply the need of another; ones abundance, the others want.

1 In Kind.

1 King. 5. 8. 11.

2 In measure.

But division is not of the kind only, but of the measure also. Divers measures there be in one and the same kind. Every one (saith the Apostle, Ephes. 4. 7.) according (not to the gift, but) to the measure of the gift of CHRIST. For, to some gave He talents (saith S. Matthew;) To some, but pounds (saith S. Luke:) Great odds. And of either, to one gave He five, to another three, to a third but one: in a different degree sensibly. To each, his portion in a proportion: His Ghomer the law calls it; the Gospel, his dimensum. And remember this well. For, not only the kind will come to be considered, but the measure too, when we come to see, who be in, and who be out at the Spirits division. And so much for the Spirit.

Mat. 25. 15. Luke 19. 13.

2 The Places or calling.

If we have done with the gifts, we come to the places: For where the Spirit ends, CHRIST begins. So is, if no gift, stay here and go no further; never meddle with the calling, or work. But what if we have a gift, may we not fall to work strait? No but a calling is first to be had, yet we put forth our hand to it. Which nemo sibi sumit, No man to take on him, unless he be called: Though a gift then, though a good gift, not (eo ipso) to think himself sufficiently warranted to fall a working. There goes more to it, than so. We must pass CHRIST's hands too, and not leap over His head. For, after the Holy Ghost hath done with us, CHRIST will appoint every one of us his calling.

Heb. 5. 4.

Which are divided for order 1 Cor. 14. 40.

Of which division the ground is, that every man is not, hand over head, confusedly to meddle with every matter; but all is to be done κατὰ τάξιν, orderly. Each to know his own. The very word [division] implieth order. Where we read divisions, some read diversities. But it is not so well (that.) Things, that are diverse, may lie together confusedly on heaps: But each must be sorted to his several rank and place: else are they not divided. So is, division is the better reading: and division is for order.

And order is a thing so highly pleasing to GOD, as the three Persons in Trinity (we see) have put themselves in order, to shew how well they love it. And order is a thing so nearly concerning us, as break order once, and break both your staves (saith GOD in Zachary) both that of Beauty, and that of Bonds. The staff of Beauty: For, no εὐπρεπείας, no manner of decency or comliness without it, but all out of fashion. The staff of Bonds: For, no τάξεως, no kind of steadiness or constancy, but all loose without it. All fals back to the first Tohu, and Bohu. For, all is Tohu (empty, and void) if the Spirit fill not with His gifts: And all is Bohu (a disordered rude Chaos of confusion, if Christ order it not by His Places and Callings). Every body fals to be doing with every thing, and so nothing done: nothing well done, I am sure. Every man therefore, what ever his gift be, to stay till he have his place and standing by Christ assigned him. It is judged needful (this) even in secular matters. Write one never so fair a hand, if he have not the calling of a publick Notary, his writing is not authentical. Be one never so deep a Lawyer, if he have not the place of a Judge, he can give no definitive sentence. No remedy then; there must be division of places, of administration, no less than of gifts.

Gen. 1. 2. תהו ובהו

What the places be.

Will you know what those places be? Eight of them are reckoned up at the 28. Verse. Not to trouble you with those that were erected, as needful at first, but were not to endure for a time: those that were to endure, are reduced to three, and stand together: 1 Teachers, 2 Helpers, 3 Governours. A threefold division, taught even the heathen by the light of nature, in their Religion. They had them all three in their: 1 ἱεροφάντας, their Teachers; 2 ἱεροδούλους, their Helpers; 3 ἱερομνήμονας their Governors. The very same prescribed by GOD to His people: 1 their Teachers, the Priests; 2 their Helpers, the Levites: 3 their Governors, the Sons of Aaron, called Nesiim, as true and proper Hebrew for Prelates, as Prælati is Latine. The same is known in the Church of Christ through all antiquity: 1 Presbyteri, to teach: 2 Diaconi, to help: 3 Episcopi, to govern: And never any other.

נשיאים

All these three here go under the name of Διάκονοι, the proper term of the lowest of the three. We turn it Administration: It is (indeed) ministery or service: and that on foot, and through the dust: For, so is the nature of the word. An ill word for pride; who had rather hear of words sounding of dominion, than of service; specially this service: For, it is but the order of Deaconship; and pride would be at least more than a Deacon. Yet, so we are all stiled here, and no other name for any. The very highest are but so. The King himself, twice made a Deacon (Rom. 13.) Gods Deacon: no other title. The best King that was (David) is said but to have served his time, Act. 13. Served, that was all. The glorious lights of heaven are said (Deut. 4.) to be created in ministerium, but for our service. The Angels of heaven are but ministring spirits, Heb. 1. Nay Christ Himself is stiled no otherwise (Rom. 15.) but that He was a Minister of the Circumcision. He that is LORD of all, and gives all the offices, calls His own but so.

Rom. 13. 4. Acts 13. 36. Deut. 4 10. Heb. 1. 14. Rom. 15. 8.

Divided they be; not scattered.

These places, we said before, are divided for order. Now I add further; they are divided, not scattered, or let fall: For, that is casual. Dividing is not so: but (as it is in the 11. ver.) pront vult, a voluntary act. He that distributes, knows what, and to whom He doth it. Places therefore are to be divided by knowledge: not scattered or scambled for, by hap and hazard. The Wind is to blow no man to preferment (Psal. 75.) It is the LORD, that is to dispose of them.

Psal. 75. 6.

And how to dispose or divide them? According to the former divisions of the Spirit. That these should first take place: the second depend upon those first: none taken to the second, till he have past the first. For, Christs Places, are for the Holy Ghosts gifts. Without inspiring with the grace, no aspiring to the place there should be. The Holy Ghost is by His gifts, to point out those that should be taken into these administrations. And where Christ placeth, so it is. For He placeth none, but whom the Holy Ghost commends. Christ is the door: of which door the Holy Ghost is Porter. No man passeth through the door, but whom the Porter openeth to. No man to Christ, but by and through the Holy Ghost: nor to the calling, but by and through the gift. They that come not that way (by the door) door) get in by ſome other back way; per pſeudothyrum, by ſome falſe poſtern: That marres all. This, is the true order; Vocavit ſervos, & talenta dedit: ſo is the Goſpel: whom He calls, He gives talents to. Mat. 25. 15. If he have none given him, he came uncalled; at leaſt by Chriſt: He call'd him not: He came un-ſent, at leaſt by God; he ſent him not. Though he anſwer, Here I am, Chriſt ſpoke not to him; Though he came running never ſo faſt, God ſent him not. Eſay asketh two queſtions, Quis tu hic? or Quaſi quis tu hic? quis, if by Chriſt; quaſi quis, if otherwiſe. And many a quaſi quis, (God wot) have we among us. Eſay 22. 16.

Joh. 10, 7.

What is then to be done; that Chriſt be not neglected, and his call? That every one betake himſelf to ſome calling, or other. In the Miniſtery, all: All Miniſters, Miniſters, either of the Church, or of the State and Common-wealth: But all Miniſters, Thoſe that are not, that diſpoſe not themſelves ſo to be, to be holden for ſuperfluous creatures, for inutilia terræ pondera, that cumber but the ground, and keep it barren: with whom the earth is burdened, and even groans under them. Deaf Adders they are, at Chriſts call they ſtop their ears, who calls every one to a Calling to do ſome ſervice ſome way. Luke 13. 8. Pſal. 58. 4. Eath one to have a calling.

To be in ſome Calling: but withal, to have a gift meet for that calling. But if not at the firſt dole (the Spirits) not at the ſecond (Chriſts:) no gift there, no place here. Can any man deviſe to ſpeak with more reaſon, than doth the Apoſtle (in the 14. Chapter following) If any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant; (that is) hold himſelf for ſuch, and not take on him the place or work of the skilful. It is againſt Gods will, if he do. Have you refuſed to gain knowledge? then have I refuſed you for being any Prieſt of mine. It is GOD Himſelf in Hoſea 4. Have you not uſed the means? Have you miſpent the time when you ſhould have laboured for the gift? Chriſt hath no place for you. Whom the Spirit furniſhed with gifts, for them it is Chriſt provideth places: for them, and none elſe. According to his gift. 1 Cor. 14. 38. Hoſea 4. 6.

1. And yet not every place for every gift, neither: But to have a calling proper to his gift: Proper to it for the kind; not to be miſ-ſorted into a place no ways meet: his gift lying one way, his place another. But put the right gift in the right place. In Kind.

2. Proper for the kind, and proper for the meaſure alſo. For, as there be meaſures in gifts; ſo there be degrees in places, to anſwer them. And one is not to thruſt himſelf into a place diſproportioned to the portion of his gifts (the Apoſtle cals it ὑπερεκτείνειν: ἐκτείνειν, is to extend, to ſtretch himſelf to the full of his meaſure: ὑπερεκτείνειν, is to ſtretch himſelf beyond it; to enter himſelf far beyond his ſtantling:) But if a mean gift, a mean calling to content him. Durus ſermo, for there is none ſo mean in gift, that he undervalues his gift, for any place, yea even of the beſt worth. You may ſee theſe two: (1 the kind, and 2 the degree:) the kind, in Uzziah: He had no calling to his work of incenſe, of burning incenſe; not at all. What became of him? You may read in his forehead. The degree, in Uzzah: he had a calling; was of the Tribe: went only beyond his degree: preſſed to touch the Ark, which was more than a Levite might do, and was ſtrucken dead for it by God. God no leſs angry with him, that went beyond the degree of his calling, than with Uzziah that had no kind of calling at all. None that is in therefore, to over-reach or preſume above his degree, but to keep him within compaſs. In Meaſure. 1 Cor. 10. 14. 2 Chro. 26. 16. 2 Sam. 6. 7.

Now the gifts be dealt, and the places fild: the Spirits gifts put into Chriſts, (that is) into right places. Now fall we to the third, to Gods diviſion, to ſet them to work. Every thing (we ſaid) hath his being, for the work it is to do. Gifts, calling and all for the work. For, if the work follow not, the gift is idle; you may caſt it away; the calling is idle, you may caſt it off. A vacation it might be; a vocation it is not. The gift is for the calling: the gift and calling (both) are for the work.

And will you obſerve the proceeding here of the Spirit firſt? The Spirit is neereſt reſembled to breath: Spiro, whence it comes, is to breathe. Breath (you know) is in the noſtrils: they be two; through, and from them both, the Spirit proceeds. To anſwer theſe, GOD the Father, CHRIST the Lord, are two; from them both, by way of ſpiration, comes the Spirit, the ſacred Breath of them both.

Now then ſecondly, as the Father doth beget the Son, and from them both proceeds the Holy Spirit; So, the gift to beget the calling (of right ſo it ſhould) and they both to produce the Work. And as no man comes to CHRIST, but by the Holy Ghoſt: So, no man to the calling, but by the gift. And as no man comes to the Father, but by Chriſt: ſo no man to the work, but by the calling.

Not to the work. The very word work (ἔργον) at once condemns three, ἄεργον, παράεργον, ἀνέργον. Ἄεργον firſt. Such as are idle bodies; do no work at all: ſpend their dayes in vanity; conſume whole years, in doing juſt nothing. This (of Works) is GOD's diviſion: who is not (Himſelf) would not have us, idle. Uſque operatur, ſtill He works; ſtill he would have us ſo to do. Not as Jonas: get us a gourd, and ſit under it, and ſee what will become of Ninive; but ſtir not a foot to help it. Not to lie ſoaking in the broth (as Ezekiel ſaid of the great men in his dayes:) The City is the cauldron, the wealth is the broth, and in the broth they lie ſoaking, and all is well. Saint Paul calls them the Lolligoes of the Land. His word is καταργεῖν; The ſix dayes, and the ſeventh, to them both alike; Holy day-Chriſtians The Poet ſaid, Ἀεργοῖς αἰὲν ἑορτή: Every day is holy day with idle people. Out of this diviſion, out of operations, they. 3 The Work. ἔργον. 1 Not ἄεργον. John 5. 17. Jon. 4. 6. Ezek. 11. 3. 2 Cor. 11. 9.

The next ſort, they will not be idle; but it were as good they were. They will be doing, but it is παράεργον all they do: Nothing to any purpoſe; from and beſide it quite. Opus quo nihil opus, ſome needleſs work; quæ nihil attinet, as good let alone: leaving undone, that they ſhould and are to do, and catching at ſomewhat elſe, and mightily buſying themſelves about that; and all to no end. Anni eorum meditati ſunt ſicut aranea, ſaith the Pſalm: Very buſie they be; but it is about weaving Not παράεργον. Pſal. 90. 10.

cobwebs: no body ſhall wear them, or be the warmer for them: to no profit in the world.

Not ἀλλότριον. And as theſe deale with quaenihil attinet; So the laſt (ἀλλότριον) with thoſe, quæ nihil ad eos attinet, that concern not them at all. That will be doing, but it is with that, they have nothing to do. There are diviſions of works, and they work out of their diviſion: love to be buſie; to be dealing with any bodies work, ſave their own. Which is lightly the buſie-bodies occupation, condemned by the Apoſtle, not in men only (2 Theſſ. 3.) but even in the other ſex, too (1 Tim. 5.) For they alſo will be medling:

2 Theſſ. 3. 11. περιεργαζομένους is of both genders.

1 Tim. 5. 13. I told you before, the callings were founded upon order, and to keep them, ſo have their ἐξουσίας, limits, or bounds. And they do all ἀτάκτως περιπατεῖν, walk out of order, diſorderly break the pales, and over they go; that leaving their own, become (as Saint Peters word is) ἀλλοτριεπισκοποι, Biſhops of

1 Pet. 4. 15. other mens Dioceſes: Do no good in their own, ſpend their time in finding fault with others. A thing not to be endured by any body. Take the natural body for example, wherein the Spirit, blood, choler, and other humours are to keep and contain themſelves, to hold every one in his own proper veſſel: as blood in the veines; choler in the gall: And if once they be out of them, the blood out of the veine makes an Apoſtume: the choler out of the gall makes a Jaundiſe all over the body. Believe it, this is an evil ſickneſſe under the Sun, that the diviſion of works is not kept more ſtrictly. They are divided according to the callings: Every work is not for every calling. For then what needs any dividing? But as the calling is, ſo are the works to be: every one to intend his own, wherein (it is preſumed) his skill lies, and not to buſie himſelf with others: For, that is ἀλλότριον. And theſe are the three errors about operations.

It will not be amiſſe, if we look yet a little farther into this word. For, it is ἐνέργημα, which is more than ἔργον. For ἐνέργημα, is not every work: it is an in-wrought work. A work wrought by us ſo, as in us alſo. And both, it may be. For ἐνεργεία and συνεργεία take not away, one the other. So then by our ſelves, as by ſome other beſide our ſelves; and that is GOD, who is ſaid here to work all in all.

All in all. If we take it at the uttermoſt extent, it will reach, then we muſt be well aware to ſever the defect, or deformity of the work from the work it ſelf, as well we may. Moving is the work, halting is the deformity. Moving, that comes from the ſoul, is wrought by it: halting (the deformity) not from the ſoul, whence the moving comes; but that is cauſed by the crookedneſſe of the leg. So is the evil of the work: the defect, from us; the work, from GOD, and that His.

John 15. 5. But of all our good, all our well-wrought works, of them, we ſay not only, Sine Me nihil poteſtis facere, We can do none of them without Him: But farther, we ſay with the Propher, Domine, omnia opera

Eſay 26. 12. noſtra operatus es in nobis: In them, He doth not only co-operate with us from without; but, even from within (as I may ſay) in-operate them in us; πιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, working in you. Then, if there go

Heb. 13. 21. another Workman to them beſides our ſelves, we are not to take them wholly to our ſelves. But, if that other Workman be GOD; we will allow Him for the principal Workman, at the leaſt. That, upon the whole matter, if our ability be but of gift; if our calling, be but a ſervice; if our very work, but ἐνέργημα, a thing wrought in us; cecidit Babylon, pride falls to the ground: theſe three have laid it flat.

But beſides this, there are three points more in ἐνέργημα; I will touch them firſt. 1. In us they are ſaid to be wrought; to ſhew, our works ſhould not be ſkrewed from us; wound out of us with ſome wrinch from without, without which nothing would come from us by our will, if we could otherwiſe chooſe: Ἐξεργάσματα, theſe properly. But ἐνεργάματα, from within: hath the principium motus, there, and thence: And ſo, are natural and kindly works.

2. Next; from within: To ſhew, they are not taken-on-works, done in hypocriſie: So the outſide fair, what is within, it skils not. But, that there be truth in the inward parts; that there it be wrought, Pſal. 51. 6. and that thence it come.

3. And laſt, if it be an ἐνέργημα, it hath an energie (that is) a workmanſhip, ſuch as that the gift appears in it. For energie implies, it is not done utcunque, but workman-like done. Elſe there is an aërgie, but no energie in it. And even the very word [of diviſion] comes to as much. Dividing implies skill to hit the joynt, right: For, that, is to divide. To cut at venture, quite beſide the joynt, it skils not where, through skin and bones and all; that, is to chop and mangle, and not to divide. Diviſion hath Art, ever. And this for GOD's diviſion, the diviſion of works. And ſo now you have all three.

We have ſet down the order. Will you now reflect upon it a little, and ſee the variation of the compaſſe, and ſee how theſe diviſions are all put out of order; and who be in, and who be out at every one of them? Firſt, whereas the gift and the calling are (and ſo are to be) Relatives, neither without the other; There are men of no gifts (to ſpeak of) that may ſeeme to have come too late, or to have been away quite, at the firſt of the Spirits dealing: No ſhare they have of it; yet what do they? Fairly ſtride over the gifts; never care for them; and ſtep into the calling over the gifts, and ſo over the Holy Ghoſts head. Where they ſhould begin with the gift, the firſt thing they begin with, is to get them a good place. Let the gift come after, if it will: or if it do not, it skills not greatly. They are well: they lie ſoking in the broth, in the mean time. This neglect of the gift, in effect is a plain contempt of the Spirit, as there were no great need of the Holy Ghoſt.

Thus it ſhould be: As one ſpeeds at the firſt diviſion, ſo he ſhould at the ſecond. If no grace from the Spirit; no place with CHRIST. If ſome one, but a meane one, let his place be according. He with the two mites, not in the place of him with the five talents: (or as one well expreſt it) not little-learned Aurelius, Biſhop of great Carthage, and great-learned Saint Auguſtine, Biſhop of little Hippo. This is a treſpaſſe ſure, againſt the firſt diviſion: which reſpecteth not only the gifts in ſpecie, but in meaſure ſure too. Proportion the places, to the proportion of the gifts: which proportion (we know) is both wayes broken, whether a low gift have a high place, or a rich gift be let lie in a poor place; contrary to the minde of CHRIST, who would have the degree of the place, as near as could be, to the meaſure of the gift.

There ſhould be but one GOD. In the Text, there is no more. But here is another. The Apoſtle calls him the God of this world: who hath his ἐργασίαν, who works too: and his works tend to deface, and damnifie the Church, all he may. 2 Cor 4. 4.

Nor, there is but one Lord here, to divide places. But by a jure patronatus, other Lords there are, that make diviſions, and ſubdiviſions of them: Of whom the poor ſubdivided places may ſay (with Eſay) O LORD, other Lords beſides thee had the diſpoſing of us. Eſay 26. 10.

So, there is but one Spirit. But, another ſpirit there is abroad in the world. He that carried CHRIST up to the top of the mountain, and talkt of Tibi dabo, as if he had gifts too. Mat. 4. 9.

I ſhall be ſorry to make any other diviſion of gifts, than thoſe of the Holy Ghoſt. But, made it muſt be, which the world hath made, and makes daily; and makes more accompt of them, than of theſe here in the Text. And indeed, ſuch accompt, as the Holy Ghoſt may ſit ſtill, and keep his gifts undivided well enough. The other Spirit divides other manner gifts, than the Holy Ghoſt hath any. The gifts of the Holy Ghoſt are dona pectoris, came out of the breaſt: you would think, the others come out of the breaſt too; but they come but out of the boſome. And in ſpeculation we ſay, the Holy Ghoſts gifts are far above theſe; but, in practice, they are daily found to be far above them in power. For, the Wiſe-man ſaith, Dilatant viam hominis, theſe gifts have a power to make a way through never ſo thick a preaſe, power to make any door flie open afore them. They ſpeak of graces: They make any, that come with them, more gracious, than theſe of Saint Paul. Nay, they will diſgrace them, and marre their faſhion quite, Prov. 18. 16.

But then thoſe gifts hold not of this Feaſt, not of Pentecoſt; but hold of the Feaſt of Simon and Jude, they. The Church hath joyned theſe two Saints, in one Feaſt: and the Divel (in many things elſe, GOD's Ape) hath made a like joyning of his too, in imitation of the true. His Simon, is Simon Magus, not Simon Zelotes; and Jude, Judas Iſcariot, not Judas the brother of James; No kin to him. Simon, he came off roundly, χρήματα, offered frankly, would come to the price. And Judas, he would know what they would give, how thankful they would be; and it was done, and there goeth a bargain. Theſe two are like enough to agree. And thus is the Holy Ghoſt defeated: bought out, He and His gifts by Simon ſtill. And thus is CHRIST betrayed in His places; and that, by Judas ſtill. This wicked fraternity of Simon and Jude, are the bane of the Church, unto this day. Judas that ſold CHRIST, like enough to make ſale of CHRIST's places. Simon, that would buy the Holy Ghoſt, (had He been to be ſold) as like to buy out the Holy Ghoſts gifts, as the Holy Ghoſt Himſelf. And this fault in the firſt concoction, is never after amended in the ſecond. For, with ſuch as theſe GOD will never co-operate: never comes there any fruit of ſuch. Enough, if any thing were enough. But thus CHRIST's places go againſt CHRIST's will. Acts. 8. 18. Mat. 26. 15.

Thus have ye a calling without a gift. What ſay you now to a gift without a calling? Thoſe, are not for the Holy Ghoſt: theſe care as little for CHRIST. Some ſuch there are; no man muſt ſay, but gifts they have, ſuch as they be: but they care not greatly for troubling themſelves with any calling. They are even as well without. Hop up and down as Graſſhoppers, hither and thither, but place they will have none; yet their fingers itch, and they cannot hold them; doing they muſt be: and if they have got but the leſſ end of a gift, have at the work; be doing they will, of their own heads (uncall'd by any ſo, that have right to call:) And for default of others, even make no more ado, but call themſelves: Lay their own hands upon their own heads; utterly againſt CHRIST's minde, and rule. And ſo over CHRIST's head they come, from the gift to the work, without any calling at all. 2

Well in theſe two they have ſomewhat yet: Either a calling without a gift, or a gift without a calling. What ſay you to them, that have neither; but fetch their run for all that, and leap quite over gift and calling, Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt (both) and chop into the work at the firſt daſh? That put themſelves into buſineſſes, which they have neither fitneſſe for, nor calling to? Yet no man can keep them, but meddle they will, and in Church-matters ſpecially: there ſooneſt of all: And print us Catechiſmes, and compoſe us Treatiſes; ſet out Prayers and new Pſalmes, as if every forreigner were free, and might ſet up with us. Good Lord, what the poor Church ſuffers in this kinde! 3

Yet have you a fourth, no leſſe ill than any of theſe. And theſe be ſuch as have gifts and calling both, it cannot be denied, yet fall ſhort at the work: Work not at all. Wrap up their talent: fold it up in a napkin, and lay it by them. Let their calling lie fallow: get them into Jonas gourd, and ſit gazing there; or into Ezekiels caldron, and lie ſoaking there. Work who will, and work GOD in whom He will; in them He ſhall work nothing: Nothing (ſo) to any publick good. Theſe have great accompt to make to GOD, for thus treading under their foot His diviſion. Nay, to all three: to Chriſt alſo, for the contempt of his calling; and to the Holy Ghoſt too, for burying his gifts. 4 Luke 19. 20. Jonas 4. 9. Ezek. 11. 3.

So have you 1 a calling and no gift; 2 a gift, and no calling; 3 neither gift, nor calling, but work for all that; 4 both gift, and calling, and no work, not for all that. All awry; all in obliquity, for want of obſerving the order here eſtabliſhed. Theſe obliquities to avoid:

III. The Trinity actuall.

It is the will of GOD, that this Trinity Reall ſhould meet, and grow into Unity as the perſonal it ſelf doth: that ſo this here, on earth beneath, may grow, and be conformed to that there, in heaven above. the former three diviſions, in the former three Verſes, all meet in the Unity, and manifeſtation, in this fourth Verſe: which is the Spirits unity. And ſo come we now about to the Spirit again. For, all

1 Dividing. this dividing is not enough: But when the doles and divisions of all three is done, then begins the Spirit anew. For these must not be concealed, but be all manifested. And that must be by the tongues of this 2 Manifesting. day. Which is it, that giveth the Holy Ghost a more special interest than the rest, and makes the Feast to be His. For hitherto, they had as good a part as He.

If you mark it, dividing and giving is a kinde of inspiring, or breathing in: uttering and manifesting, a kinde of breathing out again of that was inspired. And these two are two natural and kindly acts of the Spirit in us, by breathing in, to receive; by breathing out, to utter it out, or manifest it. John 10. 38.

And it hath good coherence, and follows upon the work well (this manifestation.) For, every mans work is to make him manifest. No better way to take true notice of any, than by it. It is not Loquere, it is Operare, ut te videam. Christ saith not auribus or sermonibus; but operibus credite (that is) oculis credite. For, works be manifest, and may be seene.

It follows well likewise upon division. For, 1. First, division doth make manifest. Things that are propounded in grosse, eo ipso are obscure; and are therefore divided, that they may more distinctly, and plainly appear. 2. And second, manifestation it self is nothing but dividing. For, what is divided unto us by the three Persons, it is required, that we should divide unto others; and our dividing it among othe 3, is that, which here is called manifesting. That which we receive, when we make manifest, we are said to divide, and to distribute that which came unto us from the former three divisions.

1 Pet. 4. 10. But this is sure without manifesting, all divisions avail nothing, all the πολυποικιλος χαρις, all the manifold variety of the graces are to no purpose, no more than a treasure divided into never so many bags, if it be hidden, and not manifest, is to any profit, or any the better for it. Nay, it holds in all three. 1. In the gifts. We are not to rake them up, but to stir them up, and make them burn. 2. In the calling. We Rom. 1. 16. are not to be ashamed of it, but to professe it manifestly, as he did, Non me pudet Evangelii. 3. In the work. We are not to work inward, in a back-roome; but to open our shop, set out our wares and utter them. Divided and not manifested (that is) the tongues are cloven, but they have no fire; nothing to give light by. And light it is that maketh manifest. Which light is not to be hid under a bushel, but Matth. 5. 15. to be set upon a candlestick; or (as this Feast gives) not to be kept in the shadow, but brought out into the Sun: the bright and White-Sun of this Day.

3 Prefixing. Manifested then. And why? For μηδεν εικη, nothing is to be done in vaine: but in vaine, if to no end. To some end then. For παντα προς τι: and προς is here in the Text. It falls not into a wise man (much lesse, into the only wise GOD) to keep all this dividing and manifesting, and all to no end. To know that end then, that we run not in vaine, labour not in vaine, have not the gifts, take not on us the 2 Cor. 6. 1. calling, do not the works in vaine, receive not the grace of God in vaine; nay, receive not your own souls in vaine. Else, we fall upon the other capital error, about Omega, about our ultimus finis. To know our part then. For, Ignoranti quem portum petat, nullus secundus est ventus, He that knows not whither he is bound, no wind in the skie is good for him. To know our end then, whither to refer all. The gift is for the calling, and they both for the work, and they all three are for manifestation.

But then take heed of making manifestation, the end of it self, and go no farther. There are that make that their end; that do it, φαντασιαν (the Apostles word) to make a fair shew, to spread their feathers is all the use some have of their division. CHRISTS kindred would have made it, CHRISTS end, and shouldred him forward to it: If you can do, as they say you can do, then get you up to Jerusalem, John 7. 3. seek to manifest your self there, that you may be known for such: Win credit, and become famous. But CHRIST came to another end. And the Christians rule is, Nothing for vain-glory, either by provoking, by emulation. It is but Omicron, this: it is not Omega.

Wherefore then are we to manifest? Προς το συμφερον: here is our part; this is our end, to profit withal. Whether Paul, Apollo, or Cephas; whether gifts, places, or works, all are for this. This, is the end of all.

Far they are from this end, that have use of all three. But προς συμφορην, not συμφερον (that is) not to do good, but to do a shrewd turne withal, now and then. Nay, that will not stick to boast (one there Psal. 52. 1. was that did so; of whom the Psalme, Quid gloriaris? was made) how they are able to do one a displeasure by their place, and pay him home, if need be. As if officium came of officiendo, of standing in another mans light, of doing other men hurt. Otherwise (I trust) themselves take no hurt by their offices. But take this for a rule, the Apostle gives it two several times: There is no power given to any to 2 Cor. 10. 8. destruction, or to do harme; for edification it is, all that is; to do good with, and therein to be made 2 Cor. 13. 10. manifest. We may not hatch Cockatrice egges to do mischief unto any, as they do to such as eat them. Esay 59. 5.

But all προς το συμφερον. It is a compound word, and we will take it in pieces. First, φερειν, which is to 1 bring, to 2 bring in, to 3 bring forth, to 4 bring with. To bring in, what? What profit is there (saith Psal. 30. 9. the Psalme?) To bring in some profit. To bring forth, what? What fruit had you (saith the Apostle?) Rom. 6. 21. To bring forth some fruit. To bring with it, what? That I may receive mine own with advantage Luke 19. 23. (saith he that gave the Talents:) To bring with it some advantage. Away with that (saith Elihu in Job) Job 33. 29. of which it may be said, it did me no good, no good came of it. These same vana & non profutura, away with ולא־שוא לי them (saith Samuel) never look after them. But what saith GOD by His Prophet? Ego sum Deus tuus docens te utilia: He teacheth us nothing, but that which will do us good. And what by the Apostle? 1 Sam 12. 21. These things are good and profitable for men, when he was in the Theme of good works. For, as we are for- Esay 48. 17. bidden to hatch Cockacrice egges, things that will do harme: so are we also in the same place, to weave Tit. 3. 8. spiders webs, things very finely spun, but for no bodies wearing; none the better for them. Our ενεργηματα must be ωφεληματα, works tending to profit with, else are they not the right works. Esay 59. 5.

Prov. 30. 15. But φερειν is not enough; to bring in. Bring in, Bring in, cries the Horsleeches two daughters, till their skin crack: But it is only for themselves; and that is not the right. For, it is not singulare commo- dum (this profit) our own private gaine. Here is yet another part. Here is συν (that is) con, which ever argues a community; a profit redounding to more than our ſelves. For, συμφερον properly is collatitium, where there be a great many; bring every one his ſtock, and lay them together, and make a common bank for them all. Juſt as do the members in the natural body. Every one confers his ſeveral gift, office and work, to the general benefit of the whole. Even as they did in the Law. Some offered gold, and others ſilk; others, linnen; and ſome, goats hair; and all to the furniture of the Tabernacle. And ſemblably we to lay together all the graces, places, worth, that we have, and to imploy them to the advancement of the common faith, and to the ſetting forward of the common Salvation.

For, the common Salvation is the profit here meant. The Apoſtle himſelf ſaith it plainly; not ſeeking mine own profit or benefit, but the profit of many. And how? that they may have lands or leaſes? No, But that they may be ſaved. Which is the true profit, redounding of all theſe, and which in the end will prove the beſt profit: which if any attaine not, What will it profit him, if he win the whole world? To which port we be all bound: to which port, GOD ſend us. 1 Cor. 1.33. Matth. 16.26.

And into this, as into the maine Ciſterne, do all theſe diviſions, manifeſtations and all run and empty themſelves. All gifts, offices, works are for this. Yea the bleſſed Trinity it ſelf, in their dividing, do all aime at this, And, this attained, all will be to Pax in terris, the quiet and peaceable ordering of things here on earth; and to Gloria in excelſis, the high pleaſure of Almighty GOD.

So come we about, and return again to the firſt point, we began with (that is) to the bleſſed Trinity. From them are theſe: and if from them, for them; if from their grace, for their glory: the glory of them that gave, ordered, and wrought: Gave the gifts to us; ordered the places for us; wrought the works in us. If we, the profit; they, the praiſe: the rather, for that even that praiſe ſhall redound to our profit alſo: the higheſt profit of all, the gaining of our ſouls, and the gaining of them a reſt in the heavenly kingdom, with all the three Perſons.

SERMON

BEFORE THE

Kings Majesty,

At RUMSEY,

On the V. of August, A. D. M.DC.VII.

II Sam. Chap. XVIII. Vers. XXXII.

Cui respondens Cushi, &c.

And Cushi answered, The enemies of my Lord the King, and all that rise against Thee, to do Thee hurt, be as that young man is.

THat young man was Absalom: And he was now hanging upon an Oak, with three darts through him. Like him doth Cushi wish, all may be, that do as he did (that is) be the Kings enemies, and rise up against him. For I find in the Text a dangerous Treason plotted against King David: plotted, but defeated, and Absalom the Author of it, brought to a wretched end. Good news thereof brought by Cushi that saw it. And that good news here concluded with this wish, That all the Kings enemies may speed no better, no otherwise than he sped. For all the world, like glad-tydings doth this day afford us, in a like memorable example of GODS just proceeding against a couple of like treacherous wretches. A barbarous and bloody Treason they imagined against our Soveraign. God brought their mischief upon their own heads, Et factis sunt sicut Absalom. And we are here now to renew with joy, the memory of these glad-tydings, and withal, to pray Cushi's prayer, and all to say Amen to it, That the like end may ever come to the like attempts. Last year we changed but one word; David into James: we change no more now, but the number; one into two. The enemies of my Lord, be as that young man, saith Cushi. Say we, The enemies of our Lord, be as those two young men were; those two brethren in mischief: I will not do them that honour, to name them; no more than Cushi did him here. Gen. 49. 5.

The

The words we read, as a prayer; they may also be read as a Prophecy: Either, Let them be, or, They shall be as that young man is (for, the verb is the future tense.) They have no other way, in Hebrew, to express their Optative but so: that hard it is, many times to say whether it be a prayer or a prediction, that so runs in the future, and, for ought I know, it must be left to the discretion of the Translator, to take which he will, since it may be both. As, Psal. 21. either the King shall rejoyce, by way of foretelling: or, Let the King rejoyce by way of wishing. The Jews use to take it both wayes: so, we shall be sure not to miss Cushi's meaning. And so will we do (for so we may do) even take it both wayes; for it is both: both a good prayer, and a true prophecy. And prayer and prophecy sort well together: Vota hominum sunt augurium (saith the Philosopher:) Optationes saepe faciunt opiniones (saith the Schoolman.) Our wishes we would always have modest, and our prayer turn into the nature of a prediction; what we pray for rightly, we would gladly perswade our selves shall be certainly.

The Division.

I. Of this Prophetical prayer then. 1 As a prayer, first, 2 then, as a Prophecy. Prayer is of two sorts: 1 for, or 2 against. As, 1 for good: so, 2 against evil; both, things and persons. This is against, a kind of prayer; indeed, an imprecation. Two things give forth themselves in the prayer: 1 The party; against whom it is; 2 and the wish it self, what it is. The parties are 1 first the Kings enemies: 2 then, those that arise up against him (that is) the King's Rebels. Two divers kinds: neither superfluous. For, there be no tautologies in Scripture: no doubling the point there, but with some advantage ever.

Verse 10.

The wish is, that they may be as Absalom. And two things are in that wish (if we mark them well:) 1 Be, as he, (that is) not perish only (that is not all) 2 but perish, and so perish as he did. How was that? Vidi Absalom pendentem, and so hanging yet alive, thrust through with three darts. As he, in his end: as he, in the manner of his end. That the heads that contrive, may hang as high as his: and the hearts that effect, be thrust through as his was: thrice through, though once would serve.

II. And when we have done with it, as a prayer, then will we begin with it, as a prophecy. That so he wished: and that as he wished, so he foretold: and as he foretold, so it came to pass. All that rose after, fell as fast as they rose: Et facti sunt sicut puer iste.

III. Last of all, that this prayer or prophecy, is not spent or shot up in Davids dayes: not to end with him. It reacheth unto these of ours: hath his force and vigour still; hath and shall have, unto the worlds end. GOD heard him praying, and inspired him prophesying. As it came to pass in Absalom, so did it in those that rose after him: that rose against David, that rose against many other since David, and namely, against ours. So it hath been hitherto: and so ever may it be. Cushi not only a Priest, to pray that so they be; but a Prophet, to foretell, that so they shall be.

I. Of the Text as a prayer against or cursing.

FIant sicut Absalom, is a prayer (and which more is) an imprecation. Before we pray it, it will not be amiss, to enquire whether we may lawfully pray any such or no. I move it, because of some so tender-hearted men, that they can by no means brook or endure any imprecation; to wish any so evil, as to pray they may come to an evil end. It is nothing fitting (as well saith S. James) that with the tongue we should bless God, and with the same, wish evil to man. It is Balaams office, Veni & maledic; and who would succeed him in his office? It is Shimei's practice; and who would be like him? And this is Cushi's prayer, like himself: Some would have him an Aethiopian, but, some black swart fellow, as his name giveth.

James 3.9. Num 22.6. Chap. 16.13.

Again, these were Jews all, we are Christians: we have a charge given us, by S. Paul, not to do it; not to them, that do us hurt; Bless them that persecute you, bless (I say) and curse not. We have a pattern set us, by S. Peter, of Him, qui cum malediceretur, non, &c. that wished not their evil, that both wished, and did him all the evil they could, both in deed and in word.

Rom. 12.14. 1 Pet. 2.23.

And this I know: yet is not all this so peremptory, but that, notwithstanding even all this, against some, in some cases, such prayer hath been, and may be used. May be? nay, ought to be other while. For, such may the persons be, as S. Peter calleth some, maledictionis filii: and their facts so execrable, as God himself commanded Moses, to go up into the Mount Ebal, and there, against twelve sundry sorts of such, pronounce maledictum. Even as we see, the Serpents sin was so exorbitant, as it drew a maledictus, even from Gods own blessed mouth. It is not good then to be nice or tender in this point; nor I would not wish men to be more tender or pitiful, than God: whose doing of it sheweth us it ought to be done. For to begin with the last (of Christians.) He that gave us the charge (S. Paul) for all his charge given, we know what he did to Elymas. And he that set us the pattern (S. Peter) for all his pattern set, we know he used it against Simon Magus. And for the other: it is not Balaam only, but even Moses, as milde a man, as ever the earth bare; you may read, that he came to it though, Numbers 16. Neither was it Shimei only, but David too (though a gracious and gentle Prince, may Shimei well say: yet) what a Psalme of imprecations hath he penned! I mean the CIX. Psalme. It was thought by our Fathers, that there was not a more more heavie or bitter curse could be wished to any, than to say Dens Londens upon him, which is the beginning of that Psalme. Neither was it Cain with his swart colour only, but an Angel as bright as the Sunne, even the Angel of the Lord, that cursed (himself) and giveth an expresse warrant to curse the inhabitants of Meroz. But what speak we of Saints, or Angels? Christ Himself doth it in the Gospel, as appeareth by his many Væ's. Yea, God Himself (we see) Gen. 3. against the serpent and his whole brood. What the Saints, Angels, God Himself have done, may be done, I trust. It may be done then, licet; and ought to be done sometimes, oportet; and in this very case, it ought and must; a necessity lyeth upon us; we cannot choose but do it. For pray we must for the King's safety, Ezra, and all good subjects; but, for his safety we cannot pray, but we must (withal) for the overthrow of his under-miners, Pro includeth Contra; if for him, then against his foes. It will not do to rise, and stand upright, then them to fall and become his foot-stoole. So that (if all be well weighed) it is not voluntary, it is even wrung from us.

2 Pet. 2.14. Deut. 27.13. Gen. 3.14. Acts 13.10. Act. 8.20. Num. 12.5. 16.15.

Judg. 5. 23. Luk. 11. 42. Gen. 3. 15. Psal. 110. 1.

And that indeed is the only caveat, that it be not voluntary: that we be drawn to it hardly, and do it not, upon every slight, and trifling occasion, against every thing that crosseth our humours, but when the foulnesse of the fact seemes to exact it; and that caveat is not amisse. I like well of the Hebrew proverb: (Garizim is the mount where they blessed, Ebal, where they gave the curse) Thou shalt not must creepe into Ebal, and leap into Garizim (that is) be swift to one, and slow to the other. We are then not to forbear going into mount Ebal utterly, but to be well advised, yet we go into it. To do it, but not to do it, where God blesseth: where Balaam was still itching to do. The cause it is, which maketh the curse fall; otherwise, if it be causelesse, it will not light, but flie over as a bird. Therefore to know well, both men and matter, against whom we let it flye. And we cannot better know them, than if we take our light from God: if we do it, but where, and when, and for what God doth it, we need not be scrupulous; never feare to follow, where he goeth before us. And, by the grace of God, we will be well ware, not to wish ought to any, in this point, but such, as shall have warrant even from Gods owne mouth.

Num. 22. 6.

The speciall point of advice thus being, to know the parties well, against whom we send it forth, it will concerne us (and our next point it must be) to take perfect notice of these men. They offer themselves to us, in two terms: 1 The enemies of the King: 2 They that rise against him: joyned here, and so here, so in sundry other places, Psal. 3. 1. Psal. 59. 1. Psal. 44. 5.

1 The enemies of the King. Psal. 55. 12. 2 Those that rise against him Gen. 4. 8. Num. 16. 2.

The word Enemy is by David himself, glossed Psal. 55. It was not an enemy did it to me (meaning, a known, open, professed enemy,) for then (saith he) I could have been provided for him: so may we take it.

The other of rising against, the phrase is first used of Cain (and lightly, the first phrase is the key of the rest) when Abel and he were in the field together walking, it is said Cain rose up against him, and knocked him on the head: So is meant of such as keep their malice secret, to do one a mischief suddenly. And the next time it is used, is of Core, and his Complices: of them, it is said (Num. 16.) They rose up against Moses. In the former of Cain, it is treachery: in this latter of Core, it is plain Rebellion. In a word: all that rise against, are enemies; but not backward. For, enemies may be such, as stand on even ground, as one King or State, with another. Rising in propriety of speech, is of such, as are of inferiour place, and yet lift themselves up against their lawful Superiours. In the end, both prove enemies, and do the part of enemies: but, the former hath many times no bond of allegiance; the latter ever have.

We may not ξενίζεσθαι (to use Saint Peters own phrase) think it strange, that both these sorts, Kings have them; yea though they be good Kings (as was David) yet that they have them. Hear David himself speak: How are mine enemies increased! many are they that rise against me. Neither the place of a King, nor the vertue of a good King, could quit him, but he had both. He had enemies: Shobosheth, Hanun, Hadadeser, the States of the Philistins. He had those that rose against him: Absalom, Achitophel, Amasa, here: Sheba, Adonia, Joab, afterward; he had both. And let us not ξενίζεσθαι think this strange, since Christ Himself, yea, since God Himself hath them too. For, lo thine enemies O Lord, lo thine enemies, and those that rise up against thee (it is the XCII. Psalm.) That we may cease to marvel, that Kings have them, or think it is; because it is not as it should be. Be they never so, as they should; be they as David; according to Gods own heart, nay, be they as Christ, as God Himself; both these they shall have. Let not this make us stumble, but that we may go forward.

1 Pet. 4. 12. Psal. 3. 1. Psal. 92. 9. 1 Sam 13. 14.

Of these two then; if we shall fit our selves to the present, we shall not need to speak of the one sort, of enemies. The King hath none: No King, nor State, professe themselves for such; nor never may do. The latter it shall not be amisse to stay a little, and look better on, who they be. This dayes peril was, all his peril, both in August, and November, is from them, that (like Cain) rise up against him. A King by nature is Rex Alkum, saith Solomon, Prov. XXX. One, against whom there is no rising; So God would have it. Subjects (saith the Apostle) to lye down before them: rising up against, is clean contrary to that; and so, contrary to Gods will: He would have no rising. The thought to rise (voluerunt insurgere in Regem) is said of Bigthan and Thares: two of Ahasuerus chamber. (mark that voluerunt insurgere) was enough: to attaint them: the rising but of the will, to bring them to the gallows. Nor the tongue is not to rise, or lift up it self: Core did but gain-say; his tongue was but up, and he, and all that took his part, perished in their gain-saying, the gain-saying of Core. But chiefly none, either (with Judas) to lift up his heele, to betray; or (with Cain) to lift up the hand, to do violence. No party, no part of any party, to rise against the King. Yet, rise they will, and do: both the thought swell; and exurgent e cubile (saith the Apostle) perverse de-uenies, yea, and perversa facientes, lewd speech used, and worse than speech, presumptuous deeds too.

Prov. 30. 31. Heb. 13. 17. Esther 2. 21. Jud. 11. Joh. 13. 18. Gen. 3. Act. 20. 30.

Now of these, that thus rise, two sorts there be: For, either they rise against the very state it self of Kings; the very authority, they exercise (that is,) would have no Kings at all; saying with them, Quis est Dominus noster, who is Lord over us (as much to say, as by their good will, none:) Or such, as only rise against their persons, as be in the 20. Chapter, that said, We have no part in David, and they in the Gospel, that say, Nolumus hunc, We will not have this man rule. Rule, they would not have quite taken away, but not this person, to rule over them.

Psal. 12. 4. Chap. 20. 1. Luke 19. 14.

Of the first sort of these risers, are the Anabaptists of our age; by whom, all secular jurisdiction is denied. No Law-makers they, but the Evangelists: No courts, but Presbyteries: no punishments, but Church-Censures. These, rise against the very estate of Kings: and that should they find and feel, if they were once grown enough to make a party.

A second sort there be, that are but bustling themselves to rise; not yet risen; at least, not to this step: but in a forwardness they be, prosser artic, that, they do. They that seek to bring parity, not into the Commonwealth by no means, but only into the Church. All Parishes alike, every one absolute, entire of it self. No dependency, or superiority, or subordination. But this once being had, do we not know their second position? Have they not broached it long since? The Church is the house; the Commonwealth, but the hangings. The hangings must be made fit to the house, that is, the Commonwealth fashioned to the Church: not the house to the hangings. No, take heed of that. And when they were taken with it, and charged with it, how slightly in their answer do they slip it over? These, when they are got thus far, may rise one step higher: and as Aaron now must not, so (perhaps) neither must Moses, then, exalt himself above the Congregation, seeing that All Gods people are holy no less than he.

These two rise against their States. Against their persons, two other sorts of persons both discontented. But the one was, of ambition: as Absalom here, that thought it was wonderful great pity, that all causes were not brought before him, considering how able a man he was for it, and the King being negligent in looking to his subjects grief. But, when he spread a tent aloft, and did you know what, not to be told, and that in the sight of all Israel; Sure, he that could commit that villanous act, in the eyes of all Israel. He that could charge Hushai, as with a foul fault, for forsaking his friend, himself, then being in armour against his own father, was not so very fit a man to do justice. No matter: so he took himself; that was enough, to rise. The other, out of revenge: the case of Bigthan and Thares (and of our two, as is thought) They were angry at somewhat, it is not said what, nor it skils not what, but, voluerunt insurgere, rise they would for it (that they would.) These did not wish government quite taken away: only the Kings person they heaved at; Him, for some purpose, they must have needs out of the way.

Chap. 15. 2. Chap. 16. 22. Chap. 16. 17. Esther 2. 21. Numb. 16. 29.

By this time we know the parties reasonable well. Be these, they whom God, Angels, and Saints, hold for execrable? They, whom Cushi may pray against, and we with him? These be they. It was Core, one of the true, against whom Moses prayed, they might be visited with a strange visitation, and not dye the common death of other men. No more he did. It was Achitophel, another of them, against whom David penned the Psalm of bitter imprecations. They of Meroz, whom the Angel giveth warrant, and charge both, to curse: wherefore was it? Because they came not to help the LORD, that is, Debora, the Lords Lieutenant, against the forces of Madian. If to be cursed, because they laid not their hand to help Him; much more (I trow) if they would seek to lay their hands on him, to mischief and make him away. It was Judas, he was one of these against whom CHRIST cryed Va per quem; and it was the serpent, whom God cursed: and why, what was his fault? What, but that he sought to withdraw our parents from due subjection; to rise against God, to be Gods themselves and never acknowledge him, or any, for their superior. These be they (certainly) against whom (God, Angels, and Saints approving it) we may say Cushi his prayer, every syllable of it. May? nay, ought; are even bound to it. Yet, to give full satisfaction; that there be no striving, but that all may say Amen to it, it shall not be amiss, if I may with your good favour, lay before you some reasons, and those so enforcing that we shall hold our selves so bound, as that we cannot avoid, but yield to it. I care not much, if I keep the number of Absaloms darts: they are three.

Mat. 14. 21. Gen. 3. 14.

The reasons of the Cursing.

Because the enemies of God.

First, I hold it for clear, if we knew any were Gods enemy, we would none of us make any question, but say (with Cushi, we need not, it is set down to our hands) So perish all thine enemies O Lord. So, how? Even as Sisera: little difference in effect, between him and Absalom. Sisera perished with a nail driven into his head: Absalom with a dart thrust through his heart. To the enemies of GOD, you see, we have warrant. But, they that rise against the King, are GOD's enemies: for, GOD and the King are so in a league, such a knot, so straight between them, as one cannot be enemy to the one, but he must be to the other. This is the knot. They are, by God, of or from God, for or instead of God. Moses rod, Gods: Gideons sword, Gods; Davids throne, Gods. In his place, they sit; His Person they represent: they are taken into the fellowship of the same name; Ego dixi, he hath said it, and we may be bold to say it, after him; They are Gods: and what, would we more? Then must their enemies be Gods enemies. Let their enemies know then, they have to deal with God, not with them; it is His cause, rather than theirs; they, but His agents. It standeth Him in hand; it toucheth him, in honour. He can no less than maintain them, than hold their enemies for his own. Saint Paul is plain, He that resisteth them, resisteth God: he that, the regal power, the divine ordinance.

Judg. 5. 31. Exod. 4. 20. Judg. 7. 20. 1 Chron. 29. 23. Psal. 82. 6. Rom. 13. 2.

The enditement was rightly framed (in judgement of all Writers,) though it were mis-applyed; Naboth maledixit Deo & Regi; Naboth did neither, therefore it was evil applyed; But, if he had done the one, he had done the other: and so it was truly framed. Even as he in the new Testament framed his confession aright, I have sinned against heaven, and against thee. For no man can trespass against a lawful superior, but withal he must do it against heaven first; and so he must confess, if ever he have his pardon for it. Luk. 15. 18.

But there is no more pregnant reason to prove Gods enemies they be, these that rise against Kings, than this; ye shall observe still they are called the Sons of Belial, Beliat Gods professed enemy. Sheba is so called in express terms, in the next Chapter save one, that rose up against David. And indeed, what was the drift of the first temptation, but only to have made Adam and Eve the adopted children of Belial, that is, to be under no yoke? not Gods; much less, mans; to brooke no superior. They are all his, by adoption, that carry such minds. It cannot otherwise be. And if it were the Spirit of God, that fell on Amasa, when he said, Thine are we O David, and on thy side thou son of Ishai: what spirit could it be but of Belial, or whose son Sheba but his that cryed, we have no part in David, nor any portion in the son of Ishai? if it were the finger of God that touched their hearts that went after Saul, their lawful Liege Lord: whose claw must it be, the print whereof was in theirs, who rose and went against him? Whose but Belials? Et quæ conventio Christi & Belial? Christ and Belial so out, so at odds, that no hope of ever agreeing them: Now then being the sons of Belial, and they, and Belial their father, Gods enemies, make we any doubt, but we may say after the Holy Ghost, So perish all thine enemies O Lord? Chap. 20. 1. 1 Chro. 12. 18. 2 Cor. 2. 15.

The one might be enough. But there were three darts in Absalons heart, one would have served the turn; so, this one would suffice, but I will cast yet a second, and third at them. If then secondly, we knew any that were not only Hostes Dei, but vostri humani generis, would we yet doubt to pray, he might be as Absalom? I trust not: especially, seeing we should therein but follow Gods own example. He curseth the Serpent, even for this cause, that he was enemy to the woman, and all her seed, and sought the utter ruin of both. Those that are such, well may all men pray against them, for all mans hands they well deserve it. Now thus reasoneth Saint Paul. Rulers not only come from God, but they come from him in particular; Tibi in bonum, for thy good, whosoever thou art: Thy good, thou Nobleman, thou Gentleman, thou Church-man, thou Merchant, thou Husbandman, thou Tradesman: Thy good: (that is) for our good they come, and are sent for all our good; for the general good of us all. Us all? nay, even of all mankind. Mankind should be as a Forest (saith Moses) the strong beasts would devour the weak; as a Fish-pool (saith Habakkuk) the great fish devour the small, were it not for these. Without these mankind would not continue. They then, that are enemies to them, mankinds enemies; and so, of the serpents seed certainly, to be cursed with the serpents curse; conteret caput eorum. 2. The enemies of mankind. Gen. 3. 14. 15. Rom. 13. 4. Gen. 10. 9. Hab. 1. 14.

Now then of this great Monarchy of Mankind, of the whole world, the several Monarchies of the world are eminent parts. What the estate of Kings is, in the whole; that is the person of every particular Prince, in his several soveraignty: David, in his of Jury: Ours, in his of great Britain: the health and safety of the Kingdom, fast linked with the Kings health and safety. The head of the Tribes (so is David called;) The light of Israel; Tu pasces, the Shepherd of the flock; The corner-stone of the building. I will content me with these. If the Head be deadly hurt, I would fain know, what shall become of the body? If the light be put out, is ought but darkness to be looked for in Israel? Smite the Shepherd, must not the flock be in peril? If the Corner-stone be shaken, will not both the wals feel a wrack? Verily, all our weal and wo dependeth on their wel-fare or decay. Therefore bless we them, and they that bless them, be blessed: and they that set themselves against them, accursed even with the capital curse, the serpents, all our enemy; as the first of all, so the chief of all; as from Gods own mouth. 1 Sam. 15. 17. 2 Sam. 21. 17. 1. 2. Psal. 118. 22.

To these two, I add yet one more, and that by good warrant, both of the Old and New Testament; let them be confounded and turned backward (saith the Prophet) so many as have evil will at Sion; Utinam abscindantur (saith the Apostle) qui vos conturbant. Against them well may we pray, that malign the peace and prosperity of the Church: in which and for which we and all the world to pray; as that, for which, all, world and all was made, and is still upholden: for, were the Church once gathered, the world dissolves straight. God is too high (as for any our good, so) for any our evil or enmity to come neer him. He reckoneth of no enemies but His Churches. They, that persecute her, persecute him; they that touch her, touch the apple of His eye. Now they that are enemies to David, are enemies to Sion: so neer neighbour-hood between David and Sion, the King and the Church, as there is between his Palace and the Temple; both stand upon two tops of one and the same hill. The King is Nutricius Ecclesiæ: If enemies to the Nurse, then to the child, it cannot otherwise be. Experience teacheth it daily, when the child hath a good nurse, to take such a one away, is but to expose the Child, to the evident danger of starving or pining away. I know not, men may entertain what speculations they will; but (sure) in praxi, how much the Churches welfare hath gone by the good and blessed inclination of Kings, it is but too plain. Socrates long since truly observed it in the beginning of the fifth book of his story. Consider me in the Commonwealth of the Jews, these four Kings immediately succeeding each the other; Jotham, Ahaz, Ezekiah, and Manasses: Consider these four Emperors in the Primitive Church, likewise in succession; Constantine, Constantius, Julian, and Jovinian: Consider me here at home, the four last Princes before his Majesty, and the waxing and waning; the alteration and alternation of religion, under them, forward, and backward, backward and forward again: and tell me, whether the King and the Church have not reference, as I said; and whether the Church have any greater enemies than such as alien the minds of Kings, and make them heavy friends to their welfare and wel-doing. Of such then, safely may we say, Be they confounded, Be they, as the grass upon the house top, which withereth before hey-time (that is) let them come to untimely ends, let them be as Absalom; or (as another Psalm wisheth such kind of people) like them that perished at Endor; and 3. The enemies of the church Psal. 125. 5. Gal. 5. 12. Esay 49. 23. Psal. 129. 16. Psal. 83. 10.

and became like dung upon the earth. So then being 1 Gods enemies, 2 mankinds, and 3 the Churches, against the enemies of any one of these, the prayer were warrantable: how much more against them, that are enemies to all three? One nail served Sisera, in his head: so would one spear Absalom in his heart, but he had three; not without a meaning. A moral allusion they make of it: three were the faults he made; three the parties he highly offended. 1 God, 2 the State, 3 the Church. Enemy to all three: for every one, a dart. Each, deadly alone; but he had them all, to shew, he deserved them all: and so they do, that sin Absaloms sin. The prayer (sure) is good: Cushi prayed well; are all bound to say Amen to it.

II. Of the Text, as a prophecy.

But besides that it is a prayer, Let them be: it is a prophecy too, They shall be. The tenor of the prayer we have heard: Let us see the success of the prophesie, what became of it; whether Cushi were a true Prophet, or no. So true, as from Moses to Malachy, never any of the Prophets more true, sin his foretelling, than he in this. All the enemies, all that rose up against him, were sicut fœni, were even so indeed.

Pity it is, but that a good prayer should be heard, and (as we said) turn into the nature of a prophecy. They were three good prayers we heard; there is none of all the three, but hath a Prophecy (that so it should be) answering to the prayer, that so it might be. Against Gods enemies: the prayer, So perish, &c. The prophecy, For Lo thine enemies O Lord, Lo thine enemies shall perish; as if he saw it with his eyes, called others to see it with him, pointed at it with his finger, Lo, twice, once, and again; (one Lo, not serve) so sure he is that so it shall be. 2 Against the enemies of mankind: The wish, Cursed be thou above every beast of the earth, the prophecy followeth in the neck of it, Ipse conteret caput, One there is, shall bruise his head all to pieces. 3 Against the maligners of Sion: Let them be confounded, &c. That is the prayer: The Kingdom or Nation, that shall malign Sion shall perish, and utterly be destroyed, there is the prophecy. Now, that that is prophetical, in each of those, is no less verified in the Kings murther, in whom they all meet.

Do but, after this prophecy, enquire what became of them: ask but the question. The King doth (here) in the forepart of the verse: Is Absalom safe, how doth he? He doth, as he deserveth to do. Ask, how the rest, that after rose against him: within a Chapter, after, Sheba riseth, how did he? Before the end of the Chapter, his head came over the wall. After him, Adonijah was up and spake even broadly, Regnabo: What became of him? His end in blood. And (that which is strange) with him rose Joab: he that took off Sheba's head: he that threw these darts, and he that was the true man here. How sped he? He was even drawn from the Altar (that, is no sanctuary for traitors) and executed by Benaiah. Could not take heed by Absaloms example, but came to Absaloms end. They all that sought, that rose to pluck him down, whom God had exalted, they were slain, all the sort of them; were all, as a tottering wall, or as a broken hedge, which every man runs over.

But this judgement of God, was in none more conspicuous, than Absalom. A strait charge was given by the King himself, to have him saved: It would not serve, he was slain for all that. And slain by Joab: one, before, that had highly favoured him, and been a special means to restore him to grace; even, by him, was he slain notwithstanding the Kings charge; and then slain, when he made full account of the victory. For else he would have been better horsed. He was on his Mule, now he never doubted the event, and yet was slain. Sure Gods hand was in it, to rid the world of a traitor.

III The prophecy perpetual.

Neither was this a peculiar prophecy to King David alone. The prayer is said, and the prophecy taketh hold of other, as well before, as since. Ask of Core, he rose against Moses: How sped he? He went to hell quick for it. Ask of Baana and Rechab that rose against their Lord: Look over the pool of Hebron, there, stand their quarters on poles. Ask of Bigthan and Thares, what of them? Fairly hanged at the Court-Gate. Time will not serve, to enquire of all. The short is: all that were as Absalom, came to his end. Some hanged, and their heart opened being yet alive, (So was Absalom:) and their bowels pluckt out, to make them like Judas. Some their heads strucken off, so was Sheba; Some quartered, and their hands, feet and head set on poles, that the Ravens might pluck out their eyes, as Baana and Rechab; that, upon them might come, all the punishments due to them, that rise with Absalom. For, all the punishments of traitors, as now they are in use with us, may seem to have been collected and drawn together, from those several examples, that stand in the book of God.

All to shew, that a King is Alkum, no rising against him: Or, if any rise, he had better sit still. For, no sooner rise they up, but our Prophet straight cryeth: Rise up, rise up, and put on strength, thou arm of the Lord, rise up as in old time, in the generations of the world. Art not thou the same that didst smite Absalom by Joab, and art not thou the same that didst smite Joab by Benaia? That settest thy self to bring them down, that rise up against Alkum, against whom there is no rising?

For, Kings being from God (saith Gamaliel) we cannot set our selves against them, but we must be found (even) θεομάχοι, to fight against God. Being ordained of God (saith Gamaliel his Scholler, S. Paul) to resist them, is to resist the ordinance of God, and as good put our selves in the face of all the Ordnance in the Tower of London, as withstand Gods ordinance. None might better say it than he: it was told him from Heaven, when he was about such another business, persecuting Christ in His Church (and Christ is persecuted in his chief members, as well as His inferiour) he was told plainly, in so doing, he did but kick against the pricks. His heels might abound ran of blood, the prick not remove, but ſtand where it did ſtill. Therefore, as here Cuſhi, in the Old, ſo Paul in the New, falleth to prophecy; they that reſiſt shall receive to themſelves damnation, ſaith S. Paul: prophecy. And, a true prophecy, even as was Moſes of Core: That they ſhould not die the death of other men, but be viſited with ſome ſtrange extraordinary viſitation; but, leave their end in blood. All, as Cuſhi gave them might, and propheſied they ſhould. And his prayer was heard, his prophecy came to paſs, when moſt of either fell to the ground. Rom. 13. 2. Numb. 16. 29.

Having now dealt with it as a prayer firſt; and then, as a prophecy; let us now ſee how it falleth with the buſineſs in hand, and whether the force and vigour of theſe have reached us and our times. And reacheth to our days.

It was with God no new thing (this) to reward ſuch as riſe againſt Kings. Of ſhew which is with him no new, but old (as old as David; nay, as Moſes) He giveth us now examples, many an therwhile, to ſhew, his ear is ſtill open to this prayer, and that his arm is ſtretched out to enable them ſtill. Yea, I dare be bold to ſay, there is no one of his promiſes hath ſo many ſeals hanging at it, by way of confirmation of it, as this hath: No one, ſo many judgements upon ſtrong, rebellious, traitorous of every land, there is ſtill ſtanding ſome Gibbet or other, and their quarters hanging on it ſtarke, to put us in mind of the truth of Cuſhi's prophecy.

This very day yieldeth us one of freſh memory (but ſeven yeares ſince) wherein to ſee God hath given us a memorable example, of the hearing Cuſhi's prayer, and the accompliſhing his prediction, not in one, but in a couple of Abſaloms. A couple of Abſaloms, I may well term them, in many other points like him, but namely in theſe two; Like in their riſing; and like in their fall. For, that Abſalom was a ſon, and theſe but ſubjects; it alters not the caſe much: Seeing both under one commandment, as Pater and Rex, both in one name [Abimelech], the ſtile of the firſt Kings of Canaan. If under one, then under one curſe: if they do but ſtand with their ſhoulder to mount Ebal; if but look upon them with a ſcornful eye, under Solomons curſe, that the Ravens pick thoſe eyes out: The ſame, againſt a father, to reach much more to Abiam, Peter ſpeaks (So did Abiam name his nephew.) Abiam, a father of Juda, even as Debora, a mother in Iſrael. In a word, what Noah might wish to a bad ſon (Cham;) and Elisha wish to a bad ſervant (Gehazi;) no curſe in the world, but Cuſhi might with the ſame to a bad ſubject. All is one caſe. This then breeds no unlikelineſs; and in all the reſt, exceeding like. Deut. 27. 15. Prov. 30. 17. 1 Kings 15. 2. Judg. 5. 7. Gen. 9. 25. 2 Kings 5. 27.

1 As that young man (to keep the words of the text.) For, thoſe were young men, their years, not many. Not many: nay, ſo few, ſo green, as it may well ſeem ſtrange, that there could ſuch inveterate malice and miſchief be hatched, in ſo young years. As he, in that (firſt.)

2 As in years, ſo in malice; bloody-minded both. Said not Abſalom, to his Aſſaſſines, When I give you a ſign, ſee you ſmite, kill him, fear not, have not I commanded: you Said not they the ſame to him, whom to that end, they had armed, and placed to do that wicked act? In that like, ſecond. 2 Sam. 13. 28.

3 As in this malicious bloody mind; ſo in raking it up, and keeping it cloſe, divers years together. Not only (as Abſalom in this) to ſay neither good nor bad: but in this too; to intreat the King, and all his company to their houſe; to entertain and feaſt him, and beſides promiſe, and pretend, I know not what, and all to cover and conceal their divelliſh intent. In this like, thirdly: this young man, and theſe.

4 And not in this kind only of outward diſſembling; but in a worſe kind of religious hypocriſie. He made a religious vow; it lay on his conſcience, he could not be quiet, till he had got leave to go pay it, and then, even then, went he about all his villany. And was it not ſo here? He, ſo holy; as to a Sermon he muſt needs; to Gods word; no remedy, he might not be from it in any wiſe: and that, when he truſted, the deadly blow ſhould have been given. In this, like. 2 Sam. 15. 8.

5 And yet fifthly, the ſame man, like Abſalom, when he was in Geſſur. Abſalom in Geſſur, and this in Italy, as devout at his Maſſes then, as he was here zealous for his exerciſe of the Word. Alike at both, as they ſerved his turn. Like in this too.

6 And, laſt of all, in this too: that for all this goodly maſk of religion, when he ſaw his treachery was diſcovered, as Abſalom blew his trumpet, ſo he was content to uncaſe himſelf, and to ruſh forth and appear for ſuch as he was. In which act, he periſhed, as Abſalom: got in his heart, that Abſalom got in his: only that was a dart, and this was a dagger. Chap. 15. 10.

7 For (ſure) being thus like in their conditions, and in ſo many circumſtances beſides, pity but they ſhould be like in their ends too: And they were. And, that ſo they were, is the matter of the publike gratulation of this day, of the day of the week all the year long; of this, the day it ſelf, ſpecially above all: that the prayer and propheey of Cuſhi took place; his prayer heard, his prophecy fulfilled no leſs in theſe young men, than in that; no leſs in the enemies of our King James, than in his Lord King David.

In the treaſons, little difference or none: in the delivery, ſome difference; but, all for the better. For firſt, in far greater peril was his Majeſty, far greater than ever was David. 1. David was but purſued: but he was even caught, and within (I know not how many) locks and doors. 2. David was all the while without the reach of any blow: how neer the blow was to his breſt, it is able to make any man chill, but to think. 3. David had his Worthies ſtill about him: The King was in torculari ſolus, in the very preſs alone, & vir de gentibus, and not one of his people to ſtand by or aſſiſt him. 4. That David was delivered, it muſt be aſcribed to the providence of God; but, in that it was a fought field, Eſa. 63. 3.

Pity it is, but that a good prayer should be heard, and (as we said) turn into the nature of a prophecy. They were three good prayers we heard; there is none of all the three, but hath a Prophecy (that so it should be) answering to the prayer, that so it might be. Against Gods enemies: the prayer, Jud. 5. 31. So perish, &c. The prophecy, For Lo thine enemies O Lord, Lo thine enemies shall perish; as if he saw it Psal. 92. 9. with his eyes, called others to see it with him; pointed at it with his finger, Lo, twice, once, and again; (one Lo, not serve) so sure he is that so it shall be. 2 Against the enemies of mankind: The Gen. 3. 14, 15. Wife, Cursed be thou above every beast of the earth, the prophecy followeth in the neck of it, Ipse conteret caput, One there is, shall bruise his head all to pieces. 3 Against the maligners of Sion: Let them Psal. 129. 5. be confounded, &c. That is the prayer: The Kingdom or Nation, that shall malign Sion shall perish, and utterly be destroyed; there is the prophecy. Now, that that is prophetical, in each of those, is no less verified in the Kings enemies, in whom they all meet.

Do but, after this prophecy, enquire what became of them: ask but the question. The King doth (here); in the forepart of the verse: Is Absalom safe, how doth he? He doth, as he deserveth to Chap. 20. 22. do. Ask, how the rest, that after rose against him: within a Chapter, after, Sheba riseth; how did 1 King. 1. 3. he? Before the end of the Chapter, his head came over the wall. After him, Adoniah was up and spake even broadly, Reguabo: What became of him? His end in blood. And (that which is strange) 2. 25. with him rose Joab: he that took off Sheba's head: he that threw these darts; and he that was the true 1 Kings 2. 34. man here, How sped he? He was even drawn from the Altar (that, is no sanctuary for traitors) and executed by Benaiah. Could not take heed by Absaloms example, but came to Absaloms end. They all that sought, that rose to pluck him down, whom God had exalted, they were slain, all the sort Psal. 62. 3. of them; were all, as a tottering wall, or as a broken hedge, which every man runs over.

But this judgement of God, was in none more conspicuous, than Absalom. A strait charge was given by the King himself, to have him saved: It would not serve, he was slain for all that. And slain by Joab: one, before, that had highly favoured him, and been a special means to restore him to Chap. 18. 9. grace; even, by him, was he slain notwithstanding the Kings charge; and then slain, when he made full account of the victory. For else he would have been better horsed. He was on his Mule; now he never doubted the event, and yet was slain. Sure Gods hand was in it, to rid the world of a traitor.

III. The prophecy perpetual.

Neither was this a peculiar prophecy to King David alone. The prayer is said, and the prophecy taketh hold of other, as well before, as since. Ask of Core, he rose against Moses: How sped he? He went to hell quick for it. Ask of Baana and Rechab that rose against their Lord: Look over the Num. 16. 23. pool of Hebron, there, stand their quarters on poles. Ask of Bigthan and Thares, what of 2 Sam. 4. 12. them? Fairly hanged at the Court-Gate. Time will not serve, to enquire of all. The short is: all Esther 2. 23. that were as Absalom, come to his end. Some hanged, and their heart opened being get alive (So was Act. 1. 18. Absalom:) and their bowels pluckt out, to make them like Judas. Some their heads strucken off, so 2 Sam. 20. was Sheba; Some quartered, and their hands, feet and head set on poles, that the Ravens might pluck out 2 Sam. 4. 12. their eyes, as Baana and Rechab; that, upon them might come, all the punishments due to them, that rise with Absalom. For, all the punishments of traitors, as now they are in use with us, may seem to have been collected and drawn together, from those several examples, that stand in the book of God.

Prov. 30. 32. All to shew, that a King is Alkum, no rising against him: Or, if any rise, he had better sit still.
אלקום For, no sooner rise they up, but our Prophet straight cryeth: Rise up, rise up, and put on strength,
Esay 51. 9. thou arm of the Lord, rise up as in old time, in the generations of the world. Art not thou the same that didst smite Absalom by Joab; and art not thou the same that didst smite Joab by Benaia? That setteth thy self to bring them down, that rise up against Alkum, against whom there is no rising?

Acts 5. 39. For, Kings being from God (saith Gamaliel) we cannot set our selves against them, but we must be found (even) θεομαχεῖν to fight against God. Being ordained of GOD (saith Gamaliel his Scholler, S. Paul) to resist them, is to resist the ordinance of God; and as good put our selves in the face of Rom. 13. 2. all the Ordnance in the Tower of London, as withstand Gods ordinance. None might better say it than he: it was told him from Heaven, when he was about such another business; persecuting Christ in His Church (and Christ is persecuted in his chief members, as well as His inferiour) he was told Act. 9. 5. plainly, in so doing, he did but kick against the prick. His heels might akeand run of blood, the prick not remove, but ſtand where it did ſtill. Therefore, as here Cuſhi, in the Old, ſo S. Paul in the New, falleth to prophecy; they that reſiſt ſhall receive to themſelues damnation, is S. Pauls prophecy. And, Rom. 13. 2. a true prophecy, even as was Moſes of Core: That they ſhould not die the death of other men, but be viſited with ſome ſtraunge extraordinary viſitation; but have their end in blood. All, as Cuſhi prayed they Numb. 16. 29.

might, and propheſſed they ſhould. And his prayer was heard, his prophecy came to paſs, not a word of either fell to the ground.

Having now dealt with it as a prayer firſt; and then, as a prophecy; let us now ſee how it ſuiteth with the buſineſs in hand, and whether the force and vigour of theſe have reached to us and our times. And reacheth to our times.

It was with God no new thing (this) to reward ſuch as riſe up againſt Kings. Of that which is with him no new, but old (as old as David; nay, as Moſes) He giveth us new examples, every otherwhile, to ſhew, his eare is ſtill open to this prayer; and that His arm is ſtretched out to reach them ſtill. Yea, I dare be bold to ſay, there is no one of his promiſes hath ſo many ſeals hanging at it, by way of confirmation of it, as this hath: No one, ſo many judgements upon record, as it. In every ſtory of every land, there is ſtill ſtanding ſome Gibbet or other, and their quarters hanging on it there ſtill, to put us in mind of the truth of Cuſhi's prophecy.

This very day yieldeth us one of freſh memory (but ſeven years ſince) wherein in our Soveraign, God hath given us a memorable example, of the hearing Cuſhi's prayer, and the accompliſhing his prediction, not in one, but in a couple of Abſaloms. A couple of Abſaloms, I may well term them; in many other points like him, but namely in theſe two: 1 Like in their riſing: and 2 like in their fall. For, that Abſalom was a ſon, and theſe but ſubjects, it altereth not the caſe much: Sons and ſubjects are both under one commandment, as Pater and Rex, both in one name [Abimelech] the name of the firſt Kings of Canaan. If under one, then under one curſe: If they do but ſpeak evil, under Moſes curſe, in mount Ebal; if but look upon them with a ſcornful eye, under Solomons curſe, that the Ravens pick thoſe eyes out: The ſame, againſt a father, to reach much more to Abiam, Pater patrii. (So did Solomon name his nephew;) Abiam, a father of Juda; even as Debora, was a mother in Iſrael. In a word: what Noah might wiſh to a bad ſon (Cham;) and Eliſha wiſh to a bad ſervant (Gehezi;) no cauſe in the world, but Cuſhi might wiſh the ſame to a bad ſubject. All is one caſe. This then breeds no unlikelineſs; and in all the reſt, exceeding like. The Application to the day. Deut. 27. 15. Prov. 30. 17. 1 Kings 15. 1. אבים Judg. 5. 7. Gen. 9. 25. 2 Kings 5. 27.

As that young man (to keep the words of the Text,) For, thoſe were young men, too. Their years, not many. Not many: nay, ſo few, ſo green, as it may well ſeem ſtrange, that there could ſuch inveterate malice and miſchief be hatched, in ſo young years. As he, in that (firſt.) 1

As in years, ſo in malice; bloody-minded both. Said not Abſalom, to his Aſſaſſines, When I give you a ſign, ſee you ſmite, kill him, fear not, have not I commanded: you Said not they the ſame to him, whom to that end, they had armed, and placed to do that wicked act? In that like, ſecond. 2 2 Sam. 13. 28.

As in this malicious bloody mind; ſo in raking it up, and keeping it cloſe, divers years together. Not only (as Abſalom in this) to ſay neither good nor bad: but in this too; to intreat the King, and all his company to their houſe; to entertain and feaſt him, and beſides promiſe, and pretend, I know not what, and all to cover and conceal their divelliſh intent. In this like, thirdly: this young man, and theſe. 3

And not in this kind only of outward diſſembling; but in a worſe kind of religious hypocriſie. He made a religious vow; it lay on his conſcience, he could not be quiet, till he had got leave to go pay it, and then, even then, went he about all his villany. And was it not ſo here? He, ſo holy; as to a Sermon he muſt needs; to Gods word; no remedy, he might not be from it in any wiſe: and that, when he truſted, the deadly blow ſhould have been given. In this, like. 4 2 Sam. 15. 8.

And yet fifthly, the ſame man, like Abſalom, when he was in Geſſur. Abſalom in Geſſur, and this in Italy, as devout at his Maſſes then, as he was here zealous for his exerciſe of the Word. Alike at both, as they ſerved his turn. Like in this too. 5

And, laſt of all, in this too: that for all this goodly maſk of religion, when he ſaw his treachery was diſcovered, as Abſalom blew his trumpet, ſo he was content to uncaſe himſelf, and to ruſh forth and appear for ſuch as he was. In which act, he periſhed, as Abſalom: got in his heart, that Abſalom got in his: only that was a dart, and this was a dagger. 6 Chap. 15. 10.

For (ſure) being thus like in their conditions, and in ſo many circumſtances beſides, pity but they ſhould be like in their ends too: And they were. And, that ſo they were, is the matter of the publike gratulation of this day, of the day of the week all the year long; of this, the day it ſelf, ſpecially above all: that the prayer and prophecy of Cuſhi took place; his prayer heard, his prophecy fulfilled no leſs in theſe young men, than in that; no leſs in the enemies of our King James, than in his Lord King David. 7

In the treaſons, little difference or none: in the delivery, ſome difference; but, all for the better. For firſt, in far greater peril was his Majeſty, far greater than ever was David. 1. David was but purſued: but he was even caught, and within (I know not how many) locks and doors. 2. David was all the while without the reach of any blow: how neer the blow was to his breſt, it is able to make any man chill, but to think. 3. David had his Worthies ſtill about him: The King was in torculari ſolus, Eſa. 63. 3. in the very preſs alone, & vir de gentibus, and not one of his people to ſtand by or aſſiſt him. 4. That David was delivered, it muſt be aſcribed to the providence of God; but, in that it was a fought field, his army must take part of the praise. It was another manner of providence, that was shewed here; of a more near regard, of a more strange operation. I dare confidently affirm it (I may well I am sure:) Gods hand was much more eminent in this, than in that: praised be his name for it. 5. And last of all, David (here) heard of his delivery by Cushi. Ours saw it himself: and yet (I cannot tell well, what to say) the danger was so great, and the fear must needs be accordingly, whether it had not been to be wished that some Cushi had rather brought tydings of it, than he seen it himself. But since it pleased God, so from Heaven to shew Himself in it (if ever He did, in any) and though with such fear, yet without any harm, dulcis laborum praeteritorum memoria.

David heard his; Segnius irritant: Ours saw his, oculis subjecta fidelibus; the impression of joy was the greater, and did work both the stronger and the longer. The stronger, in a votive thanksgiving then undertaken: The longer, in the continual renewing it, not only from year to year, but from week to week all the year long.

And what shall we say then? What but as Abimaaz before at the 28. Ver. Blessed be the Lord his God that hath this day given sentence for him, upon those, that rose up against him. And then secondly, with Cushi, So be it to all the rest, as it was with these. Though it be to go into mount Ebal, let us not fear, God goeth before us, and saith it before us; let us not make danger, to go after, and to say after him. 1 They be His enemies, so proved: say we boldly, So perish all thine enemies O Lord. 2 They be enemies to mankind, in being enemies to them, by whom order and peace is kept in mankind, and without whom there would in mankind be nought but confusion: The Serpents curse be upon them, and let their heads be trod to pieces. 3 They be Sions malignant enemies: let them be as grass upon the house-top, as those that perished at Endor, and became dung for the earth. Let them be as stubble scattered, as wax melted, as smoke driven, no man can tell whither. Let them perish; perish, as Sisera, and Oreb, as Absalom. Jaels hammer, on their heads; Gideons ax, on their necks; Joabs dart, in their hearts. One, nay three: one, for the enemies of God; another, for the enemies of mankind, a third, for the enemies of Sion. Let Cushi be both Priest and Prophet; this his prayer never return empty, this his Prophecy never want success. And Let the King ever rejoyce in thy strength (O Lord) Let him be exceeding glad of thy salvation. Ever thrust thou back his enemies, and tread them down that rise up against him. Let their swords go through their own hearts, and their mischief light upon their own heads. Let His ear still hear His desire upon His enemies, and His eye still see the fall of the wicked that rise up against Him. Be he as David; we, as Cushi: they, as Absalom. God by whom this prayer was allowed, receive and grant it: God by whom this prophecy was inspired, make it good, and fulfill it, as this day, so for ever: Even for ever and ever for his Christs sake.

Psal. 132.

BEFORE THE

Kings Majesty,

At HOLDENBIE,

On the V. of August, A. D. M. DC. VII.

1 SAM. Chap. XXVI. Ver. VIII, IX.

Dixitque Abishai ad David, &c.

Then said Abishai to David: God hath closed thine enemy into thine hand this day: now therefore, I pray thee let me smite him once with a spear to the earth, and I will not smite him again.

And David said to Abishai, Destroy him not: For who can lay his hands on the Lords Annointed, and be guiltless?

THere is some body here in the Text, in danger to be destroyed; and the party is the Lords Annointed, King Saul. The matter is come to hard hold: Destroy him, and destroy him not. Abishai would have it done: David at no hand; he cries Ne perdas. But the end was, Saul was saved. Thus lyeth the case here in the Text.

And was not the very same the case of this day? There was some body in as great danger to be destroyed, this day. It was Christus Domini, Gods Annointed here before us. The case was come to the very same plunge: Perdas; ne Perdas; a King, or no King. Some were of Abishais mind: GOD was fain to supply Davids; there was none else. But blessed be GOD, all ended in Ne perdas. And again, blessed be GOD who then also verified the latter part of the verse, that None shall seek to lay hands on the Lords Annointed: but they shall be found, and handled, as guilty persons. For, so they were; and their blood was upon their own heads. Both cases suiting so well, this Text might well serve for this day.

There is, in the former verse, a motion made by Abishai for a blow at Saul, thus: See, &c. There be three perillous motives in it: 1 Inimicum, He is your enemy: 2 Concluſit; here is an opportunity; 3 sine me, the act shall not be yours, let me alone, I will take it upon me. The Division. I.

There

II. There is in the latter, Davids utter diſlike of the motion, thus: Deſtroy not, &c. Wherein, firſt there is a double charge to the contrary: 1 One ad oculum; Deſtroy him not: 2 The other riſing out of the reaſon, yet plain enough. He had ſaid, Deſtroy him not: Not that; Quis enim miſit manum? for a leſs matter than that, you may not do, not lay your hands, not ſo much: which is (as it were) a ſurcharge to the former; or (if I may ſo ſay) a ſecond edition of Ne perdas. No talk of deſtroying: ſo far from that, as no ſtirring the hand toward it.

1. Then upon this double charge, followeth a double reaſon, two retentives (as it were) againſt the firſt motion. 1 He is the Lords Annointed: that, may ſtay you, if you be a good ſubject.

2 Be you good ſubject or no, if that will not, this muſt; You ſhall not be guiltleſs. If not guiltleſs, then guilty: and what becomes of them that be guilty, we all know. That is, do it not; if you do, it will bring you to guilty, or not guilty: if you lay your hand, you ſhall hold up your hand for it: it is as much as your life is worth.

3 Thirdly, it is not indeed, Non eris inſons. For, if it had been ſo, it might have been thought to have reached to Abiſhai, to his particular, and no further. But he choſe rather to utter it by Quis? For, by asking Quis? Who ſhall? He plainly implyeth, Ne quis unquam, that none ever may: Not he, not Abiſhai; nay, not any. So, there is a double charge: 1 Deſtroy not, 2 lay not your hand. A double retentive: 1 He is Gods Annointed, 2 You ſhall not be guiltleſs: 3 and a Quis upon all, to bind all, and to ſhew, the charge is general without exception.

1 In all which, there is a protection for Saul the firſt King, and all after him, not only from perditio, deſtroying, giving of the blow; but from miſſio manus, ſtirring of the hand.

2 There is a neck-verſe for Abiſhai, and all undertakers in that kind; they are all caſt, they are all found guilty, yer they come to the bar: they are attainted, every one.

3 There is an Enge for David: who ſheweth himſelf through all. 1 In his charge (deſtroy not) a good ſubject: 2 In his reaſon (He is Gods Annointed) a good Divine: 3 In his ſentence (Non eris inſons) a good Judge: 4 In his challenge (Quis mittet?) a ſtout champion, to any that ſhall maintain the contrary.

4 But for that, beſides this reaſon in the Text (of inimicum tuum,) there have been other reaſons framed in our daies to the ſame end; and all of them in Saul, the party in the Text: we will make them in too, to rule this caſe once for all. For Sauls caſe will be found to have in it, all that can be alledged, why any King ſhould be, if any King might be touched. All (I ſay) will be found in him: But, he for all them, may not be touched: therefore none may.

5 And this done, we will come (as the duty of the day requireth) to lay theſe caſes, caſe to caſe; ours of the day, to this in the Text. Where we ſhall ſee, that we have as great cauſe; nay, of the twain, the greater cauſe of gratulation, for the happy Ne perdas of this day.

I. Abiſha's Motion. THis is Abiſhai's motion. There be three motives in it: 1 the party is your enemy. 2 God hath ſent you opportunity. 3 I will take it upon me. Enmity makes us willing to take revenge: opportunity able; and if another will do the act, the rather for that; for then we ſhall bear no blame: Three ſhrewd motives, where they meet: and here they meet all in one. Let us weigh them: which I do the more willingly, becauſe all three meet alſo in this dayes attempt. 1 Enmity, that was the colour, an old wrong: ſo, there were in both, the ſame pretence. 2 And the ſame advantage in both. For, the King was ſhut up indeed, and that literally. 3 And he that was at Church, he ſhould not have done it, not he: Abiſhai ſhould have done it, he in the chamber. Of theſe motives then.

1 The firſt motive. Inimicum tuum 1 A deadly enemy. Chap. 18 15. Chap. 18. 11. 19. 20. Chap. 19. 1. 19 15. 2 An enemy Without cauſe. Pſal. 7. 3. Chap. 16. 23. Chap. 17 49. Chap. 19. 5. He is an enemy. But not every enemy is to be deſtroyed, but they that would deſtroy us. All enmity is not deadly fewd: Sauls was; nothing would ſerve him but Davids life, and many wayes he ſought indirectly. By matching him with his own daughter, and laying on him for a dowry, ſo many foreſkins of the Philiſtims, ſo he might fall by their hands. 2 That would not do: he went to it directly; 1 at three ſeveral times caſt his javelin at him, to have nailed him to the wall. 2 When he eſcaped him ſo: then gave he expreſs charge openly to all men to kill him, wherever they met him. 3 When that would not be, ſent to his houſe for him, when word came, he was ſick in his bed, bade bring him bed and all, that he might ſee him ſlain in his own preſence. Was there ever the like? who would not have been quit of ſuch an enemy?

It may be, there was cauſe why: and then it holds not. Nay, no cauſe. To God he proteſts, Saul without any cauſe, was his enemy. For, no cauſe he gave him to be his enemy; he never hurt him: But great cauſe to have been his good Lord, he had many wayes done him good ſervice. Not to ſpeak of his Harp (wherewith he had rid him of many a furious fit of melancholy, or a worſe matter:) with his ſling, it cannot be denied, he did him, and the whole Realm good ſervice, in the overthrow of Goliah, and took away the rebuke from Iſrael, Yea many times after, put his ſoul in his hands (as Jonathan pleaded for him) that is, ventered his life to do him ſervice in his wars, and ever with good ſucceſs; and yet for all this ſought his life. And who would ſafe the life of ſuch an enemy?

Yes,

Yes, there may be hope to win an enemy, and in that caſe he would not be deſtroyed. Nay, no hope of ever winning Saul. He was an enemy out of envy, and they will never be won more. From the time, the fond women made that fooliſh rime of a thouſand and ten thouſand he could never abide to look right on him. Envy was the matter; that, is the dangerous enmity, that never will be paciſied. Well ſaith Solomon, Anger is fierce, and hatred is cruel, but who ſhall ſtand before envy? As who ſhould ſay there be means, to ſatisfie both thoſe: But the enemy from envy, no appeaſing him, no hope ever to do it. If ought would, when he ſaved his life at the cave, and ſhewed by cutting a ſhred from his mantle, he might have gone farther if he would; Saul himſelf confeſt, it was a great favour: yet that would not win him, he ſought his life ſtill. And even after this here, yet he ſought it ſtill. There was no hope to appeaſe him. And who then would not make ſure of ſuch an enemy? Verily if any enmity might have ſerved, here it was.

3 An enemy not to be won as out of envy. Chap. 18.6. Prov. 27.4. Chap. 24.18. 20.

But there is yet a worſe enmity than all theſe. Saul was not only an enemy to David, but Sauls life, an enemie to Davids riſing. David was in reverſion (we know:) So, Saul ſtood in his way. There was not only the ſting of revenge, but the edge of ambition, to help this motion forward. It was but occidamus eum; here he is, kill him and the inheritance is ours, all is ours. Any other enemies ſpare, and ſpare not; but, theſe that ſtand in our light, away with them. It made Abimelech not to ſpare his own brethren, nor Abſalom, his Father, nor Athalia, her children. Sure, he that weighs it well, that at one blow he might have rid himſelf of ſuch an enemy, and withall have gained the crown, will wonder, he let not the blow proceed. Now, lay them together: 1 An enemy, ſuch an one, ſo deadly; 2 ſo without cauſe; 3 ſo without all hope of appeaſing, 4 ſuch a ſtop to his fortunes: who would have ſtayed Abiſhai s hand.

4 An enemy to his riſing. Chap. 16.40. Mat. 21.38. Judg. 9.5. 1 Sam. 15. 2 Kings 11. 1.

This is enough to give his appetite an edge: but, we lack opportunity to do it; and want of opportunity ſaves many an enemies life. Men muſt deal wiſely, and forbear, till they find him handſomly, at ſome good advantage. Nay, it is now grown to be good Divinity, rebus ſic ſtantibus, to be as gentle as David; and Ne perdas is good doctrine. But, as ſoon as time ſerves and ſtrength, if we get him once within locks, penned up, and in our power, then do as we ſee cauſe, deſtroy him and ſpare not. So that, upon concluſit eum ever ſtayeth our concluſion. Why here now, concluſit eum. It was night: Saul lay all weary aſleep, in a dead ſleep, he and all about him. David and Abiſhai came and went, ſaid what they would; took what they would, none waked or knew of it. It might have been done ſafely, there was none to reſiſt them: and been carried cloſely, none to deſcry them. An opportunity it was, and a fair one.

The I. Motive. Concluſit Deus

1 It was night, fair opportunity.

And (as it might ſeem) of GOD's own ſending. It was perilouſly put in (that) of Abiſhai, Concluſit Deus; that it was GOD's doing, ſure: it was the ſleep of GOD was fallen on them: none awake; all aſleep; watch and all. They might ſtay all the dayes of their life, and GOD never ſend the like again. What now?

2 Of Gods ſending (as it might ſeem.)

Though David wanted no courage to be revenged on an enemy, nor wiſdom to diſcern this opportunity; yet, for his reputation, he muſt not ſoil his hands: but poſſibly, if ſome other would take it upon him, he would not be much againſt it. Why, it was undertaken by Abiſhai, that too: he ſhall go his way, and do nothing to it: Sine me, you ſhall bear no blame, let that be upon me; you ſhall go to Church, and ſing Pſalms, and hear the Sermon, and never appear in it. What now? I know not what can be required more. Thus you ſee the motives: Now, what ſaith David?

The III. Motive. Sine Me.

Nay firſt, what ſaith Saul? Can we have a better Judge than him in this caſe? Et inimici noſtri ſint judices, an enemy to be Judge in his own caſe: If you will know, what he ſaith; He it is, that (in the XXIV. Chapter, XX.) ſaith thus. Who ſhall finde his enemy at ſuch an advantage, and let him goe free? As much to ſay, Not any; Sure, not he. But if he, of many another had found David, as David did him, in the Cave, he would have cut his skirts ſo cloſe, as he would have made him have bled in the reines of his back; or if he had taken him (as he did Saul here) aſleepe, he would have ſet him out of that ſleep into another, a perpetuall ſleep, and made him ſure enough for ever waking more. This is Sauls doom, from his own mouth. And indeed, hæc eſt via hominis, with fleſh and blood theſe motives would have wrought. They did not with David: what ſaith he? theſe motives move him not.

II.
Davids diſlike.

For all this, all this notwithſtanding, Ne perdas, ſaith he. And firſt, mark; he denieth none of his three motives, 1 that Saul was his enemy; 2 or that the time ſerved fitly; 3 or that the colour was good: but, granting all theſe, for all our enmity, for all this opportunity, for all your colourable offer to ſave mine honeſty; for all this, Deſtroy him not.

The firſt charge: Ne perdas.

Secondly, Mark, it is not negando, a bare denial, Non eſt faciendum: but, with an imperative, with authority, Ne feceris; ſtraightly charging and commanding him not to be ſo hardy, as to do it. Et eſt efficacior vetandi ratio quam Negandi; by Ne, than by Non: The imperative negative is moſt effectual.

And thirdly, that this is not the firſt time: once before, he had done the like: and Iteratio præſupponit deliberationem. And indeed, there is a myſterie in this ſame [Sine me] of Abiſhai. They had had him once before at like advantage, in the Cave; (and will you but obſerve, how it went then; it is well worthy your obſerving.) Then they were at David, to have done it himſelf, Deſtroy Him you: What was his anſwer? Who I? GOD forbid, never move it, I will never do it. Now then, here at this, Abiſhai, knowing by the former, it was in vain to move him to do it, he offers to be the doer:

doer: It shall be none of your act; Sine me: What answer now? No, nor you; See you do it not. Perdas (saith Abishai) before: Non perdam, saith David, Perdam (saith Abishai) now: Ne perdas, saith David. So, he will neither do it himself, nor suffer it to be done. The short is: Neither waking, as at first; nor sleeping, as now: neither by day, as in that; nor by night, as in this: neither by himself, not by other, will David endure to do it, or to have it done. But, in the one and the other, first and last, still and ever, Ne perdas (saith David:) Saul must not be destroyed.

4. Yea, so far was he after this, from fore-thinking this speech, or wishing it unsaid, that he pleased himself in this Ne perdas so, that not content to have said it, he made a Psalm of it, to sing himself, and all Israel with him; and by singing it, to sing their duty in this point, into all their minds and memories. A sign, the words were good, he would bestow a ditty and tune upon them, as if he glorified in them. Yea, to make them the more memorable, that they might never be lost, he hath framed divers other Psalms to the same tune. You may turn to the 58. 59. 75. You shall find all their titles, to the tune of Ne perdas; that so, all that then were, and all that were to come, might know, how good a speech he took it to be, how meet to be said, and sung, of all ages.

5 And what would ye more? Not these two only, said, and sung; but in the verse following, takes his oath, and swears to it: As the Lord liveth (saith he) GOD'S hand may, but mine shall never be upon him: and his day may come; but, not a day sooner for me. So, that, he said no more in this; than he meant to swear to.

2 The Reason, or II. charge. Ne manum mittas.

But now to come to look into the reason: we shall find, he goeth farther than so, than Not destroying. For being to give a reason of Ne perdas, keeping the rule, he should now have gone on with it, as he begun, and said, Quis enim perdidit? For who ever destroyed a King? He doth not so: That (as it seemeth) would not serve his turn: he changeth his verb now, and saith, Quis enim manum misit? Who hath but put forth his hand? As if he had given too much scope, in saying no more, but destroy not. Indeed, it was well spied; it must be stopped, before it come to destroying, if it be come to the deed once, we are all undone; Ne perdas is not enough. Much mischief may be; at least much fear, and fright (as this day there was) and yet, no destruction.

To make sure work then, so far is he from perdas, as he will not allow manum mittas. By which denying the latter, the former is put past all doubt. If the hand be stayed, no blow can be given: if order be taken for one, the other will follow of it self. You may not destroy; for, you may not stir your hand, is a good consequent.

And sure, GOD's care, in this point, is worthy all observation; it descendeth to such minutes: here in this place we have two restraints together, 1 Destroy not; 2 and (which is more) lay no hand. In another place, he goeth yet farther, Touch not mine Anointed; there needs no hand to that, the finger will serve. And yet farther in another place, Ne surgas, Rise not out of your place; or (as the Psalm expresseth it) lift not up your heel: (that is) stir not hand nor foot, to any such end. Men may stir their foot, and not rise; and rise, and not touch; and touch, but lay no hands; and lay the hands on, and not destroy. But, GOD's meaning is from the first to the last, to restrain all: To have all so far from destroying, as not to lay your hand; nay, not touch with your finger; nay, not so much as rise, or stir the foot: but keep every joynt quiet, from any the least quetching in this matter of Ne perdas. To go about to do it, is as much as to do it.

Psal. 105 15. Prov. 30. 31. Psal. 41 9.

1 The first Retentive: Christum Domini.

We hear this charge: but all this while we see not the Retentive, that holds him so, that all Abishais motives could not move him. He tels us now, what it was: CHRISTUS DOMINI. In which word, is the solution of Abishai's argument, thus. That his military Maxim (destroying an enemy) which he and many one else in the world, take to be universal, is not so. It admits exceptions divers; but among the rest, and above the rest, this; if the party be CHRISTUS DOMINI, it holds not. There is more retentive force in CHRISTUS DOMINI, to keep him alive; than there is motive in Inimicus tuus, to destroy him. This is his answer. And it is under one, both a solution of Abishai's argument; and a new one propounded by David, to conclude his part, thus. The LORDS Anointed is not to be touched: (GODS own expres words, Touch not mine Anointed:) But Saul, what terms soever he stand in of amity or enmity, GOD's Anointed he is: Therefore, no touching him. And I observe this, that he maketh choice of CHRISTUS DOMINI, for his medius terminus, rather than Dominus Rex, or any other; rather of GOD's Anointed, than of his Liege-Lord the King. (Yet there is force in them too; but nothing such, as in this.) To the Sanctuary he goeth, as to the surest place, and from thence fetcheth this term of the Lords Annointed, and so makes the matter surer, as he thinketh. For, when all is done, from that place it cometh, that maketh both their Callings, and Persons sacred, and holy: therefore, not without sacriledge to be violated; nay, not to be touched. For, such is the nature of holy things, not to be touched; I say, not by any enemy; no, not in war. For, so we see, David is displeased with the Philistims, for so dealing with Saul, as if he had not been Anointed with oyl; as who say, it was their duties to have spared him, even in that respect.

Hagg. 2. 13. 2 Sam. 1 21.

And sure a high term it is, and not slightly to be passed over. In another place he calleth them GOD's; here, CHRISTUS DOMINI: So, they participate with the name of GOD, and with the name of CHRIST, Anointed; and if they be Anointed, it is with the HOLY GHOST and power from above. Which all shew a near alliance between GOD and them, between Christ and them, the Holy Ghost, and them, so as, they are not to be harmed the least way, if GOD, or Christ, or the Holy Ghost can keep them from it.

Psal. 82. 6. Acts 10 38.

And

And this Retentive is ſtrong enough, where there is any ſenſe of Religion. But, it is not to be doubted, Abiſhai, and ſome beſides him, have no great feeling that way, and ſo not capable of this. What care they for Samuel or his horn of oyl? It muſt not come out of the Sanctuary, it muſt come from the Bar and the Bench, that muſt prevail with them. Tell them of Non eris inſons, Guilty or not Guilty, and then you ſay ſomething. We ſaid before, there is no more effectual way to deny, than to forbid; and it is true, Nec efficacior vetandi ratio, quàm pœnâ propoſitâ, No way of more force to forbid, than ſet a penalty on it: ſpecially, the great penalty of all, death. And yet death, a Souldier careth not ſo much for neither, except it be mors ſontica, a malefactors death, and the chief malefactors, the traitors death, to be drawn and dragged from his place, [a] Joab hanged, as [b] Bigthan; His bowels pulled out, (to ſuit him to [c] Judas, whoſe guſhed out of themſelves;) To have his heart opened, yet being alive, as [d] Abſalom; His head chopped off, as [e] Sheba; and it and his quarters hanged up, as [f] Baana, and Rechabs were: To have [g] their lands and livelyhoods ſeized on, and given to ſtrangers; [h] Their iſſue miſerable for their ſakes: [i] To be damnatæ memoriæ, their name, and memory as a curſe: (which three are ſet down in the hundreth and ninth Pſalm, the Pſalm againſt threachery.) Tell Abiſhai of this, and this may perhaps ſtay him.

And to ſay truth, this was no more than needful; without it, all that was ſaid, might have been thought to have had but rationem conſilii & non præcepti; to have been ſpoken by way of good honeſt adviſe, but to have been no penal or capital Law. Gently ſaid of David, Ne perdas; And well done of Abiſhai, to forbear; but, no neceſſity in it. Therefore he tells them, Theſe words [Ne perdas] are a binding precept: and that ſo, as if they be tranſgreſſed, they will bear an action; yea, an enditement; that who ſo breaketh them, Non erit inſons. And Non erit inſons are judicial words, and this they import; That, not only they may be arraigned, but, that no Queſt can acquit them, or find them not guilty: that by no Book, they can; that by this book, they cannot be ſaved. But if they ſtretch forth their hands againſt the Lords Anointed, their necks muſt ſtretch for it; and being found guilty, they muſt be dealt with as thoſe that are ſo found; and upon them muſt come all that is written in this book, which yet-while we recounted.

And yet, Non erit inſons goeth further. For, ſuppoſe ſome of them ſhould happen not to be brought to the bar, it ſhall not ſerve; for all that, Non erit inſons, ſtill GOD will not hold them guiltleſs. He will not ſo leave them; but (rather than there ſhould not be holden) hold an Aſſize Himſelf, and bring them to the end of guilty perſons, all the ſort of them. Heaven ſhall do it by lightning [a] (as Pſal. 144.) or the earth do it by ſwallowing up (as [b] Core;) or their own friend ſhall do it (as [c] Joab;) or their own beaſt (as [d] Abſaloms;) or their own ſelves hang themſelves (as [e] Achitophel;) or burn themſelves (as [f] Zimri.) If they will not ſay Ne perdas, to Chriſtus Domini, Chriſtus Domini ſhall ſay perdas to them, and ſend them all to their own place, the pit of perdition, ſo many as will not ſay Ne perdas, to the Lords Anointed. It was not for nought, that David ſaid to him (2 Sam. 1.) How waſt thou not afraid to do it? There is (ſure) matter of fear in it, every way, to ſtay them: fear of GOD, in Chriſtus Domini, to move David; fear of the Gallows, in Non eris inſons, to move Abiſhai.

But upon all this, would it not do well, if we had Abiſhai's own confeſſion given in evidence againſt himſelf? That (I ſuppoſe) would take up the matter quite. We have it, 2 Sam. 16. There, in a caſe only of looſneſs in the tongue, where Shimei let go certain railing ſpeeches againſt David, could Abiſhai ſay, What ſhall this foul-mouthed curre thus be ſuffered to ſpeak againſt the Lords Anointed? and no remedy, he would needs have gone and fetched his tongue and head and all. Yea, after this return in peace, when King David had, upon Shimei's ſubmiſſion, given him his pardon, Abiſhai pleaded hard, to have it called back, and would needs have him die for it; and well worthy he was. And all was but for miſit linguam: and Abiſhai himſelf is here laying hands, violent hands, on the Lords Anointed; a worſe matter by far. So that upon the matter, Abiſhai is judged out of his own mouth, and David juſtified by him, in his Non eris inſons. There are your two Retentives: 1 the firſt for good ſubjects; 2 the latter for whomſoever.

3 Abiſhai's own confeſſion. Verſe 9.

Now, leſt any might conceive, this is but a caſe of inſtance; holds in this particular, but extends not to all; ſome body, in ſome caſe, may do it for all this; therefore is it, he carrieth it along through all, with his Quis? to tell us, his meaning is, That not only Abiſhai, but that Ne quis perdat, Ne quis manum mittat, that, none at all deſtroy, none lay hands at all: that his Ne is general without exception of any.

3 The generality of the charge. Quis eſt inſons?

And in this, even his manner of denying, his figura dictionis, the tenor of his ſpeech is ſuch, as I dare make a note of it. There be divers wayes of denying, one more full and forcible than another: but of all the way by interrogative is holden the fulleſt, and moſt of force. To have ſaid, None did ever attempt it, which was not guilty; this had been a denial, but a calm one. But to ſay: Whoever went about it, but he was found guilty? there is more life and vigour in it, by a great deal. Indeed, of all Negatives, the ſtrongeſt, the moſt peremptory, is by Quis? For it is not a bare Negative; but a Negative with a challenge: ſending a challenge to any, if he can for his life, to ſhew one, that was holden innocent in that caſe. They call it the triumphant Negative; as bearing it ſelf confident, that none can riſe up againſt it: Who? (that is) ſhew, if ever any ſuch had peace, if ever any were reputed innocent; As much to ſay as, never was there any, never. If there were, name him, bring him forth; but that you cannot: therefore Quis fuit inſons? maketh the caſe clear, and paſt all queſtion. So you ſee, David told us of Chriſtus Domini, as it were in his Ephod, as a Prophet: Then went he into his long robe, and told us Non erit inſons, as a Judge: And now he is in his armour, as a Challenger, with Quis unquam? to challenge any, that holdeth the contrary.

And his challenge will be taken; and there be, that hold the contrary, in our age, and that dare ſtep forth, and make a queſtion of it for all this: or rather, make no queſtion at all of it, but can tell David, both who may lay his hand on, to deſtroy GOD's Anointed, and who ſhall acquit, abſolve, and make them innocent, that ſo do.

Who ſhall; Quis? marry quiſquis, any whoſoever, being warranted. And who ſhall warrant him? That ſhall the High Prieſt, by his laſt cenſure.

Theſe fellows would not ſtick to tell Abiſhai, a clean contrary tale to that of Davids deſtroy me, ſaith he. Go to, ſay David what he will, or what he can, we ſay, deſtroy him: What, if he be? Yea, though he be the Lords Anointed. You ſhall be guilty then certainly, ſaith David. What ſay they? Say they thus: You ſhall not be guilty, you may do it, we will abſolve you? (that were too much:) No; but you ſhall merit by it; you ought to do it: we will Saint you for ſo doing. This is not matter of talk; we know it hath been done.

Quis? who? A Jacobine lay his hand: Yea, hand and knife, and thruſt it into the body of GODS Anointed: Yea, anointed with the oyle that came down from heaven (as they tell us) ſent purpoſely to anoint the French Kings, and make them GODS Anointed κατ' ἐξοχὴν. What, and not guilty? Not guilty: yea, and hardly ſcaped from being a Saint, if the Cardinals faith had failed as well as the Popes did, and if they had not kept Saint Peters Succeſſor from erring. Be not we fallen into ſtrange times, wherein David muſt be driven to recant, and Abiſhai prove the Prophet? and in which (as if there were no ſuch verſe as this in the Bible) the illuſion of error is grown ſo ſtrong with ſome, as they will rather themſelves be deſtroyed, than ſay, the Lords Anointed is not to be deſtroyed.

Sauls caſe a ruling caſe for Ne perdas.

I will do them no wrong: They will ſay, this Text is enough to condemn this dayes attempt, it cometh full home to that caſe. It was upon Inimicum tuum: in which caſe of private revenge, themſelves hold it clear, quod non, as well as we. But when they diſpenſe with Ne perdas, it is upon other grounds: upon miſgovernment, or (to ſpeak as they do) tyrannie; upon uſurping power in matters Eccleſiaſtical: upon bloody perſecution; and that of GOD's Prieſts; and theſe are not in the Text. Yes they are in him in the Text, concerning whom this Ne perdas was given, every one: and yet Ne perdas ſtands for all that. And this I ſay, howſoever Abiſhai did look upon Saul, but with a ſouldiers eye, and ſaw nothing in him but an enemy, to move him, to deſtroy him; if ſome of theſe quick and ſharp-ſighted Abiſhai's had had the looking into him, they would have ſpied in him other manner of matter, to have reſolved him meet to be made away: they would have found him, not Davids enemy only, but an enemy to GOD, and all goodneſſe; and return him culpable of all thoſe faults, which they uſe to inſiſt on, when they write their books to that end.

And I verily think, GOD in this firſt example, of his firſt King over his own people, hath purpoſely ſuffered them all to fall out, and to be found in him; even all that ſhould fall out in any King after him, to inforce their poſition: that ſo we might finde them anſwered to our hands.

Notwithſtanding his Miſgovernment and tyranny. Chap. 11.5.

To touch them in order. They would eaſily have quarrelled at Sauls miſgovernment. Not at the firſt: he then, was a middle, and a gracious Prince. Never came there from any Princes mouth, a more princely ſpeech, than the firſt ſpeech, he is recorded to have ſpoken, Quid populo quod flet? What ayles the people to complaine? A ſpeech worthy everlaſting memory, ſo they complaine not without cauſe. But within awhile, he grew ſo ſterne and fierce, as no man might ſpeak to him. Upon every light occaſion, nay upon no occaſion at all, his Javelin, went ſtraight to naile men to the wall: Not David only, but Jonathan his Sonne and Heire apparent, and no cauſe why. In the XIII. Chapter it is ſaid, Saul had then been King a year, and reigned two years in Iſrael: yet it is well known, his reign was forty years: Their own Writers reſolve it, thus: how long ſoever he reigned, he was a King but two years. All the time after, he was ſomewhat elſe, or ſomewhat more than a King. And they let not to tell what; applying to Saul that of the Pſalme, Tyrants that have not God before their eyes, ſeek after my ſoul. And that: Under thy winge ſhall be my refuge, till this tyranny be overpaſt. Yet for all this tyranny, Ne perdas, ſaith David.

Chap. 20.33. Chap. 13.2. Pſal. 54.3. 57.1.

2 Uſurping the Prieſts office. Chap. 15 17.

Yet for all this he fell not into the ſin of all ſins, which they ſtand ſo much on, Uſurping power in things ſpiritual. Yes, and that would they have found too. Why? did he call himſelf Head of the Church? indeed no: Samuel did that for him; He it was, that ſaid: When thou wert little in thine own eyes, the Lord made thee Head of the Tribes of Iſrael (of which, the Tribe of Levi was one) for that, Samuel muſt anſwer. But Saul went farther a great deal; yea, farther than Oza: For he took upon him to ſacrifice in perſon himſelf; to offer burnt-offerings, upon the very Altar, the higheſt part of all the Prieſts Office: that is, uſurped farther than ever did any. And all this David knew, yet it kept him from ſaying, Ne perdas.

3 Shedding the Prieſts blood. Chap. 22.18.

They never had done with perſecuting and ſhedding Prieſts blood: was Sauls finger in that too; In that, he paſſed. He put the High Prieſt himſelf and LXXXIV. more, all in one day, to the ſword: and all but upon the ſingle accuſation, but of Doeg, all proteſting their innocency, in the fact; and all, loyalty to him: and all but for a dozen of bread given to David. This could not but grieve David exceedingly: it was for his ſake, yet he ſaith, Ne perdas though, for all that.

4 Being poſſeſſed with an evil ſpirit. Chap. 16.14.

And one caſe more I give in for advantage. It is well known, he was a demoniack, one actually poſſeſſed with an evil ſpirit; which is a caſe beyond all other caſes: Yet deſtroy him not Abiſhai, though. So that, if Abiſhai, in ſtead of inimicum tuum, had ſaid, GOD hath ſhut up 1 this Tyrant, 2 this Uſurper, 3 this Perſecutor, 4 this Poſſeſſed party, this what you will; David would have ſaid no other than he did, Ne perdas, ſtill. I would fain know, which of all their deſtructive caſes is here want-wanting: They be all here; all, in Saul; all in him, at the time of this motus: yet, all alter not the caſe: David ſaith ſtill, as he ſaid. If then all be in Saul, all incident, all current in him; nay, if his caſe be beyond all; ſaid it muſt be, that David here ſaith. Though he be any of theſe, though he be all theſe, deſtroy him not; or deſtroy him and be deſtroyed, deſtroy him, and be the chuſe of perdition.

I would be loth to deceive you: There may ſeem yet to want one thing. Here was no High Prieſt to excommunicate him, or give warrant to do it: yes, that there was too. For Abiathar ſcaped that great maſſacre of Prieſts by Saul: and now, he was lawful High Prieſt. Now he fled to David theare; and brought the Ephod with him. So as by good hap the High Prieſt was with David now in the Camp, and the Ephod too. There wanted no juſt cauſe (you ſee) to proceed againſt Saul. There wanted no lawful authority, the High Prieſt we have. There wanted no good will in Abiathar, ye may be ſure, his father and brethren having been murdered by Saul. So there was all, or might have been, for a word ſpeaking. All would not ſerve; David is ſtill where he was, ſaith ſtill Ne perdas: knew no ſuch power in the High Prieſts cenſure, was not willing to abuſe it; cannot let Quis, any perſon to do it; nor any cauſe, for which it is to be done. Enough to make a ruled caſe of it for ever. That Abiſhai may not do it, nor Abiathar give warrant to it. His charge is honeſt: Ne perdas: For reaſon good, Chriſtus Domini: His ſentence juſt, Non erit inſons: His challenge unanſwerable, Quis mittet manum?

5 There was an High Prieſt Abiathar.

Chap. 22. laſt.

Chap. 23. 6.

And, this being cleared, come we now to the principal cauſe of our coming. Which is, in this publick manner, to render our yearly ſolemn thanks to Chriſtus Dominus, for the deliverance of our Chriſtus Domini, this day (a deliverance like this in the Text;) even for His Ne perdas, at Perth. For it, and for both points in it. 1. That His Anointed was not deſtroyed. 2 That they, that put forth their hand to do it, carried it not away, but found the reward due to guilty perſons. The two caſes, 1 this in the Text: 2 and that of this day: are both like in the maine: if in circumſtances, diſſike; this of ours hath the advantage. The fact more foul, the deliverance more famous.

The Text and Day compared.

To ſpeak then of malitia diei hujus, the malicious practice of this day. Had the King been an enemy; yea, ſuch an enemy as Saul, it had been no warrant. But, he was no enemy: No, but many wayes, a gracious Prince to them both. I know, pretence there was, of a wrong. Say it had been one; what was done, was done by others, in the Kings minority. And though done by others, yet juſtly done: and no wrong was it at all, but wrongfully ſo called.

Secondly, the King was ſhut up, it is true; but not as in the Text, by GOD; but by wicked men, who found him not caſually (as Saul was) but trained him guilefully to the place, and there ſhut him up treacherouſly. It was not ſudden, it was a long plot: the malice, the more; the fact, the fouler. And there he was concluſus & derelictus both; ſhut up by Abiſhai, forſaken of David.

Thirdly, and it was not night, nor the King aſleep, that he might have paſſed away without any fright or terror. No: it was Dæmon meridianus, this, a noone-day Devil: He was broad awake, and the fear of death (worſe than death it ſelf) I know not how oft and many times, before his eyes.

Fourthly: And as beyond it in theſe; ſo, in the Principal beyond it too. Both of them lift up: Abiſhai, his ſpeare; this, his dagger, to have given the fatal blow Abiſhai, but once: This, twice. And certainly, nearer it came the King, than David would ſuffer it to come to Saul: So, the danger nearer, and the delivery greater. And yet, there was a Ne perdas in this too; and that a ſtrange one: Not by David, no: Judge, if it may not ſeeme a miracle, that GOD then ſhewed. When there was none to ſay deſtroy not, elſe; GOD opened, his mouth that was there ſet, himſelf to be the deſtroyer, to ſay once and again, O deſtroy him not, deſtroy not the King. The voice was Davids; the hands, Abiſhai's. It calls to my minde, what long ſince I read in Herodotus: that at the taking of Sardi, when one ran at Cræſus the King, to have ſlain him, that a little boy borne dumb, that had never ſpoken word in all his life, with the fright and horror of this ſight, his tongue looſed, and he broke forth and cried, ὦ ἄνθρωπε, &c. O man deſtroy not the King, and ſo ſaved his life. So writeth he, as of a wonder: and ſee, if this were not like it. But ſo we ſee, if there were no body elſe to ſay it, they that are born dumb ſhall ſay it; yea, the deſtroyer himſelf ſhall ſay it, rather than Ne perdas ſhall not be ſaid. This would not ſerve (though it did to Abiſhai; but they were worſe than Abiſhai, that were here. That GOD therefore might have the honour of the day, he paſſed over to the latter part of the verſe; and when there was none elſe to do it, he took the matter into his own hands; himſelf held the Aſſiſe, found him guilty, gave order for his execution, ſent up one to do it; and one, that formerly had been his ſpecial friend, and (if I be not deceived) ſworn brother, as Joab, to bring Abſalom to his end; that deſtroyed him, for not hearing deſtroy not.

And yet the goodneſſe of GOD ſtayed not here, neither; but, where in the Text, in Sauls caſe, there was but one blow, one danger, one delivery: In this, there were no leſſe than three, one after another. Firſt came Abiſhai; he and his armed man: GOD delivered him. Then came the other, the Maſter of the miſchief, then bewrayed, (as one bewrayed) deſperately ſet: GOD again delivered him. Then laſt of all (and that was worſt of all) came the popular tumult, whoſe rage knows no reaſon, who, as they Num. 16. called Core and Dathan, the people of the Lord: ſo theſe (little better:) and even then alſo did GOD by his mighty providence turn away the deſtruction. This in the Text was ſoone done; a few words, and away: This of the day, it was long firſt, and much ado, yet it was done: the longer, and the more, the more is GOD to be magnified for it.

And when all was done there, he that was ſaved was but Saul: but here (envie flatters not, but) if envie it ſelf ſhould ſpeak, it would ſay Major Saule hic, a greater than Saul any: (For, the territory of the leaſt of your Kingdoms was greater than that of his:) And Melior Saule hîc, a better than Saul was here ſaved, better, without all compariſon. So, the beginning was (as they made account) Concluſit Deus inimicum noſtrum: The end was, as it proved, Concluſit Deus inimicos Domini Regis, GOD made a concluſion of their wicked premiſſes and their wretched perſons all at once. So, the concluſion was Ne perdas to the King, and Non inſons to the children of perdition.

Now, to that GOD, that when You were ſhut up, forſooke You not, but delivered You à malitia diei hujus, & à Dæmone meridiano; that in the depth of all your danger, when there was no tongue on earth could ſay Ne perdas, ſaid it from heaven, and ſaid it thrice over: for that his three-fold delivery, render we three-fold thanks and praiſe; thrice bleſſed be His holy Name for it. And He grant, that this leſſon of Davids may take deep root in all our hearts, that there may never be a Quis in Iſrael to lift up his hand, to the like action; all may be quit, none found guilty ever of ſo ſoul a crime. None, on Abiſhai's ſide; to make any ſuch motion; all of Davids minde, to miſlike it, to ſay Ne perdas: Ne perdas, though it be Saul. But, for David, Ne perdas is not enough. To Him, and ſuch as He is, let us with one voice cry Hoſanna; not only, not deſtroy, but Hoſanna, LORD ſave, LORD proſper, LORD adde dayes to his dayes, that his years may be as many ages. And as this day thou didſt, ſo ſtill and ſtill prepare thy loving mercy and truth, that they may preſerve Him, even for ever and ever.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE Kings Majesty,

At HOLDENBIE,

On the V. of August, A.D.M.DC. X.

I CHRON. Chap. XVI. Ver. XXII.

Nolite tangere Christos meos.

Touch not mine Anointed.

HEre is a speech: but we know not Whose, nor to Whom, nor yet (well) concerning whom: only concerning certain Persons, whom the Speaker (whosoever He is) calleth His Anointed. It behoveth us, to know these three, who they be.

The person, whose the speech is, Persona loquens, He that saith Meos, Him we finde at the fourteenth Verse. Ipse est Dominus Deus noster, He is the Lord our GOD: GOD it is, that speaketh here; He, that challengeth them for His, by calling them, Mine. 1

The persons to whom: in the verse before, Non reliquit hominem, He loveth not a man. So, it is, to all in general: but specially to some, more quick of touch than the rest, whose fingers are never well, till some way or other, they be touching, whom GOD would not have touched. 2

The persons, concerning whom (whom, He stileth, His Anointed) will fall out to prove, the Princes of the earth. We must not say it, but prove it (say it now, prove it anon.) 3

Now, as if some body were about to offer them some wrong, here cometh a voice from heaven, staying their hands, and saying, See you touch them not. Quos Deus unxit, homo nè tangat. Whom GOD hath anointed, let no man presume to touch.

Of which, it may well be said, as the Psalmist saith to us, every day, Hodiè si vocem: To day, if ye will hear His voice, harden not your hearts, and ye may: For, as this day (now ten years) from the same Person, and the same place, a like voice there came, concerning His anointed, in whose presence we stand. That GOD would not have His Anointed touched, this Text is a witnesse, and this Day is a witnesse: the Text, dixit; the Day, factum est.

Referred unto the Text next before, 1 Sam. 26. 9.

Touching the same point, when time was, in this place you heard, Ne perdas: you shall hear it again now, but, from an higher person, under a straighter charge, and with a larger compasse. 1

The person higher: for, that was David: Sed ecce major Davide hic, but behold, a greater than David

David is here This, is no voice on earth (neither of Prophet nor Apoſtle) we now hear: Audivi vocem de cælo; We hear a voice from heaven: And thence, neither of Saint nor Angel, but of GOD Himſelf. To ſhew his care of them (His Anointed) He would have none give the charge about them, but Himſelf; Himſelf in perſon, Non alienæ vocis organo, ſed oraculo ſuæ; from none other, but from His own mouth.

2 The charge ſtricter: for, there it was, deſtroy not, the worſt that could be: Here it is, Touch not, the leaſt that may be; and ſo, even that way, amended much.

3 The compaſſe larger: That, was to Abiſhai, but one man; and it was, concerning Saul, one King only; and therefore it was in the ſingular, Ne perdas: This is, Nolite, and Chriſtos: the number altered, of a larger extent far, even to All men, concerning all His Anointed. Nolite in the plural, that is, None of you: Chriſtos in the plural, that is; None of them. Them, not touched, not Any of them; You, not touch, not Any of you. Non reliquit hominem: He leaveth not a man, but forbiddeth All. Now out of this plural, you may deduce any ſingular; out of Chriſtos, any King: Out of Nolite, any party: Out of Tangere, any hurt: and ſo, not any man, to any hurt, to any His Anointed.

This Text, the firſt and great Commandment concerning this point.

A Commandment it is, and I may ſafely ſay, Primum & magnum mandatum, The firſt and great Commandment, touching the ſafeguard of Princes.

The firſt: For (as the verſes before ſhew) it was the firſt given, in this kind, and that before all other, in the Patriarchs time, long before Moſes, under the Law of Nature.

The greateſt, not only becauſe it is of the greateſt in heaven, and concerning the greateſt in earth: but for that it is the Original main precept, touching Princes and their ſafety, or (as the phraſe is) the fundamental Law, upon the which all the reſt are grounded, unto the which all the reſt reduced, and from the which all the reſt derived. Davids deſtroy not, is but an abſtract of this touch not. Ask him what Text He had for his Ne perdas: hither he muſt come, this muſt be it, and none other. This nolite tangere is the main wing of protection: Ne perdas, or any other particular, is but a feather of it.

The Diviſion To ſee the parts of it. A Precept it is, and negative; and the negative precept is of the nature of a fence, and the fence leadeth us to the thing fenced. Firſt of all then, we take it in ſunder, in the midſt: meos, whoſe the fence is; and then nolite tangere, as it were a circle or fence round about them.

I. Chriſtos meos hath in it two things: Not only the parties, whom they ſhould not; but the reaſon why they ſhould not touch them. Not touch? Whom not touch? His Anointed. And why not touch? Even becauſe, His anointed.

In Chriſtos meos taken together, are the parties non tangenda: Again, in Chriſtos meos taken in ſunder, and weighed apart, are two reaſons couched, de non tangendo

Why not touched? firſt, they be His: and ſecondly, what of His? His anointed. Theſe two, be two ſeveral: His anointed, is more than His: for, all that be His, be not anointed.

1. His alone, were enough; that they be His, they pertain to Him, and ſo, He to ſee them ſafe.

2. But then beſides, they be the very choiſe and chief of His, His anointed, and ſo, a more ſpecial care of them, than the reſt.

3. And then (from the nature of the word) not only His anointed, Uncti Ejus: but Chriſti Ejus, His Chriſts, which is the Higheſt degree of His anointed: for higher than that, ye cannot go.

And laſt, what that is, that maketh them thus, His anointed: to know whether they may be ſtripped of it, or no.

II. Then come we to the Circle or Fence, and that we may divide too: for, Nolite tangere, is a double fence; 1 from the act; 2 and from the will. Touch not (ſo we read) where the touch, the act, is forbidden. Nolite tangere (ſo read the Fathers) where the will to touch is forbidden likewiſe. Nolite, that is, Have ye not the will, not ſo much as an inclination to do it. So, both the act and will of touching is reſtrained: the act, in tangere; the will, in Nolite.

1. In the former, we are to take the extent, of Tangere, and Chriſtos: 1. To what matters Tangere will reach: 2. In how many points, to Chriſtos. And in the latter, to what perſons, in Nolite.

And ſo, ſee we the ſumme of the Text, which is ſufficient enough to keep Kings from touching, if it ſelf might be kept untouched: but as the times are, the Text it ſelf is touched, there needs a ſecond nolite tangere for it. To that end then, to ſee the Text ſafe and well kept, the three perſons in it, all to joyn together: Kings, touching whom; and Subjects, to whom; and GOD Himſelf, by whom it is given in charge. And if the two former do their parts, GOD will not fail in His.

Let me adde one thing more. That this Text, beſides that it is a Commandment, it is alſo a Thankſgiving; but both have but one errand, the Kings ſafety.

A Commandment it is from GOD: the very ſtile, the mood (nolite) giveth it for no leſſe.

And a Thanksgiving it is to GOD; for it is a verſe of a Pſalm, of a Halleluja-Pſalm, of the firſt Halleluja-Pſalm: (there be twenty of them in all, this is the firſt of them all.)

A Commandement it is, for it is proclaimed with ſound of Trumpet, and that by Benaiah and his company: And a Thankſgiving it is, for it is ſung with ſolemne muſick by Aſaph, and the Quyre, at the ſixth and ſeventh verſes before. It is both, and both wayes we to have uſe of it.

First, as of a Commandement from GOD, to teach us this duty towards GOD's Anointed. I truſt, we will performe better duties to them than this: but, whatſoever we do beſides, what good we do them, ne noceat, not to touch them, to do them no hurt.

And, never ſo much need of this doctrine as now, when by a late heavie accident, we ſee, wretches there are, dare attempt it: And other (and they the more wretches of the twaine) that did dare to avow it: Did dare (I ſay,) for, now they would ſeem to diſavow it: but ſo poorely, and faintly, as all they ſay, may hold, and yet another like act be done to morrow.

And then ſecondly, as a Thankſgiving to GOD, who hath ſet the print of this commandement, upon this day; in cutting ſhort this day two wicked Imps, that went about to breake it, by touching, and more than touching, the LORDS Anointed.

And never were we ſo much bound to do it, as this yeare. For that, this yeare, upon this freſh occaſion, truly we may ſay, He hath dealt thus with us, Non taliter fecit omni Nationi, He hath not ſo dealt with all Nations, nor hath every King found Him ſo gracious. Others, have not in theirs; I ſpeak it with compaſſion: we have in ours; I ſpeak it to our comfort, and to the praiſe of GOD. Both theſe wayes. Pſal. 147. 20.

Chriſtos Meos.

AN honourable Title to begin with: and begin with it we muſt: the very Grammar-Rules lead us to it. Anointed, is but an Adjective, we are to ſeeke the Subſtantive for it. But beſides, we are to finde who they be, whom we are not to touch, leſt we touch unwares. And as well, that we may know the right, and do them their right, as that we may diſcern them from the wrong: for, wrong there be, that call themſelves Chriſtos Domini, whom the HOLY GHOST never chriſtned by that name. Chriſtos meos, who they be.

As, of CHRIST Himſelfe, many come and ſay, Ecce, hîc eſt CHRISTUS, ecce illic, Here is CHRIST, and there is CHRIST, and deceive many: So, of theſe Chriſts here likewiſe, See, here is Chriſtus Domini, and there he is, and no ſuch matter. Our firſt point then is to know, who they be. Marke 13. 21.

Theſe in the Text here, were the Patriarchs, it cannot be denied. They be ſet downe by their names, Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob, touching whom, primâ intentione, this charge is given, that they be not touched. Patriarchs Chriſti Domini.

And let not this ſeeme ſtrange: For in the firſt world, the Patriarchs were principal perſons, and (as I may ſafely ſay) Princes in their generations, and for ſuch, holden and reputed by thoſe, with whom they lived. I may ſafely ſay it: for of Abraham it is in expreſſe termes ſaid by the Hethites, Audi Domine, Princeps Dei es inter nos, Thou art a Prince of God (that is, a mighty Prince) here among us: As indeed, a Prince he ſhewed himſelfe, when he gave battell and overthrow to foure Kings at once. Of Iſaac no leſſe may be ſaid, who grew ſo mighty, as the King of Paleſtine was glad to intreat him to remove farther off, and not dwell ſo neare him: and then, to go after him in perſon, and ſue to him, there might be a league of amity between them. And the like of Jacob, who by his ſword and bow, conquered from the Amorite (the mighteſt of all the nations in Canaan) that countrey, which by will he gave to Joſeph for his poſſeſſion; It was near to Sichar, well knowne; you have mention of it, John 4. 5. Gen. 23. 6. Gen. 26. 16. Verſe 28. Gen. 48. 22.

Great men they were certainly, greater than moſt conceive: but be their greatneſſe what it will, this is ſure, they were all the Rulers the people of GOD then had, and beſides them, Rulers had they none. And that is it we ſeeke; Pater was in them, and ἀρχὴ too, father-hood and government: and theſe two made them Patriarchs, & Vnctos ante unctionem (ſaith S. Auguſtine) Anointed before there was any materiall Anointing at all. In Pſal. 140.

In them then this terme began, and in them it held ſo long, as they had the government in them. But Patriarchs were not alwaies to governe GOD's people; but Kings, in ages following, were to ſucceed in their places. And ſo did ſucceed them; ſucceed them in the word Pater, and in the word ἀρχὴ both, both in the right of their father-hood, and the rule of their government, as Fathers of their Countries, and Governours of their Common-wealths. Where the Patriarchall rule expired, the Regall was to take place, being both one in effect. For, Abraham the Patriarch is termed a Prince, (Gen. 23, 6.) and to make even, David the Prince is termed a Patriarch; Let me ſpeak boldly unto you of the Patriarch David, ſaith S. Peter (Act. 2. 29.) So that two things we gaine here: 1. That jus Regium cometh out of jus Patrium, the King's right from the Father's, and both hold by one Commandement. Then 2. That this text bindeth, as a Law of nature, being given for ſuch, to the old world, long before the Law came in any Tables. Princes Chriſti Domini.

Now, that as in other things, ſo in this term of Chriſti Domini Kings do ſucceed the Patriarchs we have (firſt) our warrant from the Holy Ghoſt, applying this term here, after, to [a] Saul, to [b] David, to [c] Salomon, to [d] Ezekias, to [e] Joſias, [f] Cyrus: Kings. all Secondly, from the Councels,

[b] 2 Sam 19. 21.
[c] 2 Chro. 6. 42.
[d] Abac. 3 13.
[e] Lam. 4 23.

Append. ad Tom. 4. p 1097. can. 74. pag. 649. Editio Venet.

The third generall Councell at Epheſus; the great Councel of Toledo, the fourth; the great Weſtern Councel at Franckford. Thirdly, from the conſent of Fathers. To diſpatch them at once, ſo ſaith the Councel of Franckford, B. Hieronymus & cæteri S. Scripturæ tractatores, &c. S. Hierom and the reſt of the Writers on Scripture (all) underſtand it not of others, but of Kings: Yea laſtly from their own Writers, Cajetan, and Genebrard, who themſelves ſo apply it, upon this very place.

Princes only in Scripture have the title of Chriſti Domini.

Nay, Kings, they will grant (they can neither will nor chooſe:) But then, they would hemme in others likewiſe, to enter-common in the title; as the Pope, as the Cardinals, and as any elſe, ſave them that be indeed. But that they muſt do then without book: For in this book warrant have they none. For this term [Chriſti Domini] here, or ginally aſcribed to the Patriarchs, is ever afterward, without variation, continually appropriate to Kings: and to Kings only all the Bible through. The queſtion is, Whether we will ſpeake, as the Holy Ghoſt doth, or no? If we will, then upon a juſt ſurveigh taken of all the places, where the word Chriſtus Domini is to be found in Scripture, three and thirty they

Luc. 2. 26. be in number. Of which one only is in the New, and that is of our SAVIOUR Himſelf; the reſt, all in the Old. Four times by God, mine Anointed; ſix times to God, thine Anointed: Ten times of God His Anointed: Twelve times in terms terminant, Gods Anointed: Of which, twice it is ſaid of the Patriarchs; Here, and in the CV. Pſalm (which two places are indeed but one.) All the reſt are ſaid either of Chriſt or of Kings, all: and never applyed to any other, but to them only. And here we joyn

Verſe 15. iſſue: if to any other the Scripture apply Chriſtus Domini, we yeild: if to none but them, we carrie it. For, what reaſon have we, if the Scripture appropiate it to them, and none but them; to take it from them, and give it to others, to whom the Holy Ghoſt never gave it?

Though other perſons anointed yet none called the Lords Anointed.

Yet have I no meaning to deny, but that others, not only perſons, but (if they will) even things too, were anointed under the Law. Perſons, as Prieſts and Prophets: Things as the Tabernacle, and all the veſſels of it, even to the very fire-forks, aſhpans and ſnuffers. But though they were ſo, yet none of the things, nay, nor any of the perſons, have ever the name given them, of Chriſtus Domini. No Prophet, of all the fellowſhip of the Prophets; no Prieſt, no not the High Prieſt himſelf, ever ſo called: It may be anointed, but not the Lords Anointed: i may be Vncti, but not Chriſti: or in a corner of one chapter of the Maccabees [Chriſti] once, but not with his full Chriſtendom, not Chriſti Domini. Still they fall ſhort: and Chriſtus Domini followes the King and him only.

Yea, this ye ſhall obſerve in their owne old Tranſlator: that the ſame word in Hebrew and Greeke, when he ſpeaketh of the Prieſt, he ever turneth it Vnctus; when of the King, Chriſtus ever: as if of purpoſe he meant by this word, to make a partition between them. Any will think, there was ſurely meant them ſome ſpecial prerogative more than the reſt: that from the reſt it is given them, and ever to them, and to none of the reſt.

Heb. 1, 4, 5. We may well conclude this point then, with the Apoſtle: They are made ſo much the more excellent than the reſt, by how much they have obtained a more excellent name than the reſt. For unto which of all the reſt at any time ſaid he, Thou art mine Anointed? Enough to ſettle this term upon Kings. The Holy Ghoſt attributes it to them, and none but them. We to underſtand it of them, and none but them: it is, and ſo let it be, their own due ſtile their proper denomination. Touch not mine Anointed: Who be they? If we go by the book, Princes: Why then, Touch not Princes.

Meos the claime whoſe they be.

Chriſtos meos, who they be, wee ſee. But in theſe words (we ſaid) there are not only the parties, who m they ſhould not; but the reaſon, why they ſhould not touch them. And not one reaſon, but two at the leaſt. Now then let us take the words in ſunder, and weigh either by it ſelf, ſeeing either word is a reaſon, de non tangendo. Firſt whoſe they be, His meos, Then what of his: his Anointed. And his Anointed is Chriſti ejus: Which (it may be) will amount to two reaſons more. Meos is his claim: Chriſtos, his character, or ſpeciall marke.

Lay no title to them.

Meos, His claim: which word is not ſlightly to be paſſed by. It is to the purpoſe. To claim is to touch. He that ſaith meos; He that claimes them, toucheth them, toucheth their free-hold (as we ſay.) He that ſaith, touch them not; ſaith claim them not. Some queſtion there is grown, whoſe they be. Two claimes there are put in and laid to them, beſides; Meos, ſaith the Pope; and meos, ſay ſome for the People; but neither ſay true: God, He ſaith Chriſtos Meos, and he only hath the right ſo to ſay.

1 Meos the Popes claime.

Meos ſaith the Pope. For he, or ſome by his commiſſion, uſed to anoint the Emperours, and becauſe he was maſter of the ceremony, he would be maſter of the ſubſtance to: and his they were. The Pope, he was Gods; and they were his Anointed, and of him had their dependance, and he to depoſe them and to diſpoſe of them, and to do with his own what he liſt. And this claime is not yet given over. For, he that ſhall mark the Popes faintneſſe, when ſome Kings are ſought to be touched, nay are touched indeed, out of his meos; will eaſily think, he is well enough content they be touched, though they be Gods Anointed; if they be not his too, Touch not his: Not his; as for others, it skilleth not, touch them, who will.

But this claime by the ceremony is clean marred, by this Text: for when theſe words (here) were ſpoken, there was no ſuch ceremony inſtituted, it was Non ens, no ſuch thing in rerum naturâ. That came not up, till Moſes: Now theſe here in the Text, were in their graves long before Moſes was born No meos then; no claim by the ceremony.

And after it came up, no Prieſt went out of Jury to Perſia to carry the ceremony to Cyrus: yet

2 Eſay 45. 1. of him, ſaith Eſay, Hæc dicit Dominus, Cyro Chriſto meo, Thus ſaith the Lord, to Cyrus mine Anointed, and yet never came there any oyle upon his head. So that even after it was taken up, yet the ceremony and the claim by it, would not hold. The truth is, the ceremony doth not any thing only declareth, what is done. The party was before, as much as he is after it: only by it is declared to be, that he was before, and that which he should have been still, though he had never so been declared. The truth may and doth subsist, as with the ceremony, so without it. It may be retained, as with some it is, and with us it is: and it may be spared, as it is with others: Spared, or retained, all is one; no claim groweth that way.

But last of all, where it was used, as by Samuel to Saul, by Sadoc to Solomon: yet they claimed nothing in the parties they anointed, but called them still GOD's, and never their own anointed. They knew no claim lay by it; Nay, if it had been a Sacrament, as it was but a ceremony: he that ministreth the Sacrament, hath no interest in the party by it, but GOD alone; and then much less he, that performeth but a ceremony, is to plead any Meos. So that every way, this claim vanisheth, of Christi Pontificis. 3

Now then a second claim, another Meos, hath of late begun to be buzzed of as if they were Christi populi, and held of them. And whatsoever the matter is, the Cardinal himself waxeth very earnest for it; (I think, because he seeth the Popes arm groweth short; and loth he is, but that there should be still some hands to touch them;) he will not so much, as give God leave to appoint Saul or David of himself, but he taketh upon him, to suspend them both, until the people with their suffrage come in, and ratifie GOD's doing. Meos: the peoples claim. Bellarmine.

But this claim likewise falleth to the ground, even by this verse: then must we go mend our Text here. For if so, God was properly to have said, Nolite tangere Christos vestros, Touch not your Anointed; for to the people, He speaketh. Of all others, Meos cannot be theirs, unless we will gloss it thus, Meos (id est) non meos; Mine (that is) none of mine, but your own. And then sure, He should have done them some wrong, to have forbid them to touch that, which was their own. The Pope saith; He can make Christum Dominum, Christ the Lord Himself: if he could so do indeed, it were not altogether unlike, he might make Christum Domini. But God help, if the people fall to make Gods, or make Christs, if they shall take Gods verse from Him, and say, Nos diximus, Dii estis, We have said, ye are Gods: yea, and Christs too, and change it, Thou shouldest have no power, unless it were, data desuper, Given from above, saith he; They unless it were data de subter, unless it were given you hence from beneath: then; must we go change all our Texts that sound that way. Enough to let you see, they both claim that is none of theirs, but Gods. Psal. 82. 6. Joh. 19. 11.

To give in evidence now, for Gods right; That his meos is the only true claim, that His only they be. Three times over it is told us by Daniel in one Chapter, that the Kingdoms be Gods, and that He giveth them, to whom he will, as having the sole property of them. And it is said there, that this is Sententia Vigilum, & Sermo Sanctorum. And, if it be Sententia Vigilum, they are scarce well awake, that think otherwise; And if it be Sermo Sanctorum, they talk prophanely, that speak otherwise. And this verily was the divinity of the Primitive Church concerning Kings, which of all, had least cause to favour them. Cujus jussu nascuntur homines, ejus jussu constituuntur Principes; By whose appointment they be born men (and that is, neither by peoples nor by Popes) by His appointment, and no other are they made Princes, saith old Irenaus. Inde illis potestas, unde spiritus; Thence have they their power, whence they have their breath, saith Tertullian: And that is from neither (I am sure) but from God alone. 3 Meos, Gods claim. Chap. 4. 14. Ver. 22. Vers. 29. Ver. 14. Lib. 5. Apolog. p. 6.

His they be: for His their Crown, Diadema Regis in manu Dei, Esay LXII. And as if he saw a hand come from heaven with a Crown in it, so speaketh he in the XXI. Psalm. Tu posuisti, Thou hast set a crown of pure gold upon his head. His, their Scepter, or rod: Virga Dei in manibus Ejus, Gods rod in his hand, Exod. XVII. of Moses. His their throne: Sedebat Solomon in throno Dei, Solomon sate upon Gods throne, 1 Chron. 29. Nay, long before; in the law of Nature, saith Job, Reges in solio collocat in perpetuum: He takes them by the hand, and placeth them in the throne, and that in perpetuum, there to sit, in themselves, and their succession for ever. His, their Anointing; Oleo sancto Meo, with mine holy oyl: The Anointing His, therefore the Anointed. And if all these, their Crown, their Scepter, their Throne, their Anointing His; then His they be, Christi Domini. And of Christi Domini, we shall shew twelve fair evidences in expres terms, Gods Anointed. And ten more we shall bring forth, with an Ejus, a plain refereuce to Him, His Anointed. Christi Pontificis, Samuels, or Sadoc's Anointed: Christi populi, Juda's or Israels Anointed, non legitur, we shall not find. His they be then. Vers. 3. Vers. 4. Vers. 9. Vers. 21. Job 36. 7. Psal. 89. 21.

Now infer. His: therefore hand off, what have you to do with that, is none of yours? what to claim or to touch, that is His? Nolite tangere meos. This only, and no more but this, in very equity were enough, Touch not mine. This, for meos: Now to Unctos.

His then: but not as all are by a general tenure: but His, as His Anointed, by a more special and peculiar kind of interest. His anointed, is more then His, for all His are not anointed: for if all were anointed, there should be none left to touch them: we might strike out this verse, the charge were in vain, there were none to receive it. If all be Uncti, where should be Tangentes? We must then needs leave a difference between Christiani and Christi. For holding all that are Christians, all Gods people anointed and holy alike; it will follow, why should Moses then, or any take upon him to be their Superiour? And so we fall into the old contradiction of Core: which is all one with the new parity and confusion of the Anabaptists, or those that prick fast towards them. Anointed, Vers. Num. 16. 3. Jude 11.

But the very Ceremony it self serveth to shew, somewhat is added to them, by which they be His, after a more peculiar manner than the rest, to whom that is not added. Oyl it self designeth Soveraigny: pour together water, wine, vinegar, what liquor you will, oyl will be uppermost: And that is is added by their anointing. Beſides then this general claim Mine, here is his ſpecial ſignature, anointed, whereby they are ſevered from the reſt. His hand hath touched them with his anointing, that no other hand might touch them. Things anointed of our ſelves we forbear to touch: but ſpecially, if the anointing have the nature of a mark, that we wrong it not: And this hath ſo, theſe are ſo marked, that we might forbear them. And yet more ſpecially, if we have a Caveat, not to do it, as here we have. Nolite tangere unctos, Touch not them that I have anointed.

Anointed, yet not Uncti, but Chriſti, which is more.

This were all, if it were but, anointed: but, there is yet a further matter than all this. For it is not Unctos, but Chriſtos meos: We read it, Mine anointed, In the Hebrew, Greek, and Latine, it is more full. In Hebrew, my Meſſiah's; in Greek and Latine, Chriſtos meos, that is, my Chriſts, which is far more forcible. Somewhat (we may be ſure) was in it, that all the old Writers uniformly forbore to turn it Unctos, which is enough for Anointed, and all have agreed to turn it Chriſtos, that is, Chriſts, which is a great deal more. It ſeems they meant not to take a grain from this charge, but to give it his full weight. And it cannot but weigh much with all that ſhall weigh this one point well, that Princes are taken into the ſociety of Gods Name, in the Pſalm before; and here now, into the ſociety of Chriſts name, in this; and ſo made Synonymi, both with God, and with Chriſt: Specially ſince GOD Himſelf it is, that ſo ſtileth them; for He flatters not (we are ſure.) God himſelf is a King, King of all the earth, and Chriſt is his heir of all, as appeareth by his many Crowns on his head, Apoc. 19. 22. Thoſe whom GOD and CHRIST vouchſafe to take into the charge of any their Kingdoms, them they vouchſafe their own names of GOD and of CHRIST. They two, the firſt Kings, to theſe other the after-Kings ruling under them, and in their names.

Pſal. 82. 6.

Anointed, not with every ointment, but with holy, and ſo Sacri.

A third gradual reaſon then there riſeth here. All anointed are not Chriſti: for all anointing is not Chriſme. Chriſme is not every common, but an holy anointing, a ſacred ſignature. * Oleo Sancto meo, with mine holy oyl have I anointed them. Meo, to make them His: Sancto, to make them ſacred. He might have taken this oyl out of the Apothecaries ſhop, or the Merchants ware-houſes: he did not, but from the Sanctuarie it ſelf, to ſhew their calling is ſacred, ſacred as any, even the beſt of them all. From whence the Prieſts have theirs, thence and from no other place, the King hath his; from the Sanctuarie, both. The anointing is one and the ſame. All, to ſhew, that ſacred is the Office whereunto they deſigned, ſacred the power wherewith they endued, ſacred the perſons whereto it applied. And for ſuch were they held, all the Primitive Church thorow. Their Writ, Sacri apices: Their Word, Divalis juſſio; their preſence Sacra veſtigia: (the uſual ſtile of the Councels, when they ſpeak of them.) And when they ceaſed to know themſelves for His (that here ſaith meos) and to hold of Him, then loſt they their holineſs: He that took from them the one, took to Himſelf the other. Now then, will ye infer? Holy they be, their anointing hallowed: therefore Nolite tangere ſacros, Touch not mine holy ones. No more touch Moſes, than the holy Mount, which neither man nor beaſt might touch upon pain of death. No more touch David, than the holy Ark, It is not good touching of holy things. In the 13. Chapter, before, Uzza ſo found it.

* Pſal. 89. 51.

Exod. 19. 12. Heb. 12. 20. Vetſ. 10.

Anointed, not with every holy oyl, but with a ſpecial above the reſt, and ſo Chriſti.

And yet ſtill methinks we fall ſhort: for it is not Sanctos neither, it is more than Sanctos, it is Chriſtos: in which word, there is more than in Commune Sanctorum. Omnes Sancti non ſunt Chriſti, at Reges Chriſti. We cannot ſay of all Saints they be Chriſts, of Kings we may. Verily, every degree of holineſs, will not make a Synonymy with CHRIST. He was anointed, ſaith the Pſalm, Oleo exultationis ſupra ſocios, with an holy oyl, or chriſm above his fellows. To hold this name then of Chriſtos Domini, it is not every ordinary holineſs will ſerve, but a ſpecial and extraordinarie degree of it above the reſt, which they are to participate, and ſo do, from Chriſt whoſe Name they bear, eminent above others that carry not that name; as if they did in ſome kind of meaſure partake Chriſma Chriſti, even ſuch a Chriſme as wherewith Chriſt is anointed. And the inference of this point, and the meaning of this ſtile of Dii and Chriſti is, as if He would have us, with a kind of analogie, as careful in a manner to forbear touching them, as we would be to touch God, or the Son of God, Chriſt Himſelf. It is not then Meos, nor unctos Meos, nor Sanctos Meos only; but it is Chriſtos meos, mine, and that Anointed; Anointed with holy oyl: So Anointed, and with Oyl ſo holy as it raiſeth them to the honour of the denomination of the Holy of Holies, Chriſt Himſelf. Theſe four degrees, and from them, theſe four ſeveral reaſons, are in Chriſtos meos.

Pſal. 45. 8.

What this Anointing is.

One thing more of Chriſtos Meos: For I ſhould do you wrong certainly, if I ſhould ſlip by it, and not tell you what this Anointing is, and leave a point looſe, that needeth moſt of all to be touched. Upon miſ-conceiving of this point, ſome have fallen into a fancy, His Anointed, may forfeit the tenure, and ſo ceaſe to be His, and their anointing drie up, or be wiped off, and ſo Kings be un-Chriſtned, ceaſe to be Chriſti Domini, and then, who that will, may touch them.

They that have been ſcribling about Kings matters of late, and touching them with their pens, have been fouly miſtaken in this point. Becauſe, anointing, in Scripture, doth otherwhile betoken ſome Spiritual grace; they pitch upon that, upon that taking of the word: and then, anointing it muſt needs be ſome grace; ſome gratia gratum faciens, making them religious and good Catholicks; or ſome gratia gratis data, making them able or apt for to govern. So that, if he will not hear a Maſs, no Catholick, no Anointed. If after he is anointed, he grow defective (to ſpeak their own language,) prove a Tyrant, fall to favour Hereticks, his anointing may be wiped off, or ſcraped off; and then, you may write a book De juſta abdicatione, make an holy league, touch him, or blow him up as ye liſt. This hath coſt Chriſtendom dear: It is a dangerous ſore, a Noli me tangere; take heed of it, touch it not.

It is no ſpiritual grace.

Before I tell you what it is, I may ſafely tell you, that this it is not. It is not Religion, nor vertue, nor any ſpiritual grace, this Royal anointing. Chriſtus Domini is ſaid not only of Joſias, a King truly truly Religious, by Jeremy; but of Cyrus a meere Heathen, by Esay: not only of David a good King, but of Saul a Tyrant, even then when he was at the worst. Religion then is not it, for then Cyrus had not been; nor vertue is not it (especially the vertue of clemencie) for then Saul had not been Gods Anointed. If it were Religion, if that made Kings; then had there been of old no Kings; but those of Juda: and now, no Kings but those that be Christen. But by Cyrus's case we see, one may be Christus Domini, and yet no Christian. Lam 4. 20. Esay 4. 5. 1. 2 Sam. 19. 22 1 Sam. 26. 9.

Among Christen, if the Orthodox truth were it: Constantius, Valens, Valentinian the younger, Anastasius, Justinian, Heraclius, I know not how many had been no Emperours: yet also acknowledged by the Christians of their times.

Then, if Religion make them not, Heresie will not unmake them. What speak I of Heresie? Harder is the case of Apostacie, yea hardest of all: yet, when Julian from a Christian fell away to be a flat Pagan, his anointing held; no Christian ever sought, no Bishop ever taught to touch him. And it was not quia deerant vires, that there hand was too short; it is well knowne, far the greater part of his Army were Christians, and could have done it, as appeared instantly upon his death, by their acclamations to Jovian his Successor, Christiani sumus.

Will ye see it in the Patriarchs? These in the Psalme here, were holy and good men. But twelve Patriarchs there were presently after, of whom, Simeon and Levi, were two very Tyrants; Reuben, scarce honest: nor Juda, no better than he should; Issachar, by his blessing, should seem none of the wisest (as it might be Rehoboam:) yet were they numbred with the twelve, and were Patriarchs still, no lesse than the other. Gen. 49. 5, 6, 7. and 35. 22 and 38. 16. and 49. 14.

And after the Patriarchs, Saul the first King (that there might be no mistaking) with his anointing, there came no gract to him. The Spirit of GOD came indeed upon him, but he was anointed, and gone from Samuel first: And the same Spirit as it came, so it went, and left him afterward: and GODS Anointed he was, before it came, and Gods Anointed he remained after it was gone again, and that no lesse than before, and is so termed by David ten times at the least. 1 Sam. 10. 9, 10. 1 Sam. 16. 14

Vnxit in Regem, Royall unction gives no grace, but a just title only, in Regem, to be King: that is all, and no more. It is the administration to govern, nor the gift to govern well: the right of ruling, nor the ruling right. It includes nothing but a due title, it excludes nothing but usurpation. Who is anointed? On whom the right rests. Who is inunctus? He that hath it not. Suppose Nimrod, who cared for no anointing, thrust, himself in, and by violence usurped the throne: came in rather like one steeped in vinegar, than anointed with oyle; rather as a Ranger over a Forrest, than a Father over a family. He was no anointed, nor any that so cometh in. But on the other side, David, or he that first beginneth a Royall race, is as the head; on him is that right of ruling first shed; from him it runs down to the next, and so still, even to the lowest borders of the lawfull issue. Remember Job, Reges in solio collocat in perpetuum. It is for ever. Gods claime never forfeits: His character never to be wiped out, or scraped out, nor Kings lose their right, no more than Patriarchs did their father-hood. It is jus regnandi. Gen. 10 9. Job 36. 7.

Not, but that it were to be wished, both anointings, might go together, and that there might go, as there doth, a fragant odour from the precious ointment which is shed upon them, at their Crowning: so a like sent from their vertues, and they no lesse venerable for their qualities, than for their callings; and happie the people qui currunt in odore unguentorum Principis sui, that can trace their Prince by such a savour. This we are to wish for, and pray for daily, and use all good meanes it may be. But if it be not, ever hold this, Allegiance is not due to him, because he is vertuous, religious, or wise; but because he is Christus Domini. Let this be still in your mind; God saith not, Touch him not, Hee is a good Catholick; or, indued with this virtue or that: Touch him not, he deserveth well, or at the least doth no harm. No these would faile, He saw; or be said to faile though they failed not: We should never then have done, never have been quiet, But, this he saith, He is mine anointed. Mark that well, God giveth no other reason here, nor David after, in as evil a Prince as might be. That is the true reason then, and we to rest in it, and let other phansies go. Cant. 1. 4.

Now by whose appointment they be set, by His Commandment they be fenced: Fenced from touching; and that is the lightest and least; consequently, from whatsoever is greater or worse. What talk you of Non occides, or Ne perdas? I tell you, Ne tangas, Touch them not. Tangere the act forbidden.

Yet, are we not so sillily to understand it, as if one might not touch them at all, not for their good: For how can they be anointed, but they must be touched? No, the verse before telleth us, it is for their hurt this touch is forbidden. Non permisit nocere, He suffereth no man to do them hurt; to that end saying, Touch them not. Yea, the very word it self, without any glosse, giveth as much, which is in properly plaga, and that is tactus noxius, a hurtful touch, that leaveth a mark behind it, Qui tangit, & angit, as the verse is. For, it is good ye understand, this phrase is taken from the Divel: and good reason: for whose-soever the fingers be, his the touch is, when Gods anointed are touched. He calleth it but touching Job; but touching, when he did him all the mischief he could devise. And his nature, and the nature of hurtful things is well set out by it. Few things are so good, ut in transitu prosint, as they only touch, and do good: evil is far more operative, if it but touch and away, if it but blow, or breath upon any, it is found to do mischief enough. Job 1. 11. and. 2. 5.

To speak then of this touching, and the extent of it. Where the Scripture distinguisheth not, neither do we: but let the word have its full latitude. Nolite tangere is general, no kind is limited; then not to touch any manner of way. The extent of Tangere: how many wayes touch.

There is none so simple, as to imagine there is no touch, but that with the fingers end, immediate. The mediate, with a knife, or with a Pistol, that is a touch: if we touch that, whereby they are touched, it is all one. 1

Again

Again, be the touch ſo as we feel it, or be it by means unſenſible, as of poyſon, or ſorcery, it is a touch ſtill, and theſe no leſs guilty: No leſs? Nay a great deal more, as the more dangerous of the twain. One ſhall be touched and know not how, when, or by whom. Curſed be he that ſmiteth his neighbour ſecretly, ſaith the Law. His neighbour? much more his Prince, between which two there is as great a diſtance, as between Non occides, and Non tanges. In a word, as it is the lighteſt, ſo it is the largeſt term He could chuſe. For, non eſt actio, niſi per contactum (ſaith the Philoſopher) Nothing can be done, but a touch there is, ſome touch, ſuperficial or vertual, immediate or mediate, cominus or eminus, open or privie, and all come under tangere. For it is no Nolite ſic tangere, touch not this way or that: but nolite tangere, touch not any way at all; let nothing be done at all to do them hurt.

2 Jer. 18. 18. Prov. 12. 18.

And is there no touch, but that of the violent hand? The virulent tongue, doth not that touch too? and the peſtilent pen as ill as both? Venite percutiamus eum linguâ, ſay they in Jeremy, Come, let us ſmite him with the tongue. If ſmite him, then touch him (I am ſure.) There is (ſaith Solomon) that ſpeaketh, (and is not there alſo, that writeth?) words, like the piercing of a ſword. Et qui, quos Deus ungit, eos pungit, cometh not he within the compaſs of this charge? Yes, they be Satans weapons, both tongues and pens; have their points and their edges: their points, and prick like a ſword; their edges, and cut like a razor; both touch, and with the worſt touch, that is, tactus dolore cordis; therefore the worſt, becauſe of the beſt part. Theſe, it is GODS meaning to reſtrain: you may ſee it by the verſe before: Non dimiſit hominem calumniari, ſaying, nolite tangere. So that even calumnia is a touch. You may ſee it exemplarily in the Patriarchs: One of Gods Nolite tangere's was touching Laban to Jacob, and this it was: Vide nequid loquare durius: See you give him no ill language, no foul words, for they touch too: Touch him not ſo. As well to Shimei's tongue, as to Jacobs hand, is this nolite tangere ſpoken.

Gen. 31. 24.

Is this all? What ſay you to the touch with the foot? the foot of pride upon the necks or Crowns of Emperors (though no crick or bodily pain enſued?) Will not Nolite tangere, reach to Nolite calcare? Yes certainly; This Nolite tangere, was a ſtronger Text againſt it, than Super Aſpidem & Baſiliſcum, was a Text for it.

Yea, I go further: by an undecent and over-familiar touch, void of the reverence that is due to them, læditur pietas, duty taketh hurt, and wrong is offered to his Anointed. Mary Magdalen was not about to have done our Saviour any harm, when after his reſurrection ſhe offered to touch him; only becauſe ſhe did it as to one mortal (where the caſe was altered now) and not with the high reverence pertaining to His glorified eſtate, ſhe heard, and heard juſtly Noli me tangere. The touch which any way impeacheth the high honour of their Anointing, nolite tangere takes hold of that too.

1 The extent of Chriſtos, how many ways they touched.

Touch them not; not them. And when we ſay, not them, mean we their perſons only, and not their States? Are not they touched, when thoſe are wronged? They that touch their Crown and dignity, their Regalia, ſhall we ſay they touch them not? Yes, no leſs; nay rather, more. For then the Anointed are properly touched, when their Anointing is, and that is their State and Crown, as dear every way, and as precious to them, as their life. Indeed touch one, and touch both. If their State hold not holy, no more will their perſons. It hath ever been found if their Crown once go, their life tarrieth not long after. And even in this point alſo, it may ſafely be ſaid, that the looſe and licentious touching their State, with Mary Magdalens touch, without the regard due to it, as if it were a light matter, that might be lifted with every finger, falleth within the reach of this nolite. I liſt not dilate it, it would be looked to. Theſe light and looſe touchings, are but the beginnings of greater evils.

2 Again, not them. Satans motion was twofold: 1 One, that he might touch that was Jobs: 2 The other, that touch himſelf: and in either of theſe, he reckoned that he ſhould touch him home. They are touched, when that is touched, that is theirs. It was ſo here directly. Pharoah, one of them, to whom originally, nay the very firſt of all, to whom this Nolite was ſpoken, touched not Abraham himſelf; It was Sarah was wronged: In Sarah was Abraham touched. So God eſteemed it, and gave his firſt Nolite tangere in that point. So, even unto her wrong, doth this touch extend, take in her too, as being the one half, yea, one and the ſame perſon with the Lords Anointed.

3 Not them. One more yet: For two kinds of Anointed, I find in Scripture: Sauls and Davids: the one in eſſe, the other in fore: one in being, the other to be. If David had been touched (Saul yet living) though but Anointed to ſucceed, I make no doubt this Commandment had been broken: For we are bound by it, to preſerve the Anointing, not only upon the head, but even in the ſtreams running down from it: that with a King Himſelf, the whole race Royal is folded up in this word, every one of them in their order that not one of them is to be touched neither.

Nolite, the will forbidden.

This bar then, is ſet to the touch every way, and to the touch of them, and every of theirs, every way. But there is a further matter yet. For (if we mark it well) it is not, Ne tangite, but Nolite tangere: Nolite (that is) have not ſo much as the will, once to go about it: So that, not only, tactus, the touch is forbidden, but voluntas tangendi, the very will to do it: For that will is tactus animæ, the ſouls touch, the ſoul can touch no way, but that. And Gods meaning is abſolute: neither body nor ſoul ſhould touch; neither the body by deed, nor the ſoul by will.

And Nolite ſtandeth firſt, beginneth the Text: for indeed, with that is the right beginning. The Devil toucheth the will, before the hand ever touch Gods Anointed: He doth mittere in cor, put a will in the heart, before any do mittere manum, put forth their hand to do it. Therefore even velle tangere was to be made a crime, and that a capital crime. And ſo it is: for, in the attainder of the two Eunuchs (Eſther. 2.) there was no more in the inditement, but volnerunt, they would have done it, they would have touched Ahasuerus: that being proved, was enough; they died, and died justly for the will, though no touch followed. Pity it should be otherwise. He toucheth not alwayes, that hath a will to touch; hath a will to touch the throat, toucheth but a tooth: what though? To break Nolite, voluit is enough; and voluit, he would have touched, at another place.

They that laid the Powder ready, and lighted the match, it was but voluerunt, (as God would) it touched not any: but righteous and just was their execution. To teach them, or others by them, Ne tangite is not it: Nolite tangere is the charge: and, if you break Nolite; only, it is enough, though Tangere and it, never hap to meet.

Of which nolite, I hold it very pertinent to touch the extent also (as I did even now of tangere, the touch it self) and of the persons, to whom it may reach; that we may see it, it is true in the verse before, non reliquit hominem, he leaves not out a man, he exempts not any from it. I will not once speak of Subjects, no question of them: over whom they are Anointed, them it toucheth neerest; and bindeth them fast. But this, I say, that even forrainers, born out of their Allegiance, are within it. The Amalakite was a stranger; none of Sauls Lieges, born out of his dominions; yet died for saying, he had touched Saul: And that sheweth, that even Aliens here fortiuntur forum ratione delicti, and that they are intended, within this Nolite. The extent of Nolite, to whom it reacheth. 1 2 1 Sam. 1. 9. 23.

Yea, even such Aliens as are in open hostility, even at that time, they are in the Camp, and are in Arms against a King, they are barred by this Nolite, and are to spare him. So saith David in his mourning-song for Sauls death: He blames there the Philistims, as if they had done more than they might, in so touching Saul, considering he was a King with holy oyl anointed, as if they ought even in that respect to have spared him. So that this Nolite is a Law, of Nations, making their persons so sacred, as even in battel they are to be forborn, and their lives saved. 3 2 Sam. 1. 21.

Yea, if we look to the words next before, it is given even to Kings, this Touch not. The parties were Pharaoh King of Egypt, and th two Abimelecks Kings of Gerar, and even they in particular charged, not to touch (for Pharaoh did touch:) not to will to touch (for Abimelech went no further.) Kings not to touch them, none but God to touch them: As if it were another Law of Nations, not one King to touch another; but by vertue of this Nolite, each to spare, and to save the others life.

And the difference in Religion maketh here no let: for; these being Ægyptians and Philistims, to whom it was given; there can be no greater difference, than between them and the Patriarchs in the worship of God: for all that not to touch them though. Which is ad erubescentiam nostram, to our shame, that Heathen men and Idolaters, were kept from it by this charge, and now (I will not say) Christians, but holy Religious men, Friars, and Priests, yea and Martyrs forsooth, will not be held in by it, but they will be touching, 1 Cor. 6. 4.

And last of all this restraint of will and deed, it is not in the singular; Noli, to this or that private man; it is in the plural, Nolite, and so reacheth to whole multitudes. Nolite, will serve even people and Countries, to restrain them also. I wonder at it; It is Gods manner to give his precepts in the singular; Witness the whole Law, and all the ten Commandments in it. How happeneth it, the number is here changed? Somewhat there is in that. He saw multitudes might affray it, as well as single men, and take liberty to themselves, thinking to be priviledged by their number. To make sure, he putteth it in a number that incloseth them too. For, be they many, or be they few, Nolite, will take them in, all. So, neither Subject, nor Alien, nor Enemy, nor King, nor People, nor one Religion, nor other, nor one, nor many; Non reliquit hominem, None left, none exempt, not any to touch them, not any to will to touch them. For, with Nolite, God toucheth the heart: and so many as God toucheth their hearts, will have idem velle, & nolle, make His will, their will, and will obey it. This is the sum of the charge; here is the double Fence I spoke of. Touch not, By which He raiseth (as it were) an high wall about them, that none may reach over to them. And then, with Nolite, diggeth deep, even in profundum cordis, the very depth of the heart; casteth a trench there: and so they be double fenced. Or you may (if you will) call them the Cherubins two wings spred over His Anointed to protect them: Touch not, one wing; Nolite, the other; reaching as the Cherubins wings did, from one wall to the other, covering them from all, and none may come any way to do them hurt. And by this we see the full of this Text. We see it, but we are to feel it also; and see whether the Text be whole, whether it be well kept, and have taken no hurt. 6

The charge is short, ye see; an Hemistichion, but half a verse, Touch not mine Anointed; four words only, and but six syllables. One would think it might well be carried away, and well be kept. But, as short as it is, we see it is not though; For, the very Text is touched and broken. And, I speak not of inferiour touchings, that every tongue is walking, and every pen busie to touch them and their rights which they are to have, and their duties, which they are to do; And if they do not, then I know not what, nor themselves neither. This is too much, but I would it were but this. How this text is observed.

Hands have been busie of late, and that in another more dangerous manner. Two fearful examples we have in two great Kings. One, no very long time since; the other very lately made away: not so far from us, but they may, and (I trust do) touch us. What shall I say? I would this were the worst.

Yea, I would this were the worst: For, this hath hapned in former times too. This Psalm, he that indited and set it (David) he living; Ishbosheth his neighbour King was slain upon his bed. The like hath hapned then: broken it hath been, in former ages. But then upon revenge, or ambition, or hope of reward, or some other sinister respect: never upon conscience and Religion, till now. Nolite tangere, was still good divinity, till now. The Text it self never touched, never taken by the throat before, and the The Text it self touched, and a Nolite given to it.

contradictory of it given in charge, [Touched they may be, touch them notwithſtanding.] never books written, to make men willing to Gods Nolite before. Baanah, he upon hope of reward, ſlew Iſhbeſheth: Bigthan upon revenge, would have done the like to his Liege-Lord. Zimry, upon ambition ſlew his Maſter. But Religion came never forth with a Knife in her hand, till now: a Kings life was never a ſacrifice to expiate ſin, before.

1 And will ye but conſider the great odds betwixt thoſe touchers, and theſe of late? They ever, yer they went about it, caſt how to eſcape; and when they had done it, fled and hid themſelves, as guilty to themſelves of evil they had done: theſe ſtir not an inch, as if they had done that they might well ſtand to. Thoſe formerly grew ever contrite at their end, deteſting the act, and crying God mercy; theſe now rejoyce in it, as if by it they had done God a piece of good ſervice. Then yet it was ever a crime, and a grievous crime, and they that did it, were generally upon the firſt report, ever condemned by all men, none to defend them: Now it is, multis laudantibus (you know the book) it findeth many to juſtifie, nay to praiſe it; & immortalitate dignum judicantibus, and think them worthy immortality, for their worthy act. Yea, write they not further? Prælarè cum rebus humanis ageretur, ſi multi; It were a merrie world, if there would many ſo exerciſe their fingers, to keep them in ure. And to Kings themſelves (GODS Anointed) dare they not ſay? This is ſalutaris cogitatio, an wholeſome meditation for them next the heart, to think ſe eâ conditione vivere, they live in that caſe or condition, ut non ſolùm jure, that they may not only be ſlain lawfully, ſed cum laude & gloriâ perimi poſſint; but to the praiſe and glory of them that ſhall do it. How now! What is become of our Text? Of Nolite tangere, with theſe? Are we not fallen into ſtrange times, that men dare thus print and publiſh, yea even prædicare peccatum ſuum, preach and proclaim their ſins, even theſe ſinful, and ſhameful poſitions, to the eyes and ears of the whole world? Whereby, Gods Anointed are endangered, mens ſouls are poyſoned, Chriſtian Religion is blaſphemed, as a murderer of her own Kings. God in his Charge is openly contradicted, and men made believe they ſhall go to heaven, for breaking Gods Commandments.

1 Mariana. Pag. 54.
2 Pag. 60.
3 Pag. 61.

The cenſure upon Mariana idle.

But now, we have all great cauſe to rejoyce: The book is condemned, if we may believe it. Whether condemned or no, that we know not: this is too ſure, eleven years ago, ſet out it was, and that authorized, and ſo went eight whole years, by their own confeſſion, and even the whole eleven, for ought that we know. How went it forth ſo allowed at the firſt? How went it ſo long uncontrolled; without an Index expurgatorius at leaſt?

But now lately we have news, that ſome few years ſince, it was cenſured in a privie Provincial Councel. But, that was as ſtrange a Cenſure, as ever was heard of, a Cenſure ſub ſilentio, kept cloſe, and none knew of it but themſelves: faſt or looſe; Cenſure, or no Cenſure, as they pleaſed. If any ſuch cenſure were, why made they it not as publick as their approbation? The approbation the world ſeeth: their Cenſure we but hear of, and peradventure it is but a tale, neither. Why came it never to light, till the deed was done; and it was too late? Why heard we not Jacobs voice, till we had felt Eſaus hands? But this is all they have to ſay for themſelves: after ſo great a loſs, this we muſt be fain to take for paiment.

But, I ask, is it condemned? Indeed no, but the matter ſo faintly carried, as all they ſay ſtanding for good, he that will give the like attempt again, may. For, what ſay they? An Uſurper may be depoſed, ſo they all agree. And is it not in the power of Rome, to make an Uſurper when it will? If he have no right, he is an Uſurper: If he be lawfully depoſed, his right is gone: If he but favour Hereticks; nay, though he favour them not, the Pope may depoſe him; Non hoc tempore, ſed cùm judicabit expedire: and that done, he hath no right, then is he an Uſurper, and ye may touch him, or do with him what ye will.

What ſay they then further? A private man may not do it, by his own authority. Not by his own, but may be by ſome other? Belike, ſome other then there is, whereby he may. Authority than there is, and it may be given, and when it is given him, he may do it. And ſo we are where we were before. And this is their condemning: indeed the condemnation of the world; if they love darkneſs ſo well, as to be deluded by it.

First, they will do it: will do it? Have done it, touched, touched in the higheſt degree, againſt Tangere. It may be againſt their wils; nay voluntary, have done it wittingly and willingly, againſt Nolite. But it may be repent themſelves; Nor that: For they give a charge againſt this charge, willing men, and making men willing, to do flat againſt it, to touch, even the Text, and break it, and ſpare not: by holding, They may be touched for all it.

The Text it ſelf to be preſerved and kept untouched.

What is then to be done of us? The more buſie they, to ſuggeſt the Devils motion, Mitte manum & tange; the more earneſt we, to call on Gods charge here, Nolite tangere Chriſtos Ejus. The more reſolute they, to be touching; the more careful we to look to their fingers. The more they endeavour to break down this double fence, the more we to labour to ſtreng then it. How will that be? Our ſelves not to touch them? I will not ſpeak of that for ſhame. I truſt, God hath ſo touched all our hearts, as we deteſt the leaſt though that way. Never was any, truly partaker of the inward Anointing of a Chriſtian man, but he was ever faſt and firm to the royal Anointing. That we will do: and that is not all; (I truſt) we will do more than ſo, even provide a Nolite tangere, for the Text too, keep that from touching, and that will keep Gods Anointed untouched: Keep one, keep both.

By the three perſons in the Text.

Three perſons there be in the Text: 1. Gods Anointed themſelves, touching whom it is given. 2. We all, non reliquit hominem, not leaving a man of us out, to whom it is given. 3. And he that ſaith Meos, God that giveth it. The two firſt, to do their parts towards it, we to look to ours; and God will come in at His turn, and not fail with His part, we may be ſure.

Let

Let me begin with Chriſtos Domini, whom it toucheth: that they would be touched with it, and not lay themſelves open to this touch, nor careleſly go where they may be within the reach, or fall into ſuch fingers, as tickle to be touching them: Not to put it upon, What ſhall be, ſhall be. Non eſt bonæ, & ſolidæ fidei, ſic omnia ad voluntatem Dei referre, & ita adulari, ad unumquemque dicendo, Nihil fiere ſine juſſione Ejus, ut non intelligamus aliquid eſſe in nobis ipſis; It is Tertullians: and moſt true it is, that it is neither good nor ſound Divinity, in theſe caſes, to put all upon the will of God, every one to flatter himſelf or others, ſaying; Nothing can be done without Gods will, but to conveigh aright, and that there withal there is ſomewhat that belongs to our part. Therefore ſubordinately to ſerve Gods providence, with our own circumſpect foreſight and care, knowing, that His providence doth not alwayes work by miracle: This day it did: every day it will not do ſo. That He gives his Angels charge over them that tempt him not, that do not mittere ſe deorſum, caſt themſelves wilfully into danger. That Baltazers dayes were numbred, when he forgot his duty, not before. That he hath indeed promiſed to ſave his Anointed: but he promiſed S. Paul alſo his life, and all theirs with him in the ſhip, and that by an Angel: for all that, Paul would not let the Mariners go away with the boat, but cut the rope, and ſaid, if theſe tarrie not in the ſhip, we cannot be ſaved, for all the Angels promiſe. Let His Anointed ſay and do the like; keep your Mariners about you in the name of God, keep your ſelves with that ſtate and guard, that is meet for the Majeſty of Princes: and think God ſaith to you, Chriſti mei, nolite tangi, be you willing to keep your ſelves from being touched, and I for my part, will not be behind.

1 Gods Anointed

Pſal. 91. 11. Matth. 4. 6. Dan. 3. 26. Pſal. 20. 6. Acts 27. 30, 31

This way only is now left them. Another way there was, that Gods Anointed, might not be touched; to ſet liſts about them, as about the holy Mount, that is, Lawes; whereby (that deſperate wretches might not touch Gods Anointed) Gods Anointed might touch them firſt. I find Abimelech made a Law to ſtrengthen this Law of God, made a liſt about this very Nolite, a Law upon paine of Morte morietur. And this was wont to keep them from approaching. But, if that which ſhould give ſtrength to the Law, and make it a Law to the conſcience, Divinity, if that be corrupted, if it be a matter of the will, as appeareth by Nolite, and the will be made wilful (an horrible ſin, being now become an heroical and holy act: (theſe liſts will not hold them, the Law cometh too late. For if men grow wilful, it is well known, Vitæ alienæ Dominus eſt, quiſquis contemptor eſt ſuæ. And who would not be Contemptor ſuæ, if he may be ſure to be Comprehenſor æternæ? Then do but once perſwade them, that for their touching they ſhall ſtraight go to heaven, and no Anointed ſhall ever ſtand before them. Nolite is gone then: take order for tangere how we can.

Exod. 19. 12. Gen. 26. 11.

Our part then is (and to us tis ſpoken) and to us properly doth nolite belong. Every man in his place to do his beſt. They that are His Prieſts, by bowing their knees daily, and lifting up their hands to God: They that in the place of Counſel, by all the wayes of wiſedome: They that in the ſeat of juſtice, by juſt and due execution: All, by all the meanes they can,--- hanc talem terris avertere peſtem, to deviſe and procure (if it may be) ne velint, that evil diſpoſed hands would not: but howſoever, ne poſſint, that they may not be able (if they would) to touch his Anointed. It muſt be in part, by carrying a continuall eye, and keeping a continuall watch over them; or a ſhorter way, by removing them far enough off, that are in any likelyhood to do it: and thoſe be ſuch, as hold, Gods Anointed be tangibiles, and may be; nay in ſome caſe be tangendi, and ought to be touched.

2 The Subject.

God himſelfe in Cores caſe and Dathans: (who went about to touch Moſes and Aaron, not in their perſons, but eſtates only) ſheweth us the beſt way: He gave order that a general nolite tangere went out againſt them and theirs, that no man ſhould come neere them, but all ſhun them and their company, as having them in a generall deteſtation. Gods courſe would be followed, that ſeeing their conſciences are ſeared, and they feare not Gods voice here from heaven, they might feel the full diſcovery of his vengeance upon earth, and might aſſure themſelves, upon the leaſt meaſure of but a will to touch, but a will to do that execrable Act, to incurre an univerſall deteſtation, to have all riſe againſt them, to have all the hatred of the earth poured upon them and theirs, to be the out-caſts of the Common-wealth, and the Maranath's of the Church; yea, they and their names for ever to be an abhorring to all fleſh; nothing in this kinde is too much: this way, if no way elſe to keep them from it: which is leſſe than they ſhould ſuffer, but all that we can do.

Num. 16. 11, 24.

The beſt is, if we faile not in our duty; though neither we, nor the Anointed, can take perfect order againſt them, the Anointer can; can, and will, as this day He did. And the rather, He will do it in the time to come, if we turne to him, to thank him for that is paſt. To Him then let us turne, that he may take the matter into his owne hand. If his nolite tangere will not prevaile, his nolo tangi, will: and if He ſay, Nolo tangi, have they never ſo bent a will, do what they can, they ſhall not (for their lives) be able to do them hurt.

3 God himſelf will joyn with them.

Two points there be in this Charge, both expreſſed in the verſe next before, non permiſit, He ſuffered none to attempt it; Sed corripuit, but them that did, He put them to rebuke. Put to rebuke, we turne Corripuit; it is properly to take up ſhort, and that is, by a touch, or rather by a twich. And ſo he hath ever done, and ſo he will ever do: Tangentes tangentur, or rather tangentes corripientur, if they touch, they ſhall be twitched, be taken ſhort, and cut ſhort for it (all the ſort of them.) Have beene (I am ſure.)

I begin with Corripuit, for that never faileth: for ſure, God will not ſuffer His Anointed, nor Chriſt, His Synonyma's, thoſe of his Name, to be touched for nought: if not His name it ſelf to be taken, neither thoſe that bear it to be touched in vain. And there is nothing more kindly, than for them that will be touching, to be touched themſelves, and to be touched home, in the ſame kind, themſelves thought to have touched others. You may ſee it in the firſt, in Pharaoh, the very firſt, that touched the Patriarch

By Corripuit,

Abraham. It is ſaid, God touched him for it (and it is the very ſame word which God uſeth here in willing not to touch:) God touched him and touched him, tactibus maximis, with many a grievous touch: we read, plagued him with many plagues. And indeed He toucheth them ſo, that He plagueth them that have beene buſie in this kind. Grievous are the touches that are touched with here on earth, of pincers red-hot, and boiling Lead: but, who knoweth the touches of the place, whether (being unrepentant) they muſt needs go? which, beſids that they are maximi (in another manner of degree than theſe here) are æterni withall, and not ended in an hour or two, as theſe are. Tactibus maximis tangentur, they ſhall be touched indeed throughly, as the firſt was.

Gen. 12. 17.

And look, as He began in the Patriarchs, ſo hath he ever held on in His Anointed, the Kings that enſued. The firſt that ever touched his Kings, Baana and Rechab, were touched for it: and cut ſhorter; both by the hands, wherewith they touched, and the feet, wherewith they went about it. Ask the reſt, if it were good touching. Shemei touched, but with the tongue; his neck was touched with the ſword. Bigthan and Thares ſaid nothing, did nothing, but onely with their will: their necks were touched with the halter, tactibus maximis, the greateſt touch or twitch that is here. And ſo (to make ſhort) were all the reſt, even to thoſe two that were this day put to a foul rebuke, and cut ſhort in their going about it. Beſides the Cherubims wings: then, to protect Kings, there you have, in corripuit, the blade of a ſword ſhaken, to keep the way to them.

2 Sam. 4. 12.
1 Reg. 2. 46.
Eſter 2. 23.

By non permiſit

But what comfort is it, if corripuit come to the malefactor, if he be cut ſhort, and if the King miſcarrie withall? Baana and Rechab, they that killed Iſhboſheth, were cut ſhort, ſhorter by the heads, but Iſhboſheth he died for it. I confeſſe, there is ſmall comfort in corripuit, unleſſe Non permiſit nocere, go withall, in ſhortning them, without ſaving His Anointed. And that is our comfort, the comfort of this day, which we meet to give thanks for, that both theſe went together, Non permiſit nocere, and corripuit, both.

You know, at the beginning I told you, beſides that it is a Commandement, it is alſo a Thanksgiving. It is ſo, in that it is a verſe of a Pſalme of Halleluja, the firſt Pſalme of Halleluja, of all the twenty.

The thankſgiving.

1 Pſal. 112. 54.

Now in that He hath placed this duty, and ſet it in a Pſalme, His will is, men ſhould come to it with pleaſure, cheerfully, and as it were ſinging. When we ſpeak of it, we do it ſpeculatively; when we ſing it, that would be with affection.

2 1 Tim. 2. 1.

In that it is in the firſt Halleluja of all, it ſheweth (as I think) that GOD's Anointed are the perſons, which (ſaith the Apoſtle) Ante omnia, before all, we are to pray for: which (ſaith the Prophet here) before all, we are to praiſe God for; for them, and their keeping out of evil hands. Their ſafety we are to put in our firſt Halleluja.

3 Verſe 1.

This Halleluja is a Pſalme purpoſely for the bringing home of the Arke. And that ſheweth, His Arke, and His Anointed are allied, and that no ſooner is the Arke well come home, but this Commandement goeth forth ſtraight from it, firſt of all, before all other: That all may know, what account they were to make of this duty, how high regard to have His Anointed in, in that the Arks welfare and theirs, are ſo inſeperably knit together. And indeed, experience hath taught it, The well ſetting of the Ark, dependeth much upon the ſafety of the Prince.

4 Verſe 5. 42.

Now this Pſalme, as it was ſung with all the muſick could be invented, of wind, of hand, and of voice, to ſhew, the preſervation of Kings is a benefit extraordinary, that requireth ſo ſolemne a thankſgiving.

5 Verſe 37.

So beſides, it is ordered every day after, to be ſung jugitur coram Arca (that is) to be the ordinary Antheme of their daily ſervice: to ſhew, it is a duty perpetuall, that needs ſo daily a remembrance, to wit, the care of their preſervation.

For laſt of all, that all the praiſe and thanks here in the Pſalm, are for this Nolite, that all the Pſalme was ſet to come to this verſe, it is plain. There be ninety two verſes more in the Pſalm it ſelfe (it is the CV. Pſalme) But aſſoone as ever they once come to this verſe, all the reſt, all the verſes following, are cut off, they go no further in the Pſalm, than till they come to it, and then break off all thoſe behind, and ſtraight go to another Pſalme: (for, this is all of the CV. and the next verſe is the firſt of the XCVI. Pſalme.) So that, this verſe plainely was the end and up-ſhot of all the Pſalme beſides.

Of this Verſe then, of His Nolite tangere, and of His Noli tangi, beſides of a famous non permiſit nocere in this kind, this day is a memoriall to us, and to all our poſterity, even to the children yet unborne: In GODS Anointed, not touched I cannot ſay, for touched he was, and more than touched: But, in the touch, there is no great matter (we ſaid) but for the hurt, ſo that in the end, not hurt, is as good as not touched. As good, nay better, for a Halleluja. For to be touched, as he was, and to take no hurt, is a greater delivery farre, than at all not to be touched. To go through the Red Sea, and not wet a thread: To have been in the fornace, and no ſent of the fire, that, is the miracle. So, to have been touched, and taken by the throat (that the mark was to be ſeene, many dayes after;) To be thruſt at, and thrown downe, as He was, and yet no harme (Hic eſt potentia) Here was the power, and here was the mercy of God; Here it was certainly, and that ſo ſenſibly, ye might even touch it.

I.

And here Halleluja firſt: and we to praiſe Him, that when Nolite tangere would not ſerve in word, made Non permiſit nocere, to ſerve indeed: Came forth, firſt, with Non permiſit nocere, as with His ſhield, and ſo ſhielded him, that he ſuffered him not to take any hurt at all; Anointed the ſhield, made it ſlippery, their hands ſlid off, their touch did him no harme. Non permiſit was as His ſhield, that He brought forth to ſave him. But beſides it, He brought forth His

ſword too, and cut them ſhort: Corripuit eos, was his ſword, touched them with it, and twitched them for touching His Anointed, touched them with Pharaoh's tactus maximi, that the marks of it will be ſeen upon them and theirs, for ever.

For either of theſe ſeverally, a ſeverall Halleluja: but eſpecially, for not ſevering them, but letting them meet and go together; Eripuit, and corripuit, both joyntly arme in arme. Not either alone, this or that. Not permiſit nocere, ſed corripuit: ſuffered them todo hurt, but rebuked them: No, but Non permiſit & corripuit, both, ſuffered them not to do any hurt, and rebuked them, and cut them ſhort too beſides. 3

And this happy conjunction of theſe both, is it, which maketh the ſpeciall increaſe of our thanks this yeare, more than the laſt, or anyibefore, For that, ſince, and very lately, GOD, that ſuffered not Him, hath ſuffered ſome other King, to be touched, as farre as his life. True: He that did that execrable act, corripuit eum, GOD touched him, touched him as he did the Mountaines, Tange montes, & fumigabunt, touched him, till he ſmoaked againe. What of that? In the meane time a great Prince is fallen, But permiſit nocere, He ſuffered the King to take hurt: And as for non permiſit nocere, GOD did not Him that favour. Pſal. 144. 5.

Not him, but Ours he did: And did it, for the manner, not without miracle, if we compare the caſes. For, He was then ſitting in the midſt of divers his Nobles. No likelihood, that any would come near him, to offer but to touch Him: If he did, there was odds, there would have been many a non permiſit, he ſhould never have been ſuffered to do it. One man, for all that, one, and no more, did it; Divers were neare him; None of them, All of them kept him not from his harme. But Ours, was all alone ſhut up, and ſo left as one forſaken; not many, nay not any, no helpe at all, neare him. And not one alone, and no more, but three there were to touch him: yet even then, even in that caſe, God non permiſit nocere, ſuffered not, not any of them, nor all of them, to touch him, ſo as they did him any hurt. 1

And even in the manner of the Non permiſit, God ſhewed himſelfe more than marvellous: for, it was not, God only ſuffered him not to be hurt; but miraculouſly he made, that of them, that came to break His Nolite, even of them, one, that was ſet, that was ready armed to have touched, and to have hurt him, he, even that party, Non permiſit, would not, did not ſuffer the other to do him any hurt; ſed corripuit; but rebuked him, gave the Noli tangere to the other, ſpake this very Text, and ſtayed his hand, that would have done it. This was a Non permiſit indeed; worth a Halleluja, and after it, came there at the leaſt three other Non permiſit's more. But I have preſumed too much already: I will not enter into them, but end.

The more they were, the more are we bound to magnifie GOD, and to bleſſe His holy name; yearely, yea weekly, yea daily to ſing our Halleluja of praiſe, and thanks to him for this dayes Non permiſit, and for this dayes corripuit, for them both. That what He ſpeaks in this Text, He made good upon this day: Shewed, He would not have his Annointed toucht: Shewed, He was diſpleaſed with them that did touch him: kept him without hurt, and cut them ſhort: ſhortned their armes, they could doe Him no harme, ſhortened their lives for attempting to do it: ſcattered them firſt, in the imaginations of their hearts; and then after, made them periſh in that their wicked enterpriſe: and hath made this Nolite, this precept, to us, Præceptum Cantabile, a Precept Pſalme-wiſe, that we may ſing it to Him. There is another, in another place, of another dittie or tune, wherein he takes up a doleſull complaint, thus: But thou haſt caſt off thine Anointed, and art diſpleaſed with him. The dayes of his life haſt thou ſhortened, and caſt his Crowne downe to the ground. With them indeed it is, Præceptum flebile, but with us, Cantabile. Praiſe we Him for it. Pſal. 119. 54. Pſal. 89. 30. 44. 45

And withall, pray we alſo, that as this day He did not, nor hitherto He hath not; ſo henceforth Malignus nè tangat eum, the malignant wicked one may never touch Him, never may any have the will; or if have the will, never have the power to do Him hurt: Suffer Him not to be touched, or, if ſuffer him to be touched, ſuffer not their touch to do him any harme, no more than this day it did: Make all Nolentes, with his Nolite, if not, come with His Non permiſit, that he may ever be ſafe; and ſtraight after, with his corripuit, that they may ever be taken ſhort, that offer it. This day He ſuffered them not: nor let Him ever ſuffer any. This day he cut thoſe ſhort; ſo may He ever do them all: And ever make this Statute, our Song, all the dayes of our Pilgrimage. This is now the tenth yeare, and ſo theſe the Decennalia of it: That as this day it is, ſo it may ſtill be celebrated, from ten yeares to ten yeares, many ten years more; Which GOD grant, &c. 1 Joh. 5. 18.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE Kings Majesty,

At BURLEIGH near OKEHAM, On the V. of August, A. D. M. DC. XIV.

PSALM LXXXIX.

Verse 20. I have found David My servant: with My holy oyl have I anointed him.

21. My hand shall hold him fast or stablish him:) and Mine arm shall strengthen him.

22. The enemy shall not be able to do him violence: the Son of wickedness shall not hurt him.

23. But I will smite down his foes before his face: and plague them that hate him.

WE have found here a Text, wherein (we see) God found David: and wherein, David found GOD. GOD, found David His servant: and David found GOD, his good and gracious LORD: first to Annoint him, then to deliver him: So to deliver him, as his enemies did him no hurt: Nay so, that the hurt came to themselves; And they (as we read) were smitten down before him.

And do not this text and this day somewhat resemble one another? To my thinking they do. For, who is there that hearing in the Psalm this, that violence was offered to David by a son of wickedness; but withal, he shall think of the wicked attempt of this Day? Who, that (for all that) they did David no harm; but your Majesties like delivery, will come into his mind? Who, that Davids enemies were smitten down: but it will lead him straight to the very same end of Yours. And who can doubt, that it was the same hand and arm, and of the same God in both? And that He that did the one, did the other?

King David, He is in Scriptures, not persona Regis only, the person of a King; but Persona Regum, a person representing all Kings to come after him; such specially, as with David serve and worship GOD in truth. We do safely therefore, what is said to him, apply to them all, since he is the type of them all.

But most safely, to such a King if any such be) where there is a correspondence of like events between David and him: that, what was Covenanted to the one, is performed to the other. For GOD Himself is our warrant, and even points us so to apply it.

As

As here now, I find a prophecie, or a promiſe. A prophecie of Ethan (his is the Pſalm) or a promiſe of GOD. And I find this prophecie fulfilled: and this promiſe made good to your Majeſty. What promiſed to David, made good to You; and made good this Day: What is ſaid in the Text, done on the Day. What doubt we then to apply it to the preſent? And, ſince it fell on this day, what better day than this, for me to treat, or You to hear, or for us all to thank GOD for it?

The Sum. The Text hath the name, from the firſt word of it, I have found. A finding it is.

Two wayes may a thing be found: One, when a thing is found at firſt, and never was before: Another, when it is afterward loſt, and found again: Both here; David is twice found.

Found firſt, and anointed at the firſt verſe. Found again, and delivered at the third. GOD found him firſt among his ewes, took him thence, anointed him, and of a Shepherd made him a King. And being a King, found him after among his enemies, in danger to loſe both crown and life: and ſo, being as good as loſt, found him again. It is hard to ſay, whether of theſe, is the greater: We will not ſtrive, both are in the Text. And either hath his day (I ſought but for one day, but I found two) and both for our turn. Pſal. 78 71.

According to which (ſomewhat ſtrangely, but for our purpoſe, fitly) I may divide it into the XXIV. or XXV. of July, the day of your firſt finding for your Anointing or Coronation; and the V. of Auguſt, the day of your latter finding, for Your deliverance or preſervation.

The Verſes are four: the points in them, eight (two in each) of which eight, ſome be paſt, ſome to come in the text: (all paſt with you.) Paſt two, 1 Inveni, 2 Unxi, the finding, the anointing. To come, all the other ſix; all in the future, ſhall or will. Two ſhall's, 1 My hand ſhall, 2 My arm ſhall. Two Shall not's, 1 The enemy ſhall not, 2 The ſon of wickedneſs ſhall not. Two will's, 1 I will ſmite, 2 I will plague. And all ſix compriſed in a League or Covenant, which GOD is pleaſed to make with David, upon his anointing: and are as ſo many clauſes or articles of it.

Which league is made, pro & contra. Pro, with and for David, in the ſecond: And Contra, againſt his enemies, in the two laſt. And that, both defenſive, in the third: and offenſive, in the fourth. So, a perfect League.

The Diviſion. We ſhall purſue it thus. 1. Of his finding, firſt. 2. Then of his anointing. 3. Thirdly, of GOD'S Covenant-making with him. 4. And to this of the Covenant-making, we will add a fourth or the Covenant-keeping. Which, is indeed out of the text, but not out of the day though. And, we preach on the day, as well as on the text. Which keeping of the Covenant, I hold to be a part full as neceſſarie, though it be without, as the making of it, though it be within the Text. That then, be our fourth, and this our order.

I.

1 (that is) God THE firſt word, is I, that is, GOD. He, is the ſpeaker, and beſpeaker: the finder and the anointer: the faſt-holder, and the ſtrengthner: the reſcuer and the revenger of David, and in him (as the type) of all Kings. Not one of theſe, but is within the very letter of the Text. For, this firſt perſon [I,] goeth clean through to the end, and (as it were) ingroſſeth them all to himſelf. Of the finding firſt.

The points in it are four. 1. The Perſon firſt, GOD it is that found. 2. Then the manner, Inveni; found by ſeeking. 3. Thirdly, the cauſe why he found David: for He found him Servum Meum. All theſe three are inventio. 4. And, having found him laſtly, He proclaims it here, cries, εὕρηκα, I have found, (that is) Inventi prædicatio.

God found David. All Kings, are found by God: But in David, there is ſomewhat ſingular. He was not a King only, but a King (as we may ſay) of the firſt head. For, before he was found, he was a private man: God found him, and anointed him (that is) of a private perſon, made Him a King. His ſeed alſo, were to ſucceed him, by vertue of the entail, Verſe 4. But, he was the firſt King of his race: as in every race of Kings, there was ſuch an one, that at firſt was found out. In him, in ſuch an one, finding is moſt needful: In them that ſucceed, there ſhall need no ſuch ſeeking, they are found to his hand; Only anoint them, and no more ado.

1 This then, we find firſt; that Kings were of Gods finding at the firſt. God (we ſee) takes it to Himſelf, I have found. They are then, no humane invention, deviſed or taken up by man: but found by God. They came not out of mans brain: but ex cerebro Jovis, inventum Dei, of Gods finding forth.

As of His finding, in this verſe: ſo of His exalting, in the verie next before. I have exalted one, one choſen out of the people. Look you, there comes two at once; exalted and choſen. Neither choſen, nor exalted by the people; but by GOD, out of the people. Not they, out of themſelves: but GOD, out of them. Mark that point well.

As, for his finding in this, and exalting in that: ſo (within a verſe or two following) of his adopting too. There, God ſaith; He (that is) the King ſhall call me, Thou art my Father. Where we ſee, whereto he was choſen; whither exalted: even, to be the Son of God. And not every ſon neither: but His heir, His eldeſt, For, ſo it followeth, I will make him my firſt-born. So Filius Dei, he is, primogenitus genitus Dei: And what would we more? Then is not David, filius populi, God forbid. Never father him upon them. No adoptive, no foundling of theirs. His finding, choosing, exalting, adopting, God takes them all, to Himself.

Shall I let you see it ad oculum, this; that it was none, but God? Not the people, (no colour for them.) Full little knew they, or any of them; not the Elders of Bethlehem: Nor did ever imagine any such thing in hand, when Samuel went about it, when David was first found. 1 Sam. 16.4.

Nay, nor the Saints found him not neither, till God (as it is in the verse next before) spake to them in a vision, and told them of it. Verse 19.

Nay, not he, of whom there is most likelihood, the Prophet himself (Samuel) he found him not, he could not find him, till God did it for him, and said to him, This is he. All this is, 1 Sam. 16. Thus, God, in David, would let us see at first, that it was He that found Kings, and none but he. If Samuel the Prophet had been let alone, it had not been King David, but King Eliab: he would have found him. If Abiathar the High Priest had had his will, it had not been King Solomon, but King Adonijah, it is well known. So then, neither People, nor Saints; nor Prophet, nor Priest; but God, it was, of Himself and by Himself. He to have the honour of this invention. 1 Sam. 16.6. 1 Reg. 1.7.

And if Kings be the invention of GOD; then are not their inventions of GOD, (these I mean that have been broached of late) that find Kings, or found Kings upon any but GOD: that make Prophet, Priest, or People, King-finders, or King-founders, or ascribe this invention to any; but to him in the Text. This for the person, I have found.

How found (the second) by hap? No, it is inveni: in that word is the manner of it. Every tongue hath a proper word to sever things sought and so found; from things found without seeking: you know —Tu non inventa, reperta es. David then, was not; Kings are not reperti, but upon at adventure, or stumbled on by chance: they are not τυχόντως. No, they are inveni: first sought, and so found upon search. Will ye hear it totidem verbis: Quæsivi mihi hominem, saith God of David, I have sought me out a man, 1 Sam. 23. 14. 2 Found Him inveni.

Not, that any is hid from Him, that He need seek Him; It is but in our own phrase to express to our capacities, how GOD stood affected to the having of Kings. So set to have them, that rather than not have them, He would do as we do, even take the pains to seek them out. Now, the endeavour to seek, is from no velleity, no faint will; No, it is from a desire that fain would find. And that desire, is from no mean conceit (if it come, so it is; if not, no great matter;) but from some special good conceit, we have of that, we seek for, that we hold it worth the time we spend, worth the labour we bestow about it. All is, but to shew us the worth of this invention. For it is no mean thing (we may be sure) that God will seek. Seeking them, He shews, He holds them for such, as He would not be without them Himself; He would not have His people in any wise, be without them. And that He would not have them thought as good lost as found, but esteemed for such by us, as if we had them not, we would (by His example) set our selves to seek them seriously, and never leave, till we have found them. This for the manner.

But then thirdly; seeking, why found He David, rather than any other? We find the reason of that, in Servum meum, because He found Him His servant. For a servant He sought, to whom He might commit the highest point of His service, the care of His people. And He found him so zealous for His flock, to keep them from being a prey to strange beasts, as He thought him meet, to be made of Pastor ovium, Pastor hominum. He found him so devout at his service, that He set him in such a place, as if he were the Servant of GOD, he might make ten thousand more beside himself. 3 Found him his servant.

These two words then, we may not slip over; the claim of the Covenant (after) lieth by them. And if the Covenant hath not been kept with any, it hath been for default of this, that he hath found him; him, but not him, His Servant.

Yea, if any King be found by GOD before he do, or by course of nature can do him any service (suppose in his cradle;) yet even to such a one, is not this word, without fruit. It hath his use (this) not only in making them to be found, but in keeping them from being lost. For the same, that was the way to be found at first: the very same, is the way not to be lost ever after. And it concerns David or any, as nearly, not to be lost again, as it doth at first to be found.

Now, if David look well to these two words, and lose them not, God will not lose him (he may be sure) but be at hand still ready to defend him. Unless David lose them, he cannot lose GOD: and unless he lose GOD, he cannot be lost. David ever lost them, before his enemies could do him any harm. All Balaam's cursing will do him no hurt; nothing but his wicked counsel, to unmake him his servant, and so to lose GOD, and so to be lost of GOD, and so to be lost, utterly lost. Lay up this then; The way to servari à Deo, is to servire Deo. And lay it up well; it is the only Article of Covenant on David's part: Upon these two words depends all that follows (upon Servum meum:) If they be sure, all is sure. And this for inventio. Num. 22.

But, I find here, inventi prædicatio besides. To find is one thing, to cry εὕρηκα, inveni, I have found another. One may find, and keep his own counsel: (so men do for the most part.) But God here proclaims His finding; tels all, He hath found. And none do so, but such as are surprized with joy: as the party in the Canticles, Inveni quem quæsivit anima mea, I have found whom my soul sought, and I would the world knew it, I am not a little glad of it. Commonly where there is care in seeking, as before, there is joy in finding. Joy then: and it is not joy alone (for, one may gaudere in sinu, keep his joy to himself) but gaudium cum gloria, this. For, he not only joys in his invention, but glories in it, and even boasts of it, that doth inventum prædicare. The word (which he useth) εὕρηκα is made famous by Archimedes, who in a great passion between glorying and rejoycing, first cried it, when God tels it, have found.

when he had found the ſecret of King Hieoro's Crown. But no leſs famous by Saint Andrew, *Joh.*1.41. who, upon the finding of CHRIST, came running to his brother Saint Peter, with Archimedes's cry, We have found Him (the Meſſias) we have found Him. Meſſias in Hebrew is nothing elſe but anointed: and, we ſhall ſee David anointed ſtraight. And ſure, next to the joy of Chriſt (Chriſtus Dominus) we may place the joy of Chriſtus Domini; and take up our next εὑρηκα for him. Gods word will well become us, to uſe.

Joy to His Saints by it.

And to whom is this? To his Saints: to them, he tels it (look the laſt verſe before:) As if they had their part in this finding, ſo invites he them, to the fellowſhip of the ſame joy. Tels them, that ſuch a one He had found; and for them, and for their good He had found him. They, to reap ſpecial benefit by it, by, this finding; therefore they to take ſpecial notice of it, they ſpecially to rejoyce with him for it.

1 Joy of the finding. Verſ.15.

And what ſhould I ſay, but as this Pſalm ſaith a little before, Beatus populus qui ſcit jubilationem, Bleſſed are the people that can skill of this joy, that can skill of their own good? What it is to have a King, a King, found to their hand, but ſpecially a King, that is God's ſervant? Verily, if God's joy be our joy: it is to be with us, as with God it was; this εὑρηκα the εὑρηκα of joy. And truly, all this Text, both that which is paſt (his care in ſeeking, and his joy in finding) and that which followeth, his honour in anointing, his mercy in making this Covenant, his truth in keeping it: His reſcuing them, from; his revenging them, upon their Enemies: All is, but to ſhew us how much He doth, and (if we will do, as He doth) how much we are to do, even to ſet by, even to joy, and glory with Him, in Inveni Davidem Servum Meum. And this for his finding. Now no more ado, but proceed to his anointing.

Found to anoint. God the anointer.

To what end then, found? To anoint. Very many are found, very few ſo found, ſcarce one of many millions. But they, that are ſo found, are eo ipſo the greateſt perſons; and of the higheſt Calling upon earth. So much is there, in this word anointing. And this alſo, God takes to Himſelf: unxi, no leſs, than the former, inveni. Finds, and anoints both.

The oyl is God's.

And both the Act His, and the oyl His. Unxi, I did it; and eleo meo, My oyl it was I did it with. So finds Kings, and finds oyl, and finds fingers, and all. Nothing goeth to them, but it is God's.

1 Sam.16.13.

It ſeemeth otherwiſe. Srmuel could not find him indeed: but we find, he did anoint him, though. He did ſo, but not as of himſelf: what he did, in the Perſon of God he did it. And the Law is, what one doth by another, not, that other, but himſelf is ſaid to do it, to be the Author of the deed. For this muſt ſtand true, that God here ſaith Himſelf, that whoſe fingers ſoever were uſed, GOD it was that anointed him. And anointed him with oyl, holy oyl, His holy oyl.

1 With oyl.

Oyl. We can never find Kings in Scripture, but ſtill we find this word with them. We find them in oyl, and oyl is for continuance. The colours of the Crown are not water-colours, to fade by and by; they be laid in oyl, to laſt and to hold out all weathers. So, in oyl, not in water.

Luke 10.34.

And in oyl, not in wine. For though the Samaritan have both, and there is uſe of both, in time and place: Yet here, only with oyl. There is no acrimony, nothing corroſive, in it: it is gentle, ſmooth, and ſuppling. All to teach them, a prime quality of their calling, to put in oyl enough; to cheriſh that vertue, that the ſtreams of it may be ſeen, and the ſent of it may be felt of all. For, that will make David to be David: that is (as his name is) truly beloved.

2 With holy oyl.

Oyl, and holy oyl. Holy, not only to make their perſons ſacred, and ſo free from touch or violating (all agree of that:) but even their Calling ſo, alſo. For, holy unction, holy function.

Now, this holy oyl troubles the Jeſuite ſhrewdly, and all thoſe, that ſeek to unhallow the Calling of Kings. For, if the holy oyl be upon them, why ſhould they be ſequeſtred quite, from holy things, more than the other two, that have but the ſame oyl? Indeed (as they ſay) if they were but to deal with common matters, common oyl would have ſerved well enough (and ſo, they would fain have it; but this place choaks them: This holy oyl here. And their Calling, by vertue of this, being holy, what ſhould let them, in their kind to deal with thoſe, either perſons or matters, that are but as the oyl is, wherewith they are anointed? How fond is it, to imagine them to be anointed with holy oyl, to deal only in unholy matters, and not to meddle with any thing that holy is!

3 With His holy oyl.

Holy oyl, and His holy oyl. For, His holy, is more than holy. His, is another manner oyl, than the material, in the Prophet's horn, or in the Prieſt's phial. His drops immediatly from the true Olive, the Holy Ghoſt (He the true Olive, as Chriſt the true Vine.) Samuel's, is but a ceremony: this, the ſubſtance of the anointing. It is, in this, as in Baptiſm: there, John with water; Chriſt with the Holy Ghoſt: And, that is the ſoul of Baptiſm. So here, Samuel ſheds on the oyl of the Tabernacle, God He adds his from heaven; the ſame, and no other than Chriſt was anointed with: that oyl is it: that, the anointing indeed. He indeed above his fellows, for He had the Spirit above meaſure: But He ſo above them, as He with them, and they with Him, with His, with the ſame anointing; both.

Pſal.45.8. Job 3.34.

2 Joy of the anointing. Pſal.45.8.

And, it is not from the purpoſe, that His oyl, is by the Pſalm called the oyl of gladneſs: That, as we are glad even now, for his finding: ſo, may we alſo now, for his anointing. And by and by, glad again, for his delivering. And ſo, glad in him, God make us, for them all. It is a day of Joy: I would not omit any thing, that might tend to it. And this for the firſt verſe, finding and anointing, and (if ye will) for the twenty nineth of July. Now to the ſecond verſe.

Verſ.21. The League.

Having anointed him, the firſt thing He doth, is to enter a league with him. And we are glad of that. For, having found him now, we would be glad to keep him. And, there is no ſurer way for that, than to joyn in him a league, with the mightieſt King (by far) of the whole world, the King of Kings, God Himſelf.

And,

And, God Himself is willing with it, offers it. And sure He hath reason so to do. Seeing He hath found him, He will not see him lost. David serves him, He will servare servum. He anointed him, and made him holy, He will not see him used prophanely. But, the eye that found him, shall watch over him: the hand that anointed him shall be at hand, to defend him.

So hitherto, GOD found David, Now, David finds GOD, willing to undertake his quarrel: and even to covenant with him, so to do. For, it is not a bare promise; this: it is a Covenant, and so termed expresly, at the 3. and 28. verses. And that, a Covenant solemnly sworn, bound with an oath, at the 4. and 53. verses. And here now manus mea cum eo, He giveth him his hand upon it. His covenant, His oath, and His hand, what can there be more? This Covenant is made as sure, as can be; and as surely kept, we shall see anon. It is a League or Covenant.

The first Article of this Covenant, the article of Imprimis, is that His hand shall hold him fast, or establish: the second, that His arm shall strengthen him: (that is) covenants for the continual presence and assistance of his power, ever to joyn with him, and still to be ayding to him. The first and second Articles of the covenant Pro, for David.

This power of it self is but one, as God is one: but is set down thus, here and elsewhere, in two words; the hand and the arm, the mighty hand and the out-stretched arm, to set forth two degrees of it. Both great, but one greater. That of the hand is great; as we read 13. verse before, yet but ordinary. That of the arm, is greater, and cometh forth, but upon extraordinary occasion: Every thing we put not to the arms end. God's hand. God's arm.

Not that these degrees of difference are in the power it self, which is entire quoad se; but only, to proportion it, and make it answerable to our perils: which are not always alike, but less or more, at one time than another: and so seem to us, to require a degree of power, according. For the less, the hand seems enough: but for the more, the arm; a greater degree of power, as our peril is greater.

No day goeth over our head, but the horse we ride on, the stairs we go up and down by, the very meat we eat, we are in danger, lest it go the wrong way. For, these, for every dayes dangers, we cannot miss the hand; and the hand is enough, if it do but hold us fast.

But this day, the fifth of August, and such another, the fifth of November, the case is altered: then, Rise up, rise up thou arm of the Lord, rise up and stretch out thy self: another manner of jeopardy, then. So, in a word, the hand for all the year: the arm for the fifth of August. Now there is no jeopardy so great, but the arm, if it stretch it self out, will serve to preserve us. And this arm is ever stretched out, when GOD vouchsafeth some strange miraculous deliverance: as this day He did. For this, was Dies brachii: on it, the arm of the Lord was revealed. Esa. 51. 9. Esa. 53. 1.

Both these: and either hath his proper attribute: the hand, to establish, and the arm, to strengthen.

To establish: that is, to make steady, that he stand fast, and be not moved. It is ἰσχὺς the passive power, to resist: such, as of the anvile, or of the rock. Hand to establish him.

To strengthen: (that is) when we are further to encounter our peril actively, and are too weak for it: for, that giveth δύναμις the active power, that strikes them down: as the sword, or halberd in the hand of the mighty. Arm to strengthen.

Both these: and both necessary, for the performance of this league: Which is both defensive in the next verse, to keep them, that they take no hurt: and offensive, in the last verse, to pay their enemies their due, and to strike them down.

This then is the sum of the two first articles. The hand shall never be off him, but on him all the year long, for every dayes danger. But if further need be, if some very great hazard, if the fifth of August, then out comes the arm. But so, as both; both hand and arm, and every sinew in them, are ready still, and at hand as occasion shall be, to establish or strengthen him. This, for the second verse, the league: And all this is for him: Pro.

Why, what needs all this? this holding, this fortifying? Is there any harm toward? I cannot tell: it was somewhat a suspicious word (in the verse past) of holding him, and holding him fast; as if there were some shoving at him. The Greek is more full, συναντιλήψεται. For, in that word, there is ἀντίληψις God holds him: and then ἀντιλήψεις, as it were, another plucks at him: and then συναντιλήψεις, God holds him harder or faster than before. This was but suspicious. But here now, it is past all suspicion: for here, are a couple, making toward him (the 1 enemy, and 2 the son of wickedness:) It is to be doubted, for no good. Here is now the fifth of August: Here comes GOD's second finding him. For in his enemies hand now he is, get out how he can. The third and fourth articles Contra, against Davids foes: Defensive.

I told you before, that Kings were GOD's invention: here now comes the Devils invention. For, as GOD finds Kings, so the Devil finds Traitors. God finds David, the Devil finds Absalom: God, your Majesty; the Devil, those of this day. The Devils finding or invention.

And (as evil ever is more fertile) for one King, there are two, in the Text, and there were two, on the day: and I would to God, two were all. But this is to be counted of, Satan the Arch-enemy (so signifies his name) will be sure to find Kings, enemies. The father of wickedness will find his whelps ready ever for so wicked an enterprise.

And now, these are they, contra quos, against whom this league is made: For by vertue of the league, God and David, they have friends and enemies in common. Enemy to one (the King;) and enemy to both (God and the King.) 1. Of the parties first. 2. Then of their attempt. 3. And last of their success.

The Parties.
The enemy.
The ſon of wickedneſs.
Son exegetice.
Prov. 31. 3.

The parties. Two titles they have in the Text, 1 the enemy, 2 the ſon of wickedneſs. Exegeticè ſome take them, both for one: and then the later gloſſeth the former: and then the meaning is, that Davids enemies are all of them the ſons of wickedneſs. And indeed ſuch they were, and none but ſuch. For God forbid any good man ſhould be Davids enemy. In this ſenſe it is true. For, all of them Qui vias dant ad perdendos Reges, but much more, qui vias docent; that would have them loſt, whom God even now with ſuch joy found; that ſeek to deface Gods invention: You may boldly pronounce of them, they be the ſons of wickedneſs all: as flat againſt God, as perdere is againſt invenire, perdition againſt invention; and their will, againſt his will. For His will is, Quos Deus invenit, homo ne perdat: and Quos Deus invenit, homo perdat, ſay they. And this, if both be for one.

The enemy, the ſon of wickedneſs, two diſtinct.
Verſe 12.
They be the ſons of wickedneſs.

But if (as the words give, and the beſt Writers take them) they ſtand for a pair, for two diſtinct: then, by the enemy, is meant he that is ſo profeſſed: Plain, by the LV. Pſalm, It was not an open enemy: where the word is the ſame, that here (that is) ſuch an one as Goliah was. But, by the ſon of wickedneſs, is meant, the cloſe hollow Traitor, ſuch as was his wicked ſon.

What wickedneſs it is.
John 15. 25.
Pſal. 109. 5.

And it is good, they know their pedigree theſe fellows, of what linage they are. That is, wickedneſſes own ſons: as if the other, the enemy, were but allyed to it, in ſome degree; but theſe, the true off-ſpring, the lively image of the Devil. For, if they be the ſons, and he the Father, they be as near of blood, as may be. So, they ſee their true deſcent, ſons of wickedneſs.

And it is worth the while to know, of what wickedneſs. Evil it is, to be wicked upon what pretence ſoever: But, oderunt me gratis, is worſe; for that is of meer malignity. But mala protonis, is worſt of all. And ſuch are theſe, ſuch their wickedneſs. Sons of עולח: which עולח the Hebrews tell us, is properly the naughtineſs of ſome evil natur'd children, that bite the nipple, which giveth them milk. That is עולח right: (the worſt and moſt wicked wickedneſs of all others.) To bite and ſuck, both at once. But ſuch there are, the better they be dealt with, the worſe ſtill, ye ſhall find them.

The Son of wickedneſs, the more dangerous.

Now of the twain theſe are far the more dangerous: as you may ſee by the very courſe or ſtanding of them in the Text. For referendo ſingula ſingulis (as we uſe to do:) the hand before (as the former there) properly refers to the enemy (as the former here:) but the arm, the later there, that refers to the ſons of wickedneſs, even by the courſe of the two verſes. As if, for the enemy, the hand were ſufficient: but for theſe, arm and all, were little enough.

2 Sam. 21. 16.

And ſure, ye ſhall obſerve, that David, that the ſon of David, CHRIST; that Chriſtus Dominus, and Chriſtus Domini both, hath ever been moſt in danger of this kind of cattel. David, he was once in danger, and never but once, by Iſbbenob, an open enemy. But his great dangers, were by theſe here, the ſons of wickedneſs, his wicked ſon Abſalom, his wicked Counſellor Achitophel. And indeed all his great, were by this ſecond ſort.

Luke 4. 29.
John 8. 59.
10. 31.

And our Saviour Chriſt His furious enemies, they that would have thrown him headlong down the hill, they that would have ſtoned him, they did him no hurt; but, that falſe harlot Judas, that ſon of wickedneſs, he did. And I pray to God, he may; and I beſeech David heartily, He would take this to heart, and take heed of theſe. The danger of theſe, the ſons of wickedneſs, he did, it was the danger of this day.

Their attempt, Violence, Wickedneſs, Hurt.

Will ye now ſee their proceedings and practices? They be in theſe three words; 1 Violence, 2 wickedneſs, 3 Hurt. Violence, they mean, that is their end, and with wickedneſs they cover it (that is) with one wicked pretence or other, the better to make the way, to do the hurt they intend. Alas, nothing but a vow at Hebron (ſaid wicked Abſalom) when he vowed indeed, to deprive King David, both of his Kingdom and life. Not loſe the Sermon for anie good (ſaith he of this day;) when he had in his heart violence and hurt; no leſs hurt, than the loſs of your Majeſties life. This is the way of them all: Violence wrapped about, with a vow, or a Sermon, or I wot not what; that before it be ſeen, it may do the miſchief, that is meant. This holy wickedneſs, is ſimply the worſt of all. O Lord, what dangers are they in, that are in this caſe! How neer being loſt! Now, the ſucceſs.

Their ſucceſs, No violence. No hurt.

For, at the name of Violence, at but the mention of hurt, everie good heart is moved, and come running in about David, to ſee if any hurt. But there is no hurt done (God be bleſſed) None done: whatſoever meant, none is done. And, he falls (if you mark:) No violence; nay, not ſo much, as the leaſt hurt. For they be two, theſe, violence and hurt: and hurt, is the more large. Any violence done? Nay, none: Any hurt at all? Not that neither. Neither? all is ſafe then.

Where ye ſee, the firſt uſe of this hand and arm; to repel and keep back violence: to bear off the blow that ſhould do them hurt. This is the defenſive part. And it is much to their comfort that this hand holds them, and this arm is ſo over them, as it is ſtill between them and their harms: as it lights on Gods arm and hand, and muſt hurt them, before it come at David. But them, it cannot hurt, neither violent wickedneſs, nor wicked violence prevail againſt them; And ſo be they ſafe, from both. And no way to prevail againſt Kings, but to bind this hand firſt, and pinion this arm. Otherwiſe, evil men there may be, and evil meaning; but no evil ſucceſs, for all that.

Not, there ſhall be no enemies, No Sons of Wickedneſs.

But, I would pray you, to take good heed, to the Tenor of this Covenant. No promiſe is here made, but that ſuch he ſhall have: and ſhall have of both ſorts, open and ſecret: open, to offer violence; ſecret, privily to ſeek his hurt. No, though he be David (that is,) lovely, or as lovely, as ever was he, yet he ſhall have thoſe that hate him; hate him gratis, hate him though favours done them; though they lie in his lap, and are fed with his milk, yet bite him for all that. No part of the covenant, this, but ſuch he ſhall have, but ſuch there ſhall be.

Not, they ſhall not be doing.

Nor no promiſe neither, but as they ſhall be, ſo they ſhall be doing (as we ſay:) not ſit idle, but be plotting

plotting and practising, ever and anon. It is but, non proficient (so read the Fathers this verse) the Covenant in the Text: it is not non facient. No, facient, facient quod suum est iniquitatis filii, (saith S. Augustine well;) the sons of wickedness shall be doing, and do their kind, that is wickedly; intend violence, pretend some wicked wile or other. No part of the Covenant, but such there shall be: Nor no part of the Covenant, but thus they shall do. Let it not seem strange: look for it.

But this the Covenant, and this is all. The former part, be they shall, and be doing they shall, sed non proficient in eo, they shall do no good on him (in their sense) that is, no evil (in ours.)

3 But they shall not do it. Non proficient in eo. Non apponent nocere. Psal 21.11. Luk.1.51.

And verie fit is the word non proficient; that is, though they go to School all their days about it, yet shall they prove but non-proficients, and never proceed so far as to do it. So in the latter part, non apponent nocere; Not, non proponent. Not, shall not have the purpose; but, shall not have their purpose. Not, shall not have the will; but, shall not have the power to do hurt. Proffer they shall, but not profit. Devise, but what they devise, not to be able to perform: Imagine, but be scattered in the imaginations of their hearts. So that, come when they will come, they come a verse too late: David is provided of an hand and arm (in the verse before) that will see him take no hurt: that will be hurt themselves, rather than he take any: that will so fence him, as neither fury shall be able to do him any violence, by force, nor wickedness to do him any hurt, by fraud. Neer lost, as good as lost, he may be: but quite lost he shall not be, God shall find him again. And so to the last verse.

Very well then, David is escaped from their violence and hurt, but shall they escape so? No: there is a farther matter in it. All this, is but the defensive part: But the league (we find) was not only so, but offensive too; as well to offend and annoy them, as to defend and rescue him. And here now is the active power, we spake of before, of the strengthening of the arm. That, there is not only work for the hand to stay him, or hold out a shield, to bear off, that so no hurt to him? but for the arm also, to draw out a sword and lay on, that so all the hurt shall come to themselves. And so their imaginations not only scattered, but returned upon their own heads. For, violence, they intended, and were brought themselves to a violent end. Hurt they meant, and they are hurt themselves, and that, incurably, smitten down and perish.

Vers. 23. The fifth and sixth Articles Contra Against his enemies Offensive. I will smite down. Psal.7.16.

Three points I touch only, What? smite them down and no harm done? Yea, no matter for that; down with them, though. To lift up an hand, or an heel here, is enough. To offer violence, but to in end hurt, here enough. That there was none done, thanks be to God and the good hand that held them: Bigthan and his fellow, hang them up though. Not, quia nocuerunt, No: upon no other inditement, but quia voluerunt, they would have done the King hurt, though they did him none. That is enough, smite them down.

1 Yea, though no harm done, yet smite down. 2 Sam.20.21. Psal.41.9. Ester 1.21.22.

Again: what? at the very first, smite them down? Yea, these at the very first. With others, he proceeds not so roundly: smites them first before he smite them down; smites them a blow with the hand, in mercy; before he smite them down with the deadly blow of his arm, in rigour. But these, down with them, at the very first. Wot you why? Abishai he desired, he might have but one blow, at the King, he would never desire a second. Pay him with his own money: let him have but one blow, but the first, and no more.

2 Yea, at the first smite down, 1 Sam.21.8.

And what blow is it? to astonish him or to sell him, for the time? No: it is ἐκκόπω, say the Seventy. The nature of which word is, not to fell the stem or the trunk of the tree, but to hew in sunder the very roots, that it never grow again: So to smite them down, as they never rise more. I will smite down.

3 How smite down.

And as if this were not enough, he follows them yet further. Before, he fell: No violence: nay, not any the least hurt: Here, he rises, smite them, nay, plague them, that is, smite them down with the plague, which is yet more fearful. And it is truly turned, for מגפה is properly, the stroke of the plague.

And plague them.

The plague is a death that we would not die of to chuse; if smitten down, not smitten down, with that ax. Not, because it is deadly for the most part, and past recovery: (that is not it:) But, because they that be so smitten, there goeth from them, a pestilent noisom vapour, that makes all shun them, or, (as the Seventies word is) ἐκπύσομαι, run away, yea fly away from them. And even so, from these, there goeth a sent, as from a plague-sore (you will bear with it, it is the HOLY GHOSTS own term) that taints their blood, corrupts their name, makes them and their memorie odious, yea, even an abhorring to all flesh. Say, what they will, this is the plague of plagues when all is done. And, it is GODS own will, GOD Himself would have us, so reckon of them. Of Coreh (the first we read of in this kind) GOD calls to Moses, Charge the people all, that they get them from about them. And Moses he cries, Away, away from their Tents, touch not any thing that is theirs: as if he should say, they have the plague, it is infectious. So, GOD would have us think of them: And so (I pray GOD) all may take warning from him, and so think of them, and shun them as persons contagious, that have sores running on them.

Plague them in this life. Esay 66.24.

The plague in Gods account, Num.16.24. 26.

Now, this is but their plague on earth (to be plagued in their end, their blood, their name;) but all this is nothing to their plagues in Hell: whither certainly they go, so many as in flagranti crimine, in the very act of treachery, are taken away. No man shall need to wish them, more hurt: They perish and come to a fearful end. It is truly said by them, I will plague them.

Plague them in the other Psal.73.

Yet one more, that makes up all. For (if ye mark) the person is changed. The last verse it was, they shall do no violence, they shall do no hurt: Consequently, he should have gone on, they shall be smitten, they shall be plagued: that had been enough. It is not so, but in the first person, I will smite, I will plague: as if, GOD himself would be the doer of it, and do it even αὐτοχεὶρ? propriis manibus, with with his own hands. And surely, so sensible hath been the demonstration of the hand of his power, in the fall of these, that (to hold us to the term of plague) Gods tokens have been seen upon them: as if He had sent his hand from on high, to plague them indeed. Upon these, this day; upon others since these, God hath from heaven, shewed, how much these attempts displease him, by making even the prints of his hands, to be seen upon the attempters; that men have been forced to acknowledge, it was no humane or earthly, but some supernatural divine power, that brought it to pass; And that, though other hands were in, yet God it was that struck the stroke. This is the end, that in the end, shall come to all these from the Lord, so many as have any hand in the hurt of the Lords Anointed. He that is the founder of Kings, will be the Confounder of all Conspirators. Carry it as closely as they can, His hand shall find them our; find them out and smite them, smite them and plague them, plague them here, and for ever. This is the Covenant here made with David, in the name of Kings.

Psal. 144.

And (I promise you) this is, a fair Covenant, and a full: but, might we see some proof of it, how it was kept? For that, is Sal fœderis, the proof, the keeping of it. For, many fair Covenants here in the World, take wind, for want of this salt of the Covenant (the true keeping.)

Application to His Majesty.

Of David, there is no doubt; it was kept with him; but the time will not serve. And this time requireth rather, to shew the proof of the presents in your Majesty; That, this whole Text, (mutato nomine) hath been kept with you, from point to point: and the faithful mercies of David, (as Esay calls them) as faithful to you, as ever they were to him. Of that, then.

Esay 5. 3.

I find then, both these dayes, and on them, both these wayes, you were found by God: found, the twenty nineth of July, and anointed; found, the fifth of August, and delivered.

1 The twenty ninth of July Found in the Cradle and anointed.

Found first: and that, sooner a great deal than David: for in your cradle: There He found you, and anointed you. David was come to years of discretion first, to do Him service: But you, by his preventing grace found, before you were, or could be in case to do him any. An antecedence even in this.

2 The twenty ninth of July, and the twenty fifth both twice anointed. 2 Sam. 2. 4. 5. 3

Nay he found you twice, to anoint you. Once, before you did, or could serve him: and after you could, and did, once more. Found you, the twenty nineth of July and the twenty fifth both. David was twice anointed too; but he, but of two pieces of one Kingdom: but you, of two entire Kingdoms, or, (indeed) of three, the least of them greater than that of his, when both pieces were together. So an anointing also, more than he.

3 Found in the womb, and delivered, before ever anointed.

Some difference I find, but with vantage still, on your side. For, in the Text David is first anointed, and after delivered. But you, were delivered, before ever anointed. For, before He found you in your cradle, there to anoint you; He found you in the womb (before ever you came into the world) there to deliver you: Even there, His hand was over you, that, even there, a Son of wickedness did you no hurt. This is more than is in the Text; more, than ever David could sing of.

4 Delivered before anointed; Delivered again the fifth of August.

But He not only thus delivered you before your birth, and so before your anointing: but after it also, no less: Witness this fifth day of this moneth. So, were you delivered first, and then anointed; and then, delivered again from this day, and from being lost on it. And thus far the Text.

5 Anointed the second time 25. of July, and Delivered after it 5. of November. Application to the fifth of August, the day it fell. Then found and found by God.

But then, were you anointed again after that, and delivered again after that, from a fifth day too, though of another moneth. For, either of your anointings, have had a famous delivery, to second it. So we double the point here. A deliverance in the womb, an anointing after that deliverance; A deliverance after that anointing; And then, an anointing again; And then, a deliverance again, upon that. So upon the matter, four findings, with you; Twice to anoint, and twice to deliver: beyond David, beyond the Text here. So, the Text, kept with you, over and over again.

But to let the rest go, and to hold us to this day; This day, if days could speak, (and days can speak, saith the nineteenth Psalm) would certifie that this covenant was kept with you, in every clause of the six, on this your finding-day.

For, your finding-day well may it be called; well may it be said, you were found on it, and found by God on it. Found, for sure you were lost: And found by God; for men had lost you. They that gladly would, knew not how to find you, or to get to you. Great odds, then, but you had been quite lost. It was God that found you then, and made you to be found of them, not by any skill of their own, or by any direction, but His. By hap, it might seem: but your self do, and we all acknowledge the hand of God in it. His providence, that so guided them; His doing it was, and they did it: So that God it was, that found you then, for we had not now found you here. It may then truly be called your finding day; and God truly say) the second time, εὕρηκα, I have, I have found. Of it then, of this day.

1 No enemy professed, but two Sons of wickedness for it.

We shall fail a little, in the first point. Here is an enemy professed: And you had not then, you never had any, professed To make amends for that, there is but one son of wickedness, in the Text: You found not one, but two; and they found you.

2 A Son of wickedness he was.

Sons of wickedness, well might they be called, For, if no Religion, taking Religion upon it, be wickedness (as it is double wickedness) a son of wickedness he was. If witch-craft be wickedness (as it is wickedness in the highest degree) he was a Son of it, it was found about him. If to do evil gratis; to do evil for good, be wickedness (and it is the wretchedest wickedness that can be) you had done them many favours; and, to bite the brest then, that had given them milk, these are they in the Text right, if ever there were any.

3 Meant violence wickedly covered it. עילה בגי

These then, violence they intended, and with wickedness they covered it. Wickedly they enticed you and drew you along, till they had you fast shut up: And then violent hands they laid on you (the marks were to be ſeen many a day after.) And were you not then, within the compaſs of the Text, of violence and hurt, that is, of hurt by violence? Yes, ſo neer you was the hurt, that the hurtful point touched your naked breſt. Was David ever ſo neer? Never: He was indeed hard beſtead and forced to fly, but he never came in their hands; you did: He never was under lock; you were: He never had the daggers point at his heart; you had: And when you had, all the world then certainly, would have given you loſt.

were

How neer the doing it.

Did they you any harm for all this? Not any (to ſpeak of.) We may take up that before, Fuerunt & fecerunt, ſed non perfecerunt; ſo far from that, as non profecerunt. Such here were, and doing they were, but it would not do; for it was not done (the violence they intended.) Propoſuerunt nocere, ſed non appoſuerunt; a purpoſe they had, an offer they made; that was all; further they went not: You were not loſt; we find you here now, and we find you ſerving God, ſafe and well (thanks be to the great finder of Kings) as ever you were.

4 Yet did it not. Non proficient. Non apponent.

5 The cauſe they did it not. The hand and arm of God to ſtabliſh you. The defenſive part of the Covenant.

What was it then, that it came ſo neer you, and yet did you no hurt? It was the good hand of God, His holy arm that was upon you, held you, held you faſt: you faſt, from taking hurt; and them faſt, from doing any.

Can any doubt that it was the hand of God? He that ſtood there armed for that end, when he was ſo ſtrucken ſuddenly, as he had neither heart nor hand to do that he came for; was it not the hand of God, that ſo ſtruck him?

When his hand held the others hand, that was ready to give the deadly blow, ut non apponeret nocere (they be the very words of the Text:) And was it not the hand in the Text then?

That You were ſo eſtabliſhed, as to reſiſt; that You were ſo ſtrengthened, as to prevail (the two effects, ſet down in the verſe both:) and yet was it not the hand there ſpecified?

The Popular tumult that roſe after this, enraged by odious ſurmiſes, was it not GOD's hand that laid the raging of the waves then, that ſtayed the madneſs of the People?

4 Pſal. 65. 7.

When the violence was over, the hurt was not: The lewd tongue of Shimei doth hurt, no leſs than the ſword of Abiſhai. It would not be believed, that all this was true, there were that ſlandered the footſteps of his Anointed (Davids caſe in the end of this Pſalm:) was it not God then, that ſo touched the heart of him, that was eſcaped unknown, that he had not the power, to be true to himſelf to keep it in, but was even driven by remorſe, to bewray himſelf (though with evident hazard of his own life) was not this digitus Dei?

5 Verſ. 51.

And ſince, that, by a further ſtrange diſcovery, hath he not ſet your innocencie in the ſight of the Sun? that now the mouth of all wickedneſs is ſtopped, ſo that neither Abiſhai's ſword, nor Shimei's tongue now, can do you any hurt? And was not the hand and arm of God in this? Yes, the whole arm, and every joynt; the whole hand, and all the fingers of it. Yet lack we the laſt verſe.

Pſal. 63. 11.

Here was the hand with the ſhield: but where was the arm with the ſword? Here too; and it ſmit them, ſmit them down, down it ſmit them both, both in the verie place where they deſigned your hurt, and in the verie wickedneſs of the act: both were ſmitten down ſtark dead, and there ſtark dead you ſaw them both lie before you (as the verſe is) before your face. Non proficerunt: Nay, defecerunt, & in ipſo ſcelere perierunt: their ſword went through their own heart, and their blood was upon their own heads. God found you then, and you found Him, certainly. O, let him ever find you His ſervant, whom you then, found your ſo gracious good Lord.

6 The hand and arm to ſmite them: the offenſive part of the Covenant. To ſmite them down before your face. Pſal. 37. 15. 1 Reg. 2. 31.

But they muſt be plagued too (to make the Text up full.) So were they: For, as if they had been ſmitten with ſome peſtilent foul diſeaſe; ſo, from them, from their mention, there goeth an odious ſent, odious, and abhorred of all: Yea, the verie houſe, as if the plague of leprouſie had been in it, razed down: and, that there might no infection come from this plague of theirs, their verie name put out, from under heaven. And, all this, ſo done, and with ſuch circumſtances, as all that hear it, muſt acknowledge, it was Gods doing, and that from heaven came the hand that did it; Factum eſt, & à Domino factum eſt, both.

7 To plague them. This done by God himſelf. Pſal. 64. 9. Pſal. 118. 23. Act. 1. 25.

And ſo, you are found: and they (as the children of perdition ſhould be) are loſt. Here are you: And where are they? gone to their own place, to Judas their brother. And (as is moſt kindly) the ſons, to the Father of wickedneſs; there to be plagued with him, for ever. The ſame way, may they all go; and to the ſame place, may they all come: all, that ſhall ever once offer, to do the like. Thus, to the verie laſt ſyllable, of the laſt verſe, is this Text found true in you: and this covenant made good to you. All the ſix points of it, all of them in futuro, in the Text; ſhall and ſhall be, Comes me the day, and puts them all in præterito to you, changeth ſhall and be, into was and did. That, thus we read it now; His hand did hold you faſt, His arm did ſtrengthen you: the enemy was not able to do you any violence, no more was the ſon of wickedneſs to hurt you. But he did ſmite down your foes, and did plague them that hated you. So, the Covenant was fully kept with you, and ſealed, even with the blood of them, that brake it.

And now, let all them, that took any joy in the firſt finding and anointing, here renew their joy afreſh, for this ſecond, when you were thus in a manner loſt, and found again. When it was juſt, as in the Goſpel, Periit & inventa eſt. And if he in the Goſpel for his ſheep; and ſhe, for her groat, called all their friends together, and cried, Congratulamini mihi: how much greater a congratulamini belongs to this? where not a groat, but he that is the Image and ſuperſcription of all our groats, yea, all our coin, ſilver, and gold, is found again.

3 Joy for your delivering. Luke 15. 6, 9. Mat. 22. 20.

And what? ſhall this be all? No I truſt: having thus, at the hands of God, found the faithful mercies of David; we ſhall ſtay a little, and look out ſome of the faithful prayers of David, to render him, for this, for ſuch a finding. Let us do ſo I pray you. And we ſhall not need to go far, not any

To find ſome prayſes of God for this finding.

The first verse of the Psalm, Cantabo. Psal. 145. 9.

further than our own Psalm, and but even to the verie first words of it, Misericordias Domini in æternum cantabo. Upon another, no less worthy deliverance, I well remember, you took up the like, Misericordiæ Domini super omnia opera ejus. Very fitly that, but this agrees rather with us now; For it is the beginning of the Psalm, whereof the Text is a part: Made, as it were the Anthem for this Sermon.

Mercy in making this Covenant. Truth in keeping it.

Will ye see it agree? There was mercy in making this Covenant; there was truth, in keeping it. See then, how aptly he hath set it: My song shall be alwayes of the mercies of the Lord (that made it;) with my mouth will I be shewing his truth (that kept it) from one generation to another. And shall not we sing of his mercy? And shall not we set forth His truth? Sing of his mercy that made this Covenant: shew forth his truth, that made it good, every article; and suffered not one word of it, to fall to the ground?

The second verse of the Psalms Ego dixi.

But, if we cannot well sing it, for lack of a Quire: He hath taken order for that too. For the very next, the second verse of the Psalm, that he begins with, Ego dixi, I have said: that if we cannot sing it, we may yet say it. And it is but the same over again: I have said, mercy shall be set up for ever: Thy truth shalt thou stablish in the heavens. What truth? It followeth in the third verse, this truth of his Covenant, to David. To sing that, and to say this: to make our songs, on this ground; and our sermons, on this theme. He hath said it, to set up His mercy: He hath done, is to exalt his truth.

To do it in æternum specially this day. Luk. 19. 19.

Ever to do this, In æternum: In æternum is the word of the verse (if our dulness could endure it) all the daies of the year. But, of all the daies in the year, this day not to fail of it. Hodiè salus facta est domui huic, Nay Regno huic, Nay Regnis his: This day then, not to fail of it. For, having found this mercy, and felt this truth, this day; shall we not, at the least, this day, thank Him for this day? shall the Sun of this day arise, and go down upon us, and not see us together, to render him praise, for this so loving mercy, for this so faithful a truth? Shall he find hand and arm, to succour and to save us; and shall not we find mouth and lips, to bless and magnifie Him for it? God forbid.

Application to us.

Let us then, sing that: My song shall be alwayes of the mercies of the Lord (record it, at least) Or for default of it, say this: I have said, mercy shall be set up for ever, thy truth shalt thou establish in the heavens. Be they never so false upon Earth, thou in heaven shalt stablish it. Say it, per modum concionis; so we have: Say it then, per modum orationis; so let us do, and so an end.

By way of teaching.

Even so Lord so let it be, Set up this thy mercy for ever, for ever stablish the truth of this thy covenant, with thy Servant our Soveraign, that it never fail Him, as not this day, so not at any other time. Let thine hand be still upon Him, and thine arm about him for ever, between him and his harms. Violence and hurt, never come neer him: The sons of wickedness, be even far from Him. Let them be non-proficients, all the sort of them, that study or practise this wicked lesson. Never lose thou him, or suffer him to be lost: Ever find him (good Lord) to succour and save him; and let thy right hand find out his enemies to smite and plague them: with the same blows, thou didst smite; and with the same plagues, thou didst poure on these, of this day. The destiny of this day, come on them all.

y way of ayer.

And, for Him, let his anointing still be fresh on him, and his crown still flourish on his head. Let him, all the day walk in the light of thy countenance, and at night, rest under the covering of thy wings. This day, as once it did, and as ever since it hath, So let it, long and many years, rise prosperous and happy to him. This day, and all daies; That he, that we all may sing thy mercy, and set forth thy truth, all the dayes of our life. Hear us, O Lord, and grant it for thy Sons sake, our Saviour, &c.

ASER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE Kings Majesty,

In the Cathedral Church of Salisbury,

On the V. of August, A. D. M.DC. XV.

Psalm XXI. Ver. I, II, III, IV.

The King shall rejoyce in thy strength, O Lord: Exceeding glad shall he be of thy salvation.

Thou hast granted him his hearts desire: And hast not denied him the request of his lips. Selah.

Thou hast prevented him with the blessings of goodness: And hast set a Crown of pure gold upon his head.

He asked life of Thee, and Thou gavest him a long life: Even for ever and ever.

UPON a day of Joy, here is a Text of Joy. Upon a day of Joy for the King, a Text, of a King in Joy. For so, we see, there is in the Text, a King: and He joyful and glad. Glad, first, for strength shewed by God in saving Him: Glad again, for goodness shewed by God, in satisfying (yea, more than satisfying) preventing his desires; and that in the matter of His Crown, and of His Life both.

This King, was King David (no doubt) the very Title of the Psalme sheweth as much: and the son of Syrach (of whom, I reckon as well or better, than of any Commentary) these very words (here) he applies to King David, Chap. 47. ver. 7.

Originally then, he: but neither solely, nor wholly he. His meaning was not, to make this saving, his own case, alone; Nor to engross this Joy, all, to himself: ye may see it, by the very setting it down. It is not (as, of himself) I will rejoyce: But (as of a third person) the King, shall: The King, indefinitely. So, entailing it, rather to His Office, than to His Person: and leaving it at large, appliable to any other, a King; as well as Himself.

To any other King (I say.) Specially any other such King, that should be as strangely saved by Gods strength; as fairly, blessed by his goodness, as ever was he. That should find the like favour that he did: and be vouchsafed the like gracious deliverance, that, he wa. Any such King in such wise saved, to be equally interessed in this joy with him: And to have this Psalme, serve for a Sermon, or for an Anthem, no less than he.

And,

1 Cor. 11. 10. And, by this, we hope in God, this rejoycing here, ſhall not be ſhut up, againſt us. For, that, which is here left indefinite, we ſuppoſe, we can definitely apply, to a King (in whoſe preſence we ſtand.) To whom, the ſame ſtrength, and the ſame goodneſs, and of the ſame Lord, have ſhewed forth themſelves, in ſaving him, ſaving both his Crown and Life, no leſs than Davids.

This, comes well to the Text. But what doth this concern us now, more than any other time?

2 Cor. 6. 2. Eſay 40. 8. Yes; for, here comes the day, and claims a property, in it: How that? Remember ye, how the Apoſtle (when he cited the place out of Eſay, I have heard thee in an accepted time, in the day of ſalvation, I have helped thee.) Behold, (ſaith he) now is the accepted time: Behold, this is the day of ſalvation. The ſame (for all the world) ſaith this day. The King ſhall be glad of thy ſalvation: Ecce hodie, dies ſalutis hujus. Behold, this is the day of that ſalvation. For, ſo it is, indeed. The very ſalvation-day it ſelf (this.)

For, this day, was his life ſought, and he ſet on, to have been ſhamefully made away: and this very day, ſaved he was; and in virtute, mightily ſaved; and in virtute Dei, by the mighty hand and help, even of God Himſelf.

Since then, this bleſſing fell upon this day, If we will take a time (And a time we will take to rejoyce, and to give God thanks for it) that, which the day pleads for, is moſt reaſonable; that you will take this day, rather than another: For, if hodie, dies ſalutis; If, to day, the day of ſalvation; No reaſon in the world, but to day, the day of rejoycing for it.

But I will forbear, to take any notice, or to mention any but David, at the firſt going over: The Text (that) requireth a ſurvey of courſe (firſt) and ſhall have it. But then, if the day ſhall pray a review after, I ſee not how in right, we can deny it.

The Diviſion. Be theſe then the two parts: The Survey, and the Review. And in either of theſe two principal points preſent themſelves.

I. II. 1. The Joy. 2. And the ground or cauſes of it. The Joy, in the front of the Text; And the cauſes, in the ſequele of it.

The cauſes are, as the number of the verſes, four: 1 The ſaving of the King, by the ſtrength of God. 2 The ſatisfying, yea, the preventing his deſire, by the goodneſs of God. 3. The ſetting on his Crown, by the hand of God, Tu poſuiſti. 4 The prolonging his life, by the gift of God. Theſe four.

Now, every of theſe (the Joy and the Cauſes, and indeed the whole Text) ſeems to ſtand upon Triplicities. In the laſt verſe of the Pſalm, God is ſaid to exalt his ſtrength. His ſtrength in exaltation, makes the joy in tripliciie.

The triplicity of Joy (firſt.) The King 1 ſhall rejoyce, 2 ſhall be glad, 3 exceeding glad ſhall he be. 1 Lætabitur, 2 exultabit, 3 vehementer.

The like, in all the cauſes: Why glad? (firſt) for, the King 1. was ſaved, 2 ſaved by God, 3 by thy ſtrength (O Lord) 1 Salute, 2 Virtute, and 3 Tuâ Domine.

Upon this, of ſtrength, followeth a new triplicity of goodneſs. Therein, 1 the deſire of his heart, 2 the requeſt of his lips: And beſides them, 3 the bleſſings of goodneſs. Of theſe three, the firſt, granted; the ſecond, not denied; and prevented, with the third.

Of 1 which bleſſings, there are two ſet down in particular: 1 His Crown: and 2 His life.

His Crown: and the triplicity of it. 1 Corona, 2 Coronatio, and 3. Coronans: the 1 Crown, 2 the Coronation, or ſetting it on by another: 3 And that, other, God: None; but he, Tu poſuiſti.

His life: and there another (the laſt) triplicity. 1 Life, 2 long life, and 3 life in ſeculum, & in ſeculum ſeculi. Long life in this world, Life for ever in the Word to come.

And for this ſtrength, in thus ſaving; and this goodneſs, in thus ſatisfying his deſire, in the ſafety both of his Crown, and his Life; is all this Lætabitur, and exultabit: All this Joy and Jubilee of the Text.

This Survey done, the day will further pray a Review: truſting, it will fall out (all this) to prove the caſe of the day juſt. That all theſe cauſes, will coincindere into it. 1 Salutem miſit, 2 Deſiderium conceſſit, 3 Coronam poſuit, and 4 Vitam dedit: And if theſe; then the Joy too (without fail.]

And that, two wayes: Upon two powers, that be in the word (ſhall.) 1 Shall, the Bond, de præſenti, binding us, to accommodate our ſelves, to the preſent occaſion: to this joyful ſeaſon of Gods ſending: And then (ſhall) the Tenſe, which is not the preſent, but the future: And ſo (ſhall) not only, for this preſent day; but ſhall, ſtill; ſtill ſhall, for many dayes, of many Auguſts, in many years more; the ſame lætabitur, the ſame exultabit, ſtill. So we all wiſh, it may.

I. The ſurvey. D*Omine lætabitur*. We begin with Joy. Auſpicatum principium, a fair front (onward) a lucky beginning.

1. The Joy. In Joy: and that not ſingle, but three in one, a triplicity of it. We will but touch at it, now: We ſhall come to it again, yer we end; Begin, and end, with Joy, to day: So may we begin, and ſo end ever.

In

In this triplicity, two words there be, to expreſs this Joy: 1 latabitur, and 2 exultabit: and one to give it the ſize, or meaſure, 3 vehementer.

The two former (1 latabitur, and 2 exultabit) are as it were the body and ſoul of Joy. The firſt (latabitur) the ſoul. For, the nature of that word, and the uſe, noteth Joy, within: Joy of the boſome (ſay the Heathen;) Joy of the Spirit (the Scripture;) And my Spirit hath rejoyced. There, in the Spirit, is the Fountain of true Joy. If there it be not, how well ſoever the countenance counterfeit it, it is but counterfeit, for all that. And no Joy right, if we cannot ſay the two firſt words [Domine latabitur] to God; and we cannot ſay them, to Him, if there it be not, within. 1. Latabitur. שמחה Luke 1. 47.

There then, to begin, but not there to end. Latabitur is not all; Exultabit is called for too, which is nothing but an out-let or over-flowing of the inward Joy, into the outward man; of the heart into the fleſh: My heart and my fleſh, ſhall rejoyce. Not one, without the other. Joy to be ſeen and read in the Fore-head (the Joy of the Countenance.) To ſound forth, and be heard, from the lips (the voyce of Joy and Gladneſs.) This, doth exultabit add. There, is the body and ſoul of Joy, now. 2. Exultabit. Pſal. 84. 2. Verſe 6. Pſal. 118. 15.

But it is not every mean degree, will content in theſe. Not any [glad] but exceeding glad. The Hebrew is, O quam! O Lord, how wonderful is thy name! ſaith the 8. Pſalm, ver. 1. So here, O Lord, how joyful and glad ſhall he be! The meaning is; to very glad, as he cannot well tell, how to expreſs it. Elſe, aſking the queſtion, why doth he not anſwer it? But that, he cannot. But that he hath never a tam, for this quam: But is even fain to leave it, to be conceived, by us. So do we; but σφόδρα, vehementer, exceeding it muſt be. So ſay the Tranſlations, all. 3. Vehementer. מאד מאד

Thus have you a Brief of the triplicity of Joy. 1 Joy within, 2 Jubile without, 3 both menſura ſuperfluente.

And (which is ſomewhat ſtrange) theſe, not only permitted, but even injoyned; given in charge: ſhall rejoyce, ſhall be glad; a neceſſity laid on him: but, a bleſſed neceſſity, to be bound to that, our nature and we (in all our liberty) ſo well love and like of. Luke 6. 38.

2. The Cauſes of it. Eccleſ. 7. 8.

And now, to the Cauſes. For, exceeding Joy, without a cauſe ſomewhat ſutable, is but exceeding folly; but as the crackling of Thorns under a Pot: great noiſe, but no great cauſe (for, all is but a whin-buſh.) If there be an exceeding in the Joy, there would be an exalting in the ſtrength: If exceſs in that, no defect in the ground. We take meaſure ſtill, of one of theſe by the other.

Have we then a good ground? That have we: four (for failing) every of them ſutable, in each reſpect. For, a triplicity in either of them.

The ground of all (the firſt) is, ſalvation, or being ſaved: and that, is ground ſufficient. For who doth not rejoyce, is not glad, exceeding glad, that is ſo, ſaved? But ſpecially (which was Davids caſe here) ſaved, from a ſudden and a ſecret miſchief, imagined againſt him. There is no Joy (when all is done) to the Joy of one, ſo ſaved. Be it, who it will; even unus de minimis his: any, any one of the meaneſt. The cauſe. 1. Salvation, or being ſaved, Salus.

But, the Perſon adds a great weight to the Joy; that, it is Rex in ſalute: Salus Regia, a Salvation Royal; for the ſaving of a King. For he (by the Scriptures own valuation) is ſet at ten thouſand. There be ten thouſand ſalvations in one, when a King is ſaved. That, as Rex is the perſon, above all: So Salus Regis, is the Soveraign Salvation, of all. Salus Regia. 2 Sam. 18. 3.

Saved, then. And ſecondly, how? In virtute: Saved by ſtrength. For, though it be good being ſaved, by what means we can; Yet if we might be at our choice, we had rather have it by means of ſtrength, rather ſo, than by craft, or by running away. For, that is not in virtute. Salus in virtute, is ever, the beſt ſaving. And a King (if he have his right) would be ſaved, no other way: Not by ſlight, or by ſlight; but in virtute, Rex. 2. Saving by ſtrength.

So have you two, Virtus and Salus, ſtrength and ſalvation; Note them well: for not virtus without ſalus; nor ſalus without virtus, neither without other is full: nor both, without Tua Domine.

In virtute is well: ſo it have in ſalute after it. For, no not in ſtrength is there matter of joy (every way conſidered.) No, not in Gods ſtrength: No joy in virtute Dei, if it have not an in ſalute, behind it. They, in the latter part of the Pſalme found Gods ſtrength, but ſmally to their joy. This makes it up: that it is not only virtus, ſtrength: but virtus ad ſalutem, ſtrength to ſave. Strength, not, as to the Kings Enemies, to ſmite them down, and plague them: But, ſtrength, as to David himſelf, to ſave and deliver him. Strength is indifferent, to both: but in ſalute following it, determines it to the joyful ſide. Virtus in ſalute Verſe 8. Pſal. 89. 23.

Now then, turn it the other way. For, as in virtute, if it end with in ſalute, is juſt cauſe of Joy; So (vice verſâ) in ſalute, if it go with an in virtute, makes the joy yet more joyful. I mean, that as it is virtus in ſalute, ſtrength to ſave, might to deliver; So, it is ſalus in virtute, a ſtrong ſalvation, a mighty deliverance. No petty, common one; but a ſtrong, and mighty one. This reciprocation ſets it higher yet: that, not only ſtrength ſet forth; but ſtrength to ſave, protect, and preſerve: Nor that neither, quovis modo; but mighty to ſave, ſtrongly to protect, and ſtrangely to preſerve: So as the ſalvation may juſtly be ſaid, Tua Domine, Gods own ſaving. Salus in virtute Pſal. 68. 28.

For, yet we are not where we would be. It is much to the matter of joy, whoſe the Strength is, from whom the ſalvation, who the party. For, not undecunque, or abs quovis, yields full joy: not by every one (hand over head.) The better the party per quem, the more the joy ſtill. The ſalvation is made the more precious, by the Author of it. That as it is ſalus Regia, on his part 3. By Gods ſtrength, Tua Domine.

part that receives it: So it is ſalus Divina, on his that gives it, that is Tua Domine.

But to this [Domine] there belongs two Tua's. To virtute and ſalute, either of them, a Tua; virtute tua and ſalute tua: and this doubling of the point, we ſhall find concerns the joy much.

1. Virtute tua, not alienâ.

For, that it may not be, as Jonas's joy in his Gourd, up one night, down in another, (that is) vaniſhing and unſure; but ſound and permanent; it is beſt, our Hoſannah be in the higheſt: beſt, that the Hypoſtaſis or ſubſtance of this our rejoycing, be in the ſtrength of the Lord. Not in Chariots and Horſes; we ſee what became of them (the Pſalme before.) Hi ceciderunt, Down they went, and down went their joy with them. That, was in virtute alienâ.

Jonas 4. 10.

Pſal 20. 7, 8.

Nor ſua.

Not, in * his own bow, or ſword, or number of his people (that, proved not well neither;) that, was in virtute ſua: In virtute tua (we ſhall find) is the ſafer.

* Pſal. 44. 6. v. 2 Sam 24. 10.

Not, but that, in theſe humane ſtrengths, we may rejoyce in ſome ſort, with ſome caution: but that, they be all ſubject to the worme. Jonas Gourd was (mortal and mutable all;) not ſo ſoon had, but as ſoon loſt, and ſooner, a great deal: there is no hold of them, quotidie diſſluunt, we find it, daily.

Jonas 4. 7.

Therefore, welfare in virtute Domini, the might of the Almighty. In it, there is the ſound joy. O, it is good rejoycing in the ſtrength of the arme, that ſhall never wither or wax weak: and in the ſhadow of thoſe wings, that ſhall never caſt their feathers; in Him, that is not there yeſterday, and here to day; but the ſame yeſterday, and to day, and for ever. For, as he is, ſo ſhall the joy be. In virtute tua, then: And ſalute tua too.

Pſal. 36. 7.

Hebr. 13. 8.

2. Salute tua.

Nay, virtus tua, but ſalus ſua; the power, that may be Gods; but the ſalvation, that is the Kings (one would think.) And, ſo it is: But he rejoyces not, in it, as it is ſalus ſua (at leaſt, not ſo much) as, that it is ſalus tua, Gods; of and from God, who wrought it, and brought it to paſs. Nay, even in ſalute tua (it ſelf;) not ſo much in ſalute, as in tua; in the gift, as in the party that gave it. So doth no worldly man: he goes no further, than in ſalute (that he hath it, and ſafe he is;) cares for no more; for no tua, he. But Davids joy, and the joy of the godly, is not ſo much, that he is ſaved, or had ſtrength ſo to be; as, that it was God, ſens forth his ſtrength, ſo to ſave him, Nay, nothing ſo much in ſalute as in tua; in the ſalvation, as in God, his Saviour.

Pſal. 68. 28.

Luke 1. 47.

And, why ſo joyful, for this tua Domine, more than the reſt? I ſhall tell you why, For this is the very exaltation, the higheſt point of the whole triplicity.

There was none of the Emperours (upon ſuch an eſcape as this) but he took to himſelf preſently, as an high honour, the Title of Θεοφύλακτος, Preſerved by God; and uſed it ever after, as an addition to his Stile, as glorious, as Alamannicus, or Parthicus, or any Title of them all.

A King thus ſaved by God, is more, than a King: (I mean) more than another King, not ſo reſpected, by God. More I ſay, than another.

1. More to be ſet by, in the ſight of his own people: tanquam ſpeculum propitii Numinis, as a mirrour of Gods favour; when they ſee him, thus taken into Gods ſpecial protection. The very next words are, His honour, is great, in thy ſalvation.

Verſe 5.

2. As, of his own people: So more eſteemed of his Neighbours; when they ſee, their own, thruſt in with Knives, and ſo caſt down and fall; but him, after he was caſt down, to riſe, and ſtand upright: Hii ceciderunt, helps it much.

Pſal. 20. 8.

3. And laſtly, more feared of his enemies; when they ſee, the eye of Gods Providence, the ſhadow of his wings, the ſtrength of his arme, ſtill over him; ſtill, ſet to ſave him, and do him good; they will be afraid to plot ought againſt him, when they ſee it is in vain, God ſtill defeats them, and upholds him ſtill: when they ſee, Tua Domine in great letters, upon him.

And now, are we come, to the ſpring-head, to caput lætitiæ; Tua, Tua, Domine. And when we have brought our joy up thither; up, to him: we turn it looſe, let it exceed then: No where elſe; but, in Him, let it. If it be gaudete in Domino, Nay, then, Iterum dico gaudete (ſaith the Apoſtle.) Then, to it, again and again; double it and trebble it, and ſpare not. Good leave have you.

Phil. 4. 4.

Now then: for this ſalus Regia and ſalus Divina (both) joyn the triplicities; ſee, if they ſuit not, this and the firſt (of joy.) In virtute, Gods ſtrength, the very promiſe, and hope of it, yields joy within; there is lætabitur. But, made apparent in ſalute, is further matter of exultabit (without.) But, Tua, Tua, Domine, to that, belongs ô quàm! there is, his place: O, how greatly ſhall David rejoyce within, triumph without, in the Lord; being ſaved by Him, ſo mightily, and ſo marvellouſly ſaved by Him! Theſe two triplicities, are in the firſt verſe (both.)

There is new joy in the ſecond verſe, upon a new ground (the goodneſs of God.) And ſtrength, and goodneſs do well together; neither without other ſaveth. Strength alone, could well; but will not, till goodneſs come to it. Both, did it, here: For, in this verſe, ſaved by ſtrength: and in the ſeventh verſe, In the mercy of the moſt High he did not miſcarry. By ſtrength; that, by no arme of fleſh: By mercy; that, by no merit of his own.

The II. Cauſe. In ſatisfying the deſire. 1. Of his heart. 2. Of his lips.

Pſal. 145. 9.

But, His goodneſs is over all his works, over ſtrength and all. For, it ſheweth it ſelf, not in ſaving only (which is a matter of neceſſity;) but over and beſides that, in ſatisfying his deſires (and that is matter of meer bounty.)

And

And indeed, no way doth His goodneſs ſo ſhew it ſelf, as in ſending us our deſires. Nor nothing, is ſo properly, the name of joy, as the deſire ſent. The denying of our deſire; nay, the but delaying it, is an abatement to our joy: But the deſire accompliſhed, that, is the Tree of life (ſaith Solomon:) And the Tree of life, was in the midſt of the Garden; the very center of Paradiſe, and all the joyes there. The ſatisfying his deſire. Prov. 13. 12. Gen. 2. 9.

To ſatisfie, is one thing: and to ſatisfie by prevention, another. Between them two, they make up a new triplicity. For the former, of ſatisfying the deſire, is ſet down; either, as conceived in the heart (Deſiderium cordis;) or, as expreſſed with the lips (Prolatio labiorum.) It is much, to ſatisfie theſe two; His goodneſs, gives ſatisfaction both to the one, and to the other: ſatisfaction to the heart, by granting the deſire: ſatisfaction to the lips, by not denying the requeſt. And upon theſe two (in the verſe) there is a Sela. For theſe two (one would think) were able to content any.

But, this Sela, is no Sela to GOD. He hath a Sela, or an Ela above this Sela. He hath, not only a ſatisfying, but a ſatisfying by prevention: not expecting either, but preventing both: granting that, which neither the lips ever mentioned, nor the heart once imagined: never came out of the mouth, nay, never came into the mind. And this, is the præveniſti of His goodneſs.

As for the heart and the lips, we will not be curious, nor ſtand ſcanning their order, which ſhould ſtand firſt, the heart, or the lips. I know, though the tongue be the pen of never ſo ready a writer, the heart can endite faſter, by much. But what skils it which is firſt? Both together (I am ſure) can deſire more, than either alone; and He will ſatisfie them both. Pſal. 45. 1.

Satisfie the lips: Petite & dabitur, Speak and ſpeed. Satisfie the heart: Ave & habe, Wiſh and have. Not only, open thy mouth: but enlarge thy heart, never ſo wide, and he will fill it. This, is able, to ſatisfie David (I think) and to make him ſing Sela, which is their Stamoõ. Matth. 7. 8. Pſal. 81. 10.

This, may ſatisfie David. But this ſatisfies not God, in His goodneſs to David: No ſatis, with Him, but ſatis ſuperque. And indeed, both theſe (make the beſt of them you can) are ſtill, but a poſt-veniſti, the heart and the lips go before, and Gods goodneſs comes after. Nay, till His goodneſs get before; till it be, a præveniſti; it ſatisfies Him not. And, that is; not when He ſtayes for us, till we come to Him with our Petitions; Nor till he meet us: He with His mercy, us with our prayers: But, when He prevents us, before we ſtir a foot: and hears us, not when, but antequàm, before we requeſt; and anſwers us, not while, but yet even we deſire: opening, ſending and giving; before we ſeek, knock, or ask: that (lo) is the præveniſti; that the bleſſing of goodneſs indeed. 3. In preventing both, with His goodneſs. Eſay. 30. 18. Eſay 65. 24. Matth. 7. 7.

The bleſſing of goodneſs: And as to ſatisfie, is one thing (quovis modo;) To do it by prevention, another: So, to prevent with goodneſs, is one; and with the bleſſing of goodneſs, another. For, that is (as the fat of the Sacrifice) the beſt, the moſt chief, the moſt choice, the moſt bleſſed part of it; bleſſed it ſelf, and making David bleſſed, to whom He vouchſafes it. The bleſſing of goodneſs.

Not, but that the other (the granting, the not denying) are good bleſſings, and very good: but in them, though there be the goodneſs of GOD, yet not it alone; there is ſomewhat of David too, his devotion (at leaſt) in making his requeſt. But in this, GOD's goodneſs, is all alone; David doth nothing, neither ſpeak, nor think. That he never asked, never thought to ask, before any, without any asking, he is prevented with, by this bleſſed goodneſs: and without any cauſe elſe. The Fathers read it, benedictio dulcedinis, and well: For, while we ſtand waiting for the poſtveniſti, our eyes fail many times, our heart pants, we flote between hope and fear: And this reliſhes not well with us, it is a little bitter. In præveniſti there is none of theſe. And the cutting off of theſe, makes it benedictio dulcedinis indeed, as having none of that unpleaſant mixture with it. This is benedicta bonitas.

But (all this while) we ſee not, what need of this preventing? It is more than needs, ſure. The other two, the not denying, but granting, might ſerve our turns well enough. Yes, there is more than need of it, in the matter of ſaving, many times. The danger comes upon us, and ſurprizes us ſo, of a ſudden, as we have no time to gather our ſelves together; the heart no ſpace to think, nor the lips leiſure, to frame a requeſt. Both fail us.

And this holds chiefly, in ſecret plots and practices. No man ſuſpects; or miſdoubts them: No man prepares for them: Unawares on a ſudden, they break out, and even oppreſs us, ſo as they prevent lips and heart, and all. Such was the danger, in the Pſalm: Such, the danger of the day. In theſe, if it ſhould be put to a poſtveniſti, we were gone. A prevention muſt be. In theſe preventing dangers then, is the time; there, is the place, of this preventing goodneſs of God. Who ſeeing, what David would do, if he were not taken ſhort: ſupplieth (of His bleſſed goodneſs) that defect, and before either of both, relieves and ſaves him. This is the bleſſed goodneſs, and Bleſſed be GOD for this goodneſs, above all: We all at ſome times or other, fare the better for it.

Will ye ſee now, how theſe three come again exactly to that of the joy? The inward deſire of the heart, for that granted; lætabitur, the inward joy of the heart: The outward requeſt of the lips, for that not denied; exultabit, the outward voyce of gladneſs. But thou haſt prevented them both, (both mental and vocal Petitions) without ſuit at all: O how glad ſhall David be, for the other twain, but for this third eſpecially! For, this is the goodneſs, ô quàm! This exceeds all.

Well: but all this while, we walk but in generalities: might we ſee ſome ſpecialty of this bleſſing of goodneſs thus preventing him? Yes, we may. There follow more; but here in the Text, are two The ſpecialties of that goodneſs.

two particulars, both matter of GODS prevention, both matter of his desire. For, what would a King desire to have saved, or wherein to be blessed, but in 1 his Crown, and 2 his Life? And here, they be both. And in either of both, a several sort of preventing: Granted, and not asked at all, (as in his Crown:) more granted, than asked (as in his life.)

1. In his Crown. 2. In his Life.

But first: will ye mark, that here, Corona prævenit vitam, the Crown takes the place of his Life, hath the precedency of it: that his desire, is carried straight, to his Crown first, before to his Life, as to the blessing (of the twain) more to be desired. Thus we find them: and we may not stir them, they are of the Holy Ghosts own marshalling. Thus sets He them down, as if His will were, they should so be apprized: the Crown before Life.

1. His Crown first.

Mark well: Posuit Coronam, and then vitam petiit: with his Crown on; so, he desires life. But Coronam deposuit, take away his Crown, and then vitam non petiit, he will not ask Life; he will not think it worth the asking. If he would ask it, it would not be given him: He, that takes away his Crown, will have his Life not long after. Fond to imagine otherwise: and it is the poorest comfort and conceit, that ever was; to tell them, their Crown they must part with; but be of good cheer, their lives shall be saved, that they shall. No: vivis & regnas, take regnas, and take vivis too; both, or neither here.

2. That Crown, a prævenisti in David.

This is the Crown. And this Crown in David was a prævenisti, clear: a posuit without any petiit. For when he followed * his Ewes great with young, little dream't he of any Crown. It never came into his lips, it never entred into his heart, his soul (as himself saith) was weaned from any such matters, from so much as once fancying them: The Crown was in him a meer prevention.

* Psal. 78. 71. Psal. 131. 2.

And his second Crown.

Nay, two Crowns (we read) he came to. First, Sauls Crown, the Amalekite brought him that, and his Bracelets. To shew, it was a prævenisti meerly: Not so much as an Israelite, brought it. That was set on, first. Some thirty years after, we find he came to another Crown; the King of Ammons Crown, at the winning of Rabba, a more massy Crown, finer gold, richer stones in it, than his first. That was set on too. This here in the verse, was the second (say all the Interpreters:) and this a prævenisti likewise. If you will but remember what case he stood in, to God-ward, at the coming of this second Crown (it was presently upon the matter of Urias and Bathsabe) you will say, he was rather in case of Miserere mei Deus, than of ought else: that God crowned him then, in mercy and loving-kindness. At this second Crown, it was veniam petiit, and nothing else.

2 Sam. 1. 10. 2 Sam. 12. 30.

Psal. 51. 1. Psal. 103. 4.

And at his first Crown it was vitam petiit, and nothing else. All he ask't then, was his Life: it followes straight next verse. And sure, time was in the dayes of his Predecessour, when partly by Sauls own jealousie; but much more, by the wicked suggestions of Doeg, and such like, he needed to ask it. There was often (to use his own words) but a step, between him and death. He asked Life, then; and so that might have been assured him, would have strained his prayer no further.

1 Sam. 20. 3.

We must think, when he was cooped up, one while in such a Cave; another in such a Wood; put to flie for his life, to Moab, to Gath (I wote not whither;) in danger still to be made away, by one treachery or another: when, he received every houre the sentence of death, in himself; all his mind ran upon vitam petiit then: then, this Crown, or the gold of it, or the fineness of the allay, never troubled his head, ye may be sure: Life he asked then, and more he asked not, and well had been him, if he might have had but security of that; I say, security of his Life, and let the Crown go.

2 Cor. 1. 9.

3. The Crown set on by God.

Behold then, the blessed goodness of God, that gave him both. Both, that he asked, Life (we come to it, by and by) and the Crown, and another Crown too besides, that he asked not. Satisfied him, in that: prevented him, in this: Nay, prevented him, in both; as ye shall see straight.

But, yet I pass to that; here is a point or two about Crowns, I think good not to pass. 1 The first is, against Usurpers of the Crown, Nemine ponente, nisi seipso; God not setting it on, none setting it on but themselves: That, not ipse sibi, sed Deus ipsi; Not ipse posuit super caput suum, but Deus super caput ipsius. 2 The second, is against Usurpers of a power, to take off that, they never set on (deponendi, quod non posuit) and thereby intruding upon, Tu posuisti.

The Imposing Gods only.

1 First (the Crown) he raught not at it, caught it not, and clapt it on himself; it was brought him, he came orderly to it: it was set on not by himself, but by another. And, that other, was the right Setter, Tu posuisti, God. Who will never set it on a wrong; never, but on the right head, if it be of His setting: and if it be not of His setting, it will never prosper, never flourish (be sure.) Tua Domine, here too; the Crown is in Gods hand, saith Esay; and His hand sets it on Davids, sets it on all their heads, that lawfully wear it. It made the Emperours to stamp their Coyn, with an hand coming out of the Clouds, holding a Crown, and putting it on their heads: and accordingly, to stile themselves, Θεοστεφεῖς, à Deo coronatos, crowned by God: as well they might (this, Tu posuisti, here, is their warrant.)

Esay 62. 3.

And the deposing.

2 Secondly, against usurping of a power, to depose. God alone, is in the posuisti, at the setting it on. None but He, there: God hath set it on. Now what God hath set on, let not any presume to take off. Not any, but he that set it on. What, by Him alone done, by Him alone, to be undone. The Law is; Ad quem institutio, &c. To whom the Institution belongs, to Him and none other, the destitution. To whom the imposing, to Him and none other, the deposing: none to interpose himself in that business, but He.

And now, there comes a Tu interposuisti; and He, will have to do with that, this Tu posuisti, put on. Hath not potestatem ponendi (he confesses, and all the World knows) and yet would have potestatem tollendi, to take up that, he laid not down. But, if no Ponent, no Deponent. If none but God, at the Posuisti, at the setting it on; none, but He then, at the deposuisti, at the taking it off. The Crown, the Coronation, the Coronant (all three) blessings of His goodness: but the last, the chiefest, (the Tua Domine and à Te) the Tenure of it of Him, and Him only.

Now

Now then, to joyn theſe three, to the firſt three. Allow the Crown a Lætabitur, and to the Coronation, or ſetting it on, an exultabit: but ô quam! is for Tu poſuiſti (the Coronant.) To whom, they owe it; of whom, they hold it, without any Tu interpoſuiſti, at all: And now, to his life.

For, what is coronam poſuit, without vitam dedit; a Crown, without life to wear it? Here is that then: and that, in a new triplicity, 1 life it ſelf, 2 a long life, and 3 a life for ever. Gods goodneſs, in granting him: 1. Life.

Vitam petiit. It is not, his firſt vitam petiit, this (we ſpake of even now, in Sauls time) it was, after his ſecond Crown was ſet on; as is evident, by thus ſtanding, after it. And this vitam petiit, bodes no good matter, For by petiit, it ſhould ſeem (by all likelihoods) he was in caſe, to ask it, and ſo in hazard to loſe it; it, and Crown, and all (a worſe matter, than any yet.) It was not for nothing (the laſt verſe, before this Text) they cry, O Lord ſave the King; by like the King was in ſome danger, of periſhing. And ſo he was, as appeareth by the Sequele of the Pſalme, and that, by a Mezimma, a ſecret miſchief, imagined againſt him: were it, that of Abſolom, or ſome other like exigent. But hard beſtead he was, when it touched his life. Vitam dedit, but Vitam petiit firſt. Ver. 11. סומה

In that ſtraight, here was the ſum of the deſire of his heart, of the requeſt of his lips: O let my ſoul live, O let the ſoul of thy ſervant, be precious in thy ſight. Pſal. 119 175. 2 Sam. 26. 27.

And now, upon this Petiit, as upon a ground, follows ſtraight vitam dedit. And herein, firſt appeared the goodneſs of God, in granting his deſire, in not denying his requeſt. Vitam petiit, and Vitam dedit; life he asked, and life he had: No ſooner asked, but obtained. This was ſatisfying.

But then, he ſtayed not there; but prevented him further: gave it him, with advantage, with that he asked not. Life He gave him, ſo far his Petition, ſo far no prevention: but He gave him, long, too; long was not in the Petition, and ſo a meer prevention (the ſecond kind of preventing, that before we ſpake of,) Life, was in the requeſt, long was not; He gave it him, with long too, Dies ſuper dies Regis adjiciendo, Adding dayes to the Kings dayes, till it was length of dayes (that is) a long Life, and a long Reign both. Which very point of (long) makes, that this Text will not fall in fit with every King, unleſs he have lived and reigned, as long (Davids time, that is, fourty years:) for, ſo he muſt, yet dediſti longam, can be ſaid or ſung of him. 2. A long life. Pſal. 61. 6.

But yet, here he ſtayes not, neither: but heaps upon him more ſtill, and goes on to vitam in ſeculum ſeculi. For (to ſay truth) what is long life, yea, never ſo long, if it be not St. Hieroms long, Nihil longum quod finem habet. If ye ſpeak of long, that is truly long, that ſhall laſt for ever, that never ſhall have end. Our long, is but a ſhort long; which goes, but by compariſon, of a ſhorter. Elſe, what is it, to live out the full compaſs of mans uttermoſt age, if he live not ſo, in this life, as after this, he may live for ever? The meaning is: what is long life, without it be, a religious life; without it be, with the true fear and worſhip of GOD? which only hath the promiſe of in ſæculum ſæculi: without which, a ſhort life is better than a long life; and no life at all (but an untimely death) better than both. Otherwiſe, the Heathen have hit upon coronam poſuit, and vitam dedit, yea, and longam too: they be but latitia Gentium, theſe. But the life for ever, that is a Non omnibus datum; they among the Heathen never had it: that, is latificans Davidis; that, the bleſſing of bleſſings; the tranſcendent bleſſing of all, to have the end of this life, the beginning of another life, that never ſhall have end: and that by the true ſervice of GOD, in His Sanctuary. 3. A life for ever. Matth. 19. 11.

Reckon this then, inſtar omnium, even worth all, and the very conſummatum eſt, the higheſt perfection, GOD can beſtow on David, That God gave him, to bring back the Ark, to pitch a Tabernacle for it, to lay up, and leave a great Maſs of Treaſure for the building it a Temple, himſelf devoutly to worſhip, and to make lawes, and ſet orders for a more ſolemn and ſeemly worſhip of God, than he found: He ſaid himſelf, this was the joyfulleſt day, he ſaw in all his life; that one day worth a thouſand. And for this his care of the Sanctuary, came this help to him, out of the Sanctuary (ſee the ſecond Verſe of the Pſalm before) that ſaved him, ſaved him both his Crown and Life: and that after received him to everlaſting Tabernacles, to a Crown and Life, that ſhall endure for ever. And further than this, we cannot go. 1 Chron. 13. 15. 28. 24. 25. 26. Pſal. 84. 10. Luke 16 9.

So have we the particular of that was ſued for and granted: and of that was granted, and not ſued for, by the ſpecial priviledge of Gods preventing goodneſs. Himſelf ſaved, his Deſire ſatisfied, his Crown faſt, his Life aſſured, here and for ever.

And judge now, whether David had good cauſe to rejoyce or not. And whether, we may not here again (for a farewell) once more, over with our firſt triplicity of joy again. Lætabitur to go to vitam (if you will;) and (if need be) exultabit to longam: But ô quam, to be reſerved, for in ſæculum ſæculi. There it is in kind. So it was never, before. There it is ô quam! indeed. For there is a Crown, Life, and Joy that exceed all that we can deſire; and there he ſhall receive them, and ſay ô quam! indeed.

II.

And what ſhall we ſay now of all this? Truly no more, than muſt needs be ſaid. No more, than the Text it ſelf draws from us. Here is, a fair Major (layed forth to our hands.) A King, that hath in this manner, found the ſtrength of GOD, ſhew forth it ſelf in his ſaving: and felt the goodneſs of GOD, in thus preventing his deſires, touching both his Crown and his Life: Any ſuch King may (for he hath good cauſe;) Nay, ſhall and ought (for he is bound) to be exceeding, both joyful and glad. The HOLY GHOST gives His word; ſayes, he ſhall ſo be. The Review or Application to His Majeſty.

If this be King David, He: If any other, He too. King David's we have ſurveyed (as the time would give us leave.) Shall we now pray a Review, to ſee, if any other may be found beſides, as deep in the cauſes, as he. For, if as deep in the cauſes, as deep in the effect: If the ſame in virtute, and the ſame in ſalute, the ſame lætabitur (all will grant.)

Psal. 40. 9, 10. And here now, chooſe, whether we will refrain our lips, and keep back GODS mercy and truth from the great Congregation. If we would ſo, and hold our peace, the day, even this fifth of Auguſt would not: but would (as the Pſalme ſaith) eructare verbum, break forth and tell us, that ſuch a King there is, and who it is. That if there be, or ever there were a Prince upon Earth, that found, and felt this virtutem and ſalutem Dei, the mighty hand and help of GOD, in ſaving him, ſaving him miraculouſly; Verily, this day ſaith (not as Nathan, Tu es homo, but) Tu es Rex, You are that

For your deſire ſatisfying. In that diſtreſs, I doubt not, but You might and did lift up Your ſoul to GOD, in ſome ſhort Hoſanna; that of Hezekiah, Domine vim patior, Lord I am oppreſſed, ſuccour thou me: Or, that of the Apoſtle ſinking, Help Lord, I periſh. If you did ſo, He granted your deſire, He denied not your requeſt: ſet a Sela then. But if being ſurprized with the extream ſuddenneſs of the aſſault, you did not, you could not do it: Then did He more, even prevent you, with his goodneſs: His ſweeteſt, His bleſſed goodneſs of all.

And beſides your ſaving (which you had reaſon to deſire) that which you never would have deſired, I dare ſay; that gave He you too. Exalted his ſtrength, that you might, your triplicity. And thoſe ſame Zamzummims, the Contrivers of the miſchief, His hand found them, and they found it, He ſet His ſtrings full againſt the face of them: deſtroyed them in His wrath, even in the very place: hath caſt them into the fiery Furnace (where even now they fry:) rooted out their fruit from the Earth, and their name from among the children of men. All theſe, are word for word, every of them in the ſequele of this very Pſalme. All this, He did: You deſired not all this, not their eternal deſtruction (I know;) yet even with this alſo, He prevented You.

For your Crown: this is ſure, if ever any were prevented with a Crown, he was, that was ſo, in his Cradle; had it ſet on his head there: when he was not, as a weaned Child (morally;) No, not a weaned child (literally;) but indeed a child, not yet weaned (not ſo much;) had neither lips to ſpeak, nor heart then, to deſire any ſuch thing: he was prevented ſure.

Further yet: if any found favour in ſetting on his Crown, yea, Crown upon Crown: and ſaving upon ſaving: After his firſt Crown, in danger to miſcarry, and even thrown down (as upon this day:) And after his ſecond, in danger again to miſcarry, and to be blown up (upon another day) and ſaved in both: He was fairly bleſſed by His goodneſs (ſay I.) Which very ſaving (upon the matter) was a ſecond crowning: even a new ſetting on that, that was ſliding off. So that, Tu poſuiſti the ſecond time, may truly be affirmed of this day.

And, what ſhould I ſay? If any, that his Crown ſaved, and his Life ſaved (under one;) ſaved and prolonged both; ſo that now theſe fifteen years together, you have held this day with joy: and (which is worth all the reſt) beſides length of this life, bleſſed with Gods holy truth, the pledge of everlaſting life, the beſt of his bleſſings: Such an one, this Text doth warrant us to ſay, hath cauſe; great cauſe, exceeding great cauſe his ſoul to magnifie the Lord, and his ſpirit to rejoyce in God his Saviour. Such an one, to perform all the three (here ſpecified:) ſo many triplicities of favour would have more than a ſingle rejoycing.

Luke 1. 46.

And ſhall not I add this? As to rejoyce in God, ſo to ſeek and ſet himſelf, to deviſe and do ſomewhat, for which God may rejoyce in him: Somewhat for the Sanctuary, from thence came his help, and from no other place: Somewhat I ſay, that this joy may be mutual, as of you in God, ſo of God in you again.

Sure, there is a Bond, an Obligation to it, in latabitur; the King ſhall rejoyce, ſhall be glad, ſhall do it, ſhall not be diſpenſed with, not to do it: Shall not pleaſe God, if he do it not.

our duty.

But, where are we all this while? excluded from this rejoycing? The King ſhall (it is ſaid) what, and none but he? None is mentioned, but he: We would not let him (I dare ſay) do it alone; there may be many thouſands of us, that would not ſtand by looking on, if we had any warrant to rejoyce too. Give me leave then, to look out a warrant for us: we would be loth to ſit out, and to loſe our part in this Joy.

This Pſalme, and the Pſalme next before it, are two ſiſter-Pſalmes. That, a prayer for the Kings ſafety; the laſt words of it are, Lord ſave the King: Why, the King is ſaved, they have that they prayed for; and ſhall not then their Hoſanna reſolve into a Hallelujah? Their careful Hoſanna, into a joyful Hallelujah? Yes, and ſo it doth, in this. For, as the laſt words of that Pſalme are, Lord ſave the King; ſo the laſt of this, So ſhall we ſing; ſing for very joy of it.

They promiſed as much, there (in that Pſalme) to rejoyce at the 5th. Verſe. We will rejoyce in Thy Salvation. Latabitur Rex, here it is: Latabitur nos, there. They promiſe it there: and they will be as good as their word; and ſo they are: For even in this Pſalme, Latabitur Rex is the firſt verſe; Cantabimus nos is the laſt: That, if he rejoyce, at the firſt: we come in, at the laſt. If his at the beginning, ours at the end.

2 Sam. 20. 1. 1 Reg. 12. 16. We have no part in David, is the voyce of a Rebel. All good Subjects have a part, have an inheritance in him, or (as the new taken up term is) a birth-right in him; and in him, before his Law.

In

In the 2 Sam. 19. 43. They fall there to ſhare the King among them (the Tribes) and to reckon up, what part and portion, each hath in him. Have they a part and portion in him? Why then, in his grief, and in his joy. And if they in theirs: we in ours. So that (to uſe the Apoſtles phraſe) If he be ſorry, who can make us glad? and if he be glad (to uſe the Apoſtles phraſe again) he may truly ſay (and ſo may every good King, of his people) This truſt have I in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all. Thus come we to have our part in his joy. And if (as it is well noted) Juda is in David, the very name of the one (with a very ſmall tranſpoſing) in the others name: if Juda, in David; then Juda's joy, in Davids: That if it be true, latabitur David, it will alſo be, latabitur Juda, & exultabit Iſrael, Juda will rejoyce, and Iſrael be right glad. Look ye, there is now a warrant, there is Scripture for it.

2 Cor. 2. 2.
2 Cor. 2. 3.
Pſal. 53. 6.

Now then, if we have Scripture for our rejoycing, let us do it: and do it thoroughly; even, by and through all this tripartite joy.

1.

Begin with latabitur: Rejoyce in the ſpirit within. A good ſign we do ſo: if we can but ſay the two firſt words here [Domine latabitur] unto GOD. The whole Text is a ſpeech directed to GOD: He, made witneſs of our Joy. Therefore ſee it be hearty and true: there is no halting with him; ſee it be ſo, or tell not Him, it is ſo: He will find you ſtrait, and give you your portion with Hypocrites; if you ſay to Him, Lord thou knoweſt thus I am, and yet thus you are not.

Math. 24. 51.

In every truth, the Pſalme ſeems to be penned for the nonce, that no Diſſembler might ſay it. He, to whom it is to be ſaid, is not man, but GOD: and He, can tell whether we ſpeak as we think, or not.

But all true hearts will ſay it, and ſay it with confidence, and what even to GOD Himſelf, that knowes the ground of the heart: Lord, thou knoweſt, what is within me, thou knoweſt that I am truly joyful, even there within.

There within, we muſt have it firſt: but there within, we muſt not keep it; nay, there within, it will not be kept, if there be this ſpirit and life of inward joy, in it. Out it will, with an exultemus: And, even ſo GOD would have it. No concealed Joy, no Apocrypha to day. All the ſeven ſeals of it opened. Shine out, as a Beam; flow forth as a ſtream, into a viſible and audible exultation: ſhew it ſelf as Gods Joy doth (in the 6. Verſe) in the Joy of the countenance. That if any tell you, he is glad within (that he is) and hath the Clouds in his Forehead; if it will not ſerve: you may ask Him, but where is your exultabit? We muſt ſee, you are ſo. There is ſome leven of malignity within, if there be not the voyce of joy and gladneſs, that it may be heard to the ear; if there be not the habit, geſture, and other ſigns of it, to be ſeen to the eye: that it may give evidence, to both ſenſes.

Apoc. 5. 5.
1 Cor. 5. 8.
Pſal. 118. 15.

3.

Both theſe: and both, in no ſcant meaſure; no pinching to day: but good meaſure, running over; exceeding is the word of the verſe. Exceed firſt, in this leaſt, and loweſt of all; in the low voyce of joy and gladneſs, in theſe Panegyricks of praiſe, and joyful acclamations. But, exceed me them: how? by cantabimus, the hymns and muſick of the Church (that is lowder) and to help them to exceed, all the Organs and other Inſtruments of the Quire below. But exceed we them too: How? with the Bells, the Inſtruments of the Steeple above: and with the ſound of the Trumpets, that will be heard further off. And yet exceed them too: How? with a Peal of Ordnance (if it be to be had) that will be heard, farthieſt of all.

Luke 6. 38.

Exceeding is the word in the Text. Exceeding to be, in and through all; that our Hoſanna may be in the Higheſt to day. And ſo for the other ſenſes: in Shewes, and Triumphs, Feaſts, and Fires, and other ſigns of Jubilee; whatſoever we uſe, when we uſe to exceed in gladneſs; when we would ſhew, we exceed in it: that ſo, ô quàm! may be ſaid of it, it doth ſo exceed. All are but due, to this deliverance, to thus many triplicities in it.

We to exceed: for God Himſelf (we ſee) exceeds here. His ordinary is, but to give leave, or (at moſt) to call us, to rejoyce. But here, He doth not give leave, or call us to it, with a jubilate; Nay, ſhall (here) is more, than a jubilate: that but exhorts; this binds us: ſhall be glad; that is, neither will nor chooſe, but be ſo. Yea, He makes us, ſpeak to Him, Domine; and makes us promiſe Him, we will ſo: and having promiſed, looks we ſhould make it good. GOD injoyns it: And if GOD injoyn it, the day doth moſt juſtly, intercedere, even plead for it, that if ever we will do it, we would now do it, on the ſalvation-day it ſelf. And never may he ſee day of joy, that joyeth not in this day: nor have cauſe of gladneſs, that for this cauſe, is not glad. And this, for ſhall be glad; and for the Bond, de præſenti, that is in (ſhall.)

But beſides it, there is a Tenſe, de futuro, in (ſhall) too. We may not loſe it, for fear of tolletur à vobis. But, admoniſhed by that Tenſe, bethink our ſelves, how to draw it further than the preſent Tenſe, even into the future (ſtill ſhall.)

John 15. 22.

Lætetur, or latabitur Rex; the Hebrew will bear both. But ours, and ſo all Tranſlations chooſe latabitur rather. Not lætetur: that, is not ſo well; for, that is true, if it be done now, and but now, for the preſent, for this once: Latabitur, is better; for there, the doing it, is in the future ſtill, ſtill to come; ſtill more joy behind.

For [the King ſhall rejoyce] of this day, will be over ſoon at night. What, ſhall we end our rejoycing then, with this day? No (I truſt.) But by vertue of this (ſhall) ſhall rejoyce next year again; and when that is come, ſhall the year following; and ſo then again, the year after that: and ſo from year to year, donec cognominetur (ſhall) ſo long as it is called (ſhall;) ſo long as we look into our Books, and find, ſhall rejoyce, there. So long, and no longer.

Hebr. 3. 13.

Now, that the Joy may ſo continue, the cauſes muſt continue too, there is no remedy. It is they, must keep our Latabitur, ſtill alive: The cauſes were, ſalutem miſit, deſiderium præveniſ, coronam poſuit, vitam dedit. To perform our Vowes then (Vota publica, I truſt) to deſire, that this Chain of cauſes, may keep whole ſtill, and not a link of it be broken, or loſt: that they may paſs into the future, all: ſtill ſalutem mittet, deſiderium præveniet, coronam ponet, and vitam dedit.

I will not go through them all: only touch the Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt: and ſo
Prov. 14.30. 16. 24. I have done. Latabitur, and vitam dabit ſtill.

Latabitur, Joy firſt: if it be but for vitam d di. For, Joy is a prolonger of life, dulcedo cordis & ſanitas oſſium (as Salomon calleth it:) And even for that cauſe, we begin with it. But (to ſay truth) leave out latabitur, and what is there wiſh-worthy? Truly, without it, neither ſaving, nor Crown, nor Life, worth the wiſhing. For who would be ſaved to live ſtill in ſorrow? And the Crown it ſelf, it is not Corona deſiderii, if it be not Corona gaudii. Yea, and who would wiſh life, but to take ſome joy and comfort in it? I will ſay more: let one be in Paradiſe, as Adam was. Even
Gn. 3. 8. 10. there, when Adam had loſt his joy, Paradiſe it ſelf, was no Paradiſe: as good in a dry Deſart, as in it: without joy, Paradiſe it ſelf is not worth wiſhing. Joy is all in all. Let that then be caput
Pſal. 45. 7. Pſal. 132. 18. voti: that the oyle of gladneſs, may run down through them all, and over them all, make His ſaving precious to Him; His Crown flouriſh; His life, vitam vitalem, and worth the deſiring. That, Joy may be the unity, of this Trinity, 1 ſalutis, 2 corona, 3 vita.

But then, laſt, becauſe all four of them hold upon life; to the end, they may hold, that that may hold; hold, and hold long. Some think, it is long enough already (and ſo long may they think.) I know not what to think: For (I cannot tell how) long and ſhort, are ſaid but comparativè: that ſo, a life may be long, and not long, diverſly compared. To ſtand rating it, as the Law doth, ſeven years to a life; ſo, ſeven lives already: ſo compared, it is (in a ſenſe) long. But, we will none of that. Nor as compared with the Princes round about Him: For He hath ſtood them all, and longer than any of them all: and hath had the honour long, to be Primogenitus inter Reges Terræ, GODS
Pſal. 89. 27. firſt-born now of all the Kings of the Earth: and long may He have it. Long, if thus. But then again; not long, if compared with the deſires of our hearts, with the requeſts of our lips: Not long is compared with that, that may be: and whatſoever may be in this kind, we wiſh, it might be: even as long, as nature poſſibly can draw it out. Let this then, be our Omega, our ſumma voti; and that in no other words, than the uſual words of the old Councels, to the Emperours or Kings, then preſent among them.

JACOBO REGI, à DEO coronato, à DEO cuſtodito, Vitam longam, Annos multos.

To KING JAMES, crowned by GOD, preſerved by GOD, Many dayes, long life. So long, till He change it, for a longer: till there come eternal ſalvation, an immortal Crown, life in ſæculum ſæculi, nay, in ſæcula ſæculorum, and make all conſummate. And ſo I end.

But before I end, in any wiſe let us not be ſo raviſhed, with our latabitur; but that we remem-Pſal. 116. 13. ber, Tua Domine withall. He, that ſent this ſalvation, fulfilled this deſire, the Setter on of theſe Crowns, the Giver of this life. So rejoyce, as in every of them, our joy come up to Him. So take calicem ſalutis (as we term it, I pray GOD, we ſo term it, and ſo take it aright:) but, aright we ſhall do both, if we forget not to call upon His Name, even the Name of the LORD. That He, which ſaved to day, may ſo ſave ever: that fulfilled his deſire, may keep it ſtill full: that He that ſet on His Crowns, may hold them on, hold them on faſt: and laſt of all, add to the Crown, life; and to life, long; and to long, for ever and ever.

And even ſo, conclude we, as the Pſalme doth: addreſſing our ſpeech to Heaven.

Be thou exalted, O Lord, in Thine own ſtrength: Thou wert ſo, this day: Be ſo ſtill, again and again. So ſhall we ſing and praiſe Thee for it. We now do ſo, for this dayes ſalvation, and all the joyful triplicities of it: So may we ſtill: So may we long: So may we ever.

And (Good Lord) exalt Thou this Thy ſtrength, and treble theſe thy triplicities to us; that we may for theſe Thy exaltations and triplicities, double and treble our thanks and praiſe to Thee. As this day, ſo all the dayes of our life. And this with one heart and voyce, beſeech we Thee, to grant, &c.

BEFORE THE Kings Majeſty,
At BURLEIGH near OKEHAM,
On the V. of Auguſt, A. D. M.DC. XVI.

ESTHER, Chap. II.

Eo igitur tempore, &c.

Ver. 21. In thoſe dayes, when Mardochai ſate in the Kings Gate, two of the Kings Eunuches (Bigthan and Tereſh) were wroth, and ſought to lay hands on the King Ahaſhueroſh.

22. And the thing was known to Mardochai, and he told it unto Queen Eſther, and Eſther certified the King thereof, in Mardochai's name; and when inquiſition was made, it was found ſo, therefore they were both hanged on a tree: And it was written in the Book of the Chronicles before the King.

IN thoſe dayes; So begins the Text: In theſe dayes; ſo may we begin. Nay, come yet nearer, on this very day. For, on this very day there fell out that, hath made, either beginning may well ſerve: In thoſe dayes, or in theſe dayes. In diebus illis, we read there was a King, and he in danger: in danger to have hands laid on him; and that by two; two of his own people: for no cauſe, but that they were angry; and it appears not why. And, the iſſue was, the King delivered; and they that ſought his, brought to a wretched end.

As we have read, ſo have we ſeen in diebus hiis. One of the ſame condition, a King too; and in the very ſame danger of hands laid on him, and by the ſame number, two: and of his own Subjects and Servants; and for no cauſe, but they were angry; and for no cauſe, that neither. And the iſſue here again, the King preſerved, and they alſo came both (as theſe here did) though not the ſame, yet to a far more fearful end.

I ſpeak, before underſtanding hearers: and (I know) there was not any but upon the reading of the Text, his conceit did lead him preſently, who was meant by King Ahaſhuerus, and withall did even think of the Bigthan and Tharez of this day. And ſo made the compariſon, with your own ſelves, before I could make it.

We ſhall gain, this year, by this Text, ſomewhat onward more, than the former we did. Till now, we The Summe.

we have been all in Divinity; that, a heinous ſin it is, there (this attempting on Princes:) But now ſhall we go to the Common Law, what it is there. For, here is an Aſſize brought againſt two, and the matter enquired, and a verdict found, and they had ſentence, and were executed: For what? Even for Voluerunt inſurgere, as the Fathers read it, or (as we) Quæſiverunt mittere manum; for but ſeeking, for but having a will, to lay hands on the King.

And that, not the Jewes Law. There, we were, in the years paſt: now, we are not in Jewry, where GOD was known; we turn us to the Gentiles; we are in Perſia now. And this we do, by the Prophets warrant: Get you (ſaith he) to the Iſles of Kittin, and behold, ſend to Kedar, and enquire, if there were any ſuch thing ſought there, and were not condemned. For if there, Ad erubeſcentiam veſtram dico, I ſpeak it to your ſhame, that would be held the People of GOD, if any ſuch thing ſhould be found with you. They are worſe than Pagans, that ſo ſeek; we will empannel no Chriſtian, a queſt of Heathen men ſhall ſerve to attaint them.

Pſal. 76. 1. Jer. 2. 10. 1 Cor. 5. 6.

This is no Law of the Brain; it is written: Twice written, 1 written down, firſt in the Chronicles of Perſia, by direction from the King. 2 After, written out of them, and enrolled here in this place, by direction from God. Enrolled I ſay, and properly: For, this of Eſther is not called a Book, as others are (not the Book) but, the Roll of Eſther. Originally it was but Perſian Law (this:) and it had not been much, if that had been all; but, by vertue of this Enrollment, it is made the Law of GOD alſo. That from henceforth, it is clear at both Lawes, the Law of the Jews, and the Law of the Gentiles; the Law of man, and the Law of GOD; that all ſeekings of like nature are made criminal, and capital, and the ſentence of Suſpenſi ſunt, upon them, holy, and juſt, and good.

Laſtly, written Law and old Law: For, of this (whether Divinity or Law) this we may ſafely ſay; It is no new Portugal Divinity, this almoſt three years old, taken up in diebus hiis. Nor no new Law of heri and nudinſtertius: nay, not of Edward the third then, Et á principio non fuit ſic. Nor it is old this, in diebus illis; in thoſe dayes. And thoſe dayes are as old, as the Second Monarchy, the famous Monarchy of Perſia: the reports of which Nation are more ancient, than any ſave thoſe of the Jewes: no Book, but the Bible, ſo ancient as they.

Matth. 19. 8.

And this methinks is not amiſs, when we can bring this Book to juſtifie the Juſtice, or any way to give ſtrength, to the Law of the Land: It is pity, but it ſhould be ſo; either ſupport other mutually, facultas Juris, and facultas Theologiæ. As here now, we have the Roll of Eſther, and in it a Report of Bigthans caſe, long before there were any Year-books or Reports at the Law. We are willing to bring forth this Roll of ours (which, till an ancienter can be ſhewed, muſt be the leading caſe, to make Voluerunt, Treaſon) to ſhew the Countrey Law, in this, to be no other, than GOD's is: that it is no otherwiſe, at the one, than at the other: Treaſon, by Law; Treaſon, by Divinity, by both.

Well may we talk of Law, the Law of the Land; but when all is done, never do men reſt, with that quiet and full contentment, as when they ſee, it is warrantable by the Word of GOD; hath the ground there: as this hath the ground there. Every word here, hath in it, his warrant: Quæſitum eſt, for the Tryal; Inventum, for the Verdict; Suſpenſi ſunt, for the Execution.

The Diviſion.

The main points are (as the verſes are) two: 1 the Kings danger, in the former, the verſe of
I. danger; 2 the Kings delivery, in the latter, the verſe of delivery.

In either, the means of either. His danger: 1 Of what, 2 by whom, 3 what moving them.
II. 1. Of what? Of having hands laid. 2 By whom? by Bigthan and Tharez. 3. What moving; Nothing, but angry they were.

His delivery, 1 by what means, 2 of whom, 3 and how. 1. By what means? by notice taken and given of it. 2. By whom? by Mardochæus? 3. How? even caſually, as he was ſitting in the Gate.

But, the Kings delivery, it is not meet it ſhould go alone: It is therefore attended with their ruine, that ſought his.

That, is (as it were) the Train born up after it.

His danger by Bigthan and Tharez. In them two things, 1 what they ſought, and 2 what they found.

1. What ſought they? To lay hands on the King: What found they? One laid hands on them for it; appenſus eſt uterque eorum in patibulo.

2. His delivery by Mardochæus. In him, two more: 1 His notice taken, by caſual overhearing them, ſitting as he ſate. 2 His notice given, by his faithful diſcovery of the whole to the Queen; and to the King, by her means.

Then ſhould follow the legal proceeding, but I will ſpend no time in it. It is all out of our caſe this day. Our Bigthan and Tharez had no enquiry: No Jury went on them, they were not executed in form of Law. No further goeth our caſe, than the Kings danger, his delivery, and the
III. cutting off thoſe, that ſought his life; and no further will we follow it; Not that.

But this we will, the ſolemn ſetting down and recording all this, 1 in the Kings Chronicle, as a memorable accident: 2 in GOD's Roll, as a famous caſe: 1 Of the Treaſon of the two, to their eternal infamy: 2 Of Mardochæus's good ſervice, to his everlaſting praiſe: 3 Of the Kings happy delivery, to the univerſal joy of all his Subjects.

And there, come we in. For, we may not, nor we will not forget in diebus hiis. And I ſhall make it appear (I truſt) that, whether we take the Kings, or the Parties; the danger ſought, or the delivery found; diebus hiis, will match and over-match diebus illis, in all points. And ſo, the joy of this day (our joy) to do the joy of them accordingly.

It

I.
The Kings Danger. Chap. 3.

IT is a delivery, they and we celebrate: No delivery, but from a danger precedent, ſo was there here. The King in danger evidently. And he no ſooner out of danger of theſe two, in this Chapter; But, the Queen in danger of Haman, in the next. So, the eſtate of Princes is not exempt from danger.

1. Of hands laying on him.

And of no ſmall danger neither; no leſs matter, than having hands laid on them, that is, even of being made away. This King here (ſaith the Apocryphal Book of Eſther, ſaith Joſephus, ſay the beſt Writers) was Artaxerxes ſurnamed Long-hand. It he: his Father was ſlain by Artabanus. The Father was, and the Son (we ſee) was ſought to be; near it, ſcaped it narrowly.

2. By his own.

And by whom this? neither by enemy, nor by ſtranger, but by his own. Of his own Subjects, of his own Houſhold, of his own Chamber, and the chief of his Chamber then, too.

3. Becauſe they were angry.

And why? for no evil of his. He was, for his moral parts (as all write of him) a good Prince, That would not ſerve: his life was ſought, though. And no cauſe, but they were wroth; and no cauſe appeareth. All which ſheweth Princes; that, for all their might and greatneſs, for all their innocency and goodneſs, for all the favours they vouchſafe others, it is not in them, their ſafety conſiſts. It is in the mercy of the moſt High they do not miſcarry: His hand, that holds them faſt; His arme, that ſtrengthens them, that the enemy is not able to do them violence, or the Son of wickedneſs to hurt them. To look up to Him, to hold good terms with Him, who in all their danger, either by Mardochai (as in the Text:) or without Mardochai (as in the day) can work their deliverance.

Pſal. 21. 7. Pſal. 89. 21. 22. 23.

Deliverance from danger: Danger whereof? Delivery, where-from? Executed wherefore? All lead us to the Fact next; which indeed ſeems no Fact, for nothing was done, ſought only to have been.

The Danger.

1 The laying hands on any, a ſin.

To lay hands is one thing: To but ſeek to lay, is another. To lay hands is, of it ſelf (I know) a thing indifferent, therefore as the hand is. It may be a helping hand as Gods is, and then mitte manum (ſaith the Pſalm) lay it and ſpare not. But if it be Satans mitte manum, upon Job, to do miſchief; then ſtay it, lay it not. And ſuch were theſe hands here; For, it is ſaid, they were angry, and ſought to lay hands. Angry hands, it is well known, are hurting hands. Either Jeroboams, lay hands on him, to ſurpriſe his Perſon; or Herods lay hands on Peter, to do by him, as he did by James, to murder, and to make him away.

Pſal. 144. 7. Job 1. 11.

1 Kings 13. 4. Acts 12. 3.

Specially on the King.

So to lay, is a ſin certainly, be it on never ſo mean a Perſon. But, in Regem, is a Sin of ſins. For, the ſin (we know) is ſtill by ſo much the more grievous, by how much the party is the more eminent, againſt whom it is. Now, there is not on earth a perſon more eminent, nay, ſo eminent as the King. A Deo primus (ſaith Tertullian) poſt Deum ſecundus: Count not God, he is the very firſt; Count God, and he is ſecond. None ſo high as he; and ſo no ſin ſo high as it. To lay hands on him? it is too ranck that; away with it.

The ſeeking to lay hands, is a ſin.

But that is not the caſe. It is not miſerunt here: none were laid. No matter for that, it is mittere quæſiverunt, and that is enough. To lay, and to ſeek to lay, though one be worſe, both be naught, even miſſio, and quæſitio both.

Job 4. 8. Eſay 59. 5.

Seeking is a plowing for ſin, and that is ſin (ſaith Job;) It is a hatching of a Cockatrice-egge, and that (ſaith Eſay) is poyſon, no leſs than that, comes of it.

Sin to lay, ſin to ſeek to lay. As to lay though you hurt not, ſo to ſeek to lay, though you lay not. Ever, in what degree ſoever, Aſſuerus danger, is Bigthans ſin: the Kings danger, their ſin that ſeek it.

A Capital ſin.

But if that be all (ſin;) we ſhall do well enough. What care men for ſin; if there be no Action at the Common Law for it? None but Weſtminſter hall ſins do men care for. God ſaw it would come to this; men learn no more duty, than penal Statutes did teach them; He took order therefore, to bring it within them too. We ſay further then, by vertue of this Text, beſides that it is a grievous ſin, prejudicial to the ſtate of the ſoul, it is an heinous crime, a capital crime, amounting to ſuſpenſi ſunt, as much as their neck is worth to ſeek this. It will bear, not an Action only, but an Enditement of life and death.

If upon the King

But it muſt be in Regem then, againſt Him: Againſt others, it is not ſo. This, is a Prerogative Royal. And, as many other wayes, ſo hereby appeareth, what a King is. That whereas, in other mens caſes, as touching the Law of life and death, to ſeek to lay, and to lay, are much different: in the Kings caſe, they be all one. Quæſiverunt, if it be no more but ſo, the Law in that caſe to any other, is (I take it) favourable; and for a bare purpoſe, if no hurt enſue, no man ſhall ſuffer death. Not ſo, with the King; voluerunt, againſt him, is death, if it may be diſcovered; and quæſiverunt, if he but ſeek, though he find it not.

This helps us to underſtand the Text, Ego dixi, dii eſtis. Dii, for other cauſes; and this for one, that they participate this divine priviledge; that, as againſt GOD, ſo againſt them, the heart is enough. Quæſiverunt, the ſeeking, whether they find or not. Voluerunt, the will, whether the deed follow or not. Thou ſhalt not ſpeak evil of the King? how? not with thy lips? No, not in thy ſecret thoughts, ſaith the Preacher. If not, ſpeak evil in heart; do evil in heart, much leſs.

Eccleſ. 10. 20.

Two Commandments (when time was) we ſaid, there were in Nolite tangere, 1 Touch not, the act: 2 Have not the will to touch, the intent. Two caſes there be upon theſe two: 1 Baana and Rechabs, that did lay hands upon King Iſhboſheth (2 Sam. 4.) 2 And Bigthan and Tharez caſe here, that did but ſeek it to King Aſſuerus. Both guilty, both ſuffered. Yea, Baana and Rechab, hang them, and well worthy; they murthered the King: But Bigthan and Tharez? Nay, and them too; hang them, though they found it not, only for ſeeking.

Pſal. 105. 15.

This then, I would have all bear away, it is the ſubſtance of the Text: diſtillatio ſavi (as I may call it) drops of it ſelf without any ſtreining. We find (here) in the Bible, a ruled caſe. Bigthans caſe, that held up his hand, not for laying his hand, but for ſeeking to lay it, Planè ſuſpenſus eſt uterque, put to death they were both. Why? Quaſierunt; for nothing, but that they ſought to do it: they did it not; they might plead, Non eſt factum, they did it not. It would not ſerve, they dyed for it, for all that, upon no other Enditement, than quia voluerunt. Volnimus is enough to attaint any: If that can be proved, no pleading not guilty.

And this is the Law, not of the Perſians alone (which yet was the Law of a hundred twenty ſeven Provinces;) nor ours alone (and ſo may ſeem to be the Law of Nations) but, that which ſtrikes it home, by vertue of this Enrollment here, is the Law of God; God by thus recording it, hath made it his own; that if there were no Law for it, they might be executed by this Book, and this verſe of it. Sit ſtill then, and ſeek it not: for if you do, this is your doom, expreſly ſet down here, by the pen of the Holy Ghoſt. Take it as a ſentence from Gods own mouth; Qui quæſierunt, ſuſpenſi; qui quærunt, ſuſpendendi ſunt. They that ſought, went; they that ſhall ſeek, to go the ſame way.

The parties, by whom.

Yet for all this, ſought it was then, and ſince, even the Kings life, Sed vi per quos. And that, per quos, by whom, is the next point. The crime is bad; In Regem makes it worſe: But the ſeekers, worſt of all; for they of all other ſhould not have ſought it.

Two, in number.

Two they were in number: For (I know not how, but) for the moſt part they go by Two's: Simeon and Levi, to the murther of Sichem; Baana and Rechab to that of King Iſhboſheth; Jozebed and Jozachar, to that of King Joas; Bigthan and Tharez, to this attempt here againſt Aſſuerus; and the very ſame number to that of this day. Treaſon is in Hebrew called קֶשֶׁר a binding together: Two there muſt be, to be bound, at leaſt: Two, to conſpire, or put their breaths together, to make a conſpiracy. Upon the point there is in all, never leſs than three: For, inter duos prodjtores Diabolus eſt tertius, All that do conjure, conjure up a third to them: The Divel makes them up three: for he is one ſtill: he, the faggot-band, that binds them: he, the ſpirit that inſpires all Conſpirators. For (indeed) theſe unnatural Treaſons do not ſo much ſteem or vapour up out of our nature (bad though it be) as they be immiſſiones per angelos malos, ſent into it by ſome meſſenger of Satan, or rather by Satan himſelf. Poſtquam miſit Satanas in cor Jude, After Satan had put it in his heart. For, he it is, that puts in their hearts, to ſeek to do it; and to do it, if God break not the Band, choak not the breath of them; as here he did choak it in theſe, with ſuſpenſi ſunt.

Gen. 34. 25. 2 Sam. 4. 5. 2 Kings 12. 21.

Luke 22. 3.

Two in number, what were they? Nobly born (I doubt not) to be in the place they were.

What place? There be that think, Bigthan and Tharez were not their proper names; but the names of the rooms they held. And they have reaſon for it; Bigthan (as the word goes in that tongue) is Dapifer; Tharez, is Pincerna. Thoſe (we know) were rooms ever counted of ſpecial faith and truſt.

Of the Kings Chamber.

But plain it is, they were of his Chamber. Not of his Leiges alone, or of his Houſhold, but (which is more) of his Chamber. It is a wonderful thing, the State, that the Perſian Monarchs kept. No man, upon pain of death, to come ſo near, as into their inner baſe Court, uncalled; if he did, he dyed for it, unleſs the King, by holding forth his Scepter, pardoned him his life. You will eaſily then imagine, in what place they were, that had free recourſe into his innermoſt Chamber to go and come thither at their pleaſure.

Chap. 4. 11.

Not only to do ſo themſelves, but to be thoſe, by whom all others were to go or come: No man to come thither, but by them. For that is meant by Lords of the Threſhold, or qui in primo limine præſidebant, as the Fathers read it, the very chief over his Chamber.

The Septuagint (who ſhould beſt know the nature of the word) they turn it ἀρχισωματοφύλακες. φύλακες firſt, keepers; σώματος of the body. And many they had (for, many ſuch Kings need have:) But theſe two, they were ἀρχὴ, the chief, the Arch-keepers: had, if any more than other, the chief charge, the very principal of all: God do ſo and ſo to me (ſaith King Achis to David) if I make not thee the Keeper of my head: and in ſo ſaying, thought, he promiſed him as good a place, as he had. He could make him no more. To this place had the King advanced theſe two: and theſe two were they, that ſought this. That it ſhould be ſought at all, evil: that theſe ſhould ſeek it, too bad. They, that if others had ſought it, ſhould have ſtaid their hands; theſe to lay on their own, to ſeek it themſelves.

1 Sam. 28. 2.

All men know, it was no mean preferment, early and late to be ſo near Aſſuerus's perſon; They had means thereby to do themſelves much good. So had they, to do others much hurt, if they were not the better men. But, for others, hurt it skills not, if they had not thereby had the means to do Aſſuerus himſelf; if the Divel prevailed ſo far with him as he did. Of his chamber Dapifer, his diſh; Pincerna, his Cup: Keepers of his body, principal Keepers: if they ſeek to lay their hands, they will ſoon find what they ſeek: the more dangerous they, the more his danger by them, a great deal. And is not this heavineſs to death, when they that were ſo honoured, prove ſo unkind, when they that ſo truſted, trusted, so untrue; and may we not take up the Wisemans Oh, O wicked presumption, whence art thou sprung up to cover the face of the Earth! Eccl. 37. 3.

Stay a little, and look upon them, as ye would upon a couple of Monsters. 1 To seek this, in Regem alone, were too much: to break their duty to their Leige Lord, if there were no more but that: to lay their hands on him, for whom they should lay down their lives: 2 Add then: not to a King only, but to such a King, not to their Leige Lord alone, but to so good and gracious a Lord, that had done them so great favours, placing them so near him, trusting them so far, honouring them so greatly. (For, no honour, to trust; no trust, to the chief trust of all.) More than heathenish wickedness this, to render evil for good: and whose wealth they of all other bound to seek, to seek his ruine. 3 And they came not to that place, but they were sworn: to vilifie their Oath then, and to tear in pieces the strongest band of Religion. The hands that had taken that Oath, those hands to lay on him! 4 To betray their trust to him, that had laid his innocent life in their hands, and to make their trust, the opportunity of their treachery! 5 In a word: of the chief Keepers of his body, to become the chief seekers of his blood, the chief enemies of his body, and life and all! What can be said evil enough of these? Say it were lawful in any case (it is not lawful in any; but say it were) to lay hands on a King: yet they (in all reason) of all others, should not have been the doers: Etsi ille dignus perpeti, at non tu qui faceres tamen. Were not these Monsters then? was not their condemnation just? It grieves me, I have stayed so long on them; yet if I have made them and their Fact odious, it grieves me not.

What was the matter? what could move them, thus to play the wretches? Why they should not, many and good reasons we see. Why they did, none in the Text, but that they were angry: and that is no reason, but a passion, that makes men go clean against reason many times. Bigthan was angry, and Tharez as angry as he. 3. The cause wherefore. They were angry.

Yet, if it be but a little anger, it will over. Indeed (such it may be) it will. What manner anger was it? The word is a shrewd word; signifies an anger, will not go down with the Sun, will not be appeased. What speak we of the word? their deeds shew as much. We see, nothing would satisfie them, but his life: Nothing serve, but lay hands on him. That, they sought; so angry they were. Ephes. 4. 25.

What angred them then? No cause is set down. And, none I think there was. If there had, we should have been sure to have heard of it. For men, to be angry without a cause, and ever with Superiours, it is no new thing.

Well: if no cause, some colour yet: if not that, some shadow at least. Somewhat we are to seek, why they did seek this.

If there be in the Text any thing to lead us to it, it is in the first words, or not at all: In those dayes. In those, angry they were: as much to say, as before those dayes, they were not; but, in those, then they were. Else, there is no cause to mention that, of the dayes, but to make this difference: Out of the Text, nothing can be picked else.

Why what dayes were those? That goes immediatly before: The dayes wherein Assuerus had made choice of Esther, to match with her, and make her his Queen; and had made a great Feast upon it. At the Feast (it seems) they surfeited, they could not brook that match, at any hand: Some ambitious desire of theirs disappointed by it; likely, that was the cause. This was fain to serve for the occasion, for lack of a better: A bad one (we say) is better than none. Angry, for Assuerus choice of Esther.

What, the great King of Persia find no match in all his own brave Nation? Never a Persian Lady serve him, but he must to this vile base people (the Jewes) his captives and slaves, to pick him a match thence? What a disparagement is this, to all the Persian blood! It would make any true Persian heart, rise against it.

Nay then a worse matter: (now, ye shall see them grow godly on a sudden, and wax very zealous, as the fashion is.) Nay then, we shall have a Queen of a contrary Religion, we shall now be all Jewes. One that cares, neither for Mithra nor Oromasdes; One by all likely-hood brought in, to be the utter ruine of the Ancient Religion established in Persia, yer she came there.

This was it (they tell us) and like enough so to be: As (ever) ye shall observe marriage-matters are made occasions oft, to serve to many purposes. For, Assuerus may not marry, but where Bigthan and Tharez appoint. Else, they will be wroth, and fall on seeking. If any be in the Text, this was it. And was not this (trow you) a goodly occasion, and a substantial, to make them quit their Allegiance, forget their Oath, cast behind them all his Favours, betray their Trust, Truth and all; lose all these? For, all these must they lose; before they could seek that they sought.

But, why found they it not? It was not so easie for them to find at first, by reason that, for any to come there, in the Kings presence, with a weapon, nay but having his hands out to be seen, not having them hid, held close under their garments, it was death: Cyrus put to death two of his Kin for it. That so, they might well seek: and so I leave them seeking that, I pray to God they may never find. But the true cause was, God was angry with this anger of theirs, that their seeking succeeded not.

And now are we come to the Catastrophe, or turning about of all. For by this time innotuit res Mardochæo, Mardochai came to the knowledge of it: forth it came. Nay, if it come forth, the King shall do well enough. To discover the Treason, is to deliver the King. II. His delivery.

This was by Mardochai: what was he? No Persian (to begin with) but a stranger by Birth, and by Religion; and a Captive, besides: One that had better reason to have sought it, than they. He had I. The means of it By notice given 1. By Mardochai had as great cauſes, as any are by them alledged, that favour ſuch ſeekings. For, this King held him, and all Gods people with him (to uſe Eſthers own terms) in bitter captivity, as a Tyrant. And this, worſe he was, (at leaſt, as evil as an Heretick) for he was an Idolater. One would think, it had been a work meeter for him (this:) He to ſeek; and they to keep him, from finding that he ſought; they him, not he them.

3. As he ſate in the Gate.

And how came he to it? It skils not how, but as he ſate in the Gate, he came to it. This is all; he ſtir'd not, but ſate ſtill. And ſate not in any lurking corner, but even in the broad Gate; and there came he to it, or it to him. This was Gods doing ſure. Their anger boyled, ſo ſignifies עבר and boyled over, it ſhould ſeem, and brake out into ſome words. Elſe how ſhould Mardochai take notice of it? They would never truſt him with it (ye may be ſure) being a ſtranger. A Jew, with their diſpleaſure, at the match of a Jew, never: but, ſome big words came from Bigthan, that by Mardochai were over-heard.

What in the Gate, in preſence of a ſtranger? The Targum (the moſt Ancient Expoſition we have) ſaith, God ſo took away their wits, as they forbore not to talk of it, he ſitting by, but did it in a forraign ſtrange language. Knew him a Jew; thought he could ſpeak no language but his own, or a little broken Perſian perhaps: not the tongue they had their conference in. Which (it fell out) Mardochai underſtood, as well as they. And thus all came out, God would ſo have it: who ſo aſſorted them, to make a way, as to His mercy, for the ſafeguard of the king: ſo, to his juſtice, to bring that upon their own heads, they ſought to have brought upon the Kings.

And Mardochai, when he had it once, he kept it not: Made it known, not to him he next met with: but diſcreetly, where he knew he well might, to the Queen. She was, by blood and bringing up, faithful to him; and ſo did ſhe ſhew her ſelf: for, what he broke with her, ſhe told the King, not in her own, but in Mardochai's name. The faſhion is otherwiſe with ſome; to tell it in their own names, and never ſpeak a word of Mardochai, from whom in truth it came. Well, the iſſue was, what ſhe told the King, ſeemed to him no idle fancy of ſome vain man, but ſuch as was meet to ground an equity upon. So, they were apprehended, and committed, and ſo to the Law we leave them. Well, by this means the danger is over, and the King ſafe, thanks be to God.

2. The ſtrangeneſs of the means.

And many ways doth God give juſt cauſe, to mankind, to admire His high providence, in bringing to light ſuch attempts as this, againſt his Anointed: ſuch variety, ſo diverſe ſtrange means he hath, to effect it by; as here, in this I note four unto you.

1. The party firſt, Mardochai, that by him. That this health ſhould come to the King of Perſia, neither by Mede, nor Perſian; not by any of his own people, but by a ſtranger, who was none of his Lieges, born out of his Allegiance, a Jew, a meer Alien; that this ſhould come forth by him, and by no other means. But ſo is God, wonderful in his wayes: and will by an honeſt ſtranger ſometimes, ſave that, a bad Subject would deſtroy. That in default of his own, God would have him ſaved by a ſtranger, rather than not at all.

2. Obſerve again: that, to this ſtranger it came no otherwiſe, but as he ſate in the Gate. We may not paſs that; it ſtands in the front of the Text, as the ſpecial means of all. That it thus came, and no other way, as he ſate ſtill; ſtill, and went not up and down ſearching: In the Gate, a publick place, not any privy Corner or Lobby; he not diving into their boſomes, but only there ſitting, it ſhould thus happen; he ſhould over-hear them talking together in a ſtrange tongue (though to him not ſtrange:) by a meer caſualty, one would think (all this;) Indeed by a high and wonderful diſpoſition of Gods heavenly providence, this; that, even as he there ſate, it ſhould be brought to him thus.

And very oft God doth bewray bad enterpriſes by ſuch (one would think them) meer caſual events. But, in maximè fortuitis there is minimum fortuiti, & quæ fortunæ fieri videntur, fato fiunt. It ſeems chance, that is (indeed) deſtiny. And never let them look for other (all the Bigthans of them.) One ſhall be by a wall, or at a window under the houſe eaves, near one cranny or other; God will ſo diſpoſe ſome body ſhall be within the hearing, when they full little think. For, God will have it out certainly: Rather than not, by ſome meer accident, ſome that ſits by chance in the Gate, ſome that goes by the Gate ſhall bring it out, rather than it ſhall not be brought out.

3. And may I not add this for a third, that all this came out by occaſion of that which they pretended for their occaſion. That very match, which was ſo great a mote in their eye, that they ſo maſigned at, they muſt needs ſwear the Kings death for it; that very match was the means that brought Mardochai thither, to the Gate: for thither he came to hearken, not for any ſuch matter as this, but how the new Queen (his Niece) behaved her ſelf; what report went of her. And as it fell out, this (which he came not for) there he heard: his thither coming, by this hap, was the happy means for this happy diſcovery: happy for the King; happy for the whole Land. But all came by his reſort thither, by means of the marriage. So, that, they made their occaſion, was made the occaſion of their ruine.

Pſal. 63. 8. Prov. 6. 2. Luk. 19. 22.

4. And let this be the laſt, that even from their own ſelves, He brought it. They that go about the like, their own hands ſhall make them to fall, they ſhall be enſnared in the words of their own lips: rather than it ſhall not come forth, it ſhall come forth ex ore tuo ſerve nequam; come out at their own mouths, as here it did. Their own tongues ſhall fall on babling, their own pens on ſcribling: God will have it out certainly; even by themſelves diſcloſed, rather than not at all. And this for Gods mercy, He had here, and ſtill hath to bring ſuch plots to light, means marvellous in our eyes.

Now

Now of Mardochai, the means of all. For, though as this days delivery was, we have no great uſe of him, there was no Mardochai, no diſcovery there; this dayes was another manner of delivery, of a higher nature than ſo: yet there is great good uſe of him for all that. Indeed, Mardochæus, exemplum noſtrum, he is our pattern: Ours, that be true men. He ſet before us a mirror of a faithful good ſubject, one according to Gods own heart. For, this is a perfect Scripture, we have in it both what to fly and what to follow. As there be in it, two bad; ſo thanks be to God, there is one good. To avoid them: to be like to him. Mardochai to be our example.

Like to him three ways: 1 Like him in his innotuit: 2 Like him in his nunciavit: 3 But above all, like him in that which was the ground of all: that he was a faithful ſubject to a ſtrange and to a Heathen Prince.

Like him firſt, in his innotuit. Not to turn the deaf year to Bigthan and Tharez, as if we heard them not: nor to look through our fingers at them, as if we ſaw them not. None knew, he underſtood the language they ſpake in: He might have carried it ſlily, made as if he had known nothing, not known that, he knew; nothing to compel him, but his conſcience, to take notice of it. But Salomon ſaid in his mind, Save him that is deſigned to death, Wilt thou not deliver him that is led to be ſlain? Any, but the King more than any, If thou ſayſt, I know not of it, he that ponders the heart, doth not he underſtand? He that keeps the ſoul, doth not he know the contrary? And ſhall not he pay every man, (and ſo thee) according to thy work? Well for, innotuit, ſince from the gate it came, good therefore that Mardochai ſit there, or (which is all one) that they which ſit there have ſomewhat of Mardochai in them: Be, if not curious and inquiſitive, yet vigilant and attentive. And yet curious and inquiſitive I would allow, in the caſe of a Princes ſafety. And the King and the Queen to have their eyes, and their ears abroad (both of them) and all little enough. We ſee for all the Kings Wiſe men, that knew the times, never a one of them knew this time. This good (we ſee) came by Mardochai, came on the Queens ſide. 1 In his innotuit. Prov. 24. 11. Prov. 24. 12.

Like him in his innotuit, to know; Like him in his nunciavit, to make it known. Careful to get notice, faithful to give notice of it in due time. God, whoſe will it was, it ſhould thus happily come to him; His will it was, it ſhould as faithfully come from him. He knew, by the Law he was bound, if he heard the voice of conſpiracy and uttered it not, it ſhould be ſin to him (Leviticus V.) He knew (by the Pſalm) what it was to partake with other mens ſin, what to have his part with a thief or an adulterer; and if with them, with a traitor much more. He knew by the Proverbs, he was now in as deep as they, as good lay his hands on him, and ſeek it, as lay his hand on his mouth and not ſeek to prevent it, keep it in and conceal it. He knew (for he told it Eſther after) that if he had not bewrayed it, God wanted not his means, to have brough it out ſome other way. And laſt, he knew, by the Prohet, God would have ſet his face againſt him, for ſo cloaking it, and have rooted him out. All this he knew: but, the myſterie of the ſeal of iniquity (the Seal of Confeſſion) it ſeems he knew not. It was not graven then, that ſeal; nor many hundred years after. That ſhuts up treaſon, as a treaſure, under a ſacred ſeal, at no hand to be broken: no, though all the Kings lives in Chriſtendom, lay on it. This act of Mardochai's marres the faſhion of that Seal quite. 2 In his nunciavit. Lev. 5. 1. Pſal. 50. 18. Prov. 24. 11. Chap. 4. 14. Ezek. 14. 8.

And, this may be ſaid of him, he would never have laid any hands on himſelf: for then he would have let it proceed, and not hindred it, by his bewraying, as he did. This alſo: he that did thus diſcloſe, for a need would have taken an oath to diſcloſe: Sure I am, would never have taken oath, or Sacrament not to diſcloſe it: would never have ſtuck at the oath of Allegiance (that is once:) but it may be, would have ſtuckat the Seal of Confeſſion, for ever coming upon his lips.

This for nunciavit. And all this he did, yea, though himſelf were no Subject born to Ahaſhuerus, nor he his natural Prince; but born out of his Dominions, far off, in Jewry. Did it, not for Joſias, or Jechonias, or ſome King of his own: Did it for Ahaſhuerus King of Perſia, one that held him and his Country-men captive and thrall; yet to him he did it. 3 In his loyaltie to Aſſuerus a ſtranger.

Yea, more than that yet, this did he, to Ahaſhuerus not only a ſtranger, but more than ſo, to Ahaſhuerus a heathen man, an Idolater, one that worſhipped the Sun, and the fire, every day. As, that did not hinder him, that of a diverſe Nation: ſo neither did this, that of a diverſe, and that of a falſe Religion. For though he were of a diverſe Religion from the King, yet was he of Gods true religion, that teacheth men to be true to their Prince. Be he a Jew, or be he Gentile, Aſſyrian, Perſian, or what he will; Be he a right worſhipper, or be he an Idolater, Be his Nation, or be his Religion, what it will be: though the King be (as Ahaſhuerus) a Pagan, though they be (as Mardochai) the only true Church and people of God; to be true to him though. But none of that religion, that is faſt to the Catholick, looſe to the Heretick. If it be Joſias, O then ſtay your hand: but, if Ahaſhuerus, if Ethnicus, or quaſi; if excommunicate, then ſet Bigthan and his hands freer to ſeek, and to find, and to lay them on, and ſpare not. This Religion was none of Mardochais, (nor let it be any of yours) witneſs this act of his, an holy and good act. For which (though not preſently, yet) not long after, he was highly rewarded by the King, and for which, he is ſet here (his name, and his act both) among the Righteous, to be had in everlaſting remembrance. A Heathen.

Of the twain now a word. I ſaid I would tell you, what they ſought and what they found. That they ſought they found not. Not that: but pity it is, but they ſhould find ſomewhat, ſeeking as they did: and ſo they did. They found ſomewhat inſtead of it, which had been better loſt than found: they found a halter ſcarce worth the finding: they found their own perdition: and the worſt kind of it, perditio tua ex te, themſelves the authors of it. Ex ore tuo, by that which came from themſelves out of their own mouths; the Devils quærite & invenietis right. The Train. What Bigthan and Threz ſought and found. Oſee. 13. 9. Luk. 19. 22.

And

And will you ſee how fitly every thing fell out? They ſought, and they were ſought into; quæſitum eſt. They ſought and found not: they were ſought into, and found. They were wroth with the King, and God with them; the heavie wrath of God was upon them. They would have laid hands on the King, hands were laid on them for it: up the Gibbet they went, and off they went, and the world was well rid of a couple of traytors. Before they could find, they were found themſelves, and their fact, found: the Law was not to ſeek; that, was found and founded long before. A Law, that now hath received the approbation from God: and ſo now, a right Perſian Law, never to be altered.

Dan. 6. 15.

III. The ſolemn Recording of this.

Have we done? not yet, this muſt be entred firſt, written: Nay written over twice, a Duplicate of it. 1 Written firſt in the Chronicles. And that before the King,) of ſuch importance the King thought it.) 2 And then this writing here of the King, is here written over again, a new order from God. So, two Conſtats: One, in the Kings Chronicles, the other in Gods Canonical Scripture, of this act. Two Copies extant, one in Rotulis Regiſtri, the other in Archivis Eccleſiæ; One among the Kings Records, the other in the Churches monuments. What ſhould this mean? Something there is ſure, in the adding of this clauſe, about the writing it up. I know no meaning, but that God liked well of the writing of it in the Kings, that he would have as much done in his own Records.

Why the King would have it Chronicled, is eaſily ſeen. It was a memorable event, worthy to be ſet down there. But why God? Sure he ſaw, theſe Chronicles would not laſt ſo long, as his will was, this example here ſhould. And indeed they being now loſt, we had been little the better, if it had been there only; He made it therefore to be entred into his own Chronica Chronicorum, that never ſhould be loſt. Well it was; it ſhould ſtand in the Perſian ſtory while it did laſt; but God for failing, provided further, to have a memorandum of it in his own Sacred ſtory, that laſt, as long as the world ſhould laſt. That, that is there, is ad perpetuam rei memoriam, indeed.

Another reaſon. Being in theſe Chronicles, it would have ſpread no further than Perſia, or the hundred twenty ſeven Provinces at the furtheſt. Gods eye looked further: that not Perſians only, but Jews; Nor both thoſe, but Chriſtians too: Not the hundred twenty ſeven Provinces alone, but all the Provinces in the earth ſhould take notice of it. I ſpeak with the Apoſtle, Hath God a care of Perſia? either writ he not this for our ſakes? Yes, for our ſakes no doubt he wrote it, that we alſo might be the better for it.

1 Cor. 9. 9.

The better: two wayes: 1 Firſt, to know Gods cenſure of both theſe, in diebus illis, for the preſent: The due praiſe of him by whom the delivery, The juſt condemning of them by whom the danger; that none that ſo ſeek ſhall be ſaved by his book: For that (we ſee here) brings them to the gallows, and there leaves them. 2 Or rather there leaves them not, but by this Scriptum eſt ſets up their quarters, there to ſtand and be ſeen, by all that look in it, to the worlds end. And this is worſe than hanging, yea in chains; for, the carcaſſes of thoſe, in time will conſume and drop away and come to nothing; ſo ſhall theſe never, but remain as freſh ſtill, as the firſt day, they were ſet up, to all generations to come. It is that, that grieveth the noble generous nature (I dare ſay) more than the execution it ſelf, there to hang upon the file in Bigthan and Tharez's infamous black roll; their names to be read there, for ever.

Pſal. 78. 8.

But, this was written alſo for them that come after, and a double uſe there is of it that way: As the parties, and their facts, be good or bad, that there are regiſtred. If bad, then (as in the ſeventy eight Pſalm) Ne ſint ſicut, not to be like this Bigthan and Tharez. Ne ſint ſicut, not to be like them in their wicked attempt; Ne ſint ſicut, that they be not like them in their wretched end.

Not like them; but like Mardochai (A ſint ſicut there:) that coming to the notice of ſo wicked a deſign, took himſelf bound in conſcience to detect it: yea, though it were againſt a ſtranger to him in nation, a more ſtranger in religion to him, yet to do it. Here, Inſpice & fac (ſaith God, in his Law:) Vade tu & fac ſimile, (ſaith Chriſt, in his Goſpel.) In a word: this was written to the end, to tye up all hands from ſeeking as they did; and to open all mouths, to diſcloſe, as he did: To make men loyal to their Princes, though Heathen Idolaters, ſuch as Ahaſhuerus.

Exod. 25. 40. Luk. 16. 37.

And if this were the end; if any ſhall go quite croſs (in a manner) in their Scriptum eſt's to this Scriptum eſt, in all theſe three: 1 Let looſe the hands to that, theſe (here) ſought and are condemned for it: 2 Stop up the mouths from diſcloſing of that, Mardochai (here) did, and is commended for it: 3 And both theſe, not in the caſe of Ahaſhuerus, but even of a Chriſtian Prince; what think you by them? what do they ſay in effect, but Sint ſicut Bigthan & Tharez, Ne ſint ſicut Mardochæus.

I report me to your conſciences: God thus ſkoring up theſe, that but ſought to lay their hands on a Heathen King, would He ever approve of ſuch, as under-hand ſet on Subjects to go paſt ſeeking, even to lay their hand on Chriſtian Princes, Moſt Chriſtian Princes, their own Princes; Own by nature and nation, Own by maſs, and religion too, as in diebus hiis we have ſeen two in France (a Bigthan and Tharez, both) one after another?

And what for Mardochai? They ſwear men, they give them their maker upon it, never to diſcloſe that, which Mardochai is (here) honoured for diſcloſing. Yea, and approve, nay more than approve of ſome; for doing clean contrary to that, Mardochai did here; even for concealing; nay; for ſealing up (and that under a holy Signature) as foul and wicked a treaſon, as ever was.

This hath been done. But, we are in writing, what ſay ye to that? Will ye compare but the writing of diebus illis, with ours in diebus his? Let there be a Book written ſaith God (this of Eſther) that no man ever do the like to theſe two, that no man ever ſeek to conceal thoſe that ſhall ſo ſeek: Let there be a book written (ſaith ſome body elſe) as it were an Anti-Eſther to this Book of Eſther, to ſet men on to ſeek that, theſe here ſought, and to teach them the way how to find it; to point out, who ſhall be Bigthan, when and how they ſhall ſeek to lay, and lay both: As it might be a Book written by Suarez in defence of Tharez (his name of the two names, neareſt) in ſome caſe to licenſe the ſeeking: and to command the cloſe keeping of ſuch geer as this.

But yet we have not all: Writing a Record, making up a Roll, is more than writing a Book. Every authentick Record (as is this) is of the nature of a Preſident, to do the like; of a Copy ſet for us to write by. So here we have further a warrant, to make up our Records, by this Record; to Record all, that lay their hands, for ſuch as Bigthan and Tharez; and all that diſcloſe them, for ſuch as Mardochai. Ever, upon like occaſions, to make like entries. Shall we do it? Write them down (ſaith the King) in the Chronicle. Write them down (ſaith God) in the Bible, for Traytors, theſe two. Write me down ſome ſuch as did the like or worſe, for other manner perſons in another manner Regiſter, even for no leſs than Martyrs: You know, who it is.

Regiſter me Mardochai (ſaith the Holy Ghoſt) for a party well deſerving, for utte ring his knowledge of ſo wicked a Treaſon. Paint me up ſuch an one (ſaith another ghoſt) ſtraw and all, and in the border print me him Holy Martyr, for not diſcloſing as foul a Treaſon, nay fouler a great deal.

But trow you this to be Gods Vicar, that thus makes act againſt act; checks Gods Records, with Counter Records of his own; affronts Gods Chronicle with his New Calendar on this faſhion? Or St. Peters Succeſſour? Nay not his: of all others, his leaſt: He laid his hand on his weapon, for his Maſter; So would he teach, and not otherwiſe. Judas, he indeed laid none himſelf, but he it was gave the watch-word, This is he, lay hands upon him. So that, Judas's Crew (it ſeems) they be, that ſo do; and no better than Judas himſelf, that ſo teach. No Apoſtle did ever lay hands, but Judas; He did: his Diſciples they be; his Succeſſours (not St. Peters) that bid it. Matth. 26. 52. Matth. 26. 48.

We may, and will then by his warrant, be ſo bold as to enter them Traytors in the Chronicle before the King: By what warrant, they may regiſter them for Martyrs, in the Calendar before the Pope, let them look. Ours we ſhew, let them ſhew but the like, and carry it: Elſe, if he ſee, allow, and print Books with priviledge, that tend to the manumitting of Tharez's hand, and to the ſealing up of Mardochai's mouth; if under confeſſion he animate Tharez, and with his Seal of confeſſion, muzzle up Mardochai; if God write one way, and he another, in effect; write King, write God, what they will, write we him Martyr, we will be ſo bold as to write him up with St. Paul, for Ἀντιχριστον, one that oppoſes himſelf flat againſt this Book, and the Writer of it; which Book ſtayes all hands from laying, and opens all mouths to the bewraying ſuch as theſe. 2 Theſ. 2. 4.

I will pray you, I may rather forget my ſelf a little, than forget in Diebus hiis after all this: we promiſed to ſhew, that they match and over-match In diebus illis. That they match in many points. 1 That Kings both, both in danger, in the ſame danger, both; by the ſame number, and by thoſe of the ſame rank; and upon the ſame motive, great anger for little cauſe. Again, that both were preſerved, and both ſtrangely: that the ſeekers in both in ſtead of finding that they ſought, found their own confuſion. The comparing of Diebus hiis with diebus illis.

But as in many, they match; So, in many more, doth this day match over-match thoſe dayes. More degrees in our Dyal, than in theirs; the day goes beyond the Text: and not this Text here alone, but any other, that ever yet I could find. The more (ſay I ſtill) are we all bound to God for His goodneſs, that hath ſo magnified His mercies toward His Anointed, and in him to us all, as He hath vouchſafed him ſuch deliveries in diebus hiis, as He never vouchſafed in diebus illis, to any King of his own peculiar choſen people, or of any other under the Sun. Such to be found in our Chronicles, as not the like in the Chronicles of Perſia: Nay, not, of the Kings of Juda and Iſrael: But are ſine exemplo, ours; none coming home, all falling ſhort of them.

Which (methinks) I can let you ſee ſenſibly; and ſo, that we have greater cauſe to rejoyce in this of ours. In the Kings firſt. The King in diebus illis (make the beſt of him) was but a Pagan, a worſhipper of Idols: theſe be Bars in his Arms. The King in die hoc, neither Heathen (I am ſure) nor that can have the leaſt touch of Idolatry faſtned on him: he that ſhamed not to ſay [No Chriſtian] and hath been fain ſince to eat his word, he durſt not ſay an Idolater; that, would ſoon have rebounded back upon himſelf. And no Idolater is a Chriſtian,; nor Chriſtian, an Idolater, I am ſure.

This firſt vantage then we have here yet: Alwayes the very ſtate of Kings, in it ſelf, without any other addition is dear unto God (we ſee.) Aſſuerus here doth aſſure us of that, who was thus preſerved, only becauſe he was a King, and for no cauſe elſe. But I hold clearly, a Chriſtian King, to be more than a King; more than a Pagan King: and ſo Major Aſſuero hic, and de majore majus gaudium; and ſo we, of the twain more cauſe to rejoyce.

Next, as both Kings, yet not both like; ſo both in danger, and that not like neither. The danger of in diebus illis, was but of hands laying: the danger of this, of hands laid. On Aſſuerus, no hands were laid: it came not to that. It came to that, here. On they were, come off how they can. Thoſe in the Text, but ſought: they on the day, found what they ſought. It was paſt quæſiverunt; It was plain miſerunt. That was the caſe, this day. No ſuch thing in thoſe dayes. Aſſuerus was not offered the point of a naked Dagger; not taken by the Throat; not graſped and tugged with, till both lay on the floor. All this danger was but de futuro; ſought to have been, and might have been, but was not. This was de præſenti, preſent danger, of being preſently made away, in a corner, by the hands of bloody wretches; that not only ſought to lay, but found that they ſought, and did lay. Now, the greater the danger, the joy for the delivery (ever;) and ſo our joy the greater. For, no compariſon between the dangers: that is clear.

No

No more was there between the Actors, by whom the danger grew. Bigthan, bad enough (I grant;) but behold a worſe, a bigger than Bigthan here. Bigthan and his fellow might have gone to ſchool to them. They were angry, and ſo ſhewed themſelves to be, and the leſs dangerous for that. Theſe were as angry as they, but ſhewed it not. They brake forth in terms, that it came to Mardochais ear. Theſe had learnt their leſſon better; not an evil term came from them, no ſhew of anger appeared, but fair and falſe ſemblant all. So much the more likely to do miſchief (ſay I;) ſo much the more like Judas treaſon, the worſt that ever was. For, no betraying, to betraying with a kiſs. Give me angry Bigthan, rather than fawning Judas: to welcome one kindly, and ſet on privily, with Judas watch-word, This is he, lay hands on him; from ſuch, God deliver us. The more the parties ſuch, the more our joy, Jon eſcaped out of their hands.

Mat. 26. 48.

Both Kings were delivered: ſo far, equal. But then again, great inequalitie in the manner, very great. That, in thoſe days, by a Mardochai: All was regular, went the common ordinarie way, upon a diſcoverie. Quotidiana ſunt hæc, to be ſeen, to be read in everie Chronicle. But on this day, there was never a Mardochai to diſcover ought: Mardochai failed here. A conceit there was, ſomewhat ſhould have been diſcovered in another kind; but the plot it ſelf, no diſcoverie of it, till the very inſtant; till one appeared in arms, till out went the dagger, till the dagger diſcovered it ſelf: God was fain to be Mardochai, to ſupply his part: though he were wanting, God was not. By whom it is true Ahaſhuerus was delivered: but, You delivered, after a more ſtrange manner (I report me to all.) Now, the more ſtrange the manner, the more the joy ever. Then Mardochai did ſomewhat toward it: this came meerly from God; neither Mardochai, nor any elſe; ſitting in the gate, or out of it; there or any where elſe.

Yet let me add this, that you might be beholden to God (even that way too) He hath fitted you that way alſo. This fifth of Auguſt, without a diſcoverie, the fifth of November with a diſcoverie. So, with Mardochai; and without Mardochai, hath God wrought for You, in diebus his: that we might everie way be bound to him, and that, everie way our joy might be full.

Now, in both, as the hand of God was ſtretched over both Kings to ſave them; So was the ſame hand ſtretched out againſt both thoſe, that ſought their lives, to bring them to evil ends; both which may ever be the ends of ſuch beginnings. There was no wonder in theirs; there, all was done by a Legal courſe, a fair judicial proceeding, they indited, convict and executed by courſe of juſtice. Good Lord, with what eaſe was Ahaſhuerus delivered, even ſitting ſtill! There was no wonder in this, at all. So was it not here: Here was old pulling, and wreſtling, and weapons out, and drawing of blood; and a kind of battel fought dubio Marte, a good while, but at laſt the victory fell on your ſide. And this winning of it, as it were, and ſeeing Your enemies lie dead at Your feet, made the deliverie the more wonderful; and ſo the more welcome; and ſo Your joy the greater. And if one might take joy in the fall of his enemies, the fall of yours was worſe for the manner. For, they died not like Subjects, but as open enemies or rebels: Not as penitent ſinners, but as damned reprobates, loſt not only their lives, but their ſouls too.

Thus, every way, doth this day go beyond thoſe: the King beyond, as a Prince Chriſtian: the danger beyond; for, the extremity nearer. The parties that ſought, beyond, for, the leſs they appeared, the more perilous they were: the deliverie beyond; for, without any Mardochai at all: And their fall beyond; for, ſtrucken down in the place, like rank rebels; and tumbled into hell like reprobates, without ſpace or grace, without fruit or ſign of repentance. And, if thus many waies beyond, allow for everie of theſe, a degree of Joy, and I have that I would.

Of this writing, one ſpecial end was for Joy. A double joy: for either verſe, one. 1 In the former, Rege incolumi gaudendum; Joy for the Kings ſafety. 2 And in the latter, Stratis hoſtibus gaudendum; joy, that his enemies lay where they lay, on the floor.

For the Kings ſafety we to rejoyce; but without a Mardochai. He parts not with God, in ours: it is entire without him. So it is not in the Text: God and Mardochai, there: here, God alone, and Joy in God alone.

Then, for Stratis hoſtibus, in regard of them. Firſt, that they ſped not; then, that they were ſped themſelves: that their anger was vana and ſine viribus; did no hurt: that Gods anger to them for it, was both ſure: paid them home: and ſwift; did it out of hand. That they fell; and fell before him: He ſaw them lie ſlain at his feet: that his eye ſaw his deſire upon his enemies; nay more than his deſire, that he was fain to pray for them, that had not the grace to do it for themſelves.

Pſal. 92. 12.

A little after in this Book, for the ſaving of the Queen from the laying on of Hamans hands, we find, there was great joy and a double feaſt, the fourteenth and fifteenth of Adar. And can we imagine, but there muſt needs be as great (nay, Feſtum magis duplex) for the King here? If for Her a ſtranger: for their own natural Leige much more. Was ſo with them In diebus illis, and with us to be In diebus his.

Chap. 9. 17.

Or rather in die hoc; For (theſe) It was plural, more dayes went to it than one; many days in doing; here, it was diſpatched ſooner. No diebus here; begun, acted, ended all in a day: nay, half a day, between noon and night. And this ſhall be the firſt, that it was not long in doing. Short as it was, yet may I take upon me, there is as great odds between this day, and them, as is between the fifth of Auguſt, (ours) and the fifteenth of Adar, that is, December (theirs:) that is, between a long and a ſhort, a Summers and a Winters day.

There is not in all the Scriptures a book that expreſſeth ſo plentiful joy, for the ſaving of a Prince, as doth this of Eſther: the whole ninth Chapter (in a manner) is ſpent in it. There is gaudium and lætitia, and hilaritas, and convivium, and tripudium, I cannot tell how many times over; and the day

chriſtened

chriſtened by the name of Dies feſtus, a Feſtival day. There is joy in Suſan the City; there is joy in the Villages; there is joy in the hundred twenty ſeven, every Province of them all; joy all over: and all this allowed, nay, a Statute made to keep it. So, a day of joy to all poſterity, and all this Chronicled ſo. A joy in the Chronicles; what would you more?

Hence have we warrant for this day of ours; and for all and every of them, on this day of ours; the ſame joy full out, the ſame that was for that in everie degree, let be for this; and more for this, as this is more (as hath been ſhewed;) as by the ſeaſon of the year, the day is longer, the Sun brighter, the ſky clearer, the weather fairer, in Auguſt than December. As this caſe more famous, Gods might and mercy more marvellous; more fit for a Chronicle, more worthy to be engroſſed in the great roll, ours than theirs.

And in one we ſhall be above them, that we begin our joy in the houſe of God; whereas they in Perſia, had none to begin it in: Here do we begin it, as God would have us begin it, in the Houſe of Prayers, with prayers.

A prayer for Bigthan and Tharez, we cannot (either theſe of the Text, or thoſe af the day:) But; a prayer, that by their examples, both Ruina præcedentium may be admonitio ſequentium, the deſtruction of thoſe that are gone before, may be the inſtruction of all thoſe that ſhall come after. This the firſt part; and if this will not be, the ſecond. So may they ever find that ſo ſeek; If ſeek as they ſought, find as they found,

A prayer for Mardochai, that for his ſo ſitting in the gate, he may ſit in a better place: that ſo manie may follow him in his good example.

A Prayer for the King. But firſt a praiſe (the principal cauſe we come hither for.) Praiſed be God ever, that ſaved in Perſia, Ahaſhuerus from his two; that ſaved in Scotland, your Majeſty from your two: the Saviour of Kings, Maximè fidelium. Then, the prayer; That thoſe dayes, and theſe dayes may never fail him, nor he ever ſee other.

No more Bighthans (good LORD) but Mardochai's for them. That Mardochai may never fail him? but, if he do, that thou wouldſt not (no more than this day thou didſt·) but ever ſave, ever deliver, ever preſerve him, and make them that ſeek his ruine, find their own. Either hang aloft, as theſe in the Text; or lie on the floor, as thoſe of the day.

And even ſo, let the end of this, be the beginning of the other, even of the joy of the whole day. For the day, for it: for this happy event on it, for the King, the Subject of it, To the cauſe of it, and of all our joy, God the Father, by which, and through Chriſt in the unity of the Holy Spirit, be all bleſſing, honour, praiſe, glorie and thanksgiving, this day and all dayes, for ever and ever.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE, AT WINDSORE, On the Fifth of AUGUST, Anno Dom. MDCXXII.

I. SAM. Chap. XXIV.

Ver. 5. And the men of David ſaid unto him: See, the day is come, where-of the LORD ſaid unto thee; Behold, I will deliver thine enemy into thine hand, and thou ſhalt do to him, as it ſhall ſeem good to thee. Then David aroſe, and cut off the lap of Sauls garment privily.

6. And afterward David was touched in his heart, becauſe he had cut off the lap which was on Sauls garment.

7. And he ſaid unto his men, the LORD keep me from doing that thing unto my Maſter the LORDS Anointed, to lay my hand upon him: For, he is the Anointed of the LORD.

8. So David overcame his ſervants with theſe words, and ſuffered them not to riſe againſt Saul. So Saul roſe up out of the Cave, and went away.

ECCE dies veniet, Behold the day is come: So begins the Text: ſo ſay Davids men. And Behold the day is come; ſo may we begin, and as truly ſo ſay of this Day, as ever did they of that. The firſt words agree well: So do the laſt, Abiit Rex viam ſuam, the King roſe up and went his way: ſo ends the Text, and ſo ended this day too. And not only the firſt and laſt words, but the midſt and all fall out as fitly. For indeed, what is the whole Text, but a report of a King, in danger to have been made away, and that cloſely in a cave, and a motion made to that end, and a knife drawen, and Davids men up againſt him and all? Yet (ſee the goodneſſe of GOD!) the King did well enough for all that; and went his way, without any hurt done him.

And, comes not this home to the day? Saul at Engedi, in the cave there, may he not ſeem (as I may ſay) a type of His Majeſtie, at Saint Johnſton, ſhut up (to uſe Sauls words) in the cloſe corner there? In ſtead of a knife, was there not a dagger drawn there; and ſomewhat elſe; and more ſought than a corner of his cloake?

cloake? And, as Davids men roſe here; So, roſe there not a popular tumult there?

And yet, being in that extremity, was he not delivered out of their bloody hands? and did not all end, as the Text ends, The King roſe up and went his way? And this our meeting now, in this publike ſolemne manner, is to no other end, but to rejoyce together in the preſence of GOD, and to render unto Him our anniverſary ſacrifice of praiſe and thanks, that Ecce dies venit, Behold the day is come, wherein he ſcaped ſo fair, and went his way ſo happily.

And, ſhall we not withall, put our incenſe to our ſacrifice (that is) add our prayers to our praiſes; that, as this day there was, ſo ſtill and ever, a way may be made him to eſcape all his dangers?

King Saul (here) in the Text, was the firſt King, that ever the people of God had. In him (the firſt) would God have all ſucceeding Kings to read their deſtinie: that as they are placed high; ſo, their high place is no exemption from danger; a provoking it, rather. Here now, Saul is in danger in the Vale Engedi. Once before had we him in as great a plunge; and that was in the hill Hachila: Abiſhai would fain have had a blow at him; and but one blow. But David came then between with his Ne perdas.

1 Sam. 16. 8.

That did not ſo well fit our turn. It was night then: Saul was in his bed aſleep. That, was not our caſe: this here comes nearer. This fell on the day. Saul was awake: So was His Majeſty. We may ſay Ecce dies, Behold it was day, and that day is now come. Between them both, they make up thus much; that ſleeping or waking; by night, or by day; in Hachila, the high lands, in Engedi, the low Valleyes, out of danger they go not, if the hand of God be not over them, as here over Saul it was.

The Diviſion. Firſt and laſt, we may recapitulate the whole Text into one word. It is all but a Delivery. Ecce tradam in manus, a Delivery into their hands: Ecce abiit, a Delivery out of them. Which two makes the two main parts of the Text. The former, the Delivery into, laſts to the laſt verſe: And, in the end of the laſt, comes the latter, the Delivery out of; the King roſe up out of the Cave, and went his way.

I. Ecce tradam in manus is of two ſorts; 1 Into Davids hands, and 2 into his mens hands. Or thus; Sauls danger here, is double: 1 On the danger of Davids mens motion; 2 the other, of their Commotion (for, riſing they were, and David ſuffered them not to riſe.)

1. In their Motion. 1 What was moved to David by his men: and 2 what David did upon it. That which was moved, was mittere manum, to lay hands on the King. That, he did upon it, was, he went and laid his hands on Sauls mantle, and cut off an end of it, and that was all. This, the fact: then, the cenſure of this fact.

Whèn David had done this, what he thought of it: 1 What he, and 2 what his men. He thought not well of it, he did penance for it, his heart ſmite him for doing but ſo much. His men thought not well of it neither; but ex alio capite they, for not doing more than ſo.

2. What followed of this? The neglect of their motion, turned his men to a Commotion: They were riſing againſt Saul, if they had not been ſtayed. The ſecond danger, this: farre the worſe of the twain: The riſing of Davids men, than the drawing of Davids knife. Thus far the Epitaſis.

II. Then followes the Cataſtroph. For, the iſſue was, Davids men were ſtayed by him, and kept from riſing: Davids victory. And how? by certain words ſpeaking. Thoſe words are in the third verſe: Davids ſtell, I may call them.

And upon all this followed, the King was ſaved, twice ſaved from both dangers (thanks be to God) and away he went, ſafe without any harm. Only, loſt a piece of his mantle: and I would never greater loſſe might come to him.

III. Thus lie the parts in this order; which, when all is done, we muſt crave leave to reflect upon, and review again; to ſhew, that the Ecce of this our Day is farre above the Ecce of that of theirs.

Now, by the ſpecial providence of GOD, it ſo fell out, that all this was not paſſed and done in ſilence. There was arguing the point, reaſoning on both ſides. The whole Text is but a kind of Dialogue between Davids men and him, what was to be done with Saul their enemy, now they had him in the cave; kill him, or let him go? And it fell out well, that this point was thus urged. For, out of this their debate, might thoſe two wretched men this day have learned (if they had had grace) and may all true men and good ſubjects learn, what to do or not to do in like caſe. For, a clear reſolution here is, to be held for ever, taken out of Davids Abſit here, God forbid that ever any ſhould lay his hands on the Lords Anointed. Yea, though he ſhould catch him in a cave (or as good as a cave, as this day he was.)

Nay further, GOD ſo providing, here falls a matter in upon the By (of Sauls mantle) that removes it from the main (Sauls perſon) quite. Sauls perſon, David touched not; went but to his mantle. And even for going but to that, did his heart ſmite him. Which (by à minore ad majus) puts this queſtion paſt all queſtion, as being a protection for the Kings robe: and, if for it, for his perſon much more.

1 And let me ſay two things of this Text to you: One, that as Saul was the firſt King; ſo, this the firſt caſe that ever was, wherein the making away of a King, was put to the queſtion. So, the leading caſe (as they call it) to all the reſt. Reſolved here by David (and we cannot reſolve our ſelves by a better) and reſolved once, reſolved for ever. No more Quere's of it now.

The

The other, that it is the only caſe (this) that ever I read of in Scripture, of dixit Dominus alledged for killing a King; of killing Kings by Divinity. The more worthy it is your attention, the nearer it comes to the late phrenſie of this Age of ours. 2.

And two uſes there be of it, as the chief perſons in it are two. 1 In Saul, to let Kings ſee their danger: 2 In David, to let ſubjects ſee their duty. To let Kings ſee their danger, that they may look up continually to their Deliverer out of evil hands. In David, to let ſubjects ſee their duty, and the extent of their duty, as to themſelves, ſo to others.

Two dangers were like to befall Saul here. From David firſt: His men perſwaded him to diſpatch Saul: perſwaded him, but prevailed not; He did it not: So Saul ſcaped once. Second: when that would not do, they were upon riſing (themſelves) to have done it. David diſſwaded them: diſſwaded them and prevailed; they did it not neither: There he eſcaped twice.

In which two, David is two wayes our example, to learn us, the two duties (I ſpake of.) 1 Would not do it himſelf: 2 would not ſuffer others to do it: Would not be perſwaded by others to it: did diſſwade others from it. I will ſay with our Saviour, Vade tu & fac ſimiliter, Let every good ſubject go and do likewiſe. Neither do it, nor ſuffer it to be done; And he ſhall be according to Davids, who was a man according to Gods own. Luke 10.37.

SAUL was now in the cave. What Davids men would have had him to do to Saul. Even what was good in his eyes (a good mannerly term; but even what pleaſed him.) What is that? What meant they by it? The meaning is, they would have had him lay hands upon Saul. Plain by Davids anſwer: What? lay hands on him? GOD forbid. More plain yet, by Davids report of it to Saul (the eleventh Verſe.) And ſome bad me kill thee. Loe, there ye have it in plain Engliſh. I. The firſt delivery: Ecce tradam in manus.

To make this motion good in his eyes, they uſe here a perillous motive; or rather three in one. 1 Inimicum tuum, the motive of enmity or deadly feud. 2 Ecce dies venit, now is the time come; the motive of opportunity. 3 And de quo dixit Dominus, the motive of GODS Word, of doing it by Divinity.

Inimicum tuum: that, is the ground of all: (a motive well beſeeming them that make it; even fit for a Souldiers mouth:) he is your enemy, he would kill you; what ſhould you do but kill him? ſhould not we kill them that would kill us? This goes current in the Camp, this is bonum in oculis, a good motion in their eyes. 1 Inimicum tuum

Now, if this hold for good, if an enemy be to be ſlain; It is ſure, Saul was Davids enemie: GOD himſelf calls him ſo, Inimicum tuum: they be Gods own words, one that (even as David ſaith himſelf) hunted for his ſoul (Verſe 12.) And, even at this very inſtant had him in chaſe, and was ſo eager on it, as up the Rocks he went after him, among the wild goats (Verſe 3.) and followed him ſo hard, he was fain to take a cave (here,) In which cave, what taking he was in, ye may read in the 57 Pſalm, (made, when he fled into this cave) even at Miſerere mei Deus, miſerere mei: One miſerere would not ſerve him; in a greater agonie of feare. For, if Saul had but known it, David had never gone his way thence, as Saul did his. It is well known, Saul ſought his life. That was not all; there was a further matter than ſo, Will you hear it from Saul himſelf? Look to the 21 verſ. I know (ſaith Saul) thou ſhalt be King after me. Yea, ſhall! then was it inimicum tuum (indeed) in another ſenſe; then was Sauls life, an enemy to Davids riſing. David ſtands in his own light, if he do it not. Do it then, and beſides the aſſurance of Your life, the Crown is Yours. Theſe two laid together, any would wonder, what eyes David had, that this ſeemed not good in his eyes. And, this for inimicum tuum. Pſalm 57.1,

But, many an enemy ſcapes with his life, becauſe we meet not with an Ecce dies, a fit time and place to do it in. Verily, opportunity it ſelf is a ſhrewd motive. The common ſaying is, occaſio facit furem: that which one was farre from, would never have imagined, there will come ſo fair an offer, ſuch a fair ſhoot (as they ſay) as will make a man do that, which but for ſuch an occaſion, he would never once have thought on. We are all to pray to GOD to take from us the opportunity of ſinning: So frail we are, it is no ſooner offered, but we are ready to embrace it (GOD help us.) What ſay they then? Why Ecce here is a time, and here is a cave, as fit a place as can be for ſuch a motion. Such an opportunity, as if you take it not you ſhall not meet with again, all your life long. To have your enemy light into your hands, in a dark cave, where you may diſpatch him, and no body the wiſer who did it, or how it was done. Well then, wiſdom is ſeen in no one thing more, than in taking opportunity. Go to, ſhew your ſelf a wiſe man: you know, what you have to do. 2 Ecce dies venit.

Nay, it is not only Ecce dies, but Ecce tradam; and there, is an Ecce. For, there is much in tradam; he is even delivered, even taken, and put into your hands: I weigh the word tradam. It is one thing to ſay, Your enemy is fallen; another to ſay, He is delivered. Falling is caſuall; Delivery imports a deliberate act of an Agent to do it, to deliver him: So, this is more than chance, more than hap-hazard: It is not cecidit, it is tradam. Ecce tradam.

Again; One thing to ſay deliverd: another, delivered by God (now I weigh the perſon.) Ego tradam, Ego tradam.

it is God that ſpeaks it. One may be delivered, and by man, by ſome falſe traitor (it was not Sauls caſe, this, it was the Kings.) But here God is the deliverer נותן the giver. Take him then as donum Dei. God hath even given you him, and having given Him, would have you take Him, and I hope it will ſeem good in your eyes ſo to do, and not let GOD give you Him for nothing.

3 De quo dixit Dominus.

Nay, yet there is more. (Now, I come to weigh dixit Dominus.) For one may be delivered by God, ſeeing it, and ſaying nothing to it, but ſuffering it: by Gods permiſſion. So are all things. Of many of which (though) God ſaith nothing, ſpeaks never a word: but of this, God ſpake to you before, ſpake to you with His own mouth, and ſpake it with an Ecce; Ecce tradam: gave you warning of it, gave you His word for it, I will deliver him: and is now as good as His word, hath delivered him. See if He have not.

Will ye collect theſe three, 1 Not caſually fallen into your hands, but purpoſely delivered, 2 And delivered not by man, but by God Himſelfe: 3 And by GOD, not quovis modo, at adventure, but plainly propheſying and promiſing He would ſo do. Of this (ſure) God muſt needs be the Author, that He foretels thus, and promiſes before-hand. So have you (here) God made acceſſorie, nay, principall to the murder of a King.

And now are we come indeed to the perillous point of all. This (lo) is it. They would have Saul made away; and for this, they alledge de quo dixit dominus, as if God had beſpoken a ſet day for the doing of it. This, goes to the quick. Inimicum tuum is but a revelation of fleſh and bloud, that; but dixit dominus, that is the will of our heavenly Father. So, not onely lawfull now, but a matter of conſcience, to kill Sauls משיח God hath ſaid it.

Where, firſt, you ſee, it is no new thing, this, to kill Kings by Divinity. This geere is but newly raked up from hell againe. It is but the old devill new come abroad, that had been in the world before. For, ever ſince there have been Kings over Gods people, this hath been abroach; broached firſt in the cave here at Engedi, and dixit Dominus pretented for it (you ſee) in the firſt Kings dayes of all.

Mat. 9. 34. Acts 20. 30.

The griefe is, they were not Sauls, they were Davids men, the better ſide, that alledge this. But Davids men all, are not of Davids minde: Johns diſciples ſometimes are found with the Phariſees; and the Apoſtle ſaith; Of our ſelves, here ſhall ariſe men ſpeaking perverſe things. Therefore never marvaile at it. Goe not after the men: Go after the Maſter David himſelfe.

Jud. 3. 11. 2 Kings 11.

Well yet, I muſt needs ſay for theſe good fellows (here) they go roundlier to the point, than doth Suarez, or any of them have been blundering about this gere of late. They be all triflers to Davids men, here. For upon the matter, all they have been able to ſay, is, it hath been done. King Eglon was killed; ſo was Athalia. Neither of them, a true lawfull Prince (as God would have it) uſurpers both. So nothing to the matter. But, ſay they had been lawfull: yet all this is but

Ioh. 21. 16.

Homo fecit; it is not Deus dixit. Never a dixit Deus comes from them. Nothing but poor Paſce oves: which (ſure) is a full unlikely Text to perſwade a man to become a butcher, and cut his ſheeps throats. One Abſit of Davids here, one Nephrdas, one quis erit innocens, able to daſh twenty ſuch, and all they can ſay, to pieces. Not one of them comes off to the point, as do theſe in the Text, with dixit Dominus, Gods expreſſe word for it.

There is no remedy, we muſt ſtay a little at this, at dixit Dominus. What He ſaith, we may: nay, we muſt do. To His dixit, there is no contradixit, If GOD ſpeak once, let all fleſh keep ſilence.

I will not trouble you with, when God ſpake this, or where. Extant it is not. Yet ſeeing David traverſes it not, denies not but that God ſpake it, we will take it for good, that they truly alledged GOD. For, it is not unlikely, that at ſome time when David was in ſome great diſtreſſe, GOD might ſend to him by the hands of Nathan, or Gad, his Seers, he ſhould take a good heart to him, he ſhould be ſo far from being delivered unto Sauls hands, as the day ſhould come, Saul ſhould be deliverd into his, to do with him what ſeemd good in his eyes.

Well then, take it, God ſaid all this: and all this might God ſay, and yet Saul not touched. Ye ſhall ſee as little force in this Dominus dixit, as in their Homo fecit. Neither of them, to the purpoſe they are brought. You ſhall ſee withall, what it is when Sword-men will be a medling with Dominus dixit, with our profeſſion; what trim conſequences we ſhall have, to make, What ſeems good in Davids eyes, and to murther Saul, to be all one. And withall, that it is good for Kings to be learned, and to be learned in Gods Law. For, had not David been the better Divine, he might well have been overtaken and made believe, there is a way to deſtroy Kings, even by the Word of God.

To ſcan them a little. Dixit Dominus, God ſaid. What ſaid He? The day ſhall come: well, it is come, that GOD would deliver Saul into his hands: well, that is done too. And David ſhould do to him, what? What ſeemed good in his eyes. What is that? To deſtroy Saul? No indeed: Bonum in oculis, will beare no ſuch matter. We might diſpatch all in a word, all is put upon Faciet ei quod bonum eſt in oculis ejus.

Davids eyes, and in his eyes it ſeemd not good. But to touch them ſhortly.

Firſt, Faciet ei here, injoyns nothing, leaves him but to himſelfe: that is all can be made of it: Nay, they deſire no more, but ſo to be left. And when one is ſo left, what then, may he do what he liſt? Suppoſe, he liſt to do what is evil or forbidden? Adam will tell you, No: That conſequence we may pay full dear for. It undid him, and us all. Gods ſo leaving us, gives not any leave to do any thing that evill is; puts but power in our hands, to try how we will uſe it. For, when power is ſo put, Ipſa ratio dictat, even by the rule of reaſon, we are ſo to uſe it, as we take the better, and leave the worſe ever, and reach not our hand to the forbidden tree

When

When God leaves a man to do that which is good in his eyes, he had beſt wipe his eyes, ſee they dazle not. If they doe, that may be bonum in oculis, which is not bonum indeed. They be not all one, theſe two, 1 Bonum in oculis, and 2 Bonum: Take heed of that. That which is evill, may ſeem good to an evill eye. And no man is ſo fond, to think, God would have any evill done.

Not, bonum in oculis: but in oculis tuis.

Therefore He ſaith not; bonum in oculis, and ſtayes there: He adds tuis; in oculis tuis. For, much is, as the party whoſe the eyes are. For, as the party is, ſo is his eye. And the party here, is David: God would not have ſaid this to every one. To David he did, and He knew what He did, and that Saul was ſafe enough for all that. He knew his eye was ſingle and good, that nothing was evil in Gods eyes, would ſeem good in his. He would never have ſaid ſo much to Saul, of David: nor to Davids men, of Saul. Never have ſaid to David, Quod bonum eſt in oculis tuorum: if it had been what ſeemed good in their eyes, Saul had been gone. No, He had not ſo good a conceipt of their eyes: of Davids He had. To him therefore he ſaid it; and he deceived not Gods expectation. Pepercit tibi oculus meus (ſaith he at the 11. Verſe.) All then reſolving in to Davids eyes; it ſeemed good in his eyes, to ſpare Saul. And, this is ſure, they have not Davids eyes in their heads, to whom it ſeemes otherwiſe. For, to do what ſeemed good in his eyes, was, to do Saul no harme. Look to tuus then, that the eies be Davids, and all his well.

In oculis tuis, not tuorum.

Then ſeeing Davids eyes are ſo cleare and ſo good, how were it to be wiſhed, David would ſee with no other eyes but his owne: would ſtill do, what is good in his owne, not in his mens eyes!

So this was their Elench. It ſeemed good in their bloud-ſhotten eyes, to lay hands on Saul; and they ſtrongly imagined, what ſeemed good in their bloud-ſhotten eyes, would have ſeemed ſo, in his too. The ſequele ſhewes, it did not. Why ſtand we any longer then upon it? but leaving the Motion, let us now ſee how it moved him, what he did upon it.

What David did upon this motion.

Some think it moved him, till he came to the very puſh; and then God ſtruck his heart, and his heart ſtruck him, and ſo his minde changed. Others think, that it ſtirred him not a whit (for the blow came after all was done.) Yet, as if it had moved him, he moved upon it. Somewhat to ſatisfie them, he would ſeem to do ſomewhat. So, up he aroſe, and toward Saul he made בלט, as ſoftly and as ſecretly as he could. And when he came at him, cloſe behind him out went his knife, as if he meant to uſe it. (His men, I dare ſay, hoped, to ſome other end.) Stay here. And he that had ſeen David thus, in this wiſe, coming cloſe behinde the Kings back with his knife drawne in his hand, would he not have taken him for Ravilliac? What difference? I promiſe you, this was not bonum in oculis, no very good ſight. And then knowing, Saul was his mortall enemy, and even now at this very inſtant time come forth to ſeek his life, and ſeeing them thus in a blind cave, and David hard at his back with a naked nife, would he not have given Saul for dead, paſt (for ever) abiit viam ſuam.

Well: when all came to all. Firſt, it ſeemed not good in Davids eyes, to uſe ſpear or ſword, but his knife. Why, a knife will doe miſchief enough. 2. Then, to go to wo ke with it, not punctim, but caſim, not with the point, but with the edge only; thruſt not, cut onely. Yet that will hurt too. 3. But cut, what? Neitheir fleſh, not skin, not them: Nay, not his ſhirt or doublet, his mantle onely, and but a piece of it. 4. And, it was no great piece neither, he cut no skirt: It was ſo ſmall it was not miſſed. Sauls ſeHowes ſpied it not, till David came after them, called to them, held it up and ſhewed it them: and then they looked well, and ſaw a piece was gone, but not before, The word כנף, πτερύγιον, ala, ſignifieth a wing: and thoſe (we know) are but additionals, no part of the entire garment: the garment is whole without them. So, it was not in the neither, he cut. His knife he drew, but drew nobloud with it; went not to Saul himſelf, his perſon, but to his mantle; took but an edge of that, and away he goes: and ſo may Saul go his way, for any hurt, David hath done him. And this (lo) is all, came of the motion; and more than this, ſeemed not good in David eyes.

His cenſure of it.

What, and is it but this? This and no more? No more but a ſhred of his mantle, and is that all? All, yea: and too much of that too. For, now it followes, in the ſecond verſe, when David reflected upon what he done, how, this he had done, ſeemed in his eyes. It ſeemed good to them to do but thus much, or rather thus little, and after it was done, it ſeemed not good to him, not this little he had done neither; but it even ſeemed good to him, to repent when he had done it, as little as it was, or as it ſeemeth to us to be. Repent? Yea, that he had done no more. Nay, that he had done thus much, had cut his mantle, had cut at all. That which any would think, was highly to be commended in him, he went no further, you ſhall ſee him do penance for it, as if he had gone too farre, as if he ſhould not have gone ſo far as that.

Will ye ſee David do penance indeed for it? Penance I ſay, in all the parts, the Schoolemen make of it. 1 Contritio cordis, in this verſe: his heart ſmit him for it. 2 Confeſſio oris, in the next; The Lord keep me from doing more, this was too much. 3 Satisfactio operis, in the laſt verſe, in making amends, by not ſuffering his men to riſe, but converting them from ſo ſinfull a purpoſe. And beſides, in leaving behind him ad perpetuam rei memoriam, a monument of all this, a Pſalm, מכתם that is, a golden Pſalme (ſo he calls it) the 57. Pſalme, made as the inſcription ſhewes, at this his being in the cave. Of it, and there, both in word and deed: of ſaying deſtroy him not; which is the title of the Pſalme. Though yet get Saul in a cave, yet deſtroy him not.

Other Pſalmes there be of the ſame title; but the 57, that is the firſt of them all, purpoſely ſet upon this occaſion, and at this time and place.

His contrition, Percuſſit cor ſuum.

For this Contrition. It is ſaid, after he had done it, his heart ſmit him, and told him why? Even but for making a hole in Sauls mantle. It is ſtrange, that his heart, that (one would think) ſhould have ſprung for joy, that he did no more but that; falls to ſtrike and to beat him for doing but that: in ſtead of exultation, that he had done well, done the King no harm; a palpitation, a pang or paſſion of fear takes him, leſt he had done more than he could well anſwer. And, it is the more ſtrange, the great valiant David, one of the nine worthies, whom neither the Bear daunted nor the Lion; who without all fear encountred the Giant great Goliah, and ſmit him down, whoſe heart ſerved him, fainted not then: here, for doing I wot not what, a ſhred of Sauls mantle, it ſerves him not; but beats and throbs, as, in fear, it is uſual for the heart to do.

Bonarum mentium eſt (ſaith Gregory) Good minds will ſometimes fear and acknowledge a fault, where none is: Peradventure David doth ſo; is more ſcrupulous than needs. Nay indeed. For, to do but this, to the garment of any private man, ſuch as our ſelves, to cut or to marre it, is a treſpaſs (I take it) and will bear an action. And if ſo; then muſt there needs be a higher, a more heinous offence to offer it, to any of the Kings robes; to mangle or deface them in any ſort. The material part of it, cannot (ſure) be juſtified. Only, the formal part (as in Schooles we ſpeak) non tam quid, quam quo animo, that may in ſome ſort ſeem to qualifie his act, and help to excuſe him; that he did it, with no other mind, nor to no other end, but by the little ſhread taken off, to make it appear, he did not ſo much as he could have done, if his mind had been ſo bad to Saul, as Doeg and ſuch as he, would fain make him believe: teſte vel ſegmento hoc, which he gave in, by way of evidence (Verſe 12.) When I cut off this lap, I kill'd thee not; as going a little further, I might have done: might have done, but did not. Might have gone otherwiſe to work: with a ſword and not a knife; with the point, and not the edge; thruſt, and not cut: or, if cut, taken away a collop of his fleſh, as well as a corner of his cloake. Yet for all this though his heart were privie to no evil intent, it ſmit him though. For, in caſes touching the King ſo near, it is not enough to ſay, I meant not that, but this. So, a fault it was; and as for a fault, his heart ſmit him.

There is no ſmiting, but for a fault. Specially, not of the heart. For, the heart ſtrikes not us, but it is it ſelf ſtricken firſt. And if you ask, who ſtrikes it? that doth God: for this (of the heart) is nothing elſe, but the reverberation of Gods ſtroke. His knock at our hearts, to fore-think us of what we have done amiſs, when we have cut where we ſhould not.

Eccl. 15.57. And it is no light fault, the heart ſuffers for. The heart is the chief part, and the blow of it is the greateſt blow. Give me (ſaith the Wiſeman) πᾶσαν πληγὴν, any ſtripe, any griefe, rather than the griefe of the heart. Cardiaca paſſio is the worſt paſſion of all. Therefore, as a fault, ſo no light fault it was.

2 Sam. 24.10. We may pattern it with the numbring of the people, after. Then, it ſmite him too; and then he cryed, Peccavi valdè: and the ſame reaſon is of both, as miſgiving him in both, he had in both done far otherwiſe than he ſhould. But this (here) was the firſt blow, and the firſt diſcipline given him, as if he had gone too near Saul; as if Nolite tangere did reach further than the perſon, even,

Pſalm 105.15. to the Robes royal.

Luke 18.15. And herein is his contrition. For, we uſe to ſtrike our breſts with the Publican, becauſe we cannot come at our heart to ſtrike it, for not ſtriking us, when we make a fault. But, when the heart

2 King. 5.38. needs not be ſtricken for it, when it ſtrikes us firſt, when we feel plagam cordis (as Solomon calls it, in expreſs words) upon making a fault; that our heart corrects us, gives us diſcipline for it; then is our penance begun, then is our Contrition in a good way.

Now good Lord, if but for a ſlit in Sauls cloake, his heart went and came thus: how would it have taken on, how contrite would it have been, if his hand had happened to ſwerve a little, and done him any hurt! How many blowes then, what ſharp penance for that!

Will ye now lay theſe together. How ſcrupulous, how full of fear David was, good men were, in that world: Not his mantle or cloake; not an edge of it. And how deſperately audacious, how paſt all fear ſome are grown in this: Not cut (now) but thruſt: or, if cut, cut thorow cloak, coat, skin and all. And, their heart never ſmites them for it. Nay, there be, whoſe hearts would have ſtrucken them, they had ſtrucken no deeper: as did his, that he had hit the tooth, and miſſed the throat: and that, if the knife had been in their hands, would have cut his skirts ſo cloſe, the blood ſhould have run down the reines of his back.

To ſuch; David (in effect) ſaith thus: It was a leſſe matter far that I did, than laying hands on his mantle: If you will be ruled by me, meddle not ſo much as with laying hands on his mantle: if you had felt ſuch a blow at your heart, as I did at mine, you would never offer. What? not mittere manum in illum? nay, not in pallium illius. Never talk of his perſon: ſo far from that, as not to the very corner, but of his cloke.

And this is the remove I told you of at firſt. Thus did GOD ſuffer this à minore ad majus to fall out in this firſt attempt upon a King, that we might inferre thereof a further matter, and yet no other than our SAVIOUR CHRIST's own inference. May not a man put a knife in Sauls rayment? by this blow of the heart (here) it ſeems he may not: may he not? and is not

Mat. 6.25. the body more worth than the rayment, O ye of little faith?

Alway, this we may count of, and ſo conclude this point: that, he whoſe heart did thus ſmite him for doing this, he would not do that, his heart ſmit him for, if it were to do again. Not go thus

thus farre; ſince he felt it at his heart, his going but thus farre; though nothing ſo farre, as his men would have had him. And ſo much for percuſſio cordis, Davids contrition.

All this while we go but upon collection; feel but by his pulſe, how his heart beateth. Will ye have an ore tenus, a full and flat confeſſion from him, hear him diſtinctly ſpeak his mind to this very point, of laying hands on Saul; and give you the true reaſon, why he did it not; why, neither they, nor any ſhould ever do it? That followes now in the third verſe. Verſ. 7. 2. Davids confeſſion.

But firſt, let me tell you, this cut of Davids was not well taken, of either ſide. David (we ſee) thought not well of it: No more did his men. He, that he had done ſo much: They, that he had done no more. Evidently to be gathered, that his men when they ſaw he had no more of their motion than ſo, that he came back with his knife in one hand, and a ſnip of Sauls mantle in the others, and his knife had no blood on it; and that he had done as much as he would do, and no more was to be looked for at his hands (for, he looked like one heart-ſtricken, that if it had been now to do, would not have done that, neither:) they fell into a rage, a mutinie, a plain riſing; as reſolved, if he would not, they would: if it were not good in his eyes, in theirs it was. It was not an end of a mantle ſhould ſerve their turn; they would make him ſure for ever going his way: as knowing, if he went away, he would prove worſe than ever, as (indeed) ſo he did. So, when David was down, his men were up. What Davids men thought of it.

Here now, is there a ſecond danger towards Saul, from Davids men, a multitude ready to riſe and run upon him. Plain: for, it is ſaid in the next verſe expreſly, David ſuffered them not to riſe. Which could not be ſaid properly, unleſſe they were on riſing. But, an inſurrection there was toward, and at Saul they would have been, had not David interpoſed, and oppoſed himſelf, with theſe words which now follow, and with thoſe words overcome them, and ſtayed them, that they did not riſe. 2. Sauls ſecond danger: Davids mens commotion.

So that, the words we now come to, ſerve for two purpoſes; Not ſo much for an Apologie for himſelf, that he did it not (though, that they do too:) as for a diſſwaſive, or retentive to them; and in them, to us, and to all, that none ſhould ever attempt it. You ſaw even now, how evil his heart brooked it: you ſhall hear (now) his mouth utterly renounce it, ever to hold that for good, that ſeemed good in their eyes. Davids diſſwaſive to them.

Firſt, a flat denial it is. But, that is not ſo much: the manner of it, is all. It is not ſoberly and coldly. No, I will not do this thing. No: but it is with very much vehemency, as the manner of men is, when they ſpeak in great paſſion. If ye mark it, it is with ſhort turnes: GOD forbid: What, do this? To my liege Lord? To GOD'S anointed? lay my hands on him, and he GOD'S anointed? A pawſe, at every word, as if he were half out of breath, as if his heart did beat ſtill. Weigh them a little: חלילה לי. There is not, in the Hebrew; there is not in any Tongue, ſo earneſt, ſo paſſionate an abnegation, abjuration, abrenunciation, as it: It was the word they uſed when they rent their cloathes at blaſphemy. We turn it, as our tongue will bear, as the poverty of it will ſuffer us. To turn it to the quick, there is more in it, than can in any one phraſe be expreſſed. So, not being able to do it in one, the Interpreters have aſſaid to do it in more than one, Every one, as their own Idiome will beſt bear. The Lord keep me from doing this thing (ſaith ours.) So, it is of the nature of a prayer againſt it. Μηδαμῶς, Out upon it, Away with it, By no meanes; Or Μὴ γένοιτο (ſaith the Greek:) never let me, let any, never let it be done. So, it is an utter deteſtation. Abſit mihi à Domino (ſaith the Latine) Never let me come where God hath to do, Accurſed be I of God, all evil come to me, if ever I do as you would have me. So, it is a bitter execration. It bears all. Under one, it is both a hearty deprecation or prayer againſt it, a deep deteſtation, and a fearfull execration, if ever he be brought to do it, to lay hands on Saul. Theſe three will amount to an oath of Allegiance at leaſt.

You will ſay, here is paſſion indeed; but it is reaſon, and not paſſion, muſt carry things when all is done. Nay, here is reaſon too, and reaſon upon reaſon, couched in theſe words, why not to do it. Domino meo, firſt; To his liege Lord, or Soveraigne: Not to him. Then, if that will not hold, Chriſto Domini, to the Lords anointed, not to him: That will. For, two he alledges; Domino, and Chriſto Domini; The firſt is from the earth, earthly; Domino meo, his earthly Lord. The ſecond, Chriſto Domini; Dimini, is the Lord from heaven. The firſt he ſtands not on: this ſecond, that he ſtands on, that, he iterates once and again, ſets up his reſt upon that: as indeed, when we have ſtudied all that ever we can, we ſhall never be able, to find a more forcible. It can never be anſwered, if we care either for heaven or earth, Chriſtus or Dominus, Chriſt or God; any thing at all. It cannot be; the Lord of heaven ſhould ever endure (where his hand hath been, to anoint) any hand ſhould be, to violate, to do any violence to that party. Do but ſee how he utters it: Lay hands on him? and he GOD'S anointed? and ſo breaks off, as if he held it for a foul indignity, for a groſſe abſurdity in reaſon, once to queſtion it. So, for laying hands but on his mantle, Davids heart checked him: But, for laying hands on his perſon, that is paſt cor pœnitentis, It is vox clamantis, that, μὴ γένοιτο, Abſit; farre be it from me; never that, never. The reaſon of it. 1 Domino meo. 2 Chriſto Domini.

Will ye now obſerve how, in this ſpeech, he returns upon them and their three motives? God forbid (ſaith he) to that, for which they alledged dixit Dominus. To their GOD ſaid, he ſayes, GOD forbid: anſwers Dominus dixit with Dominus interdixit. Of which God ſaid, No, no,

God

God forbid, and that חלילה לי, forbid with a curse. And what God did then forbid, he doth forbid ſtill; what, to him he did forbid, he doth to us (to every good body, that cares either for his bidding or forbidding it.) They that lay their hands care for neither. Do that, which (as we uſe to ſay) is againſt all Gods forbode.

Then, for inimicum tuum, he replies to that with Chriſtum Domini: oppoſing, as his GOD forbid, to Dominus dixit; ſo, the LORD's Anointed, to his enemy, to weigh down that. And ſo it doth: there is, there will ever be more vertue in Chriſtum Domini, to keep him alive, than in any inimicum tuum, any enmity in the world, to deſtroy him.

Laſt, Where they ſay, Ecce tradam in manus, He is now even put into your hands, but not mittere manum (ſaith he) not to lay any hands on him. So, that for all Dominus dixit, or inimicum tuum, or Ecce tradam in manus, David, is ſtill where he was, anſwers with reaſon, every part of their reaſon; God forbid, for any of them, or for all them, Saul ſhould have any harm, but go his way quietly for him. And this for his Confeſſion.

3. Davids ſatisfaction.

But, you will remember I told you, all this was ſpoken not ſo much for Davids defence, why he did it not; as to let them ſee a good ground, why they ſhould not do it; to keep them from riſing. For, riſing they were, Riſing (ſay the LXX.) σφαξῶσι αὐτὸν, to have ſlain Saul. They ſtarting up (as it were) in a kind of indignity, that David had thus ſerved them, to do that themſelves, which they hoped he would have done, but did not; for, done it ſhould be, if not by him, by them; that was reſolved.

Sure, had David had any edge to Sauls making away, here now was another, a ſecond, a fair opportunity offered it ſelf: as plauſible a pretence as he could have wiſhed, to have let Saul been taken away in a military tumult, a mutiny of Souldiers. As for David, he had refuſed it, he had good witneſſe of it: if they roſe rudely and ran upon him, what could he do withall? it was their fault, not his; he had no hand in it. But, in all this, he ſhewed himſelf a moſt loyal Subject, in thus putting himſelf between Saul and them; in taking paines, and even ſtriving till he had appeaſed them. Which ſheweth plainly, his heart was upright in all this buſineſſe, in ſaving the Kings life now ſecundò. Elſe, what he liſted not to do himſelf, he might have let them do.

So then: do it he will not; nor ſuffer it to be done, neither: neither per ſe, nor per alium, by himſelf, or any other, thought it not enough to ſay, I will have no hand in it; but neither his own, nor any mans hand elſe, if he can ſtay it. Not only Abſit a me, but Abſit a meis: firſt and laſt, Abſit (ſaith David) to both. Not, non faciam only, let not me do it: but μὴ γένοιτο ne fiat, let not any, let not it be done. And what? not only not mittere manum, but mittere de manu or de manibus (rather) ſend him out of their hands, ſend him away ſafe. To this ſecond end, were theſe words ſpoken by him, and (as the Text is) directed to his men; to quiet them, and not only to clear himſelf. Now to Davids victory.

II.
The ſecond delivery.
Ecce abiit.

Et vicit verbo hoc, and he even overcame them with theſe words, ſaith the Text. Here, is Davids victory. But, if he overcame them, then was there a ſtriſe. So he even ſtrove to ſave Saul. And if he ſuffered them not to riſe, then were they buſtling up at leaſt, and ready to have riſen.

The Text-word in the Hebrew, is full of force: שמע, it is to cleave properly, or to rive aſunder. So, either they were cluſtring (as the manner is in mutinies, to run together on an heap) and he made them ſhead and ſever themſelves, and return to their places again. Or ye may refer it to their hearts, that with theſe words were even ſmitten or cleft quite, and broken of their purpoſe, for proceeding any further in ſo bloody an enterprize. Their motion did not ſo much as enter into him; his, did in them: entred into them, and as his heart ſmit him; ſo, he ſmit theirs; ſmit them, and even cleft them: made them leave, and let go their reſolution quite, and let Saul go.

The LXX. ſay, ἔπεισε, that is, he perſwaded them with theſe words: (the beſt overcoming ever, by words, by perſwaſion.) Overcame them (our Text turns it;) and ſo David had here a victory: Nay, a double Victory: 1 Over himſelf, one: and that is a great one: Great victours have failed of it. 2 Over his men, another: He kept them too. And ſo, by theſe two, ſaved the King twice. And many Victories he had; but of them all, none like this: this is the greateſt. For in thoſe other, he but ſlew his enemies; but in this here, without a drop of blood ſhed, he ſaved his Princes life. And now, this victory obtained, David and his men are agreed; and they are ſatisfied, not to riſe, but ſit ſtill, and let Saul riſe quietly, and go his way. By which, ſome amends was made him for the piece of his mantle. This, for Davids ſatisfaction, and for his Victory both in one. For, this Victory was (in a ſort) his ſatisfaction, and ſerved for it.

And now we have ſet the King ſafe, that he may go when pleaſes him, would I beg a little leave to return to Davids words; to his ſpell (if I may ſo call it) to this cleaving word שמע: that David did not only ſmite, but even cleave his mens hearts. With what axe did he this? (for, it is the act of an axe properly.) Even with theſe words? (they were Davids axe:) Shall we do this? Shall we ſo? lay hands on him? and be GOD'S Anointed? and the edge of his axe were Chap. 26. 9. theſe two: Chriſtus Domini; they did the feat; all the force was in them. And (indeed) of
11. great force they ſeemed to David, and were of great uſe with him, came from him oft. To his
16. Companies, here. To Abiſhai (a Chapter after.) To the Amalekite (the next Book after, I.
2 Sam. 1. 14. Chap.) Twice, here: Thrice, to Abiſhai: Twice, to the Amalekite. Seven times in all. And,
16. ſtill, nothing but Chriſtus Domini; as if they had been a kind of a Spell, to charme any from riſing, to any ſuch end.

And (ſure) a marvellous energie there ſeems to have been in theſe words. Davids men (here)

were

were riſing: theſe words kept them down; they roſe not. Abiſhai after, he was even ſtriking: they ſtaid his hands, he ſtruck not. David himſelf, he was but thinking a thought that way, they ſmit his heart, made it to ake, made him give over.

Now, when I fall to conſider what vertue theſe words had in thoſe times, to hold mens feet from riſing; their hands from ſtriking; yea, their very heart from thinking any ſuch thought; O I am forced to wonder, they ſhould not have in our times the force they then had. David could not overcome ſome men now: his men would riſe, do what he could: feet, hands, and heart, flie looſe now, theſe words notwithſtanding. They have not the power to break men, men have rather the power to break them.

Davids men were brave ſouldiers; Abiſhai one of his three Worthies: himſelf more worthy than they all. Power they had, to ſtay theſe ſo many men of armes: and have not now the power to make a ſilly Frier hold his hands. What is become of their vertue now? Of the cleaving force they then had? It ſhould ſeem, Davids men were othergates men than many (I will not ſay, of our Souldiers, but) of our Ieſuites and Friers, are of late: had magis ſubacta pectora, breaſts of a better mould; had at times, been brought by David to know what GOD was, what it was to be Gods anointed, how precious their bloud was in His ſight, how no man could lift up his hand againſt them, and be innocent. So they ſoon took an impreſſion of this his Abſit, ſo paſſionately, ſo pithily(withall)delivered by him. 2 Sam. 23. 18. Pſal. 116. 15. Chap. 26. 9.

Mens breaſts are now made of a tougher metal, the words meet with harder hearts in the Cloyſter (now) than here they did in the Camp. Some mens hearts (now) leave not ſtriking them, till they have ſtricken Saul to the heart. Turne Davids abſit mihi a Domino, into Adſit mihi a Domino facere rem hanc: turne his execration into a prayer, nay, into many prayers, roſaries, and maſſes, for Gods aſſiſtance, to an act, which his very ſoul abhorreth. And this is the reaſon. The words are not rebated; they have not loſt their edge: but, men have inſtead of hearts now, flint-ſtones: Elſe the words being the ſame, the ſame effect would ſtill follow, if the hearts alſo were the ſame.

For the ſame effect doth ſtill follow, in all whoſe hearts God hath touched, on whom the Spirit of God is come. For, where the Spirit of God is, there the Word of God will work: and where it works not, we may ſafely ſay, there is no ſpirit to work on.

To try then, on whom the Spirit of God is come, there comes to my minde a pregnant place (it is the 12. of 1. Chron.) full to this point, and it will even bring us home to our owne Text againe. Amaſa there, when the queſtion was asked, whom they would take part with, he and his: cryed, Thine are we O David, and on thy ſide thou ſon of Iſhai. And it is there in expreſſe termes affirmed, that the Spirit of God came upon him, that made him thus to cry. If then the ſame Spirit of God be upon us, that was upon him, it will make us take up the ſame words, Thine are we, and on thy ſide O David: Thou haſt a Teſtimony in holy Writ, to have been a man according to Gods owne heart: what was in Gods heart, was in thine; then are we to think, ſay, and do, as thou diddeſt, and ſo the Spirit of God is upon us indeed. 1 Chro. 12. 18. 1 Sam. 13. 14.

Will ye then be as David with him, on his ſide? If Gods Spirit be upon us, we will: now come we to our Text. For, here is in this our Text, a vive anatomy, of David in each part: his eye, his hand, his heart, his mouth and all.

1 His eye, full of compaſſion to Saul his Soveraigne. It was not good in his eyes, to do him any hurt; good to ſpare him. Pepercit tibi oculus meus, (11 Verſe) There is Davids eye.

2 His hand not able to ſtirre, not mittere manum in Chriſtum Domini, to lay any hands on him. O ne ſit manus mea ſuper te, he twice cries (13, 14.) Let not my hand be upon thee, There is Davids hand.

3 His heart ſmote him (we ſee) for putting but his knife into the edge of Sauls mantle. There is Davids heart.

4 His mouth: from that we heare vox clamantis, Abſit mihi a Domino, with great vehemency of paſſion. There is Davids mouth.

5 So ſays David: and will ye hear how he ſings? Heare it upon is Harpe? how his heart and harp agree: heare him ſay it and ſing it both? Ye may: For, to keep for ever this day in memorie, he made a Pſalm of Sauls being in the cave here, of his ſcaping out of it: And gives it this title, deſtroy not; no not in the cave: deſtroy not. By this meanes to ſing into mens minds; their duty in this point. And not into theirs alone, but into the hearts and mindes; of all poſterity; not to give their wayes to deſtroy Kings: No, though they have them in a cave, as theſe had Saul. Even there, to ſing deſtroy him not. Ne perdas in the cave is worth all.

So have you David at full: if any be of his ſide, thus to ſee, and ſay, and ſing, and think, and do, ——Sic ille oculos, ſic ora ferebat. If you would know, what his heart believeth touching this point, percuſſit eum cor; that, gave him a ſhrewed check, for but a ſhred taken off Sauls cloake: he believes, he did not well in it. If what his mouth confeſſeth, Abſit mihi facerem rem hanc, Abſit, ſaith his mouth; ne ſit, ſaith his hand; Ne fiat, ſaith his heart, ne pardas, ſaith his harpe. All keep time, all ſound one way; this way all.

It ſeemed not good in his eyes to do it: that, is the Text: Nor, to his hand, let not that be upon him: Nor to his mouth, he ſpit it out with an Abſit. Nor to his heart; leaſt of all to that, that for a leſſe matter, but for drawing his knife, though without minde of drawing a drop of blood, fell on beating, and caſt him into a cardiac paſſion. And any, who thinking but a thought that way, if his heart ſmite not him, let him ſmite it hardly. Elſe he is not according to Davids; and ſo, not to Gods heart.

III. The Ecce of this our day. Psal. 48. 8.

Thus have our eares heard of a King delivered in the Text. And the like; may our eyes see, of a King delivered on this day. Sicut audivimus, sic & vidimus, is the Psalme: but Plus vidimus quam audivimus, may it truly be said of this day of ours. I report me to you, if it may not: if there be not a greater Ecce; nay many greater Ecces on this day, than on that.

Many wayes (I know the ballance is even, Kings both in danger, and danger of Ecce tradam, both. Both, in a cave (for, all caves are not under ground; some above stairs.) And of a knife or worser than a knife, both. And of a tumultuous rising both: and yet both preserved from both. Thus far, even. But then, in other points, they are not: No, no nor even in these. For, weigh them well, and Saul will be found (as Belthazar was,) Tekel minus habens: too light in the ballance. And this of ours to over-weigh, to weigh him and all his downe, many wayes. Dan. 5. 27.

To reflect a little on this. I have said a great deale; I have said nothing, if nothing be said of this. It is the life of all. If, of the twaine, the Ecce dies of this day, be the greater, if more Ecces upon it: the more of them, the more beholds, the more beholden are we to God: the more marvellous His mercies have been to us. the more plentious our thanks be to Him for them.

The Ecce dies, is as the Ecce diei. Ever, the more remarkable the day, the more the things are so, that happen upon it. The Ecce diei is of two sorts: 1 Ecce tradam, 2 Ecce abiit Rex. Tradam, the deliverie into the danger: Abiit, the delivery from it.

And ever this we hold, the worse the tradam (that is, the danger;) the better the Abiit, the escaping from it: and the better it, the more is our joy: and the more our joy is, the more our thanks should ever be, Jehovæ liberatori. And, O that such an Ecce might be on our thanks, as there is on the day, as it and the Ecce's of it do well deserve at our hands.

1 To shew them, the Tradam is worse; I begin with the Tradent or Traditor. Ecce Tradam, Behold, I will deliver him; it is God that saith this: this was Gods doing, Sauls deliverie into: Here is no treachery in the Text. In to the cave he came of his on accord; was casually found there, not giulefully drawne thither. So, was it not to day; but the King trained thither most treacherously. Ecce; Behold then, it is far worse, when wretched men by wicked alluring meanes, shall toule one meaning no harme at all, into a secret corner, as evill as Sauls cave every whit; and there set on him. Worse, I say, for here the devill betrayes, God delivers not. Suffers, I grant; but is not agent in it. God never co-operates with treason. So then, no day (this) de quo dixit Dominus; rather de quo dixit diabolus, a day (in respect of them and their treacherie) of the devils own bespeaking. This then the first ods, that a Domino factum est illud, a diabolo factum est hoc: that of Gods; this of the devils owne tradam: and so the tradtior worse (Iam sure) with an Ecce.

And, who was delivered, Inimicum tuum, an enemy in the Text. Some reason; in that. Saul was so indeed, Davids enemie. You were not theirs: they were yours, without a cause. Nay, cause to the contrary: Nay, causes more than one. And, in that regard worse. Worse, to deliver an innocent than a deadly enemie.

And delivered, whither? The Text is, into a cave. Where Saul (indeed) saith he was shut up: but to say truth simply he was not so: the caves mouth was open, he might have come forth, his men might come to him at his call. But, with us, in our cave, the King was secundum literam in the literall sense, shut up indeed. Many locks and doores fast upon him, no going out for him, no coming in for others. The worse his case. Nay, a worse could not be. So doth the Holy Ghost describe the hardest case of all by these three: 1 Conclusus, 2 derelictus, 3 & non erit auxiliator. All three, here: shut up, quite left, none to help. In farre worse taking, than ever was Saul in the cave. 1 Reg. 14. 26.

There is no hurt in a cave, if there be no hurtfull thing in it: But David saith in the Psalm, his was; and sure it is, Your soul was there among lions. The Text is, Tradam in manus tuas; Tradam in manus; I aske, into whose hands? for in danger, it is ever good lighting into good hands. Into what hands light You? No comparison, there. Saul light into Davids hands: His in manus tuas, where Davids, and Davids were gentle hands. His heart smit him, for doing but so much, as you have heard. If their heart smit them this day; it was not for doing so much, but for doing no more. David was touched with his duty to his Soveraigne, stricken with the Majestie of Christus Domini: These, they trode under foot, dutie, and Majesty, and Christus and Dominus, and all. Nothing like David, quite contrary, worse with an Ecce. Psal. 57. 4.

Nay, not like Davids men. For first, in the Text, here is a dispute between them and David, and the parties divided. Saul the more likely to scape: as he did. Where the enemy is divided the danger the lesse. But to day, in the Kings, no debate at all. It was conclusum in causa, resolved on both sides, long before, what to do with him; if ever they got him. No way but one then.

Againe, Davids men (however evill minded at first, yet) after relented were overcome. These of the day, of far another Spirit; their malice invincible. Davids men overcoming was with words: Here, it came to blowes and to gripes, and all would not serve. Davids men, they were overcome willingly and did yield: These were overcome too (thanks be to God) but it was maugre their wills, they never yielded till they both lay dead on the floore. The more the parties, the more their hands such, the more your perill: the more it, the more the faire grace of God, you escaped such parties hands.

Now

Now to & facies illi; what was done. At Saul there was a Knife drawn, or rather not at Saul, but, at his mantle. A dagger, not at your mantle, but at You. Between theſe two, a dagger and a knife, there is ſome odds: but certainly between a daggers point, and a knives edge, there is. And, this was your caſe.

And what to do with it? (that ſets it further yet.) To do nothing to Saul, and, no great thing, to his mantle: left a piece of that behind. His dagger, with far another mind, and at far another mark, than Davids knife. More was ſought here. You to loſe more than ſo. What talk we of a piece? I would a cloake, I would a whole wardrobe would have ſerved the turn, would have ſatisfied them, or excuſed you. No cloake-matter, here. Your beſt blood was ſought; Your breaſt aymed at; and not the edge, but the point bent, and too near You.

And, to be ſhort, for the laſt point, Bonum in oculis. No more than a ſhred, ſeemed good in his eyes; no leſſe than your life, ſeemed good in theirs.

Thus every way from point to point, the Ecce ſtill greater, in Tradam, the deliverie too; In Ecce abiit, in the delivery from, how holds it there?

In his extremity, Saul found one yet to cry, Abſit, to deliver him. Never an Abſit here. Never an one? Yes: one there was, and that a ſtrong one. When that wretched creature, that was ſet to do the fact, in a ſort hindred it for once. But, ſo faint an one it was, as that would not ſerve, as Davids did Saul. God was fain to ſtep into Davids room: And when there was never a tongue on earth to ſay it, to ſay it from Heaven, thence to give the true μὴ γένοιτο, Ne fiat, I would not have it done, From heaven He ſent you help; not by the Caves mouth, but miraculouſly another way; by them that knew not, whither they went, but unwittingly were led by God to the place of your danger.

Let me ſee: at the moſt, there were but two attempts againſt Saul. So, he ſcaped but twice. Two and two againſt you. Twice and twice eſcaped your Majeſtie, four times in all; four diſtinct dangers, and as many preſervations. 1. That of him that ſtood ready armed. 2. That of the dagger at the firſt: 3. That of the ſword: Nay (more than one) Ecce duo gladii, of the ſecond Brother. 4. And that of the popular tumult worſt of all. Theſe were but upon riſing, in the Text; they roſe not: They, were not upon riſing, but were riſen up indeed. So, two Ecces more in yours.

And of all this perill, Saul had no ſenſe at all. Awake he was, but he might even as well have been aſleep. Of all that was ſaid, he heard not a word: of all that was done, he perceived nothing; had an eaſie eſcape, he. So was it not with your Majeſtie. You heard, and ſaw all, and felt ſomewhat of that, was ſaid, and done; eſcaped the perill, but not the fright and fear, oftentimes worſe than the perill it ſelf.

Upon the matter, in Sauls, ſomewhat was offered to be done, but nothing acted: No doing. Here there was doing and ſuffering both.

In Saul it never came to manum mittere, not on his perſon: hands were laid on his cloak; his perſon that not touched. Yours was, hands were laid, blood was drawn: the marks of your jaw, the hurt on your hand remained to be ſeen a good time after. So, Sauls comes not home, falls ſhort in every point. More Ecces in yours; Your day, Your danger, Your delivery: the more of them, the more is God ſtill to be magnified by you, and by us all.

All fell out well in the end though, with both. It was meant, you ſhould neither have riſen, Saul, nor You. You both roſe. And either of you went viam ſuam; viam, not eorum, but ſuam, went not the way, they would have ſent you, the wrong way; but viam ſuam, your own, the right way, the way of ſafety and peace. And thus ended Sauls danger, and thus Yours: thus the Text, and thus the day.

Nay, yours ended not ſo. The goodneſſe of God ſtayed not there. Yours had a plus ultra, another, a further, a greater Ecce yet, beyond that of Saul. There, as Saul went his way, ſo did his enemies their way to: he ſcaped them, and they him. Non ſic impii, non ſic: It was not ſo with Yours. You ſcaped them, they ſcaped not you: Quia ecce inimici tui Domine, Ecce inimici tui. For, Lo thine enemies, O Lord, lo thine enemies ſhall periſh (and ſo they did;) and all the workers of wickedneſſe ſhall be deſtroyed (and ſo they were:) Miſit manum in manum mittentes, He ſtretched his hands againſt them that ſtretched theirs againſt You. And becauſe their hearts ſmit not them in this ſo foul an attempt, they were ſmitten to the hearts, the ſword went through both their hearts. The very place they had deſigned for yours, became to them the place of their periſhing: periſhing here, and periſhing eternally. The day of which they ſaid, Now is the day come, it came indeed; but came, and proved a diſmall day to them: the rubricke of it written in their own blood, with an Ecce; the laſt Ecce of all, Behold our fearfull end, and let every one fear to do the like.

Pſalm 1. 4.
Pſalm 92. 10.

They ſaid not Abſit nobis à Domino: God therefore ſaid Abſit Dominus a vobis. And ſo He is; He, from them, and they from Him, as farre as the bottom of the nethermoſt hell, is from the top of the higheſt Heaven.

And ever the ſame hand of God be ſo layd on them, that ſhall offer to lay hands on Gods Anointed. So may they all ſhut their eyes, as many as it ſhall ſeem good in their eyes, to do the like. So, may their hearts be ſmitten, that ever hatch in their hearts any thought that way tending: And the faithfull mercies of David be upon them, whoſe eye and hand, heart and tongue, ſhall ſee, and ſay, and think, and do, as he did. And let the King live, live yet many yeares, to ſee the renewing of this bleſſed Day, and to refreſh the memory of Gods mercies, upon it, ſhewed him; and in him, ſhewed us all.

And now to return to the beginning. We may (I truſt) now ſay, Ecce dies venit; Behold the day is come, with an higher accent. A day, in regard of the delivery into their hands, de quo dixit diabolus: but in regard of the delivery from them, de quo dixit Dominus, which God did beſpeak. Beſpeak, but in a better ſenſe: not thus; in quo tradam in manus: but rather in quo eripiam de manibus: not deliver you into, but to deliver you out of their hands. And yet, it is dies in quo tradam too: but the edge turned toward them. Not, in quo tradam te illis; but in quo tradam illos tibi: not deliver you into your enemies: but deliver your enemies into your hands. The beginning was, they made full account, You had been given over into theirs; and that the good ſhould have been in their eyes. The end, as is happily proved, they were given into your hands, and the good was in yours; removed thither: And you have done, and they ſuffered what was good, not in their, but Your own eyes: heaven an earth approving it, and rejoycing at it.

Now then, as if they had done to you, that was good in their eyes, it had made many weeping eyes, it had been Ecce dies funeſtus: ſo, ſeeing they have ſuffered what was good in yours and even in Gods eyes, and thereby made many a glad heart, ſhall it not be Ecce dies Feſtus; a day of joy and health in the dwelling of the Righteous; wherein the right hand of the Lord hath the preeminence, the right hand of the Lord brought this mighty alteration to paſſe? As they meant it, it had been a day, the devil had marred: as it fell out, this was a day that the Lord hath made, and let us rejoyce and be glad in it; with the voyce of joy and thanksgiving among ſuch as keep holy day.

Pſalm 118.15, 16.

Pſalm 118.24.

Holy (I ſay:) for let God have the honour of the day, for ſetting ſo many Ecce's upon it. For which, all dayes, but ſpecially as the day it ſelf returnes, we to make return of our thanks upon it. Even upon it, upon this day, for this day, for the many Ecces of this day; to God the Author of them, for the King and his ſafety, the ſubjecta materia of them; for the Ecce ſurrexit è ſpelunca, his riſing out of the cave, in effect as good as his riſing out of the grave, or (as David in this Pſalm cals it) his delivery from the Lions den: thence he roſe. And for Ecce abiit viam, that a way was made him, that he was not made away, but that his way he went. Then went, and many a way ſince hath gone, and many more may ſtill go, and the Angell of the Lord take charge of him to keep him in all his wayes, and the Lord himſelf preſerve his going out and comming in, from this time forth for evermore.

Pſalm 57.

Pſalm 91.11.

There is a Pſalme (as I ſaid) the LVII. purpoſely ſet (of his being there in the cave, and ſcaping thence:) the Pſalme is like the day; repreſents it fitly. The forepart of it, full of danger and feat: Miſerere mei Domine, miſerere mei, and My ſoul is among Lions: well befitting you when you were under their hands. But the latter part, the Cataſtrophe, full of joy and triumph. When you were got out of the cave, and were now upon your way, then it was (I truſt) and ever will be as there it followeth: My heart is ready, O God, my heart is ready, I will ſing and give praiſe: Awake up my glory, awake Lute and Harpe, I my ſelf will awake up early: I will praiſe thee among the people, I will ſing unto thee among the Nations: For, thy mercy is great toward me, it reacheth even up to the heavens, and thy truth above the clouds: Set up thy ſelf, O Lord, above the heavens, and thy glory over all the earth; as this day thou didſt indeed. So ends the Pſalm, and a better end there cannot be. So, will we end with glory and praiſe, bleſſing and thanks, to all the three perſons of the glorious Trinity: To whom for this day, and the Ecce of this day, be aſcribed this day all theſe, even this day, and for ever.

GEN. Chap. XLIX. Verſ. V, VI, VII.

Simeon & Levi fratres, &c.

Simeon and Levi brethren in evil, the inſtruments of crueltie are in their habitations.

Into their ſecret let not my ſoul come; my glory, be not thou joyned with their aſſembly: For, in their wrath, they ſlew a man, and in their ſelf-will (or fury) they digged down a wall.

Curſed be their wrath, for it was fierce; and their rage, for it was cruel: I will divide them in Jacob, and ſcatter them in Israel.

I Have read you a Text, out of a piece of Geneſis: a part of Jacobs laſt words, before he went out of the world; or (as they call it) a clauſe of his laſt Will and Teſtament. There is in it a Cenſure upon a couple of his ſonnes. In which cenſure (I take it) I have read the deſtinie of another couple: in attempting (both) of a like foul deſign, they as theſe, and theſe as they: as Simeon and Levi, the brethren of the Text; ſo theſe two, the brethren of the day.

To open it ſelf here in the Text; (The day will open it ſelf ſufficiently.) You are to imagine, You ſee Jacob, being now about to go out of the world, lying at the very point of death, lifted up in his bed (for ſo he was) his Sons ſtanding before him, according to their ſeveral ages, as they came into the world. He had ſomewhat to ſay to them (it ſhould ſeem:) and coming to theſe two (his ſecond and third ſons) he called to mind a foul outrage by them committed, upon Hemor and Sichem, and the whole Citie. Of which you may read before, at the 34. Chapter.

This, though it were done and paſt many yeares before, that it might ſeem to have been forgotten, yet it comes freſh to his mind, and troubles him (now) at the houre of his death. The nature is ſuch (ever) of the ſin of blood.

This fact of theirs, he did not think to ſlip over in ſilence; but, even then, to tell them of it, and to tell them his mind about it. No time, to keep it from them now. He was going to God; and ſo, ſtirred in Spirit, not to leave the world, till he had left a good teſtimonie of his deep diſlike of attempts in that kind. It was the will of God, ſo as he ſpared not his eldeſt ſon Reuben, for a foul fact of another nature (for inceſt;) So neither did he theſe two, for another of blood-guiltineſſe. Blood and Inceſt take heed of them.

Beſides, it might prove dangerous (he knew) if he did not declare his mind, and ſet a cenſure upon that, and the like attempts; and that he could not diſcharge his conſcience, if he had ſaid nothing to it. That others therefore hearing of it, might fear to do the like; firſt he condemns their counſell, with a Ne veniat. Let not my ſoul come in any ſuch counſel or company; 2. Then layes his heavie curſe on the fact it ſelf, and on their thirſt of revenge, the cauſe of it. 3 And laſtly, cenſures them doubly for it: 1 By diſheriſon, depriving them, and not them only, but all their poſteritie, for ever having lot of inheritance of their own, as all the other Tribes had: 2 And then Scattering them abroad up and down all Iſrael. For, theſe are two diſtinct, 1 To diſinherit, is one thing: and, 2 to ſcatter abroad, is another.

The Summe. The Summe is, Jacob their Fathers curſe, and the diſheriſon of theſe two Brethren Simeon and Levi; for conſulting firſt, and after purſuing ſo wicked a Counſell; as the murder of Sichem.

The Diviſion. Culpa and Pœna will divide the Text; the fault, and the puniſhment. In it do but adde the perſons, to make the parts three; Simeon ad Levi, the parties that made the fault, and upon whom, the puniſhment came.

I. The fault, was either the fact it ſelf; or two weighty circumſtances of it. 1 The fact was, they ſlew a man, they brake down the wall: This for this fact. and for the two things in it; 1 Firſt, that there was a meeting and conſulting before, about the doing of it. 2 Then, that there was crueltie after, ſhewed in the doing of it. Conſulting, and platting before: Rage and fury, after.

II. The puniſhment, or cenſure is of two ſorts: You may thus reduce them. 1 The one is a Church-cenſure: 2 The other, a Civil penaltie; and ſo the ſentence of both Courts. 1 Maledictus, of one Court, that is Spiritual: and 2 Diſpergam, of the other, that is Temporal.

III. You ſhall obſerve, all here ſtands upon two's: 1 Simeon, and 2 Levi: 1 they, 2 and their bloody weapons. 1. In the Plot, two: 1 Counſel; and 2 Companie: whence Jacob removeth two: 1 his ſoul, and 2 his glory. 2. In the fact, two: 1 Murder, and 2 Burglary: done upon two: 1 Upon the men, 2 and upon the very walls. 3. In the manner two: 1 Anger, and 2 fury: and they two: two Epithets; the Anger 1 ſtrong, in the beginning; and the Rage 2 indurate, in purſuing: killed the men, in their anger; brake down walls, in their furie. 4. In the cenſure, two: 1 The Curſe, 2 and the penaltie. One looks back; the other looks forward: One to the fact, the Curſe; the other, to the perſons, the Penall part. In the Penaltie, two: 1 The dividing, and 2 the Scattering; dividing their perſons in the Family of Jacob: Scattering their poſteritie, in the Common-wealth of Iſrael.

What is now the uſe, we have of it? Firſt, the not coming to any ſuch Counſels; the condemning of all ſuch attempts, the holding for accurſed, all ſuch outrages, as this was. Which (I truſt) we will now do at the laſt. We have ſeen it condemned in Perſia, in Jewrie, and now, in Ægypt. In Perſia, by the Heathen: In Jewrie, by Kings and Prophets: And now in Ægypt, by the Patriarchs. By the Heathen, in the caſe of Bigthan and Tharez: By the Kings and Prophets, in the caſe of Abſalom, and Abiſhai: and now by the Patriarchs: in the caſe of Simeon and Levi. And all this even up as high as Geneſis, up before the Prophets, before the Law, long yer Moſes were born, in the Patriarchs dayes: and (now) higher than Geneſis, further than the Patriarchs we cannot go.

Eſay 59. 7. Kings and Prophets you have heard: to day, you ſhall hear a Patriarch lay his curſe upon it, and not, in his life-time only, but at the very point of death. All, to ſhew, how hatefull a ſin this is, and how God will be ſure to require it at their hands, whoſe feet are ſwift to ſhed blood. And this was the good doctrine then, and hath been ever ſince, till our unhappy dayes; wherein; ſome that have attempted it, have ſcaped the Patriarchs Maledictus, and have much ado to ſcape the Popes Benedictus and being made Saints for it.

Simeon

Simeon and Levi are the parties. He joyns them together in the Proceſſe, for ſo they were in the fact: either, as deep as other, and ſo their cauſes proceded in joyntly. I. The Parties: Two.

Two they are: and two more than one. It is hand in hand, this a double twiſted cord. Hand in hand is the ſtronger: double, than ſingle iniquity. Prov. 11.21.

And, this is true of any two: but more yet of theſe two; for theſe two are brethren. And, that very bond of Nature and naturall affection, works yet more ſtrength. For, ſtrong, as the barres of a Palace, ſo is frater qui a fratre adjuvatur (ſaith Salomon.) Two Brethren. Prov. 18.19.

The firſt thing, that makes us muſe, is, that Iacob calls theſe two Brethren; as if the reſt were not ſo were nothing of kin to them. They were twelve brethren: themſelves ſay ſo, to Ioſeph, But, not of whole blood, you will ſay. True: but, ſix of them (theſe two named, and four beſides) they had all the ſame Father (Iacob) and the ſame mother (Lea.) And, why then theſe two, two brethren, and not they? We muſt ſeek out ſomewhat, wherein theſe two were, and the reſt were not. And we will not ſtirre a whit from the Text. They two were brethren (firſt) 1 in wearing of weapons of violence (in this verſe:) 2 and (in the next) brethren, in wicked counſel: 3 and (third) in the rage of revenge: 4 And (laſt) in a bloody murder. And, as in theſe that make up the fault; ſo, in the puniſhment. In all theſe, were theſe two, brethren; and theſe two only: The other nothing of kin to them, no fraternity in theſe. Gen. 42.32.

If Rabbi Salomon be right, that μαχαιρα in Greek be all one with Mechera in Hebrew; then it is the ſwords they were girt with, were weapons of violence. But if (as others take it) Mechera be a tent; then, it muſt be, the weapons of violence were to be found in their tents; that, in their tents they had them, though not at their ſides. The other were of a more quiet diſpoſition: ſo were not theſe; but their ſword out, ready to offer violence upon every occaſion. The other had weapons too, but not weapons of violence: and, tents they had but, cruelty dwelt not in them. Weapons of cruelty then, is their firſt difference. 1 Brethren, in wearing weapons. מכרה כלי חמס

Why, may not one for a need, have by his ſide or in his houſe weapons? Yes: But theſe were Chele chamas (that is) weapons of violence, and violence implies wrong, ever. Weapons, he may: of wrong, he may not. All even our very hands and members themſelves: are to be weapons of righteouſneſſe. God never intended to arme injuſtice. There is no power given to deſtroy, or do violence withall. The Law allowes no Chele chamas: no man to have them in his houſe, no man to weare them by his ſide. No ſword is allowed to private fury or revenge: Mihi vindictam, Revenge is GODS, for he will do juſtice. The ſword of it is his; and no mans, but whom God girdeth with it, by vertue of the words in Geneſis, by man ſhall his blood be ſhed. But that man is not every man: that ſword hangs not at every mans girdle; nor is, by every hand to be drawn forth. Rom. 6.13. 2 Cor. 13.10. Deut. 32.35. Gen. 9.6.

There is one caſe only, where the party would, and cannot ſtay for the Magiſtrates ſuccour: the aſſailant comes on him ſo fierce and furiouſly, that either he muſt uſe it, or loſe his life: and yield it to the rage of his enemy, being a private man, as himſelf. In that caſe, if he cannot otherwiſe keep off violence from himſelf, it is lent him pro hac vice tantum; and the uſe of it made lawfull, by the unwritten Law, the Law of Nature: Vim vi: Yet (as we ſpeak) cum moderamine inculpatæ tutelæ, or (as our Law) Se defendendo. And never, but upon that occaſion: and in that caſe, the ſword is but a weapon of defence, to keep off violence. And out of that caſe, this one except, not to be allowed. Even they, that carry the ſword in their name (Gladiatores) we call them Fencers: and ſo do they themſelves, their ſcience, the Science of defence, that is, Skill to uſe their weapons only to that end. For (ever) a Cherethite is eo ipſo to be a Pelethite. Theſe two were but one: their weapons, to defend and ſave: to deliver from wrong, to do none. To make the ſword the weapon of cruelty is to abuſe the ſword: Every abuſe is naught: And ſo, theſe two, Brethren, non tam natura quam nequitia, not ſo much in nature, as in naughtineſſe. As, we know a place, where many ſuch there be; no kin at all by nature, yet ſworne brethren they call themſelves: making Sacramentum pietatis vinculum iniquitatis; binding themſelves by the oath of God, to ſerve the Divell: As they all are, whoſe feet are ſwift to ſhed blood. So, the Patriarch implies thus much: that of all his ſonnes, theſe two were by nature of a revengefull, of a bloudy diſpoſition. And as they were, ſo were their weapons. For, who will blame the ſword, or lay any thing to the weapons charge? The weapon is, as the man is; as he will uſe or abuſe it. Of it ſelf, not violent, if he be not ſo, that weares it. But, theſe were ſo: and ſo, the fault, in the men, and not in the weapons. Brethren of blond they were; and not ſo, but Brethren in blond. And ſo paſſe we from this bloud. Eſay 59.7.

You may gheſſe at their diſpoſitions, not ſo much by their weapons, as by their counſell; in conſilium eorum: He tels of a Councel taken about it, where they met, and ſaid one to another, their ſwords ſhould do violence: their ſiſter was wronged, they would be revenged: and no revenge ſerve them, but death and deſtruction; death of the man, deſtruction of the 2 In counſell.

the Town, yea, of the very walls of it. It was a plot or conſpiracy then: a very match made between them.

And what was their Counſel? In dolo, deceitfully contrived. Marry they would their ſiſter, to Sichem; and all ſhould be well, if they would be circumciſed. Whereas, their purpoſe was, when they were ſoreſt of their circumciſing, when the wound was at worſt, and they could not ſtir; then, to ſet upon them, and make a maſſacre of them all.

Here, Iacob cannot containe him ſelf, but burſt out, from ſuch Matches God keep me. At the very firſt, at the doing, Iacob miſliked it: miſliked it then, and ever after; and even now, at his death he cries, Ne veniat, Never let my ſoul come among them, or have to do with them.

It troubled him much, at the time, it was done. He ſaw, he loſt his reputation by it. Loe, here is the holy Patriarch! Here be Imps of his breeding and bringing up! That they made him even ſtinke (you will beare with it, it is the HOLY GHOSTS word) before the Nations round about. Chap. 34.30.

Beſide, they put him in fear, and hazard of his own, and all their lives. Very like it was, they would all have been over-run by the bordering people, but that GOD, ſeeing Iacobs innocency, even for His ſake ſent His feare into the heart of the Nations adjoyning, that they purſued them not to death with the like cruelty. Theſe were motives for the preſent: but here now, ſo many yeats after, he takes it on his death, he was never party nor privy to it. Never was he, to that; nor ever would be, to any ſuch, as we ſee by his ſo deeply deteſting it, and proteſting againſt it. For it is, as if he ſhould ſay: I here declare openly before GOD and the World, it went againſt my very ſoule, this counſel of theirs: I had no hand in it, neither art, nor part (as they ſay) neither had, nor ever meant to have: but was, and ever will be innocent from all that belong to it, violense, counſell and all. Never let my ſoul come among ſuch.

And why not come in any ſuch counſell? For, where two or three are at counſell about any ſuch matter, Inter duos proditores Diabolus eſt tertius, where two are conſulting of any treachery, the Divell is the third. Miſit Satanas in cor, was in Iudas, is the rule of all traitours. The firſt miſſion, the firſt motion, is (ever) from him: he the prime Counſellour of the three. And blame not Iacob, if he would not be one of, or one at any counſell of his, or have his ſoul at the end of any ſuch treaty. Luk. 22.3.

This, on their parts, makes it the more hainous, that they did it not of any ſudden paſſion, but conſultò, in cold blood: ſlept upon it, roſe upon it, were in it three dayes: Did all adviſedly of malice pretenſed: met about it, tooke counſell, how to effect it, the counſell of the ungodly: Put off the execution, till after three dayes. Pſal. 1.1.

Iacobs twofold abhorring of it
1 Non veniat anima in conſilium.
2 Non ſit gloria in cœtu eorum.

On Iacobs part; two things he ſpeaks of: 1 That neither his ſoul ſhould ever come in ſuch counſell. (So, it is a ſoule-matter; a counſell, and an act, which brings with it the hazard of the ſoule.) 2 Nor his glory or reputation: (ſo that, it is a thing which toucheth ones honour and reputation neer; a blemiſh to the glory of a man.) As pollutes his ſoule, ſo taints his blood; is the loſſe of both. To ſave both theſe, he doth (we ſee) and we muſt diſavow all ſuch counſell and Counſellors. All are bound under the ſame paine, to make the ſame proteſtation: to ſay the ſame Ne veniat anima mea, all that are of the Iſrael of God. Let never my ſoule come into any ſuch counſell, let never any ſuch counſell come into my ſoul. Marke thoſe two words: 1 his ſoule, and 2 his glory: the two things of higheſt regard withall; 1 What ſhall become of our ſoules, 2 What Name we ſhall leave behind us. All, to think, that in ſuch company, they do but caſt away their ſoules, they do but loſe the honour of their name for ever.

סודקהל And yet, a farther matter there is. For, marke theſe two words, Counſell, and Aſſembly, Sod and Kahal: for by them, two ſeverall partakings he ſeemes to ſet out. 1 One, of their ſecret privie meetings that is Sod, 2 The other is Kahal, which is any publike meeting or aſſembly of theirs; and namely their Church and Congregation. He ſpeakes to his glory, never to make one in any ſuch aſſembly, never to be joyned to any ſuch Congregation: ſo, makes a matter of Religion of it. Never, of that Church, which ſhall give countenance, that there may be any meetings, to any ſuch end. It is no Kahal, no Church, no religion for Iacob, that favours any man that is ſo minded.

חלילה לי If then we will like or diſlike with the King and Prophet David, we muſt ſay Chalila li, God forbid I ſhould once lift up my hand to any ſuch act; If we will like or diſlike with the Patriarch Iacob, we muſt ſay, Ne veniat in conſilium anima mea. You obſerve the Patriarchs and the Prophets agree well: Iacobs Ne veniat, with Davids abſit mihi a domino. Not only to have cleane hands from it, not to lift them up or ſtretch them out to the Act; but a cleare ſoul: never once to conſult, but to deteſt, not only their conſultations, but even the congregations of ſuch conſultours, that be that way given. Neither Civilly, nor Eccleſiaſtically; neither in Church nor Market (as they ſay) to have to do with them.

And for a farewell to this point, let me tell you; there be, that interpret Iacob's ſpeech, in this ſenſe. Not, let not me, nor my ſoul be preſent, or partaker of any ſuch; but, let not my ſoule or life; be the matter or ſubject of any ſuch conſultation: Ne tractent de animâ meâ in conſilio tali, ut ſicut Sichemitis fecerunt, ſic facerent & mihi: God keep my ſoul, ſave my life from any ſuch Conſultours, for ever coming to be treated or debated of, by any ſuch. Let never any ſuch meet in counſel, about my ſoul or me. Both will ſtand well: 1 Neither I, about any mans; 2 nor any, about mine: either, 1 to conſult about the life of any other; or, 2 my life to be conſulted of, by any other like them.

From

From the counsell we come to the fact; to the hatching of it. There is too much in the Counsell; that was fault enough, if no fact followed: But, here followed a fact too. and that a foule fact. Which is of two sorts: expressed first in two words, 1 Interfecerunt, and 2 suffoderunt; that is, Murder and Burglary: and two more; killed, whom? it is said, a man, virum, in the singular, but one; the number doth but aggravate, the fact is all one, one or more, both to be condemned. II. The Fact, 1 Murder. Interfecerunt: Virum.

But sure, Iacob in saying Virum, a man, meant but, and aimed but at one, principally. Virum: ad quem Virum? what man was it? Hemor the cheif man, the Ruler, the Lord of the City, and the territory about. Of no great circuit (perhaps,) That comes all to one: But: being the Soveraigne Ruler and Lord, such a man is worth many men: that, in killing him, they may be said, in one to have killed many. And, as if Iacob thought, they might be quit of the rest, so they had left that man (the cheife Magistrate) alone.

But they killed more than one: Even every mothers son, all the males in the City. This is an outrage: not to leave a man to kill: to kill them all, as if they were but one man; to leave not one alive! Chap. 34. 25.

And why? what was the offence? Sichem had deflowred their sister. Say, there was a fault in Sichem: what no remedy, but kill and slay him? But if his were the fault, let him alone be slaine. But, what was his fathers fault? He sought to make amends, by marriage, for the wrong done, and gave them a blank for her Ioynter, to put in what they would: Agreed to be circumcised, he and all his people: All that ever in reason could be required. Why was he (then) slaine? For being his father. Nothing else can be alledged: But all the men in the City, the poor people, what had they done? They went about their businesse, medled nothing in the matter: Yet they went to the pot, too. So, it is murder of many, and those many, innocents all, Innocent and nocent together, to be swept away? shall the Iudge of the world do it? shall any Iudge in the world do that, which the Iudge of the world would not do? They said: should he abuse our sister? No: But should he do it, and all they suffer for it? But, what had their wives and children deserved; that they should be led captive, and all they had, either in house or field, taken for a prey, made spoyle of, and carried clean away? But, what had the walls and houses hurt them, that not only the house-walls, but even the Town-walls must be laid flat for it? was there ever heard of a greater havocke? Gen. 34. 2. Gen. 34. 11; Gen. 34. 24. Gen. 18. 25. Gen. 34. 31.

And so eager upon it they were, that, to commit the murder they commit Burglary first: First, downe with the house-walls, that after, down with the men So greedie to kill, as breake down walls, breake up houses to make their slaughter. For, either it must be, they broke through the houses to come at the men and kill them: Or, when they had killed the men, they pull'd down the houses and all. Both (it may well be) they did: But one it must needs. And, that one, is too foul and barbarous. 2 Burglary. Suffoderunt murum.

Now put to the circumstances, which are ever of importance (specially in a story) and well worthy to be weighed, in a matter of fact. Here was no warre, wherein such things are done: (for, the name of warre covers many a foule fault.) But, warre it was not; but a treaty of peace. So, they shed the blood of warre (that is,) that blood which but in warre should not be shed: made spoils as in war; razed down Towns, as in war, and all this in peace. 1 King. 2. 5.

Nay, not only a treaty of peace, but of a match and marriage, contracting affinitie, of a firme league, of amitie perpetuall. Nay, of unity in Religion, taking upon them the same seale of the Covenant. That, they violated all three, 1 Iura fœderis, 2 Connubii, 3 Religionis. And that; in all these, their counsell was fraudulent, Bemerma, without any good meaning, coloured only with these three pretences. Which they did not only violate, but above all abused the holy 1 ordinance of Matrimonie; 2 abused the Sacrament, 3 and made the sacred Seale of righteousnesse, a cloake for their bad and barbarous intent. במרם

They would seeme to pretend justice: But, even in justice, the rule is, pro mensura peccati there should be plagarum modus. Here was no measure kept. A whole City sackt, a whole Country spoil'd, all the men slaine, all the rest led away as prisoners; and all for a fault, to which they were no wayes accessory.

And that, all this they did, with a kind of contempt of Iacob their Father, and his authority: never acquainted him with it, never consulted him about it. He was bound not to come in their counsell: they were bound to come to him for his; who if they had come, would have counselled better.

The conclusion is: Reason they had none; not colour of reason. Only, it is sad Birtsonam, for their will and pleasure, did they all this. A wretched pleasure, to take delight in so wicked a designe. רבצנם

To this, adde the root of all, set out in two words, 1 Rage, and 2 Outrage, or Anger and fury. That their anger shewed it self cruel; that their fury shewed it self indurate. It was not Aph only, that is anger; but Gebrath, which is past anger, gone beyond; indeed, very fury. They did it furiously. And, that fury was hard, hard as stone; cast off all compassion, without pity The Root of these: 1 Anger. 2 Fury. אף עברת or mercy ſpared none; Not the poore people, that made no fault; not the women and children, but made bootie of them: No, not the walls, but down with them too. And (which is worſt of all the reſt) ſpared not God neither: did all theſe in the very act of religion. If they had done it, when they were (yet) Heathen men, it had been the leſſe: but now, in their being circumciſed to doe it, as they were coming on to be the people of God, and were within the Covenant, by receiving it already: Now to do it, inferreth well, Curſed be the wrath, yea thrice accurſed, that outrage; for, the like was never heard. Anger (we know) is furor brevis: And ſi gravis, brevis; being ſo vehement, it ſhould not be long by courſe of nature: But this was long too, continued; not to be ſatiſfied, but implacable; Nothing could appeaſe them, or turne them from their outrage; till they ſaw walls and all lye flat upon the ground. Here, we look back. Their weapons (above) were Chele, which is (properly) vaſa, veſſels. So as, their paſſion was not poured out like water, and ſo let run away, but it was kept or reſerved, as liquor in a veſſell; barrelled up, to be broached, when they ſaw cauſe. Without reaſon, in the beginning; without appeaſing, in the end. Such was the malice of theſe men: Such theirs of this day.

The Cenſure.

1 A Maledictus to the fact.

Now, ſuch rage, ſo outragious, juſtly deſerves a Maledictus: Such wrath, ſo qualified beyond all account, ſo exorbitant, ſo inſatiable. On ſuch wrath, Iacob layes his Curſe, curſeth them here. Which Curſe was (after) by God renewed in Mount Ebal: Curſed be he that ſmiteth his neighbour ſecretly: Againe, Curſed be he that lieth in waite, to ſhed innocent blood. The two laſt, and heavieſt curſes there, to which all Iſrael was to ſay Amen.

Deut. 27. 24, 25.

From Iacob.

While it was but in conſultation, Iacob cries Ne veniat, away with the counſell, come not at it. But, when it comes into act, then he cries, Maledictus, Curſed be the execution; at no hand, be an Actour in that. Nay, not onely have no part in it your ſelves, but condemne them that have ſo, and hold them as people accurſed, even by Iacobs own mouth.

Numb. 24. 9.

Weigh a little this Maledictus of Iacob. Maledictus is a word, we would not heare, from the pooreſt or meaneſt body, that is. But there is much in the partie, who is (here) a Patriarch; and they vertuous, holy and grave perſons. To be curſed of one of them is much: for, whom they curſe, God curſeth alſo. And not only a Patriarch, but a Father, to whom God hath given power to bleſſe, and to curſe; and whoſe curſe ever accompaineth a fathers; eſpecially ſuch a Father, as is like Iacob. So that, this puts them under Gods curſe certainly.

On his death-bed.

Weigh alſo the circumſtance, the time. For this time was the time of bleſſing: Lying on their death-beds, men commonly give their laſt bleſſing to their children. So did Iacob to Iudah here, and ſo to the reſt. At this time (then) to do it, is ſomewhat yet more ſtrange, than at another; Nay than at any other time. Bleſſing-time with others, is curſing-time with them. When he bleſt others, to curſe them, and that there, on his death-bed! For, the curſe of the death-bed is of all other the worſt, ſuch as are ſo curſed, ſome evill will come to them.

Ephes. 2. 26.

Yet ſomewhat to eaſe it. This curſe (if you marke it) is not on their perſons: their nature, as men, is not toucht; but only by reflection upon their affection of Anger. And yet, not on that neither. (For, there is good uſe of them alſo: for, one may be angry and ſin not.) But as it was tranſcendent, too much and too long; paſt the bounds of all reaſon and moderation. And this was their puniſhment ſpirituall.

2 A Diſpergam to the Perſons.

Maledictus, that goes to the fact: diſpergam to their perſons; which he denounceth, ſhall fall upon them. And, he doth not this by way of Prophecy, they ſhall be divided and ſcattered: but pronounced it by way of ſentence. Not, it ſhall be done: but he will doe it himſelfe. It ſhould be his owne act, and he would never leave it, till he ſee it put in execution. And, though it were not done in his time, yet it was as good as done; as certaine and ſure, as if, at that time, it had had the performance.

You may referre dividam to Simeon, and diſpergam to Levi. Simeon was divided into pieces; A piece, in Iudah; a piece, in Dan, a piece, in Mount Seir of the Amalekites. Levi was ſcattered here and there, up and downe in every corner of the Land. Or (if you will referre it to both;) they were divided, while Iacob continued a family: they were diſperſed, when they after came to be a State.

And (if you marke) the puniſhment is very proper, and well proportioned to the fault. The fault was a bad union: their puniſhment is a juſt diviſion. Their fault was hand in hand, they were too near: their puniſhment is, they ſhall be ſet farre enough aſunder, for taking any ſuch counſell more. So, whom the devil hath joyned, GOD puts in ſunder, And, a righteous thing it is, it ſhould ſo be. For, puniſhments ſhould have in them the nature of a medicine: They cure (ever) by contraries: Heat, by cold; drought, by moiſture. Even as this doth; an evill joyning by a juſt diſſerſion.

There was great wiſdome in this puniſhment. For, them that be evill, if we deſtroy them not, we muſt take order to weaken them: and to ſeparate them, is to weaken them. United force is the ſtronger; diſunited the weaker ſtill. Undo the faggot band, and when the ſticks be ſevered, you ſhall ſtick by ſtick, deal with them, and keep them under. A ſtick will eaſily be broken; a faggot will not. So as, to ſcatter them, is to weaken them.

And ſo to be, is good for Simeon and Levi themſelves. It takes from them, hability to do hurt: paires their nailes, breaks off their hornes, doth them good againſt their wills. For, if the worſt to come the worſt, they can hurt but ſingly or by one. And therefore we ſay; Conſultum eſt malis, ut a ſociis ſociis dividantur; they that are ill affected, it is good for them and their fellowes, to be put aſunder.

And, if it be good for them; certainely, for the other Tribes, much more: They ſhall all live the more quietly. For, if theſe two ſhould ſtill continue together, they might the ſooner, the more eaſily, again in like ſort combine, and confederate themſelves together againſt the other Tribes; if they gave them but the leaſt occaſion. Now they ſhall be ſo ſcattered, and ſet, where they ſhall do no great harme any more: as no more they did. And ſo, as it was good for them, ſo we ſay, Conſultum eſt Reipublicæ ut dividantur ſocii ad malum; Good for the Common-wealth, if any be that way given, to remove them either from other at leaſt. So, they the weaker, and the reſt the ſafer. But ſcattering will not alwaies ſerve: for, even ſcattered, ſome do miſchief enough. And therefore, it is a good police, to coop them up, if ſcattering they do harm; as it is, to ſcatter them, if they prove the worſe for being together.

To ſpeak a little of the grievouſneſſe of the puniſhment: theſe degrees are in it. 1 Firſt, it concludes the diſperſion of them, the loſſe of having any lot at all of inheritance of their own, as the reſt of the Tribes had. It kills not the men, but it pulls down their wall, and layes them to the Common, wherein every man had as much right, as they. And ſure, GOD of his goodneſſe, not intending to proceed the way Himſelf had ſet: that, having ſhed mans blood, by man ſhould their blood be ſhed (for ſo, they ſhould have been rooted out clean, and two Tribes had been loſt in Iſrael.) The next was, to let them have no inheritance, entirely by themſelves, as had all the reſt. As the Pſalmiſt ſaith: Slay them not, leſt my people forget, any ſuch thing was done, but ſcatter them abroad, and ſo put them down that way, as chaff is either to be burnt, or the wind to ſcatter it, no man can tell whether. The grievouſneſſe of the puniſhment, 1 Diſinheriting. Pſalm 59.11.

A ſecond degree is, not only to be diſinherited, but to be ſcattered: for, that was Cain's puniſhment, divided and caſt out from GOD's preſence, all his life long: To wander up and down, he knew not whether. That was, for blood too, the blood of Abel. It is the Iewes puniſhment: (and that was for blood too; the blood of CHRIST;) that they are ſcattered all over the earth (as, to this very day they be,) and never could get together, to make an entire ſtate, no more than theſe did. 2 Scattering. Gen. 4.12.

The third degree is; That all this did light upon their whole poſterity, rather than upon their own perſons. For, to have all, that came of them, ſo diſperſed abroad, was a more heavy hearing to them, than if it had light on themſelves: of that I make no queſtion. It is the courſe, GOD holdeth in his Law, to viſit the ſinnes of the fathers upon the children. But, this is yet heavier: for, there, it is but to the third and fourth, but this is to endure throughout all generations. The father, which is little moved with his own loſſe, if it ſhall turn to the dammage of his children, it will move him the rather: As, this ever hath done, and ever ſhall. 3 Even of their poſterity. Exod. 20.5.

And let this be the laſt, That Jacob's Maledictus, and his Diſpergam, do remain and ſtand thus of record; and ſo ſhall ſtand to the worlds end. The Curſe on their heads, a blot on their names, a ſcattering upon their ſeed and poſterity for ever. 4 And that upon record.

But, Let me adde this: That, though it appeares, their nature was none of the beſt; they were no good natur'd-men, as given to blood, and ſo to be diſliked: yet was not their nature exempted from grace though, but place left for grace, and ſo, they to be relieved that way. For, it may well be thought, this ſo ſevere a cenſure, ſpecially at this time now inflicted, and by their own father, being to go out of the world; that it wrought upon theſe two brethren, and wrought in them deep contrition of that their outrage. Wherewith GOD being appeaſed, turned their curſe into a bleſſing: Pœnam diſperſionis in præmium Sacerdotii (ſay the Fathers.) For, the curſe, which Jacob inflicted, Moſes reſerved; (not for their diſperſing, which came through their fathers fault:) Scattered they were, but ſcattered with honour: One having the Office of Prieſt-hood, and teaching men: the other, of Scribes and School-maſters, training up their children all the Tribes over.

Let us ſee now, if you can find in theſe men, the men of this day; and, in this fact, theirs; and ſo for the puniſhment likewiſe. 1 Two they were, this day: So the number agrees. 2 And brethren they were, as nearly allied. 3 And weapons they had both. 4 And made of the ſame metall (of violence) that theirs here. 5 Counſell they took, into which Jacob's ſoul would never have come. 6 And coloured it with falſe ſemblance (Bemerma) no leſſe than theſe: (One, of diſcovering of (I wot not what) Secret: the other, of not being from the Sermon in any wiſe: his Sermon, like their Circumciſion.) 7 Did as much as in them lay, to execute their counſel: offered to ſtrike, offered to bind, lay hands, graſped, fell to the ground. 8 And from the ſame root they came both, from deſire of Revenge. Their fury no whit leſſe, no leſſe cruel, no leſſe implacable. Thus farre their likeneſſe holds. The Application of the Text.

But now, in two things, diſlike: 1. One, theſe in the Text had ſome cauſe: their Siſter was deflowred. Not the leaſt colour, here, Their Siſter was honoured; themſelves dealt with but too well. No cauſe in the world, they. Diſlike, in this firſt.

2. And then, if you come to the iſſue, in that, diſlike too. It was not interfecerunt indeed (we thank GOD for that, it was not:) Yet they did their good will (Birtſonam;) And, it was a judged caſe in Perſia, Voluerunt was enough. בִּרְצוֹנָם

But, when we come to the Virum, there (I am ſure) is great odds. Ours; another manner of Virum, than theirs, and put Hemor and Sichem both together. Many a year after this, there were in that Land thirty one Kings, whereof Hemor (at the moſt) had but one part: The leaſt of your three Kingdoms, is greater than all the thirty one put together. So, there holds no proportion in Virum.

Will ye ſee now the puniſhment? that though hand were in hand, they were not unpuniſhed. Jacob's Legacie came on ours too. Under Jacobs curſe they died, His curſe upon their ſouls, under which their ſouls lie, and ſo ſhall for evermore. And upon their glory and honour; for, that is gone and loſt for ever: and, as their ſouls, ſo their memory accurſed. And upon their Tribe or Houſe; for, that is ſcattered as duſt before the wind, and come to nought.

And one degree further, wherein ours were diſlike. Simeon and Levi, for all this lived out their time; ſlew, but were not ſlain. But, here this day with theſe, in ſtead of Interfecerunt, it was Interfecti ſunt. This Simeon and Levi, they lay both dead on the floore, with their weapons of cruelty in their hands, with their wicked counſel and purpoſe in their hearts. Which hearts of theirs, the weapons of juſt defence went thorow; and their counſel turned to their confuſion.

And now our Benedictus Deus to GOD: Bleſſed be He for this Maledictus of Jacob, for the Patriarch's curſe, that light upon them and theirs. And yet our Maledictus too, to them, their weapons, their counſel, their fury, their ſouls, and their memories. And, from ſuch blood-thirſty curſed men, GOD ever bleſſe You.

Let me tell you this, for a farewell. Jacob doth here two things: 1 Delivers us a Document; 2 and denounceth a dreadfull puniſhment. His Document is, Ne veniat anima mea: His puniſhment is, Maledictus and diſſipabo. And chooſe, they that will not ſay, Ne veniat with him, he will ſay, Maledictus, his curſe be upon them. But, as Jacob ſaid, ſo we to ſay all, all to ſay after him, Ne veniat, both paſſive, and active. Paſſive: Never be their counſel taken about Jacob's ſoul; or his ſoul, that is to us, Jacob, even the Feeder, the Paſtor, and Stone of Iſrael; never come his ſoul, to be the ſubject, or matter treated of in any ſuch counſel. Active: and never let any true ſubjects ſoul come in any ſuch counſel: nor ever any good Chriſtian come in that Church, wherein ſuch Counſel, or Counſellours are harboured and maintained; or that hold any doctrine that favours any ſuch conſultations.

But if any will not thus ſay Jacob's ne veniat; we to be ſo bold as to ſay Jacob's Maledictus, to him, his ſoul, his ſeed, his memory and all. Let all ſuch inherit the curſe, let it be their legacie.

Pſalm 68. 1: Exurgat Deus, & diſſipentur inimici, Let GOD ariſe, and theſe His enemies be ſcattered; As the ſtubble before the wind, and as the ſmoke, let them vaniſh and come to nothing. Let their lives be for the ſword, their names be put out; their ſouls for Judg. 5: 31: the curſe, their houſes pull'd down and deſolate. So periſh all thine enemies, O LORD, &c.

WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDCVI.

PSAL. CXVIII. VER. XIII. XIV.

A Domino factum eſt iſtud, & eſt mirable in oculis noſtris. Hæc eſt Dies quam fecit Dominus; exultemus & lætemur in ea.

This is the Lords doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.
This is the day which the Lord hath made; let us rejoyce and be glad in it.

TO entitle this time to this Text, or to ſhew it pertinent to the preſent occaſion, will ask no long proceſſe. This Day of ours, this fifth of November, a day of Gods making; that which was done upon it was the Lords doing. Chriſt's owne application (which is the beſt) may well be applied here: This day, is this Scripture fulfilled in our ears. For if ever there were a deed done, or a day made by God, in our dayes; this day, and the deed of this day was it: If ever He gave cauſe of marvelling (as in the firſt;) of rejoycing (as in the ſecond verſe) to any land; to us this day, He gave both: If ever ſaved, proſpered, bleſſed any; this day, He ſaved, proſpered, and (as we ſay) fairly bleſſed us. Luk. 4. 21.

The day (we all know) was meant to be the day of all our deaths: and we, and many were appointed as ſheep to the ſlaughter; nay, worſe than ſo. There was a thing doing on it, if it had been done, we all had been undone. And the very ſame day we (all know) the day, wherein that appointment was diſappointed by God, and we all ſaved, that we might not die but live, and declare the raiſe of the Lord, the Lord, of whoſe doing, that marvellous deed was; of whoſe making, this joyfull day is, that we celebrate. Verſ. 17.

This

Psalm 111.5. This mercifull and gracious LORD (saith David, Psalme 111. 5.) hath so done His marvellous works, that they ought to be had, and kept in remembrance. Of keeping in remembrance, many wayes there be: Among the rest, this is one, of making dayes; set solemn Dayes to preserve memorable Acts, that they be not eaten out, by them, but ever revived, with the return of the Yeare, and kept still fresh in continuall memory. GOD himself taught us this way. In remembrance of Exod.12.3,&c. the great delivery from the destroying Angel, He himself ordained the day of the Passe-over yearly to be kept. The Church, by Him taught, took the same way. In remembrance of the disappoint-
Ester 9.26. ing of Hamans bloody lots: they likewise appointed the dayes of Purim, yearly to be kept. The like memorable mercy did He vouchsafe us: The destroyer passed over our dwellings, this day: It is our Passe-over. Haman, and his Fellowes had set the dice on us, and we by this time had been all in peeces: It is our Purim day.

We have therefore well done and upon good warrant, to tread in the same steps, and by Law to provide, that this Day should not die, nor the memorial thereof perish, from our selves or from our seed; but be consecrated to perpetual memory, by a yearly acknowledgement to be made of it throughout all generations. In accomplishment of which order, we are all now here in the presence of GOD, on this day, that He first, by His Act of doing, hath made; and we secondly, by our act of decreeing, have made before Him, His holy Angels, and men, to confesse this His goodnesse, and our selves eternally bound to Him for it. And, being to confesse it, with what words of Scripture can we better or fitter do it, than those we have read out of this Psalm? Sure, I could think of none fitter, but even thus to say, A Domino factum, &c.

The Division. The treaty whereof may well be compriſed in three points: 1. The Deed or doing: 2. The Day; and 3. The Duty. The Deed, in these: This is the Lords, &c. The Day, in these: This is the Day, &c. The Duty, in the rest; Let us, &c. The other two reduced to the Day, which is
I. the center of both. The doing is the cause; The Duty is the consequent: from the day grow-
II. eth the duty.
III.

To proceed orderly, we are to begin with the day. For though (in place) it stand after the deed; yet to us, it is first: our knowledge is a posteriori. The effect ever first, where it is the ground of the rest. Of the day then first.

1 That such dayes there be, and how they come to be such. 2. Then of the doing, that maketh them: wherein 1 that this of Davids was; and 2 that ours is no lesse, rather more, 3. Then
John 16.22. of the duty, how to do it? by rejoycing, and being glad: for so, gaudium erit plenum, these two make it full: How to take order, that we may long and often do it, by saying our Hosanna, and Benedictus; for, gaudium nostrum nemo tollet a nobis, those will make, that our joy no man shall take from us.

I. THIS is the day: This? Why, are not all dayes made by Him? Is there any dayes not made by Him? Why then say we, This is the day the Lord hath made? Divide the dayes into na-
Of the Day. tural and civil; the natural, some are clear and some are cloudy: the civil, some are luckie
Such dayes there be. dayes, and some dismal. Be they fair or foul, glad or sad; (as the Poet calleth him) the great Diespiter, the Father of dayes hath made them both. How say we then of some one day, above his fellow: This is the day, &c.

No difference at all, in the dayes, or in the moneths themselves: by nature, they are all one. No more in November, than another moneth: nor in the fifth, than in the fifteenth. All is, in GODS making. For, as in the Creation, we see, all are the workes, and yet a plain difference be-
Gen.1.14,26. tween them for all that, in the manner of making: Some made יְהִי Sit, Let there be light, a firmament, dry Land; Some, with Faciamus with more ado, greater forecast, and framing, as man, that master-piece of his workes, of whom therefore in a different sense, it may be said: This is the Creation which GOD hath made (suppose, after a more excellent manner.) In the very same manner, it is with dayes; All are His making, all equal in that; but, that letteth not, but He may bestow a special Faciamus upon some one day more than other; and so that day, by special prerogative, said To be indeed a day, that God hath made.

Now, for GOD's making, it fareth with dayes, as it doth with yeares. Some yeare (saith Psalm 65.11. the Psalme) GOD crowneth with His goodnesse, maketh it more seasonable, healthfull, fruitfull, than other. And so for dayes; GOD leaveth a more sensible impression of His favours upon some one, more than many besides, by doing upon it some marvellous work. And, such a day on which GOD vouchsafeth some special factum est: some great and publike benefit; notable for the time present, memorable for the time to come, in that case, of that Day (as if GOD had said Faciamus diem hunc, shewed some workmanship, done some special cost on it) it may with an accent, with an emphasis be said, This verily is a day which GOD hath made, in comparison of which, the rest are, as if they were not; or at least were not of His making.

As for black and dismal dayes, dayes of sorrow and sad accidents; they are and may be counted (saith Job) for no dayes: Nights rather, as having the shadow of Death upon them; or, if Dayes, such as his were, which Sathan had marr'd, than which God had made. And for common and ordinary Dayes, wherein as there is no harm, so not any notable good; we rather say, they are gone forth from God, in the course of nature (as it were) with a fiat, than made by Him; specially, with a faciamus. So, evil Dayes, no Dayes, or Dayes marr'd: and common Dayes, but no made Dayes: Only those made, that crowned with some extraordinary great Favour, and thereby get a dignity, and exaltation above the rest: exempted out of the ordinary course of the Calendar with an Hic est. Such, in the Law, was the Day in the Passe-over, made by God, the head of the year. Such, in the Gospel of CHRISTS Resurrection, made by God, Dies Dominicus; and to it; do all the Fathers apply this verse. And we had this day our Passe-over, and we had a Resurrection, or μεταβολὴ, as Isaac had. But I forbear to go further in the general. By this that hath been said, we may see, there be dayes of which it may be safely said, This is the Day, &c. and in what sense, it may be said. Sure there be then; that this of ours, one of them; that if it be; we may so hold it, and do the duties that pertain to it.

Job 3.36.

Exod 12. 1.

Heb 11:10.

II.
David's Day was such.

David's Day here, was one certainly, Dictante Spiritu; and they, that are like it, to be holden for such: so that, if ours be as this was, it is certainly Dies a Deo factus. Now then (to take our Rule from the former verse) Factum Domini fecit diem Domini. It is GODS Deed, that maketh its GODS Day: and the greater the Deed, the more GODS Day. There must be first, Factum est, some doing: and secondly, it must be a Domino, He the doer: and thirdly, that somewhat must be somewhat marvellous: and fourthly, not in it self, so; but, in our eyes. These four go to it; these four make any day a day of Gods making. Let us see then these four, First, in Davids here, and then in our own; and if we find them all, boldly pronounce, This is the Day, &c.

In it there was
1 A Factum est,
A deliverance.

First, The factum est, in Davids; what was done, set down at large in the forepart of the Psalm. It was a Deliverance; all the Psalm runneth on nothing else. Every deliverance is from a Danger, and by the Danger, we take measure of the Deliverance. The greater that, the greater the Delivery from it: and the greater the delivery, the greater the Day, and the more likely to be of GODS own manufacture. His Danger first: what should have been done. He was in a great distress. Three several times, with great passion, he repeats it, that his Enemies 1 came about him; 2 compassed him round; 3 compassed and kept him in on every side: were, no swarm of Bees so thick: That they gave a terrible lift or thrust at him, to overthrow him; and very near it they were. And at last, as if he were newly crept out of his grave, out of the very jawes of death and despair, he breaks forth, and saith, I was very near my death; neat it I was, but non moriar, die I will not now, for this time, but live a little longer to declare the works of the Lord. This was his Danger; and a shrewd one (it seemeth) it was. From this danger he was delivered. This, the factum est.

From Danger.
Ver. 10, 11, 12.
Verse 13.
Verse 17.

2.
A Domino. By GOD, not by man, Ver. 8, 9.

But man might do all this; and so it be mans day, for any thing is said yet. Though it were great, it maketh it not Gods, unless God, God (I say) and not man, but GOD Himself were the doer of it: and if He the Doer, He denominates the Day. This then was not any mans, not any Princes doing, but GODS alone, His might, His mercy, that brought it to pass: Not any arm of flesh, but GODS might; not of any merit of his, but of his own meer Mercy. This was done by His might: Thrice he tels us of it; It was the right hand of the Lord, that brought this mighty thing to pass. This was done by His Mercy: His ever endaring mercy: four times he tells us, it was that, did it. With that he begins, and makes it the key of the Song. Then, as we have factum est, so we have A Domino: The Deed and the Doer both.

Verse 14, 16.
Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4.

3.
Et Mirabile, and marvellous it was,
*Zech. 4.10.

GODS doings are many, and not all of one size. The Prophet * Zachary speaketh of a day of small things; and even in those small, must we learn to see God, or we shall never see Him in greater. Yet, so dimme is our sight, that unless they be great, commonly we see him not: nay, unless it be great usque ad miraculum, so great, that marvellous withal, we count it not worth a day, nor worthy God; unless it be such. But if it be such, then it is Gods, Qui facit mirabilia solus, Who only works great Marvels; then man is shut out, and Gods must the Day be. A Domino factum & mirabile.

In oculis nostris, even in our eys.

And yet this is not enough. The truth is, all that God doth, all His works are wonderfull: Magna, sed ideo parva quia usitata. Great Wonders all; but not wonderfull; seem small to us, because they be usual: His miracles are no more marvellous, than His ordinary works, but that we see the one dayly, and the other not. Therefore he addeth [In our eyes] for a full period: His doings, all marvellous in themselves, but not marvellous in our eyes, unless they be rare, and the like not seen before: But then, they be; and then we say, Digitus Dei est, it is the finger of God; nay, the right hand of God, that brought this mighty thing to pass. Then we give the day for Gods, without more ado. Now then, we have all that goeth to it: 1 A Deliverance wrought: 2 wrought by God: 3 a wonderfull deliverance: 4 and that even in our eyes. These make Davids day, a day of Gods making.

Exod. 8.19.

our day was such.

Will these be found in ours, and then ours shall be so too? They will, all of them certainly; and that in an higher degree, in a greater measure; match Davids day, and overmatch it in all. 1. We were delivered, and from a danger, that is clear. How great? (for, that makes the odds) Boldly, I dare say, from a greater than Davids. Thus I shew it, and go no further than the Psalm it self.

These four in ours.
Factum est:
1 A Deliverance from a danger; a greater danger:

1. David called upon GOD in his danger; he knew of it therefore, We did not: we imagined no such thing, but that all had been safe, and we might have gone to the Parliament, as secure as ever. The Danger never dreamt of, that is the Danger.

2. His was, by compassing and hemming in; that is, above ground, and may be descried from a Watch-tower. Ours was by undermining, digging deep under ground, that none could discern.

3. One cannot be beset, but he may have hope to break through, at some part. But here from this, no way, no means, no possibility of escaping. The Danger not to be descried, not to be escaped, that is the danger.

4. His were a swarm of bees (He calleth them so;) they buz and make a noise when they come. Ours, a brood of vipers, mordentes in silentio, still, not so much as a hisse, till the deadly blow had been given.

Ver. 12.

5. His was but of Himself alone; so he saith, I was in trouble; They came about me, kept me in, thrust sore at me: But one person, Davids alone. Ours of a far greater extent; David, and his three Estates with him. Now, though David himself were valued by them at ten thousand of themselves, (and not over-valued neither: for he is worth more, and all Kings like him no less worth:) yet he and they too must needs be more, than He alone. Not only King David had gone, but Queen Esther too; and not only they, but Salomon the young Prince, and Nathan his brother. Nor these were not all. The Scriptures recount, David had Jehosaphat for his Chancellour, Adoram his Treasurer, Seraja his Secretary, Sadoc and Abiathar, and twenty two more, the chief of the Priests, Admo his Judge, Joab his General; all had gone: His forty eight Worthies or Nobles, all they too. The Principal of all the Tribes in the Kingdome: all they too: and many more than these; no man knoweth how many. It is out of question, it had exceeded this of Davids here.

Verse 11, 13:
2 Sam. 18. 3:
2 Sam. 20, 24:
2 Sam. 23:

6. One more. His Danger (he confesseth) was from man: he goeth no further, I will not fear what man doth unto me. This of ours was not: meerly mans, I deny it, it was the Devil himself. The instruments (not as his, a swarm of bees, but) a swarm of Locusts, out of the infernal pit. Not men; no not Heathen men: Their Stories; nay, their Tragedies can shew none near it. Their Poets could never fain any so prodigiously impious. Not men; No, not savage wild men: the Hunnes, the Heruli, the Turcilingi, noted for inhumanity, never so inhumane: Even among those barbarous people, this fact would be accounted barbarous. How then? Beasts. There were at Ephesus, beasts in shape of men; and θηριότης, brutishness is the worst, Philosophy could imagine of our nature. This more than brutish; What Tiger, though never so enraged, would have made the like havock? Then, if the like, neither in the nature of men, nor beasts to be found (it is so unnatural;) we must not look to pattern it upon earth, we must to hell; thence it was certainly, even from the devil. He was a murderer from the beginning, and will be so to the ending. In every sinne of blood, he hath a claw, but all his clawes, in such an one as this: wherein so much blood, as would have made it rain blood; so many baskets of heads, so many pieces of rent bodies cast up and down, and scattered over all the face of the earth. Never such a day; all Joels signes of a fearfull day, blood, and fire, and the vapour of smoak. As he is a murtherer; so we see (in Mark) by his renting and tearing the poor possessed child, he is cruel; and in this, all his cruelties should have met together. Pharoahs and Herods killing innocent and harmless children? yet they spared the Mother: Esau's cruelty, smiting mother, children, and all: Nebuzaradans not sparing the King, nor his Lord: Hamans not sparing Hester, nor her Ladies: Edoms cruelty, not sparing the Sanctuary, nor the walls, down with them to the ground: His own smiting the four corners, and bringing down the house upon the heads of Jobs children. Put to all the cruelties, in Jeremies Lamentations, not the honouring the faces of Nobles, Priests, Judges; the making of so many widows and Orphans; the voice in Rama of Rachel comfortless: Cruelty, more cruel to them, it spared and left behind, than to those it took away It irketh me to stand repeating these; That ever age, or land, but that our age, and this land should foster or breed such Monsters!

One more yet: that this abomination of desolation (so calleth Daniel; so calleth our Saviour, the uttermost extremity of all that bad is: so may this truly:) that this abomination of desolation took up his standing in the holy place.

1. An

1. An Abomination: ſo it is; abhorred of all fleſh, hated and deteſted of all, that but hear it named: yea, they themſelves ſay, they ſhould have abhorred it, if it had taken effect. It is an Abomination.

2. Every Abomination doth not forthwith make deſolate. This had: If ever a deſolate Kingdome upon earth, ſuch had this been, after that terrible blow. Neither root nor branch left, all ſwept away: Strangers called in; murtherers exalted; the very diſſolution and deſolation of all enſued.

3. But this, that this ſo abominable and deſolatory a plot, ſtood in the holy place, this is the pitch of all. For there it ſtood, and thence it came abroad. Undertaken with an holy oath; bound with the holy Sacrament (that muſt needs be in a holy place;) warranted for a holy Act, tending to the advancement of a holy Religion, and by holy perſons, called by a moſt holy name, the name of Jeſus. That theſe holy religious perſons, even the chief of all religious perſons (the Jeſuites) gave not only abſolution, but reſolution, that all this was well done; that it was by them juſtified as lawfull, ſanctified as meritorious, and ſhould have been glorified (but it wants glorifying, becauſe the event failed, that is the grief; if it had not glorified) long yet this, and canonized, as a very good and holy act, and we had had orations out of the Conclave in commendation of it. (Now I think, we ſhall hear no more of it.) Theſe good Fathers they were Davids bees here, came hither, only to bring us honey, right honey they; nor to ſting any body: or (as in the XXII. verſe) they (as builders) came into the land, only for edification; not to pull down, or to deſtroy any thing. We ſee their practice, they begun with rejecting this ſtone, as one that favoured Heretickes at leaſt, and therefore excommunicate, and therefore diſpoſed, and therefore expoſed, to any that could handle a ſpade well, to make a myne to blow him up; Him, and all his Eſtates with him to attend him: (The corner Stone being gone, the walls muſt needs follow.) But then, this ſhrining it (ſuch an abomination) ſetting it in the holy place, ſo ugly and odious: making ſuch a Treaſon as this a religious, miſſal, ſacramental Treaſon; hallowing it with Oriſon, Oath and Euchariſt: this paſſeth all the reſt. I ſay no more, but as our SAVIOUR concludeth, when you ſee ſuch an abomination ſo ſtanding, qui legit intelligat; nay, qui videt. GOD ſend them, that, (not read of it, but) ſee it, and had like to have ſmelt of it, to learn that, they ſhould by it: and ſo I leave it. Verſe 22. Matth. 24. 15.

Tell me now if this were not His doing, and if it ſhould not have been a day of His making, the Devils own making?

This ſhould have been done; this, the danger: what was done? This, the factum fuiſſet: what the factum eſt; All theſe were undone, and blown over; all the undermining diſappointed; all this murder, and cruelty, and deſolation defeated. The mine is diſcovered, the ſnare is broken, and we are delivered. All theſe, the King, Queen, Prince, Nobles, Biſhops, Judges, both Houſes alive, all: not a hair of any of their heads periſhed; not ſo much as the ſmell of fire on any their garments. Give thanks, O Iſrael, unto the Lord thy God in the congregation, from the bottom of the heart; here is little Benjamin, thy Ruler, the Princes of Juda, &c. that they are here, and do ſee them here, and that the Stone theſe Builders refuſed, is ſtill the Head-ſtone of the corner. That ſhould have been done; this was done; and we all that are here this day, are witneſſes of it: Witneſſes above all exception of this factum eſt. Dan. 3. 27. Pſalm 68. 26, 27, 28, &c.

But by whom, whoſe doing? Truly not mans doing this; it was the Lords. A Dæmone factum eſt illud, or fictum eſt illud. It was the Devils doing, or deviſing (the plot:) A Domino factum eſt hoc, This was Gods doing, (the deliverance.) The blow was the devils; The ward was Gods. Not man, but the Devil deviſed it: Not man, but God defeated it. He that ſat in heaven all this while, and from thence looked down and ſaw all this doing of the Devil and his limbs, in that mercy of his, which is over all his works, to ſave the effuſion of ſo much blood, to preſerve the ſouls of ſo many innocents, to keep this land from ſo foul a confuſion, to ſhew ſtill ſome token, ſome ſenſible token upon us for good, that they which hate us may ſee it, and be aſhamed; but eſpecially, that that, was ſo lately united, might not ſo ſoon be diſſolved; He took the matter into his own hand. And if ever God ſhewed, that He had a hook in the Leviathans noſe; that the Devil can go no further than his chain: if ever that there is in him more power to help, than in Sathan to hurt; in this he did it. And as the devils claws to be ſeen in the former; ſo Gods right hand, in this mighty thing (He brought to paſs) and all the fingers of it. 2 A Domino: Pſalm 86. 17:

1. To ſhew it was He. He held his peace and kept ſilence, ſat ſtill, and let it go on, till it came near, even to the very period, to the day of the lot: ſo near, that we may truly ſay, (with King David) as the Lord liveth, uno tantum gradu, nos morſq; dividimur, there was but a ſtep between death and us. We were upon the point of going to the hill, all was prepared, the train, the match, the fire, wood, and all, are we ready to be the ſacrifice, and even then and there, In monte providebat Dominus 8 God provided for our ſafety, even in that very place, where we ſhould have been the burnt offering: from heaven, ſtayed the blow. It was the Lords doing. 1 Sam. 20. 3. Gen. 22. 7. Verſe 8.

2. When Treachery hath his courſe like water, and creeps along like a ſnail, it is the fifty eight Pſalm, then to make it like the untimely fruit of a woman, never to ſee the ſun, not, as in this, arſerunt ſicut ignis in ſpinis, was but a blaze, as in a buſh of thorns: nay, if it come ſo far, it had gone wrong with us: but as in that, priuſquam intelligerent ſpinæ, or ever the thorns gat heat, or the powder, fire: then, ſaith he there, dicit homo, Vtique eſt Deus, Men ſhall ſay, verily, there is a God, and this was His doing. Pſalm 58. 8. Verſe 9. Verſe 11.

3. And not only, that it was bewrayed, but that he made them the bewrayers of it themſelves; and even according to the place (Eccl. 10.) made things with feathers to diſcloſe it: When (as in Pſalm 64.) their own tongues (or, which is all one, their own pens) make them to fall: all that conſider it, ſhall be amazed; and then all men ſhall ſay, This hath God done; for they ſhall perceive it plain, Eccleſ. 10. 20.

it is His work. They ſhall be charged in confeſſion, they ſhall ſwear, they ſhall take the Sacrament to not do it: and yet, contrary to all this, it ſhall come out by themſelves. Was not this Gods doing?

4. Yet further, to ſhew it was ſo: This which was written, was ſo written, as diverſe of profound wiſdom, knew not what to make of it. But then cometh God again (God moſt certainly) and (as Prov. 16. 10. in Prov. 16. 10.) puts קֶסֶם, a very divination, a very Oracle, in the Kings lips, and his mouth miſſed not the matter; made him, as Ioſeph, the revealer of ſecrets, to read the Riddle: giving him wiſdom to make both explication, what they would do; and application, where it was they would
Gen. 41. 38. do it. This was God certainly. This, Pharaoh would ſay, none could, unleſſe he were filled with the Spirit of the holy God. It was A Domino factum.

5 Laſtly, as that, when it was come forth they were not reclaimed: not then, when they ſaw, the hand of God was gone out againſt them, and that it was even God they ſtrave withall: no, but even then, from hidden treachery, fell to open rebellion, and even periſhed in it (if God ſhewed not a miracle of his mercy on them) periſhed there, and periſhed eternally: as this I ſay did (that it was factum a Damone, who never left them till he had brought them thither:) So that (before they came thither) God caſt their own powder in their faces, pondered them and disfigured them with it; and that their quarters ſtand now in pieces, as they meant, ours ſhould: It is the caſe of the CIX.
Pſalm 109. 29. Pſalm. And hereby ſhall they know, that it is thy hand, and that thou Lord haſt done it. How? in that, they are thus cloathed with their own ſhame, and even covered with their own confuſion; that they fall
29. as faſt as they riſe; are ſtill confounded, and ſtill thy ſervants rejoyce. Theſe five (as prints) ſhew, it was Gods hand. It was the Lord, that made the day; it was the day, that the Lord made. Be thou exal-
Pſalm 21. 13. ted Lord in thine own ſtrength: It was thy right hand, that brought this mighty thing to paſſe.

3 Eſt mirabile This will not ſerve the turn. His doing makes it not the Day; His doing a miracle, that makes it: and that it is too. I take no thought, to prove this point: by the Law, the Prophets, the Goſpel. To put them to it; Moſes: enquire now of the dayes that were before us, ſince the day that

By the Prophets, Go to the Iſles and behold, ſend to Kedar and take diligent heed, and ſee if you can poſſibly find the like: if not, confeſs it for marvellous. Come hither (ſaith David) and behold, how marvellous God is! and what is that; that ſuch, as are rebellious, are not able to exalt themſelves. We need not go ſo farre, we have it here to ſee; We may ſay to him, Come hither. By the Goſtel: for, ſo do they (there) acknowledge our Saviours for miracles: Sure we have ſeen ſtrange things to day: We never ſaw it on this faſhion: The Luke 5. 26. like was never ſeen in Iſrael: therefore marvellous certainly. It is now no miracle, no ſtrange
Mark 2. 12. thing, to have a King delivered; every other year, we ſee it, and therefore wonder not at it. But to Matth. 9. 33. ſee King, Queen, their ſeed and all their eſtates delivered, that is mirabile, that is a new thing created on the earth. I conclude: as, that was the Devils doing, and was monſtrous in our eyes; ſo, this is Gods
Jer. 31. 22. doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes. And again, upon all theſe markes: that, as this was a day, the devil would have marred; ſo this is a day, that the Lord made.

A In oculis noſtris, in our eyes. Marvellous then it is: yet, hath it not (as we ſay) his full Chriſtendome, unleſſe it be ſo in our eyes. For the time it was: and that (of the Pſalm) fits us well, When God (ſaith he) turned away
Pſalm 129. 1. the captivity (ſay we, the deſtruction) of his people; then were we like to them that dream. No man, but ſtood in a maze, as if he knew not well, whether he ſaw it waking or dreamt of it, it was ſo ſtrange.

In the eyes of others. And let me go further. Not, in ours only; for (ſure I am) that which followeth there, is true Pſalm 126. 2. (Then ſaid they, inter Gentes) of other nations: The Lord hath done great things for them: and Verſe 3. we are to blame, if we anſwer them not, with the Eccho there following, Yea indeed, the Lord hath done great things for us; for which we have cauſe to rejoyce. If ſtrangers think it ſtrange, and ſay, and write, A ſeculo inauditum, The like was never heard before: if it were marvellous in their eyes, it were very marvellous it ſhould not be ſo, in our eyes too.

Of the very Actors. I add, they that were the Actors of it, in their eyes, it is ſo; and that of the Apoſtle, may aptly Acts 13. 41. be applyed to them. Behold ye deſpiſers, and wonder, and vaniſh, for God hath wrought a work in your dayes, a work which you your ſelves that were the doers, ſhall ſcarce believe, when it ſhall be told; that even aſtoniſhed themſelves, to ſee it go forward ſo long, and ſo ſuddenly caſt down. Nay, I go further, to make it a miracle conſummate. I doubt not, but it was ſtrange newes, even in hell it ſelf, inſomuch as even that place had never hatched the like monſter before. You ſee the wel-
Eſay 14. 16. come they in Hell gave him of Aſſur, (Eſay 14.) What, art thou come, that makeſt the earth to tremble, and doſt ſhake whole Kingdomes? And yet it is well known, all his ſhaking was but in a metaphor: He never made it ſhake actually, as theſe would have done: and therefore this of greater admiration, and (I doubt not, but) more wonderfull in their eyes: And ours are very dimme, if in all other it be, and be not ſo in ours.

III. The duty. Then if ſuch dayes there be, if this of ours be one of them, if the fore-part of the verſe do, then muſt the latter alſo belong to us: If this, the day, the Lord hath made; then, this, the day, wherein we to rejoyce: When He makes, we to make; and our rejoycing in it, is our making of it.

To rejoyce, no hard requeſt, nor heavy yoke, let it not be grievous to us. We love to do it, we ſeek all meanes to do it in all caſes elſe: then to aſſay to do it here. This (ſure) the Prophet would not require, nor make it the office of the day, but that upon ſuch dayes, God himſelf calls us to joy.

And

And even as, when God calleth us to mourning, by black dayes, of famine or warre, or the like; then to fall to feasting or revelling, is that that highly displeaseth God: so, when God, by good dayes, calleth us to joy; then to droop, and not to accommodate our selves to seasons of his sending, is that which pleases him never a whit.

What? (saith Nehemias, upon such a blessed day as this) Droop you to day? Nolite, at no hand do it, Dies enim festus est, it is a festival day: what then? why it is essential, it is the nature of every Feast (saith God in his Law) omnino gaudere, by any meanes in any wise, therein to rejoyce. And Nehemia's promise is to encourage us, that if the strength of the Lord be our joy, the very joy of the Lord shall be our strength. Neh. 8. 9, 10. Numb. 10. 10. Deut. 16. 11.

To conclude: Sure I am, that if the plot had prevailed, it would have been an high Feast in Gath, and a day of Jubilee in Ascalon; The daughters of the uncircumcised would have made it a day in triumph. Let us not be behind them then, but shew as much joy for our saving, as they would certainly have done, for our perishing. 2 Sam. 1. 20.

Exultemus & Lætemur. God loveth our joy should be full; it is not full, except we have both these, the body (as it were) and the soul of joy: the joy outward of the body, and gladnesse inward of the soul. (So much do the two words signifie, in all the three tongues.) Both he will have: for, if one be wanting, it is but semiplenum; half full. Exultemus and Lætemur both.

And he beginneth with Exultemus, the outward: not to our selves within, which we call gaudere in sinu: joy of the bosome; but such, so exuberant, as the streames of it may overflow, and the beames of it shine and shew forth, in an outward sensible exultation. It is a day, so would he have us rejoyce, that, as by day-light it might be seen in our face, habit, and gesture: Seen and heard both: Therefore he saith (at the 15. vers.) the voyce of joy is in the dwellings of the Righteous. And in the dwelling it doth well: But yet, that would not serve his turn: but, open me (saith he at the 19. vers.) the gates of Righteousnesse: that is, the Church-door (his house would not hold him) thither will I go in, and there, in the congregation, in the great congregation, give thanks unto the Lord: And that so great a congregation, that it may constituere diem solennem in condensis usque ad Cornua Altaris, that they may stand so thick in the Church, as fill it from the entrie of the door, to the very edge of the Altar. This same joy that is neither seen nor heard, there is some leven of malignitie in it; he cannot skill of it. He will have it seen in the countenance, heard in the voyce; not only preaching, but singing for this praise. And that, not with voices alone, but with instruments and not instruments of the Quier alone, but instruments of the steeple too, bels and all, that so it may be Hosanna in altissimis, in the very highest key we have. This for exultemus. Exultemus: the outward joy. Verse 15. Verse 19.

But, many a close Hypocrite may do all this, and many a counterfeit Shimei and Sheba did all this, to David; got them a fleering forced countenance, taken-on joy: And therefore the other; that God will have his joy, not be the joy of the countenance alone, a clear face, and a cloudy overcast heart; he will have the gladnesse of the heart too, of the inner-man: Cor meum & caro mea; the heart, as well as the flesh, to be joyfull. The joy of the soul is the soul of joy: not a body without a soul, which is but a carcase. Strange children may (and will) dissemble with me (saith the Psalm 18. 44.) dissemble a gladnesse, for fear of being noted; and yet within, in heart, you wot what. But, God calleth for his de fontibus Israel, which we read, from the ground of the heart. That is (indeed) the true fountain of joy, that our lips may be fain, when we sing unto Him, and so may our soul which he hath delivered. Nay, he delivered both: and therefore, both the body to rejoyce, and the soul to be glad. This doth Lætemur add, to exultemus. Lætemur, the inward joy. Psalm 16. 9. Psalm 18. 44. Psalm 68. 26. Psalm 71. 21.

If then we be agreed that we will do both, I come to the last, how to order our joy, that it may please Him, for whom it is undertaken. It is not every joy that he liketh. Merry they were, and joyfull (they thought) that kept their Kings day (Hos. 7.) by taking in bowl after bowl till they were sick again. So they that Malachy speaks of; there came nothing of their feasts but dung (bear with it, it is the Holy Ghost his own term) that is, all in the belly and belly-chear. So they, that sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play, and there was all; that is the Calves-feast: a Calf can do as much. But with none of these was God pleased: and as good no joy, as not to the purpose: as not to please him. How to order our joy. Hosea 7. 5. Mal. 2. 3. Exod. 32. 6. 1 Cor. 10. 5.

That it may be to the purpose, that God may take pleasure in it, it must begin at Hosanna, at Aperite mihi portas Justitiæ, at the Temple-door; there must it go in, it must blesse, and be blessed in the house of the Lord. I will first make joyfull in my house of Prayer (it is God by Esay:) the stream of our joy, must come from the spring-head of Religion. Verse 9. Esay 56. 7.

Well then, to the Church we are come: so far onward. When we are there, what is to be done? Somewhat we must say, we must not stand mute. There to stand still, that, the Prophet cannot skill of. That then, we may (there) say something, he here frames, he here indites a Versicle, which after grew into such request, as no feast ever without it, without an Hosanna: it grew so familiar, as the very children were perfect in it. The summe and substance whereof (briefly) is no more, but (which we all desire) that God would still save, still prosper, still blesse him, that in His name, is come unto us (that is) King David himself, whom all in the house, and all of the House of the Lord blesse in His name. Verse 25. Matth. 21. 9.

And to very good purpose doth he this: for, joy hath no fault, but that it is too short, it will not last, it will be taken from us too soon. It is ever a bar, in all joy, tolletur à vobis; subject to the worme, that Jonas gourd was. It standeth us therefore in hand; to begin with Hosanna, so to joy, as that we may long joy to pray for the continuance, that it be not taken from us; ever remembring, the true temper of joys is (exultate in tremore) not without the mixture of some fear.

Psalm 2.11. Prov. 27.1. For, this day, we see what it is, a joyfull day: We know not (saith Solomon) what the next day will be: and if not what the next day, what the next year much lesse. What will come, we know not; what our sinnes call for to come, that we know; even that God should call to judgement, if not by fire, by somewhat else. If it be but for this, it concerns us nearly, to say our Hosanna, that the next year be as this. It is our wisdome therefore, to make the meanes, for the continuance of it, that God would still stablish the good work, He this day wrought in us; still blesse us, with the continuance of the same blessings.

And this that we may do, not faintly but chearfully with the lifting up of our soules therefore, as far as art or spirit can do it, he hath quickned his Hosanna, that he may put spirit and life in us, to follow him in it, with all fervour of affection: four times, twice with Anna, and twice with Na;
Verse 25. either of them before, and after; but eight words, and four of them interjections: all to make it passionate; and that so, as (in the original) nothing can be devised more forcible; and so, as it is hard, in any other tongue, to expresse it; which made the Evangelist let it alone: and retain the Hebrew word still. But, this, as near as I can, it soundeth. Now good Lord save us yet still, now good Lord prosper us yet still. Be to us as last year, so this, and all the yeares to come, Jesus a Saviour, yesterday, and to day, and the same for ever.

And three things doth he thus earnestly pray for, and teacheth us to do the like. 1 To save, 2 prosper, and 3 blesse.

1 To save: that should be first with us; it is commonly last: We have least sense of our soules. To save us, with the true saving health; (it is a word whereof our Saviour Jesus hath His name) it importeth the salvation of the soul; properly to that it belongeth, and hath joyned to it Matth. 21.9. Hosanna in the Gospel (Hosanna in excelsis) to shew it is an high and heavenly salvation.

2 Then, to prosper. If He but grant us the former alone, to have our soules saved, though without prosperitie, though with the dayes of adversity, it is sors sanctorum, the lot of many a Saint of his, of farre more worth than we: Even so, we are bound to thank Him, if, even so, we may be but saved. But, if he had also prosperitie of the outward, to the saving of the inward man, that Psalm 1.3. not so much as a leaf of us shall wither, but look what we do shall prosper; and that, whatsoever men of evil counsels do, shall not prosper against us: if He not only vouchsafe us Hosanna in excelsis, but Hosanna de profundis too, from deep cellers, deep vaults, those that dig deep to undermine our prosperitie; if He add the shaddow of his wings, to shelter us from perils, to the light of his countenance, to save us from our sins, then have we great cause to rejoyce yet more: and, both with exultemus from without, and lætemur from within, to magnifie his mercie, and to say with the Prophet, Praised be the Lord, that (not only taketh care for the safety, but taketh pleasure in the prosperitie of his servants.

3 Lastly, because both these the one and the other; our future salvation, by the continuance of his Religion and truth among us, and our present prosperitie (like to walls) meet upon the head-stone of the corner; depend both, first, upon the name of the Lord, and next upon him, that in his name, and with his name, is come unto us (that is) the King: (So, do both the Evangelists S. Luke
Luke 19.38. and S. John supply; and, where we read, Blessed be he, there they read Blessed be the King that com-

Psalm. 125.1. stone be fast; so the two walls, that meet, never fall asunder. If otherwise: but I will not so much as put the case but as we pray, so trust, it shall never be removed, but stand fast for ever.

This then we all wish that are now in the House of the Lord, and we that are of the House of the Lord, do now and ever, in the Temple and out of it, morning and evening, night and day, wish and pray both, that he would continue forth his goodnesse, and blesse with length of dayes, with strength of health, with increase of all honour, and happinesse, with terrour in the eyes of his enemies, with grace in the eyes of his subjects, with whatsoever David, or Solomon or any King, that ever was happy, was blessed with; Him, that in the Name of the Lord is come to us, and hath now these four yeares stayed with us, that he may be blessed in that name, wherein he is come, and by the Lord, in whose Name he is come, many and many yeares yet to come.

And, when we have put this incense in our phials, and bound this sacrifice with cords to the Altar fast, we blesse you and dismiss you, to eat your bread with joy, and to drink your wine with a cheerfull heart: for God accepteth your work; your joy shall please Him: this Hosanna shall sanctifie all the joy, shall follow it.

To end then. This Day, which the Lord hath thus made so marvellously, so marvellously and mercifully; let us rejoyce in the Maker, for the making of it, by His doing on it that deed, that it is so marvellous in our eyes, in all eyes: returning to the beginning of the Psalme, and saying with

KINGS MAIESTIE

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDCVII.

PSALM. CXXVI.

In convertendo Dominus captivitatem Sion, &c.

Verſ. 1. When the Lord brought again the Captivity of Sion, we were like them that dreame.

2 Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with joy: Then ſaid they among the Heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them.

3 The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we rejoyce.

4 O Lord, bring again our Captivity, as the rivers in the South.

THe word Captivity is enough to give us light, when and why this Pſalme was firſt indited; namely upon their returne from the Captivity. Of which returne of theirs, it may truly be ſaid, it was one of the greateſt; nay, it was the very greateſt Delivery that ever God vouchſafed his people. Their eſtate no where ſo miſerable as there; witneſſe the book of Lamentations. Their caſe never ſo joyfull, as returning thence; witneſſe this booke of Pſalms. No benefit ſo much celebrated: None, ſo many Pſalmes as it. Divide the whole Book into foure parts, one fourth part is, for this returne: either directly of ſet purpoſe (as here are fifteen together) or recorded in Pſalmes, though made upon other purpoſe: ſtill, as the greateſt Delivery that ever they had.

Yet, this I confeſſe unto you, that this Delivery of theirs (ſuch as it were) falls ſhort of that of ours as on this day, wherewith yet I ſhall be faine to match it. But, this I muſt tell you before hand: to have this of ours fully patterned in all points, we muſt not looke for it; The Scripture hath it not. They had no powder, then, it was not found. If they had had, they would have uſed it, but for the murder of perſons: they knew no other murder. But, to murther all three Estates of a Realme at a clap! Facti sunt sicut somniantes, or rather, Facti non sunt sicut somniantes, they never dreamt of any such. And what then is our case, think we, that have received from GOD such a Deliverance, as we can find no match for it;

Eſtates

But well, though these Psalms of the Captivity come not fully home, be not altogether like ours; yet, because there be none liker, none that come neerer, we must content our selves with these, and either take our Texts hence, or take none at all.

In taking this then, and applying it to the present, there shall need but one word to be altered, that is, the word Captivity. But for it, all else would runne very cleer and currant: if we might but change that one word, and instead of reading, When the Lord turned away the captivity of Sion, we might thus read, When the Lord turned away the blowing up of Sion: all besides, every word else, would suit well and keep perfect corespondency.

It is true, it was not a captivity, that was turned away from us. And yet it is hard to say whether it might not have proved to that too: and whether God, in turning it away, did not happily turne away a Captivity. But, if not a Captivity, that He turned away from us, was worse than any Captivity. This Psalme sheweth it; They that are Captives, how miserable soever their case be, yet have hope of returning, as these had and did. But, if this of ours had taken place, we had been sure enough for ever returning: we had been (all) past singing, In convertendo.

This one word being changed (and that without wrong to the Text, for it is for a greater) all else will fall in and follow of it self. 1. As that of theirs, so this of ours for all the world, like a dreame. 2. As they, among the Heathen, then said of them: So, they, of other Nations, now said of us; that GOD had been our good LORD, for bringing us again, if not from the captivity of Babylon, from Babylon (I am sure) that is from an horrible and fearefull confusion, which He turned away from this Land, and from us all.

The Summe and Division.

To set then this Psalme, first for them, and then for our selves. It is a Psalme of Degrees (the title is so) and two degrees there be in it. No new ones, but the usuall; which we must still fall upon, if we deal with the Psalmes: (All the Psalms are reduced to them, even to those two words, Halleluja and Hosanna, Praises and Prayer; Halleluja, Praises for Deliverance obtained; Hosanna, Prayers for obtaining the like, upon the like need,) 1 The Halleluja in the foure first verses: 2. The Hosanna in the last. I durst not sever them; they prosper not, where they go not together.

I. The Halleluja or praise hath two degrees, which (as in all other things, so in this) make it praise-worthy. 1 The Stuffe, and the 2 Workmanship.

The Stuffe (or matter) I call, The turning back the Captivity of Sion: and two degrees in it: 1. That Sion is suffered to go into Captivity. 2. That GOD turneth away the Captivity of Sion. This is Halleluja for the stuffe.

And again, Halleluja for the Workmanship. That God did not deliver Sion Vtcunque; but, so deliver her, as the manner was memorable. The manner is set down in two degrees (Which two are, as it were, the embroidery of the other. 1. Turned it so strangely, as when it was done, it seemed rather a dreame, than a thing done waking, Facti sumus, &c. 2 Again, turned it so memorably, as the Heathen talked of it, Tum dicebant, &c.

Which Dicebant divides it self 1 into the sound among the Heathen (in the second verse,) and the 2 Eccho of it in Israel (in the fourth.)

Then cometh the conclusion (the best conlusion of all) Facti sumus, &c. This their Halleluja.

II. Their Halleluja is no sooner done, but close upon it cometh their Hosanna. To their knees they get them, and pray, Converte Domine. And in this also two degrees: 1 First they pray to turne it. 2 And then, so to turne it, as the streames in the south. In the south (that is) the wilderneſſe; liking their Captivity to a desart, and their returning to streames of water. And what more needfull, or what more welcome than water in the wilderneſſe? These are the degrees and steps, in theirs. The same steps will we tread in our own; to shew, that we may with good right convert to our own use, this Psalme In Convertendo.

VER. 1.

I. Halleluiah:

1. 1 For the work, 1 The Captivity of Sion. Psal. 48. 2.

HAlleluja first for the work, then for the work-manship: The work is, The Lord turned away the captivity of Sion. 1 First, of the Captivity of Sion; 2 Then, of the LORDS turning it.

The Captivety of Sion: I aske first, why of Sion? why not the captivity of Ierusalem, Iuda, Israel? Ierusalem, Iuda, Israel, were led away Captives, no lesse than Sion. They, the greater, and more generall: why not the Captivity of them; but of Sion? It should seeme, there is more in Sion's, than in the rest, that choice is made of it before the rest. Why? what was Sion; We know, it was but a Hill in Ierusalem, on the North-side. Why is that Hill so honoured? No reason in the world, but this; That, upon it, the Temple was built: And so, that Sion is much spoke of,

and

and much made of, it is only for the Temples sake. For whose sake it is (even for His Church,) that the LORD loveth the gates of Sion, more than all the dwellings of Iacob. Loveth her more, and so her captivity goeth neerer Him, and her delivery better pleaseth Him, than all Jacob besides. This maketh Sions Captivity to be mentioned chiefly, as chiefly regarded by GOD, and to be regarded by His. As (we see) it was: When they sat by the waters of Babylon, that which made them weep, was, When we remembred thee, O Sion: that their greatest greife. That their greatest greife, and this their greatest joy; Lætati sumus, when newes came, (not saith the Psalme, in domos nostras, We shall go now every on to his own house, but) in Domum Domini ibimus, We shall go to the house of the Lord, we shall appeare before the GOD of Gods in Sion.

Pſal.87.2.

Pſal.137.2.

Pſal.122.1.

Sion, God loved and favoured high: yet how dear soever Sion is in his sight, for Sions sinnes, propter peccata populi mei, she sometimes is forsaken and afflicted by him. Though He take not His mercy utterly from her, nor suffer His truth quite to faile, yet he visiteth her offences with the rod, and her deeper transgressions with scourges: and among the rest, with this scourge of Captivity.

Pſal.89.33. 32.

To be plagued at home, in their own Land, is but a rod in comparison: Captivity is a scourge, in respect of it, and a sharp one. To be bereft of all we have, and of (that, which they have, that have nothing else (liberty, to be carried into a strange land; to be made bond and thrall to the proud commands of an Enemy; Wo is me for Sion (saith Ieremy.) And no man shall need but to read his Lamentations only. There is, in particular to be seen, the evill of captivity, how sharp a scourge it is. The Book was made for that end.

But, of all Captivities, none so evil, as that of Babel: If any other be a scourge, that is a Scorpion. In Ægypt, their case was more tolerable: their soules were free there, howsoever their bodies in Servitude; they might serve GOD yet, they were not compelled to fall down before Isis or Osiris. Only, the Captivity of Babel is the captivity of soules, no lesse than bodies. There they must fall down before the great Idol in the field Dura, or be thrown into the furnace. Babel is the worst place that is, for Sion to be carried captive to. And this is the first degree, Sion is afflicted, and that with Captivity; with the Captivity of Babel. Now to In Convertendo Dominus.

Dan.3.1.6.

They that fell by the sword (saith Ieremy) were in better case than they that were into Captivity; save only that, this poor hope they had left. They might returne again. They might returne, and so they did. Sion went into Captivity; but her Captivity went not so far, but it turnes again. It is one of the Songs of Sion. Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth up, &c. And again, Many a time have they afflicted me, &c. that is, many and many times more; but yet, they have not prevailed against me finally. Here is a proof of it. Though brought to Babel, yet not left there; though led into Captivity, yet restored to liberty. There may be snares, for her, but the end is, laqueus contritus est: there may be bonds, but the end, dirupisti vincula, Thou hast broken my bonds in sunder. Sions captivity is still turned backe.

2 The Lords Turning of it. Lam.4.9.

Pſal.129.1,2.

Pſal.124.7.

Pſal.116.16.

But who shall turne it? In convertendo Dominus. Cyrus may seeme to have done it: But alas, Cyrus is a great Monarch, and they a sort of poor Captives. Besides, he is a Heathen man, an Idolater, a stranger to them and their Religion, no wayes like to turne or to be turned; Quis revolvet nobis hunc lapidem, what engine shall bring this about? Dominus, the LORD shall. For, though the hearts of Monarchs be as rivers of many streames, yet, In manu Domini cor regis (saith a great Monarch) In His hand their hearts be; Et quocunque vult convertet, and he can turne them, as the streames in the the south. (This verse referring to that of Salomon.) It is the LORD then, the great Καρδιοστρέφης, the great Turner of the greatest Monarchs hearts, that thus turnes Cyrus's heart. Cyrus being turned, his Decree came forth for their returne. A Domino factum est istud; It was his doing; they saw it, they noted it; and they had been to be noted of great blindnesse, if they had not noted it; But, note it they did. So they begin one of their Songs, Nisi quia Deus; and again they repeat it, Nisi quia Deus, if the Lord had not done it, it had not been done. But for Him, they had been in Babel, still. Thus much [1] for Sions Captivtiy, and [2] the Lords turning: The Lord turned away the Captivity of Sion. So have ye the worke: Hallelujah for the worke.

Mark.16.3.

Prov.21.1.

Pſal.118.23.

Pſal.124.1.2.

And again, Hallelujah for the Workmanship. To escape a Captivity, is enough, it skils not how; howsoever, it is well, thanks be to God. But, it receiveth increase, and is made capable of a higher degree, by the Matter: and that greatly. All captivities, are grievous; specially, that of Babel: And all returnes joyfull; specially, from thence. Yet is even that made more joyfull, two wayes; set higher by these two degrees: 1. That it was like a dreame. It is ever a signe of a very strange event, when men, at the seeing ought, though they be awake, yet think they are not; though they do not dreame, yet think, they are in a dreame. 2. That they among the Heathen talked of it. It is ever a signe of a famous accident, when other men (specially, other Nations, speak, and speak magnificè of it.

2 Hallelujah: For the worke, manship, or matter.

Facti sumus sicut somniantes, We were as it were in a dreame, it came so unlook't for. For, so come dreames (we know without looking for: (Men know not, when they go to bed, what they shall dreame of.) And it is a benefit to have a benefit come, like a dream, without waiting longer for it.

So strang as like a dreame: 1 Unlookt for.

Then, it came without any labour of our parts: That, that cometh in a dreame, cometh to us sleeping; we doing nothing to it, or toward it, more than if we had been fast asleep. And, it is a benefit to have a benefit come like a dreame, without paines-taking for it.

2 Without labour.

But neither of these is it: that it was unlaboured for, or that it was unlook't for. But that, it was so strange, as no man would ever have looked for it: so strange as well might we dreame of some such thing, but (a wake.) never any saw the like. The nature of dreams is such: Men, in 3 Beyond hope.

Gen. 28. 17. 37. 9. Dan. 2. 31, 32. dreames, have such strange things appear to them, as would never come into the mindes of any that were awake. They see ladders so long as will reach up to heaven: they see the Moone and stars worshipping them: They see men with heads of gold and brests of silver, and I wot not what things: incredible things, of the phansies figuring, but never of the senses apprehending. This maketh things by all likelihood, to seem like dreames. And such was their case, at the coming out of Cyrus's proclamation, for their returne. It was so little looked for, that ever it should come: it was so above all they could hope for, when it did come, that, what with the suddennesse, and what with the strangenesse, for the present, it seemed to them a dreame of the night, rather than any vision of the day. Well might they say, Facti sumus, &c.

A pleasant dream. Gen. 28. 15. Dan. 4. 5. A dreame it was. To specifie what kind of dreame. Iacob dreamed, and was much comforted with it. Nebuchadnezzar dreamed, and was exceedingly frighted with it. This (here) was of the nature of Iacobs; a comfortable pleasant dreame: You may see by the effects in the second verse; Tum repletum est &c. And sure, the impression of the phansie, no where sheweth it self more powerfull, than in dreams. Men shall be so affected, as they shall even laugh out, as they shall even talke aloud; yea so that they shall even wake with it many times. This here was such; Joyful, it filled their hearts full of joy; so full, as it even brake forth, and ranne over, over into the countenance, Os risu; over into the tongue, Lingua jubilo. The face is a mirrour, to shew, how the minde is affected: the tongue a trumpet, to sound out the secrets of the heart. You might see their joy, in their face, as in a mirrour: you might hear it from their tongue as from a trumpet. A sign it was, the fountaine was full, when both the Cisterns thus run over.

And true withall. But, what is it for a dreame, to be pleasant, if it be not true withall? Nay; there is no more miserable case, than of him that dreameth the pleasant Ivorie-dreame, and when he awaketh findes it nothing so. Dreames he is at a feast, and waketh all hungry: dreames, he is rich and; waking, findes nothing in his hands. This was not such: it was per corneam portam, a true one; not to be let goe for a dreame, for it proved more than a dreame, a reall thing indeed. For, when they came out of their dreame, all the Country about rang of it, Tum dicebant, &c.

And there can be no better way, to come to a true judgment of what befalleth us, than by dicebant, what other men say of it. Men are commonly over sensible of their own joy: a truer estimation would be taken, from them that are no parties to it. Best, hear what they say.

Especially, if it be not only Dicebant inter homines, but inter Gentes too; if they be not single men, but whole Nations. Their Dicebant is yet a degree further. For, many a deliverance there is, the world never talkes of, and yet, great for all that: but, those that fill the eyes and the mouths of whole Nations, must needs be primæ magnitudinis: and so was this then. Notice was taken of this, by those inter gentes, and no other talke for the time, but of it. This sheweth, it might well be as strange, as a dreame, but was no dreame indeed.

The heathen were either strangers and regarded them not; or enemies, and maligned them. No fear, that such (especially, the latter sort) should dreame too. No; Envie sleeps not. And waking and seeing it; no fear, they will be partiall and confesse more than truth. Commonly, their nature is to abate, diminish, extenuate: no fear of amplifying at their hands. If they say, it is great, it is great indeed. And here, both strangers and enemies confesse it; therefore we may be sure it was no vulgar or ordinary turning.

2 So memorable, as Heathen talked of it. And truly, great reason they had so to say; It could be no pollicy (they say) for Cyrus, to send them backe. He had them now safe, and well broken to service, by seventie years continuance. They might prove slippery, and revolt; and so he repent his sending them home. Besides, he sent none back, of all the rest of his Captives, being (yet) of his owne Religion, which these were not. They saw (then) no reason for it, in the world. Then, to let them goe; and in such sort to let them goe; with so ample a commission: with so rich rewards, to build againe. This, when it came to their notice, it made them muse; it found them talke, it even drew from them this dicebant.

VER. 2. The Sound among the Heathen. Then said they of the Heathen.] And, what is it they said? It is to the purpose. In this (as in many other) the Heathens saying cannot be mended. This they say: 1 That they were no quotidian, or common things; but great. 2 Then these great things they ascribe not to chance; that they happened not, but were done. 3 Then done by God himself: they see God, in them. 4. Then, not done by God at randome, without any particular aime: but purposely done for them. 5 And yet there is more in magnificavit facere (if we looke well.) For, magna fecit would have served all this: but in saying magnificavit facere, they say magnifecit illos, ut magna faceret pro illis, He magnified them, or set greatly by them, for whom He would bring to passe so great a work. This, said they among the Heathen.

And it is pitie, the Heathen said it, and that the Jewes themselves spake not these words, first. But they were so ravished with joy at the first, as they were to be borne with. But now, finding the Heathen, so saying; and finding, it was all but true, they said; they must needs find themselves bound to say at least so much: (And more they could not: for more cannot be said.) So much then, and no lesse than they. And this addeth a degree to the dicebant. That the sound of it was so great among the Heathen, as it made an Eccho even in Jury it self.

That

That Ecchо then followeth (in the 3 verses) The person only changed: Nobiscum, for Cum illis, there's all. And indeed, Sion should have been much to blame, if the Heathen should see those things for great, and God to be the Deus of them, and Sion should not discerne them for such. If the Heathen shoud say magnificavit Dominus facere, and Sion should not magnifie Him for this so magnificent a worke; if this Confession should even be wrung from the Heathen, and should not come voluntary from the Children of Sion, whom it more neerely concerned a great deale.

RVFI. The Ecchо of it in Israel.

And what, shall there be no difference between Sions and the Heathens discebant, but only Nobiscum? Yes: for though the words be the same, there may be oddes in the uttering. God forbid, but Sion should say, in another manner key, as the left.

The Conclusion. Facti sumus Lætantes.

And yet, there is some amends for Sion: the words are not all out the same. Here is a hæmistichium more in Sions; in which they plainly expresse the odds, betweene their affections and the Heathens. This it is; Facti sumus lætantes: that is, the Heathen do Dr; but rather wondring, than joycing at it. They say it, because they cannot choose but say it, it is so evident: but they bite the lippe when they have done; they could have been well content to have spared the speech well content, that God had not done it, that they might not have said it. In a word: they say it without lætantes; but, Sion saith it joying, and joyeth in saying it: saith it, and, in saying it, say at the end of it, Facti sumus lætantes. And this (here) is true joy, grounded upon the due consideration of the matter, by occasion of the heathens speech. The other (before) was like the laughing in a dreame. But this, true joy; and in signe thereof, it was at the first but facti sumus sicut somniantes; but here, it is facti sumus (not sicut, but) verè lætantes, truly joyfull indeed. And this maketh up their Hallelujа.

Their Hallelujа thus performed: they come to their Hosanna straight. And why so straight? They were sicut somniantes, so they say: And, dreames (we know) have this quality, they are but short. And they were facti lætantes, and, joy commonly is of the same nature, lasteth not much longer than a dream, but vanisheth quickly, as a dreame when one awaketh. Dreames, and joyes, as soone had, so soone lost. That therefore their lætantes prove not sicut somniantes, to keep their joy waking, this they thinke, their wisest way: No sooner to make an end of Hallelujа, but straight to begin their Hosanna; make the next verse to their thanks for In convertendo, a petition, Converte. And that to Him, that granted that; to grant this. In convertendo Dominus, Converte Domine: (that is, Hosanna to Him in the highest.)

VER. 4. I. Their Hosanna. Psal. 73. 22.

Converte Domine: Why how now? But very now, they praised Him for turning it away, and do they now pray Him, to turne it away? How hangs this together: to pray to have that turned, that is turned already? They may seeme to be scarce yet out of their dreame. Not so: These two Converses, and these two Captivities are not all one. S. Augustine saith well (upon solutis doloribus inferni, Act. 2.) that, two manner of wayes, a thing is loosed: 1 Either, after we are already snared; 2 or else before-hand, that we be not snared with it at all. CHRIST loosed those sorrows, this latter way, which is farre the better way of the twaine. And even so, two wayes is a captivity (or any mischiefe else) turned away: 1 by an after-delivery, when it is come, 2 or by a fore-hand prevention, yet it do come. The Grecians expresse it, by Prometheus and Epimetheus: the Latines, by Antevorta, and Postvorta; The Schoole-men, by præveniendo, and subveniendo: But, prevention is ever the better. Better a good Buckler, to keep off the blow; than a good Plaister, to heale the hurt of it. Better never see Babel, than returne from it. The captivity of the first verse was come, and is now come and gone: Who knoweth, whether there be any other to come? If there be, Converte Domine, turne it away before-hand; take order there never come any more. So, it is plaine, for all the former In convertendo, they may well pray this last too, notwithstanding. They may well pray it; and good reason they have to pray it. The children of Edom, and the rest of their evil neighbours, that shewed their good-will in this captivity past, are the same men still; still carry the same mindes. No year, no day goeth over their heads, but they wish and contrive, to bring another, either captivity, or some mischiefe else, I know not what. Therefore Converte Domine is no more than needs.

1 They pray to turne it. Act. 2. 24.

Psal. 137. 7.

Now, as Converte Domine is, what they wish done: Sicut torrentes is, the manner how they wish it done. Turne it, and so turne it, as the streames in the South. By the South, understanding the South climate; on which side, lay Arabia deserta. All South-ward from them, was nothing but a drie and waste wilderneſſe. It is of the nature of a wilderneſſe to be without water. And what streames are there then in the wilderneſſe? None, but such as they call Land-waters. And how are they turned or brought thither? No other way, than by melting the snow on the great high hils there: which being dissolved by the summer-sun, come down so plentifully, that all the pooles are filled with water, so strongly, that they turne the course of mighty rivers. Their meaning then is, 1. They have as great need of delivery, as the South climate hath of water. 2. Captivity is as congealed snow, and they frozen fast in it, that they cannot stirre. 3. They would have it turned, but by no violent way, but even only by thawing and melting the hearts of Princes (Cyrus and the rest) set against them (whose hearts Salomon compareth to these streames:) by that, rather than 2 The manner of turning it.

Psal. 107. 35.

than by any other way. 4, That never was water-ſtreame more welcome to the way-faring man, in the wilderneſs, than this ſhall be to them. For, we read of two manner of turnings they had. 1 One out of Ægypt, in violent and tempeſtuous manner: The ſea fled, Jordan was driven back, Pharaoh was drowned; Sehon and Og ſlain; very great ado there was. 2 And now this, out of Babylon; neither by an Army, nor by main ſtrength, but by my Spirit (ſaith the Lord) breathing upon Cyrus, and in mild and gentle manner melting his heart: and there was all. A converſion (not as that of Pharaoh, but) as this of Cyrus: not as the Rivers of the North; but, as the ſtreames in the South, is it they pray for. So pray they; and ſo will all pray that are well adviſed. This farre their Hoſanna.

The Application. Our Halleluja.

Now to alter the property of all this, and to convert it to our own uſe: and to ſhew firſt, that both this Halleluja; and then that this Hoſanna, will no leſſe agree to us, and our Queere (if not more, but certainly more) a reaſon muſt needs be granted, of all the former points. And in them (there is no remedy, but) we muſt fall to meaſuring, that it may appear there is great odds, between this of ours, and that of theirs. Conſequently, that we are bound to give thanks with another manner of Halleluiah, than ever did they. And that, whether we look to that which was turned away; ours was worſe: to the manner of turning it ſelf; ours was better: to the meanes of this turning: ours to be preferred: to the likeneſſe of a dreame, to the dicebant inter Gentes, to the fuit ſummus Sacerdos: in all and every point, we are ſtill beyond them.

Our turning and delivery, the greater far.

That which was turned away, in them, was a Captivity, for term of yeares: In us, was an utter deſolation: as much odds between them, as between lying in priſon, and flying in pieces. Captivity (as we ſay by this) eſt ex converſibile, hath hope to turn again; utter deſolation being uncapable of converſionis, put all hope or poſſibility of ever returning more.

1 For that which was turned away. 1 Cor. 1. 9.

And what manner of deſolation; For, we may find Captivities to match theirs: For a people to be carried away captive, is no new thing upon earth. But, this deſolation of ours puts down all that ever were. What ſhould I ſay, but as the Apoſtle of that which paſſeth the ſpeech of all ſpeakers: Oculus non vidit, &c. The like never was ſeen, heard, nor entred in the heart of man.

2 For the manner of turning.

And our turning, therefore, the better: and not only therefore; but in it ſelf, ſimply. Two turnings we ſaid there were: 1 By prevention, yer it come: and 2 ſubvention, after it is come; and prevention the better, and that was ours. Theirs was by Poſſeſſion, light upon them firſt. Ours came not at us at all; and yet, very near us it came, as near as could be, not to hurt us; and even then, away it was turned. So much the better (ſhould I think) we will reckon of it. That the blow, or blowing up was turned, and we not hurt: rather than we hurt, and lie long on the Chirurgians hand, and at laſt be cured. That of theirs lay heavy upon them for a long time, yer it was turned away: Seventy yeares full. Ours was turned, in the turning of a hand. And we know, it is a doubling of the pleaſure, to do it at once.

3 For the meanes.

As in the manner; ſo in the meanes of this turning, we paſſe them farre. In that of theirs, the immediate cauſe of their turning, under GOD, was the turning of Cyrus the Kings heart, which GOD hath in His hand, and turneth at the ſtreames of water. And was not ours ſo too? And yet ſtill, after a more excellent manner. Theirs, a Heathen; ours, a Chriſtian Prince: theirs, a ſtranger; ours, our own. To the ſtrange turning of whoſe heart, to turn the letter into a ſtrange conſtruction, next to GOD Himſelf, we may all truly aſcribe our deſtruction then turned away. This for the 1 turning, the 2 manner, and 3 meanes of it.

4 For the likeneſs to a dream: Ezra 1. 1.

Now at the time of this turning, if they were ſicut ſomniantes, we were more. 1. They were delivered by a Proclamation: Proclamations (we know) come not forth, till it be well on of the day, when the ſtreets are well filled with people to hear them, but never early in the morning. But, the newes of ours came betimes, when a great part of us were not out of our beds, and ſcarce well awake; ſo, it might be affirmed of us literally, we were then in good earneſt, ſicut ſomniantes.

Acts 12. 7.

2. S. Peter was awake, broad awake, when the Angel made his chaines fall off: he cloathed himſelf, ſhod himſelf, girt himſelf, went thorow three gates one after another, and after that, thorow a whole ſtreet; yet that that happened, was ſo exceeding ſtrange to him, that all this while, he thought he was but in a dream. Our caſe was S. Peters for all the world; we were truly delivered, and yet many of us got up, and were fully ready, yer we could get our ſelves ready to believe, but that he did ſtill Viſum videre: Sicut ſomniantes, & ecce vigilantes.

Acts 12. 9.

3. They had ſenſe of their captivity, their mind ran on it; the more their mind ran on it, the more like to dream of it. We had not ſo much: it was the further end of our thought, and therefore more like a dream, more unlooked for.

4. They were not faſt aſleep, they did ſomewhat toward their delivery: with long, often, and earneſt prayer; they did ſollicite GOD; they and their Prophets for them. We prayed not, we knew no cauſe to pray: nothing at all did we to it or toward it, it ran into our nets, while we were on ſleep.

5 For the joy of the dream.

Shall I ſay any thing of the joy of the dream? This I may: that we paſſe them in that. They were in a ſtrange Country: they muſt look more demurely, they muſt ſpeak more ſparingly. We were in our own, we might do it the more freely, both in countenance and ſpeech. And for the time, ſo we did.

6 For Dicebant.

And will ye now ſee, we paſſe them in dicebant. Theirs was dicebant: but of ours, not only dicebant, but Scribebant and excudebant; ſaid it; writ it, and printed it. And what, as this here, here, Magna? Nay, Magna, Et à facto inaudita, such, so great, as the like was never heard before.

This for dicebant. And for inter Gentes, we passe them there. For, who talked of theirs? a handfull of Nations in comparison: but those that bordered about. They in effect say as much? Noe Gentes, not all: but inter Gentes, some among them. A small part of the World, compared to ours: more remote, a great deal went to our Dicebant. I may safely say, Quæ regio in terris, What land is there, whether the fame of it is not gone, where it is not spoken of? and we by meanes of it renowned and made famous over all the earth; even to Turks and Infidels (for, thither also it is come, how GOD hath dealt with us.) Yea, even our very Enemies themselves (I doubt not) when it was told in Gath, and published in the streets of Ascalon; even in Rome it self, even they in the Conclave, even the Pope himself, helped to make up this dicebant; though not aloud that their voice may be heard in the streets, yet among themselves, in private, were forced to say as much as that, the greatnesse of ours received witnesse from the mouth of our enemies. 7 For Inter Gentes.

Our dicebant is double to theirs then, and so is our facti sumus lætantes. There is, as a joy for our own delivery; so likewise another joy, for the fall of our enemies: they had the former only. We, both former and latter. For, in theirs, they to whom they had been Captives, let them go, and there was all; and they were glad of it: but they of Babylon became not Captives to Sion. But in ours, not only the Captivity was turned away, but we led captivity captive; which is the greatest Joy of all. They that meant ours, instead of ours, found their own: and fell into their own 8 For facti sumus lætantes.
pit, and in their own net taken. turn, became captives themselves: and as they intended, our members should, so theirs (now) rent, and stretched one from the other. So, in every point, they fall short of us; and we, in all and every, are still beyond them.

And now let me a little stay, and say as much for our selves, as for the Jewes. If we shall but enter into our own hearts for a moment, we cannot but think thus: What, doth this our deliverance draw thus much, even from other Nations, that are our enemies? Why then (belike) it must be some extraordinary great one. Why (methinks) it toucheth not them; this, it toucheth us: it is we, that were delivered and not they: and, shall they say all this of us, and shall not we say as much of our selves? Shall we come behind them, or rather, shall we not come behind them, since they are got before in this Dicebant? The words we cannot mend, they are so full: Great were the things, and very Great: they changed not, they were done; done by GOD, He was the Doer; He the Doer of these great things, and we the people, for whom these great things were done: And so, a people highly magnified by Him in His mercy; and so, a people deeply bound to magnifie Him for all His mercies, but for this, above all, that all the world speaks of.

And, though we cannot, with other words than they; yet can, and will (I trust) with far other affections. GOD forbid, but facere nobiscum should be sounded in an higher key, than facere cum illis, In dangers (I am sure) it is; never any mens dangers touch us as our own: Never they from the shore, cry so heartily, Lord save them, that they see in danger of drowning upon the Sea; as they in the ship, themselves cry, Lord save us. GOD forbid, but we that felt it, should take up our Hallelujah in a higher streine than they, that were but lookers on: heard of it, and spake of it, but were not partakers as we were of it.

Let this be the difference: that we say the same, that they say: but they say, Magnificavit Dominus facere cum illis, and facti sunt gentes; and we, Magnificavit Dominus facere nobiscum, & facti sumus lætantes.

And, since our case doth so many wayes surpasse this of the Jewes, in all the points along; our Hallelujah must needs do so too. It is but reason I will require. Theirs (here) went no further, than their mouth and their tongue, Os & lingua: more they mention not. But, in a certain place, the Psalmist, when he would expresse a farre greater joy, thus he saith, All my bones shall say, Psalm 35.10. Lord who is like thee? This, I think reason, that seeing our bones should have been scattered in every Psalm 141.7. corner like as chips, when one heweth wood on the earth; (should have, but were not:) Not only our mouth and tongue (as theirs;) but our very bones should say, Halleluja, Lord, who is like thee, who hast rid us from a danger, the like whereof never was? I add further: that, if we and our bones would hold our peace, the stones should cry it. For, Timber-work, and stone-work, and all had flyen in Luke 19.40. pieces (we know then; even (as Abakuk speaketh) that the beam out of the timber-work, and Habac. 2. 11. the stone out of the wall, may cry one to another; the beam to the Stone, Halleluja; and the stone to the beam again, Halleluja, to Him, that hath kept them fast, and not made Ierusalem as an heap of stones. Even they, to cry: Every bone to have a tongue: and every stone and beam to have a tongue, to put down theirs, and to make our dicebant, our Halleluja, our magnificavit the lowder.

And now, shall we stay here and end with Halleluja, and cut off Hosanna quite? I dare not: I seldome see Halleluja hold long, if Hosanna forsake it, and second it not. For I ask; What, are they all dead, that sought our lives? Say, they are: Is the devil dead too? If he be not, it skils not, if they were. His powder-mill will still be going; he will still be as busie, as ever, in turning over all his devices, in turning himself into as many shapes as Proteus, and all to turn us to some mischief. The more it concerns us, not to be too long at our Halleluja, but, when we have done it, before we fall to take up our Hosanna; not to forget it in any wise. After we have praised Him for in convertendo, that so it is: to return, to our Converte Domine; that so it may long be. The wheel will stand, it will not turn on still, without it. Our Hosanna.

Then, in the person of humble supplicants cry we all, Hosanna to the highest, and Converte Domine, to Him, that is Lord of Ezekiels wheeles, and of all their conversions. The rather, for that Ezek. 1. 15.

there is no design, hath more laid open and let us see the defects and weaknesse of all humane wisdom and matchfulnesse, than is. There wanted neither; but it went beyond both. No, nor any design hath let us see, how dangerous and undiscoverable plots, the Devil is able to possesse his limbes withall. All to let us see, what need we have, to turn to Him, with our Convert, that can see what they do at mid-night, in the Vault, as well as what is done at noon-day, on the house-top: can see, and discover; discover it, and turn it away. That He would, as many as are comming this way, turn them all away.

And turn them all away, by the way of prevention; not suffering them to light on us (as theirs did) and then after remove it; but averting it, before it come: left after, it be too late.

And (that we forget not Sion) that He turn it by such, and no other meanes, than the streames in the South: that is, with no great ado; not, in boisterous or rigorous meanes, as that of Egypt: but, in a mild and calme manner, as this of Babel, and as our own. By the same meanes still; even by the turning of the heart, which is in His hands; which as the streames in the South, He now did turn; and so still and ever may. That, from that fountain (still) may flow the streames, that may give us refreshing in time of our need. That, if it be his blessed will, that may ever be the Sion, as now it was.

And now: turn our captivity, O Lord, past and to come: turn both: that, as the streames of the South, they may melt, fall away, and come to nothing: that our future dangers may still be sicut somnia, ever as dreames, but never Visions: that, as we have been now matters of praise to the Nations, for our former delivery, so we never become a by-word to them; for any after-calamity: but that, our conclusion may be ever, facti sumus

John 16. 22. lætantes, still in joy, and this joy may never be taken from us: that we still may laud and magnifie thy glorious Name, evermore praising thee and saying, Magnificetur Dominus.

The Lord hath magnified His power and goodnes towards us this day, for which His holy Name be magnified, this day, and for ever.

Preached before the

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDCIX.

LUKE Chap. IX. Ver. LIV, LV, LVI.

Cum vidiſſent autem Diſcipuli, &c.

And when His Diſciples James and John ſaw it, they ſaid: Lord, wilt thou that we command, that fire come down from heaven, and conſume them, even as Elias did?

But Jeſus turned about and rebuked them, and ſaid: Ye know not of what Spirit ye are:

For the Son of man is not come to deſtroy mens lives, but to ſave them.

WE have here, in this Text, a whole Town of Samaria, in danger of being deſtroyed; of being deſtroyed, by fire: and they ſcaped it narrowly: ſo near it was, there lacked but dicimus, a word ſpeaking. Of the Diſciples, ſome were very forward in the motion: but CHRIST rebuked them; and the end was, the Town was ſaved. And was not this, under the terms of Iames and Iohn, and a town of Samaria, our very caſe, this day four yeare? We were then in danger of deſtroying; and deſtroying by the ſame element, fire; and ſo near it we were, it would have been done as ſoon, as a letter burnt. There were then, that forwarded theſe fire-works, with their dicimus, all they could: and they ſaid, they were Diſciples of JESUS's ſociety. But JESUS ſhewed Himſelf, to be (in heaven) of the ſame mind, He was, on earth. And as He was then better, to this Town, than His Diſciples; ſo, to us He was better, than the Fathers of His Society, and rebuked them too: and bleſſed be GOD, as the Text ends, ſo did the matter; in Non perdere, ſed ſalvare: none deſtroyed, all ſaved.

Finding here theſe words [Non perdere] in the Text, which amount to as much as Ne perdas, it brings to my mind, that this Text willſecond well David's Ne perdas. As, wen time was,

was, we had David's Ne perdas, to ſave a King: ſo, here we have now the Son of David's (CHRIST'S) Ne perdas, to ſave (a Town in the Text; but with us) an Aſſembly more worth than Samariah, and all the Towns in it.

This Ne perdas of CHRIST, beſide the Sabbath it ſelf, is to us (this day) matter of a ſecond Sabbath; and ſo, this (like that in the Goſpel) δευτεροπρωτον, a ſecond beſides the firſt, two Sabbaths in one; wherein, the voice of praiſe and thankſgiving is here, and is all over the Land, for the happy non perdere, ſed ſalvare, of this day.

Luke 6. 1.

The ſumme. The whole Text is a queſtion, upon a Caſe: the Caſe, this. CHRIST was journeying from Galilee, to Jeruſalem: being in that Countrey upon His way, He ſent to this Town, to take up his lodging: No lodging would be had; a general reſtraint: no man to receive Him: the quarrel, becauſe His face was toward Jeruſalem; would not worſhip with them, in their mount. Upon his Caſe, this queſtion: Whether this town, for not receiving CHRIST, upon pretence He was not of their Religion, might not be conſumed? Or make the Caſe (if you will) blown up with fire. Some little difference there is, and but little: Vis, dicimus deſcendat (ſay they;) Vis, facimus aſcendat (ſay ours:) deſcendat, or aſcendat, both end, in conſumet eos, deſtruction of them and us. In this queſtion, we ſhall divide CHRIST and His company. For, of them, two here named were ready to do it, and therefore reſolve, it might be done. But CHRIST ruleth the Caſe, for the Town, that it ought not to be done; No, not for this quarrel, Non receperunt eum; No not upon theſe parties, Samaritans; No not by that meanes done by miracle.

Verſe 53:

It was an errour (this) of the Diſciples, we ſee it plain, by Neſcitis: but, of it may well be ſaid, that Gregory ſaith of another of theirs, O ſalutaris error, qui totius mundi ſuſtulit errorem! A bleſſed errour it was; for, by it the world was rid of the like errour, ever after: Rid of the errour of this day: What CHRIST anſwered in this Caſe, He would have anſwered in ours, à fortiori; If not a poor Town, not ſuch an Aſſembly. If not, by a ſupernatural and miraculous; not, by an unnatural, and monſtrous act. If not, for Himſelf; not for Saint Peter. So that, this dayes caſe determined here by CHRIST, before ever it was propounded: and determined quite contrary, by JESUS, to his Diſciples, then, or to his Society, of late. We are all much bound to S. Luke, for recording it, or to the HOLY GHOST rather, for inſpiring him, ſo to do. For, ſo long as this Verſe ſhall ſtand in this Goſpel, it will ſerve for a reſolution to this queſtion. Whether upon pretence of Religion, CHRIST will allow, the Jew ſhould blow up the Samaritane? Upon non receperant eos, any of his Diſciples may do that, which they (here) would have done? This rebuke here of theſe, will reach to all undertakers in the ſame kind: This non perdere ſed ſalvare, ſaves all our Townes, Cities, and States, from conſuming by fire, from any of CHRISTS company.

The Diviſion. To paſſe then to the entreaty. In the former verſe, there is a Motive, and a Motion. 1 The Motive in theſe: And when his Diſciples, James and John, ſaw this. I. The Motion in theſe: They ſaid, LORD, wilt thou that we, &c. 1 Somewhat they ſaw, to move them: and what they ſaw, is in the verſe before; Non receperunt Eum: CHRIST'S ſuffering repulſe; and for no other cauſe, but becauſe His face was toward Ieruſalem-ward: that is, were not affected, as they were in Religion. 2. The Motion, 1 to have the Town deſtroyed for it: 2 deſtroyed by fire: 3 by fire from heaven: 4 from heaven, only by dicamus, ſpeaking a word only: and 5 this upon warrant, Sicut fecit Elias, Elia's example.

I.

Verſe 53:

II.

III. In the latter, CHRIST'S cenſure. Firſt, he giveth no leave, nor liking any way to the motion. 1 Magiſter, vis dicimus (ſay they:) ſed, Magiſter non vult dicere. 2 So far from that, as He rebukes them, that moved it. The rebuke of the movers, is a diſlike of the motion. 3 Rebukes them not, for ſome one point, or circumſtance in it, but even for the whole, for moving to Him, any ſuch thing. Nay, He goeth further: likes not the motion, nor likes not the ſpring it comes from. 5 In His rebuke, tells them, Neſcitis, they are much miſtaken: miſtaken themſelves, and miſtake Him, both. Themſelves, to move any ſuch matter: Him, to move it, to Him: it being neither meet for them, to move; nor Him, to grant. Them, to move: for, they were of another ſpirit, if they could not hit on it. Him, to grant: For, He came to another end than either to hear, or yield to motions of that nature: tells them they are not of Elia's ſpirit, but of His, if they be His Diſciples; and ſo muſt come as He came, Non perdere, ſed ſalvare.

But (becauſe we come not now to learn only; but to give thanks, as the duty of the Day requireth) after this, we will lay the two caſes together, caſe by caſe; this of the Day, to this in the Text: by which, it will eaſily appear (I doubt not) that we have as great cauſe every way, of joy, and thankſgiving; nay, of the twain, the greater, for the happy Ne perdas, Chriſt's Ne perdas, of this day.

OR

OR yet we come to the motion, let us begin with that, that was the beginning of all this quarrel; that is, Dissent in Religion, between the Samaritan, and the Iew. Wee see the fruit of it here, and what spirit it maketh men of. On the one side, Be they Iewes, go they to Ierusalem? let them have neither meat, drink, nor lodging; (that is to say) starve them. On the other: Be they Samaritans, Sectaries; pity of their lives: put fire to them, burn them, blow them up. Mutual and mortal hatred breaking forth upon every occasion. The woman of Samaria expresseth it, by Non co-utuntur, They use not, one side the other. She might even as well have said, co-abutuntur, they abuse each other: so they do, forgetting humanity and divinity too, on either part. Here is the fruit: this, the spirit it breedeth. And these two, the Samaritan, and the Iew: they made not an end of this, till it made an end of them. Look in Iosephus, you shall see in the dayes of Claudius, (Cumanus then Deputy) the very like quarrel to this (here) upon the very same occasion, taken wholly by the Zelotæ, and pursued hard, opened the way to the Iewes warres, which never ended, till the utter rooting out and desolation of them both. Thus it was: and thus it will be: and by this we see, how necessary Christ's pax vobis is; and the Peace-maker, that could make the peace, how blessed he should be! blessed here, and blessed everlastingly.

I. The Motive

John 4. 9.

John 20. 26. Matth. 5. 9.

But, let me tell you this withall: this Spirit was not then, in all; neither all the Disciples, nor all the Samaritans: Some there were, on both sides, more moderately affected. The Disciples (I doubt not) did all of them (the other ten, too) much dislike this discourse offered Christ: yet, all cried not for fire: Two only, these two only of the twelve. On the other side: the Samaritans neither, all were not thus inhumane. Though this Town received Him not, it is said (in the last verse) they went to another Town, and there he was received. So all, neither all the Disciples thus spirited; not all the sonnes of thunder; some the sonnes of raine, as Bartholomew is interpreted: nor all the Countrey of Samaria: God provided better for both. All had gone to a generall combustion, if all had been of this destructive spirit: and all did go, when those spirits gat the upper hand.

Verse 56.

Mark 3. 17.

And for their comfort, that are such, this: that Our Saviour CHRIST was none of the Zelotæ, but shewed Himself on that side, that enclined to humanity and peace. There was no fault in Him. It was still His desire co-uti Samaritanis, to use and be used by them, He would have had water, and asked it of the woman of Samaria: Sent his Disciples to that Town, (there) to buy meat; and now, to this Town here, to take up lodging: shewed Himself (still) willing, to break down this partition-wall. In this very journey, after this repulse here, yet He healed (among others) a Leper, yea, though a Samaritan. Yea, so favourable that way He was, and so ready to be used, as He was counted and called a Samaritan for His labour. Well then, let this Town, and these two Disciples please themselves, in their consuming zeal: that other Town, in the last verse, and the other ten were in the right. CHRIST was in the right (I am sure:) and it is safe for us, that the same mind be in us, that was in CHRIST JESUS. And so now to the Motion: But first, to the Motive, And when they saw, &c.

John 4. 7.

Luke 17. 16.

John 8. 68.

Let me say this, for S. James and S. John; They saw enough, to move any to indignation. A great indignity it is, that, which is done by common courtesie, to every ordinary Traveller (harbour for a night) to deny that, to any: Omni animantium generi pabulum & latibulum, fodder and shelter, they are due to all living creatures by the law of nature. Within a verse after, Christ saith: Vulpes foveas habent, &c. Not to allow a man, so much, as every Fox is allowed, a hole, for his head? a very great inhumanity, to any: who could choose, but be moved?

Verse 58.

2. And if to deny this, to any were too much: it received encrease, by the person. It was Christ, that was thus repelled; of whose well using, it stood them upon, to be jealous; and not to shew themselves cold, in putting up any disgrace offered to their Master. We must needs allow their zeal, in their Masters quarrel.

3. And, when was this? For, that circumstance adds much, here. It was even then, when He was newly come down from the Mount, from His transfiguration: immediately upon that, came this. Him whom a little before, they had seen glorified from Heaven; to see him now thus vilified upon earth, would it not move any?

4. And, who were they that did it? A pelting Country-town; and they in it, a sort of Samaritan-Hereticks, whom the world were rid of; at whose hands, who could endure to see him thus used? Coming from hatred of Heresie, nor can it choose but be a good motion.

5. And now, why was it, they did Him this disgrace? For no other cause, but for His Religion: because His back was to their Mount, and His face to Ierusalem. And here, zeal is in his prime; Never so plausible, as when it hath gotten Religion for his pretence, and the Catholike cause for his colour; then they may set fire on the Town. Put these now together. 1 A barbarous dignity, harbour for a night denied: and 2 denied Christ: 3 Christ so late in all His glory: 4 and that by a sort of Hereticks: 5 and only, for that He was well affected in Religion. The case is home: when they ſaw this, it moved them to make a Motion. Never talk of it: the motion cannot be miſliked; ſpecially coming commended by the Movers, two of his Diſciples: and none of the meaneſt of them, two Pillars (as Saint Paul calleth them) and he, whom JESUS ſo loved, one of the two.

Galat. 2. 9.
John 21. 7.

II. The Motion.

We ſee, what moved them. Now, let us ſee what they move, and upon what warrant. They move to have them deſtroyed, by fire, from Heaven. Their warrant, ſicut fecit Elias: whom they had ſeen a little before in the mount, and who (they are ſure) would never have endured it.

In their motion (methinks) two things they take for granted: 1 one, that deſtroyed they muſt be: no leſſe puniſhment ſerve. 2 The other, that it ſhould be by fire. They make no queſtion of theſe two, nor ſo much as conſult with Chriſt of them; 1 Whether it be meet they were deſtroyed: 2 then, whether fire, were not a fit kind of death for ſuch. They run away with theſe two, and paſſe ſentence upon them. Die they muſt: die they muſt, and then limit the kind; being hereticks, beſt even burn them and make no more ado.

They only adviſe with CHRIST about the meanes, whence, they will have their fire, and how? Whence, from heaven: how, by dicimus. And hitherto, the caſe like. Both, to be deſtroyed: both, by fire: both, upon one pretence, they and we. Now, they break company, JESUS'S Diſciples, and JESUS'S Society. For, when it comes to the meanes, JESUS'S Diſciples will take no indirect courſe: do it, like Diſciples, or not at all. They will go to work, on GOD's Name: call it down, not conjure it up: from heaven, His own ſphere; not from any infernal place, not rent the earth to bring it up. S. John (as an Eagle) flyes up to the clouds: not (like a Mold-warpe) creeps into a Vault, to do it. De cœlo do it, like Prophets; not, like incendiaries, fetch fire the wrong way.

The like may be ſaid, of Dicimus: not, from heaven, by any optike inſtrument (as ſome had, before that time, fired whole Navies:) No, but only by Dicimus, ſaying the word and no more, No powder, but from the clouds: no match, but their tongue: No Vis fodimus, no pickaxe to dig: nor boats to carry, nor traines to kindle it: but, Vis dicimus, by way of miracle, or not at all. This, the motion. Now to the warrant.

2 The Warrant.

A good Warrant will do well. CHRIST without it (they know) likes of nothing done. The quo Warranto (to win CHRIST to be willing, to obtain His fiat) they alleadge, one would think a good one; 1 Sicut fecit; ſo, no novelty; a preſident for it: 2 and ſicut fecit (no leſſe Prophet, than) Elias. They had ſeen him but lately: they did the more eaſily call him to mind. Moſes they ſaw then too; but, they could not ſerve themſelves of him. He was taken out of the water: No good ſicut for them, that were about fire-works. And he was the meekeſt man on the earth: and it was no meek matter; and ſo he no meet man, for the purpoſe they were about. Elias, is Scripture as well as he: the authority of ſo great a Prophet is enough, to do no more than he did, upon like occaſion. Nay, not like; here, the occaſion is greater: behold Plus quàm Elias, a greater than Elias, ſuffereth diſgrace here; and therefore ſicut Elias is but reaſonable. And here again, our motioners will fall ſhort too. For, if the motion to CHRIST had been Vis fodimus? whom would they have alleadged, whoſe example or authority, ſicut fecit? Who, who ever did the like? Which of the Prophets, or Patriarchs? Their motion muſt have been without a ſicut fecit.

Exod. 2. 5.
Numb. 12. 3.

For the matter, all is one (ſaith Sanders) all one. Elias, when he commanded fire from heaven, might even as well have commanded any on earth: run upon them, run them thorow, had as great power over the mettals on earth, as over the Elements in the skie. And it is like enough, if Sanders had lived till Anno Domini MDCV, and had been conſulted with, he would have ſaid ſtraight: All one, Elias might as well have bid put fire under the Town, from beneath: as let fire fall on the Town, from above. But, by his leave, there is great odds between theſe. For firſt, Elias muſt do, as his Commiſſion was to do it, from Heaven; He might not inter-line his Commiſſion, and put in, by mettals, or Gun-powder, or what he liſted. And again: who ſees not, Elia's fire, and Sampſon's Foxes are not all one? GOD's arrowes (as lightning from heaven) and theſe tela ignita Satanæ, Satan's traines and fire-works, from under the ground. In one, the hand of GOD muſt needs be: in the other the paw of the Devil, the malice of man, the fury or treachery or forlorn creatures may have no place. No ſuch authority, no ſuch fear to touch the conſcience, as the act of God hath; therefore, that is not ſicut Elias. And laſtly, if it were, yet is, nothing gained by it: Chriſt repeals it by and by: and forbids in this, either the act or ſpirit of Elias.

Judg. 15. 14.
Pſalm 18. 14.
Epheſ. 6. 16.

But now, they that ſay thus (not Magiſter dicito tu, but) Magiſter vis dicimus nos; feel, in themſelves (belike) no lack of ſtrength. The Cardinal cannot ſay of them, Id non fuit, quia deerant vires, that was not done, becauſe there wanted force. So that, if after, they loſt any of their due, it was not, becauſe they lacked power, to maintain it. S. Paul denyeth it flatly: Having (ſaith he) in a readineſſe, vengeance againſt all diſobedience. Had it; had it, in a readineſſe; and, againſt all diſobedience. And ſure, they that could thus do, call fire from Heaven; ſtrike Elimas blind; ſtrike Ananias ſtark dead, in an inſtant; need not loſe their intereſt, which they had (forſooth) in this ſame temporal dominion, for lack of ſtrength. Now, it is well known, it was the caſe, here in the Text: Diſcipulus potuit, ſed Magiſter noluit. It was, for want of vis, this in the Text; Vis, of Volo, of will in Chriſt: not, for want of vis, or vires, power it.

2 Cor. 10. 6.
Act. 13. 11, 5, 5.

in them. It went not, by vires adeerant, vel deerant: It went, by Magister vis; Christs Will was wanting, and nothing else. That was their case (here:) who therefore (because two things go to the act, 1 their power, and 2 Christs will) howsoever they felt their own power, and themselves able to do it, yet would not do it, on their own heads without His privity, or leave: and so now, they aske it; Magister, vis dicimus. By which very manner of propounding it, in this confident style, it seemeth, little doubt they made to carry it cleere; made full reckoning of Christs Volo, and that He would be moved with their motion.

III. Christs censure and rebuke of them.

And with their motion, He was moved; for, it is said, He turned with it: but, it was, the wrong way. At the turning, it may be thought, they looked for some good turne; that Christ should have commended them, and said: I con you thanke, I see you have care of my credit; you are even worthy for it to sit one on my right hand, the other on my left, for shewing your selves my Champions: your motion is good, forward with it.

But, it falls out, His turning is the wrong way: He turned on the left side, To rebuke them. This Christ did. Now I will tell you, what He should have done. For according to the new taken up resolution, of the grave Fathers of the society, He should have taught them first; to take a paire of ballances, and weighed, whether the good that would ensue would over-weigh the losse of the town: If it would, up with it and spare not. That it would certainly. For, it would strike such a feare (the burning of this Towne) into all the Townes about, that Christ should never after want receiving: and it would salve Christs reputation much, who had been thought, too great a favourer of these Samaritans: and it would be much for His credit, that He had Disciples could do as much as ever could Elias.

But CHRIST never stands weighing these: but, for all the parties were Samaritans, parties not to be favoured: for all it is made His quarrell, non Eum: for all their meanes should be by miracle, which cannot be misliked: for all this, turnes and rebukes them. Never thinkes the motion, worth the answering, as being evill ex tota substantia: but rebukes them for moving it, rebukes the spirit, it came from: and rebukes them of ignorance of their own spirit; Ye know not of what spirit ye are of. As much to say as, If ye did, ye would make no such motions: that you do make any such, it proceeds from Nescitis. That, would be marked. They are in ignorance; and the worst ignorance (of themselves) that move for fire. They knew not, what spirit they are of; but, whatsoever it is, a wrong spirit it is, for, here it is rebuked, by Christ.

1 For Nescitis

That which Christ rebuketh is, Nescitis; that is their fault: There is no word, on which his rebuke can fall, but that. It can be no good motion, that comes from Nescitis. For, from Nescitis cometh no good; without knowledge, the soule it selfe is not good. Nescitis quid petatis; No good Prayer: Adoratis quod nescitis, no good woship; and so ignorant devotion, implicite faith, blind obedience, all rebuked. Zeale, if it be not secundùm scientiam cannot be secundum conscientiam; matter of conceit, it may be; of conscience, it cannot be. It is but κακοζηλία, and κακοζηλία is not to be allowed (we see) no, not in Christs own cause.

Matth. 20. 23. Iohn 4. 22. Rom. 10. 2.

2 For Nescitis cujus spiritus.

And, it is not every ignorance, this: not of the act, but of the spirit, He chargeth: which is more. For, Spirituum ponderator Deus, GOD weighs the spirit: men look to the acts; He, to the spirit: therefore, trie the act; but, the spirit, rather. We may be deceived in any act, if we know not the spirit, it comes from. One and the same act proceeding from diverse spirits, good for one; for another, not so. Therefore, Probate spiritus is ever good counsell; and discretio spirituum, a principall part of knowledge.

Prov. 16. 2. 1 Iohn 4. 1. 1 Cor. 11. 10.

3 For Nescitis, cujus spiritus vos

And if this import us, to do in other mens spirits, not to be deceived in them; much more in our own: that we deceive not our selves, which is the third degree. Nescitis, cujus spiritus; cujus vos; the foule Elench of all, ab ignoratione proprii spiritus, to fall into this fallax. For indeed, many blinde actions come from men, by reason of ignorance, of this third. And this we are to look to the rather, for that we see two so great Apostles, like to precipitate themselves into a bloudy act, for mistaking this point.

1. There are (sure) many Nescitis, they were in. Elias (first) did not that they would do: that, is one. His fire took hold of none but Delinquents; every one as deep in the same fault, as another. Here is a great many women and children in the town not accessory to this. God would not suffer the wicked and innocent to perish together, no not in Sodom; would not suffer Ninive to be destroyed, because there were in it many, that knew not their right hand from their left. This did not Elias.

Gen. 18. 23. Iohn 4. 11.

2. Then, it was but quod fecit Elias; not, sient: there is another. For, what Elias did, he did by speciall inspiration, had a particular Commission, and (as it were) a Privie Seale for it. And, that we must ever distinguish, in the Prophets, when they proceed by their generall calling (therein we may follow them:) and when an act is executed, and done by them, by immediate warrant: for such warrant passes not the person; no precedent to be made of it. Else, without their revelation, we may do quod fecit Elias, and not Sicut. And, that is a great Nescitis, and doth much harme: for many a lewd attempt, it is sought; and, if they get it once over their heads, they think they are safe. For killing of Kings, Sicut fecit Ehud: of Queenes, Sicut fecit Iehoiada: for rebelling; Sicut Libna. No, no: Quod fecit non sicut fecit; what they did, they do: as they did, they do not.

Iudges 3. 21. 2 King. 11. 20.

But if it were Sicut fecit too, it would not serve; It is a Nescitis still; and this is our Saviour Christs, directed to their allegations of Elias. I observe, they aske of the act; and Christ answers of his Spirit, So that Sicut fecit Elias, is not enough; is but a weake warrant: you must be of his Spirit, as well as do his act. His Sicut will not beare your act, unlesse you have his spirit, too. It is not enough to say, thus did Elias, unlesse you adde, I am of the same spirit.

4. Then, it remaines, they must say, they are of Elias's spirit; and into some such phansie (it seemes) they were fallen: but, that, is another Nescitis. Why, what harme is that? Elias's spirit (Iho pe) was no evill spirit. No: but, every good spirit, as good as Elias's, is not for every person, place, or time. Spirits are given by God, and men inspired with them, after severall manners, upon severall occasions, as the severall times require. The Times sometime require one spirit; sometime, another; Elias's time, Elias's Spirit. As his act good, done by his spirit: so his Spirit good in his own time. The time changed, the spirit (then, good) now, not good. For both are faulty: the act, without the spirit; and the spirit, without the time. And, so it may fall out, that at some time, one may be rebuked, for being of Elias's spirit well enough, when Elias's spirit is out of time.

5 But, why is it out of time? That is another Nescitis, which CHRIST sets down plainly, when He renders the reason: For, the Son of man is come: (for, we may well make a pause there.) As if He should say: Indeed, there is a time to destroy (saith Salomon, Eccles.3.) that, was under the Law: Ignea lex, the fiery law, as Moses calls it: then, a fiery spirit would not be amisse; then, was Elias's time. But, now, the Son of man is come: ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. The spirit of Elias was good till the Son of man came; but, now He is come, the date of that spirit is expired. When the Son of man is come, the spirit of Elias must be gone. Now specially: for, Moses and he resigned lately, in the mount. Now, no Law-giver, no Prophet, but CHRIST, CHRIST now, and His spirit, to take place. You move out of time: will ye be of Elias's Spirit, and the Son of man is come? A plaine Nescitis.

Duet.33.2.

6. The Fathers work out another Nescitis, out of the Emphasis [Vos;] Cujus spiritus Vos. Vos, is no idle word: it makes a plain separation, between them and Elias. Vos, Tos: Why, you are my Disciples, (I trow:) you must answer, to Cujus spiritus vos? Cujus spiritus Tu. CHRISTS Disciples, and Elias's spirit? that canot be. Choose ye now: for, of whose spirit ye are, His Disciples ye must be. If you be His, what do you here with me? get you to his Tabernacle. If ye be mine, off with Elias's mantle and spirit both. The Disciple, and the Master are of one spirit. To make a Disciple, is nothing, but to do as GOD did, at the door of the Tabernacle; take of the Masters spirit, and put it on the Disciples. But, if ye be of My Spirit, my Spirit is in specie Columbæ, not Aquilæ; not of the Eagle, that carrieth Jupiter's Thunder-bolt; but, of the Dove, that brings the Olive-branch in her bill, the signe of Non perdere, sed salvare. If this spirit be in you, let all your motions smell of the Olive-branch, not of the thunder-bolt; come from saving grace, and not from consuming zeale.

Deut.31.14.
Iohn 1.32.
Genesis 8.11.

7. But yet, the worst Nescitis is behind. For worse it is, to be mistaken in Christ, than in our selves. And Him they mistooke, in that they would move Him, to that, whose coming was contrary, quite contrary to that, they would have Him do. This is Nescitis, indeed. Vere nescitis, qui petitis a Magistro mansuetudinis licentiam crudelitatis. A nescitis, to seek at the hands of Him, that is the Master of all meeknes, a license to commit such cruelty.

The very title of the Son of man, is enough for this. For, whatsoever as the Son of GOD, He may do; it is kindly for Him, as the Son of man, to save the sonnes of men. Specially being the Son of such men, as He was; the Son of Abraham, who entreated hard that even Sodom might not be destroyed. The Son of Iacob, who much misliked, yea, even cursed the wrath of his two sons, in destroying Sichem. The Son of David, who complained much of the sonnes of Zervia that that they were too hard for Him. (As Christ doth here, of the sonnes of Zebedee: who (as if indeed, they had been borne of a thunder-cloud, and not of a man) were so ready to make havock of the lives of men.) It cost the Son of man more to redeeme men, then to have them blown up so lightly. And, if Iames and Iohn were to pay for them, at His price, they would not be so evil advised, as to make so quick riddance of the lives of men.

Christ doth here warrant us, that, to tell cujus spiritus, the way is, by ad quid venit? what spirit is he of, by to what end comes he; whether blowes it, which way is his face, to salvare, or to perdere? For, to the end of His coming, GOD hath framed His spirit. You may know it, by His first Text. The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, to heale the broken, to deliver the captive; to save that was lost. He sent me: therefore He was sent, and therefore He came. You may know it, by His, Name, IESUS a SAVIOUR: you may know it by His Similes (no destroying creatures:) a [a] Lambe, no Wolfe; a [b] Hen, no Kite; a [c] Vine, no bramble, [d] out of which came fire to burne up all the trees in the forest. Of His coming, clean contrary to this, speaks the Prophet, [e] He shall come down like the rain; (speaks the Apostle) [f] Hic est ille JESUS qui venit in aqua; came in water to quench; not, in fire, to consume.

Again, that He Doth not this [non perdere, sed salvare] by accident, as it hits; but, on set purpose: It was the cause, the finall cause, the very end, GOD sent Him, and He came for.

In which point, to take away Nescitis clean for ever, he sets it down positively, and privatively both: Wherefore He came not; and wherefore He came. Came not to destroy; but, came to save: this, is plain dealing. But first, not to destroy: that they which cannot save, may yet be sure ſure, not to Deſtroy any, but; if they can, not only not deſtroy, but ſave too, as CHRIST doth. But, of theſe, CHRIST came but to one end, hath but one office; came not, to the other; and this would be marked. The Cardinall begins his book to the Pope, Duplex Petri officium, Paſcere & occidere, CHRIST had but one; to feed, to ſave: Another there is was Homicida ab initio. But, if Saint Peter have gotten two offices, he hath one more, than CHRIST. CHRIST came to ſave only, with a flat excluſive, of the other. Ioh. 8. 44.

And, where they move Him, in ſpecie, for a deſtruction by fire; He) not content to deny that alone) denieth it in genere, not to deſtroy at all; neither, by fire, nor any other way. Here, we have a caſe of fire: will ye have another, of the ſword? Shall we do it by fire? (ſay Iames and Iohn, here;) Domine ſi percutimus gladio? (ſaith Saint Peter, after) in a greater quarrell farre than this, when they laid hands on Him, to carry Him to His paſſion, That, He denieth too, and in that quarrell; and ſaith, Sinite, let alone your ſword: Out with your fire, Iames and Iohn; up with your ſword, Peter, So that, neither by fire, here: nor by ſword there; neither, by miracle (as here) nor without miracle (as there) doth Chriſt like of theſe motions. What then? Shall not Chriſt be received? Yes: He is moſt worthy ſo to be. I adde, they that refuſe it, are worthy any puniſhment: but, that every man is to be dealt with as he is worthy, would prove but a hard piece of Divinitie, hard for all, and even for themſelves, too. If, ſo oft as Chriſt ſuffers indignitie, fire ſhould come down from heaven, Domine quis ſuſtinebet? we were all in hard caſe, Iewes and Samaritans; and all: yea, Diſciples; yea this Iames, and Iohn, and all. The Samaritans, they received not CHRIST; they were gone; burnt all. For Ieruſalem's ſake, becauſe His face was that way (here) He was not received. When He came to Ieruſalem, how was He received there? Why, there He was murthered: worſe uſed than in Samaria, Then, we muſt call for more fire: Ieruſalem muſt be burnt, too. Now, for the Diſciples Iames and Iohn, how carried they the matter? It is true: they had received Him; but, when moſt need was, thruſt Him from them, renounced Him, utterly denyed, that ever they knew Him. Then, we muſt trouble heaven once more: call for fire, for James and John, too. Nay then, the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not, nor received Him not: why then the world is at an end, facti ſumus ſicut Sodoma; all a heap of aſhes; if this Doctrine go forward. Beſt, take Phaeton out of the chariot, that he ſet not all on fire. Sure, this (I take it) is a Neſcitis: For, who receiveth Chriſt, as he ſhould? yea, who refuſeth not one time, or other, to receive Him? Who; of the Diſciples, who at Ieruſalem? Then, all muſt be turned out and in: Non venit ſalvare, ſed perdere. Then, this will follow; if no place for repentance, then no uſe of CHRIST. For, whom ſhall He ſave, when James and John have conſumed all to aſhes? But, it will be well to leave CHRIST ſomebody to ſave: not diſappoint Chriſt of His coming, and ſend Him backe without His errand. Pſalme 119. 53. Iohn 1. 10, 11. Rom. 9. 29.

Now, out of this Neſcitis, to frame our Scitis. 1. By this time we know CHRIST'S Spirit (as He teacheth us (by His coming. His coming was not to deſtroy: they that came a deſtroying, came not in His Companie. 2. Then, our own ſpirits: if they do ſpirare Chriſtum, they have the ſame journies end. 3. We know their ſpirits, that hatched alate this queſtion anew; Vis facimus aſcendat ignis? And theirs too, that never turned and rebuked it, but gave allowance to it, both before, and after it was done: yea, bound them to it by oath, and ſet it forth, with both Sacraments. 1 Of Penance, and of the 2 Altar: and (what ſhould I ſay?) reſolved flat againſt Chriſt, in the very ſame point; and did not (as He) caſt water, but put oyle to the flame. Our Scitis out of the neſcitis?

Can theſe be the Society of Ieſus, and the ſpirits blow two contrarie wayes, and their comings be, to two contrarie ends? His not to deſtroy: theirs, to deſtroy: His, to rebuke; theirs, to allow of ſuch motives?

To know, what ſpirit they be of, look what manner of ſpirits they make choice of, and by their wils chooſe, and cheriſh none other; eager, fierce, boiſterous ſpirits. O, Elias's ſpirit, is a goodly ſpirit! but Chriſts Ecce Rex venit tuus manſuetus; or Diſcite a me quia mitis, it is not worth a mite: that ſpirit is too weak, and too faint, to forward their fire-workes. Math. 21. 5, 11. 29.

And, if yet ye doubt, no better way to be reſolved, than by Al quid venit? aske that, and it will reſolve you ſtraight. Wherefore came Doctor Morton, a little before the Rebellion in the North? Wherefore came Doctor Sanders into Ireland? Wherefore Cardinall Allen into the Low-Countries in LXXXVIII? To what end, came he out of the Arch-dukes campe hither? was it, to ſave mens lives, or to deſtroy them? By theſe marks, we cannot but know Cujus ſpiritus.

It ſufficeth, that CHRIST rebuketh this ſpirit: that if they be the Society of IESUS, it is Alius Ieſus, another Ieſus than this in the Text: Bar-Ieſus, for he, by interpretation, is Elymas, that is a deſtroyer. CHRIST likes no deſtroying; no, though the Town be full of Samaritans, He likes it not: no, though the colour be non receperunt Eum; yet He likes it not: no, though we could miraculouſly do it, like Elias, yet likes He it not. It is not GOD'S will in the Old Teſtament, that Sion ſhould be built in bloud: Nor, in the New, that His Church, on the aſhes of any eſtate: Nor, that His not receiving ſhould be pretence, for the extirpation of any Town much leſſe, Kingdom: or country.

This

Our Duty. This we learn. But, we come not only for that, but to congratulate this poor Town, that ſcaped the fire, and our ſelves no leſſe, that ſhould have periſhed by the ſame element, though not from Heaven, yet another way; though not by dicimus, yet by another meanes: and in publike manner to render our yearly ſolemn thankſgiving, that we alſo, by the Sonne of man, were delivered, from the powder laid ready to conſume, and from the match light to give it fire; that they were rebuked, yea (more than that) deſtroyed themſelves, that ſought our deſtruction. Every way, our caſe hath the advantage: and therefore bindeth us, to greater duty.

Will ye conſider it, in the parties. This, was againſt Samaritans; and, by the Apoſtles: Came commended, by the movers; they were Apoſtles: aggravated, by the parties, againſt whom; they were of the Sect of the Samaritans. We are no Samaritans (I truſt:) but, they no Apoſtles, (I am ſure:) no Apoſtles, nor of no Apoſtolike ſpirit, which would authorize that, which was rebuked in the Apoſtles themſelves. And, for Samaritans (which falls to our turn;) it may be, they count us and call us ſo: it is no matter, they called CHRIST himſelf ſo, then. This (I ſay:) had we been ſuch as they would have us to be; ſuch as theſe (here) very Samaritans, we were to find as much favour, at the hands of the Society of Jeſus, as did the Samaritans, at the hand of Jeſus Himſelf; if their ſpirit, their coming, their faces ſtood, as His, to Non perdere.

But we are none. No, if we go by the marks, the Scripture ſets down of them, the Samaritans will light on their ſide. For, let it be enquired, whether part, in the worſhip of GOD, 2 King. 17. 8. John 4. 22. uſeth more ritus Gentium, they or we (the mark of the Book of the Kings:) or whether of us, it may more rightly be ſaid, You worſhip, you know not what (which is CHRIST'S own mark.) In a word: let this be the caſe, Whether Religion have more windowes open to Jeruſalem, whoſe face looks more fully that way. No: the looking to Jeruſalem, is not the quarrel; the not looking to Rome, that, is the matter.

And ſure, this quarrel is much after one in both; That, in the Text, was made a matter in Religion, but, was none: no more was this of theirs. Non receperunt, is no act of hereſie: Non crediderunt, that, is. But it is not their miſ-believing, moved them in the Text: nor theſe neither. It was the not-harbouring makes all this ado. So they would entertain them, they might believe as they liſt. Upon the matter then, it falls out to prove, not zeal againſt their Hereſie, but zeal for their own entertainment; which will not, but directly, be made matter of Religion.

Now, if ye weigh the deſtruction, ye ſhall find, though in the main, they agree (for upward, and downward makes ſmall difference) yet, ours was the worſe.

Worſe, for, it ſhould have been ſudden, which is worſe for the ſoul; therefore ſimply worſe. Worſe, for that would have waſted but to the ground, and there left: but, this ſhould have fetched up foundations and ground, and all. Worſe certainly: for, that ſhould have conſumed but Samaritans only: but this, for the good of the Catholike cauſe, Samaritans and Jewes, both. Yea, ſuch as themſelves were, Diſciples, and James and John too, if they had been there, for company. Worſe: for, this had the ſhew of an example, Sicut fecit Elias: but ours, Sicut fecit who? Not, Sicut fecit ELIAS: No; Sicut without example. Never the like entred into the heart of any, that carried but the ſhape of a man. So, ſtill the advantage, on our ſide.

Now, for the delivery, when all is done, that which was ſaved here, was but a poor Towne without a name. I ſhould much wrong that famous Aſſembly, and Flower of the Kingdom, if I ſhould offer to compare it with that, either in quantity, (alas, like little Zoar to great NINIVE) or in quality, when, in ourr (to ſay nothing of the reſt) One there was, more worth than ten thouſand ſuch as they, we have good Scripture for it. 2 Sam. 18. 3.

Theſe, here, were rebuked but verbally, on earth: Ours, really rebuked from Heaven. Really rebuked, in their intention, by miraculous diſappointing the execution: and themſelves put to a foul rebuke beſides: God firſt blowing their own powder in their faces, to write their ſin there; and after making their bowels, their mercileſſe bowels, to be conſumed with fire, within the very view of that place, which they had meant to conſume with fire, and all us in it.

CHRIST came to ſave Us: There be manifeſt ſteps of His coming. Apparent firſt, in that He made them, they could not contain their own ſpirits, but brought them out by their own Dicimus: made them take pen and paper, and tell it out themſelves, and ſo become the inſtruments of their own deſtruction, which is the worſt of all.

Again He came, when He gave his Majeſty underſtanding to read the Riddle of [ſo ſoon as the letter is burnt:] to conſtrue the dialect of theſe unknown ſpirits, and pick it out of a period, as dark as the cellar was dark, where the powder lay.

There is but one coming in the Text: He came not to deſtroy, but to ſave: Here, were two in ours; both comings, of CHRIST. 1 He came not to deſtroy, but to ſave us, in mercy. 2 He came not to ſave, but deſtroy them (His ſecond coming) in Judgement. To conclude: This one notable difference there is, on our ſide: They ſhould have been deſtroyed by miracle; and we were Pſalm 118. 16. ſaved by miracle: The right hand of the LORD brought it to paſſe; which is of all others, the moſt welcome deliverance.

And ſhall I then, upon all this, make a motion? Maſter, wilt thou, we ſpeak to theſe whom thou haſt delivered, that ſeeing thou tookeſt order, the fire ſhould not aſcend to conſume them, they would take order, their prayers may aſcend up: and as the odours of the Saints phials, burn before Thee ſtill, and never conſume, but be, this day ever, a ſweet ſmell in Thy preſence? Their fire, they came to put under the earth, CHRIST would not have burn; another fire, He came to put upon earth, and His desire is that it should burn: even that fire, whereon the incense of our devotion, and the sacrifice of our praise burn before God, and be in odorem suavitatis. We were appointed, to be made a sacrifice: If Isaac be saved, shall nothing be offered in his stead? Shall we not thank God, that He was better to them, than Iames and Iohn: and to us, better, than those were, that will needs thrust themselves; to be of His society? That, when this dicimus was said of us too, stayed it at dicimus, and never let it come to perficimus: miraculously made known those unknown spirits: that he turned and rebuked the motion, and the spirits that made it: that He came, once and twice, to save us and destroy them.

Luke 12.49. Ephes. 5: 2.

If we shall, let us then do it; let our souls magnifie the Lord, and our spirits rejoyce in God our Saviour: that the beginning of the Text and of our case, was fire, to consume them (in the first verse:) that the end was, non perdere, sed salvare (in the last.) Such may ever be the end, of all attempts to destroy us. So may He come still; and still, as here, He came, never to destroy, ever to save us. And, as oft as He, to save us, so oft we, to praise Him.

Luke 1. 46.

And God grant, that this answer here of CHRIST may serve, for a determination of this case for ever, and every Christian be so resolved by it, as the like never come in speech more, by any dicimus. But if (as we know not what spirits are abroad,) that every destroying spirit may be rebuked, and every State preserved, as this Town here was, and as we all were, this Day. And (ever) as He doth save still, we may praise still; and ever magnifie His mercy, that endureth for ever. Amen.

A SER-

A SERMON

Preached before the

KINGS MAIESTIE

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDCXII.

LAMENT. Chap. III. Ver. XXII.

Miſericordiæ Domini quia non ſumus conſumpti : quia non defecerunt miſerationes Ejus.

It is the LORDS mercies that we are not conſumed, becauſe His compaſſions fail not.

Luke 7. 32.

THE Verſe is not amiſs; The Book ſuits not ſo well. For this joyfull Day of Our great and famous Deliverance, CHRIST'S, tibiis cecinimus is more meet, than John Baptiſts Planximus; and DAVIDS Harp, than JEREMIES Lamentations. This (I know) cometh to your minds, at the mention of this Melancholicke Book. But yet, if we weigh our caſe well; not, what it fell out to be, but what it was meant to have been; the very Book will not ſeem ſo out of ſeaſon. For, this very day, ſhould it not have been a day of Lamentation to the whole Land? Was it not ſo marked in their Kalender? And they had their will, would they not have given matter of making a book of Lamentations, over this State; and that another manner of Book, with more, and with longer Chapters, than this of Jeremie's? By the mercy of GOD, is proved otherwiſe. But what? ſhall we ſo intend the day, what it is, as we forget, what it was like to have been? No: the Book and the verſe Iuxta ſe poſita will do well; one ſet out the other, as the black-work doth the white. The Book put us in mind, but for GOD's mercy, in what caſe we might have been. The verſe by Gods mercy, what we are. And even to thank Him, that our lot was, hit the verſe, and miſs the book; to fall within the one, and without the other.

The truth is, I had a deſire that Miſericordiæ Domini might have their day: and this day I thought to dedicate chiefly to them. We have formerly moved and reſolved the queſtion out of the Goſpel; we have once or twice called to joy out of the Pſalmes. The barbarouſneſſe of the act, and the parties to it, hath been juſtly inveighed againſt: A time given to each of theſe

And:

And shall we not allow one day to the magnifying of Him, and His mercies, that was the cause of all? It should have had the first day by right, and we were pointed to it, by Misericordiæ Domini super omnia opera Ejus: Well, at last now in this seventh year, this annus Sabbaticus, let us make it our Sabbath, rest upon it, and, put it off no longer. Be this day dedicated to the celebrating of them.

To this end, though all the Scripture over, GOD's mercy be much spoken of (for where shall ye light, but ye shall find it upon one occasion or other?) yet, to fit this day and our case, as it fell out this day, (in my poor conceipt) none in any other book, falleth out so just, cometh so home, as this verse to this day, It was the mercies, &c. as upon the opening will fall out. Which though it be in the Book, yet is nothing of the nature of the Book. Psalm 144. 9.

The Summe & Division.

The Verse is a Recognition or acknowledgement: I may add, a just and a joyfull recognition. And that double, 1 That we were not consumed, and 2 Why we were not. So, it standeth on two parts: 1 That we were not, a happy effect: 2 Why we were not: it was Gods mercy, the cause of that and all other our happinesse.

I. The effect is in these words; Non sumus consumpti. Of which, 1 Consumpti, is the danger; and 2 Non sumus, the deliverance.

II. The cause in these words, Misericordiæ Domini quod non: And there first: 1 Non, we were not. 2 And then there was a cause quod non, that we were not: 3 Then, that cause was GOD's mercy. 1 Which we take in sunder: It was GOD first, that did it: 2 Then, it was His mercy that moved Him to it. In the mercy, three things we find: 1 Misericordia, more than one, many, mercies. 2 Compassions, or (as the native signification of the word is) bowels, the bowels of mercy; that special kind. 3 And those have this property, they fail not, or (which is all one) consume not: not they; and so not we: Their not-consuming is the cause, we were not consumed.

III. Then last our Recognition. That seeing, His mercies fail not us, that we fail not them; seeing they consume not, nor we, by their meanes; that our thankfulnesse do not neither, that it fall not into a consumption. But that, in imitation of the three, we render Him 1 plural, thanks; 2 and these from the bowels: and 3 that incessantly without failing. And this, not in words only, but in some reality, some works of mercy, tending to preserve those, that are near consumpti, pining away.

PLain it is, a danger there was: Else, vain were the Recognition. That danger is set down in the word Consumpti: some consuming there should have been: some such matter was in hand. A word, even (as it were) of purpose chosen, for us; for, it sorteth just with our danger as may be.

I. The Effect: 1 The danger.

Consuming may be more wayes than one: but, no way so proper, as by the element of fire, Confector & consumptor omnium (saith the Heathen man) that makes away and consumes all things. It is the proper peculiar Epithete of that Element, consuming fire: and the common phrase of the HOLY GHOST is consumed by fire. This fits us right. Fire it was, consuming fire, should have consumed us: it was a fiery consumption.

Consumpti ignei. Heb. 12. 29. Luke 9. 54.

Then consumpti, in propriety, is nothing but simul sumpti: Con is simul in composition. All taken, all put together, and an end made of all. And was it not so with us? King and Prince, Lords Spiritual and Temporal, Judges, Knights, Citizens, Burgesses, and a great number besides of spectatours and auditours, that day, out of all the flower of the Kingdom: all couped up together under roof, and then blowen up all. This is simul sumpti, and consumpti, both.

2 Consumpti. i.e. Simul sumpti. 1 Personally.

Will ye any more for company? This was but personal; take the real too: leal, stone, timber, windowes, walls, roofs, foundations and all, must have up too: an universal desolation of all, both personal and real. That the stone out of the wall, and the beam out of the frame, if they could speak, might say, and we are in; simul sumpti, and consumpti too; all laid waste, not one stone standing upon another. This, was right consumpti, spent indeed, were nothing left, person or things with life or without: utter havock made of all.

2 Really: Habac. 1. 11: Matth. 24. 2.

Thus far might Jeremy go, and match us in these three. I will touch two or three more beyond him, that we may see, our case should have been more lamentable, than the book of Lamentations it self.

1. There was no fire in Jeremies time; none but of wood and coal, and no consuming but that way: and that fire consumes by degrees, piece and piece, one piece fire while one is wood, still; so that one may save a brands end for a need. But this was a fire, Jeremy never knew of, nor many ages after was ever heard of: takes all at once. No brand here, no pulling out of the fire, no saving any: here is quick work, all done and past, as soon as the paper burnt. Zech. 3. 2.

2. Another: In this of the Prophets they had fair warning. There was a Camp pitched three several times in Jehoiakim, Jeconias, Zedechias dayes: they had time to make themselves ready. But in ours, facti essemus sicut Sodoma, our destruction had been like that of Sodom; no Camp pitched there, but suddenly, in a moment: to the hazard of many a soul, that where (I doubt me) Rom. 9. 29.

but evil prepared, if they had been thus ſuddenly ſurpriſed. And that had been a lamentable conſumpti (indeed) of both body and ſoule, the body here, the ſoul eternally. A terrible blow indeed, and we ſhould not have known who would have hurt us.

3. Now we do, as hap is; and therein we leave Jeremy behind again. It was not an open enemy offered this: uſually, deſtruction cometh from them. So did this, in the Text: from the Chaldes, not only ſtrangers, but in open hoſtility with the Iewes. But, in ours, they were not ſo much as ſtrangers, but borne ſubjects of one and the ſame countrey, tongue, and allegiance. The more lamentable, to be conſumed by our ſelves, to be ſhot thorow with an arrow, the feathers whereof grew on our own wings. So they were, naturally: but, when they fell once to this unnaturall deſignement, when they fell on conſuming, they were no longer men, all humanity was quite conſumed in them. And this was the danger.

To make a danger dangerous, two things are required: 1 The ſureneſſe, and 2 the neereneſſe. If it be uncertaine, we reckon not of it; nor, though it be certain, if it be farre away. Let us ſee, both was it.

2 The certainty of the danger.

To make it certain, theſe are required: 1 It be ſoundly reſolved: 2 ſurely bound; and ſeriouſly put in execution. Firſt upon good reſolution, a ſentence given quod eramus conſumendi, we were to be made away, and rather than we ſhould not, their own friends, allies, and kindred; yea, their one dear Catholikes to go the ſame way, to have been in the Conſumpti, as well as we. This was to have it certain, to make ſure work.

Gravely reſolved; and faſt bound, as funiculus triplex, the three immutable things of their Religion could bind it. 1 Bound by oath: their Sacramentum militare, they ever tooke firſt, never to diſcover, never to deſiſt.

2. Bound again by their Sacrament of Penance. Thither they went in an error, as if it had been ſome fault, but, they found more, than they went for: went for abſolution; received a flat reſolution, it was not only no ſin, but would ſerve to expiate their other ſins. And, not only expiate their ſins, but heap alſo upon them an increaſe of merit. In effect, that our conſumption would become their conſummation.

3. Bound laſt, with the Sacrament of the Altar, and ſo made as ſure, as their Maker could make it. Theſe three, ſure now, paſt ſtarting (I trow.)

But go too: Oaths and Sacraments conſume nothing. True: It was therefore not only ſolemnly bound, but ſadly ſet upon. They fell to their Pick-axes, laid in their powder, by ten and by twenty barrels at once; and I know not how much iron, and how many huge ſtones; Fervebat opus, in earneſt they were. Of all which we may ſay (with Saint John) That which we have ſeen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, that preach we, in this point. That, very ſure it is, we were very far gone in our Conſumption.

1 Iohn 1.1.

3 The neereneſſe of it.

And all this while, it may be, it was in dies multos, far enough away; to be done a good while after, we know not when. How neer was it? Nox una interpoſita, but a night (nor that neither: neither a whole night, nor a whole day;) but a few houres we had to ſpend. The traine ready, and the match: three for failing. They ſtayed but for the con, for the time, till all were con (that is) ſimul ſumpti; and then conſumpti ſhould have come ſtraight upon all.

This was our caſe, thus dangerous, thus ſure, thus neer; Inſomuch as, we were even given for dead. The letter ſhewed as much. Their being together, and waiting for it, at their meeting place, ſhewed as much. They made full reckoning, we were little better, than even conſumpti in the preterperfect tenſe. And neerer we cannot come. It is well known, David was never deſtroyed indeed finally, yet (often in the Pſalmes) he ſaith, He was brought back from the deep of the earth again; from the gates of death: yea even from the nethermoſt Hell: His meaning was, he was exceeding neer it. And ſo were we as neer as was poſſible, and not be ſwallowed up of it. And this is the meaning of conſumpti. And thus much for it.

Pſal. 71.18, 9. 14.86.13.

The deliverance.

Eſay 37.3.

Now are we to put Non ſumus to it, and we are ſafe ſtraight. Which two words contain our delivery. So as, though we were deſtinate as fewell, to this fire; though venerunt filii ad partum, though they were come to the point, to be delivered of that they had ſo long travelled withall; though like we were, and ſure we were, and neer we were, yet conſumed we were not. We were not: for, here we are, bleſſed be GOD. Here, and elſe-where (ſome few except, which ſince be gone to their graves in peace.) The place ſtandeth, the perſons ſtill alive. Non ſumus conſumpti; this is ad oculum, it admits no further diſcourſe. But this it admits, that we may ſtay a little and lay our Non ſumus, to this of Ieremy in the Text; and we ſhall find ours, another manner of preſervation, by oddes; that ſo we may provide our ſelves of another manner of recognition.

1 The comparing of theirs & ours.

1 In the perſons. Chap. 2. 21.

2 In the things.

Non ſumus conſumpti (ſaith Ieremy:) when for all that in every corner of the ſtreets, they lay ſlaine. Only he, and a handfull more in compariſon, were ſpared. This ſerved him to ſay; yet we be not all gone: A cold comfort (God knoweth.) This for perſons.

For things. The gates of Ieruſalem were burnt with fire, and a great part of the City; howbeit not all. A remnant there was left, though but a poor one (GOD wot:) yet, enough in his ſenſe, to ſay Non conſumpti, all is not conſumed. 1 Will ye ſee now them with us? With them, ſome few left alive, the moſt ſlain: with us not one ſlain, but all ſtill alive. 2 With, them a part of the buildings left, though the farre greater part conſumed: With us, neither ſticke nor ſtone touched, nor burnt; nay, not ſo much as ſinged. All ſafe, all, in toto; and all in qualibet parte. 1 Upon the matter, thus it is. They were not conſumed, that is, not all: We were not conſumed; that, is not at all.

All

All they were not consumed, with them: None at all, with us, 2 Some were saved there: Both all and some here; neither Person, nor thing miscarried. 3 Ieremy could not say: It is Gods mercy we are all safe: He was fain to give it in the negative, We are not consumed. We may say it, and put it in either: both in the affirmative, All safe, and in the negative, None consumed, no, not one.

There be indeed two Non consumpti's: 1 One cometh after, after it is burnt a great while; with water to quench it. 2 The other goeth before, and keeps it from taking fire at all: and that is ours. In which case, Non consumpti is no terme diminuent. Nay, the precurrent negative is better by much. Aske the speculative Divine, if it be not so: If Ne nos inducas, be not better, than, Libera nos; Lead us not in, than Deliver us out. Not to Sin, than to be forgiven it; not to fall, than to be lift up again; And (to insist in this present) not to kindle, than, to quench. For, the latter is from Subsequetur me misericordia, Mercy subsequent, which is good; the former from Citò nos anticipent misericordiæ tuæ, from the anticipation of mercy, which is farre the better of the twaine. The difference of ours above theirs: Psal. 23. 6. Psal 79. 8.

2. One great difference we see between the two Non sumus's. Another now, no whit lesse. For the greatest of all their miseries, and which touched Jeremy nerest, was the proud insolency of of their enemies (the Chaldes) over them; worse, than the consuming, was their insulting upon them. This, worse than all the rest. Thankes be to GOD, so did not ours. They had no cause to triumph over us: we, over them, rather. Non sumus consumpti: Non nos, at illi, Will ye observe that? We were not: but our enemies were consumed themselves. Et viscera impiorum crudelia, the cruel bowels of those wicked men consumed; and that with fire, and that before, and in sight of the very place, to which they had vowed destruction, and, in which the destruction of us all. That the saying of the Prophet might be taken up over them: Væ qui consumis, Nonne consumeris & ipse? You that will needs be a consuming, shall not you your selves be so served? In the pit you digged, in the net you spread, in the element you made choise of, your own bowels burned. Behold ye Despisers, and tremble, and fear, your mischiefe is turned upon your owne heads, and your consumption on lights upon your own bowels. This then doubles the point: that not only we were not, but that they (our consumers) were. Prov. 12. 10. Esay. 33. 1. Psalm. 9. 15. Acts 13. 41.

3. Yea, I adde (for a full triplicity in this point) even that we were cured of our consumption sleeping (for so we were) and never dreamed of any danger, till we had scaped it. This also is a maine difference, and increaseth our Non sumus a great deale, above theirs. For, as that, the misery of all miseries, when a man is, and yet knoweth not himself to be miserable: So (I say) that, the delivery of all deliveries, when we know not our perill, till we be past it: And that was our case, Much trouble of fear, and care, much anguish of spirit is saved by it; which the poore Iewes, were even worne, spent, and consumed withall; and which Ieremy (GOD wot) was in, a long time. We, not a moment. But without heavinesse for a night, we had joy in the morning. Sure if this be a benefit, So they cried unto the LORD, and He delivered them out of their distresse: what call ye then this, They never cryed unto the LORD; yet He delivered them out of their distresse? Then put these together: 1 We were not consumed at all. 2 There should have been fire: there was not so much as smoke, 3 All should have gone: not a man, that perished. 4 All should have perished, and perished utterly: not an hair of any of their heads fell to the ground. 5 We were not consumed at all; our consumers were consumed. 6 And we without any care taken, were rid of our consumption, We were not; our enemies were. We without consuming our selves with thought, and anxiety of mind delivered from our danger before ever we knew it. And remember withall (not, Non taliter fecit omni populo, but) Non taliter fecit populo suo: He did not deale so, not with his own people, as He did with us. Psal. 30. 5. Psal. 107. 6. Psalm. 147.

II.

The effect we have; we were not: what was it, that we were not? First, an It there was; a Quia it had (that is) a cause, certainly. It was not forte fortuna, by hap hazard. No it was no casualty (this fire;) no more was the saving us from it: neither casuall; but causall both. We will not then (with those in Esay) libare fortunæ, no healths to fortune, but seek out this It, even the cause that wrought it. In Philosophy, they count him a happie man, that can find the cause: But sure in Divinity, miserable and unhapy we, if we find it not, but (with swine) feed and fill our selves with the Acorns, and never once look up to the tree, whence they came. A dangerous errour, no lesse than the danger it self.

The cause. 1 It was God. Esay 65. 11.

2. Our next caution must be, to take heed of Non causa pro causa. Where let me tell you this. There is a disease under the sun (and it is one of ours:) as to put all faults from our selves, to others; so, good deeds (as neer as we can) to plucke all to our selves from others. Others (I say:) not only men; but even God Himselfe. And that two wayes: 1 If any good be done, it was our own arme, or our own heads did it: something in us: God is left out. But, if it be too evident, He had a hand in it; then it was God, 2 but not his mercy, not of Himselfe, but something from us there was, that moved Him to do it. So, either something in us, or something from us: whereof the one is against It was God; the other, against It was his mercy: not God, or not His mercy; but we or so nevhat of ours. Ever our manner is, never to seeke further than our selves: there we would fain find it. And there, if we can find any colour of a cause, in any wisdom or foresight of our own, it is as a mist, or cloud, to take God out of our sights, the first originall true cause, the causa causarum all such miraculous divine preservations, as this was.

And yet ſecondary cauſes there be (I know:) And even in this, man may ſeeme to have a part. It was the letter that was ſent, it was the Kings divination, which I reckon the higheſt cauſe upon earth. This it was; and that it was: But, God it was (I am ſure) above both. He, that did infatuate him, that ſent the letter: that made them falſe among themſelves; falſe to their Oath, falſe to their ghoſtly Father, falſe to their Maker. And God it was, that inſpired that divination into His Majeſty: Logick, or Grammar could not reveal it. God only could; could and did direct to that moſt true, but (withall) moſt ſtrange interpretation. Let God then have that is His: Non nobis Domine, non nobis, ſed Nomini tuo da gloriam, Not unto us, Lord, not unto us, but to thy Name be the glory of it given.

2 It was Gods Mercy.

GOD it was: but, what in God? For (we ſee) it is not enough to aſcribe it to Him; but (for ſome reaſon) we muſt go yet further. God may do it, and be bound to do it, and did us wrong, if He do it not. What then in God? 1. His power may ſeem to claime the chiefe place in a deliverance. But power, and wiſdome, and other ſix (that is) all the reſt of the Divine Attributes, be but Communiter ad duo (as the Schoolemen terme them) No prime cauſes themſelves; but attendants only, and ſet on work by the two Maſter-Attributes, 1 Juſtice, or 2 Mercy. So that Juſtice it was; or Mercy it was. Mercy it was (ſaith Ieremy) and ſo may we all, in and by his mouth that ſtraight upon it pronounced, Miſericordia Domini ſuper omnia opera Eius. For, if it had not been that Mercy, nay if (as St. Iames ſaith) it had not been Miſericordia ſuperexaltat judicium, Mercy had not been above all His workes, even juſtice and all, it had been evill with us, Mercy it was, Juſtice it was not. For then our own good deſerts might procure it, as due to them; and ſo we come about again, to find the firſt cauſe in our ſelves, becauſe we were this or that. All cometh to one: if it were our own fore-ſight, it was not GOD; and if it were our own merit, it was not He neither.

Pſalm. 145. 1 Iames 2. 13.

But, for this, I apeale to our ſelves. For (I verily thinke) if we would but call to mind (and here now, I would, that every man would call to mind) in what caſe he was for his ſoule to God-ward, at that very time; whether in ſtate of ſinne or of grace; Sure, if we did but returne to our hearts, and there (as Salomon ſpeaketh cognoſcere quiſque plagam cordis ſui, every man feel how his heart beates; that heart of ours would ſoone tell us. Beſt claime not by juſtice: Beſt, even confeſſe (with Ieremy) It was God and Gods mercy, without more ado.

1 Reg. 8. 38.

We were in conſumpti, if it were but our conſuming ſins: 1. If but of what then was and (may I not ſay) ſtill is conſumed and waſted? What huge ſummes in ſuperfluity, riot, of belly and back, and worſe matters! 2. Our time: if but the conſuming of it, in eaſe and idleneſſe, and too well-known fruits of them both. 3. Of the Service of God, that is quite conſumed by moſt of us, now: fallen too, but a ſermon, if that, and how little like a Sermon, we hear it, and leſſe (I fear) after regard it! 4. Of Gods Name that runnes waſte; and our Bleſſed SAVIOUR, that is even piecemeale conſumed in our mouthes, by all manner oathes and execrations, and that without any need at all. Theſe, with other ſins, that fret like a moth, and creepe like a Canker, to the conſuming of our ſoules, we ſhould find: that, as it was our enemies purpoſe we ſhould have been conſumed; ſo it was our deſart to have been conſumed; and that, it was His mercy only, we were not conſumed. This is the true cauſe, God's mercy.

In which, note theſe two: how fitly it anſwereth and meets both with 1 our conſuming, and 2 with us.

1 As the cruelty of man was the cauſe, we ſhould have been; ſo (full againſt it) the mercy of God, the cauſe we were not. The true cauſe of our ſafety, Gods mercy; as of our deſtruction, mans cruelty.

2. Again, to provide, that being out of our conſumption, we fall not into preſumption, and ſo plucke a worſe judgement upon us. The mercy of God, againſt our deſert. Our deſert it was, to have been; His mercy it was, we were not. His juſtice for our deſerts, would have come upon us: It was His mercy turned His juſtice from us, upon them. His juſtice would have ſubſcribed the ſumus: His mercy it was that gave the Non, and ſtayed it; Glory be to God, and to His mercy for it.

Which mercy yields us three things to be obſerved: 1 The number 2 the nature, and 3 the property.

His mercies. 1 Their number.

1. The number: that it is not miſericordia but miſericordiæ; not one, but many, even a plurality of them: A multitude of them, becauſe a multitude of us; They many, becauſe we many: We many, and our ſinnes many more, and where ſinnes are multiplied, there a multiplicity of mercies is needfull, Ne fortè non ſufficiant nobis & vobis, leſt there be not enough for both houſes, and for all three Eſtates in them: For ſo is it to be wiſhed, there may be a repreſentation of all His mercies, as that Aſſembly is the repreſentation of all the Realme: that ſo there may be enough for all.

Mat. 25. 9.

2 Their nature.

2 But then of mercy, the cauſe here ſet down; (another cauſe;) becauſe his compaſſions faile not: How hangs this together? Thus: the word, which here is turned compaſſions, in very deed properly ſignifieth the bowels. It is to ſhew, that not mercies, nor a number of them at large; from any place or any kinde, would ſerve for this work: but, a certain ſpeciall kind of choice mercies was required; and thoſe are they that iſſue from the bowels: miſericordiæ viſcerum, or viſcera miſericordiæ (which you will.) You ſhall find them together in ſome ſpeciall workes of GOD, ſuch as, this was.

Theſe are the choice: for, of all parts, the bowels melt, relent, yeild, yern ſooneſt. Conſequently, the mercies from them, of all other, the moſt tender, and (as I may ſay) the mercies moſt mercifull. The beſt, 1 both becauſe they are not drie, but full of affection, and come cheerfully: (an eaſie matter to diſcerne between a dry mercy, and a mercy from the bowels.) 2 And becauſe to mercy one may be enclined, by ſomewhat from without: when that failes, where are we then? But, the bowels are within him, and when we have brought the cauſe within Him, we are ſafe. Quando cauſam ſumit de ſe & viſceribus ſuis, that mercy is beſt, and yieldeth the beſt comfort.

But, in this word of the Prophets, there is yet more than bowels. מעים were enough for them: רחמים are more; are the bowels, or veſſel near the womb, near the loynes: In a word, not viſcera only, but parentum viſcera, the bowels of a father, or mother, thoſe are רחמים which adds more force a great deal. See them, in the parable, of the father toward his riotous lewd Sonne; when he had conſumed all vitiouſly, his fatherly bowels of Compaſſion failed him not though. See them in the Story, in David, toward his ungratious impe Abſalom, that ſought his Crown, ſought his life, abuſed his Concubines in the ſight of all Iſrael; yet hear the bowels of a father, Be good to the youth Abſalom, hurt him not, uſe him well for my ſake. See them, in the better harlot of the twain: Out of her motherly bowels, rather give away her child quite, renounced it rather, than ſee it hurt. This is mercy, here is compaſſion indeed: ô paterna viſcera miſerationum! when we have named them, a multitude of ſuch mercies, as come from a fathers bowels, we have ſaid as much, as we can ſay, or can be ſaid. Luke 20.513 2 Sam. 18. 8. 1 Reg. 3. 16.

And, mention of this word is not unfit, whether we regard them (our enemies) per quod itum eſt in viſcera terræ (in which place, GOD's bowels turned againſt them and toward us:) or whether we think, that His bowels had pity on our ſo many bowels, as ſhould have flown about, all the ayre over, and light ſome in the ſtreets, ſome in the river, ſome beyond it, ſome I know not where.

Now, that which maketh up all, is the property laſt put; quia non deficiunt, or (which is all one) non conſumuntur, fail not, or (as ye may read it) conſume not. And ſo, as we begun, we end with Non conſumpti. There cannot be a more kindly conſequence than this; our not failing, from their not failing; we do not, becauſe they do not. If they did, we ſhould: But, quia non conſumpta illa, non conſumpti nos: for, they are not conſumed, no more are we. And why do they not fail? Becauſe He Himſelf doth not. He is the ſame ſtill, He failes not: His bowels are as he is; ſo, they fail not, no more than He. 3. Their Property.

And in this [Quia non deficiunt] is all the comfort we have. For, ſince Ieremies time, one would be amazed to conſider, (the huge number of foul enormities, that have been committed, and yet the parties that commit them not conſumed:) where there ſhould be mercy to ſerve; for them all. One would think, by this, they ſhould have been drawn dry. So they had, but for this לא תכלו. It can never be ſaid, Now, there is all; there is (now) no more left. No: an inexhauſt fountain there is of them: never dry, but floweth ſtill freſh and freſh. And look, even the next words, Ieremy tells us, they renew every morning: No morning comes, but a freſh ſupply of them. And even this morning, this fifth of November, we had a good proof of it. Yea, they are never perfect, the ſumme is never made up: There is ſtill added every day; and they ſhall not be conſummate, till the conſummatum eſt of the world.

And but for theſe bowels, that ſtill melt; and for theſe compaſſions, ever-flowing and never failing, they (our enemies) had not failed of their purpoſe. But, becauſe theſe failed not, they failed; becauſe theſe conſumed not, we were not conſumed. They are not only plentifull, as, in the plurall; and choyce, as from the bowels, the bowels of a Father; but perpetual: (what talk we of perpetuall?) they are eternal. Theſe three, their 1 multiplicity, their 2 ſpeciality, their 3 eternity, theſe three we hold by.

III. Our recognition.

And now to our Recognition. To perform it to the full, as it deſerved, that (I know) we cannot. Worthily to celebrate, and ſet forth His mercies therein, according to their merit, what tongue of men or Angels can do it? But, ſhall we not therefore do it, as we can? We were not conſumed: ſhall our thankfulneſſe fall into a Conſumption? His compaſſion failed us not, ſhall our recognition fail them? Shall we not find our tongues as well to praiſe His mercies, as to pray for them? Can we pour out petitions in time of need, and can we not drop forth a few thanks when we have what we would? No, let this be the firſt: that we anſwer, Miſericordiæ non conſumptæ, with gratiæ inconſumptæ; that our thanks fall not into an hectick.

Then, that we imitate the three properties of this Vertue, that ſaved us, and to whom we owe our ſelves: no other, than thoſe, that be expreſſed in the Text.

1. That we keep the number, do it plurally. Not ſingle thanks, for plural mercies: that agrees not. Iterate them over and over, as much as we may. In the weight, we ſhall ſurely fall ſhort; let us make amends with the number: Do it oft, and many times; in hope, that Sæpe cadendo, they ſhall effect that, which Vi, by any force in them, they are not able.

This for every one, to give as many as we may, make them many. Now, as many as we are many. As we ſhould have gone all together, as we ſhould have gone; ſo, and no otherwiſe, let us, together, here, all acknowledge His mercies, this day, ſhewed us, and praiſe Him all of us for them: Praiſe him King, and Queen, &c. Pſalm 148. 11, 12, 13.

Yea, nor only Dicat nunc Iſrael, but Dicat nunc paries, praiſe Him walls and windoes, praiſe Him lime and ſtone, praiſe Him roof and foundation, Let them praiſe the Name of the LORD: for He ſaid but a word, and they ſtood faſt; He commanded, Non, and they were not ſtirred. Ieremy ſpeaks to a wall to weep (Chap. 2. 18.) we may, with as good reaſon, to rejoyce, and give thanks. All, that ſhould have periſhed together, praiſe Him together. Pſalm 118. 2. Pſal. 148. 5, 6.

2. Next: that we put him not off with certain (I know not what) hollow thanks, that have no bowels at all in them. But do it, De viſceribus, De intimis fibris, from the very bowels, from the in-Pſalm 103. 1. nermoſt veines and the ſmalleſt threds of them: with Him, Praiſe the Lord, ô my ſoul, בָּרְכִי

Pſalm 35. 10. and all my bowels, all that is within me, All my bones ſhall ſay, &c. When the bones (the bones that ſhould have been ſhivered in ſunder) when the bowels (the bowels, that ſhould have been ſcattered abroad) ſpeak, that is the right ſpeaking. If every one of us, to himſelf, would but ſay the very words of this verſe only, as they ſtand: It was, &c. It was, &c. even this onward, were worth the while; if it be not for form, but feelingly ſpoken: Dic, Dic, ſed intus dic; ſay it, but ſay it from within, let the bowels ſpeak it; though our words fail us, they do not. And (indeed) the conſumption ſhould have been with fire; ſhall our recognition be frozen? no ſpark, no vigor igneus, no fervour at all in it? How agree theſe, a fiery deſtruction, and a frozen confeſſion? It ſtandeth us upon to be delivered, no leſſe from cold thanks, than from a hot fire.

3. And that we never fail to do it. No year to intermit it, no week, and (I would I might Pſalm 136. 1. add) no day neither. Anſwer Miſericordia Ejus manet in æternum, with Miſericordias Domini can-
Pſalm 89. 1, 2. tabo in æternum: and not mercies that never fail, with ſhort thanks and ſoon done; ſpecially, ſeeing, their not failing lyeth upon our not failing them.

Now, it would do well to ſeal up all with a Recognition real; that is, the praiſe of mercy, with ſome work of mercy. What was done upon us, this day? our preſerving: A work of mercy it was. This work can no way ſo lively be expreſſed, as by a work of like nature, nothing ſo well (ſaith S.
James 1. 16. James) by warme breath, as by warme cloathes. Erga conſumendos, ſuch as are in danger of it, not by fire, but by cold and nakedneſſe.

This, as it is a moſt kindly way to reſemble it: ſo (withall) it is a moſt effectual meanes to procure the continuance and not failing of it. Magnes eſt miſericordia Dei erga nos, miſericordia noſtra in fratres; of GOD'S mercy to us, keeping us from conſuming, our mercy toward our poor brethren is the loadſtone, to keep them from the like. So, under one, ſhall we both ſet it forth and procure it; procure that, we ſo much ſtand in need of, and ſet forth that Vertue, to which we were ſo much this day beholden.

Now to GOD; to Him, and to His mercy; the bowels of His mercy, and the freſh fountain of them: That ſuffered us not to be conſumed, but delivered us; and that from that fire, and that univerſal, utter, ſudden, unnatural conſuming by it, the decree whereof was ſo certainly gone forth againſt us, come ſo near us, and we not aware of it: That ſuffered us not to be conſumed, but gave them to be conſumed in our ſteads: and hath this day, preſented us all alive to give Him praiſe for it: To Him, for the multitude of His mercies, for the paterna viſcera miſerationum ſuarum, that never fail nor conſume themſelves, nor ſuffer us to fail, and be conſumed: To Him I ſay, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON

Preached before the

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDCXIII.

PROV. Chap. VIII. Ver. XV.

Per me Reges regnant.

By Me KINGS Reign.

THese words may well ſerve for a Sermon, for they be a piece of a Sermon. For, all the Chapter is a Sermon preached by one ſtanding in the top of the high places, (Verſe 2.) The high places, that was (then) their Church; The top of them, that was the Pulpit.

It is the common queſtion, Who preaches? Ever, we muſt know that: And though the whole book be Salomons; and though he be a * Preacher upon Record; yet Major Salomone hic, a greater Preacher than Salomon is here. He was but wiſe; it is Wiſdom it ſelf made this Sermon. And we may be bold to preach, what Wiſdom preacheth: A Sermon out of ſuch a Sermon, cannot be amiſs. * Eccleſ. 1: 1. Mark 12. 42.

Specially, this Wiſdom; the eſſential Wiſdom of GOD: which upon the point, will prove to be none other, but CHRIST: And ſo, our Text fall out to be de verbis Domini: that is, de verbis Domini ſecundum Salomonem; for, ſo there be, no leſſe than ſecundum Matthæum, or Ioannem.

Which, though they were uttered by Him, before He was in the fleſh, what of that? they be no whit the leſſe; but full out as good Goſpel, as if they had been recorded by any of the four Evangeliſts: yea, and this we may add further; even Goſpel, before any Goſpel, of them all. Thus much for the Author of the ſpeech.

The

The ſumme. The ſpeech it ſelf ſeemes, as if ſome queſtion there were, Per quem Reges? Or ſome were about to bring the Writ of Quo warranto, to know, how they claime to be Kings? how to hold their ſoveraign Authority; by whoſe grant?

And let not this ſeem ſtrange: It is no new thing, to bring this Writ in like caſes.

Exod. 2. 14. Matth. 21. 23. One was brought againſt Moſes; Who made thee a Ruler? Nay higher; one againſt our Saviour Himſelf: By what authority doeſt thou theſe things, and who gave thee that authority? Againſt Moſes, againſt Chriſt? and why not then againſt Salomon and his fellow King?

Exod. 3. 14. John 10. 36. And this ſame Per Me (here) is an anſwer to all. Who made you (Moſes) a Ruler? He whoſe Name is I am, ſent me. Who gave Chriſt His authority? He, that ſanctified Him, and ſent Him to be the Meſſias of the world. And here now; Kings, by whom, Per Me, by Him too. These words of His Charta Regia, This their Charta Royal: And He that gave it them, will warrant it for good, and bear them out againſt all the Per me's in the world. This for the Nature of the ſpeech.

Bellar. cont. Becc. A point neceſſary, if ever, at this time to be weighed well, and looked into; wherein this queſtion is put up, and ſo vexed, that it cannot reſt; Wherein they have ſet up an Anti-per and given him this ſentence in his mouth, Ego facio, ut Rex tuus Rex non ſit. I will make your King no King, this Text Per me notwithſtanding. One, to ſever Reges and Regnant, that they ſhall reign no longer, than he ſees cauſe to ſuffer them. And is it not time then, to make good their Tenures?

And that do this Text, and this day. The Text in word; the day, indeed cum effectu, really.

The Text, the words indeed (as the words of Wiſdom) are but few, and the ſentence ſhort; ſcarce any in the Scripture ſo ſhort: In our tongue, but four words, and they but four ſyllables. But it fareth with ſentences as with Coynes. In Coynes, they that in ſmalleſt compaſſe contain greateſt value are beſt eſteemed: And, in ſentences, thoſe that in feweſt words compriſe moſt matter, are moſt praiſed. And ſuch is this.

Exceeding compendious, that we muſt needs be without all excuſe (it being but four monoſyllables) if we do not remember it.

And withall, of rich Contents: for, upon theſe four ſyllables, depend all Kings and Kingdomes of the Earth: of ſuch force are they.

Of which four, the two latter (Reges and Regnant) be two as great matters as any be in the World. One, the Perſons themſelves, as they be Kings. The other, the Act of their reigning, or bearing rule over Nations. Theſe two latter depend on the two former per me: which are but one in effect; but, He a great One. For, it is here poſitively ſet down, obſerendo, that theſe two are by this former; By and through Him, that ſayes per me. By and through Him Kings firſt ſetled in their reignes. By and through Him ever ſince upholden in their reignes. By and through him vouchſafed many miraculous preſervations in their reignes. Thus far the Text.

Luke 1. 78. Then, by the tender mercy of our God comes the day from on high, and giveth great ſight unto the Text: This Day, on which a very memorable memorial of a famous Per me. One, in great Capital Letters: Even of Per Me Reges: and not of per Me Reges alone, but of per Me Leges, (and that too followes, here in the verſe) and of per Me Greges too: all had gone up, but for this, Per Me. This Day, this per Me ſoundeth in your eares, and this day this per Me was ſealed in your eyes, and this queſtion actually decided.

The Diviſion. For the Order in treating whereof, our parts muſt be as our words: Look how many words, ſo many parts: four of either. 1 Of Me firſt, the Cauſe: 2 Then of Per, the Manner: 3 After of Per Me Reges, the Perſons: 4 And laſt of Per me regnant, the Act.

I. II. III. IV.

I.

The cauſe, Me: 1 Kings & Kingdomes have a cauſe. Pſalm 57. 6. Rom. 13. 4.

Per Me. It is a generall Rule, Per dicit cauſam: the Nature of this Preposition (Per) is to note a Cauſe certain. And a certain cauſe excludeth Chance. Firſt, then Kings and Kingdomes have their Per: they be not fortè fortuna, at hap-hazard, ex concurſu atomorum. They be no caſualties: The wind blowes no man to them (ſaith the Pſalme 57.) And Non temerè (ſaith the Apoſtle:) where Non temere, as it is not in vaine, ſo is it alſo not at adventure: Cauſall they are; Caſual they are not. A Per there is: a Cauſe of Kings raigning.

2 That cauſe is a perſon. Verſe 14. Eſay 65. 11. James 1. 17. What is that cauſe? Per me: and Me is a Perſon; And a Perſon is Naturæ rationalis individua ſubſtantia, a ſingle or determinate ſubſtance of a Nature indued with reaſon. It is not Res bruta vel muta, no dumb thing or without underſtanding, is cauſe of them. He ſpeaks (we hear:) ſaith, Per me. And His very laſt words before theſe, be, I am underſtanding.

Againſt thoſe that do Jovi menſam ponere, aſcribe it to the Poſition of the ſtarres, to this or that Planet in the Aſcendent. No; it is not de luminibus (they, be no Perſons:) but de Patre luminum (He, is.) So a cauſe there is, and no impersonal cauſe, but Per me a Perſon.

What

What Person? per me regnant: that is not Per se regnant: so another person it is besides themselves; one different from them. That they reigne, is not, by or from themselves, but by or from some other besides. Regnabo (saith Adonija) but he failed; it would not be: To teach him, it is not Per se, by their own bow or sword, nor Marte nor Arte, the reigne; And so to sacrifice to them. It is not their own place, they sit in, nor their own power, they execute: It is derived from another person; Ipse est qui fecit nos, & non ipsi nos (may they also say) He it is that made us & not we our selves. A person; And another person.

3 Another person beside themselves. 1 Reg. 1. 5; Psalm. 44. 6. Abac. 1. 16. Psalm. 100. 3.

And who is that other person? Let me tell you this first: It is but on Person, not many, Per Me is the singular number. It is not Per nos: so it is not a plurality; no multitude, they hold by. That claime is gone, by Per me: one single person it is, Per quem. The other, a Philosophical conceit it came from, from those that never had heard this Wisdome preach. In this booke, we find not any Soveraigne power, ever seated in any body collective, or derived from them. This we find, that GOD He is King; that the Kingdomes be His, and to whoms he will He giveth them. That ever they came out of God's hand by any Per Me, any grant into the Peoples hand to bestow, that we find not. One Person it is.

4 But one person, not many. Psal. 93. 97. 99. Dan. 4. 14. Ier. 27. 5.

I aske then, this one Person who He is? This I find (at the XXIV. Verse.) That whosoever He is, He was, when there were yet no Abysse, no depths, nor no mountaines upon the Earth, nor the Earth it self: He was before all these. I find again, (at the XXVII. verse.) When the heavens were spread, a decree given to the Sea, the foundations of the Earth first laid, He was there a Worker together with God: Was at the making of all, was Himselfe Maker of all. So, neither Man nor Angell; they were not so ancient, they created nothing, they were created themselves.

5 That person, neither man nor Angell. Zech. 2. 15. Mat. 4. 9. Apoc. 13. 11. Acts 10. 26; Heb. 5. 2. Ap. 13. 1, 17, 9.

Then sileat omnis caro, let all flesh keep silence, And Omnis Spiritus (too,) in this point of Per Me. Neither the spirit that said of the Kingdomes of the Earth, All these are mine: Nor he, that though he have hornes like the Lambe, yet speaketh words like the Dragon. These foure syllables are a supersedeas to all books or book-makers for any mans Per Me, any mans claime. It is no man. And if no man, then no Pope; for he also is a man (as Saint Peter saith, he was:) And Circundatus, compassed with infirmities, St. Paul saith, he is: Sure, he made not the Earth; himselfe is made of the earth. The Abyssus, the deep was made, yet he ascended out of it: the seven hills, long before he sat on them. He is not this per Me; they hold not of him: they hold of per Me, that created heaven and earth.

And this per Me will bear no per alium besides: He that must say, Per Me Reges, must also say, per me Cœlum & terra. None but He that can say the one, can say the other. Therefore none with Him in this, Per. None to step forth and rejoyce, Etiam per me, and by me too: unlesse he can say Etiam per me Cœlum & terra. Per alium then hath no place here.

But might not the High-Priest claime deputation under per me? For that, there is a ruled case of it here, in him that was the setter down of this (Salomon.) Had the High-Priest, had Abiather ever a per me for him? It is well known, his per me went with Adonijah, against Salomon: His per me, if it could, would have deposed Salomon. But so far was it from him to say per me Salomon, that contrary Salomon might say and did, per me Abiathar. Depose Salomon he could not; deposed he was himself. Non nobis Domine, non nobis, would he have said: It was per me the wrong way with him.

1 Reg. 1. 7; 1 Reg. 2. 27. Psa. 115. 1.

Well then, being neither Man nor Angell (since they made not the world:) GOD it must be of force: There is in the reasonable nature, no other person left, but He: And He it is. He, the party, that speakes: By me Kings; I am the cause, that Kings reigne. Then, Reges quod sunt, per Deum sunt: Kings, what they are, by GOD they are: διὰ τοῦτο ἄξιωμα (saith Chrysostom:) and a speciall dignifying of their states it is, so they are. It was (we find) wont to be the usuall style (yea, even of Popes themselves writing to Kings) to wish them health in eo per quem Reges regnant, in Him by whom Kings do reigne: And that was neither Pope, nor people But GOD alone, whose proper style that is.

6 But GOD Di. In XIII. ad Rom.

By God then: I aske yet further, by what Person of the God-head? so far we have warrant to go by this Text. It is Wisdome, whose speech all this is: No created wisdome, but the Wisdome of God created all things, it self uncreate: that is the SONNE of GOD. For, whom Salomon here called Wisedome, the same (in the thirtieth Chapter after) he termeth the SONNE: What is his Name (speaking of God) or What is His SONNE'S Name? By Him, by that Person do they reigne: And now at the last, are we come to the right per me.

7 GOD, the SON. Chap. 30. 4.

Per (the preposition) would teach us so much, if there were nothing else. Per dicit causam mediam, it designeth a middle cause. And He is the middle Person, of the great Cause, Causa causarum, A Deo (saith St. Paul;) per me (saith Salomon: from GOD the Father, by God the Sonne. We may know it, It is CHRIST'S preposition, this (ever:) per Christum Dominum nostrum.

1 As the middle cause. Rom. 13. 1.

And by Him, most properly: for, in that He was to be Man, all the benefits which were to come from God, to man, were to come by Him. He, the Per, of all: among which, this one of Regall Regiment is a principal one.

2 As Man.

By Him again, because He is Wisdom (which I reckon worth a note) that the per of kingdoms, whereby they consist, is not Power so properly (the Attribute of the first) as Wisdome (the Attribute of the second Person:) they stand rather by Wisdome than force. Besides, Sapientis est ordinare (saith the great Philosopher) the proper work of wisdom is to order. And what is Anarchy, but a distordered Chaos of confusion? Or what is Rule, but an εὐταξία, a setting and holding of all in good order. This being wisdomes proper work, this per is most properly His.

3 As Wisdome.

4 As a King: Psalm 2.8. Apoc. 19.12. Psal. 47.7. Psal. 145.13.

By Him, yet againe, because on him hath the Father conferred all the kingdomes of the earth, we read it Psalm. II. We see Him Apoc. XIX. with many Crownes on His head. Meet then it was, that the Kings of the several quarters of the Earth, should be by Him, that is Rex universa terræ, That the Kings of the severall Ages of the world should be by Him, who is Rex sæculorum, whose Dominion endureth throughout all ages. In a word: Ut utrobique regnetur per Christum: And that all Crownes, both the Crowne of Glory in Heaven, and the Crownes of highest dignity here on earth, should be holden of Him, all, as all are. Thus by this time, we see this Per Me, who He is.

II.

1 The Manner; Per.

1 Not by Permission.

Now returne I to Per: There is much in the right taking of this word: What Per is it? There is a Per of Permission; as we say in the Latine, Per me licet, You may for all me; Good leave have you; I hinder you not: Or (as in English,) By Him, that is besides Him, they came, and He stopped them not. Is this the Per? Indeed some such thing is blundered at, as if GOD only permitted them, And scarce that.

Thus comes one of them forth with the matter, and makes it the very first words of his book. The Priest, he is a Solo Deo, but the King, he is ex importunitate populi: The people importun'd God, and He yielded with much ado, egre (His own word) against His Will: And so we must interpret Per Me, that is Contra me; By me, that is, all against my minde it is that Kings Raign, but I bear them or bear with them. Upon the matter this it is: They would have Kings to be, by Toleration only; And so, by that Per, are all the evils and mischiefs in the world. And, are not Kings much beholden to these men, thinke you?

But this Per we reject utterly: It cannot be. For, though the Latine Per will bear this sense, the Greeke [Διὰ] the Hebrew [בְּ] will by no meanes; the phrase, the Idioms of the tongue will in no wise endure it. Διὰ will admit no permission; nor בְּ neither. Away then with that.

2 But by Comission Iohn 1.3.

How take we Per then? What need we stand long about it, having another Per, and of the same person to patern it by: Omnia per Ipsum facta sunt (saith Saint John: And the same saith Salomon by and by after in this Chapter) Then, as By Him, all things made there, so By Him, Kings Raign here. The World, and the Government of the world by the same Per both one and the same cause institutive of both. That was not by bare permission (I trust:) no more these.

3 By the Word, a Psal. 146.5. b Psalm 28.6. c Psal 110.1. d John 10.35. e Rom. 13.2.

Per ipsum, they; and if Per ipsum Per Verbum, quia ipse est Verbum. For, how were they (the creatures) made? a Dixit & facta sunt: By the Word, by Him. And how these (Kings?) By the same b Ego dixi. Even by the same, that He Himself c Dixit Dominus Domino Deo, As He then; they. And so doth Christ Himself interperet d Ego dixi, πρὸς ὃς λόγος ἐγένετο. A Word came to them; And what manner was it? e Saint Paul telleth us, it was διαταγὴ, an ordinance, a word of high authority; the Imperiall Decrees have no other name but διαταγαὶ. This now then, is more than a Per of permission: A Per of Comission it is; A speciall warrant, an ordinance Imperial by which Kings Raign.

4 By his will: f 1 Pet. 2.15. g Rom. 13.4.

By Him, then: By what of Him? by His Will; Hæc est voluntas Dei (saith f Saint Peter;) and tibi in bonum (saith g Saint Paul,) for thy good. His will then, his good will toward men: Expressed by His Word: Word of power, (we have heard;) And word of wisdome; for He is Wisdome And word of Love; for even h Because God loved Israel, did He set Salomon King over them.

1. Expressed by His word. b 1 Chro. 9.8. 2 By His Deed 1 Cor. 15.10. i Iob 8.6,7. k Psal. 18.39. l Psal. 89.20. m Psal. 21.3. 3 By His Name. Psalm. 82.6.

Expressed by His Word: His word only; Nay, His deed too, His best deed, His gift; Dedi vobis Regem: Gift of grace; as, even they acknowledge in their styles, that Gratia Dei sunt quod sunt. Given by Him, sent by Him, i Placed in their Thrones by Him, k Vested with their robes by Him, l Girt with their swords by Him, m Annointed by Him, Crowned by Him. All these By Him's we have, toward the understanding of Per me: so By him, as none are, or can be By Him more.

n Apoc. 19.16. o Heb. 7.3.

Expressed by His word and deed only? Nay (there is nothing but His Name besides) by His Name too: so by His Name, as His very chiefest Name (CHRIST) He imparteth to them: And, that is not without mystery: to shew their neer alliance to Him. I have said Ye are Gods: which of the persons, that are each of them GOD? it followeth, Filii Altissimi, Sonnes of the most High: Son, that is CHRIST's Name: He the Person then, to whom they are beholden: He, by whom, they are. To shew, they are Sonnes, and have their descent properly from Him, n Rex Regum is upon His thigh: and Melchisedech His first KING, and His Type, is o brought in without Father and without Mother, to shew, that Kings are the Generation of God.

5 By Him, and in him. p Esay. 62.3. q Chapter 21.1 r Iohn 17.21.

By him: Nay, more than By Him (if you look better upon the word.) There is no By in the Hebrew; and yet the word is בְּ. But, that (in true and exact propriety tendered is In Me, not By Me: The meaning is that they are first in Him, and so come forth from Him.

And yet so from Him, as still they be in Him? both p Corona Regis (saith Esay) and q Cor Regis (saith Salomon) their persons and Estates both, in manu Domini.

And in Him, as He saith, r My Father in Me, and I in Him; so, they in Him, and He in them. For such is the nature of the Prepositions, the HOLY GHOST hath made choyce of, as they may be inverted and vetefied both wayes. For, as it it is true, They reign in and by Him: so is it likewise true; He reignes, in and by them. They in GOD, and GOD in them, reciprocè. He, in them, as His Deputies; they, in Him, as their Author and Authorizer. He, by their Persons: They, by His Power. And so having brought them to Him even into Him, and lodged them in Him, there let us leave them.

This

This while we have been in the two former; 1 Per, 2 Me. Now to the two latter: 3 Per Me, Reges; and 4 Per me, regnant.

III. The Persons: Reges.

Per me Reges. And first, I am glad we have met with this word Reges, in propriis terminis: when we meet with some other, there is such pinching at them. The Apostle speakes of Higher power: & it is too generall, it may be; Powers Ecclesiastick, as well as Civill: (A meere shift.) The Psalmist saith, Ego dixi dii; that, is not home neither, there is mention of Iudges in the Psalmes, as well as Princes. But here is a word, will hold them; Kings in expresse termes, totidem literis: No evasion here, no shifting it. This is home, (I trust.)

1 Reges in propriis terminis. Rom. 13. 1. Psalme 82. 6.

Per me Reges. Why what great matter is that? Per Illum omnia (saith Saint Paul, Rom. 11.) All things are by Him.

Rom. 11. 36. Iames 1. 17.

All things; but all good things specially, (saith St Iames,) Why, By Him, there can nothing come, but good.

Thirdly then, speciall good things: By a speciall Per, they, And Kings are such, and for such reckoned up here, in this very Chapter. Even for one of the Principallest benefits, vouchsafed mankind by God, this By me Kings: for will ye but marke this, they have precedence, are reckoned up, here, before the creation, it self: for, that cometh after, at the XXIV. Verse. To shew, it is (as indeed it is) better for us, not to be at all; than, not to be under Rule. Better no Creation than no Government. GOD is highly to be blessed for this Per me Reges: that He hath given potestatem talem hominibus, Such power unto men.

2 Reges speciall above all other creatures. Matth. 6. 3.

Now, I weigh the word [Reges] What? any by Him? any in grosse qualification? what without any regard of Religion at all? Sure, if none but true Professours had been here meant, It must have been, but Per Me Rex: for none but one, but this Salomon, was then such, of all the Kings of the Earth But, in that it is Reges, the Holy Ghost's meaning is to take in the rest: Hiram, and Pharaoh, and Hadad; they are in too in this Reges. For, where the Scripture distinguishes not, no more do we. Be their Religion what it will, By Him they are.

3 Reges, without qualification. 1 Of Religion. 2 Of Tyranny. Numb. 16. 3. Hosea 13. 11. Hosea 8. 10.

But, what if they take too much upon them (Core's exception:) Then, it is Dedi vobis Regem in ira (saith God by the Prophet:) Angry I was when I gave him, but I gave him though. Per Me iratum, it is: but, Per Me, it is still; Per Me, though with a difference.

4 All By Him, made, and unmade. 1 Sam. 8. 18.

But, this Onus principis (say they in the Prophet) how may we be rid of it? Is there any other Per me, to go unto, to deprive or depose them? Sure, where the worst is reckoned that can be of them, Clamabunt ad Dominum is all; I find. No Per to do it but He. By Him, and by none but by Him, they be; By Him, and by none but by Him they cease to be. In Nature, every thing is dissolved by the same meanes, it came together. In Law, Institution and Destitution, belong both to one. In Divinity; the Prophet in one and the same Verse, saith, Dedi vobis Regem (in the forepart) and with one breath, Abstuli eum in the latter: So, both pertaine to Him; Dominus dedit, Dominus abstulit. As for this new per me, we argue from the Text: He makes no Kings (we know) and, as he makes none, so he can unmake none. No right to one Per, more than another.

Hosea 13. 11.

All be Kings then, by Him: yet not all alike. GOD forbid, but there should be degrees, Magis and Minus, one more than another: But we should put a difference between Melchisedek and Nimrod; between Salomon and Saul.

5 All, but especially good Kings.

We say then, All Kings by Him; but among all, and above all, such as he that set down this, such a Salomon for he by the great Capital Per Me. Per Me iratum, those other; Per Me propitium, He: And that is the per indeed. Thus much he doth insinuate, by adding in the latter part of the verse (which commonly is the Exegesis of the former) namely, if justa decernunt do come too. If he be a Righteous KING, as Melchisedek, King of righteousnesse: If he sow the fruit of righteousnesse in peace, that is be a peaceable King, a Salomon: If he Rule per Me (that is) Sapientem, rule wisely. Those are per me propitium; Those are Kings primæ intentionis, Kings of special favour.

Heb. 7. 2. Iames 3. 18.

This for the Person. Now to the Act: Per Me regnant.

VI. The Act: Regnant.

And I make these two, two diverse, because some are Reges, Kings, and yet reign not: as true Heirs defeated.) And some reigne, and are no Kings: (as do all Vsurpers of the Throne, per fas nefasque.) Always, one thing it is, to be a King; another to reigne. Ioas was the true King, all those six years he raigned not, Athalia reigned all those six yeares, yet true Queen was she never any. Of such, GOD saith, in Hosea; Regnaverunt, sed non a me. Why? for per me, Reges regnant, By Me Kings reigne; KINGS, of lawfull and true descent, they Reign by Me: These were none such. So, they reigned; but, without any per from Me. But, when these meet, and they that be Reges de jure, regnant de facto, then it is as it should be: And per Me it is that they so meet.

Hosea 8. 14.

This Regnant I consider, as an Act, three wayes: 1. As it hath a beginning. 2. As it hath continuance. 3. As it hath Rectitude or obliquity incident to every act. Regnant, that they reign at all: Regnant diu, that they reign long: Regnant recte, that they reigne aright. And every one hath his per, Per, Ianua, By, the doore, by Him they enter their reign: per, lineæ; By, the line which He stretched out over every government, longer or shorter; by Him they continue their reign; per, regulæ; By, the rule so reigne, as they swerve not from Him, touch Him still: continue with Him, and He with them, and He will make them to continue long.

I am led to this, because you shall see these three duely set upon every Kings head, through all the story of the Bible.

1. Such a King, was so many yeares old, when he began his reigne: there is his Inchoation, his Regnant, his door of entrance,

2. And then: So many yeares he reigned in Ierusalem, or Samaria: there is his continuation, his diu regnant, his per of Line, or continuance.

3. Then ever followes (if you mark it) either, And he did well, and walked in the steps of his Father David; there is the manner, his bene regnant, his Rule or Rectitude: Or, and he did evil in the sight of the Lord, and turned not from the wayes of Ieroboam, there is his obliquitie; out of Rule himself, and brought all out of Rule with him. This holds in all, and in all will hold, after they be once off of the stage.

Regnant, Per Primæ.
The entrance.

As it is actus inchoatus: they reigne, that is, they come to the Crown, they begin their reigns.

It is generally true, that the main frame of Government, the first raising of it, could be by none, but this Per Me. But I insist on particulars rather: Wherein, any that shall but weigh, what difficulties, what oppositions be raised, what plots and practices to keep Reges from regnant, those from it whose of right it is, shall be forced to confesse, that even by Him they have their first entrance. Take him that is next hand Salomon; and he that shall mark, Adonijah's plot, drawing the High-Priest (Abiathar) and the General of the field (Ioab) into a strong faction against him; shall find, Salomon was bound to acknowledge, that Per Me he came in. Or if he will not, Adonijah himself will, he was forced to do it: That the Kingdom was turned from him, and was his brothers, for it came unto him (even Per Me) By the LORD. This Confession of his is upon record, 1 King. 2. 15. And your Majestie was non ignara mali hujus, was not altogether free from these: It is English I speak. Possibly, from Ioab you were; but, not from Abiathar; His Bulls, they were abroad: And some there were that could not enter by the door, but were climbing up another way. Yet for all these, you came to your reign, and you came by the right Per, by the door: And, this (I know;) You are one of the number of those Kings that ascribe their regnant to this Per Me. This, for Actus inchoatus: Now, they are in.

Regnat diu, Per lineæ.
Their continuance.
a 1 Reg. 16. 15.
b 2 Reg. 15. 13.
c 2 Reg. 23. 31.
d 2 Reg. 15. 8.

But when they are in, they may out again soon enough; when begun, end quickly; if Per Me, as He was the Cause procreant, so He be not also the cause Conservant, and make their reign Actus Continuatus; draw the line out along, keep and continue them for many yeares in it. Regnant, is true in the first instant. One reignes: if it be but [a] for a seven-night, as Zimri reigned no longer: but what is that? Or what is it to reign [b] a Moneth, as [c] Shallum; or three, as [d] Ioahaz; or six, as [d] Zacharias did? Nothing: The continuance, propriè loquendo, that is, the reign; and Regnant without this Per is as good as nothing. And the Text is for this. The word in Hebrew is not Regnant in the Present, do reign; but regnabunt in the Future, shall reign, or continue reigning. And so is the Preposition [Per] for it too. For, Per addit durationem; adds ever a continuance, where it is added; as is evident, by persist, permanent, perdurable, perseverance, perpetuity.

e Dan. 5. 26.
f Job. 12. 18.
g Psal. 89. 44.

And this now questionlesse depends upon GOD alone; even their quick cutting off, or their long preserving in their reignes. He can draw the line longer or shorter: draw it out still, or snap it off. He can take them from their reign by the [e] hand-writing on the wall, MENE, &c. He can take it from them by [f] Solvit balitheum Regum, taking off their Collar, and [g] casting their throne down to the ground. He can call in a forraign enemy, stir up a seditious subject, let loose the sea of popularity in upon them; unlawfully to do it, but to do it though. Many such things are with Him.

Now we are at the main. For, here comes all the danger: there is such heaving and lifting at them after they be in; such thrusting by force, such undermining by fraud: So many Per me's, Per me Clement, Castell, Catesby; and they again so many Per's, Per knives, pistol, powder, all against this Per of continuance; as be the former how it will, they cannot but confesse here, that Per Me it is, that they hold out their Reignes.

Lament. 3. 22.
Psalm 30. 3.

And, here fall's in kindly, this dayes design and the visible Per Me, that happened on it; For, By Him it was, and by His mercy, that King and all were not quite consumed. That your Reign, and your life were not determined both together: Not that you went not down (with David) into the pit; but, that you went not up, up into the ayr in (I know not how many) pieces, and that now, after thus many yeares, it is Regnant with you still: And may it be Per Me Regnat (so we all pray:) and not Per Me Regnat only, but, Per Me Regnabit, many times, many yeares more. I but put you in mind here of what I told you right now: It is In Me (in Hebrew) not Per Me; In Him, not by Him, though never so hard by Him (for, that is without Him;) but even In Him, and then they be safe.

Psalm 18. 2.
Psalm 89. 22.

And in Him You have reigned. For He hath inclosed You (as it were) and compassed You on every side. As in a fortresse, strong hold, or place of defence; so have You reigned in Him: That, as David oft calleth God, so may You; Your Rock, Your Refuge, Your sanctuary of safeguard: So that the enemy hath not been able to do you violence, nor the son of wickednesse had power to hurt You.

James 4. 6.

And yet there is more in this Regnabunt, greater grace yet. For we may extend it yet further, to a continuance, not in themselves in their persons only; but, in their posterity too. That, when it shall cease with them, and they in their graves, yet it shall be a Regnabunt still, and they reign in their race and progeny, when they have done reigning themselves. This drawes out the Per longer: for, so reign they, many ages; not their own only. Kings, in themselves; Kings in their their ſeed; Reges a ſæculo in ſæculum, from one generation to another. By Saul, and by David, we may plainly ſee; one thing it is, to bring one to be King, as Saul was: another, to eſtabliſh the Kingdom in his line, as with David it was. And it is that, he magnifieth ſo much, 2 Sam. 7. That GOD had not only brought him thitherto (to the Crown) that was but a ſmall thing; but that alſo He had ſpoken of His Servants Houſe, in longinquum, for a long time; for, that is the right Regnabunt. The right Regnabunt is not that (in Dan. 2.) like an Image, which when it is broken, nothing comes of it: But the right is that (Dan. 4.) where it is like a goodly tree that hath branches come out of the ſtemme, which will prove Sions and be new grafted again, and ſo ſucceſſively derive ſelf it down to many generations. This alſo is, Per Me; and altogether by Him, and in his hand, who can eſtabliſh ſucceſſion, as to David; and who can alſo bid Jeremy, Write this man deſtitute of children, of Him there ſhall none come more to ſit upon the Throne of Iſrael. Jerem. 22. 30.

This for the Continuance, Diu regnant. I will but touch the third: I would not have touched it, but that it is a ſpecial meanes, for the ſecond, of continuance. To Diu, the way is by recte; To rule long, the way, to rule right: Nay, it is the way to rule for ever: And, without Recte, the ſhorter the better; better for them, and better for all parts. 3 Regnant recte Per, regulæ. The manner.

Thus doth one Per ſtill lead us to another: for as it is true, Per dicit cauſam, ſo is it likewiſe true, Per dicit regulam. By Him, as a cauſe; By Him as a rule, from which Rule not ſwerving, there is a direct promiſe, Deut. 17. He ſhall prolong his reigne, and not his alone, but even his children too, in the midſt of Iſrael. And, by that Rule, a long line ſhall be drawn, for the drawing out of his reigne many yeares. Deut. 17. 20.

And, this we need not ſeek for, any where elſe: it is even in the body of the word. For Rectitudo and Rectus, and Recte, Subſtantive, Adjective, and Adverbe, all come of Rego: ſo doth Regula too, it ſelf: That they need be no ſtrangers one to another; There is an alliance, and there ought to be a reciprocal reference, between them and Regere, and between Regere and them. Erit apud rectiſſimum Rex (ſaith Moſes, Deut. 33.) He ſhall be as ſtraight, as near the Rule, as may be. Deut. 33. 5.

Now, that Rule is (here) Me; and Me is Wiſdom, and Wiſdom is the Rule which God Himſelf draweth His lines by; and Kings, as in other points, ſo in this, to be as like, and draw as near God as they may.

But then, care would be had, it be that Wiſdom which is Me (indeed.) For, Achitophel's and Ieroboam's go for Wiſdom, in the world; but (indeed) ſuch wiſdom (as Saint Iames termeth it) is earthly, ſenſual, and hath ſomewhat of the Devil in it. It is not that worldly wiſdom, they be Kings by; but that which is from above, and that (I told you) is Chriſt. What they are, by Him they are; That they continue, by Him it is; Who is, and will be pro illis qui per illum; be for them, that be by Him; and will not ſee or ſuffer the overthrow of his own Ordinance. James 3. 15.

And, may I not then commend Him (this Per Me) to them? That, ſince they reign, by that Wiſdom (which is CHRIST) they would reign by that, and by no other Wiſdom. And that reciprocation (I touched before;) that ſeeing they reign by Him, He may reign by them; Regnet, per illos, qui regnant per Illum; ſince they rule by Him, to be ruled by Him: There cannot be a more reaſonable requeſt, than this: Regnet per Reges, per quem regnant Reges.

Specially; ſince this Per of the Rule, will bring them to the Per of Perſiſtence; ſo long as they continue with Him, and He with them: He will continue them and their reignes, and nothing ſhall ſtirre them. But, let go that, and take them to another Per Me. And I dare not promiſe ought: If any have miſcarried, he hath firſt left his Per go, and then after was put out of protection: And then, the ſons of perdition had power over Him, and his continuance ſoon came to an end.

Take this then, for the fare-well of this point. Sever not Reges from Per Me, and you ſhall never ſever Reges from Regnant: But if they have once loſt their Per Me, marvel not, if they loſe their Regnant not long after.

But, this Sermon was made for the people: To them then, I turn. For, as if Princes will weigh this Per Me, they will rule the better: ſo if the people do the like, they will obey the ſooner. This is ſure: If Per Me Reges regnant, then Per Me populi parent; if from Him the Power of Soveraignty, by Him alſo the Duty of Allegiance; which we do bear them, even for this very Per Me; even therefore becauſe they be of Him. Δι' Αυτῦ (ſaith Solomon, here) Per Ipſum, by Him, Δι' Αυτὸν (ſaith Saint Peter) propter ipſum, for Him, for His ſake. The Application to the people. 1 Pet. 2. 1, 3.

Two points I would commend to you and ſo end: Chriſt it is, that here ſpeaketh: Wiſdom it is, that here ſpeaketh. Since it is Chriſt here ſpeaketh, it is againſt Chriſtian Religion; ſince it is Wiſdom here ſpeaketh, it is folly to hold, to ſay, or to do the contrary.

For Chriſt: If Per Me Reges be from Chriſt: from whom is the other Per Me? Per me rebelles, Per me regicidæ: from whom they? If By Me Kings Reigne, be Chriſts; By me Kings ſlain, whoſe Per is that Per? That Per cannot be the Per of any, but of Chriſts oppoſite: who is that? Quæ conventio Chriſti & Belial? What agreement hath Chriſt and Belial? There he is: You ſee whoſe brood they be, that go that way, Even Belial's brood. He, out of his enmity againſt Per Me, can neither endure Reges nor Regnant; but ſtirres up enemies againſt them both, both Reges and Regnant. Againſt Reges, Regicidas; to aſſault their perſons: Againſt Regnant, Rebelles; to ſubvert their eſtates. 2 Cor. 6. 15.

And, it is He that ſets up this Anti-per, who takes upon him, to looſe this Scripture; to ſever Reges and Regnant: Nay (which is worſe than this) to make Saints and Martyrs of them, Qui John 13. 35.

vias dant ad delendos Reges, that ſet their wayes to deſtroy Kings, againſt which there is a ſpecial Ca-
Chap. 31. 3. veat in the laſt Chapter of this Book. But (which is worſt of all: for though the Rebell be evil, yet the Rebel-maker is far worſe:) He that raiſeth up this new ſect of Rebel-makers worſe than Rebels themſelves: For, if they be the brood of Belial, Qui vias dant, What ſhall they be, qui vias docent? ſhall not they be Primogeniti Satanæ, Belial's firſt begotten? That ſcore out the way for deſtroying of Kings: tell, by whom, and in what ſort, it is to be proceeded, to make a very method or Agenda of it.

There is a ſhort reſolution in this Text for all theſe: Seeing it is Chriſt, it muſt be unchriſtian (if not Antichriſtian) to make any ſuch courſe: Chriſts Diſciples they are not; None of His (ſure,) that either put their hand to practiſe it, or their pen, or tongue, to defend it.

And as, if this be Chriſt, it is unchriſtian; ſo, if this be Wiſdom, then is their courſe, folly; And ſo it is, three wayes.

1. Folly firſt, to ſeek to ſever Reges and Regnant, from Per Me: it will not be. To think, they can ſet themſelves againſt Kings, and yet never have to do with God at all. But, Kings (we ſaid) are in GOD: ſo they muſt go through Him, before they can come at them: they cannot deal
Acts 9. 5: with Kings, but they muſt begin with GOD, firſt. Gamaliel's poſition is ſound and good: All one to fight with God, and that which is of God: for, they cannot be ſevered.

Acts. 5. 39. 2. And, if they cannot; to fight againſt GOD, to kick againſt the prick, that is folly and madneſſe (I am ſure.) Ye may return them all for fools, that go about it. That think with their devices to out-reach Him, whoſe folly is wiſer than their wiſdom. Or by their practices to over-bear Him, whoſe weakneſſe is ſtronger than their ſtrength: He will be too hard for them, do what they can.

3. Specially (which is the third) having had ſo often, ſo certain experience, that they which have gone about it, ſtill come by the worſe. For extreme folly muſt it needs be, to begin that, which none that ever yet began, could bring to good end; Which, all that ever yet began, ever came themſelves to an evil end: As, to an evil end have they come, all the pack of them. Theſe four words have put them all down.

And (as it falls out) this day, of this folly, we have Exemplum ſine Exemplo: And in the ſucceſſe thereof, may all the reſt read their deſtiny. For, by the light of this day, any (that is not blind) may ſee, that By and through Him, Kings Reign, in that, by and through Him; they, that would have blowen them up, are come to a ſhameful end. Blow them up, they ſhall not, but blow a Num. 16. 33: themſelves down they ſhall; down, [a] after Corah, the ſame way he went: Even to [b] their b Acts 1. 25. own place, with Corah, and Judas, to the bottom of hell. That ſo, it may appear to all the world, ſince this Per Me is Wiſdom; if Wiſdom ſet them up, folly it ſhall be, in them that ſeek or ſet themſelves to put them down; to ſubvert, either Reges their Perſons, or Regna their States.

Luke 7. 25. Let Wiſdom then be juſtified of her children: And ſo many, as love Per Me, love and be friends and take part with both their Perſons, and States. If they be Per Ipſum, By Him: put our Per to His Per, that they may be, by us, too: We cannot err (we are ſure) if we keep the ſame per, that Chriſt doth.

And (to conclude) let this be our laſt duty: ſince we know Whence they be, we know whether to go; ſince, By whom they be, to whom to repair, if we have any buſineſſe concerning them. If we have a good Prince, whom to thank; if otherwiſe, whom to appeaſe.

But if a good (for to that caſe I return) never to look upon him, but to lift up our eyes withall, to this Per quem. As, to thank Him, that He hath preſerved him many other times (but ſpecially and above other, this day;) him, and his, that is, him and us all: ſo, duly to pray to Him, that He which reigneth thus by Him (that is, by His appointment) may ſafe, and well, and long reign by Him, (that is, by His protection.) To thank Him, for Per Me regnant, and to be ſutors to Him, for Per Me regnabit; that He would draw out this per, and make it a long per, Per multos annos. That it may ever be (as, in the Text, it is) Regnabit, ſtill; ſtill, in the future, Shall reign.

Shall reign out his own age himſelf, in perſon (there is one Regnabit.)

Shall reign in his Iſſue and off-ſpring: and that many ages: (there is another Regnabit.)

Shall reign, in the life of memory, and a bleſſed remembrance of his time and reign, and that thorow all ages: (there is a third Regnabit.)

Shall reign all theſe; And beyond all theſe, there is another yet, as the laſt, ſo the beſt of all; Shall reign, all theſe per Deum, By God; and, after all theſe, Shall Reign, Cum Deo, With God, in the glory, joy, and bliſſe of His heavenly Kingdom, and that perpetually: which Kingdom ſhall have none end, but be in Sæcula Sæculorum. To which Kingdom I, &c.

A SERMON

A SERMON

Preached before the

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDCXIIII.

PROV. Chap. XXIV.

Fili mi, &c.

Verse 21. My Son, fear thou the Lord, and the King: and meddle not with them that are given to change.

22. For their destruction shall rise suddenly: and who knoweth the destruction of them both?

23. These things also belong to the wise.

WE begin this year, where we left the last. Then By Me Kings reigne: Now, by Me, rerum novarum studiosi, seditious persons, come to ruine and destruction. For, that is the summ and substance of the Text. Prov. 8. 15. The Text: Anno 1613.

It is a fatherly advice given by Salomon to his son: Not to meddle or make with them that are given to changes. And there was a change; such a change, as never was seen, or heard in any age, meant and medled in, this day. So the first verse interessed in the Day. The Summe of the Text.

And, this is not a bare advice, and nothing else; but, upon a penalty. And that penalty set down, by way of a Prophesie. And that Prophesie fulfilled, and that penalty extended; this day too. So, the second verse likewise. So that, this day, the first verse was justified; the wisdom of the Counsell, that it is wise and good: And, this day, the second verse was verified, the event of the Prophesie, that it is certain and sure; for destruction followed them, that followed not it.

The points in it are, as the verses are, two: 1 There is an advice, in the former; My SON, fear GOD and the King, &c. 2 with a penaltie annexed, in the latter: For their destruction shall arise suddenly, &c. The Division.

I. There

I. There is in the advice, 1 first, a kind of commending of it. 2 Then, the advice it self.

1. The commendation stands first: For, Fili mi, I take to be a Commendation; That it is a counsel, a Father would give to his son: And, that is no evil one, we may be sure. Do but cast your eye, over the counsels in this book, that are given with a Fili mi, you shall find they be de meliore nota, special ones, all very well worth the giving.

2. The advice it self followes: the main drift whereof is, A Retentive against medling with certain persons: persons, such as this day brought forth. To fear, and to forbear. Fear God and the King: And Forbear to have to do, or deal, with any such. It consists of two counter-points: a Fac, and a Fuge. Do this; and eschew that. The Fac is Fear GOD, and the King. The Fuge is, Et ne commiscearis, Meddle not. Follow one, fly the other.

II. Now, it is punishment enough for a man, not to follow good Counsel, when it is given him: Yet hath GOD so ordered, as there goeth (ever) some further evil, with the contempt of good Counsel. As, with the contempt of this, there goeth a penalty, no lesse than destruction and ruine: and that, a sudden destruction, and an unknown ruine: It shall surprise them on the sudden: And it shall be such withall, as Quis scit (saith Solomon) Who knowes? (that is) No man knowes, how fearfull. Print well in your mindes these four: 1 destruction, 2 ruine, 3 repentè, 4 quis scit? They be the quatuor novissima of the Text. And, for fear of these, fear to meddle with these spirits.

So Solomon sits here, as a Counsellour; and, as a Judge. A Counsellour, to advise: a Judge, to pronounce. Hear his Counsel, then: if not, hear your sentence. And choose which verse you will be in. There is no scaping them, both. In one of them we must be, all. Either in the verse of counsel: Fear God and the King, &c. Or, in the verse of penalty: For their destruction, &c.

III. The shutting up of all, is. Hæc quoque sapientibus: (So read it the Seventy, with this verse;) And so, the Fathers all: And not, as now it standeth (with the verse following.) The meaning is: that, this is no counsel, for fooles: No man so wise, the wisest man that is, it may well become him to take it. Commonly, they that meddle, in these matters, want no wit; are wise, at least in their own conceits: therefore (say the Seventy) πᾶσι τοῖς σόφοις. You, that think you are, and would be taken for wise, to you be this spoken.

I. The Advice. 1 The commendation thereof: From a Father.

I Will speak a few words, of the commendation. Fili mi: It is of a Father, to his Sonne. True and hearty is the counsel of a Father, to his child.

The very force of natural affection so whetting the wit, as oft, even a simple man, will give his child no simple advice, but sound and good. But, if it happen not alwayes to be of the best, it is the best he had, you may be sure. There might want braines: the good heart of a Father was not wanting.

And he wise.

To supply that want, I ask secondly, who is this Father? I find, that it is Salomon, that speaketh. One famous for his Wisdom among the sonnes of men. One, able to give good Counsel, worth the following. And yet (I know not how) they that are holden for wise, other-while give not all the best. But it is because they bend not their minds: and they bend them not, because they respect not the parties much, they give it to. But, were it Fili mi, had they to him the hearty true zeal of a Father, it would make them gather their wits together, and help it much. That is, if we could get these two to meet: the braines of a wise-man, and the bowels of a Father: if a Father were Salomon, or if Salomon were a Father: if a Father were as wise as Salomon, or Salomon could be as kind as a Father; that, were like to be good counsel indeed. For as a wise man, he well could: And, as a Father, he (sure) would give his best. So, none to that. Why, here they be both: This Father, is Salomon, The braines of Salomon, and the bowels of a Father, both in it.

Godly wise.

What lack we yet? Somewhat: Wise is not all. We find one wise, that would not have given this counsel, for he gave it not himself (as might be Achitophel.) None of his wisdom: away with it: It is devillish. No, this is Salomon; not only wise, but godly wise; with the wisdom that is from above: and that is the wisdom indeed.

James 3.17.

Prov. 1. 7.

In signe it is so? see, his counsel begins with Fear GOD, the beginning of all true wisdom, when all is done. And ever the counsel right, that is so grounded. If this come to the two former, I see not what can be required more. To the commendation of it then, all three meet in it. Here is a 1 Father; the Father is 2 wise; wise, as 3 Salomon, his wisdom from the Spirit of GOD. There can be no more. To such a counsel (I trust) we will give eare. And so, I pray you, let us.

2 The Advice it self. The Fac: 2 Fear GOD and the King: 1 The Object, GOD and the King in conjunction: 2 Inter se.

The counsel hath in it a 1 Fac, and a 2 Fuge. The Fac, is Fear GOD and the KING. There is in it, a single act, and a double object. The single act 1 Fear: The double object 1 GOD, 2 the King. We begin with them, as in nature, first, Deum & Regem.

Where, at the first, we see (and it is a good sight to see) GOD, and the King, in conjunction. And no marvel, if Rex, quem, and Deus, per quem do joyn. But joyn they do, and joyn they may, and yet be in two several sentences, or in two several members of one sentence. Et would couple them well enough. Joyned nearer than so, in one and the same sentence: In one, and the same member, member, of one and the same sentence. And in one member they may be too: and yet some word between them, and not immediately. Here, so immediate, so hard one to other, as nothing in the world between them, but the Vau, the Et, the very soder (as I may say) that joynes them thus together.

All this is but one: but, I observe no lesse than five conjunctions of these two great Lights, all within the compasse of this Text. 1 First, with one Et. 2 Then in one time (there is but one Time, between them both.) 3 Thirdly, as with one Et: so with one Et ne, both; that, is but one, neither. 4 Fourthly, they are but one party in opposition to them both, Shonim. 5 Fifthly, the trespassers against them both, have but one end, ruinam utriusque. Psal. 2.

All this, this joyning, thus near, thus close, immediate thus many wayes; all this is God, God it is, that thus joyneth Himself, to the King; and the King, to Him. Not only here, by Salomon, under the Law; but even in the Gospel also, by Christ. He joynes Cæsar and God too; and (in a manner) as near, with the same Et, and with but one Reddite: and puts them, and their duties, both, in one period. Here, God before Cæsar: there, Cæsar before God. Matth. 22. 12.

Now, the nature of those that be joyned by God, is set down by our Saviour, thus: Quod Deus conjunxit: Quod it is; not, quos, or quæ: No more plural, then: No, but coalescunt in unum, they grow together; together into one, one singular quod. God's Conjunction is (ever) of the nature of an Union. One Et; One Et ne: One fear between them; One opposite against them. Matth. 19. 6.

To these, thus joyned by GOD, what is our duty? As we find them close joyned to our hands, so to keep them. First, Homo ne separet; not to sever them at any hand. Nay, Homo ne solvat, not to make the knot more slack or loose. Think, it was not for nought, that our Saviour Christ said of this Scripture in particular, Non potest solvi Scriptura. Not, Non dissolvi: but, Non solvi. Dissolvi, the knot loosed quite: but solvi, not made more loose, or slack, than He left it. One is opposed to the joyning: the other, to the near joyning of them. Not to do it, our selves: and not to endure them, that are tampering about it. Not the Anabaptists, that would put out Et regem, clean. Not other (little better) that put it out and put it in, at their pleasure; a King or no King; to be feared, or to fear; fast or loose; to joyne, or to stand a loof (as it were in opposition, the whole heaven in sunder:) Timete Reges, the Accusative; or Timete Reges, the Vocative, as falls fittest to their turn. Neither to endure them, that would dissolve it clean: Nor them, that would fain stacken it, to the end, to wring or wedge in a third between Deum and Regem. No; let them stand; and stand, as they be left: unloosed, unloosened, Deum & Regem. They that fall to be changers (after) in the Text, begin their change (ever) at this; at transposing, or interposing somewhat, between Deum & Regem. Therefore, look to this well. This, for the first conjunction inter se, between themselves. John 10. 35.

Then they are joyned again in aliquo tertio, in a third: Time. Why, in Time? Indeed, Our SAVIOUR CHRIST Quæ Cæsaris, is more ample a great deal: many things contained in it, besides. Of those many, this is but one: but, this is one. And this one (here) is made choice of, because it falls fittest, to the purpose in hand. b Their conjunction in Time. 2 The act;

The purpose is, to restrain from medling. Now, fear is more restrictive, than honour, or any of the rest. The Philosopher calls it φιμὸν φύσεως, the passion, that holds (as it were) the reines of our nature, to check us, and keep us back, from that which is hurtfull; to which (other-while) we are but too inclinable. As namely, there is a spirit in us: and that spirit (saith S. James) lusts after envy: And envy is, at our Superiours, toward whom (even the supremest of them) men stand not (alwayes) in so good termes, as were fit. Nay, so far forget themselves, sometimes (witnesse this Day) as they fall to change; change with a witnesse, change them into ashes; put fire to them, and blow up King, and all. Here needs a Retentive: Fear, is fit for that. Therefore it is Fear: Fear God and the King. James 4. 5.

Of [fear God] we shall soon agree, that he is to be feared: I would to God, we would, with as great accord, agree to do it, as we will easily agree, it is to be done: that so, it might be with us, as with holy Job it was, Ut timor noster, spes nostra, from our fear might grow our hope; the true hope, when all is done. Even that, which riseth from fear, which makes us refrain to do evil, and so breeds in us, the hope of all hopes, the hope of a good Conscience. Fear GOD: Job 4. 6.

But fear God is not all. Et Regem, and the King: him we must fear, too. In water and blood [saith Saint John:) not in water only, but in water and blood. So here: God and the King: not God alone; but God and the King. Non sufficit unum: oportet utrumque fieri, in Copulativis. GOD and the King. 1 John 5. 6.

Hence riseth the second conjunction. As before of God, and the King: so here now, of the fear of God, and the fear of the King. And even the same benigne aspect that is between God and the King, the same is there between the two feares: the very same, every way.

They be ζύσατα compatible (as we say in Schooles:) they will stand together, go together, hold together, well. They hinder not one the other. By the grace of God, we may do both. Both, be regal and religious too. We shall not fear the King, awhit the lesse, for fearing God: Nor (vice versa) GOD the lesse, for fearing the KING.

Not the lesse? Nay, the more. For, they be not only ζύσατα, but ζωιζαντα: not only, a joynt and mutual consistence between them, but a joynt and mutual assistance, either of other. Not only, not hinder, but further; nor endure, but induce one the another. So that, that which is (here) Et Deum; is (elsewhere) Propter Deum. And not only with God, but for God, we fear the King. 1 Pet. 2. 13.

And, though Regem stand last, be (as we say) ultimum in executione, yet is it) here, in this place primum in intentione: The sequel shews it. For, when he comes to the Et ne (mark it well) the point of oppoſition: He ſaith not, Meddle not with irreligious perſons, Athieſts, ſuch as fear not GOD (ſo he ſhould, if Time Deum had been principally meant:) No, but Meddle not, with the Seditious. Now, they (we know) are moſt properly oppoſite, to the King. The fear of GOD hath elſwhere his chief place, many times and oft. But, here, Time Regem is primæ intentionis, the very mark, and all this Text levels at.

Then, why is it not Time Regem and no more ado, and leave out Time Deum quite; For, what hath GOD to do here, in matter of this kind, of Sedition? Not ſo: There is reaſon, Time Deum ſhould be in, and firſt in. In the point of Allegiance, he that will lay his ground ſure, it behoveth him (as Gregory ſpeaketh) arceſſere rivum Fidelitatis, de fonte pietatis, to draw down the ſtream of Allegiance from the true Conduit-head of it, the fear of GOD: If, thence it come not, it is minus habens, not as it ſhoud be. For, if it be right, Time Regem is to come, out of Time Deum.

But fear God firſt. Mark this method well: to have Regal duties rightly ſetled, he goes up as high as GOD; begins with Time Deum, the fear of GOD. And, thither we muſt, if we ſhall go ſoundly to work. It is not the Common-Law, or any Act of Parliament, that breeds Time Regem, kindly. If our fear to the King, be taught us by the law of man, it is not yet upon his true baſe, his right corner-ſtone. To Divinity we muſt; to this Book, the Book of the fear of GOD: if it be right, ground it there. And, if that might take place, there ſhould need no law elſe; to ſuſtain or preſerve Kings or States.

Set this down then for a Rule: that, there is no Surer friend, no Surer ſtay to Kings, and their rights, than Time Deum (that is) true Religion. And ſet down this with it: that, it is a ſure ſigne of a good Religion, if it will joyn with Time Regem (the duty to the Prince) well. For, if it be a true Time Deum, it ſtrengthens Time Regem: it weakens it not.

And on the other; that it is an infallible note of a bad one; if either it ſhoulder the King from GOD, or ſhrink up the ſinewes of civil obedience.

But, if it make Time Deum, to blow up Time Regem; make the Catholike faith, to overthrow the Catholike fear of GOD (for, both I truſt be alike Catholike;) if they perſwade men, that the King, and the whole Parliament muſt up, or the fear of GOD cannot ſtand: they are out of the Text quite: they are clean beſide Time Deum, as it was in Salomons time: teach a new fear of GOD, falſely ſo called, without this Book altogether.

But, what is become of Time Regem, with them? Sure, they that fear not, to blow up the King, I will never ſay, they fear the King: they that put men, in their Amphitheatrum Honoris: nay, in their Martyrologie, or Kalender of Martyrs, for not fearing to attempt it, it is a ſtrange fear, they teach; Indeed, rather Time Rex, than Time Regem.

And, another ſort there is, not come ſo far; with whom (yet) Time Deum & Regem, as it ſhould be: that, fear (I know not how) as if the fear of the King did abate ſomewhat, from the fear of GOD; and there were no true fear of GOD, without ſome mixture of contempt of Order and Government. But, if one can grow ſomewhat bold, ſomewhat too bold with Kings, to teach them their duties: and fear not to ſpeak evil of ſuch as are in authority: then (loe) he feares GOD aright. And, none of the Clergy feares GOD, but they that uſe it. Nor none of the Laity, but ſuch as bear them in it. And theſe two are the only Fear-GOD'S in the Land. Others, that think, they may do both, and would gladly do both, may not be allowed to fear GOD on the right faſhion; They fear the face of man. And thus, with their new fear of GOD, they put out of countenance the fear of the King. As if, theſe feares caſt out one another: and one could not be in at the former, but of neceſſity, he muſt be out at the later. What is this, but to make a disjunctive (at the leaſt) between them?

Jude 8.

Jerem. 1. 7.

But you (beloved) never fear to do as Saint Paul wils you: Cui timorem, timorem, to give fear, to whom fear belongeth; and, to the King it belongs, as here we ſee. He that ſaid Ego dixi, Dii eſtis: in ſo ſaying, ſaid, Et ſicut Dii, timendi eſtis. Therefore, Nemo timeat timere Regem, let no man be afraid to fear the King, and yet fear GOD too. You may do both: you muſt do both. The Text is ſhort, but full, in this point. For Time Deum; that is, be a good Chriſtian: and, Time Regem; that is, be a good Subject. And, the better Chriſtian, the better Subject.

Rom. 13. 7.

Pſalm 82. 6.

But indeed, I have not done well in ſpeaking of them all this while, as of two feares. There is but one Time, in the Text. If you ſtrike it out from Regem, you ſtrike it out from Deum, too. For, there is but one in all. And they conſequently to be feared, not with two, but with one and the ſame fear, both.

This, for the conjunction: which (I wiſh) we may endeavour by all meanes to maintain. For, beſides the offence to GOD and His fear, It is a preparative to the change (which here followeth) to ſever GOD from the King, or the King from the Kingdome: to force them one from the other, that GOD hath ſo ſtraightly united together: Hath Himſelf, and would have us do the like. And now, after we have done with the Fac, and the conjunction, let us come to the Fuge and the oppoſition.

2. The Fuge. And meddle not, &c. Fear GOD then and the King, wherein? In many other points: but (to hold us to the Text) in this namely, that you meddle not with theſe following. And, even by this, ye may take meaſure, whether you fear them or no, by your fearing to joyn with ſuch, as this day brought forth. For, if we joyn with them, ye oppoſe ſtraight to both thoſe: not to the King alone, but to GOD; to His fear, as well as the Kings. Indeed, to the fear of them both. For, to both, are theſe here ſet in oppoſition. It is not Fear the King (alone) and meddle not with them: but, GOD is in it too, as well as the King.

Nor

Nor, it is not; fear GOD and the King, and then over again, with two for two: and meddle not, either with irreligious, or seditious persons: but, with seditious, only. Sedition is joyntly opposed to both: and no lesse to GOD, than the King. To either, in equal opposition.

I note here, no lesse than four oppositions besides the Et ne; as before, four conjunctions besides the Et. 1 Against the King: 2 Against GOD: 3 Against both: 4 Against the fear of both. 1. The King: For, it is (this medling) a trespasse at common Law, against him, his Crown and Dignity. 2. GOD: for it is a sin also against GOD'S Law, against Heaven and Him: Not only, these on earth, Læsa Majestatis: to GOD'S Majesty no lesse than the Kings. 3. Both Deum & Regem; For, it is directly against both Tables: And against the two first and great Commandements of both Tables: 4. And, Being a sinne against fear, it will prick fast toward presumption; and, that is a high sinne: If that once get the dominion over any, he shall not be innocent from the great Offence. So, against the 1 King, 2 GOD 3 Both, the 4 Fear of both. Mat. 22. 38. Psal. 19. 13.

But, by this, clear it is, who ever they be, that meddle with these, eo ipso they fear not GOD. Directly: for, if the Commandement be, Fear GOD, and meddle not; one cannot do both: both be a medler, and yet fear GOD, though. He cannot say (with the medlers of this day) Yes, yes: meddle with the Powder-plot, and yet be a good Catholike, and fear GOD well enough for all that. Nay, fear GOD the better; and be the better reputed of, you know where, for this very medling.

But, that in this point we may proceed to purpose. we are to see first, 1 who be these Shonim שונים: 2 And then, what it is to meddle with them.

The word in the original, is very pregnant, and plenteous in signification; which hath made, divers turn it diversly. The Vulgar turns it Cum detractoribus, such as detract from Princes: and well. Ours, before, was With the seditious; and, it was well so. Now, we read, With them that are given to change: And, that is well too. For, all are in it: and well may so be. For, Detractours, Changers, Seditious, all come to one. What these Changers be.

Detractors: For they that in the end prove to be seditious (mark them well) they be first detractors: Or (as the nature of the Hebrew word is) Biters. It is, of Shen, a tooth; they that have teeth in their tongues. Ever, the first thing that moves to a sedition, is Shimei's tongue. As at first, it did (sedition;) so doth it still, begin in the gain-saying, in the contradiction of Catah. So began he: This Moses, and this Aaron, they take too much upon them, do more than they may by Law; they would have somewhat taken from them. So Absalom: Here is no body to do any justice in the Land. So Jeroboam; LORD, what a heavy yoke is this on the peoples necks! Meddle not with these Detractors. 1 Detractours. 2 Sam. 16. 7. Jude 11. Num. 16. 3. 2 Sam. 15. 3. 1 King 12. 4.

Then secondly, when they have made the state present naught, no remedy, we must have a better for it; and so, a change, needs. What change? Why, Religion, or the Church-government, or somewhat (they know not well what) stands awry. Ye shall change your religion (said they of this Day) and have one for it, wherein for your comfort, you shall not understand a word (not you of the People) what you either sing, or pray: and for variety, you shall change a whole Communion for an half. Now a blessed exchange, were it not? 2 Changers.

What say some other? You shall change for a fine new Church-government: A Presbyterie would do much better for you, than an Hierarchie: And (perhaps) not long after, a government of States, than a Monarchy. Meddle not with these Changers.

Now thirdly, whom you find thus magnifying of changes, and projecting new plots for the People: be sure, they are in the way to sedition. For (mark it) they do sedire, that is, seorsim ire, go aside; they have their meetings apart, about their new alterations. Now, of sedire comes sedition, side-going. For, if that be not looked to in time, the next newes is, the blowing of a trumpet, and Sheba's proclamation, We have no part in David. It begins in Shimei, it ends in Sheba. But so, at last all (ye see) comes to one: Shonim all. 3. Seditious. 2 Sam. 20. 1.

And now to the Medlers. But first will you observe, here are two sorts in the Text: 1 They that meddle; and 2 they, with whom they meddle. The Seditious (that is) the contriver of the treason: and the Medlers (that is) his complices. And that it is not, Be not your self seditious: but, meddle not with such as be. Be not the author, or Ring-leader: but, be no fautour of them, have no part or fellowship in the businesse, Ne commiscearis, be not a mixt Traytour: For, mixt and pure, both are naught. What, the Medlers.

As for them, that are in it at the main (as they say) he doth not so much as once speak of them: Of them there is no question. Only, directs his speech to them, that are brought in on the By. Tels them, in so being, they are as deep in as the others. No accessory here: as is the Seditious, so is the Medler, Authour, and Fautour, all alike. Alike, first: For, both without the fear of GOD and all Religion, alike. Alike again: For, liable to the same penalty after, ruinam utriusque.

Well now, What is it to meddle, this Commiscери? I would note two things to you out of it: 1 The nature of the word, 2 and the extent.

The Nature, I take to be worth a note. Commiscearis, is a mixture: What manner of mixture is it? Out of the Hebrew word, it properly betokens that mixture or medly: that is, of the light with the darknesse after the Sun-set. in crepusculo, in the Owl-light (as we call it) That, is Ereb properly; (Thence cometh the Poets Erebus: ye know, what that is.) No this, in very deed, is rather a confusion, than a mixture: and might well have been turned Ne confundaris, Be not confounded: together, they and you: or (as S. Peter speaks) Run not together with them to the same confusion. So, a confused mixture it is, or a mixture to confusion. 1: The Nature of Ne commiscearis. 1 Pet. 4. 4.

You shall see, it is a word well chosen. Take it of the persons, and a confused mixture it is. For even the children of light (not alwayes so wise in their generation) that is, some plain meaning men are sometimes drawn in too, by some illusion or other; to meddle and to joyne with these sons of darkness. As, some went with Absalom to the paying of his vow in simplicity; and were in before they were aware. For being with him, they must do as he did. Just the medley of the Pharisees and John's Disciples. 2 Sam. 15. 11.

Or take it, of the Plot it self. In it also, such a mixture there is; for, they want not some glistering pretences, as it were a false light, cast on the plot. But, go to the bottom of it, and there it is; Caligo Tenebrarum, the very dungeon of darkness: and, well, so, as being wrought in a dark Cellar, under ground, by the sons of Erebus, in the skirts of Erebus it self.

3 Of, look to the carriage of it; there you shall plainly discover, a very blending of light with darkness, of the oath of GOD, with the work of the Devil: the Sacrament of godliness, with the Mysterie in the Whores forehead, of all abomination; of the loosing from lesser sinnes, with the binding to a greater. Mashing together holy duties, with lewd practises; and not mingling, but confounding Oaths, Sacraments, Absolutions, with the works of Ereb, or Erebus, of the blackness, and of the darkness of Hell it self. 1 Tim. 3. 16. Apoc. 7. 5.

2 The extent of it. Now of the Extent: Meddle not. How many wayes may one be, or be said to be a Medler? That may he many wayes: as many, as one may be Partaker of another mans sins. 1. By being a Champion or Leader for them; as Joab to Adonijah. 2. By being Spokesman, or Orator for them; as Jeroboam to his crue. 3. By blowing the Trumpet, animating them, setting them on; as Sheba to his. 4. By giving them shrewd advise, how to manage their matters; as did Achitophel to Absalom. 5. By saying Mass, praying for their success: that was all Abiathar could do. 6. By bruiting infamous speeches or Libels of David: that was all, that Shemei. 7. By harbouring, or receiving them; as the City Abel did Sheba, and should have been sacked for it. 8. By furnishing them with money or supplies otherwise, (as it might be, contributing to the powder:) as the men of Sichem to Abimelech. 9. By that which Salomon calleth hand in hand, that is, digging with the Pickax, co-operating with them in the Vault. 10. By being (if not party, yet) privy to it, and not opposing: as David had been to Saul's death, if he had not hindered Abishai: Non obstans. 11. Or, at the least, privie, and not discloising it; which had been Mordecai's case, if he had concealed the Eunuch's Treason: Non manifestans. 12. And last, (which I take to be full out as bad, if not much worse than any of the rest) by speaking or writing, in praise or defence, either of the deed or the doers; their case, Numb. 16. 47. calling Coreh, and his Company, the people of the LORD: for sure; if the Consenter be in, the Commender much more.

1 King 1. 7. 1 King 12. 4. 2 Sam. 20. 1. 2 Sam. 16. 21. 1 King 1. 7. 2 Sam. 18. 7. 2 Sam. 20. 14. Judg. 9. 4. Prov. 11. 21. 1 Sam. 26. 9. Esther 2. 22.

All these make up this medley. To these, or any of these, well may it be said, Ne commiscearis. Now I know, degrees there be, in mixture; more or less: but here is no degree. Only, Ne commiscearis, simply. Not, in no great quantity: but, not in the least scruple, not at all. It is rank poison. The least drop of it is deadly. Never so little is too much.

Therefore, absolutely, ne Commiscearis: Meddle not with them at all; not with absolving them, not giving them the oath, not with praying for them; above all, not with offering the unbloody sacrifice, for so bloody Treason. Jacobs counsel is best: In consilium eorum ne veniat anima tua, not to come once among them: To separate your selves from the tents of Coreh, touching whom, you know, what GOD gave in charge, and what Moses proclaimed, Away from them, come not near them, touch not any thing that is theirs. It is infected: they have the plague: if you meddle with it, it will bring you to destruction. Gen. 49. 6. Num. 16. 26.

II. The Penalty. So are we come to the second verse, to the penalty. And it is not more than needs. 1. For sure, even good counsel enters but slowly into us (we are so dull) if it have not an edge given it: be not seconded with some forcible reason to help it forward. 2. Now, no reason more forcible, or of better edge to enter us, than that, which is taken from the fear of some great mischief or main inconvenience, which will surely take hold of us, if we take not hold of the counsel. 3. And as none more forcible, so none more fit for the present counsel: It is, to fear. Now, to induce fear, what way more fit, than to set before us some matter of terrour, some fearfull object or consequent, it will bring us to. And what more fearfull, than of all the five fearfull things set down by the Philosopher, the most fearfull (that is) the fear of death? This? Why it works with beasts, and even with the dullest of them, Balaam's beast; spur him, strike him, lay on him with a staffe, ye shall never get him to run upon the Angels sword, upon his own death; that shall ye never. Sure, we are to think, his first Commandment GOD headed with the best head, He had: and that was Morte morieris. He thought it the surest, and most likely to prevail. And if any thing hold us, this will. If ye fear neither GOD, nor King; yet fear this. Numb. 22. 23.

1 Destruction. 1. But yet, if we weigh the word [destruction] there is more in it than death. To death we must all come; but this, it will bring you to an untimely end. Not fall of your self, but destroyed: but plucked down, a great while before you would fall.

2 Nay, Ruin. 2. Nay, nor it is not untimely death neither: there is more in it than so (in destruction.) All that die before their time, are not destroyed: GOD forbid. No: there goeth some evill touch, some shame, some foul uncouth end (ever) with it; that is it that makes it destruction.

3. But what manner destruction? Some may be restored and built again: This is ad ruinam (that is added in the latter part of the verse) to ruine: So that never built again, never repaired more: that is, to utter destruction.

4. And

4. And yet there is more still. For, these two, (1 Ruine, and 2 Destruction) they be not used of a person, properly; but, as the word gives, of an house or structure. Add this then, that it will be the ruine and plucking down, not of your self alone, but of your house too. And indeed how many great Houses have been ruined by it?

Then, if this will not hold you from medling; that it is a sinne, a double sin, against both Tables; that it is a sin of presumption: if this will not; let this, that it is destructory, a destroying sin; one of those sins that follows them, that meddle with it, hard at the heels, and never leaves them, till it have brought them to destruction and utter ruine: them, and their whole house, it eradicates; it pulls all up by the roots. Sin it self is a Nimium: yet is there a Nimium in sin too, O be not over wicked (saith the Preacher) be not too too foolish, so very wicked, so over foolish, as to shorten your own dayes, to make you die tempore non suo, before your time come: yea, to be destroyed utterly, you, your house and all. Sure, if this come of it, he bad you not fear for nought.

Nay, this is not all; he goes further. Of all Retentives, fear; of all fears, the fear of death: death and destruction. Now of all destructions, this; (for all destructions are not of one size neither: some more fearfull than other.) But this, this is no common one: it hath two attendants, to make it more fearfull than the ordinary destructions or visitations of other men. The former two, as it were manacles for the hands; not to have a hand in it: These latter, as fetters to the feet; not to go about it. But still runs upon two: as it were, one for the King, another for GOD still.

This is the first: Their destruction, it shall rise suddenly. Every word hath his weight (if you mark them.) It shall rise: fitly. For, Sedition, we call it a rising: one rising, He punisheth with another. Rise, it is; not Surget, but Consurget: as early up, rise as soon, as the sin it self. From the first moment of sin, their destruction rises with it, followeth it at the heels; is still hard behind it; if they could look back, and see it, it is not an inch from them. 3 And that, suddenly.

2. Rise, and rise suddenly. Let death come suddenly upon them at unawares (it is Davids prayer:) and so shall it come (it is Salomons Propheey:) come, ab improviso, break forth, and surprize them in a very suddain. Fitly, this too: Their meaning was, to have dispatched all of a sudden: As soon as the paper burn, the powder go off. Quick and sudden surprizing therefore, doth best befit them: the punishment, in every point comes home to the sin. Psal. 55. 15.

3. Sudden things confound, and are therefore the more fearfull. Fit, this again; These would have brought all to confusion, (what a confusion had there been this day?) Meet therefore they should be amazed with the suddenness of the breaking out; and the confusion they meant, fall upon their own souls.

4. But what manner of confusion? the word he useth in Hebrew, sheweth that; It is properly the confusion they are in, that are in a thick mist or fog; that after they have been a while in it, are they know not where; and when they come out of it, find themselves where they never meant to have come. 4. And eternally Et ruinam eorum quis scit:

This fits likewise: in a mist they walkt; carried their matters mistily; and at last lost themselves in it: In darkness they delighted (dark vaults, dark cellers) and darkness fell upon them for it. And when they were out of their dark vault, found themselves in a dark prison; which they little thought ever to have come in.

It doth very well (this suddenness) set out to us, the course and carriage of this sin. It will flatter on, and draw him on a great while. All things will seem so subtilly contrived, so cunningly carried, so secretly kept, and so long; commonly, till the very time it should be done in: And then, even on a sudden, all breaks out: and that strangely; and all the goodly cobweb, that was so many moneths in spinning and weaving, comes me a broom, and in a minute snaps it down, and destroyes it quite; the cobweb and the spider; the plot in self, and the author and all. To have their Treason kept in, so many prorogu ings of the Parliament: their cellar so fitly chosen: their Powder so safely laid in, and so well couched: and all in a readiness: and then, ἐξαίφνης, in a night, suddenly to have all come forth, so strangely, and all their long consultations, and often deliberations, quashed all, in a moment! Their destruction shall rise suddenly, this is the first.

But this is nothing to the other, Et ruinam eorum quis scit? That, that is the fearfull one indeed. For, nothing so fearfull as that, a man cannot tell what to make of it. Who knowes their ruine? Who knows? that is, no man knowes. Good Lord! what might that ruine be, that no man knowes? No man knowes? Why, do we not all know, what it is they suffer, that come to this destruction? they are drawn, hanged, &c. we all know it. It is rather, quis nescit? than quis scit? (this) one would think.

No: Quis scit? (saith Salomon) And he knew well what he said. It is unknown, their ruine: what then shall we make of it? Sure, no destruction, here. All here, the worst is known of them. It must be some other where, in some other world than this. And so it is. And that is quis scit? indeed: That, no man knowes. For it is as truly said of the pains of Hell, as of the joyes of heaven, quis scit; Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor hath it entred into the heart of man, what, or how great they be; the one not so joyfull, but the other as dreadful: Unknown, both: Quis scit? equally true of both. For, Nemo scit, nisi qui accepit, no man knowes them, but they that be in them. 1 Cor 2. 9. Apoc. 2. 17.

And it were well, when they meddle first with it, they would bethink them of this. If a man might know before-hand, it were this, or it were that, or it were we know not what; then it were

You shall see, it is a word well chosen. Take it of the persons, and a confused mixture it is, For even the children of light (not alwayes so wise in their generation) that is, some plain meaning men are sometimes drawn in too, by some illusion or other; to meddle and to joyne with these sons of darkness. 1 Sam. 26. 9.
Esther 2. 22.

All these make up this medley. To these, or any of these, well may it be said, Ne commiscearis. Now I know, degrees there be, in mixture; more or less: but here is no degree. Only, Ne commiscearis, simply. Not, in no great quantity: but, not in the least scruple, not at all. It is rank poison. The least drop of it is deadly. Never so little is too much.

Therefore, absolutely, ne Commiscearis: Meddle not with them at all; not with absolving them, not giving them the oath, not with praying for them; above all, not with offering the unbloody sacrifice, for so bloody Treason. Jacobs counsel is best: In consilium eorum ne veniat anima tua, not to come once among them: To separate your selves from the tents of Coreh, touching whom, you know, what GOD gave in charge, and what Moses proclaimed, Away from them, come not near them, touch not any thing that is theirs. It is infected: they have the plague: if you meddle with it, it will bring you to destruction.

Gen. 49. 6.
Num. 16. 26.

II.
The Penalty.

So are we come to the second verse, to the penalty. And it is not more than needs. 1. For sure, even good counsel enters but slowly into us (we are so dull) if it have not an edge given it: be not seconded with some forcible reason to help it forward. 2. Now, no reason more forcible, or of better edge to enter us, than that, which is taken from the fear of some great mischief or main inconvenience, which will surely take hold of us, if we take not hold of the counsel. 3. And as none more forcible, so none more fit for the present counsel: It is, to fear. Now, to induce fear, what way more fit, than to set before us some matter of terrour, some fearfull object or consequent, it will bring us to. And what more fearfull, than of all the five fearfull things set down by the Philosopher, the most fearfull (that is) the fear of death? This? Why it works with beasts, and even with the dullest of them, Balaam's beast; spur him, strike him, lay on him with a staffe, ye shall never get him to run upon the Angels sword, upon his own death; that shall ye never. Sure, we are to think, his first Commandment GOD headed with the best head, He had: and that was Morte morieris. He thought it the surest, and most likely to prevail. And if any thing hold us, this will. If ye fear neither GOD, nor King; yet fear this.

Numb. 22. 23.

Destruction:

1. But yet, if we weigh the word [destruction] there is more in it than death. To death we must all come; but this, it will bring you to an untimely end. Not fall of your self, but destroyed: but plucked down, a great while before you would fall.

Nay, Ruin.

2. Nay, nor it is not untimely death neither: there is more in it than so (in destruction.) All that die before their time, are not destroyed: GOD forbid. No: there goeth some evill touch, some shame, some foul uncouth end (ever) with it; that is it that makes it destruction.

3. But what manner destruction? Some may be restored and built again: This is ad ruinam (that is added in the latter part of the verse) to ruine: So that never built again, never repaired more: that is, to utter destruction.

4. And

4. And yet there is more ſtill. For, theſe two, (1 Ruine, and 2 Deſtruction) they be not uſed of a perſon, properly; but, as the word gives, of an houſe or ſtructure. Add this then, that it will be the ruine and plucking down, not of your ſelf alone, but of your houſe too. And indeed how many great Houſes have been ruined by it?

Then, if this will not hold you from medling; that it is a ſinne, a double ſin, againſt both Tables; that it is a ſin of preſumption: if this will not; let this, that it is deſtructory, a deſtroying ſin; one of thoſe ſins that follows them, that meddle with it, hard at the heels, and never leaves them, till it have brought them to deſtruction and utter ruine: them, and their whole houſe, it eradicates; it pulls all up by the roots. Sin it ſelf is a Nimium: yet is there a Nimium in ſin too, O be not over wicked (ſaith the Preacher) be not too too fooliſh, ſo very wicked, ſo over fooliſh, as to ſhorten your own dayes, to make you die tempore non ſuo, before your time come: yea, to be deſtroyed utterly, you, your houſe and all. Sure, if this come of it, he bad you not fear for nought.

Nay, this is not all; he goes further. Of all Retentives, fear; of all fears, the fear of death: death and deſtruction. Now of all deſtructions, this; (for all deſtructions are not of one ſize neither: ſome more fearfull than other.) But this, this is no common one: it hath two attendants, to make it more fearfull than the ordinary deſtructions or viſitations of other men. The former two, as it were manacles for the hands; not to have a hand in it: Theſe latter, as fetters to the feet; not to go about it. But ſtill runs upon two: as it were, one for the King, another for GOD ſtill.

This is the firſt: Their deſtruction, it ſhall riſe ſuddenly. Every word hath his weight (if you mark them.) It ſhall riſe: fitly. For, Sedition, we call it a riſing: one riſing, He puniſheth with another. Riſe, it is; not Surget, but Conſurget: as early up, riſe as ſoon, as the ſin it ſelf. From the firſt moment of ſin, their deſtruction riſes with it, followeth it at the heels; is ſtill hard behind it; if they could look back, and ſee it, it is not an inch from them. 3 And that, ſuddenly.

2. Riſe, and riſe ſuddenly. Let death come ſuddenly upon them at unawares (it is Davids prayer:) and ſo ſhall it come (it is Salomons Propheey:) come, ab improviſo, break forth, and ſurprize them in a very ſuddain. Fitly, this too: Their meaning was, to have diſpatched all of a ſudden: As ſoon as the paper burn, the powder go off. Quick and ſudden ſurprizing therefore, doth beſt befit them: the puniſhment, in every point comes home to the ſin. Pſal. 55. 15.

3. Sudden things confound, and are therefore the more fearfull. Fit, this again; Theſe would have brought all to confuſion, (what a confuſion had there been this day?) Meet therefore they ſhould be amazed with the ſuddenneſs of the breaking out; and the confuſion they meant, fall upon their own ſouls.

4. But what manner of confuſion? the word he uſeth in Hebrew, ſheweth that; It is properly the confuſion they are in, that are in a thick miſt or fog; that after they have been a while in it, are they know not where; and when they come out of it, find themſelves where they never meant to have come. 4. And eternally. Et ruinam eorum quis ſcit.

This fits likewiſe: in a miſt they walkt; carried their matters miſtily; and at laſt loſt themſelves in it: In darkneſs they delighted (dark vaults, dark cellers) and darkneſs fell upon them for it. And when they were out of their dark vault, found themſelves in a dark priſon; which they little thought ever to have come in.

It doth very well (this ſuddenneſs) ſet out to us, the courſe and carriage of this ſin. It will flatter on, and draw him on a great while. All things will ſeem ſo ſubtilly contrived, ſo cunningly carried, ſo ſecretly kept, and ſo long; commonly, till the very time it ſhould be done in: And then, even on a ſudden, all breaks out: and that ſtrangely; and all the goodly cobweb, that was ſo many moneths in ſpinning and weaving, comes me a broom, and in a minute ſnaps it down, and deſtroyes it quite; the cobweb and the ſpider; the plot it ſelf, and the author and all. To have their Treaſon kept in, ſo many prorogings of the Parliament: their cellar ſo fitly choſen: their Powder ſo ſafely laid in, and ſo well couched: and all in a readineſs: and then, ἐξαίφνης, in a night, ſuddenly to have all come forth, ſo ſtrangely, and all their long conſultations, and often deliberations, quaſhed all, in a moment! Their deſtruction ſhall riſe ſuddenly, this is the firſt.

But this is nothing to the other, Et ruinam eorum quis ſcit? That, that is the fearfull one indeed. For, nothing ſo fearfull as that, a man cannot tell what to make of it. Who knowes their ruine? Who knows? that is, no man knowes. Good Lord! what might that ruine be, that no man knowes? No man knowes? Why, do we not all know, what it is they ſuffer, that come to this deſtruction? they are drawn, hanged, &c. we all know it. It is rather, quis neſcit? than quis ſcit? (this) one would think.

No: Quis ſcit? (ſaith Salomon) And he knew well what he ſaid. It is unknown, their ruine: what then ſhall we make of it? Sure, no deſtruction, here. All here, the worſt is known of them. It muſt be ſome other where, in ſome other world than this. And ſo it is. And that is quis ſcit? indeed: That, no man knowes. For it is as truly ſaid of the pains of Hell, as of the joyes of heaven, quis ſcit; Eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, nor hath it entred into the heart of man, what, or how great they be; the one not ſo joyfull, but the other as dreadful: Unknown, both: Quis ſcit? equally true of both. For, Nemo ſcit, niſi qui accepit, no man knowes them, but they that be in them. 1 Cor 2. 9. Apoc. 2. 17.

And it were well, when they meddle firſt with it, they would bethink them of this. If a man might know before-hand, it were this, or it were that, or it were we know not what; then it were were not ſo fearfull. But Quis ſcit? goeth beyond all conceit. But they do, they know not what; and ſo they ſuffer, they know not what. The meaning is, they periſh here, they periſh everlaſtingly: that this deſtruction is eternal deſtruction, and no other.

And indeed, the later word ſheweth as much; which is not ruine, (but properly) the ruine, or fall into a fire: it is taken from לַפִּיד, that is, a burning-fire-brand. This alſo is fit: Fire they meant, and they end in fire, even in Hell-fire. For ſo is the nature of the word; and ſo is the Hebrew proverb upon it, לַפִּיד לֹא פָרוּז: It is a ruine, from whence there is no Redemption. It is a fall or ruine, from whence no riſing. A fall into the bottomleſs pit, into the furnace there; If they once come there, they never come thence. So it comes ſuddenly, but it lights heavily. They know not when it comes; but when it comes, it payes home. When the miſt breaks up, they find themſelves among the fire-brands there. And if nothing elſe will, let this move them.

And utriuſque we may not leave out. It is added, to make ſure work. For if it had not, it might have been imagined, that theſe four noviſſima had been to come upon them only, that fear not GOD: That there be no miſtaking, in the reference to whom, it is expreſly ſet down, utriuſque Horum; it is upon both of them; one, as well as the other: as well of thoſe, that fault in their duty toward the King; as thoſe, that are void of the fear of GOD. And again, as well thoſe, that meddle or make; as thoſe, with whom they meddle or make; the plotters themſelves. Both of them in the ſame condemnation: Both come to the ſame deſtruction. So as we find GOD and the King joyned, in one fear at the firſt: So here, find we again the treſpaſſers againſt either, wrapped up in one deſtruction at the laſt. Ruinam one end, utriuſque of them both. And, ſuch end may ever come of ſuch beginnings.

III. The Concluſion, Theſe things belong to the wiſe.

And thus (now) he knits up all, ταῦτα δὲ λέγω ὑμῖν τοῖς, σοφοῖς, Be this ſpoken even to you that be wiſe. For, Salomons own ſon (indeed) was no very wiſe man. So, it might ſeem (perhaps) to be given to him (this counſel) and ſuch as he was, none of the wiſeſt: Fools may not meddle; Wiſe men may. Now (commonly) they be no fools, want no wit: they think, they bear a brain that meddle in theſe matters. Therefore is this addition; to ſhew, that how wiſe ſoever they take themſelves, or be they never ſo wiſe, it may well become them, to take this advice here. Hæc quoque ſapientibus: it concerns them too.

There was one, as wiſe, as ever they will be, whoſe counſel (in his time) was holden as the Oracle of GOD: Yet, this great wiſe man, for meddling in this, contrary to it, proved but 2 Sam. 16. 23. a fool, and made up the number of thoſe that came to this untimely, and unknown ruine and deſtruction. And now, where he is, we know, what he ſuffers, we know not. It was Achitophel, I mean.

And ſtrange it is, that is obſerved of his name. For Tophel is a fool: And Achi is a Couſin germane at the leaſt, if it be not neerer. So as wiſe as he was, his name was ominous, and gave him to be (as he proved) germanus ſtulti; a wiſe man: but of whom a fool might have claimed kindred: As of him, he might; and of all, he may, that meddle as he did. This Achitophel, as wiſe, as he takes himſelf, he ſhall be the wiſer, if he take this counſel.

The Application to the Day.

We have done with the Text, now: The Day will hold us yet a little. For, the day ſubſcribes probatum eſt to this Text, and ſets a ſeal to it.

Thus it ſhall be (ſaith Salomon,) But was it thus? Ask the day, and it will ask you, was it not thus? was not this Scripture this day fulfilled, not in our ears, but in our eyes (indeed in both?)
Luke 4. 21. Was there not an execution of this ſentence upon it? Did not Salomon ſhew himſelf to be, not only a wiſe man, but a Prophet, and that a true one.

This day was delivered, and brought forth certain ſons: You have heard what the Father hath ſaid to his ſons; will you ſtay a little and hear, what the ſons will ſay to their Father; take his Counſel or no. No: theſe ſons were wiſer, than their Father; ſaw deeper (as they thought) than Salomon; thought not him wiſe enough, to adviſe them: Not him; but got them an heap of new Fathers, that gave them other manner counſel; even to trie a concluſion with Salomon, upon this Text.

Will ye hear ſome new Divinity, how ſome Fathers here with us counſelled their ghoſtly children: the Fathers of the Society, their ſons of the ſociety, the wicked ſociety of this day? You ſhall ſee the Text turn'd round about, clean contrary.

Mat. 12. 42. My ſons fear God and the Pope, (ſo is the new Edition:) and as for thoſe that would fain change things here, do meddle with them, ſay, Salomon, what he liſt. Ecce major Salomone, Lo a greater than Salomon (you know where.) He (as yet, it ſtands in the gloſs to be ſeen) made this Book of Proverbs authentical, by citing it: and as he made it, can unmake it again at his pleaſure. Nothing in it ſhall bind you. Here is the counſel croſſed.

But then, how ſhall we do with the latter verſe? For that, take no thought: where he tels you (this Salomon) of deſtruction, it is nothing ſo: On with your Powder-plot notwithſtanding. You ſhall be ſo far from this (he tels you) that, if ought come to the plot or you, otherwiſe than we wiſh, it ſhall be no deſtruction; No, but a holy Martyrdome. And Quis ſcit? who knowes the bleſſed eſtate you ſhall come to by theſe means? But, Martyrs you ſhall be ſtreight upon it in print: And who knowes, whether there may not be wrought a ſtraw miracle, to confirm as much, if need be.

But

But to put you cleane out of doubt for your medling: you ſhall have of us the Fathers of the Societie to medle in it, as well as you; to make up this holy medly with you. To confeſſe you, to abſolve you, to ſweare you, to houſle you, to ſay Maſſe for you, and to keep your counſell in all holy equivocation. You ſee, what worke was made; how the matter was uſed with this Scripture when time was; how the Fathers of the Societie took this Father by the beard, and affronted him and his counſell, in every part of it.

What ſhall we ſay of theſe Sonnes, and theſe Fathers? Sure, their Catholike faith we will not meddle with; but, what Salomon ſaith we may be bold to ſay, and pronounce, Fear of GOD there was none in them: neither in the father, nor in the ſon. Neither in them, that gave the counſell; nor in them, that took it. None of them GODS ſervants: Him, they feared not: None of them, Salomons ſonnes; him, they heard not.

But, of the twaine, the fathers, that gave the counſell, farre the worſe: who, what Salomon termes deſtruction, that turned they into edification: and what he ruine, that changed they into exaltation; and gloriam utriuſque quis ſcit? A ſtrange change: that, now become glorious, that, before, theſe dayes, was ever damned as deteſtable! Changers right: change States, and change Churches ſo long till they change Divinity and all; ſet up a new fear of GOD, a fearfull one to Kings and to Kingdomes; and that, had like this Day, to have coſt many a thouſand mens lives.

And needs there not a retentive, when theſe coine ſuch motives? when that, which by Father Salomon (here) is ſo ſtraightly forbidden, is juſtified, nay is ſanctified, and glorified, by theſe Anti-paters, Anti-Salomons, Anti-greater-than-Salomon: they?

Well, look to the end. See, what became of this ſanctified Sedition. Sure, here Salomon was in the right: read their deſtiny truely. For, ſurpriſed they were, and blacked all of the ſudden; and that, ſtrangely and carried away ſtraight to their utter ruin: And their ruine who knoweth? Not their ruin here, or fall from the ladder; but a greater ruin, and into a deeper place: How low, into what torments, quis ſcit? (ſaith Salomon) and ſo ſay I. Their end (here) we ſaw: their end, who knows? Or, how they hang in hell for it? And all, for not following this advice.

To draw to an end: their ruin we know not; that is, quis ſcit? But, by their ruin who knows not; that is, quis neſcit? For, all men ſee and know, how highly theſe medlings diſpleaſe GOD, who hath ſo many wayes, ſo ſtrangely, both of old and of late, and ſtill doth teſtifie to the world plainly, His deep diſlike of them: that a wonder it is, that (ſtill) there are, that dare adventure upon them; ſave that, GOD, for want of His true fear in their hearts, ſuffers this efficacy of errour, this ſtrange deluſion to beſot them.

But, let them take this from Salomon that, toties quoties, ſo oft as they ſeek to build Sion in blood, ſo oft ſhall their building end in deſtruction: and ſo oft as they riſe to that end, they ſhall riſe to their ruin: fathers, and ſonnes, and ſonnes-ſonnes, to the end of the world. Mica. 3. 10.

But we (Beloved) who have better learned to fear GOD (I truſt) if Salomon ſhall acknowledge us for his ſonnes, or GOD for His ſervants; if we will be the children of Wiſdom, let Wiſdom be juſtified of her children. Let us do Salomon the honour, to thinke him wiſe enough, to give us counſell. And ſince we ſee, he is proved a Prophet, and not a word of all this Text is fallen to the ground; that ſtrange examples there have been of it, and that, many; and this day, one Exemplum ſine exemplo, an Example per ſe, a matchleſſe one, in this kind: Having theſe before our eyes, and having in remembrance the four noviſſima in the Text, 1 Deſtruction, 2 ruine, 3 repente, and 4 quis ſcit. Let us fear thoſe four; and fearing them, perſiſt as we have done hitherto; in the fear of GOD and the King; and ever fear, to have to do or to deal with them, that fear neither. So I pray GOD, we may; and that this may be the fruit, even our fruit. And, His bleſſing upon that, hath been ſpoken, that we may live and die Timentes Deum & Regem, ever pure from this mixture: and ſo GOD make Us all. Matth. 13. 9.

A SER-

A SERMON

Preached before the

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDCXV.

PSALM. CXLV. VER. IX.

Suavis DOMINUS universis: & Miserationes Ejus super omnia opera Ejus.

The LORD is good to all: and His mercies are over all his Works.

TEN yeares it is now, since our memorable delivery, as upon this day: and we here to celebrate, not the Anniversary only, but the Decennalia of it. Now, in numbring, it is well known, that, at ten, we begin anew at the figure of one: we return again (ever) to the first. So do we now. For, this was the first; Misericordia DOMINI super opera ejus.

We shall never forget it, so many of us as then heard it, that it was the first, that it was thought (and that, Authore magno) to be the fittest theme of all, wherewith to begin the first solemn thanksgiving of all, for the great Mercy of GOD, and for the great Work of that Mercy, this Day, shewed upon us all.

To this then the first (every way, the first) may I crave pardon, to put to my poor cypher, and make it ten, this tenth year. So, as it was the first-fruits, it may be the tenth. So, they may be, as they should be, Primitiæ & Decimæ de eodem, both out of one and the same.

It led us at the very first, whether first and last we must come; to the true Cause of that our Delivery: of that, and of all other, we have had, or ever shall have, the Super omnia of His Mercies.

That

That deliverance when it came, it came not temerè, it had a cause. That cause was GOD, and, in GOD, His Mercy, It was the Mercy of GOD we were not consumed: so said we then (out of Jeremy) at the seventh year. That mercy of His, (that is super omnia: So say we now (out of David) at the tenth. For, this is King David; and, that way, not unfit neither: As, written first by a King; applyed since, by a King; in the case of saving a King, and a Kingdome: Or rather, one King, but more Kingdomes than one. Lament. 3. 22.

It was then spoken, to the praise. And it is a praise; and it is out of a praise. For so, is this Psalm entitled: David's Praise. For however the prayers and the prayses (all) in this Book, are, (for the most part) of Davids penning: yet, two there are, he hath singled out from the rest, and set his own mark on them, as proper to himself. The LXXXVI. Psalm, his Tephillat; Davids own Prayer. And this here, his Tehilla his own Prayse or thanksgiving. As if he had made the rest, for all in common: but reserved these peculiarly for himself.

With Exaltabo te DEUS, it begins; He will exalt GOD; Every day, and for ever: so he vowes, in the two first verses. For what, will he exalt Him? For many high perfections in Him, For the greatnesse of his Nature, which is infinite, at the third; For the greatnesse of his wonderous Workes (the fourth:) for His glorious Majesty the fifth:) For His mighty Power (the sixth:) For His Goodnesse, subdivided into His Justice and Mercy: For His Justice (the seventh:) And for His Mercy (the eighth.) And here now, in the ninth, in this verse, and these very words, He sets the Super omnia, the Crown and Garland (as it were) on Mercies head; gives it to the Soveraignty over all. Exaltabo Te; GOD He will exalt: and Exaltabo misericordiam Tuam, in GOD he will exalt His mercy, above all the rest.

Upon the matter then; all is (as we said) but a praise of Mercy. And a praise, not positive (that is not so effectually) but, by way of comparison (held ever the better). The summe.

In a comparison (ever) three points we look to: 1. With whom it is made, with the Works of GOD. 2. How large it is laid: Not with some one or more, but with them all; all commers (as they say.) 3. And, in what; In the point of Super; (in that, there is so much ado about) the point of Supremacy: whether above, whether Superiour to other.

Two things of GOD there are set down: 1 His Mercies, and 2 His Workes: these two compared: Compared, in the point of Super, and Mercy found to carry it. Here's the Supremacie. All His workes: high all, great all, all excellent: But major horum Misericordia, the highest, greatest, most excellent of them all, Mercy; that, the Super omnia of them all. Of these then.

First of the words as they stand in order.

Then of Merci's Super, and that three wayes: 1 Super, above; (So, we read it.) 2 Super over; (So the LXX. ἐπὶ πάντα.) 3 Super, upon; so we pray, Fiat misericordia super nos, Let thy mercy be upon us. 1. Super, above it may be (as a Spire is) and not reflect down, and be over. 2. Super, over it may be, and hoover aloft; not descend, or come down upon us. 3. But, Super, upon, is it; when it lights upon us: that is, Fiat misericordia super nos. The Division. I. II.

And of these, 1 as well for Merci's honour, that is over them: 2 as for the good of the Workes that are under it.

Then come we to a Super in this Super, Upon some of GOD's workes, more than other some: And so to our selves: And so to this day. III.

For (sure) this Scripture, if it be well looked unto, doth competere, agree to no case, so as it doth to ours: Nor to ours, as this day. We are His workes once, and Those Mercies of His, here said to be over all His workes, have been over and upon us. Upon us, in LXXXVIII. and many other times: but, above all other most sensibly, this day; this day of all dayes. And that with such a Super, in so high a degree, in such, so great a Mercy, so great a work of Mercy, as great as ever was any. In Saving so great a number, from so strange and unheard of a cruelty: by a Mercy, super omnia (I may say;) from a cruelty, Super omnia (I am sure.)

Then lastly, what we are in Super to GOD, for this Super. Where, 1 Of the Super upon the the head of all GOD'S Workes, for these His Mercies thus over them. 2 And, of all His Workes, and above them all, of the Super remaining upon our heads, for diverse besides, but for this Day and this Work, Super omnia: Above all the Dayes, we ever say: Above all the workes, He ever wrought for us. IV.

And, it is the tenth year, this; And, naturally, Decumana sunt grandiora. A Fluctus decumanus, a deep flood it was, had like to have gone over our soules: And a Misericordia Decumana, A Mercy of a large size it was, that made, it went not then. That we perform then Laudes Decumanas, great praise and large thankes: now, this Anno Decimo, some way answerable to the greatnesse of our Peril, and to the greatnesse of the Mercy, that made us so well passe it. The numbers of seven and ten are not without their weight. The Seventh, the Sabbath: The Tenth, GOD'S part. Both wayes, as the Sabbath day, as the Tenth year, sacred to GOD is this Day, and our duty upon it. Psalm 38. 4

I. Of the words in order. Miſericordiæ. The Mercies.

MIſericordia DOMINI. Miſericordia. To look into the nature of the word Mercy: It is beſt conceived, by the Object, and by the Act. Mercy hath for her Object circa quod, her matter and mettal to work upon, Miſery: the beſt Vertue, the worſt Object of all. It is not ſo plain (this) in our Engliſh word [Mercy) as in the Latine [Miſericordia] for, there, is miſery full out at length.

Upon this Object, the proper Act of Mercy, Miſeratio, as the Fathers read this Text: Miſericordia is the Habit; Miſeratio the Act, which is nothing elſe but Miſericordia eliquata, that which runnes from Mercy, at the melting; the Act that relieves us of miſery, and all the degrees that lead to it, neceſſities, impotencies, defects, diſtreſſes, dangers, and whatſoever would make our caſe miſerable, more or leſſe.

To relieve theſe, is the Act: and (this you muſt take with you) without merit, to relieve them. The oppoſition, the Church makes, in diverſe her Collects: Non noſtris meritis, ſed tua ſola miſericordia, with an expreſs obſtante of all merit. For, the Eye of Juſtice will recieve all them, that deſerve it. Goodneſſe, in merentes, that, is Juſtice. Goodneſſe, in immerentes, yea, and ſometimes Pſalm 106. 44. a degree farther, in male merentes: that is, Mercy properly. Nevertheleſſe (ſaith the CVI Pſalm) for all they deſerved it (to be miſerable) when he ſaw their miſery (ſaw that, and nothing elſe to move Him) that moved him, and He heard their complaint, and gave order for their relief. This, is Mercy.

Miſericordia Ejus. Mercies in GOD. This, Mercy is in GOD; Miſericordia Ejus. Indeed ſuch is the immutable conſtancy of the Divine Nature; as we ſhould hardly conceive it to be in this wiſe flexible, but that great care is taken of this point (of no one, ſo great;) that there is Mercy in GOD, there be Miſericordia Ejus.

But what Mercy? From the nature and force of the word רחמים, which (I am not now to tell you, I have done it heretofore) is properly the bowels: that is, there are tender mercies in GOD (ſo we turn it, in the Benedictus.) Not, of the ordinary ſort, ſlight, and ſuch as pierce not deep, come not farre: but, ſuch as come de profundis, from the very bowels themſelves; that affect that part, make the bowels relent.

And what bowels? Not the bowels of the common man (for then מעים had been the right word:) but רחמים are the bowels of a parent (ſo, we ſaid, the word ſignifies) and this adds much; adds to mercy στοργὴ, natural love. To one ſtrong affection, another as ſtrong, or ſtronger than it.

And what Parent? the more pittifull of the twain, the Mother. For, רחם (the ſingular of this word) is Hebrew for the womb, So as this, to the two former, addeth the Sex; the Sex holden to be the more paſſionate, and compaſſionate of both. 1 Of all mercies, thoſe from the bowels: 2 and of all bowels, the bowels of a parent: 3 and, of the two parents thoſe of the mother, thoſe from the womb: ſuch pitty, as the mother takes of the child of her womb; ſuch, as the womb, of the child that lay in it. Mercies are in God; ſuch mercies are in God.

And GOD, willing to ſet forth unto us the exceeding great tenderneſſe of His mercy, to have it throughly apprehended by us, Humanum dicit, ſpeaks to us in our own Puerilis. And, to expreſſe the efficacie of his action, takes to him the affection: and to expreſſe the affection, takes to Him the part of the body, the ſeat of it, the bowels: and the bowels of a parent; of that parent; whoſe bowels, in our nature, are the pittifulleſt of all, the mother. And (if you will) you may add this: that one mother hath but one womb, for all her children; but, he ſpeaks (here) of GOD in the plural; as if He had the compaſſion of more wombes than one, the pity of many mothers put together.

In God, with a Super. It is good newes for us, theſe mercies are in God: but, better yet, that they are in Him; with a Super. But, beſt of all, that that Super, a Super, not Super quædam, but Super omnia.

And that Super, Super omnia, Much is ſaid in few words, to mercies praiſe, when this is ſaid, Super omnia. Nihil ſupra were much, none above it: but Super omnia, it above all; he that ſaith that, leaves no more to ſay: there is no higher degree; Super omnia is the Superlative.

Super omnia, Above all. For, Opera ejus, His works: theſe two might well be ſpared. All, are works: and all are His workes. Super omnia opera ejus, that is, abſolutely Super omnia. For, works, is no term diminuent here: All His workes: that is, all, ſimply. Beſide God and His workes: there is in the wide world, nothing at all.

But yet, with His workes, with them it is laid; and well: Not, with God's other Attributes, abſolutely; but with them, in the point of workes: His Attributes are all alike: all, as Himſelf is; infinite, all; and one infinite is not more than another. But, take the workes (and Virtus in actione, we know) lay it there; Compare the workes of any of them, nay, of all of them, with the works of mercy, and mercy carries it clear. More workes; more in number: (If they their thouſand, mercy
1 Sam. 18, 7. her ten thouſands:) More great, more glorious Workes, of it, than of any of them all; Nay, than of all of them: Super omnia opera, that it is. And now to our Super. And firſt, Super, above.

II. Of their Super. I. Super, above.

Super, above, is ſaid (here) by way of figure. Properly, Super is of height: height is a dimenſion, that pertains to quantity; and quantity, to bodies: whereof Mercy is none. The meaning is, it is the chiefeſt. So, heaven in the greater World; So, the Head, in the leſſe: both of them the higheſt, eſt, both of them the chiefeſt; chiefeſt of all, and rule all. As (indeed) of whom is ſaid ſo rightly, as of the Soveraigne? So doth Mercy: namely, His Power (which may ſerve for all) Deus (ſaith the Church, the ninth Sunday after Trinity) qui omnipotentiam Tuam parcendo maximè & miſerando manifeſtas; GOD, which ſheweſt thine Almighty power, moſt chiefly, in ſhewing mercy: Super

But to keep us to the letter. Super, above, is either 1 reall, or 2 local. 1. Reall as Saul above the people, higher by the head and ſhoulders than any of them. 2 Locall, as Zachee; though low in ſtature, yet above in the top of a Sycamore tree. 1 Sam. 10.23. Luk. 19. 4.

Mercy is it ſelfe higheſt. We will ſoon end this point, by the heavens, the uppermoſt of all his workes. His mercy (ſaith the CVIII Pſalme) is ὑπὲρ above; and that, with a μέγα, a great way above the heavens: and, if above them, above all under them. It is it ſelf higheſt. 1 Above really. Pſal. 108. 4.

And it hath the higheſt place of all, above all, the precedence before all. The higheſt place. The Ark was (on earth) the figure of the ſpirituall heaven: Over it were the Cherubins; Above, upon the top of their wings, was the Mercy-Seat: there ſits mercy in the higheſt place of all. 2 Above locally. 1 In place. 2 In precedence.

As the higheſt place, above all: ſo the precedence before all. In Gods owne ſtile framed and proclaimed by Himſelfe, Exod. XXXIV. conſiſting of thirteene titles, (מדות) meaſures or degrees) next after the Lord God, the very firſt is this word, here. And take this withall; that of the thirteen, nine of them belong to Mercy: that proportion it hath, that ſo, it may have the ſuper every way. Exod. 34.6.

From this place it hath, over all (and by God's appointment; it took it not, it ſelfe, we gather the place it hath, in God's eſteem. That, which one moſt ſets by, he ſets by himſelf: and next himſelf ever the deareſt, the neereſt ſtill. GOD, by thus ſetting it, next to Him (none between God and it, in His Stile) ſhewes plainly, what vertue it is, He loves above all; and what vertue He commends to us above all. To us all; but eſpecially, to them that are above all: To be ſuper omnia, in them that be ſuper omnes. As the nobler the Nature, and the neerer to God, the more eaſie (ever) to take the impreſſion of it. To hold you no longer in this firſt. It is one of Gods Titles: (Melchiſedeck firſt gave to him) Altiſſimus. As He, Altiſſimus: ſo Mercie, altiſſima; ever: Altiſſima, in Altiſſimo, the higheſt Vertue in Him that is moſt high, which is God, above all to be bleſſed, and to be bleſſed for this above all. And this, for ſuper, above. Gen. 14. 19. Rom. 9. 5.

But, there is more than ſo in it. Super is over, ἐπὶ πάντα is over all. All that are above, are not over. It is not above only, as an Obelisk or May-pole, higher than all about them, but have neither ſhaddow nor ſhelter; no good they doe. Mercy hath a broad top, ſpreading it ſelfe over all. It is ſo above all, as it is over them; too. As the vault of this Chappell is over us, and the great vault of the Firmament ovir that. The ſuper of latitude and expanſion no leſſe than of altitude, and elevation. 2 Super over.

And this, to the end that all may retire to it, and take covert: It, over them; and they, under it. Under it, under the ſhaddow of it, as of Eſays great rock in the Wilderneſs, from the heat. Under it, under the ſhelter of it, as of Daniels great Tree, from the Tempeſt. Eſay 32.2. Dan. 4.12.

Over all his works, now, O lord (ſaith the CIV. Pſalme) how manifold are thy workes! We ſhall never get thorow halfe of them, GOD knowes; Non eſt pertranſire infinitum. We will contract them, thus: take the two extreams, ſo ſhall we take in all betwixt them. Over all, that is, none of them all ſo high, but as high as they be, they need come under it. Nor none of them all ſo meane, but as meane as they be, they are not left out: one way or other, within it, under it, all. So we divide His workes, into His OPERA, and His opuſcula; and over both it is. Super omnia, Over all. Pſal. 104. 24.

None ſo high: None on earth, not His Saints (who of all on earth, have the ſuper, are of higheſt perfection) In them He found no ſtedfaſtneſs (Iob XV.) they be Vaſa miſericordiæ all. If you will take it with Iacobs ſtaffe, He ſaith, minor ſum cunctis, he is under them, under them all. 1 All His workes. His OPERA. Iob. 15.15.

Not in earth then: No, nor in Heaven. Neither heaven it ſelfe, nor the brighteſt part of heaven, the ſtares; they are not cleane in His ſight, they alſo need it. Nay, not the Angels, the very brighteſt of them all: In them He found Pravitatem, σκολιόν τι, ſomewhat amiſſe even in them. So, over them too; they need it. The very Seraphin have ſomething to cover. As for the Cherubin, they will ſet Mercy a ſeat upon the top of their wings: So glad and fain are they to have it over them. All the tongues of Saints and Angels muſt ſay this verſe with us. Miſericordiæ Domini ſuper omnia opera ejus. Both ſay it, for both need it: And if both they, I would faine know, who needs it not. Rom. 9.23. Gen. 32.10. Iob 15.15. Iob. 4. 18. Eſay 6. 1. Exod. 37. 9.

Now, as none ſo high; none of His opera, His folio workes: So, none ſo meane, none of His opuſcula, but over them too. As His art no leſſe wonderfull, in making the Ant, than the Elephant: So, His care no leſſe over the one, than over the other. Naturas rerum minimarum non deſtituit Deus: The very minimus of the world, His Mercy leaves them not deſtitute. Not the Wilde Aſſes, without a place to quench their thirſt. Not the young Ravens crying on Him. Not the Sparrow of halfe a farthing, lets not them light on the ground without His providence. Even theſe, even ſuch His mercy is over alſo. It is not Pallium breve; the Mantle is wide enough, it leaves none out. 2 All His Opuſcula. Pſal. 104. 11. 147. 9. Matth. 10. 29.

None out? What ſay you to hell and thoſe there? Not them? Nazianzen (that had the honour to be called the Divine, of his time) thinks it may be maintained, not them: and ſo do the Schoole-men all, in aſmuch as even there, Mercy moderates, too. That it is not, with them there, as it might and ſhould be, but tolerabilius, eaſier, than they to deſerve by much. None, no not in that place, though beaten with many ſtripes; not yet with ſo many as the quality of his offence, in rigour of juſtice would require. This is ſure: Deus præmiat ultra, punit citra: God (ever) rewards beyond but puniſhes on this ſide; ſhort ſtill, of that we deſerve: that His very puniſhment is tempered with mercy, that even in His wrath, He remembereth mercy. Luke 12. 47. Hab. 3. 2.

But we will not ſtand upon this; we need not, we ſhall find another Super for theſe, anon. For many are the Super's of mercy. Not in any one (poſſibly;) but in one ſenſe or other, over all. Then if it go by quo communius eo melius) None ſo good, for none ſo common (I am ſure.)

The reaſon is Ejus, referred to Mercy. Mercy the maker of them all. Pſal. 116. 5, 6, 7, &c

And reaſon, why Mercy ſhould ſpread the wing of her mantle thus, over all. All are Opera ejus: Opera ejus: Ejus may be referred indifferently: to Mercy, as well as to God. Mercy hath the name from DIT the womb. For, ſhe was the womb, (indeed) in which, all were conceived at firſt, and ſhe delivered of them all. Plaine, by the CXXXVI. Pſalme; Who by His excellent Wiſdome made the heavens, Who layd out the earth above the waters, who made great lights, &c. And the cauſe of every one, at the end of every one, and of twenty more, For, His mercy endureth for ever. That, ſet all on work: His wiſdome, to contrive, His power to execute; appointed all, did all.

Mercy the preſerver of all. Exod. 19. 4. Mat. 13. 37.

It was Mercy, and nothing but mercy, ſet the Creation in hand. For, it is well known, in non ente, there could be no moving cauſe at all. Nothing we were; We, and all His workes: In nothing, there can be nothing to induce, why it ſhould be brought out of the ſtate of being nothing. So that, His mercy it was, that removed that univerſall defect, of non entitie at the firſt.

And having then made them, it is kindly, that Viſcera miſericordiæ ſhould be over thoſe Opera that came de viſceribus; whom it brought from nothing, to be over them, and not ſee them caſt away, and brought to nothing againe. The Eagle (ſaith Moſes) the poor Hen (ſaith our Saviour) will do it for their young ones: ſtretch their wings over them to preſerve them, what they can.

The reaſon. 1 In Ejus, his poſſeſſion, 1 ſal. 119 94. 2 In opera, his handywork. Pſal. 137, 8

So that theſe very two words [Opera ejus] containe in them a reaſon, why mercy ſhould do no leſſe. A reaſon? Nay two. 1 One, for that they be Ejus his, I am thine, ô ſave me; a good reaſon: He they be, a part of His poſſeſſion. That alone, is enough with us, to preſerve that is ours; only becauſe it is ours; though we never made it. 2 But Beſides that they be His, they be His handywork. Another good inducement. Deſpiſe not, O Lord, the works of thine own hands. We ſee, then, why over all: quia ejus, quia opera; becauſe His all; becauſe His workes, all. And it is well for us, the reaſon is ſo large. For, what ever we be or do, or what ever become of us, His we are, and His workes we are ſtill. So, ſtill His mercy is over us, and we under it.

Super omnia. 1 For mercies praiſe.

It made me ſay at firſt, This Super, as it is highly to the praiſe of Mercy, that it is over His workes: So it is every way, as highly to the good of all his works, which are under mercy. The vanity, Salomon ſaw (One ſet over others for their hurt) hath no place, here. That Mercy is over all, is for the generall good of all, and that is ever a bleſſed Super. We ſhall not need to feare any heart-burning, any emulation, for this Super: or to aske what the workes ſay to it? they all ſay Amen Halleluja: glad are they, that mercy is in that place; they would have none other, if they might. It followeth next, Confiteantur tibi opera; His workes are ready all to confeſſe, to acknowledge this Supremacie without any ſcruple; to take the oath to it.

2 For the good of His workes, Eccl. 8. 9. Verſe 18

For Super (over) there is no doubt, that it is as the Cherubims wings ſtretched forth from one ſide of the Temple to the other; Over all, for all to flie under and finde ſuccour there. Tutiſſimum eſt (ſay they, that can ſay leaſt by it:) when all is done, nothing, whereto we may ſo ſafely commit our ſelves. And, therefore Super omnia, that Super omnia we might truſt in it. But I ſay, that, even Super (above) it is not, as a bare pole upright; there is a brazen Serpent upon the top of it, for us to look up to and receive comfort by. I will touch two or three: for thus we deduce. Firſt if it be above all his works, it followes, then above every one of them: And, One will ſerve the turne. Of all the works of God there is no work we are afraid of, but one; that is, His judgment, the work of his juſtice. Above that, it is: for, above all it is. And, that is to our comfort greatly. For which (beſides this generall above all, and therefore above it) we owe to Saint Iames; that we have expreſſed in particular, even in termes terminant, Miſericordia Super-exaltat judicium, Mercy is exalted (more than exalted, Super-exalted) above judgement, nominatim. That work of His, we moſt ſtand in awe of, over that work by name, Mercy Triumpheth. And, in the very Decalogue, there may you ſee the Super of a thouſand to four, in Mercy over juſtice. Even there, even in the rolle of His Juſtice (the Law;) there would God have it extant upon record, that Mercy is above it.

Exod. 20 6.

And if mercy be above it, thither (to mercy) we may remove our cauſe, as to the Higher Court. There lieth an Appeale thither, A Solio Juſtitiæ ad Thronum Gratiæ, from the Bench of Juſtice, to the Throne of Grace and Mercy. There, we may be relieved. Now, if it be above that Opus, that work of Gods, for Gods works we ſeek no more.

Heb. 4. 16.

A ſecond we deduce thus. If it be above all his works, ſhall it not much more be above all ours? What are we to Him; ours to His? No, no work of ours then, or to be done by us, but the mercy of God is above it; no ſinfull work (I meane) that we erre not Cains error, His ſin was above Gods mercy: No; Mercy above it. Grande eſt barathrum peccatorum meorum (it is Chryſoſtome) ſed major eſt Abyſſus miſericordiæ Dei: Great is the whirlepoole of my wicked workes, but greater is the Betheſda, the wide and deepe gulfe of the mercy of God that hath no bottome. And indeed, it were not truly ſaid, It is above all His works, (all His, and much more then, above all ours) if any of all our workes were above it; No more then, There is a Lambe, that taketh away the ſins of the world, if there were any ſin in the world, He takes not away. And this is the Super indeed, that would be looked into by us, by reaſon of another Super, Iniquitates noſtræ ſupergreſſa ſunt capita noſtra, Our ſins are gone up, above our heads; over head and eares, in ſin. And another Super yet, above them; Even the phials of Gods wrath hanging over our heads; ready to be poured on us and them, were it not, that mercie is above them, and ſtaies them: Were it not that, Over whom miſery, over them mercy: Elſe were we in danger to be overwhelmed with them every houre. We ſee then: the compariſon was well ſaid in Super. Our ſins over us; judgments over them; but mercy over all, Super Omnia. Always, where there is Super, there is 2 Above all our works, our ſinfull works. Gen. 4. 13.

John. 1. 29.

Pſal. 38. 4

Apoc. 16. 1.

Satis;

Satis; Satis superque shewes, super is more than Satis, Enough then there is, and to spare, for them all.

One more: not only above all ours; but if it be above all his works, then is it above all the works of them that be His works: and so (not to hold you) above the Devil and all his works. For he also, is one of them: Of Gods making, as an Angell; of His own marring, as a devill. Above his works (I say) and above the works, and practices of his limmes, and all they can do or devise against them; over whom His mercy is. The Son of God (saith Saint John.) in mercy therefore appeared; Ut solveret opera Diaboli, that He might loose, undo, quite dissolve the workes of the Devil. No worke shall he contrive, never so deep under ground, never so neer the borders of his own region, but Gods mercy will bring it to light; it, and the workers of it. His mercy will have a Super, for their Subter. There shall bo more in Mercy, to save; than in Satan, to destroy: More, dicat nunc Israel; more, may this Realm now say. A notorious Work of His, as ever any; Nay, Super omnia, as never was any, this day by His mercy brought to light, and dissolved, quite dissolved. We heard it not with our eares, our fathers told it us not; our eyes beheld this Super.

1 Ioh.3.8.

Psalm.24.1.

Psalm.44.1.

So we are come, to our own case, yet we were aware, That is Super, upon. Over all it is; yet, not over all alike: at least wise, not upon all alike; upon some, more than over other some. Æqualiter est Illi cura de omnibus, but, not æqualis; Equally, a care of all, but, not an equall care, though. No, His mercy over all in generall, is no barre, but upon some there may be a speciall Super; and so, some have a Super in this Super too.

3. Super upon, 1 upon some, more than others of His workes.

For, if the reason, why mercy is over all his workes be, because they be His workes: then, the more they be His workes, the more workmanship He bestowes upon them, the more is His mercy over them. Whereby it falls out, that as there is an unequality of His works, and one work above another; so is there a diverse gradation of His mercy, and one mercy above another, or rather one and the same mercy, as the same Planet in Auge, in the top of His Epicycle, higher than it self, at other times.

To shew this, we divide His workes, (as we have warrant) into His works of Fiat (as the rest of His creatures:) and the Work of Faciamus, as Man, the master-piece of His works; upon whom He did more cost, shewed more workmanship, than on the rest: the very word [Faciamus] sets above all. 1. Gods προβουλία: that He did deliberate enter in consultation (as it were) about his making, and about none else. 2. Gods αὐτουργία: that Himself framed his body of the mould, as the potter the clay. 3. Then, that He breathed into him a two-lived soule, which made the Psalmist break out, Domine quid est homo, &c, Lord, what is man that thou shouldst so regard Him, as to passe by the heavens and all the glorious bodies there, and passing by them, breath an immortall soule, put thine own image, upon a piece of clay? 4. But last, Gods setting him Super omnia opera manuum suarum, Over all the works of His hands. His making him (as I may say) Count Palatine of the world; this shewes plainly, His setting by Man more than all of them. As he then, over them; so, Gods mercy over him. Over all His works; but, of all His works, over this work. Over His chiefe work, chiefly: in a higher degree. And not without great cause. Man is capable of eternall, either felicity or misery; so are not the rest: He sins; so do not they. So, his case requires a Super in this Super, requires mercy more than all theirs.

2 Upon Man more than other creatures.

Gen.1.26.

Gen.2.7.

Psalm.8.4.

Psalm.8.6.

Upon men then, chiefly. They, the first Super in this Super. But, of men (though it be true in generall, He hath shut up all under sin, that He might have mercy upon all, yet) even among them at Super too, a second. Another workmanship He hath yet, His workmanship in Christ Iesus: the Apostle calls it (*Ephes.*2.10.) His new creature (*Gal.*6.15.) which his mercy is more directly upon, than upon the rest of mankind; Servator omnium hominum; the Saviour of all men (saith the Apostle; marrie, Autem, most of all, of the faithfull Christian men. Of all men, above all men, upon them: They are His Work wrought on both sides; Creation on one side, Redemption on the other. For (now) we are at the work of Redemption.

Rom.11.32.

1 Tim.5.10.

And here now is My right, in kind, רַחֲמָה רַחֲמִי Rahame Rahama, the mercy of the bird of mercy, that is the Pellicans mercy (for, כַּחֹת is the pellican, which hath her name of mercy, as the truly mercifull bird.) For, here (now) is not the womb to hatch them, nor the wings to cloake them, but the Pellicans bill of mercy, striking it self to the heart, drawing bloud thence, even the very heart-bloud, to revive her young ones, when they were dead in sin, and to make them live anew the life of grace. This is Misericordia super omnes misericordias. Shall I say it? (I may truly:) Mercy, in all else, above his works: but, in this, above Himselfe. For, when it brought Him down from Heaven to Earth, to such a birth in the manger, such a life in contradiction of sinners, such a death on the Cross, it might truly be said then, Misericordia etiam triumphat de Deo. You shall mark therefore, at the very next words, when he comes to his thanks, it is Confiteantur Tibi opera Deus, but Sancti Tui benedicant Tibi: Thy works, let them say Confiteor; Thy redeemed, Thy Saints, let them sing Benedictus. Thy works, let them tell truth and confesse; But Thy Saints, let them speake all good and blesse Thee; highly blesse Thee, for this thy high mercy of all other upon them, as of all other, they have most cause to do.

Luk.2.11. Heb.12.3. Phil.2.8. Verse 10.

To elevate it one degree, one Super, more. For (I know not how, but you shall observe, that) even among the faithfull, even among them, God singles out some one People still, from the rest, that He makes of above the rest, and vouchsafes His speciall favour upon more than the rest, though Christian men, as well as they; and no reason in the world to be given of it, but the Super of His mercy. It was ever so: Some Nation, of whom it might be said, Non taliter fecit omni Nationi, He hath not dealt so with every Nation: Nay, Non omni is nulli, He hath not dealt so with any Nation.

Psal.147.20.

Some of whom it might be ſaid, Of all the people in the Earth, I have choſen you, to come neareſt to you, to vouchſafe you my chieſeſt, my choiſeſt mercies, Super omnes. Not in matters only pertaining to the ſoul, in which all Chriſtians are intereſſed alike; but even in the things pertaining to the courſe of this life, ſeculer (as we call them) and temporal: In them, too. And, in both, is better than one alone. In ſaving that way with the ſalvation, the King rejoyceth in (21 Pſalm.) ſaving them, from plots and practiſes, even againſt their worldly proſperity; from Achitophels plots, from Abſalons Vow, and ſuch like.

III. Our Super in this Super.

And now to our Super. For, may not we (think you) reckon our ſelves in all, in this laſt, above all. His workes firſt: ſo are all His creatures. His chief workmanſhip: ſo are other men. His workmanſhip in Chriſt: ſo are other Chriſtians. But above all; theſe, His non taliter. For, if we be not very dim-ſighted, without any perſpective-glaſs, we may ſee ſuch mercies and favours of His, Super upon our ſelves, as (ſure) the Nations round about us have not ſeen: and I think I may ſay, not any Nation on the Earth ſeen the like.

Many wayes might this be made appear, and many dayes brought to give us light to it: But, let all elſe paſſe in ſilence: this Day, this fifth of November, is inſtar omnium. Nay, is ſuper omnes, before, beyond, above them all: to elevate to us, this point, of the tender mercies of our God, whereby Luke 1. 78. this day ſpring from on high did viſit us. This Day (I ſay) enough and enough, to bring from all our mouthes, that it brought from His Majeſties, and that with admiration, Miſericordia Dei ſuper omnia opera ejus! And the Confiteantur, and the Benedicant of right belonging to it.

I The mercy of Ne inducas.

We, right now, divided His works: we will now divide His mercies. That do we, according to their Object, which is miſery: And that is double. 1 For, either it is already upon us, and we in it: 2 Or but over us, yet ſo over us, as we are within the ſhadow of death, at the very pits-brink (as they ſaid) and even now ready to be tumbled in. To quit us of theſe two, there is a double mercy (they follow at the 14. verſe.) 1 Erigis lapſos, 2 Suſtines labentes, Lifts up them that be down, and ſtayes them that be going down. There is a Super in theſe two. 1 One of them, the better (which our Pater-noſter will teach us:) Ne inducas firſt, and then Libera. Better, lead us not in, than deliver us out. If we are in, deliver us: but, better never come in at all. Jonas was delivered: So was Nineve: Nineve's was better (they came not in;) than Jonas his: he was in, but got out. That of Libera, God ſend us too, if ever we ſhall need it: and ſend it all them, that at this preſent, do. But yet give me the mercy of Ne inducas, let it not light, let it paſſe over; the Paſſe-over, that, is the memorable Delivery: that, the high Feaſt.

And, that was the Super, upon us. And it behoved ſo to be. We were not in: It came not to that; thank Mercy for it. If it had, it had been paſt with us, paſt Libera: that other mercy could have done us no good. If it had not been prævenisti, poſtveniſti had come too late. For, if in, never out more. This, our firſt Super.

2 The mercy of Libera, from a cruelty cloſe to us.

But, being not in, we were as near it, as near might be, and ſcape it. Over, it was; nay, it was rather under us, then: but all is one, Super or Subter: either will ſerve, here: that Subter would have ended in a Super, ſent us up high enough (I wot well;) therefore we will keep the word of the Text [Super] let it go.

First, when it was contrived, Over us it was: then, when it was ſet in hand, Over us yet more: but when it came to parata ſunt omnia, all ready for the match, and the match for it (for, ſo near it came) then, it was over us (I trow) hard over us: and, then to ſcape it, when it was even in a manner ready to ſeize on us, that, is another Super: for, then to eſcape it, that, doth us the more good, ever; and that is ever praiſed, for the Superiour deliverance. The ſecond Super.

3 And cloſe, from us.

Specially, if you add the third: that when it was ſo near us, and we to it, it was not ſo cloſe by us, as cloſe from us; we knew it not. And none ſo miſerable as they that are ſo, and know not they are ſo: Nay, think it clean otherwiſe. The Laodicean miſery, that (we ſay) is of all other the moſt wofull: Tu dicis quod, Thou ſayſt, thou art this, and thou art that; ſafe, and ſure, and happy: and behold, thou art none of all theſe: but, even then when thou ſayeſt it, miſerable, and Apoc. 3. 17. even in the jawes of death. That is the miſery, that comes as the throwes of a woman in travail: as the flood, upon the old world; as the fire, upon the five Cities. Jer. 6. 24.

And that was our caſe right: they, in the dayes of Noe; they, in the dayes of Lot, never reckoned leſſe, of the flood, or the fire, over them: than we, of the powder, under us. And I blame us not: Who would not have thought himſelf ſafe in that place? who, that he might not have trodden on that threſhold, that floor, without danger? If ſafe at all, if any where, there. It is the Aſylum, the ſureſt place (one would think) in all the Land Ἐφ' ᾧ φρονεῖς μέγιστα, ἀπολεῖ τοῦτο σε Where our greateſt truſt, there our danger moſt deadly; and that is (ever) the Super of all miſeries. Mark 24. 37. Luke 17. 26, 28.

Being then ſo over us, or under us; under us, and near us, near us, and we not aware of it: ſo near, that they made full account (I ſay not (as the Pſalm) to have ſwallowed us up quick, but) to have blown us up quick, and in a moment ſent us up, ſhivered all to pieces; it was a third, and a principal ſuper (this) more than ordinary, that made us ſupereſſe, to remain ſtill alive, after ſo great, ſo preſent, ſo ſecret danger. Pſalm 124. 3.

4 The ſuper omnia of this cruelty.

And yet another ſuper more, againſt this laſt; which will ſerve, as black work (I mean, their cruelty) to make this white work of Gods mercy ſhew the better to us. It is a Super omnia, too. As our deliverance, a work of Mercy ſuper omnia: ſo; our intended deſtruction, a work of cruelty ſuper omnia. Super

Super omnia, above all examples (to begin with.) For, the like never ſeen, nor heard of. Nay, not to be raked out of any ſtory, in any Age, of any Countrey, civil or ſavage, of the like. And Super omnes, over all it would have gone, not ſpared any, no degree, high or low; no eſtate, Nobles or Commons; no calling, ſacred or civil; no ſex, King or Queen; no age, King or Prince; no Religion, their own, or others. This is but ſuper omnes: Nay, ſuper omnia, it was too: Super, up with lime, and ſtone, and timber, iron, glaſſe and lead: up with floor, windowes and walls, roof and all. Yet another ſuper omnia: all bands of birth, countrey, allegiance, nature, blood, humanity and Chriſtianity; tread upon them, trample upon them all, tear them all in pieces. Never ſuch a ſuper omnia, in all ſenſes. So (indeed) a cruelty for the Devil himſelf: To make the oppoſition perfect, of GOD's Mercy, and Satans Cruelty. Of whom (to give each their due) it may be ſaid, and no leſſe truly ſaid, Crudelitates ejus ſuper omnia opera ejus, his Cruelties are above all his works: than of GOD, that His Mercies are above all His.

Super omnia opera ejus, it is; and contra omnia opera DEI: Above all his own, and againſt all GOD's works. The enemy of GOD he is, and ſo of all GOD'S works; and of thoſe His works moſt, that GOD moſt ſets by (that is) mankind; And of that part of mankind moſt, God hath done moſt for, and ſo may be thought, moſt to favour (that is, Chriſten men:) And then of them, if there be a Non taliter in His mercy, a Non taliter too, in his malice, ſtraight. If a ſuper omnes with God, a Super omnes with him, in ſenſu contrario.

To any creature (only becauſe it is a creature) is he cruel: he will into the Hogſtie, to ſhew it rather than not to ſhew it at all. Matth. 5. 13.

But, to man, to one man, rather than to a whole heard of Swine.

And among men, his malice is moſt at Chriſten men: they are nearer to the Kingdom of GOD. To keep them from that, Himſelf hath irrecoverably loſt (that is) Heaven; and to plunge them into eternal miſery, whereinto himſelf is fallen, without all redemption.

And among Chriſten men, to the beſt ſort; to publike perſons, rather than to private mean men.

But, if he could get a whole Parliament together: A King, his Nobles, his Commons; that is, a King, Kingdom and all; and up with them all at once, all together: there were none to that: that (ſo) he would over ſea and land to compaſſe. For, that, were indeed, with him, a ſuper omnia: He never had done the like.

Of this their Father, were thoſe ungodly men of this Day. Ungodly (I ſay:) For Salomon ſets us this ſigne, to know ungodly men by; Viſcera impiorum crudelia, if the bowels be cruel, then ungodly, certainly. No pity, no piety, with him. And we find, that mercy is a plant of our nature: So incident to the nature of man, as they are holden inhumane, that are without it. No pity, no humanity. Why then, Satanitie, it muſt be, if God and man diſclaim it: Even of him, cujus crudelitas ſuper omnia opera ejus. Prov. 12. 10.

Now God cannot abide cruelty at any hand. By what He placeth higheſt, may we know, what He loves beſt (mercy:) and by that, may we know, what He can worſt away with (cruelty.) Nay, if once he take his fellow by the throat, deal cruelly with him: never hear him more. No cruelty can He endure, at all: ſpecially, no ſuch cruel cruelty, as this that paſſed all. Matth. 18. 28.

And in this caſe of ours, I make no doubt, God was moved both wayes.

One way, by Mercy: for us, that our bones might not be ſcattered, in every corner; as when one heweth wood, chips flye about. And again; for them, we ſhould have left behind, that Videns JESUS turbas, miſertus eſt eis, He looked upon them too, and ſaw, they ſhould have been ἐσκυλμένοι and ἐρριμμένοι, ſcattered all, and hurried up and down, like a ſort of poor maſterleſſe ſheep: His mercy wrought with Him, in both theſe reſpects. Pſalm 141. 7. Matth. 9. 36.

But on the other ſide, their Cruelty moved Him alſo. And (I am perſwaded) God, looking upon thoſe mercileſſe bowel'd men, when in their hearts they hatched that monſter of cruelty, even at the ſight of that barbarous reſolution (yea more than barbarous) His heart even turned againſt them, His very ſoul abhorred that deviliſh intention of theirs. They had thought to have had the Day; but, to the high praiſe of His mercy, and to the confuſion of Satan and all his cruelty, He gave order, Mercy ſhould have the day: and ſhe had it, that there might be a mercy, ſuper omnia, above this Cruelty ſuper omnia: as there was. Their counſel brought to light; brought to nought; brought upon their own heads: and both counſel and counſellours brought to a ſhamefull end.

Nay, would they make mens bowels fly up and down the ayr? Out with thoſe bowels: what ſhould they do in, that have not in them that, that bowels ſhould have. Would they do it by fire? Into the fire with their bowels, before their faces? Would they make mens bones flie about like chips? Hew their bones in ſunder. Juſt is Davids prayer: Their delight was in cruelty, let it happen to them: They loved not mercy, therefore let it be far from them. Pſalm 109. 17.

But, how now? We are gone now from mercy quite. No no: there is mercy even in this ſeverity. In the Pſalm of Mercy (CXXXVI.) Slaying is made a work of mercy; Slew the firſt-born of Ægypt: cruel Pharaoh, cruel Og, For his mercy endureth for ever: Mercy, in ridding the world of ſuch. For, they are not worthy to be inter opera DEI, among Gods works, that renounce that Vertue: that is, ſuper opera DEI, over all Gods works. Pſalm 136. 10. 15. 20.

And ſo now ye ſee that Super, I told you, we ſhould come to at laſt; Over hell, and them there. The Super Superantis, the Over of an Overcommer; of Mercy a Conquerer. Above His other works, with the Super of a Soveraign, to protect them: Upon the devil and deviliſh men in their works, with Super Aſpidem & Baſiliſcum, to tread upon them, to make His enemies His foot-ſtool, and ſo a Super, Over them too. Pſalm 91. 13. Pſalm 10. 1.

And

IV. The Super of our Duty.

And now, we have set Mercy in her Chariot of triumph; In which, if ever she sat, she sat in the Super omnia of this Day. Let us now come to the last Super, the Super of remaining upon the head of all Gods works, for His mercy over them all; but, among them all, and above them all, upon our heads (if it were but for the Soveraign Mercy of this Day) what we were in Super to God, for it.

From his work.
[a] Verse 10.
[b] Verse 11.
[c] Psalm 150. 6.
[d] Psalm 117. 1.

The Super upon all Gods works followes, in the words next ensuing, [a] Confiteantur. Are His mercies over all his works? Why then, [b] O all ye works of the Lord, all flesh, [c] every thing that hath breath; but chiefly His chief work, the sons of men, [d] the nations and the kindred of the earth, come all to confession: all ow this (to confesse) at least. Confesse? what? Nothing but mercy, and the Super of the Mercy. Nothing, but that it is, as it is: do but as God doth, exalt it, place it, where He sets it. Let the deep say, it is over me; and the dry land say, it is over me; and so of the rest, every one: so many works, so many confessions.

From his Saints Verse 10. Psalm 65. 1.

There is a further Super, upon His Saints: they, owe more to Him than His ordinary works. His works but to confesse: His Saints, to confesse and blesse, both. They are double works, needle-work on both sides: more becomes them. Te decet hymnus in Sion: Both, to confesse, it is above all; and to blesse and praise it, above all. For, if it be above all; it followes, more praise is to come to Him for it, than for all. If Mercy, above all; the praise of His Mercy, above the praises of all.

From us.

There is a further Super yet, upon us that have found and felt the Super of it: the Non taliter (say I) above works and Saints both. All are bound: but we that are here super omnes; more than all, we. We that should have been Martyrs of Satans cruelty, it stands us in hand to be Confessors of GOD'S Mercy, as, to which we owe even our selves; our selves, and our safety; safety, of souls, and bodies, every one of us.

Then, let the King, Queen, and Prince; let all the three Estates; let the whole Land delivered by it, from a Chaos of confusion; let our souls, which he hath held in life; let our bodies, which he hath kept together from flying in pieces; let all think on it: think how to thank Him for it; say, and sing, and celebrate it above all. We, above all: for it, above all.

For, if ever Mercy were over work of His; if ever Work of His, under it directly; it was so over us, and we so under it, this Day. If ever, of any it might be avowed; or to any, applyed; If ever any, might rightly and truly, upon good and just cause, say or sing this verse; we of this land, may do both: It will fit our mouths best, best become us.

For, such a work did He shew on us, this Day, as if Mercy have a Super omnia of other, this may claim a Super omnia of it, of Mercy it self. His mercy is not so high above the rest of his works, as this Dayes Work, high above the works of it. That, supream to all: this supream to it. Mercy, in it: even above it self.

We then, that have had such a Super in this Super; we, of all others, nay more than all others, to have it yet more specially recommended. A bare confession will not serve; but the highest confession of all, to take the Oath of the Supremacy of it. We, if ever any, to say it, and swear it: if it had not been in Soveraign manner over some of His works (that is, our selves) we had been full low yet this, infra infimos, beneath, under all his workes: not (now) above ground, to speak and to hear of this Theme.

Let it then claim the supremacie in our confiteantur, and in our Benedicant, both above works, Saints, and all. And that, not mentally, or verbally alone; in heart so to hold, and in tongue so to report it: but, which is worth all, really in work, so to expresse it. I mean, as our thanks for His mercy above all our thanks; so our works of mercy, above all our workes. But, be they so? His are so: are ours? I would to God, I could say they were: but (sure) they are not. His mercy above all his works: With us, in this point, it is clean contrary: all our works, above our mercy. The least, the last, the lowest part of our works, are our works of mercy: the fewest in number, the poorest in value, the slightest in regard. Indeed, infra omnia, with us, they.

But sure; GOD, in thus setting it above all his works: sheweth, He would have it, with us, so too. That which is Super omnia ejus, to be Super omnia nostra: as above all His, so above all ours likewise. And CHRIST our SAVIOUR would have it so; His Estote, is Estote misericordes: Luke 6. 36. and how? not barely, Estate; but Estote, sicut Pater vester cœlestis; Mercifull, as He. And, how is He? So, as, with Him, it is above all. To imitate him then in this, let it be highest with us; as with Him, it is highest. Sure, we are not right, till it be with us, so too: As in Gods, so, in ours: above ours; above them all, that so, it may have the Supremacy, in Confiteantur, in Benedicant, in praise and thanks, in words, and works, and all.

To set off the Super of this day then, and to conclude. If the generality of His works confesse Him, for theirs: and the speciality of His Saints blesse Him, for theirs, what are we to do, how to confesse, how to blesse for the singular Mercy of this Day (and let all others go?) Sure, our mouthes to be filled with praise as the Sea, and our voyce in sounding it out, as the noise of His waves Psalm 71. 8. and we to cover the heavens with praise, as with clouds for it.

But, we are not able to praise thee, O Lord, or to extoll thy Name, for one of a thousand. Nay, not for one of the many millions, of the great Mercies, which thou hast shewed upon us and upon our children. How often hast thou rid us from Plague, freed us from Famine, saved us from the Sword, from our enemies compassing us round, from the Fleet, that came to make us no more a people!

Even;

Even; before this Day, we now hold; before it, and ſince it, have not thy compaſſions withdrawn themſelves from us. But, this Day, this Day above all dayes, have they ſhewed it Super omnia: and, not over, but upon us.

Wherefore, the powers thou haſt diſtributed in our ſouls, the breath of life thou haſt breathed into our noſtrils, the tongues thou haſt put into our mouthes, behold, all theſe ſhall break forth and confeſſe, and bleſſe, and thank, and praiſe, and magnifie and exalt thee and thy mercy, for ever. Yea, every mouth ſhall acknowledge thee, every tongue be a Trumpet of thy praiſe; every eye look up, every knee bow, every ſtature ſtoop to thee, and all hearts ſhall fear thee. And all that within us. Even our bowels: thoſe our bowels, that (but for Thee) had flowen, we know not whether: Even our bones: thoſe bones, that (but for it) had been ſhivered bone from bone, one from another: all ſhall ſay, Who is like unto thee ô Lord in Mercy? Who is like unto thee, glorious in holineſſe, fearfull in praiſe; doing wonders, wonders of mercy, as this day, upon us all, to be held by us and our poſterity, in an everlaſting remembrance.

Glory be to Thee ô Lord, glory be to Thee: Glory be to thee, and glory be to Thy Mercy, the Super omnia: the moſt glorious of all thy great and high Perfections: Glory be to Thee, and glory be to it: To it, in Thee; and to Thee for it. And that by all thy works, in all places, and at all times. And, of all thy works, and above them all, by us here; by the hearts and lungs of us all, in this place, this day, for this day, for the mercy of this day; for the mercy of it above all mercies, and for the work of this day above all works of it. And, not this day only, but all the dayes of our life; even as long as Thy mercy endureth, and that endureth for ever; for ever, in this world; for ever, in the world to come. Per, through the Ciſterne and Conduit of all Thy mercies, Jeſus Chriſt. Pſalm 136. 1.

A SERMON

Preached before the

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDCXVI.

Esay
~~Psalm~~ XXXVII. 111.

Venerunt filii usque ad partum, & virtus non est pariendi.

The Children are come to the birth, and there is no strength to bring forth.

I Have taken this piece, and no more. More I could not (you see) It will not fit our turn, or this Day (the fore-end of the verse:) This is a day of trouble, rebuke, blasphemy, cannot we say? We must say, This is a day, not of trouble, but of joy; not of rebuke, but of praise; not of blasphemy, but of thanksgiving, with us. And so may we say too, and yet keep these words for our ground still. Nothing lets, but that one and the same day, may be, both a day of joy and sorrow. They that have the day, and they that lose the day, the day is but one: but, to the winner, a joyfull day: to the loser, not so; but a day of sorrow, and of blasphemy, otherwise. And so this day, a day of Sorrow, to some: they might have taken up the whole verse, as it stands: those (I mean) that, do what they can, must be fain to father the Children, that this day were comming, but came not forth. That they came not forth, the want of strength to be delivered, made it to them a day of Sorrow (some say, of blasphemy to:) Not so, to us. To us a day of praise and thanks: that they lost *h*eir so looked-for and longed for children; that they are not born, who if they had been born, would have been the bane of us all. To us then, as this, a day; So this, a verse of Joy.

The words are (in Hebrew) of the nature of a Proverb; and used by them, as a By-word upon the defeating of any plot. Not every defeating; but then, when a plot is cunningly contrived, and closely followed, and is near brought to the very point to be done, yet not done though; but defeated, even then: then, take they up this Proverb, and say, Venerunt, &c. The summe.

And two wayes take they it up, thereafter as the design is. If it be bad, yet well layed, and well seconded, and for all that, in the end disappointed; then utter they it cheerfully, Aha, the children, &c. but as GOD would, &c. by way of gratulation. But: if good, and for a while come fairely forward, but in the end prove to nothing; then take they it up, with a sigh, alas the children, &c.

It cannot be denied, but good King Hezekiah, whose the words are, spake them here in some grief. Grief, two wayes: for 1 first, grieved he was to hear how Rabsakeh had raged and raved, and spewed out most horrible blasphemies. Fain would he, he and his men, rather than their lives have been at him for it. They were even great with this (as it were) and the children come to the birth; But their strength served them not, they durst not give him a word, for fear of a further mischief, if they should provoke him. Now, there is no more hard and grievous case in the world, than when a man shall be forced to hear blaspheming, and not to be in case to answer it home.

2 But the King of Assur (his Master) was not far off, with his Forces; but at the siege of Libna (not past a dozen mile off;) that Town, not like to hold out long, and then have at Jerusalem, and they (GOD wot) but meanly provided to welcome him. But a poor remnant, to so huge an Host; So huge, as with their very feet they dryed up Rivers, as they went. Non erant vires, was their case right; and this here a second grief. Verse 25.

For the words, though they sound, as if the Queen, or some great Lady, were in child-birth; yet no such matter. All is spoken by Allegory; and no woman, but the State of the Kingdom, here meant.

And it is no new thing to set forth States by women. The Prophets do it oft: Esays Hephsiba; Ezekiels Ahola, and Aholiba; Hoseas's Loruhamah, all shew it. Nothing more common with them, than the Daughter of Babel for the State of the Chaldaans; the Daughter of Sion for the State of the Jewes. Esay 62. 4. Ezek. 23. 36. Hos. 1. 6. Esay 47. 1. Verse 22.

And not to women only, but to women with child; then specially, when there comes any shrewd plunges upon an Estate. Filia Sion quasi parturiens (Hosea 4. 12.) Sion is ready to cry out, in the Old: And, in the New, the Church (then) hard bestead, is represented by a Woman ready to fall in labour (Apoc. 12. 11.) And States, when they would be delivered of ought (would, and cannot) as it were the throwes of child-birth seem to be upon them: and this Proverb, then not unfitly applyed to them, Venerunt, &c. Hos. 4. 12. Apoc. 12. 2.

A Woman, her time is come, and strives to bring forth, and cannot, not having strength for it; this (we know) is a case of great extremity: we know it by Rachel (Gen. 35.) by Hophnies wife (1 Sam. 4.) both which were in the case here: at the point to be delivered, and wanted strength, and it cost them both their lives. Gen. 35. 16, 17. 1 Sam. 4. 19.

Now, as when a woman is so, all about her are at their wits end; know not what to do, or whether to turn themselves: No more did Ezekias; but even turns to the Prophet Esay: (as, at such times Prophets shall have their turns: not oft, besides.) To him they send for Leva orationem: Lift up thy prayer: Prayer, now, for, but, in prayer, no help is left; if that relieve us not, we are gone. This spake then Hezekias in grief. Verse 2.

It grieves me on a day of joy, to hold you so long in a point of sorrow; but, the turning all into present joy will make amends. To that, I come.

This for the present, was their case: but this was not their case long. For, within a while after, before the end of the Chapter, the very same words, by the very same persons, were (or might have been) taken up, in a far other more joyfull key. Then, when the King of Assur, he that cast them into this agony, as he was upon removing to come towards them (and so, the children (as it were) come to the very birth, indeed:) GOD put a Ring in his nose, turned him about home again, as fast as ever he could, upon newes of invasion of his Countrey, by the Æthiopian: When, being so near come to the birth, he came not, had not the power to come one foot toward them; then (I hope) the case was altered: then might we have said this Text as Iopæan, with joy, Venerunt, &c. Verse 29. Verse 9.

And this (Io) is our very case, this day. For, why are we here met, but that (as the Text is) a birth there should, this day [the fifth of November, this very Tuesday) have been with us? should have been, but was not: That it was not: This day should have been a Dismal day; that it was not so. A birth was in bearing, and venerunt ad partum (I promise you:) that it was not born, that it was partus non partus, a birthlesse-birth, it is (with us) a day of joy: and as this, a Day; so this, a Text of joy: and thanks be to God, it is so. And we say these very words of Ezekias, not as (here) he did: but, as after he might have, and as we, this day, may speak them, with a chearfull accent, Venerunt ad partum, &c.

There be in the Text, two parties, which makes us two parts: 1 the Children, and 2 the Mother. The Children, in the very first word: The Mother in the last: Pariendi it is here; Parienti it is in 2 Reg. 19. If there be no strength pariendi, it is, because there is none parienti. Of these two, two things are here said: One affirmed: The other denied. And division. II. 2 King. 19. 3.

Affirmed, the children were ready: Denied; the mother, not, non erant. The children not unwilling; for they were come: the mother unable; for, by that time they were come, her ſtrength was gone. The end is left for us to gather: for, if no ſtrength to bear, no birth there will be: No more there was, And, that there was not, it is holy-day with us, to day.

Applying all to our caſe, I am to tell you firſt. 1. Theſe children, who they were: 2. And ſecondly, how near to the birth they came: 3. Thirdly, of the ſtrength to bring them forth, the failing of it, and how it came to fail: Upon theſe, two queſtions: 1 Why they were not ſuffered to come forth? 2 Why they were ſuffered to come ſo far? 4. And laſt of all, of the Tu ergo, or inference upon all this: Which is not that which Hezekiah inferres (the next verſe) Tu ergo leva orationem; But another Ergo, as it were a new birth of ours, Tu ergo leva gratiarum actionem. Yea, yea: That, and leva orationem too: And ſo let us lift up our prayer, and for nothing more, than that we may raiſe a good levie of thanks indeed, to ſend up to GOD that there was no ſtrength to bring forth, when it was ſo near brought.

I.

The Children: 1 Who they were.

THe Children, are the firſt word, and ſo offer themſelves to be begun with. And with them, we muſt begin: For on them all depends (whether the Day ſhall be kept, or the Text uttered, with joy or not. For (indeed) prima facie, it may ſeem to be ſomewhat an unkindly joy, to take pleaſure in the periſhing of Children, when they be come to the birth. Yet ſuch may the children be, that are to come, as it makes no matter. Nay, as we well may wiſh, they may: and well rejoyce, if they do miſcarry there, and come no further.

Gen. 3. 15. To begin, from the beginning. There read we of the Seed of the Woman, and the Seed of the Serpent: we are back at our Text ſtraight. If it be the womans ſeed, ſave it alive in any wiſe, let it come, not only to the birth, but, from the birth, well: and if by any miſchance it do not, ſay the words of the Text, but ſay them with grief, Venerunt, &c. On the other ſide, if it be the ſeed of the Serpent, away with it, let it not come to the birth: if it do, let it not be born, ſtifle it in the womb, and be glad when you have done, and ſay with joy and ſpare not, Venerunt, &c.

Heb. 11. 23. And yet I cannot tell neither, whether we make the Rule ſo generall, as to extend to all the Womans Seed. But, if the children be, as of Moſes it is ſaid, Hebrews 11. ἀστεῖον proper ſweet children: Nay, if they be but according to kind, regular births; when they be come ſo far, it is grief, if they come no further. But, otherwhiles they fall out theſe ſame παρεκβάσεις φύσεως, Naturæ errores, Miſt apen monſtrous births: and then, in that caſe, and for ſuch, it skils not when they be thither come, if farther they come not. Yea, I dare ſay, it will not diſcontent the unhappy parents that begat and bare them, though this Verſe be verified of them, that when they come to the birth, they might not be born, but have the womb for their grave, and no ſtrength to deliver them.

Since then, upon the matter, all is thereafter as the children be, our firſt enquiry is to be, what theſe children were? Where let me tell you this, you ſhall not look for ſuch children as women go with: (the verſe is proverbially, not verbally to be underſtood:) Not of any Womans birth; none there was, at the ſpeaking it. Ezekias meant it of Zennacheribs intent, to ſack Jeruſalem: and we of their attempt or enterpriſe, this day, to have made a maſſacre of us all. Of them that went big with this monſter.

To begin with the ſoul then, of their children. For, there is not only fructus ventris, there is partus mentis: the mind conceives, as well as the womb: the word [conceiving] is like proper, to both. Men have their womb, but it lieth higher, in them; as high as their hearts; and that which is there conceived and bred, is a birth. So, I find, the Holy Ghoſt in the Pſalm calleth it; Behold, Pſalm 7. 14. he travelleth with miſchief, he hath conceived ſorrow and brought forth ungodlineſs. And that is, when an evil man, in the evil womb of his heart, ſhall hatch or conceive ſome devilliſh device, and go with it as big as any woman goes with her child, and be even in pain, till he have brought it.

Mat. 15. 18, 19, This is is the birth here meant: and there in the heart, is the matrix or conceptory place of all miſchief. Thence (ſaith our Saviour) de corde exeunt, From the heart they come all.

Uſually they ſay in Schooles, Conceptus, conceptio; partus, opus: the conceipt is a kind of conception; and the work, a kind of birth: the imagination of the heart is an embrio, conceived within: the work now brought to paſſe, is a child born into the world. Nay, they go further, to more particularities, and carry it along through all the degrees: child-bearing. 1 When a device is intended, then is (ſay they) the child conceived (as it were.) 2 When projected and plotted handſomely; then, the child articulate. 3 When once actuated, and ſet in hand, then it is quick. 4 When ſo far brought, as all is ready; then the child is come to the birth. 5 And when, actum eſt, all is done and diſpatched, the child is born. 6 But, if it fall out otherwiſe, than was looked for, no ſtrength to bring it forth; then have you a dead-born child. 7 And look, with the natural mother what joy

John 16. 21. there is, when there is a man-child born into the world; the ſame for all the world, is there with theſe bad men, when their imaginations proſper. And, what grief the poor woman hath, at the periſhing of the fruit of her body; the like in a manner is there with them, when their powder will take no fire, So have you the ſoul, or ſpiritual part [illegible] with.

Will

Will ye see the body also, in the birth of this day? You may, even ad oculum, have it laid out before you. In imitation of the natural womb, wherein we lay, and whence we come all, there is (by analogie) another artificial, as Art doth frame it: Such I mean, as was the Trojan Horse, of which the Poet — Uterumque armato milite complent, the belly or womb, when it was full of armed men: and so many armed men as there were, so many children, after a sort, might be said to be in it. And, if that: may we not affirm as much of the vault, or cellar, with as good reason? The verse will hold of it too ——— Uterumque nitrato pulvere complent. The uterus or womb of it, crammed as full with barrels of powder, as was the Trojan Horse, with men of armes. This odds only. Every one of these children, every barrel of powder, as much, nay more force in it to do mischief, than twenty of those in the Trojan Horses belly.

The more I think of it, the more points of correspondence do offer themselves to me, of a birth and coming to a birth, and that in every degree. 1 The vessels first give forth themselves, as so many embrio's: 2 The vault, as the womb, wherein they lay so long: 3 They that conceived this device were the mothers, clear: 4 The fathers, were the fathers (as they delight to be called) though, oft, little more than boyes; but here, night-fathers, in that they perswaded, it might be, why not? might be lawfull; nay, meritorious, then: so, it was they, that did animate, gave a soul (as it were) to the treason. 5 The conception was, when the powder, as the seed was conveighed in, 6 The articulation, the couching of them, in order, just as they should stand: 7 The covering of them, with wood and faggots, as the drawing a skin, over them: 8 The Venerunt ad partum, when all was now ready, train and all. 9 The Midwife, he that was found with the match about him, for the purpose: 10 And partus, the birth should have been upon the giving fire. If the fire had come to the powder, the children had come to the birth, inclusivè, had been born. But, Non erant vires (which, I turn) there was no fire given: and so, partus they wanted, as God would.

And, that only wanted: for, all the rest held to an hair. Nothing, that could be in a birth, was wanting: all, to be pointed at, from point to point: that, the Text is fitly enough applyed to it. By this time, ye see the Children, both body and soul. Now, when looks the mother; when reckons she, her time will come?

2 How near the birth.

Will ye now (which is the second point) weigh a little better, what is in these three words, Venerunt ad partum. 1 They were not upon their way, coming; but venerunt, they were even come. 2 And come; not versus, toward; but even, ad, to. 3 Ad, to; not, loca partui vicina, some parts near, or next to it; but, ad partum, to the very birth-place, the neck, or orifice of the matrice. Or, if you will take partum, for the time; not ad tempora partui propinqua, within some few dayes of their reckoning; but, ad partum, to the very time, the day, and within a very little, to the hour it self; it missed not much: (that is) as near, as near might be. If ever there were a venerunt ad partum, and no partus upon it, here it was.

And, if you marvel, it was ad partum, and not ad parturitionem, first: Marvel not at that: why, it would have been a very short travel, that. That of the Prophet (in the sixty sixth Chapter) Antequam parturiat, peperit, would have been fulfilled in it: she should have been delivered, before ever she had fallen in labour. To the birth, they came, then. And you will remember, how far they came, how many degrees they passed, before they got thither. They came, 1 to generation: they came 2 to conception: they came, 3 to articulation, 4 to vivification, 5 to full maturity; and yet, none of all these, our venerunt, here. Passed all, and every one of these, never staid, till they came 6. even ad partum, could come no further, unless they had come forth: which God forbid; and so He will, you shall see. For, thus have we done now, with the first part (the Children.) Chap. 66. 7.

II. The Mothers.

Now to the Mothers part. The Children came to the birth, and: The right and, the kindly Copulative, were, To the birth they came, and born they were; In a kind consequence, who would look for other? It is here, Venerunt, & non: thither they came, and no further; there stopped. Ad, in [ad partum] is but usque ad, exclusivè; that is, to it they came; through it, they came not.

And, why came they not? By meanes (as is here set down) of a non erant. Somewhat there was not, that would have been; somewhat missing: a non erant there was, whatsoever it was.

What non erant was that? It was not, Non erat ingenium (I am sure) Pestilent wit they lacked none; as deep, as dangerous an invention; as ever came into the brain of man. Neither came it thither, or was bred there without the Seed of the Serpent. Nor can it be said, Non erat, that they wanted will; For, so maliciously were they bent in that wretched will of theirs, as they resolved to know neither friend nor foe, but up with all togerher. Nor did they want opportunity, of a place: Got the vault first, and the cellar after. No, nor meanes: had their iron-tooles; had powder enough, and good stowage for it. These they had, all: yet, Non erant (saith the Text;) what Non erant might that be? Non erant vires, they had no strength,

2 Her want of strength.

To a birth, there be two things: 1 The Children must be come thither, to the birth-place. 2 When the children be come thither, there must be strength, at least as much to deliver them. Ad partum, opus est nixu; ad nixum opus est viribus: To a birth, there goes a kind of stresse; to a stresse, there is required some strength. Nixus inanis sine viribus; and nixu inani nihil paritur: To no purpose purpose is the ſtreſſe, if there be no ſtrength, but all in vain: And, if that be in vain, there will no birth be. (No more there was) but the child periſh; and if the mother ſcape, it is well; but (oft) they go both. And ſo fell it out here: the children dead-born, and the Mother dyed for it too. To ſpeak without allegory. To the producing of any effect, two things there go: 1 Counſel, and 2 Strength: not counſel alone: but counſel and ſtrength. For as ſtrength without counſel, will procure but a mola: So counſel, without ſtrength, will prove but an abortement. We ſee daily, many excellent devices come to nought; all, becauſe they be not ſtrongly followed to execution. Strength then, there would be.

And ſtrength they had not. Not ſtrength? yes (ſure) that had they. To follow them, in the allegorie; the mother was ſtrong, elſe would the children never have come ſo far, as they did, to be ſo ripe, and ready for the delivery. And, the children were ſtrong children: ſtrong enough, but with one ſmall ſparke, to have ſent us all up aloft, if we had been twice as many more. To leave the allegory: ſtrength they had enough, to handle the pickaxe, to dig deep into ſtone-walls: ſtrength enough, to lay in great barrels, and thoſe all full, and a great many of them. Strength enough to remove them up and down, as they might ſtand beſt for the purpoſe: and to clap on iron and ſtones, and wood enough, upon them. And how then was there no ſtrength?

You will eaſily mark, Vires is the plural number: and ſo, many ſtrengths there be: and, that he ſaith not [Vires] ſimply, any ſtrength at all; but, vires pariendi, ſtrength to bring forth. Vires, is one thing; vires pariendi, another. Vires, they had; vires veniendi, ad partum; elſe had they never come ſo far; but vires pariendi that, they had not.

For partus is opus (we ſaid:) and nothing was done. All the while, till they came ad partum, their ſtrength ſerved them well. At the inſtant, they ſhould have been brought forth, it failed them: Strength there was, to carry it along, to bring it ſo farre: but not pariendi, to bring it to iſſue.

To bring a thing to iſſue, that, paſſes the devils power. He could give them the counſel (as, no doubt, he did: it was too devilliſh, to grow in any mans head.) But, the ſtrength to iſſue, that lieth not in his hand. Ye may be ſure if it had, they had had that too. He longed, as much as they, to hear the blow, and ſee the ſight. He, that helped them to lay in the powder, would have helped to have put to the fire, had it been in his power. But it was more than they could do: the ſtrength to iſſue is Gods ever, and He took it from them.

Pſalm 68. 20. Domini ſunt exitus: The Iſſues of all attempts are in the hands of GOD, them He reſerves to Himſelf, as His own Peculiar; yea, even of evil attempts. For, howſoever He be not at the beginning of them: at the end, He muſt be, or no end will be: Domini ſunt exitus. The horſe may be prepared to the battel? the lots, caſt in the lap; the Cellar made ready for the powder; and the powder for the cellar: And, when all is done, that the wit or malice of the devil, or man, can do or deviſe, comes GOD and daſhes all in a moment. The Counſel of Achitophel; Hamans high favour; the great Fleet at Ezion-geber; Sennacheribs huge hoſt: defeats them all. For, counſels may be in the heart of man, and words at his tongues end, and acts at his fingers-end: yet nothing ſhall be ſaid or done, unleſſe GOD will ſo have it. He gives or denies ſucceſſe, as Him pleaſes. That when the children are upon the point to be delivered, there ſhall be ſtrength, or no ſtrength to do it, as pleaſes Him. And here, it pleaſed Him not: ſo, no birth there was; but quando filii venerunt, vires abierunt, when the children were come, all the ſtrength was gone.

Prov. 21. 31.
Prov. 16. 33.
2 Sam. 17. 14.
Eſter. 7. 7.
2 Chro. 20. 37.
Verſe 36.

It ſeemes, it was ſomewhat doubted, leſt when it came to the pinch, this ſtrength ſhould fail: therefore was their ſtrength ſought, even the ſtrength of prayers; to leva orationem, they gat them: but, they ſent to the wrong party: Not to Eſay, but to Baalam, to curſe, where GOD did bleſſe; and to bleſſe that curſed birth of theirs, which His very ſoul abhorred. So many Prayers were ſaid, they might have a good heire. They ſay, they were ſo, for Queen Maries child: But, ſhe had no child to come, theſe had. But all in vain: when the time came, for all their Maſſes, and Proceſſions, and Roſaries, and Jeſus's Pſalters, it would not be. No children came, ſtrength there was not.

Numb. 28. 8.

And will you know, how it came to fail them, this ſtrength? Ye may, and never go out of the Text, or the termes of child-bearing. Or ever the birth was fully come, one of the complices fell to be with-child; and no remedy, but he muſt needs be delivered before his time; had not the power to keep his hand from the paper, and ſo diſcloſed it. And, diſcloſe a Treaſon, and the neck of it is broken, the ſtrength of it is gone: as Sampſons ſtrength ſoon was, when the Philiſtims knew once where it lay. And this was the ſtrength, and none but this, that failed them. An eaſie ſtrength (one would think) to hold ones tongue, or to hold the fingers ſtill. That, had he not: but for lack of that muſt needs be ſcribling: and that marr'd the faſhion of the birth quite. His not having the ſtrength, not to bring forth his, made, they had not the ſtrength to bring theirs forth. His putting his hand to the paper, made, there could be no fire put to the powder; made, the mid-wife was intercepted; and ſo, the birth, though near the delivery, yet never delivered.

Judg. 16. 18.

And yet, I cannot tell you neither: for when this work of darkneſſe was brought to light, the light was ſo dim, and the Riddle ſo dark, even then; that for all that bringing to light, the children were coming forward to the birth, ſtill. Till ſtrength was given to deliver us from this birth, by another travel. For, a travel I will call it, the ſtudying, and the bringing forth of the hidden myſterie, of the burning of the paper, the ridling of that Riddle. For, ſo came out, who the children were, were, and of what element they were made, what, and whereabout the womb was, they lay in. So by a birth; and by that birth, we were delivered from this. That birth ſmote all dead. For, it was found, even ſo: and then came proſtratio virium indeed. Then, all ſtrength (indeed) was quite and clean taken from them. That being taken from them, they were not deſivered: and by their not being delivered, we were all delivered.

To the joy now. Divide the Text: Venerunt ad partum, is their joy, Non erant vires is ours. That, theirs, for a time: this, ours for ever. To make their grief the greater, when it came, they were for a while, put in joy. Glad were they (I dare ſay) to ſee it go currant, kept cloſe ſo long. They even itched for joy at it, and fell into a fooliſh paradiſe: provided a Protector and all. Comes me Non ſunt vires, all their joy was at an end, and with that began their ſorrow. We by their grief, ſhall beſt conceive our own joy, taking the whole verſe intirely together. 1 The joy of Non erant vires.

A grief it was, and it went to their hearts, theſe children, that they came not. A double grief, that when they held well ſo long, and were ſo likely to come, yet they came not: had ſtrength all the while, had it not, then. Venerunt ad partum, & venerunt ad partum are much alike. Any wrack is a grief; but no grief to the grief of that wrack, that is made, even in the very havens mouth. To goe the voyage well, and arrive well, and then, before the very port to ſink, and be caſt away! To bring the game to the upſhot, and then to loſe it! It trebled their griefe, that ſo many Ladies Pſalters, and Jeſus Pſalters were ſaid for it; and that neither Jeſus nor our Lady bleſſed the birth no better. And laſt, that the children periſhed; and periſhed not alone, but the mothers went too, and ſome of the fathers, for company. It ſhould have been parientes pepererunt: it was parentes, or parientes, (if you will) perierunt.

Now looke how many wayes they were grieved, and ſaid, alas, for venerunt ad partum. Alas for non erant vires; ſo many wayes do we rejoyce, and ſay, It is well, that venerunt ad partum? Thanks be to God, that Non erant vires. 1. Firſt, for non erant vires, by it ſelfe: that, defeated it was. 2. Then, for Venerunt ad partum, & non erant vires, together: that it proſpered ſo long, and yet defeated it was; this was gaudete with an iterum dico. 3. Then, that without any leva cratiouem on our parts; without any on ours, and againſt ſo great a leavie of theirs, of I know not how many prayers and proceſſions, and all for the proſperous ſucceſs of a buſineſs knowne to none but the Superiors, 4. And, to make it terque quaterque, that we ſaw them come tumbling downe that made full account to have ſeen us flie up.

That we were delivered from a danger ſo neer; brought to ſo narrow a point; we not praying, nor ſo much as once thinking on the matter, but delivered as it were in a dreame: Our ſelves not only delivered from, but they that ſo ſought ours, delivered to their own deſtruction; brought not forth but were themſelves, brought forth to Juda's end, the end of all traitors: and their children, not brought out, but, as ἐκτρώματα, pulled out of the wombe of the cellar, piece and piece, and never ſaw the Sun alive, or the Sun them; pitty it ſhould. Pſal. 126. 1.

Shall I now tell you a reaſon or two, why Non erant vires pariendi? 1 One out of pariendi, 2 the other from Non erant vires. 2 The Reaſons of Non erant vires.

1. This pariendi was indeed perundi; the bringing forth a quantity of powder, the periſhing of a whole Parliament. They were not; but, put caſe they had come forth (it is well, we are in caſe, to put this caſe) certainly, they had been Benoni's, ſons of ſorrow, to this whole land; Ichabod's right, our glory had been gone cleane. For, what a face of a Common-wealth had here been left? Excluſivè they came ad partum: if, incluſivè they had, their incluſivè had been our excluſivè. We had been ſhot off and that out of this life and this world, every one. Venerunt, if they had come ad partum; if they, ad partum, we ad perniciem: Non erant vires: If there had, theſe vires had been virus to us, and their pariendi our periendi. If thoſe children had not been loſt, many fathers had been loſt; many children had loſt their fathers, and many Wives their Husbands. There had been a great birth of Orphanes and Widows, brought forth at once. What manner of birth ſhould this have been, firſt in it ſelfe: then to us? In it ſelfe: we ſaid, for Vipers, there ſhould be no ſtrength, to deliver them. Were not theſe Vipers the wombe, they lay in muſt have been rent, for them to come forth: were they not the brood of Vipers? What talke you of a Viper, that ſometime (it may be) ſtings a child to death: or an elder body, if it be not looked to in time? What are Vipers, to them, that at once, would not have ſtung, but have ſent up, and borne in pieces a King, a Queen, a Prince, and I know not how many of the Nobles, Clergie, Commons; all the Eſtates of a Realme, a whole Country, their owne Country, all at one blaſt? We ſaid, for Monſters, there ſhould be no ſtrength to de deliver them. Theſe were ſuch Monſters, as not in Chriſtendome alone, but, even in Africke (that mother of monſters) the Turkes, and Moores, and all that heard of it, were amazed, that ever the earth ſhould beare ſuch a brood of Miſcreants. For, they ſhould not (as children) have cryed at their birth, but roared as devils; or, as if all the infernall furies had broke out of hell together. Let this ſerve: it was ſo out of meaſure bad, as it was too bad, ever to be brought. What marvel then, if nature ſhrunk in and would give no ſtrength, for ſuch a birth as that. 1 Why they not ſuffered to come forth. Gen. 35. 18. 1 Sam. 4. 21.

2. Shall I tell you another, why non erant vires? I will: it is ſomewhat a ſtrange one, but it is raiſed out of the words of the Text, and it is a birth borne of late, and Chriſtened by the name of a Non erant vires, that you may know, they be a-kin, this and that: And ſo (I hope) it comes not out of ſeaſon, ſince for that childs ſake, this (I hope) fared never a whit the better.

You cannot but remember a clauſe not long ſince printed, and ſo (as it were) a child but lately born, a Cardinals child it is (I mean the Tenet late taken up at Rome:) That, all is now to goe, all Chriſtianity to ſtand or fall, by ſunt, or non ſunt vires.

The

The old Christians never knew of any such birth as this: Id fuit, quia deerant vires, saith the Cardinall. As much to say as, if they now in these dayes, be so as they were, carry themselves quietly, it is quia non sunt vires: and to hold no longer, than donec erunt; and then you are like to heare of them, to have them goe againe with such another birth. (You shall have them as milde as Gregory the first, when they have no strength; but as fierce as Gregory the seventh, when they have.)

Nay, and they would bear the world in hand, this Child may claime kindred of the Fathers: that this was the minde of the blessed Saints, and Martyrs, in the persecutions of the Primitive Church. That, with them, all went by Si adessent vires, and if then they had had strength, never an Emperour should have kept his Crowne upon his head. For, it was neither Allegiance, Conscience, Christian duty, nor respect, that held them in. Id fuit, quia deerant vires: as (if they had not been wanting) full well they should have understood. That they were gentle and meek, gramercie non erant vires; that and nothing else. O write a book for Gods sake, de gloria Martyrum (Turonensis so hath) of the glorious Martyrs that suffered then; but it was because they had no strength: else, the Emperours should have suffered, not they.

But, they mightily wrong the Fathers, to father this opinion on them. Two hundred yeares after Christ, in the midst of the fervor of persecutions, Tertullian tell us another tale; that they had strength then, more than enough; and so, suffered then, upon a better quia, than quia non erant vires. Well nere two hundred yeares after that; the Ecclesiasticall Story sheweth under Julian the Apostata, and under Valens the Arian, they wanted no strength then (the greater part of the Apostates Army being Christians; and the chief Leaders and bravest Companies, under the Arian, being Orthodox.) And two hundred yeares yet after that, against the Lombards, Gregory saith, was then strength enough, to have left them neither King nor Duke, if all had gone by vires, then. But, he (good man) might not miscere se, meddle with ought that might be the death, cujusquam, of any one man. And these would have been the death of I know not how many, but that Non erant vires. No such children then, as those, this day brought forth. It is not the Divinity of the old Christians, but of the new Iesuits, this: They must take the child to themselves; It is no babe of the Fathers, it is a brat of their own breed; hatched in these dayes of ours, never heard of before. And such an one it is, as if it be let go, we shall have a generation of monsters come of it soon.

He began with vires: Another since him saith, if ye have not vires, virus will serve as well. And since, that another; if vires, and virus faile too, go to it with fire-work; Pulvis Serpentis which is worse than virus Serpentis; Serpentine poder worse than Serpentine poyson. Poyson kills one by one; powder, with one puffe, dispatcheth all. For poyson, ye may have a counter-poyson: No antidote for powder, if it once take fire. Poyson gives men leave yet, to die with some leasure: Powder, that it doth, it doth at once in a moment.

To the utter confusion of this error, that all is to goe by sunt vires, was it, that non erant vires, this Day. And do but mark it, that God payes them with their own mony. They put all upon this very point; in this point, God this day foiled them. They go all by strength; and that strength, then failed them. All, upon Si essent vires: God took order quod non essent vires. And God never let them have strength, that so resolve to put it; that, can they once gather strength, no King, no State shall stand before them; but blow them up, sinke them; poyson them one way or other, away with them all.

You see the reason, with GOD: but, see you not withall, next under GOD, where we are to ascribe our safety? Even to non erant vires. There is a point hangs by that. For, while that lasts, while ye keep them there, ye shall have the Primitive Church of them; have them lie as quiet, as still, as ever did the barrels in the vault, till vires (like fire) come to them: and then, off goe they: then, nothing but depose Kings, dispose of kingdomes, assoile subjects, arme them against their Soveraigns: then, do they care not what. But, if the powder take not fire, then shall you straight have books tending to mitigation; then, all quiet againe. Certainly, thus standing, it were best to hold them in defectu virium, to provide ut ne sint; to keep them at non sunt vires, till time they be better minded in this point, and we have good assurance of it. For, minded as they are, they want no will, no virus: they tell us what the matter is; strength they want, they write it, they print it; and *si ad desse*nt vires, they would act it in earnest.

2. Why they were suffered to come so farre? 1 Reason on Gods part.

But yet, why was it suffered to come so farre? Why not taken sooner? Evill (we all know) is best nipped in the bud; best (ever) destroyed in the Spawne. Being then so evill, as it was, why was it let goe all the while?

I will give you two reasons: 1 One on Gods part, 2 The other on ours. 1. On Gods part: I know not how, but ye shall observe that he loves, that He takes delight thus to do: It is His play with Leviathan. To suffer his Whelps and him to have their course for a time, and for a long time; and then suddenly give them a twitch, and down they come. Let them goe even till they come to the birth, and then come in the neck of them with a non sunt vires, and all is marr'd.

Here in the text, how many Countries wan Senacherib? How neer was he let come to Ierusalem, even to Libna, within lesse than a dozen miles? Newes came suddenly, of the Blackmoors invading his Country, back he goes, had not the power to stirre on foot farther. How far was the invincible Navie suffered to come sailing in LXXXVIII. to cast anchor, even before the Thames mouth, every houre ready to deliver her children a shore. In an instant, a fatale faintnesse fell upon them; their ſtrength and courage taken from them; about they turned, like a wheel: fled, and had not the power to look behind them. But, non erant vires pariendi, we all know. God loves thus to do: and then do it, cum venerunt ad partum. His glory is the greater, He can let it come ſo nigh, and then put it by; let it alone till then, and then do it.

2. There is another on our parts. For, eaſie account, and but eaſie, would have been made, if they had been taken at firſt: no greater matter, that. That we might make no eaſie account, we ſcaped not eaſily, but hard and ſcant: ſo, to make our eſcape the ſtranger, and our joy the more, that it went ſo far, and came ſo near, and yet miſſed us.

Of it ſelf, it is beſt, Ut malum ubi primum contingit, ibi moriatur, Evil be cruſhed at firſt, the Serpents head troden, at his firſt peeping in or putting it out. But God doth not alwayes that, which in it ſelf, is beſt to do: but that, which will beſt affect us, and we take in beſt part. And ſo did He this: thereby to beget in us, and bring forth of us, a new birth of praiſe and thanks according. 2 On our parts.

For, now we have done with this degenerate birth of theirs, we are to ſtay a little, and ſee if we can get another, a more kindly birth, come from our ſelves. For barren we may not be: this delivery from theirs, is to make us delivered of another; we to bring forth ſomewhat, for their not bringing forth. 4 The inference.

What is that? The Text will lead us to it, if we look but over the next verſe. For there, when any evil travel threatens us, we find by Ezechia, the kindly Birth then, on our parts, is Tu ergo leva orationem, a levie of prayers. Now, that being turned away, and turned away in a manner ſo miraculous, the natural kind iſſue then, is another Tu ergo, Tu ergo leva gratiarum actionem, a new levie of thanks: a new leva, quia levatus, for His eaſing of us, of ſo heavy a chance, like to light ſo heavy on us. Verſe.

At the preſent (ſure) while it was freſh, we were raviſhed with it; for the time, we ſeemed to be even with child, as if we would bring forth ſomewhat: and ſomewhat we did bring forth, even an Act, that we would from year to year, as upon this Day, bring forth and be delivered of thanks and praiſe, for this delivery for ever. And here we are now, to Act that, we then enacted: even to travel with this new birth. God ſend us ſtrength, well to be delivered of it.

For, ſo ſhall we double our joy; 1 One joy, for the turning away of that miſcreant birth, of theirs; 2 another, for the welcoming this of our own,

This birth, we now travel with, is a good and a bleſſed birth. Bleſſing, and glory, and praiſe, and thanks, are in bonis all; all, good in us (if any thing be good in us:) the beſt fruits of our nature, when it is at the very beſt. And if they be brought forth, it is as it ſhould be, and as God would have it.

But if (which God forbid) they ſhould either not come, or when they be come, our ſtrength fail, and they not brought forth, then are we at an after-deal again; then would not this day be ſo joyfull for the miſ-going of the other, as ſorrowfull for the abortion of this. Our joy (at leaſt) not ſo entire, but mixt with ſorrow: for, there is ſorrow even to Death, if we go with ſo good a fruit, and it come to the birth, and there periſh; if we ſhall but make an Act, and do no Act upon it.

We ſeem to ſorrow at nothing more, than that many a good purpoſe there is, and many a vow made in time of need, ſickneſſe, or adverſity (ſo many, as it is by Divines held, There be moe good purpoſes, and that by odds, in hell, than there be in heaven) but, abortive purpoſes, and vowes, all. For, O that we were but the one half of that we then promiſe to be, when we want and would have ſomewhat! O then, how thankfull we would be! how never forget! how faſt the Children come to the birth, then! And when we have what we would, our vigor quailes preſently, our ſtrength is gone from us, & non ſunt vires pariendi. For, all the World ſeeth, nothing we bring forth. Alaſs, how many aborcements are there daily of theſe Children! No where may this Verſe be taken up: No where ſo oft, ſo fitly applyed: No where ſo uſed upon better cauſe than this, upon the failing of good deſires and intents.

That this we may do, to take us to leva orationem: let this be our laſt. To lift up our prayer firſt, againſt ſuch unnatural births as that was, the Prophet Hoſees prayer. Give them, ô Lord, what wilt thou give them? a barren womb and dry breaſts. There was no ſtrength for that birth of theirs: It was well, there was not: Thanks be to God, there was not: Thanks be to God, for non erant vires. And, Ne ſint vires (ſay I) Never let there be ſtrength, for any like this birth; Never ſtrength, but weak hands, and feeble knees, for any ſuch enterpriſe. Ne vires pariendi: Nay, Ne veniat ad partum; not neither, not ſo far: Nay, ne ad conceptionem; Nay then, Ne ad generationem, if it may be. If it may not, but they ſcape thither, to the birth; then, lift up your laſt prayer: and let this be it, and let it come up to Heaven, into God's preſence, and enter in even to His eares, for the equity of it; in all ſuch deſignes, that pariens may be ſine viribus, and partus, ſine vita; the mothers, no ſtrength; and the children, no life; But child and mother, periſh both, as this day, they did. And, better ſo, they periſh, than ſuch a number, than a whole Country periſh, by their meanes. This, a Ne veniant, and a Ne ſint vires, againſt theirs. Hoſ. 9. 14.

But, for ours, for our praiſe and thanks, Veniant, Let them come; and Sint, ô ſint vires, and let there be ſtrength, when they come; for ſuch, for ſo good a birth. Ever be their ſtrength, to kindneſſe, to thankfulneſſe, to the accompliſhment thereof, whereto we are in duty ſo deeply bound.

Strength (ever) to all honeſt and good reſolutions. Pity, but they would be ſo; Pity, there ſhould want ſtrength for them. Well may they be conceived; come well to the birth; when they be come thither, vigor enough, to deliver them: and never, when they be come ſo far, to miſcarry.

We may take our light from that. It is venerunt filii: and filii is the plural number. So, more than one, many there would be. And filii falls well with the word gratia, which lacks the ſingular. No ſuch phraſe, as Agere gratiam. A ſingle thank was never heard of. And both falls well likewiſe, to quit the birth, we were quit of: For, the barrels were many and full, and ſo would our thanks be.

Again, they would be filii; that is, ſuch as children be; and children be fleſh, blood and bone; I mean, ſome real, ſome ſubſtantial thanks. Not to travel (as it were) with wind, with a few words only, which are but aer, and into the aer they vaniſh again. Partus opus (ye remember) we ſaid before: ſome work there would be, Actio gratiarum, ſomewhat actually done; leave ſome reality behind it, as in a Child there is.

Thus far, like: but then, a difference. Come it would, not as it did their ad partum excluſivè, thither and no farther: but, incluſivè, to the birth, and from the birth, have the bleſſing of the Womb and of the breaſts; of the womb, to bring it forth; of the breaſts, to bring it up, till it proved ſomewhat worth the while.

That ſo we may rejoyce as much in the affirmative of this birth of ours, Venerunt & ſunt vires; as we did in the negative of that of theirs, venerunt & non erant vires. So doing, GOD ſhall again and again turn away thoſe births, if any be in breeding; take away all ſtrength from them being bred, as to Day, He did: And give us new occaſions daily to bring Him forth praiſe and thanks, for His daily continued mercies, in delivering our King, our Land, Us, and Ours all.

WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDCXVII.

LUKE CHAP. I. VER: LXXIV. LXXV.

The VII. and VIII. Verses of Benedictus.

Ut, sine timore, de manu inimicorum nostrorum liberati, serviamns Illi,
In sanctitate, & justitia coram Ipso, omnibus diebus nostris.

That we, being delivered from the hands of our enemies, might serve him without fear,
In holinesse, and righteousnesse, before Him, all the dayes of our life.

THE children were come to the Birth, and there was no strength to deliver them. (There we left, last.) Their not being delivered, was the cause of our being delivered. (And now I go on.)

Esay 37: 3. The Text the year before.

And our being delivered was to this end, That, we being delivered, from the hands of our enemies, might serve Him, &c. For I demand: Delivered we were (as this Day) why was it? Was it that we might stand, and cry out of the foulnesse of the fact? Or stand, and inveigh, against those monsters that were the actors in it? Was it, that we might blesse our selves for so fair an escape? Or bestow a piece of an Holy-day on GOD, for it? And all these we may do. And all these we have done: and upon good ground, all. Yet none of these the very Ut; nor we delivered, that we might do these. But when all is said, that can be said; hither we must come: to this Ut here, and pitch upon it: for, this is indeed, the Ut finalis; the right, the true, the proper That: That, for our deliverance, we bethink our selves, how to do Him service.

The end (or ut) of this dayes deliverance.

Take the whole Tract along, from the first word, Benedictus: There is visited and redeemed in the first verse: A horn, or a mighty salvation, in the next: After, we saved from them that did hate us: But you shall see, that all these suspend still, no perfect period, till you come to this. But at this, there is: visited, redeemed, saved, mightily saved: why all? For no other end, but that being so visited, redeemed and saved, we might wholly addict, and give over our selves, to the service of Him, who was Author of them all.

Our delivery from the grand delivery by Christ.

I wot well, that principally and properly, the whole song referreth to the deliverance of deliverances, our final deliverance, from our ghostly enemies, and from their fire (the fire of hell) by our blessed Saviour; which was so great, as it was able to open the mouth, and loose the tongue of a dumb man, and make him break forth into a Benedictus.

But, inasmuch as in every kind, the chief giveth the Rule (or, as we say here) the Ut, to all that are from, and under it: And that, ours and all other deliverances, that have been, or shall be, are from or under that of His: Our enemies, set on by those enemies; Ours lighted their match, at their fire (the fire of hell) and so do all others, whatsoever: therefore it is, that this Text aptly may be, and usually hath been ever applyed to any deliverance, from any enemies whatsoever: those of LXXXVIII. these of this Day: the same Ut, in all: as coming, all from the same principium à quo: and tending all, to the same finis ad quem, that here is set down.

The same Ut.

The same cause from whence, Verse 5. Verse 11. Mercy.

For the principium à quo; we have formerly endeavoured, to set that straight, from whence our deliverance came: Even from the goodnesse of GOD; yet not expressed under that term, goodnesse, but under the term of mercy, as elsewhere. As here (but a verse before) To perform the mercy. And a little after, Through the tender mercies of our God.

Which term is made choice of, for two causes; One, it includes misery: The other, it excludes merit: and so, fittest for our turn.

1. Goodnesse may be performed to one, though in good case: Not mercy, but to such only, as are in misery. In misericordia there is misery, ever. And this, to put us in mind of our case, the extream misery we had come to, but for His merciful deliverance.

Lam. 3. 22. The Text An. 1612. Psalm. 145. 9. The Text, An. 1815.

2. Again, Goodnesse may be shewed to such as may seem some way to deserve it: So cannot Mercy. For, but where merit is wanting, mercy is not pleaded properly. These set us right, in the principium à quo, that we ascribe it not to a wrong cause. Out of Jeremy: It was the mercy of the Lord, that we were not consumed. Out of the Psalm: That mercy of His, that is over all his workes.

The same end whereto.

And now to the finis ad quem. For, we are as easily, and no lesse dangerously mistaken in that. By mercies meanes, without all merit of ours, we were not consumed, but delivered from so great a misery, so near us: Why were we so? Were we liberati, to become Libertines, to set us down, and to eat, and to drink healths, and rise up, and see a play? was there no Ut in it? Yes: what was that? Ut serviamus illi.

The summe or Substance of the Text. Contractus innominatus. Verse 5.

So, there growes an obligation out of it. For, Ut, is a conditional, and implyes ever a kind of contract, at least, that which is not named, but is much used. Do ut des, facio ut facias. So that, the Text is of the nature of a Bond, or Covenant. And I give it not that denomination, of mine own head: I find it so called, in expresse terms, but a verse before, To remember His holy Covenant.

The Division.

A Covenant then, names it. And a Covenant divides it: For, a Covenant is ever between two, the two here, GOD and us.

I.

The Covenant on GOD's part, is at the fourth verse; That we should be saved from our enemies. Which Covenant is here pleaded, as performed by Him, under liberati.

II.

The Covenant on our parts, rests; That, then, we should serve Him for it, His part is kept, liberati shewes that: Then may we put in suit, for ours, that is, for serviamus.

GOD'S part, The Covenant.

On GOD's part, I set forth these.

1. That we were delivered. 2. That, from our enemies. 3. That, from the hands of our enemies. 4. That, without fear (for so it stands in the verse) Ut sine timore liberati, that, without fear being delivered. So it may be taken; and so it is taken, by sundry of the Fathers.

Our part. The condition. The Matter. The Manner. 1 2 3

On ours, I reckon these. Our Service: The matter: and the manner of it. The matter wherein: Serve Him in holinesse, Serve Him in righteousnesse: not holinesse, or righteousnesse alone, but to serve Him, in both.

The manner how (often, no lesse acceptable than the service it self.) 1. Ut sine timore; that our service be freely and cheerfully done (now we are out of fear.) 2. Ut Coram ipso, That unfeignedly, as before Him, not before men (before whom we may and do often halt.) 3. And for the time of it, Ut omnibus diebus, that we faint not, or give over, but continue in it all our life long. Three qualities of ours, and indeed, of every true and faithfull service. That these be done: And that they may be done; And that, that which shall be spoken may tend to this, that they may be done, &c.

Ut

UT liberati. That we being delivered. To shew the great equity on Gods part of the Covenant, we say first: that we were to serve Him, though liberati were left out: being, or not being delivered. This to be our first point. I. The Equity of Gods Covenant.

The Noble Army of Martyrs, it was all their case, they served out their service, without any Ut liberati, any bond of temporal deliverance. Far from any liberati, were they three, that were upon casting into the fire, and even then said: Our GOD, whom we serve, He can deliver us out of thy hands, and from the fiery fornace. But, if He will not (not deliver us) Be it known unto thee, O King, we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image, which thou hast set up. That is, serve Him we will, whether He deliver us or no. Will ye hear an Heroical spirit, indeed? Not, Etsi me non liberarit, Though He should not deliver me; but, Etsi me occiderit, yea, Though he should kill me, to die for it, I will do my duty, and serve Him, though. It is Job. These stood not upon liberati: but, deliverance, no deliverance, come of it what would, they were at a point, would and were resolved to serve Him. And (κατὰ ἀσθένειαν, ad erubescentiam nostram dico, I speak it not to our commendation) if there were in us, any remnant of their generous spirit, God should not need to come in Indentures with us. It savours somewhat of a mercenary, that, Serviamus should hold, and let liberati go, whether it would: And we live and die, His servants, though He had not, or should not deliver us. This is Ut, without liberati. 1 Ut, without liberati. Dan. 3. 17. Verse 18. Job 13. 15. 1 Cor. 6. 5.

But then, Ut, with liberati. If GOD take us, as He findes us, and say with the Apostle; Parco autem vobis, Go to, I bear with you; and κατὰ συγγνώμην, by way of indulgence, condescend to condition with us, if He come to Ut liberati; shall not that hold us: Our duty being absolute, depending upon no Ut; if upon special favour, GOD will come in bonds, and let it run into this tenour, That being delivered we shall serve Him; else not: shall we not then do it? This being done, I marvel what we can alleadge, to decline our duty; unlesse we mean, it should be fast with GOD, and loose with us; He bound to do all for us: and we free, to do nothing for Him. 2 Ut, with liberati. 1 Cor. 7. 18, 6.

And yet a third (to magnifie His mercy, yet more, and to tye us the harder to our Covenant) Ut, is not only with liberati, but with liberati, first: GOD is bound, and first bound, to do for us, before we do ought for Him. It is not, That we should serve Him, first, and then He deliver us, after: But, that He should first deliver us, and after, when we are delivered, then, and not before, we should do our service. It is not liberandi, shall be, or may be, hereafter: It is liberati, are already. So we are afore-hand with him. He hath done His, before we begin ours. Liberati, you see, precedes serviamus: liberati, the tense past; serviamus, but the present (and I would it were the present) I doubt, for a great part it is yet to come. 3 Ut, with liberati, first, before serviamus.

And the reason, why He will have it so to precede; is, He would have our service grow out of His favours, our duty, out of His bounty. That is the right, and (indeed) the Evangelical service. If He have us at the advantage, on the hip (as we say) it is no great matter, then, to get service at our hands. None more servile than we, then. But that, is the Legal, for fear. And that sometimes He hath, but likes it not; He would have it, out of love, out of the sense of His goodnesse, have our hearts broken; with that. That, is the only acceptable service to Him, that growes out of that Root. The serviamus that growes out of liberati; delivered and serve: first delivered, and then serve. This for the equity of the Covenant on Gods part.

Now come I to plead, that on Gods part this Covenant was performed, that liberati we were. Heaven and earth would rise against us, and condemn us, if we should not confesse liberati this day. Heaven saw it, and was astonished: And it is gone over all the Earth, the fame of it. But that, we do. The keeping of this Day, the meeting of this Assembly, are both to acknowledge and professe, that a liberati there hath been. B. The performance of Gods Covenant.

Nay, not one alone: Two there have been: and two such, as our eyes have seen, but our eares have not heard, neither could our Fathers tell us, of the like. Two such, as no Age ever saw, nor can be found in any Story; That of LXXXVIII. This of DCV. (both within the compasse of seventeen yeares.) One by strand, the other by land (as they say.) From a Fleet by Sea, from a Vault by land, de abyssis terræ (as saith the Psalm) as well, as de abyssis maris: a Summer, and a Winter deliverance: either of them, like this of Zacharie's, able to bring Benedictus from a dumb man. 1 a That delivered. b Twice delivered. Psalm 71. 20. Psalm 71. 18.

So, delivered we were. But, a delivery is a thing at large: though it be, but from a mischance, from some heavy accident, it is a delivery. But, if it be from our enemies, it is so much the more: As, in that, there is nothing but casualty: in these, there is rancour and malice, they hate us: So this the greater danger by far. 2 From our enemies.

And there is much in the enemies: Of them, some reach but at our states, lands or livelihoods: Other some, nothing will satisfie, but our lives. Every enemy is not mortal, where he is, the danger is deadly. Ours were such, sought to bring utter destruction on us: and not on us alone, but on ours: not on us and ours only, but on the whole land in general. Mortal enemies.

Again, of such as be deadly, some are roaring enemies (the Psalm so calls them) such as threaten and Secret enemies. Psalm 74. 4.

and proclaim their enmity, like those in LXXXVIII. Others lurk, like Vipers, that sting to death, without any hissing at all; as were ours (this day) which are the more dangerous a great deal.

More than liberati (which is) set free.

This made it (indeed) to be more than liberati (ours.) Liberati, is properly set free, and freeing is but from Servitude. This was more. Our death was sought, and we delivered from death, and that a fearfull death, unprepared, suddenly, in a moment, to be shattered to pieces. And yet it was liberati too, in the proper sense: for upon the matter, it was from both. The Prophets division would have taken place in it; Qui ad mortem, ad mortem; qui ad servitutem, ad servitutem. They, that had been blown up, to death; they, that had been left, to Servitude (to a State more miserable, than death it self.) So, in one liberati, we had two. Both from that of Haman's lots, which were, to death (one that was פור in Hebrew, this was κλῆρος in Greek:) and from that of Babylon; Besides, which was thraldome and confusion. Thus were we delivered from our enemies.

Yet liberati too.

Jer. 43. 11.

Esther 3. 7. 9.

3 The hands of our enemies, not our enemies.

But from the hands of our enemies, is more, than from our enemies. For let the malice of an enemy be what it will, if his hands be weak, or short, or we far enough from them: the matter is so much the lesse. But if we come within his reach, if he get us within his hands, then God have mercy on us.

Specially, if there be in his hands, a knife thus engraven, To cut the throats of the English Hereticks: as in LXXXVIII. divers so engraven in Spanish, were brought from the Fleet, and shewed. Or if there be in his hands, a match, ready to give fire, to XXX. barrels of powder (not so few.) If the hands be such: that is then a delivery, not from our enemies only, but from their hands: or (as we say) from their very clutches. Ye will mark, that thorow all the Psalmes, ever the part is still enforced: Not from the Lions, but from the Lions pawes: from the hornes of the Unicornes, from the teeth of the Dog: So here, from the hands, from the bloody hands of our enemies.

Psalm 22. 14, 125, 9.

4 From their hands, not out of them.

Further I say, it is more, to be delivered from their hands, than out of them. For if (out) then (in) first. They must first be in the hands, that are delivered out of them. But from them, that may be from coming in them at all. The better deliverance of the twain. And that was ours: And that was CHRIST's: He is said, to have loosed the sorrowes of Hell, Non quibus nexus est, sed ne necteretur, saith Augustine. Not, wherewith He was bound: but that he might not be at all bound with them. So we, not by taking us out, but keeping us from, from their hands, from the hands of our enemies.

In Act. 2. 24.

Eruti, the Manner of it. Eruti.

Let me yet stay a little. For (methinks) we may find in this word, not only our deliverance, but even the very manner, and the meanes of it. Not in liberati, the Latine: but, in S. Lukes own words: pudentes that will come home to both.

From a dark hole.

Pudentes that is, properly eruti. Eruti, that fits us, for the manner, two wayes:

Psalm 17. 13.

Eruere, is de tenebris in lucem educere. Out of some dark deep hole (as it might be the Cellar) to bring forth something to light (as it might be those same vasa mortis, vessels there couched, and destined to the blowing us all up.) It must be some dark vault or pit, Unde, from whence: well therefore said of us eruti, that were delivered from a pit-danger, a danger under ground, in abyssis terræ, in the deep of the earth.

From a ruine or fall.

Secondly, eruere; the compound is, from ruere (the simple) that is, from a ruine. Not as if he should have fallen into the pit, but that, there was there bestowed within it, that which would have sent us up, that down we should have come, have fallen down, all to pieces. Ruina it would have been, and therefore eruti, right. And they talk of helping incendium ruina: Here, there had been incendium and ruina both, and neither helped other, but both been past all help.

With the ruine of our enemies.

Delivered from a ruine; But eruere is then in kind, when we are so delivered from a ruine, as with their ruine, that sought ours. So it was, we parted not of even hands, we from them, and they from us, neither of both a fall. No: we fell not (no fall with us:) they fell, and had a foul fall. We were so delivered from their hands, as they delivered into ours. We eruti: they ruti and casi both, fell and were slain. The pit they digged, they fell into themselves: In the snare they laid, was their own foot taken. The highest deliverance of all (so much made of in the Psalmes.)

Psalm 20. 8.

Psalm 9. 15.

Implied in cornu salutis. Verse 2. Deut. 33. 17.

And thus much was before implyed, when it was called Cornu salutis, a Horn of salvation. The salvation that so comes, comes ever with the perdition of the adverse partie. So is the Horn expounded in Deut. XXXIII. With these shalt thou strike thine enemies and push them, as any wild beast. Ventilare is the word; Tosse them up into the wind, upon the top of their hornes, till they have gored them, and brought them to their end. Such was our Horn of Salvation, or (as we turn it) a mighty salvation. God shewing His might no lesse against them, than for us: visited and redeemed us mightily, in His mercy; visited and ruined them as mightily, in His wrath.

Delivered. The meanes of it. By a King. Dan. 7. 24. Rev. 17. 12. Eruendo. By picking out. Prov. 16. 10.

And again, in this, not only the manner, how, but the meanes whereby. For, He hath raised up a horn of salvation. Now to raise up, must needs be interpreted of a person, the meanes of the delivery. Who was that? In Daniel, and the Revelation, I find it totidem verbis, Decem Cornua, decem Reges sunt: Alluding therein, as to their great power, so somewhat to the anointing thence poured on their heads: that it should be salus Regia, and per Regem. A delivery wrought by a King: the King of heaven to work it, mediante Rege terreno. In cujus labiis divinatio, if ever it were in any's, who did thereby eruere that, out of the dark phrase, by which we all were eruti. And so, not the manner alone, but the meanes in it, too, that we were eruendo, eruti.

5 That delivered without fear.

And last, that all this was sine timore, For in the Verse so it stands: first, ut sine timore liberati. And stands so first, that we might take special notice, and note of it. And though divers Writers draw (sine tempore) to serviamus, as if there were an hyperbaton, to serve Him without fear; Yet what should let us, so to take it, as it stands? Specially since divers of the Ancients take

it

It ſo: (I name Origen, Victor Briterenſis, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, and Theophylact.) But we may well reconcile them both, if we ſay (which truly we may ſay) That; without fear we were delivered, to ſerve Him in a ſtate without (or void of) fear.

It is a great favour, when we are delivered; to be delivered, abſque hoc, that we be at all put in any fear. Some, are ſometimes ſaved from their enemies, but it is, with ſome fright firſt. It was the Iewes caſe, when from Haman: It was ours, in Anno LXXXVIII. Eſter. 4.13.

They that are ſo, it cannot be denied, but delivered they are, but not ſine timore liberati, not delivered without fear. This was without fear. Our caſe, juſt. We had no ſenſe, and ſo, no fear at all, of the danger, till it was paſt. I cannot better expreſſe it, than in Theodorets own words. Sed ſi ſic dicendum eſt (ſaith he) virtus non ſentientes tulit, non de periculo tranſtulit in ſecuritatem. If it may ſo be ſaid, without any ſenſe or feeling at all, did he tranſlate us, from the depth of danger, into the ſtate of ſecurity. In which point, ours did come near to the great delivery of the world, by CHRIST, what time the world little thought, either of their own peril, or of His paines and paſſion, that delivered it. Yet, in this, ours had more than was in CHRIST's own delivery; That there, though it were without fear, yet not without ſomewhat as evil, as fear. For, CHRIST's was wrought by his innocent death (a matter of ſorrow, and grief.) But in ours there was none, neither fear nor grief, nor any other unpleaſant paſſion. No innocent ſuffered here; none but they, that had their heads in the contriving, or their hands in the digging about it. Without fear it was, without any thing elſe, that might taint our delivery, with the leaſt matter of grievance. b Without fear or any other paſſion.

So then, 1 delivered we were. 2 And not from the caſualty of any miſchance, but from the malice of enemies. Enemies, and thoſe 3 capital; And thoſe 4 cloſe hidden enemies: From them; yea, 5 from their very hands: And 6 From their hands, not out of them. And our delivery was cruti, 7 from ſomething in abyſſis terræ; And 8 from a rume too: 9 And that, with their ruine, that ſought ours. 10 Our ſalvation, Cornu ſaluis, a Royal deliverance: 11 And yet cruendo it was. 12 And all abſque timore. 13 Or Abſque any thing elſe that might blemiſh our joy with matter of ſorrow in the leaſt degree. The recapitulation of all the former.

And this for GOD's part, who hath remembred His holy Covenant (I truſt) and performed it in every clauſe; nay, in every word, to us, to the uttermoſt.

II.

Now, to our part (which we may be put in ſuit for.) Liberati then, is clear. But how? abſolutely? at large? abſque aliquo inde? No condition annexed? No Ut? Yes: take the Ut with you. Liberati, Ut. Delivered that we ſhould; Should do ſomewhat: for, naturaliter obligamur ad dantem. This Ut is natural: there groweth a natural obligation between him that doth, and them that receive a good turn: (And a deliverance, ſpecially ſuch an one is a good turn.) The fields we till, the trees we plant, ſhew it. They return their fruit to them, that beſtow labour, or coſt upon them: That (I know not how) but ſo it falls out, in matter of benefits, we be not ſo ſoon looſed, but we be tied again: Nor eaſed, but loaden afreſh: not freed, but bound anew. It is the Law, the bond of nature: this, Liberati Ut. Our Covenant or Condition. Delivered, That we ſhould.

And that Ut, is Ut ſerviamus. And this particular, Ut, groweth out of the Law of Nations. There the Law is, ut victus ſit in poteſtate victoris, the conquered, ever, in the power of the Conquerer, to take his life, or to ſave it, at his pleaſure. But, if he will ſave it, then comes the voluntary Ut, or Covenant. He that hath his life ſaved, to vow to beſtow it, in his ſervice, that did ſave it. Servi (the very name) came of ſervati. They that ſhould have died, and were ſaved, did willingly covenant, ſerva & ſerviam, to ſerve him, by whom their lives were preſerved. This being the Law of Nature and Nations, why ſhould not the GOD of Nature, the King of Nations be allowed it? that if our lives have been by Him ſaved; we ſhould, from thenceforth, come to this Ut, ut ſerviamus Illi. Should ſerve Him.

Well, well, it is paſt now; if it were to come; It is, that we being delivered; if it were, that we being to be delivered, we would tell another tale: we would be glad and fain ſo to covenant, O deliver us (then) but for this once, and we would ſerve Him (that we would) and be holy and righteous, and what He would beſides. Put any Ut, to liberati, then. We would then ſeek it of Him, that now is offered by Him, to be delivered; if being ſo delivered, we will covenant, but to do that, which we were bound to do, delivered or no. c We would have covenanted to ſerve Him.

And, why ſhould we think much of this ſerviamus? All the world knowes, if the plot had gone on, and the powder gone off; the whole land ſhould not have ſcaped ut ſerviamus: But ſhould have ſerved duram ſervitutem, been not in ſervice, but in ſervitude. Their ſervitude, is changed into this ſervice. A bleſſed exchange for us, Great odds between thoſe two: Nay, no compariſon at all, between Gods ſervice, and their ſervitude; their bondage, thraldome, ſlavery, tyranny, I cannot heap too many names. Gods ſervice is freedom in reſpect of that: Nay, without any reſpect at all, His ſervice is perfect freedom: we ſay it, we pray it, every day. We ſhould have ſerved, if not delivered. And ſerved a worſe. For the ſervice ſerviamus.

And if no compariſon, in Serviamus; None, in Illi (I am ſure.) Nay, if there were any thing to miſlike in ſerviamus, amends is made for it, in Illi. For, the ſervice is much thereafter, as the Illi; the party is, whom we ſerve. Dignitate Domini honorata ſit conditio ſervi. He may be ſo great a State (we ſerve) as, it is an honour to ſerve Him. Now how great a Lord, the Lord of Lords is, what ſhall I need to tell you? There is no end of his greatneſſe. How great, and how good wit hall, res ipſa loquitur: that appeares, by our delivery, in part; and more ſhall, by For the party, Illi. For His greatneſſe.

by His eternall reward laid up, for them that serve Him. There is in all the world, no more honourable, nor beneficiall Service, than, this serviamus Illi.

If we serve not Him, some other we must, and worse. Rom. 6. 18, 20. Those worse be His enemies.

But say, we have no mind to serve Him, if we serve not Him, yet serve we must, and serve we will, if not Him, some other. It is the condition of our life, one or other serve we doe. We must hold of some Lord: if free from one, another we serve: And who is that other; when we are free from GOD, from righteousnes, we serve sin and Satan (a worse service, I dare say:) better then, be free from them, and serve God in righteousnes.

But, if we not serve Him; I aske, what will we do then? will we serve His enemies? For so are these. We were not delivered from our enemies, to serve His enemies (I am sure) That were a foule shame for us: that were against all reason. But, if we serve not Him, we serve them. Resolve then to serve Him, that hath saved us: Not, His enemies, in a prophane and unrighteous: but Him, in an holy and righteous course of life. And so, am I now come to that, wherein our service lieth.

The Matter of our service, Wherein.

In holines and righteousnes. In which two, in a sort, are recapitulate the two Tables of the Law; Holy to GOD, Righteous to men. Quod quis reverenter se habeat ad divina: Quod quis laudabiliter cum hominibus conversetur (saith Chrysostome) Reverently to performe holy duties: Laudably to have our conversation among men.

Holinesse and Righteousnesse Both. Matth. 23. 5.

Both these (first: not either of them. To spend our service but in one, is but to serve Him by halfes: in both, then, to serve Him. Neither in an unrighteous holines; nor, in an holy kind of unrighteousnes. Neither with the Pharisee, to have all our holines in our Phylacteries and fringes, and frequenting the Lectures of the Law (no matter how we live:) Nor with the Sadducee, live indifferent honestly, but neither believe spirit, nor look for resurrection: be Christians, like Agrippa in modico, a little Religion upon a knifes point, will serve us. Neither in holines then only, nor in righteousnes only, but in both.

Acts 23. 8. Acts 26. 18. Holinesse first.

In both, but in order though, as they stand; And holines stands first. So, to reckon of that as our prime service. For, if there had not been some meaning in it, it is sure, righteousnes might have served for both: Religion, holines, all vertues are συλλαβδὼν, in it. Suum cuique (saith righteousnes) and in that, is quæ Dei, Deo. Every one, his due; And so God His.

Matth. 22. 21.

Eccluc. 47. 2.

Yet are they ever thus parted, here, and elsewhere: Partly, to set out GOD's part by it self (as the fat from the sacrifice) for the dignitie of His person: Partly, to keep up the distinction, which ever hath, & ever must be maintained, of severing things sacred from common; and holy, from humane duties. And partly also to check the conceit that runs in the world abroad, O, he is a good man, lives quietly with his neighbours, payes every man his due: Every man his due? and how then? shall GOD lack His due? I trow not, but have His too, and His first. Reason is, He be first served.

Exod 28. 36. Esay 6. 3.

And holines is His due: you may read it, in the plate of gold, in the High-priests fore-head, Holinesse to the LORD: You may heare it, from the mouth of the Seraphim, they mention none of all His Attributes, but that. That they do, and do it, thrice over, Pointing us thereby, what is chief in Him, and should be chief with us, and whereto we should chiefly direct our service. Holinesse, is His due: and (hear you) so His due, as the Apostle is direct, totidem verbis, without this due payed, without holines, shall no man ever see God.

Heb. 12. 14.

To serve Him in Holinesse.

But then, you will mark, it is to serve Him, in Holines. Holinesse is one thing: To serve God in Holines, is another: Holinesse we may have (at least, thinke our selves to have) but, a stately, surly kinde of Holines it is, so as in our Holinesse, we serve Him not. But it is not enough to be holy: a service in holines is required at our hands: that we acknowledge service in holinesse, and as servants, carry our selves and serve Him, in it.

Our service in Holinesse in the Congregation. Psal. 111. 1. Deut 29. 29. Deut. 29. 39.

Our service in holines I divide, as the Psalme doth: Either in secreto Sanctorum, when we are alone by our selves (as, there, in secret, good folkes faile not, to serve Him.) Or, in Synagoga in the open Assembly, with the Congregation.

Our secret holinesse I meddle not with. Abscondita Deo nostro, I leave it to GOD. I hope, it is better, and more service-like, than our outward is. As abscondita Deo, so revelata nobis. Our Church-Service, our Service in Synagoga, the outside of it (so) that is no secret; all men see what it is, that full homely it is, nay, full rude it is (and lightly) the meaner the persons, the more faultie in it. Our holinesse is grown too familiar and fellow like, Our carriage there, can hardly be termed service, there is so very little of a servant in it.

Psal. 96. 9. 1 Thes. 4. 4. 1 Tim. 2. 2.

When we do not only serve Him, but to do our service before Him, (both, are in the Text, Illi, and coram illo) as that we do when we come hither, it is to professe our service, that we come. When we come, before the presence of the Lord, the presence of the Lord of the whole earth (so the Psalme doubles it, to make us think on it the better) then, saith he, worship Him in decore Sancto, in a holy kinde of decency, or (as we read it) in the beauty of holines. Our holines should have a kind of beauty with it. Holines and Honour, the Apostle joyneth them together; Godlines and Gravity, εὐσεβεία καὶ σεμνότης, and them too. Now this is that, the world complains of; there is not that decor that beauty: not that honour, not that σεμνότης, that venerable grave behaviour, in our holinesse, we carry not our selves in His holy Sanctuary, where our holines should be at the holiest, nor at His service there, as servants should, and use to do.

We

We ſtumble at the very threſhold. Our very firſt ſervice (or rather, the introduction to our ſervice) in the firſt Table (the Table of holineſs) is there ſet downe to be, adorabis. We turne it, ſhalt worſhip. How that is, we are told every day in the Pſalme, Let us worſhip, and fall downe, and kneele before the LORD our Maker. It was ever in the Primitive Church, the firſt voyce was heard, the firſt thing they did, ante omnia adoremus Dominum, qui fecit nos, Before we do any thing, let us fall down and worſhip the Lord that made us. And it ſhall never be found, that they came in without it. But this ſhall, that men came to the Temple, purpoſely to adore, and that, that they did, though, their time or occaſions would ſuffer them to do nothing elſe. That, they held a ſervice, of it ſelfe. Now, adoration is laid aſide, and with the moſt, neglected quite. Moſt come and goe without it; Nay, they ſcarce know, what it is. And, with how little reverence, how evill beſeeming us, we uſe our ſelves in the Church, coming in thither, ſtaying there, departing thence, let the world judge.

Our ſervice in adoration or worſhip of Himſelfe. Exod. 20. 5. Pſal. 95. 6.

Why? What are we to the glorious Saints in heaven? Doe not they worſhip thus? Off goe their crownes, down before the Throne they caſt them, and fall downe themſelves after, when they worſhip. Are we better than they? Nay, are we better than His Saints on earth, that have ever ſeemed to goe too farre, rather than to come too ſhort, in this point? There was one of them, and he was a King (no leſſe perſon) when it was thought, he had done too much. What? uncovered? yea, uncovered (ſaith he) and if that be too vile, vilior adhuc fiam pluſquam, I will be yet more vile; Why, it is before the Lord, before whom we cannot be too low. To humble our ſelves before Him, it is our honour, in all eyes ſave ſuch as Michal. And I reade of none, but of Rabſakeh, that upbraided King Ezekias, for ſaying to his people, You ſhall worſhip before this Alter. No more then, is ſought from us, than Kings on earth, than crowned Saints in heaven, in their holy ſervice do before Him.

The worſhip of the Saints in Heaven. Rev. 4. 10. Of the Saints in earth. 2 Sam. 6. 22. Eſay 36 7.

In Malachies time, things were grown much to this paſſe, that now they are, to this want of regard: to think any ſervice (though never ſo ſlight) would ſerve GOD well enough. When they were come to this, GOD is faine to take ſtate upon Him, and to tell them plainly, He would have them know, He is a King, and a great King 1 Great: for He is King of the whole earth; Others, but of ſome part of it. 2 Great: for He is King for ever and ever; Others, but for a terme of yeares. 3 Great: for He is King of Kings, and they His lieges to, whoſe lieges we all are. And ſo falls to termes with them, that He held ſcorne to be ſo ſlighted over, even to theſe very words, Shall I take it at your hands? And then, bids them goe, and do but offer ſuch ſervice as this, to their Prince, do but come before him on that faſhion: See, if he will be content with it, or accept his perſon (that is) give him a good look, if any would ſo appeare in his preſence. No more will GOD: He knoweth no reaſon, why any King or creature on earth, ſhould be uſed with more reſpect, or ſerved with more reverence than He.

Gods diſdaine of our worſhip. Malac. 1 14. Pſal. 47. 7. Pſal. 10. 16. Rev. 1. 5. Mal. 1. 13. 8.

Thus ſerve we Him, in His holy worſhip: how ſerve we Him, in His holy things? how ſerve we Him, in our holineſs there? I will begin, and take up the ſame complaint that the Prophet Malachi doth. Firſt, Menſa Domini deſpecta eſt: The Table of the LORD is not regarded. That Sacrament, that ever hath been counted, of all Holies the moſt Holy, the higheſt and moſt ſolemne ſervice of GOD (where are delivered to us, the holy Symboles, the pretious memorials of our greateſt Delivery of all;) why, of all others they ſpeed worſt. How are they in many places, denied any reverence at all, even that which prayer, which other parts have? No ſervice then: No ſervants there: but bidden gueſts, haile-fellows, homely and familiar, as one neighbour with another. And not only, de facto none they have: but de jure, it is holden, none they ought to have. And that, ſo holden, as rather than they ſhall have any, ſome will ſuffer for it, or rather for their own proud folly, in refuſing it. What time they take the cup of ſalvation, they will not invocate, at leaſt not be in in ſpecie invocantis: as the King the Prophet would. What time they receive the Cup of Bleſſing, they will not receive it as a bleſſing, as children receive it from their Parents, and their children from them. Both which, invocation and receiving a bleſſing were never done, but de geniculis. What ſhall the reſt look for, if thus we ſerve him, when we are at the holieſt?

Our ſervice in His holy things in the Sacrament. Mal. 1. 7. Pſal. 116. 13. 1 Cor. 20, 16.

Shall we now come to the ſervice indeed? λατρεῦσαι the word here in my Text. It is no new thing, for one ſpecies to carry away the name of the genus from the reſt, as in this: For, though there be other parts of GODS ſervice: yet Prayer hath borne away the name of ſervice, from them all; עבודה the Hebrews call their Common-Prayer, and that is, ſervice. And the Greeke theirs, Λειτουργίαν and that is ſo, too. And we, when we ſay, At Service time, and the Service Book, and refuſe to be preſent at Divine Service, meane ſo likewiſe. And, GOD Himſelfe ſeemes to goe before us, and direct us ſo to do. For, His houſe, He hath named the Houſe of Prayer. (Obſerving the Rule, to give it the denomination, from that which is the chiefeſt ſervice in it.) As indeed, when all is done, devotion is the proper, and moſt kindly work of Holineſs: and, in that ſerve we God, if ever we ſerve Him. Now, in what honour, this part of holineſſe is; what account we make of this ſervice, do but tell the number of them that be here at it, and ye ſhall need no other certificate; that in His ſervice we ſerve Him but ſlenderly.

Our ſervice of God in the ſervice; that is, in prayer. Eſay. 56. 7.

Thou haſt magnified thy Name, and thy Word above all things; ſaith the Pſalm. After invocation then of His Name, let us ſee how we ſerve His Word; that part of His ſervice, which in this Age (I might ſay, in the errour of this Age) carries away all. For, what is it to ſerve God in holineſſe? why, to go to a Sermon; All our holiday holineſs, yea, and our working-day too, both are come to this, to hear (nay, I dare not ſay that, I cannot prove it) but, to be at a Sermon.

Pſal. 138. 2. Our ſervice of GOD in the word.

The Word is Holy (I know) and I wish it all the honour that may be, but, God forbid; we should thinke, that in hoc uno sunt omnia. All our holiness is in hearing: All our service, eare-service: that 1 Cor. 12. 17. were in effect, as much as to say, all the body were an Eare.

An errour it is, to shut up His service into any one part, which is diffused through all. Another, so to doe, into this one. It is well knowne, that, all the time of the Primitive Church, the Sermon was ever done, before the Service begun. And that, to the Sermon, Heathen men, Infidels, and Iewes, Heretikes, Schismaticks, Energumeni, Catechumeni, Pœnitentes, Competentes, Audientes, all these, all sorts of people were admitted: But, when they went to service, when the Liturgie began, all these were voided; not one of them suffered to stay. It were strange, that, that should be the only, or the chief Service of God, whereat, they which were held no servants of God, no part of the Church, might and did remaine no lesse freely, than they that were.

But even, this holy Word (wherein all our holinesse is) how serve we Him, in it? Nay, we serve Him not, we take the greatest liberty there, of all other. We come to it, if we will: we go our wayes, when we will: stay no longer than we will: and listen to it, while we will: and sleep out, or turne us and talke out, or sit still, and let our mindes rove (the rest) whither they will: take stich at a phrase, or word, and censure it, how we will. So, the Word serves to make us sport: we serve not it. At this part of service in holinesse, we demeane our selves with such liberty (nay licentiousnesse rather) that holy it may be, but sure service it is not, nothing like. And truely, it is a notable Stratagem of Satan, to shrink up all our holinesse, into one part: and into that one, where we may be, or not be: Being, heare or not heare: Hearing, mind, or not minde: Minding, either remember or forget: Give no account to any, what we doe or not doe: Only, stay out the houre (if that) and then go our way; many of us as wise as we came.
Ezek. 33. 32. But all (in a manner) hearing as (Ezechiel complaineth) a Sermon preached, no otherwise than we do a Ballad sung: and doe even no more of the one, than we do of the other. Eye-service Gods likes not (I am sure) no more (should I think) doth He eare-service. Speak on Lord for thy servant heareth (and well if that, but scarce that, otherwhile:) but, speak on LORD, whether thy 1 Sam. 3. 9. servant hear or no: would any of us be content with such service? Yet this is all: to this, it is come. Thus we serve Him in holinesse: This service must serve Him (as the world goes;) for, if this way we serve Him not, we serve Him not at all.

Our service in holinesse out of the Congregation. But all GODs Service in holinesse, is not in the Church. Some is abroad. And, when we are forth of the Church, neither Word, nor Sacraments, nor Common-Prayer, there: Onely there, we serve Him in His Name.

To His Name, Psal. 111. 9. Psal. 99. 3. And, Holy and reverend is His Name (saith one Psalme,) And, Great and fearfull is His Name (saith another.) Now, how unholily, this holy; how unreverently, this reverend Name is used: upon how small cause, this great; how without all fear; this fearfull Name is taken up in our mouth, I must say it againe and againe (which Saint Augustine saith) Aures omnium pulso, conscientias singulorum convenio: I speak to the eares of all in generall; I convent the conscience of every one in particular, that heareth it. That, which by Him is magnified above all things, is by us vilified beneath all things. We pray for it first; we regard it last, certainly. For if it be indeed holy, let no man count it common. If not, count it so: not use it so: for, what we use as common, eo ipso we make it unholy (quantum in nobis est;) for, common and holy are contradistentia.
Psal. 138: Matth. 6. 9. Acts 10. 15. 1 And to make it so common, that is, to prophane it? Evill enough that. 2 But in the eagernesse of our spirits, to use it to grievous execrations, that is more, even to pollute it: A worse matter far. 3 But beyond both these, to let it come to this, that we grow unsensible of both, and both passe from us, and we have no feeling of either, this is worst of all. Call we this to serve Him in Holiness, for this dayes delivery, when we so serve His Name?

Ezek. 39 7. Our service to God in righteousnesse. But neither is all God service in holinesse alone: Some is in honest dealing with men, in righteousnesse: Gods is served in that too. He that hath done a piece of good justice, downward: that hath done his duty to his Superiour upward: that hath dealt equally with his even Christen: in so doing, hath not only dealt well with men, but done God good service also. That a man may goe from Church, and yet say truly, he goes to serve God, if he go about these.

Well, how goes our righteousnesse? How serve we God there? Divers errours are committed in that, too.

Holinesse held a discharge, from righteousnesse. One is of them, that think holiness a discharge from righteousnesse quite. So they serve God, and heare Lectures (as the terme is) they take themselves liberty to pay no debts, to put their mony out to usury, to grinde their tenants; yea, and so they misse not such Lecture, in such a place, they may do any thing then. Nay, God is served in righteous doing, as well, nay, better, than in holy hearing.

Righteousnesse held no service A second kinde (which I like not neither) that when men deale honestly, keep touch, pay their debts, they are so brave, so imperious upon it, so like great Lords, as if righteousnesse were no service, all were meere liberality they did, men were bound to them for doing it, they were not bound to do it, Nay, we serve in righteousnesse, too, That also is a service (sure.)

Righteousnesse measured by the Common Law Esay 29. 13. Mica. 6. 18. A third, and that very common, of them that make the law of man, a scantling of their righteousnes: and further than that will compell them, they will not go, not an inch; nor so fat neither, fine timore, but for feare. Yea, not only our righteousnesse to men: but even our fear to God is taught us by man's precepts: and in both, so the Statutes of Omri be observed, all is well. But, whatsoever a man else may make sure, he cannot make sure his soule, by the Law of the Land. This righteousnesse here, goes up to God and His Law: and pierces deeper beyond the outward act, even to the inward man: whence, if ours come not, or whither, if it reach not; Man we may (perhaps) but God, in righteousnesse, serve we not.

But even according to mans Law, our righteousnesse goes not well so, neither. The Philosopher gives a rule, when a people is just or righteous, according to mans law: (GOD's he knew not) and that is, when justice wants work, hath little to do. By which rule, ours is in no very good case: Men are so full of suits, so many causes depending before every seat of Iustice, so much to do: and all to repair the wrongs of our unrighteous courses, while each one seekes rather, to over-rule men by wrong, than to serve GOD by right. Our righteousnesse too much worke.

And this were not so evill, if all the injustice were below: if the Seats which are set to doe justice and righteousnesse, were themselves right. For, fares it not even with them, as the Prophet Hosee saith, The Princes of Israel are as they that remove the land-marke? Each Seat seeking to enlarge their own border, and to set their meer-stones within the others ground? A full unnaturall thing in a body, that one arme should never thinke it selfe strong enough, untill it had cleane shrunk up the sinews of the other. But I stay. These things, being amended, we shall be so much the more in a forwardnesse, to serve God, both in holinesse and righteousnesse: And so, for the matter of our service, keep our Covenant. The Seats of righteousnesse faulty. Hos. 5. 12.

II. The Manner of our service, How.

For the manner, now. To serve Him, 1 sine timore, without fear: 2 Coram ipso, before Him: 3 Omnibus diebus nostris, all the dayes of our life.

1. Sine timore, without fear. And so, in a sense we do. So without fear at all, as if men were afraid, to seem to fear GOD. But this is no part of His meaning, Without feare (here) is not without feare of Him (of God) but, that being now without feare of our enemies, we should do it, the rather. For, who being in a bodily feare; who having Pharaoh and his host hard at their backes, could quietly think of serving God? That, even God Himselfe, did rid His people of that feare before ever He gave them His law, to serve Him by. But when mens mindes are quiet from the agonie and terrour of it, when they are setled in tranquillo: they should in all reason then, better intend His service. That, without feare. Exod. 14. Exod. 20.

And, will we (think you) if we be so out of fear, intend it the better? without doubt, in experience, we find it contrary. For, except we be held in feare, we scarce serve Him at all: how soone we are out of feare, we forget our selves, and our service, yea, God, and all. True: yet for all that, the service so done in fear, is but a dull, heavy service. It likes Him not. God loves lætus, lubens, when being at liberty, with a liberall minde we do what we do. Læti serviemus Regi (say they in Genesis) and it pleased the King: And it pleaseth God as well, if the service we do, we do it cheerefully, without mixture of fear, or any servile affection. Gen. 47. 25.

Without This fear to serve Him, but not without His fear. Nam, si Dominus, If He be a Lord (as if wee be His servants, a Lord He is) ubi timor? where is My fear saith He in Malachy? As love, to a father: so fear, to a Lord, doth belong most properly. And, this is not Old Testament only: the Apostle is as direct, in the New; if we will serve Him to please him (and as good not serve, as serving not please) if we will so serve Him, we must do it, with reverence and feare: λατρεύωμεν εὐαρέστως μετ' αἰδοῦς καὶ εὐλαβείας. Neither rudely then, without fear; nor basely, with fear: But reverently, with feare; and cheerfully without fear: (that is the meaning.) Mal. 1. 6. Heb. 12. 28.

2. To serve Him Coram Ipso, before Him, Coram Ipso: for, coram me, is the terme of the Law. As if He were present, and looked on. And it helps much to our service, so to do it. Helps our reverence not to do it rudely: (we do it before Him.) Helpes our sincerenesse, without hypocrisie, to do it as before Him: For, these two words, coram ipso, are the bane of hypocrisie. That, before Him. Exod. 20. 3.

All things are before Him: In nothing can we get behind Him, or where He cannot see us. But, some things are before Him and men, both: Those, we call not, before Him, properly. Properly, that is, before Him, that is, before none but Him. That is, the heart. Coram homine, the service of the eye, Coram ipso, the service of the heart. Men love no eye-service neither, if they could discover it, but they are fain to take it; the heart is not coram ipsis; Coram ipso it is. Upon that, is His eye: and nothing pleases Him: if the heart be away: for that, of all other, is His peculiar Coram Ipso.

It is a broken service, if any part; chiefly, if the chiefe part (the heart) be away. It would be entire, and with all parts, since all are before Him.

It is a mock-service, as if what serves man, would serve Him: as if we could complement it with God, with face and phrases, as with men we do.

3. The last, is omnibus diebus nostris. As sincere, without fayning: So, constant without fainting. Coram me, excludes the Pharisaicall service of the out-side of the platter: Omnibus diebus, the Bethulian service, for certaine dayes, and no longer. That, all the dayes of our life. Math. 23. 25. Iudg. 7. 30.

You shall have few, but will serve God at a brunt: have certain pangs of godlinesse come upon them at times: be affected for the present, with a delivery, grow a little holy upon it. That little, is little worth. God complaines in Malachy, That in their holinesse they puffed, and blew, as men short-winded, quickly weary of it, and soone out of breath. And in Hosee, that their righteousnesse was as the morning-cloud, scattered, and gone, before the Sun was an houre high. Malac. 1. 30. Hos 6. 4.

To serve Him then, not with usura exigui temporis, some small time primis diebus, two or three dayes at the first, and then, defuncti, we have quit our selves well: but from day to day, as long as there is a day left to serve Him in; So long to serve Him. To serve Him to the very last,

Some dayes more than some other, though. Psal. 111. 4. More. The days since.

The merciful and gracious Lord hath so done His marvellous acts, that they ought to be had in everlasting remembrance; all of them. But some more especially: for some are more than marvellous: As was this of ours. That if quibusdam diebus, would serve for them: Omnibus diebus, is little enough for this: So more than gracious, so more than marvellous, so more than both, in this: as the memory of it, never to die; never to decay, but our dayes and it, to determine together.

And for all that, though omnibus diebus, all our days, and in them all: yet not in them all alike. So in all, as in some, more than othersome, Suscipiunt magis & minus. So then to serve: as in our dayes after the delivery, we do it, more, and better, than before: And upon the day it selfe (that is, as this day) we do it, most of all.

And this day most. It will be wisely done to keep our Covenant.

Thus, we have laid forth our Covenant, both for matter and manner. Wherein, if we will deale as just men, we must keep it: and if deale as wise men, we will keep it. For who knows, but we may (perhaps) stand in need of a delivery again? If we behave our selves frowardly in His Covenant, what shall become of us then? How shall we hope for such another at His hands? And if He doe not, who can deliver us from such another?

We shall be without fear of such another.

But, such another (we hope) shall never come: And I wish, and hope so, too. But should hope so the rather, if I could see, we did but set our selves to serve Him, as hath been said. Otherwise, the devill, he is our enemy; (that is once.) And if we had no other, he is enough: An unquiet spirit he is; I trust him not, though ever since, he sleeps the Foxes sleep. For the breach of our covenant, if he be let loose, he is able to do mischief enough. And we have the amends in our hands. Liberati we had, Serviamus we returned not. Returne it then, and then we shall be without fear of any more.

We shall be in hope of a reward.

And not only without fear: but we shall be in hope also; and that, not of a new deliverance only (if need be) but of a further matter. For though our service be due; without any: but much more due, upon a delivery, specially such as ours this day was, though no more ever should be done for us: yet that we may know, we serve a Lord of great bounty, this shall not be all: over and above our assurance to be delivered, toties quoties; we shall not be unconsidered for our service, besides. Let our delivery goe, transeat: He desires no service, but for a reward.

Reward is in the body of the word λατρεύειν to (serve.)

And so I returne now to the word of our service, the word of our Text, λατρεύσαι. In λατρεύσαι, there is λύτρον: And λύτρον, is a recompence or reward. Gods service is λατρεία. Delivered we were by Covenant: Of His great bounty, Rewarded we shall be beside. It is in the very body of the word (this.)

So here is λύτρον an λύτρον: λύτρον in our delivery, and λύτρον in our recompence. Let one of them, λύτρον or λύτρον: or, if not one of them both of them, prevaile with us, to see Him served.

The reward of our service.

Without fear

Rev. 14. 11.

Before Him. Psal. 16. 12. All the dayes of our life.

And what shall the reward be? I will tell you that, and so end. It shall be the Grand deliverance in the Benedictus, here. And ours of the day was a riddance of us, from our bodily enemies, for the time; and we set in a State of temporall peace, which we have enjoyed ever since: So, the finall reward of our service shall be a riddance from our ghostly enemies, for ever, that come not with a puffe or blast of Powder, but with a lake of fire and brimstone, the smoke where of shall ascend for evermore. To be rid of them, and so being rid, to enjoy a State, of perfect, of eternall peace and security, without ever fearing more, sine timore, indeed.

And to make it every way correspondent: for coram ipso here; it shall be, coram ipso, there. Even in His presence, in whose presence is the fulnesse of joy.

And for omnibus diebus, here: all the dayes of this transitory, short life, we shall enjoy it all the dayes of heaven. Omnibus diebus? nay omnibus seculis, all the Ages of eternity. And so, for that, which in Law is held but as a lease of seven yeares, have an everlasting free-hold, in His heavenly Kingdom, there to reap the reward of our Service, world without end.

A

SERMON

Preached before the

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDCXVIII.

ESTER. CHAP. IX. VER. XXXI.

Obſervantes dies ſortium & ſuo tempore cum gaudio celebrarent: ſicut conſtituerant Mordochæus & Eſter, & illi obſervanda ſuſceperunt a ſe, & ſemine ſuo, Jejunia & clamores & Sortium dies.

To confirm theſe dayes of Purim, according to their ſeveral ſeaſons: as Mordochai the Jew, and Eſter the Queen had appointed them, and as they had promiſed for themſelves, and for their Seed, with faſting and prayer.

HERE have we the making of a new Holy-day (over and above thoſe of GOD's in the Law.) And the making it, by Royal authority, and the Peoples aſſent; and ſo, of the nature of an Act or Statute: a good preſident for us, that have made the like. Here is a joynt concurrence, of Mordochæus adviſing, Queen Eſter authorizing, they (that is, the people:) undertaking for them and their Seed, to confirm, what? Purim; there is the Day; when? at the appointed times, that makes it a ſet day: how? with faſting and crying (that is, prayer) that makes it an Holy-day. Upon what ground all this? That is in the Word Purim, the name of the day. It is called Purim: (that is) lots: as much to ſay as, the Lot-holy-day.

This name it came to have, for that there was a diſmal day coming toward them, by meanes of a lot caſt; which (yet) it was their lot to eſcape. In the remembrance of which eſcape, this Day was thus ordained: and the like may ſo be upon like occaſion.

The ſumme. Thus it was. Haman, one in higheſt favour with King Aſſuerus, had taken a diſpleaſure of Mardochæus: and, a feud it was, the ſtrangeſt feud that hath been heard of: not with all of his kinne; or all of the name; but, with all of the nation, all the Jewes, becauſe Mardochai (forſooth) was a Jew.

His quarrel was at Mardochai alone; none had offended him, but he; yet ſuch was his pride, or malice, or both, as I know not how many thouſands, men, women and children, muſt die all: for no other cauſe, but that it happened, Mardochai to be their Countryman. For, other treſpaſſe had they made him none.

Well, in the height of his favour with the King, and by a wrong ſuggeſtion, he obtained the lives and goods of all the Jewes in the Land. And, when he had them now in his hand, and might have diſpatched them out of hand; that he would not; (ſee how men ſhall be tranſported and forget themſelves!) in a ſtrange kind of inſolency (they call it bravery) fell to make a lottery of their lives. And Pur, the lot, was caſt; what month firſt; then, what Day of the month, they ſhould have all their throats cut. It fell to be the XIV. of Adar (that is) FEBRUARY: and then, he got a Proclamation, that upon that day all the Jewes ſhould be put to the ſword.

Chap. 7. 10. But, before that day came, by the goodneſſe of GOD, it was the poor Jewes lot, to eſcape for all that: And in the mean time, the lot turned upon the lot-caſter: and he that intended this great Maſſacre, it fell to his lot to be hanged himſelf. And, this was the ground of their holyday. That, in remembrance of this lottery-day, that ſhould have been the XIV. of Adar, as the Eve or Vigil, and the XV. as the Feaſt or Holy-day it ſelf, ſhould religiouſly be kept for ever; as, to this day, it is.

This comes ſomewhat to our caſe. For, as they were in danger then, by a lot; So were we, this day, by a plot, in as great danger as they, and as ſtrangely delivered; We, from our plot, as they, from their Lot; and ſo, as deeply bound, and by this Text, as perfectly enabled, to make a Day of Purim, as ever were they.

A plot, and a lot, though they ſound alike, yet (with us) they differ much. A lot ſeemes meerly caſual; a plot is laid with great circumſpection: but with GOD, they are in effect all one. The beſt laid plots, with Him, prove no better but even as uncertain lots, but even hap-hazard, if He liſt to diſappoint them. So as upon the matter, quoad Deum, lot or plot, no great odds: both come to one. Seeing then, there is no more odds, and that there is in every Text, a predominant word: and, in this Text, the word Purim is it, we will inſiſt upon that word, and account them lots both: ours, as well as theirs.

The diviſion. To make a like day, with a like obſervation, there are required, 1 a like ground 2 and like authoritie.

To ſhew the ground like, we are to ſhew the lots to be like: theirs, and ours. Like 1 in the caſting in, the intent or danger: 2 like in the drawing out, the event or eſcape.

I. In the caſting the lots, or intent, theſe four: 1. The lots that were caſt; their peril, and ours. 2. The parties, on whom they were caſt: the Jewes, and our ſelves. 3. The parties, by whom they were caſt: their Haman, and ours. 4. And the cauſe, or colour, for which they were caſt.

In the drawing or event, four more: 1 The meanes of their and our eſcape, 2 the manner, 3 the time, and 4 the iſſue.

In all theſe, to match theirs and ours, And, in all theſe, I make no doubt, this of ours will more than match that of theirs: the lot of our danger more fearfull, the lot of our deliverance more wonderfull.

And if ſo, then have we as good ground, as they; nay better, than they any.

II. This for the ground. But, that alone is not enough: yet lack we authority. Here it is: the Queen, by advice, injoyning it; The people ſubmitting to obſerve the day, at the appointed time.

We conclude then: the ground being all one, on which (a famous deliverance:) the authority the ſame, by which (the Queen there, the King here, injoyning it:) theſe being alike, alike bound to us, ſuper animas noſtras, for a like day of ours, even the day on which it was our lot to eſcape; at a like time, that is, once a year: and in like manner, to be holden, as theirs, with prayer, and crying, though of another nature.

And this Record (here) in the Roll of Eſter, ſhall be our warrant for ſo doing againſt all oppoſers.

I.

THE lot is cast in the lap, but GOD giveth the hap: it is Salomons, in Proverbs c. 16. v. 33. We begin with the lot in the lap, Hamans lap, the danger: And come after to the hap GOD gave, the happy deliverance. The danger. 1 They and we had but one lot both: to be destroyed quite, utterly. And we agree in two more: 2 to be destroyed all: 3 to be destroyed on a set day: these three. The Ground. 1 The Danger.

But in all three, our lot the worse every way. And the worse it is in the lap (the lot) the better it is in the hap, if we scape it.

Utter destruction to both. But their lot was a sword, to be slain. Our Pur was πῦρ καὶ ὕδωρ: Our lot, fire and powder, to be blown up. Of the twain, this the worse. Utter destruction.

The sword is in a hand, and that hand is guided by the heart, and that heart may relent at the sight of a silly innocent babe, a poor old man, a woman great with child; so some hope, for some to scape there. But fire, no hope for any: Fire cannot relent, that spares none.

Yet Saint Jude speaks of saving some by plucking them out of the fire; But not this fire: no plucking out here, no scaping for any: all dispatched in a moment, past saving all. Facti essemus sicut Sodoma: nay worse. That came from Heaven, this from Hell: from Hell-mouth at least. There, three: here, not one should have escaped. Lots ease, his lot will end this; his lot to all intents: better when he scaped the fire of Sodom, than when the sword of the four Kings in battel. This the most destructive destruction of all: If any more than other, this is it. Might we draw lots for our death, we would never draw this. And this was our lot. Jude 23. Rom. 9. 29. Gen. 19. 21. Gen. 14. 12.

A general Lottery was intended in both. Truly might his Majestie have said, as ever did Queen Esther (Chap. 7. ver. 4.) Traditi sumus ego & populus meus, Betrayed we are I and my people. General Destruction.

And will ye mark, how like of Haman it is said, Pro nihilo duxit in unum Mardochæum manus mittere: He thought it nothing to lay hands on Mardochei alone, magisque voluit omnem Nationem perdere: No less would serve him, but the havock of the whole Nation: cap. 3. ver. 6. Said not our Haman the same? What? lay hands on the King; (as one of them offered) Tush, that is not worth the while, magisque voluit omnem Nationem; Nay, if we shall do it indeed, be right Hamans, up with King, and Parliament and all; make a general lottery of it in any wise. Haman right (this) in his own terms. Chap. 3. 6.

But though in this, they seem to be even (both our lots:) yet draw them, ours is the longer, sensibly. For though Haman presumed very near, when he came to the Kings side, touched the Queens life: Yet wel-fare Haman (say I) in this, the King he touched not; No harm to him; the King was out of Hamans lottery. Here, the King was in, too: Ours went to Queen, and Prince, Peers, and Prelates, and Commons, yea, King and all. Omnem Nationem, but not Regem, there. Omnem Nationem, & Regem, here. This was universal indeed: And we, in this, beyond them.

Theirs was in diem, against a day. Ours was so, too. So, the lots even.

With Haman, Missa est sors in urnam, quo die deberent gens interfici; exiit Adar. Die they must, that was resolved; That was not enough. (See whither pride will carry men!) He would cast the dice (as it were) draw cuts, make a lottery, of no less matter than mens lives. And that not of a dozen or a score, but of a whole Nation, which day, and which moneth they should die all. And, In this casting; they went from moneth to moneth, and from day to day, till at last, there (with Haman) the lot fell on the fourteenth of Adar: and with ours, on the fifth of November. On a set day. Chap. 3. 7.

And Take this with you too: Hamans lottery was in Nisan (that is, March) the first moneth, but it fell not till Adar (that is, February) the last moneth: so a twelve-moneth between. And was it not so with us? A year before, nay more than a year, was our day set. And first, it was in the moneth Adar, in February (as theirs was just;) but by proroguing the Parliament, we scaped, and were reprieved once and again. But to it again they went, and so at last the lot fell on this very day, to be the day of our Purim. Thus farre the lots Even.

But then here again there fell odds on our parts, two ways. 1. One, the Jewes had notice of their day; It was proclaimed: so they that could, might have slipped away secretly, and so scaped. And they that were watched, that they could not well, yet they might make their souls ready, and die prepared. And even that, when there is no Remedy, but die we must, it is good not to be surprized on the sudden, but to have some warning, that so we may make us ready for GOD. But see our case now: We know not of our day, we. The day was kept as close as the powder: we had gone off suddenly, to the great hazard (as it may be feared) of many a But their day known, Our not.

soul,

ſoul, that for default of this, had periſhed (indeed:) periſhed here, and periſhed eternally. Againſt a lingring death we pray not; ab improviſa morte, we do: And mors improviſa had been our lot then. Here is then the firſt odds. Both were in diem; but theirs in diem certum, certainly known to them all. Ours (as I may ſay) in diem certum, and yet incertum: Certain to Haman, to them; they knew it perfectly: Uncertain to us: We knew not whether any ſuch day or no: We had gone to it, We had drawn our lot blind-fold. So ours worſe than theirs.

2. Theirs, an ordinary. Ours, a Parliament-day. 1 Theſ. 5. 3.

Another odds there is (worſe yet than this) in the dayes. For, what was the fourteenth of Adar, but an ordinary common day? But the fifth of November (as it fell out) was the firſt day of a Parliament; a famous day, as comes in many years. That not only when we ſhould have ſaid Pax & ſecuritas; but when we ſhould have been in all our glory, when even at the time, Repentinus veniet ſuper eos interitus, the moſt unſeaſonable time of all had been our lot, a heavy lot, if it had light.

When men go to their death, they would go mourning, all in black, as the manner is. But when they are going in all Pomp and Magnificence, then to be ſhot off, and flie all in pieces! No man would draw that lot if he could ſcape it. Yet that was our lot, and at this very time.

For a King to be made away, is a thing not unheard of: but in this manner, a King to be made away, in his robes royal, the Imperial Crown on his head, the Scepter in his hand, ſitting on the Throne of his Kingdome, in the midſt of all his States, then and there, and in that manner; that paſſes all: that the lot, that never yet hath been heard of. And let it never be heard of? Let never King have the lot ſo to periſh: Pity any ever ſhould. Yet this was Yours (Sir) like to have been. Too much oddes this. And this for the lot, that was caſt.

2. The Parties On whom.

Now for the Parties, on whom this lot caſt. There, ſure I am, we have the vantage. The Parties, in the Text, who were they, but a ſort of poor ſcattered Jewes of the captivity, in a ſtrange Countrey far from their own, and in their enemies hands. Far otherwiſe was it with us, here, No Captives we, but a flouriſhing Kingdome, as any under Heaven. Not in any forrein part, ours; but at home in our own native ſoil.

It had been ſomewhat for Aſſuerus to take away ſo many lives at once; But his Captives they were, he might do with them, what he would, in rigour of Law: ſo, their end had been by lawfull Authority. But in ours, no colour, no ſhadow of any law, but a moſt barbarous trechery againſt all Law, both of God and man. Alas! the Jewes they had neither Prince nor Peers, they were no State. What talk I of them? I ſhould wrong our ſelves much, to ſtand on this any longer.

3. The Parties By whom.

This for upon whom. Now, by whom, the lots were caſt. For it was our lot to have our Haman too. The Lot-maſter and the Plot-maſter. I hold them Hamans both. But firſt, where they had but one, we had many. And then theirs nothing to ours. Haman was to the Jewes a ſtranger in Nation, for he was an Agagite: A ſtranger in Religion, for he was an Heathen man. Ours were no ſtrangers in Nation; the ſame Nation that we. No Turks or Infidels, but profeſſing the ſame CHRIST, that we; and better than we (they ſay:) for right Catholikes they, and not Chriſtians, but (which is more than Chriſtians) Jeſuites, ſome of them. Better for an Iſraelite to ſuffer at the hands of an Ægyptian, than of an Iſraelite his brother, as Moſes told them. Better at the hands of the uncircumciſed, than of the people of GOD. The Jewes, they had periſhed by the hand of an Alien, and a Pagan; If our lot had been ſo, it had been the leſs unhappy. But our lot it was, to be ſhot thorow with our own ordinance: JESUS to have blown up CHRIST; and one Chriſtian man to have committed ſuch a butcherly barbarous act, upon another (nay, many others) ſuch an act, as never was heard among the Heathen, to the eternal ſtain of all that profeſs Chriſt.

Chap. 3. 1.

Exod. 2. 13.

Chap. 7. 6.

Wicked Haman is his Epithete. Too good for thoſe, that not only as a brood of Vipers, ſought to gnaw out the bowels of their own damme (which Haman never did;) but in ſuch ſort did it, as all the malice of man, calling to it the malice of the Devil, could never invent the like. But a degenerate Chriſtian is the worſt man; and the worſt man is the worſt Creature, of all others.

4. The Cauſe or Colour. Chap. 2. 5.

And what might be the cauſe of all this? It ſeems the ſame in both. Hamans was, becauſe that he was not worſhipped by Mardochei. And in ours too, If we aſk ——— quo numine læſo, Quidve dolens, we ſhall find it was much to that, even the not worſhipping of one no whit leſs proud, than Haman. And here, they will fall ſhort too. For in our, Mardochei muſt fall down, and kiſs his feet; which Haman in all his pride never required.

But it were hard to deſtroy an whole Nation, for no other cauſe, but that one man of them would not make him a leg. We muſt have ſome other than this, ſome better pretence muſt be had, ſure. So have all evill things, one thing for the cauſe, another for the colour. In good, one ſerves for both. Sure in effect, the ſame was that of ours, that here was ſuggeſted by Haman. Theſe ſame Jewes (ſaith he) they are a people with a Religion by themſelves; As much to ſay (with us) as, a ſort of Hereticks they be, the world were well rid of: them: it makes no matter, up with them all.

Chap. 2. 8.

But then, here comes a difference again, to make ours the worſe. Haman made it but a matter of policy, It is not for the Kings profit to ſuffer them. Ours made it not leſs than a matter of Religion.

ligion. Religion was at the ſtake. A caſe of meer Conſcience: not to do any thing, but the Oracle conſulted firſt, the Father Provincial, who ex tripode reſolved it for ſuch. And as if he had all our lives in his hand, anſwered in no other ſtyle, than did Aſſuerus, Cap. III. Ver. XI. De populo fac quod libet, As for this people, do with them what ye liſt: with them, and with the King too (which was more than here did Haman) blow them up and ſpare not. And though there be of our own Catholicks among them, no force; blow them up, for all that: It is for Religion, this.

I conclude all, with the very ſight, if this lot of theirs had fallen to our lot.

It had been an heavy ſight (as in the Maſſacre of Paris) to have ſeen men tumbling in their own blood here and there in the ſtreets: Nothing to this, to ſee men torn in ſunder, heads from ſhoulders, arms from legs, both from the body; quarters and half quarters flying about: the brains fly one way, the bowels another; blood ſpilt, like water in the river, in the fields, in every corner of the ſtreets, never the like ſight, and ſo never the like lot to this.

Now then; ſince in our lot, 1 the deſtruction more deſtructive (for by Powder) 2 more general (for King and all with us:) 3 upon a leſs certain, and upon a more famous day: Our Nation more noble; our Haman more wicked: Their cauſe and colour more to be abhorred: I conclude, our lot was the worſe, and the worſe the lot, the better the eſcape: the better it, and the better deſerving a Holy day for it. And this for the lot in the lap.

Now to GOD that giveth the Hap.

Where firſt I note, that the word Pur is no Hebrew, but a Perſian word; yet it was thought meet to retain it. They give this reaſon, for that, the ſame word Pur (in Hebrew) ſignifieth to diſappoint; ſhewing plainly, that the Hebrews GOD ſhould give an Hebrew Pur to the Perſian Pur, diſappoint the Perſian lot: and though it were caſt, yet not ſuffer it to light, though. 2 The Event.

We find at the XXIV verſe, Haman did caſt but Pur in the ſingular, but one ſingle lot (He needed caſt but one, ſince all were to go one way, none to eſcape;) yet the Day is called Purim, that is the plural, as if there were more than one, ſome other beſide that of Hamans. And ſo it was fit there ſhould, that there might be as well a good lot as an evil. The troth is, there can be no lottery of one; there behove to be two at leaſt: two diverſe. The Law is ſo. The firſt lots we read of, that ever were caſt, were between the two Goats, Levit. 16. Whoſe lot it ſhould be to die, and whoſe to ſcape, to be the Scape-Goat. Here was never a Scape-goat in Hamans; ſlain-goats all: ſo, beſide the Law quite. GOD took Haman caſting lots beſide the Law, and he took the matter into his own hand; and he did it regularly, made two lots to two ends, and for two parties. One for Mardochai and the Jewes, them one: for Haman another: GOD put in one for him too, by his leave. Mardochai ſaith it plainly in the Greek Supplement c.I.v.X. that GOD made two lots, and gave them forth; one for his own people, and one for the wicked, (meaning wicked Haman) So have ye Haman's Pur, (he caſt but one, which was diſappointed and never drawn:) And GODS Purim (two of his putting in, and both drawn.) And it is well we have removed out of Haman's into a better hand, that we may ſay, In manibus tuis ſortes meæ (as ſaith the Pſalm) Not in Hamans hands are our lots, but in thine. Levit. 16. 1. Pſalm 31. 15.

Two good hopes we have thereby. 1. One that though it was nothing with Haman, to lay hands on Mardochai, nor with ours on the King; yet with God it will be ſomewhat, nay much: That God will be otherwiſe minded, than Haman or they. Not magiſque voluit omnem Nationem perdere, but magiſque voluit omnem Nationem ſervare; rather ſee Haman hanged, and a dozen ſuch as he, than that a whole Nation ſhould periſh in this manner.

2. And then ſecondly, ſeeing they be now in Gods hands, be the lot what it will, or in what lap it will, in Haman's own lap (to be ſure) yet when it comes to the drawing, God will give it forth, which way, and with what ſucceſs He pleaſeth. And when all is done, what Haman, nay, what Aſſuerus himſelf doth purpoſe, God will diſpoſe; and there will be neither lot, nor plot, againſt the Lord. And ſo we come to Gods Purim, to His lottery.

Wherein we are again before them as many wayes; in the 1 means, the 2 manner, the 3 time, and the 4 iſſue, all four. 1. The fewer means, the more like a lot: and we had no means. They had, and uſed means, both to GOD and man. To GOD by faſting and fervent prayer, which prevails with him much. To man, to King Aſſuerus; they had the Queens mediation, which prevailed with him too. We uſed none, either to God or man; faſted not, prayed not, ſuſpected no evil to be toward, and ſo uſed neither. There is no cauſe, no means in a lot. It is Saint Auguſtines note, that it is therefore termed the Lot of Righteous (in the Pſalm) and in the Apoſtle, Sors ſanctorum, for that, merit or means there is none at all; God only allots it to us. And ſuch was ours; not by means, as they; but delivered (as I may ſay) from a lot, by a lot, a meer lot. So our Purim (we may ſay) was more pure than theirs. 1 The means. Pſalm 125. 3. Coloſ. 1. 12.

But though no means we had to God, yet a means from God we had; they and we both. For from a King it came, in both. But far otherwiſe in the manner with us, than with them, two wayes. 1. Firſt, with them the delivery came from the King, and well might. For from him came their danger, from his proclamation under his hand and ſeal; without which, Haman could have made no lottery of himſelf. With us, in a better manner; and ſo our lot better. For from the King came our eſcape; but no danger from him. He as deep in the danger as we. Nothing that was evil, nothing that pertained to any peril from Him: but our ſafety ſolely and wholly from Him, next to GOD. 2 The Manner.

Another yet. For in theirs, the King had been miſ-informed by Haman, was ſet right by the Queens moſt true information; and this is a regular, common way. But ours, by no information of Eſther, or of any: only by meer inſpiration, immediately from God, by making that come into the Kings head, which neither did, nor would have come into any mans head elſe: the more ſure that it came from God, ſince ſo great a ſalvation was wrought by it. For the burning of the paper, if he had taken it in the ſenſe that others did, or any would have done, we had all been burnt indeed, as ſoon as the paper. But God drew from him a ſenſe beſide all ſenſe, even as it were by a lot, ſince (to all mens ſeeing) it was rather a caſual, than a rational interpretation. The drawing of that ſenſe, was even like the drawing of a lot: ſo that, ſorte mira ſervati ſumus; and never any more true Purim, than this of ours. And though men, when they eſcape, ſtand not ſo much on the means or the manner (it is well, they are well:) yet, it cannot chooſe but do us much good, to ſee our ſelves ſaved, by ſo royal a means, and in ſo miraculous a manner. It is a ſign quod reſpicit nos Deus, God reſpects us, in the manner of whoſe ſaving, He would ſhew ſo divine a miracle.

3 The Time

But beſide the means and the manner, thirdly the circumſtance of time is worth the conſidering: For in both all came about in a night. Haman had made all ſure, ſo ſure, as he had ſet up the gallowes and all, and meant to move the King, and made no doubt but to have Mardochai hanged, the next morning. This was over-night: And that very night, did God take order, the King could not ſleep. And by that means, was Mardochai's good ſervice read to him. Sure, for ſaving the Kings life, he deſerved not to loſe his own. Now it comes to the drawing. A good lot, a prize: Honour for Mardochai. And this good lot, for Mardochai's honour, God drew even out of Hamans own mouth, he, was by the King made to be Proclaimer of it.

Chap. 6. 14. Chap. 6. 1.

It ſtaid not there. But the day following, the King being rightly enformed by the Queen, Her people were no ſuch people, as Haman made them; one of them had ſaved the Kings life; with this, forth came there a good lot for the Jewes: the former proclamation called in, the Poſts ſent with all ſpeed to publiſh another for their deliverance.

Chap. 8. 9, 10.

Now comes Haman's lot. God took him caſting lots upon his people, and He caſt one upon him too. For when the Queen fell on her knees, and begged her own life of the King, He was juſtly diſpleaſed with Hamans preſumption, that durſt come ſo near him, as touch her life; and ſtraight allotted him the ſame death, he had hight Mardochai. And the ſame day in the ſame place, and even upon the very ſame gallowes, he had purpoſely ſet up for him, the night before, it came to his lot, to be fairly hanged himſelf. This is God able to: to make Haman, in the lot he caſt for the Jewes, unwittingly to draw his own deſtiny; and make the day by him ſet for them, the fatal day of his own deſtruction. To do this, and upon ſo ſhort warning, to do it: for all this was done, in the ſpace of four and twenty hours. Wherein we ſee it verified, that Salomon ſaith, That the Kings heart is in Gods hand, and he turns it as a water-courſe, to run which way He will have it, and other-while makes a damme in it, and diverts the current a quite contrary way, clean back upon Haman, to overflow him, and to drown him. Thus did He with them.

Chap. 7. 3. Chap. 7. 9, 10. Prov. 21. 1.

And ſo did He with us, and more alſo: and that in leſs time. For ours was nearer than ſo; and the nearer it came, the fairer our lot to eſcape it.

For with them, the fourteenth of Adar was not yet come; the Poſts had time to go and come before it: but with us, it ſtayed till the very day it ſelf was come. In a night both: but ours, the night, the next night before; ſo was not theirs. Ever the Scripture doth preſs this point; Not till the day, Noe entered into the Ark: Not till that morning, that Lot went out of Sodom. So ours, not till the very night immediately preceding the diſmal day it ſelf. And then, when powder, and train, and match and all were in a readineſs, then comes me God with His Stulte hac nocte, and daſhes all. They were delivered before the day came: The day it ſelf came before we were delivered: It was hac nocte (indeed) literally. So we ſcaped more narrowly: our lot more near the drawing. So ours was potior tempore.

Mat. 14 38. Luke 17. 29. Luk. 12. 20.

4 The iſſue.

And potior jure too. For though the ſame iſſue to both; yet in that alſo, have we the better. A delivery there is mentioned (124. Pſal.) Our ſoul is ſcaped even as a bird, out of the ſnare of the Fowler; the ſnare is broke, and we are delivered, And this is worth the drawing. But this is but Pur, a ſingle lot: For if that be all, the bird is eſcaped, and that is well for the bird: but the fowler (ſave that he is a little deluded) he is not hurt; and ſo he can ſoon ſet another ſnare again. This is but Pur.

Pſal. 124. 7.

But Purim is better; when the fowl ſcapes, and the Fowler ſcapes not, but comes himſelf to a foul end. The ſnare is broken: No, the ſnare is whole, and they taken in the ſnare. It ſprung only, and away went the fowl; but with the ſpring, the knot was knit anew, and Haman, and his fellow-fowlers caught, and ſtrangled in it.

And this (loe) is Purim: Purim, after the Hebrew idiom, is the great lot. To ſcape a ſnare, and in the ſame ſnare, to have (not their foot, but) their neck taken, that ſet it: There is no greater. The Paſſeover is no greater: There they ſcaped, and Pharoah drowned: here they ſcaped, and Haman hanged.

Will ye look back to the Kings ſentence at the five and twentieth verſe? This it is: Malum quod cogitavit contra vos, avertatur in caput ipſius. Not, Avertatur a capitibus veſtris; (Eſters firſt petition was no more, let my life be given me; Turn away my deſtruction: That it is too:) but that is not it. This is it; Convertatur in caput ipſius, The evil he deviſed, be it turned away from your your heads (that is well;) not a hair fall from any of our heads; But the ſame evil they deviſed, be it turned upon their own heads that were the deviſers. This is it, and this is as much as the King could grant, or the Queen could deſire.

And this ſame is the lot of this day. They imagined ſuch a device, as they were near the perfor- Pſalm 21.11.
ming, yet were not able to perform. The non-performance was well, the ſcattering of their imaginations; we ſcaped by the means. But further, they were taken in their own turn, and the evil they deviſed againſt us, returned upon their own heads: their heads and quarters both. To Hamans end they came: Nay, to a worſe than Hamans, and juſtly; for their device, worſe than his. The place they meant to have done execution upon us in, under the ſame, place they themſelves executed: Before their eyes, on whom their cruel bowels had no compaſſion, were there cruel bowels burnt. The heads, from which it came, to have blown up the Houſe; the Houſe hath blown up their heads, and ſo they be Agagites right. Their bodies plucked in pieces, their quarters rent in ſunder, ſo their meaning was to have dealt with ours, This is the lot of the ungodly from the LORD. Their evil lot, and (under one) the ſame, the happy lot of our Deliverance. Job 20.29.

And ſo we have done with Purim now. For by this it is plain, 1 Ours was altogether without means, and ſo more lot-like; 2 Ours was more miraculous in the manner, and (for all the world) like a lot: 3 Ours was more neat brought in time; and (like a lot) drawn in the inſtant. 4 Ours was beyond theirs in the avertatur; For ours without ſack-cloth or aſhes, faſting or crying, at all: And in the convertatur; For our Fowlers came to a fouler end than theirs; and what would we more? Never might David more truly ſay, than we, The lot is fallen to us in a fair ground, the LORD hath maintained our lot. Pſalm 16.6.

II.

This, GOD hath drawn for us: Shall we now draw for Him again; and for this ſo fair a lot, allot Him ſomewhat of our part? Memento is ſet before the great, and ſo before all Holy-dayes. All He would draw from us, is, but that the lot of this day, or the day of this lot may never be forgotten. A benefit would not be forgotten: Not mans: GODS much leſs. Such a benefit eſpecially. For even in Gods, there is a difference: GOD hath his daily benefits, and thoſe to be remembred of courſe. But ſome other He hath ſo rare, as the like never ſeen; Thoſe would have a more ordinary regard. For where God is Extraordinary, we to be ſo too. If he make it a memorable day, by ſome ſtrange delivery, we to make it memorable by ſome rare acknowledgement. They ſeem willing ſo to do here. Illi ſunt dies, quos (ſay they;) Ille eſt dies quem (may we ſay) nulla unquam delebit oblivio: and ſo let us ſay: and ſo ſaid, and ſo done, is as much as God requireth. But our thankfulneſs is not to flie away, like a flaſh of powder. To fix it then, fiat volatile fixum; that would be done. And fix it in any thing elſe but time, time will eat it out. Beſt then fix it in time it ſelf: and that hath been ever thought a wiſe way: ſo ſhall it roll about with the time, and renew as it doth. And ſo Time which defaceth all things, and bringeth them to forgetfulneſs, ſhall be made to preſerve the memory of it, whether it will or no. Fix it in time; what part of time? A day; Memento diem, ſaith God in his Law, and ſo points us to the proportion of it. Set ſome day; and let there, then on that day, be ſome ſpecial commemoration of it. This lot to have a time of Remembrance. Exod.20.8.

But that day or time, is to be a ſet day. Fix it in time; but fix the time too. The word of the Text [מועד] is an appointed day, that comes once a year; as Solenne is quod ſolum in anno. Now this ſome will not hear of: No ſet dayes, no appointed times (they) but keep them in memory, all the year long. I like not that. For ſo when time was, it was ſaid by ſome, they would not have this day nor that day, to faſt on, but keep a continual faſt (they:) and it ſeemed a pretty ſpeculation at firſt, but proved nothing but a ſpeculation: what their faſt is come to, by this time we ſee. It is to be doubted, if other ſet times were likewiſe taken away, their continual feaſt would prove to no better paſs, than their faſt is; Better be as it is, and we do, as God and good people have done before us. A ſet time, or day.

Provided that it ſhall be lawfull for them to keep the memory of this Day, every day, if they be ſo diſpoſed. So yet, as they be content to allow ſome ſuch Day, as this for them, that are not of ſo happy memories: for fear, leſt it be left at large to every mans daily devotion, it may fall to be forgotten; and where it now hath one day, then to have none at all.

And if a ſet time, what day can we ſet ſo fit, as the day it ſelf it fell on? With them, the fourteenth of Adar: with us, the fifth of November. It cannot but be the beſt way (this) that God took himſelf: and God took this. The ſame days He did His Noble acts upon, thoſe very dayes, did He order once a year ſolemnly to be kept. The fourteenth of Niſan, did the Deſtroyer paſs over them; that day; from year to year did He ordain the Paſſover to be holden. Fiftie dayes after He granted them his Law: in memory of this gift, they to keep yearly the day of Pentecoſt. Can we go by a better example than this of Gods own? The day it fell on. Lev.23.5. Lev.23.16.

Theſe two were not all; but God did as great acts after, as theſe were, for the ſame people. They then, ſetting before them this way ſkored them out by God (for every famous benefit, a ſolemn day;) for thoſe other benefits after vouchſafed them, they did appoint like ſolemn dayes of themſelves.

We inſtance in this of Purim, which Moſes and the Prophets never knew. We inſtance in another after this, which Eſther or Mardochai never knew, the Encænia or Feaſt of new dedicating the Temple, after it had been polluted by Antiochus, recorded in the X. of the V. of Joſhua. And I would fain know, why it ſhould not be like acceptable to God, to keep the fourteenth of the laſt moneth Adar for their deliverance from Haman by Eſther in Perſia: as it was to keep the fourteenth of the firſt moneth Niſan, for their deliverance from Pharaoh, by Moſes in Egypt: Quid intereſt?

The ground being moral, or rather natural, as reducible to thankfulneſs, which is a vertue of the Law of Nature: the prime example being Gods own: By warrant of it, the former Church having inſtituted others, the Chriſtian Church knew nothing to bar it from doing the like: ſo Holy-dayes ſhe appointed too. It is St. Auguſtines (de Civitate X. 4.) Memoriam beneficiorum Dei, &c. The memorie of Gods benefits we Chriſtians keep ſacred and holy, by holding ſolemn feaſts for them, leſt elſe, by revolution of time, forgetfulneſs might creep upon us, and we prove unthankfull: And do we any other thing in appointing this day, than all theſe did? I conclude with the ſtyle of the Councels: Sequentes igitur & nos per omnia Sanctorum Patrum veſtigia: We herein do but tread in the ſteps of our Holy Fathers, and follow them were followers therein of GOD himſelf.

If it be ſaid all this while we hear no precept alledged, we have nothing but example: No more had Eſther here: precept had ſhe none. Only GODS example ſhe had; Picked the fourteenth of Adar, out of the fourteenth of Niſan: from Pharaoh that, from Haman this. It is true, Dirigimur preceptis; By precepts we take our direction: but it is no leſs true, Inſtruimur exemplis: We receive inſtruction (in a great part) from examples alſo. One ſerves for our rule, the other for our pattern; and we, as to obey the one, ſo to imitate the other: For Perfectio inferiorum, aſſimilatio ſuperiorum: The inferiour hath no greater perfection, than to become like to them that are his Superiours. Superiours (I ſay) and that, in time, no leſs than in place; that is, ſuch as have in former times laudably gone before us. The Bible ſheweth this plain: there, beſide the Books of the Law, that ſerve for precepts to direction, God hath cauſed to be written the Story of the Bible, to yield us examples for imitation. And thoſe Books of Story are in Hebrew, called the former Prophets, to ſhew, before there came any predictions into the world, there was a Prophetical force in them, to guide Gods people by. To the Law, and to the Teſtimony; For the practice of the Saints runneth along with the Law, under the name of Teſtimony; their lives having ever born teſtimony to God and his Truth. And as the Hebrewes ſay, a barren divine ſhall he be, qui neſcit facere legem de Prophetis, that out of the Saints practice cannot frame a Law.

The ground then being laid: If this be agreed of, that a day, that a ſet day, and that this very day may be appointed; We have two points more to touch: 1. the authority by which it is to be injoyned: and the 2 manner, according to which it is to be obſerved.

1 The authority by which it was injoyned.

1. The authority firſt: for be the ground never ſo good, yet are not we to take up dayes of our own heads, but by order of Authority, they are to be injoyned us. Whoſe authority here? There be in a Law but three things, 1 Advice, 2 authority, 3 and ſubmiſſion, they be all here. It ſhould ſeem at the firſt, Mardochai did only by a letter, adviſe them, Ut ſuſciperent & revertente ſemper anno celebrarent honore, (ver. 20.) before: and this before he was in place. That latter of his, either not taking place, or not place enough: and they being either laid down, or ſo like to be, here cometh now שניה a ſecond, to confirm that (as the word is) and this, no advice now, but בכל תוקף with all authority: of the nature of a Law, to eſtabliſh them for ever.

Now this could not Mardochai, nor Eſther, nay, nor both of them do of themſelves in Perſia: not, without the regal authority there, or without commiſſion from it. Not ſend over the hundred twenty ſeven Provinces: nay, not over any one Province of them, but by vigour of Aſſuerus's warrant. His warrant they had at the XXV. Ver. and by it proceeded they to do all this. What Eſther did, ſhe did in the power of Aſſuerus.

Now Aſſuerus (it is well known) was a Heathen King: yet have we here a Feaſt eſtabliſhed by his authority. So was the King of Nineve, a Heathen too: yet have we a Faſt injoyned by his. Jonas 3. 7. So was the King of Babel, a Heathen King: yet a Law by him made, upon pain of death not to blaſpheme the true God. Dan. 3. 29. So were Cyrus and Darius: yet the Temple built by their authority. Ezra 5: 13. 6. 12. Things pertaining to Religion all. So that there is, in the Regal power of all, even of heathen Princes, to confirm and to injoyn what may tend to the worſhip and ſervice of God.

Power againſt the truth, or for falſhood, I know none: no Power to deſtruction: to edification, all. 2 Cor. 13. 10. And Prayer is to be made without ceaſing for Kings, 1 Tim. 2. 2. that they may apply their power to theſe, to edifie in the Truth. So they will, if Mardochai may be in a place to adviſe them, not Haman. But if they miſ-apply it, and not to the end God gave it them; (for He that gave it them, is to take account of them for it, and he will require it at their hands:) to him they be reſpondent.

But be this here and ever remembred, if by an Heathen Princes power this was done, ſhall it be denied to a Chriſtian Prince, to one in whom Aſſuerus's power, and Eſther's Religion (both) meet to take order for dayes, or rather rites of that nature? Well then, having both our ground, and our authority לקים (which word is, three ſeveral times repeated in this one verſe, 1 Once for Mardochai, that adviſed; 2 for Eſther, that injoyned; and 3 Once for the people that undertook to obſerve it: It is the Jewes operative word whereby they enact all their ſtatutes;) Be it then enacted, what? Ut nulli liceat dies hos abſque ſolemnitate tranſigere, verſe 23. That it be lawfull for no man, to paſs theſe dayes without ſolemnizing.

To a Law there go two כאשר two Caaſhers, two accordings. Both twain are here. 1 According as Eſther with Mardochai's advice, injoyned it: 2 And, according as they (that is, the people) took upon them, decreed to obſerve it.

Which obſerving is the life of every Law: even the publick approbation, or giving allowance of it, it, by the constant keeping it. The second according is added for the peoples commendation; that what was prudently advised, and lawfully injoyned, was by them as dutifully observed.

And this they not only did, but bound themselves moreover, and their seed, so to continue. Themselves, and that with the highest bond, super animas suas (which is more than upon themselves, and would not have been put in the Margent, but stood in the Text) upon theirs, and upon their seeds, never to let them fall. The word is קבל at the 27. verse, that is, to make a Kabala, or tradition of it. And that is the true tradition of it indeed: when a thing orderly taken up (there is קים) carefully, and out of conscience kept up, (there is קבל) and delivered over from the Father to the Son, and from the Son to the Nephew, to all succeeding ages; none daring to transgress it, on the charge of their souls. This Kabala made it a perfect Law.

Now a word of the manner of keeping them, and so an end. They enacted, to keep the Purim-dayes: How to keep them? It will lead us (this) to the nature of them, whether as holy-dayes or no. For, at this, there be that stick too. A feria they will allow them, a play-day, or ceasing from work: or a festus dies, if you will, a day of feasting, or encrease of fare: but not dies sanctus, no holy day, no, at any hand; For, then may Esther make Holy-dayes (they see) it followes. What should one say to such men as these? 2 The manner of keeping it.

For 1 first, it is plain by this verse, they took it in animas, upon their souls; a soul-matter they made of it. There needs no soul for feria or festum, play or feasting. 2 Secondly, the bond of it reacheth to all, that Religioni eorum voluerunt copulari, (verse 27) to all that should joyn themselves to their Religion: Then a matter of Religion it was, had reference to that: what need any joyning in Religion, for a matter of good-fellowship? 3 Thirdly, it is expresly termed a Rite, and a Ceremony (at the 23. and 28. Verses) as the Fathers read them: Rites, I trust, and Ceremonies (as Holy-dayes are no more) pertain to the Church, and to the service of God; not, to merry meetings; that is not their place. 4 Fourthly, they fast and pray here, in this verse; fast the eve, the fourteenth, and so then, the day following to be holy-day, of course: 5 Fifthly, with fasting and prayer (here) almes also is injoyned (at the 22 verse) these three will make it past a day of revels or mirth. 6 Lastly, as a holy-day the Jewes ever kept it, have a peculiar set service for it, in their Seders, set Psalmes to sing, set Lessons to read, set Prayers to say, (and that at four several times as (out of Neh. 9. ver. 3.) their manner is, on Holy-dayes) and good and godly all. None, but as they have used from all antiquity. 1 Being then taken on their souls. 2 restrained to the same Religion. 3 directly termed a Ceremony: 4 being to be held with fasting, prayers: and 5 Almes, works of piety all: 6 the practice of the Church concurring; theirs was a holy-day cleer, and so ought ours to be. 7 Thus have we a president, upon record, to draw up ours by: the Superiours to injoyn such a day, the Inferiours to observe it.

And as a warrant to do it, so a rule how to do it; with fasting and with crying, that is, prayer, earnest prayer (the last word.) What, and must we fast then? That were no good lot in the end of a Text. No, if we will pray well: I dare take upon me, to excuse us from fasting. Their fasting was, to put them in mind of the fast, their Fathers used (Chap. 4. 3.) by means whereof they turned GOD, and GOD turned the Kings heart, and so all turned to their good. But for us, we have no such means to remember in ours: we used not any, and so hold ours without any. They had two dayes; their holy-day had a fasting day. Our lot is to have but one; and that no fasting day: an immunity from that. So much the better is our lot: A feast, without any fast, at all.

But though without fasting, not without earnest prayer (meant here by crying;) nor, without earnest thanks and praise, neither. For joy also hath her cry, as well as affliction: The voice of joy and health is in the dwellings of the righteous. But prayer (sure) will do well at all hands, that a worse thing happen not to us. But prayer is but one wing: with Almes it will do better, make a pair of wings, which is before prescribed at the two and twentieth verse. So to eat the fat and drink the sweet our selves, as we send a part, to them for whom nothing is provided: Dies enim sanctus est, saith Nehemias; for (by his rule) that makes it a right Holy-day. Psal. 118. 15. Neh. 8. 10.

But prayer is the last word here; ends the verse: and with that let us end. Even that all, that shall ever attempt the like, let Hamans lot be their lot; and let never any other light on them, but sors funiculus. Let Queen Esthers prayer, and King Assuerus's sentence ever take place, Malum quod cogitavit, convertatur in caput ipsius; Ipsius or Ipsorum, one, or many: Let not the rod of the ungodly light on the lot of the righteous. Let God in whose hand our lots are, ever maintain this days lot to us: never give forth other, but as in this Text, and as on this day, on the fourteenth of Adar, and on the fifth of November. And praised be GOD, this day, and all our dayes, that this day shewed, that He taketh pleasure in the prosperity of His servants, and from all lots and plots, doth deliver them. Psalm 125. 3. Psalm 50. 15.

PSALM CXLIV. VER. X.

Ipſe eſt qui dat ſalutem Regibus: qui eruit DAVIDEM ſervum ſuum, de gladio maligno.

It is He that giveth ſalvation unto Kings: who delivereth David his ſervant from the perillous, or malignant ſword.

SCarce any that hear this Verſe rehearſed, but ſees, that it fits, both to this our purpoſe, and time. The time: Here is mention of Kings, of Salvation given to Kings, of one, a matchleſſe King; DAVID in danger and delivered; From the Sword, in danger and delivered: All moſt appoſite.

For behold Kings, Kings, to whom GOD hath given Salvation: hath given Salvation, and doth give ſalvation, and I pray GOD he may ever give it, much Salvation, for many yeares. Behold our King his ſervant; whom this day now ſix yeares ſince [I ſay this very day] GOD delivered, wonderfully delivered, from the hurtfull Sword. Verily theſe agree; whil'ſt at once we hear the words of the Text, we have as it were, a Commentary thereof before our eyes.

But for our purpoſe: This meeting, and this, not only honourable, but alſo ſacred Aſſembly, what meanes it, what intends it? What elſe, than to give thanks to GOD, for ſalvation given to the King? And, what elſe, I pray you, doth this Verſe ſound forth, than, thanks alſo to GOD, for ſalvation given to DAVID.

For in the preceding verſe, the Pſalmiſt took his Harp, tuned the Strings, promiſed a Song, a new Song. And behold the Contents of this new Song, in this verſe. The ſum of this verſe (for the next verſe is a Prayer, neither hath it any Song in it) and the Argument is, giving of Thanks, and of Thanks, for no other benefit (although there were many more) yet, for no other benefit, than the Kings Deliverance. That namely, the Saviour of Kings, to wit GOD (for this is GOD'S periphraſe, Who gives ſalvation to Kings:) that this Saviour of Kings, had delivered his ſervant DAVID, from ſome eminent danger: yet, from no other danger, than the hurtfull Sword, that is the Traitors.

And thus ſurely, doth this Verſe: and thus then alſo, the people of Iſrael praiſed Him for their Kings deliverance: It is He that giveth ſalvation unto Kings: who delivereth DAVID His ſervant from the hurtfull Sword.

And we indeed, here to day, ſing the very ſame thing; every way the ſame, one only word a little changed: It is He who gives ſalvation unto Kings: It is he who hath delivered JAMES His ſervant from the perillous Sword. It is He, that hath done this; It is He, whom, for this Delivery, all of us, have met here, to day, to praiſe in a Feſtival, an Aſſembly, a Song.

And, this verily is uſual with GOD, and ſurely no new thing, To give ſalvation to Kings: This is His ancient goodneſſe: yet, of this ancient, and no new goodneſſe; ever and anon He ſhewes new examples; yea, in our age He hath ſhown them; nor, doth He ceaſe to ſhew them, even to this day. For this very thing, which to day we celebrate; although it be new (and ſurely new it is) Yet it is not the laſt. For, ſince GOD hath vouchſafed us Him, one, and again another hath befallen us, wherewith GOD hath lately bleſſed us. Twice, or thrice, hath GOD given deliverance: twice, or thrice hath GOD delivered Him: and (to let paſſe other, ſurely thoſe moſt admirable) He that ſix yeares ſince hath delivered him, from the hurtfull ſword; Very lately, this year, (this very year) hath delivered him from the perillous Gun-powder. Thus yearly He heapes upon us new Deliverances. It ſhall be our duty, here to imitate DAVID: and, for ſeveral new Preſidents, to ſing new Songs; for ſeveral new Deliverances, new Thankſgivings: So ſhall He every year heap upon us new Deliverance: Rehearſing old, He will enrich us with new: nor ſhall there ever be wanting new matter for a Song, if a new Song be not wanting.

If

If old ones be not forgotten, a new Harveſt of Thankſgiving ſhall yearly encreaſe unto us.

And thus, briefly, touching the ſcope of this Verſe. It is an eaſie task to divide it. It falls aſunder of its own accord; and ſevers into two parts. The one a Theſis: The other an Hypotheſis. The Theſis is, concerning His care of Kings in general, It is He who gives ſalvation to Kings. The Hypotheſis, is touching His care of DAVID in particular. It is He who delivereth DAVID His ſervant from the hurtfull ſword. Or indeed (becauſe we have to do with Muſick, and are to treat of a Song) His general care of Kings, is as the Cantus, Cantus firmus: his particular care of DAVID, is as the Diſcantus, or Cantus figuratus. Yet, for DAVID, although GOD hath diverſly delivered him, both many wayes, and times: notwithſtanding he inſiſts on this alone (which is proper both to this ſeaſon, and to us) becauſe, He delivered him, from the perillous ſword.

I. I will firſt ſpeak of the ſafety of Kings in general, and alſo both of the cauſe of it, and manner of giving it.

II. Next of King DAVID'S Deliverance.

III. Laſtly of our King.

Quæ ego dum ſic ſingula complectar, &c.

It is He that giveth Salvation unto Kings, &c.

I Promiſed firſt to ſpeak of the Theſis.

Who gives ſalvation,

Who gives it to Kings.

To give Salvation: So well it agrees to the Divine nature, to ſhew Himſelf a Deliverer, that GOD doth challenge that as native, proper, and peculiar to Himſelf, Iſaiah 43. 11. I, even I am the LORD, and beſides Me, there is no Saviour: Thus He is a Saviour: ſave therefore He will.

And indeed, GOD will ſave both man and beaſt, ſo wonderfull is His mercy: ſaith our Prophet, Pſal. 36. 7. Even thus alſo the nature of Beaſts, is partaker of this ſaving power in GOD: It is He, who gives ſalvation, even to bruit beaſts.

Yet, even to bruit beaſts: yet ſo, that nevertheleſſe, the Apoſtle doubts not to demand and ask, 1 Cor. 9. 9. Doth GOD take care for Oxen? doth He not rather ſay it for our ſake? As though his care for them, in reſpect of that to us, might be eſteemed no care at all. Neither is it. For we are His chief care, thence Job ſpeaks unto him on our behalf, as it were by a peculiar title, I have ſinned, what ſhall I do unto thee, O thou preſerver of men, Job 7. 20. He, it is who gives ſalvation unto men. He, is the preſerver of men: But eſpecially of Kings μάλιστα Διοτρεφὲς Βασιλῆων (as the Heathen Poet ſings not amiſſe) for they more than all kind of men, are GOD'S delight, and care: The name θεοφυλάκτους agrees to the King, more than others. For Great deliverance giveth He to the King, ſaith our Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 18. ver. 50. He alſo ſaith; He is the ſaving health of His anointed, Pſalm 28. 8. In whomſoever He ſhewes Himſelf wonderfull, He is wonderfull in the Kings of the earth, as he ſaith, Pſal. 76. 12. 1. He, is ſurely wonderfull in Them, in preſerving
2. 3. Them. 2. In none more. 3. In none, ſo wonderfull. Thus by theſe three ſteps we aſcend to our Theſis; It is He that giveth ſalvation unto Kings.

To Kings, I ſay in general: For touching Kings GOD'S ſervants, I ſhall diſcourſe more fully, when I come to the Hypotheſis, concerning DAVID his ſervant.

It is He, Who gives ſalvation unto Kings: He it is. Therefore let Kings know, to whom they ought to aſcribe their deliverance; even to Him. There is no ſafety for them, In the ſtrength Pſalm 147. 10. of an Horſe, viz. not in their cavalry, Not in the legs of man, viz. not in their infantry. Not in the

Pſalm 35. 3.

Let the people alſo know, whether, when all is done, they ought to lift up their eyes, whom to Matth. 21. 9. longs. O LORD ſave the King. Hoſanna in the higheſt.

Hence let rebels amongſt the people know, That GOD hates thoſe, who labour to ſnatch that Salvation from Kings, which GOD gives them: Let loyal people know, that they are God's friends, and GOD theirs: who deſire the ſalvation of Kings. For God deſires the very ſame thing. It is he that gives ſalvation unto Kings.

I come nearer. Who gives ſalvation. What ſalvation? Surely each kind, whether that of Phyſitians, of a ſound and healthfull body againſt diſeaſes; namely, as they are mortal. For (as Da-
Dan. 2. 33. niels image may teach us) Every Kingdom ſtands upon feet of clay. Kings alſo are the very
* 2 Cor. 4. 7. ſame * Treaſures of their people; But yet, Treaſures in earthen veſſels: Therefore they need, this ſalvation.

True

True therefore it is, ſhould we mean this; for GOD gives this, alſo. True indeed; but not proper to this place. For this ſalvation (as our Text tells us) is from the ſword, not ſicknetſe; rather from malignant manners, than malignant humours; from external force, not from internal * diſtemper. I therefore apply my ſelf to that. He gives ſalvation: He gives this ſalvation to Kings; to Kings before others. * Συσπασιαι

I now demand the cauſe, and more near and inwardly ſearch GOD'S Will. Why, to them before others? Is it, becauſe Kings have need of ſafety, and the doner of ſafety, more than others? Yes verily, becauſe they have: for as much as to them, more than others, that malignant one ſhewes himſelf more malicious. (For thus κατ' ἐξοχὴν S. John in his firſt Epiſtle often calls that wicked Spirit) He it is, that deſtroyes Kings. Namely the Angel of the bottomleſſe pit, of whom the ſame JOHN ſpeakes, Apocal. 9. 11. His name in Hebrew is Abaddon: In Greek, Apollyon, that is a deſtroyer. A deſtroyer: a name directly oppoſite to GOD'S name. His name, is Saviour. And the name of His ſonne; JESUS, a Saviour alſo, (an Angel interpreting it,) They give ſalvation. But he is Abaddon, he is a deſtroyer, who chiefly deſires this, to ſnatch away, to take, wholly to overthrow this ſalvation, all the ſalvation of all. And mark with me, how earneſtly he endeavours it. 1 John 2. 12, 14, & 5, 18. Matth. 1. 21.

We ſaid this formerly. GOD ſaves even Beaſts: much more Men. And Princes moſt of all. This Abaddon ſets up himſelf againſt GOD, and is only bent to deſtruction. Yea, rather than not deſtroy, He is buſied in deſtroying bruit beaſts: which very thing is evident in the ſilly Swine, which (CHRIST permitting him) he carried head-long, and choaked in the Sea. Thus he it is, who takes away ſafety, even from bruit beaſts. Matth. 8. 32.

But He covets rather to deſtroy any man, any one man, than whole flocks and herds of Cattel (as JOB witneſſeth) Thus He it is who takes away ſalvation from men. Job 1. 12, and 2. 4.

But to Kings eſpecially, beſide and above other mortals, he is moſt hatefully malicious: And, if any King be eminent in piety, as DAVID: him he chiefly hates. He, indeed, alwayes meditates on miſchief againſt Kings, he deſired to deſtroy even Aſſuerus, a Heathen King (only, becauſe he was a King) by his Eunuches. Yea, DAVID alſo! For, how often, was he thruſt at, yea, overthrown, that he might periſh: and now at the very point of deſtruction, unleſſe GOD had delivered him; as he ſpeakes of himſelf, Pſalm 118. 13. He, it muſt be, in every reſpect, who can give ſalvation to them. It is the other, who takes it away. Eſter 2. 21.

But why doth that Abaddon, ſo zealouſly deviſe, to bring deſtruction upon Kings, to take away their ſafety? What have they only done? Surely becauſe there is none, who can be, to him, who can be to his Kingdom, a more capital enemy, than Kings? For it is by their power and authority: that, what likes, may not be lawfull to every one: (I will uſe the words of Scripture) that Every man may not do (unpuniſhed) whatſoever is right in his own eyes: which, every one both might, and did doe, when there was no King in Iſrael. Now for every man to have power to do, whatſoever ſeemes right in his own eyes, unpuniſhed, this verily, that Abaddon earneſtly deſires; It muſt needs pleaſe him well, his kingdom may well proſper; if things go thus. Deut. 12. 8.

For, then it will ſeem right to the eyes of MICAH, to make and ſet up an Idol for himſelf, in his private houſe, Judges 17. 4. And what's lawfull for MICAH, why not for another alſo? Thus, look, how many Families, ſo many new prodigious Idols. And that's indeed, a miſerable Church, where this is ſuffered.

It, will alſo ſeem right to the Danites, to rob, to ſteal, not only to break thorow the walls of MICAH'S houſe, but alſo as LAISH, even to pillage and ſpoil whole Cities, to deſtroy all, not ſave a man, Judges 18. Then raviſhings of Women, and Whoredomes not to be named, will ſeem right in the eyes of the men of Gibea, Judges 19. Lamentable indeed is the face of that kingdom, where there is ſuch work. That theſe, and ſuch like things, may be done, this ſurely he wills earneſtly, and that Abaddon would purchaſe this, at a high rate. But that theſe, and ſuch things as theſe may not be done, Kings doubtleſſe are his hinderers. Wherefore, he labours by all meanes, to take them away; to take their ſafety from them, and in this he is wholly employed.

Firſt, and before all things, he deſires Anarchy. If that may not be; Then would he incontinently deſtroy Kings, one after another. That ſo Kingdomes might ſhake as a Reed in the water. (which uſually happens in often change of Kings) never enjoying a ſetled reſt. Whereby, being alwayes under one new King, or another, they can never get ſtrength againſt evil manners, and wicked men. Ἀναρχίαν. 1 King. 14. 15.

We have already ſeen, for what reaſon: It will be worth our labour, to know, by what meanes alſo, that Abaddon ſeekes to deſtroy Kings. And this is plain from the ſame Chapter, in the 9. of the Apocalyps. For there he hath his Emiſſaries, Locuſts aſcending out of the ſmoak of the Pit, (whoſe king he is) and thoſe alſo, as well as their king Abaddon, are ſworn enemies to Kings. He ſubornes theſe for this attempt. But who are theſe Locuſts? A kind of creatures, who have a Mans face, Womens hair: but Lions teeth, and their tayles the ſtings of Scorpions. No others, ſurely, (if Fathers which interpret this place, are to be heard) than thoſe very ſame, which our Prophet DAVID, twice in this Pſalm, calls ſtrange children: whom S. JOHN afterward perceived to be Locuſts. Theſe did DAVID call ſtrange children, long before. For that kind of people, was neither unknown to DAVID: neither yet are they unknown to us. Even, our age, brings forth ſtrange children. Strange indeed. A kind of men, which ſtile themſelves——Of the Society of Jeſu. But JESUS (as is aforeſaid) is a Saviour. Wherefore theſe alſo, if from him, they have their name, if they be not ſtrange children, they ought to miniſter ſalvation: But, Verſe 8, 11.

is not this a ſtrange thing, a monſter-like: that theſe, who from JESUS a Saviour, have made a name for themſelves, are accounted moſt wicked, even the Embaſſadours of Abaddon, Traitors to Kings, the overthrow of Kingdomes, in what ſtate ſoever they get footing? Are not theſe verily ſtrange children, who under a ſtrange Jeſu by name, every where attempt practices moſt eſtranged, from the nature of JESUS: namely, deſtructions, treaſons, ſeditions? And that you may know, that theſe alſo of ours, are of the ſame lineage with thoſe of David: their marks are every way alike, Filii alieni (ſaith DAVID, Pſalm 18.45.) mentiti ſunt mihi. Even the ſame thing which he ſaith twice in this Pſalm: Their mouth ſpeaketh a lye, their right hand is a right hand of iniquity. And are not theſe of ours juſt like them? only except, what David calls lying, that, they call Equivocation. A diverſe title, no different things. For, their right hand, is equally wicked. Becauſe, whether they engage their hand, for faithfull dealing; or lay their hand, on thoſe ſacred Evangels, to win belief by religious oathes; Their right hand is wicked; and deceitfull in both: both wayes, both mouth, and right hand, is eſtranged from their mind, their mind eſtranged from GOD; at the leaſt from the true GOD: For from an equivocall God, that is, the God of this World, it is not perchance eſtranged. And now he employes the helps and aſſiſtance of theſe (whether if you pleaſe to call them Locuſts, or ſtrange children) to whet theſe perillous ſwords, to mingle poyſons, to give fire to Powder-plots. To whom their King Abaddon, gives in ſtrict charge (theſe being his Cheftaines) that which formerly the King of Syria commanded his Captaines; Fight neither with ſmall nor great, ſave only againſt the King. But deſtroy him, with Sword, with Fire, with Poynado, with Poyſon, with Powder, diſpatch him what way ſoever.

Nempe,
——Rege incolumi, mens omnibus una,
Amiſſo rupere fidem.

(as the Poet very elegantly) I conclude. Though one there be who would give ſalvation; There is another, who would take it away: Though one there be, who would ſtretch forth a gracious ſhield: There is another, who brandiſheth a perillous ſword. Though there be true born children, which deſire their ſafety. There are ſtrange children, which vviſh their ruine. Though there be a JESUS, vvho can ſave: There is Abaddon, who would deſtroy. Though there be CHRIST, who would favour them: There is an Antichriſt (neither is he only called Antichriſt, becauſe he is an adverſary to CHRIST the LORD, but alſo becauſe he is an enemy to the Anoynted of the LORD) I ſay there is an Antichriſt, who vvould be Miſchievous, and quickly deſtroy them, either with the perillous ſword, or elſe a Powder-plot.

You have now already ſeen, both why, and how that Abaddon vvould deſtroy Kings. Next, you ſhall briefly hear, both wherefore, and by vvhat meanes, GOD vvould give them ſalvation. Firſt, vvherefore, vvherefore doth GOD give ſalvation to Kings? Namely, becauſe they are his Vicegerents upon earth; Becauſe they are in GOD'S place, becauſe they repreſent his perſon: Becauſe they are his Miniſters, his chief Miniſters. Whereby, is ſhewn, that there is a kind of neceſſity for God to ſave thoſe, viz. becauſe they are His Embaſſadours. Surely thoſe that are Kings Legates into forraign Countries. Thoſe vvho are Vice-royes and Preſidents in Provinces here at home: it hath alwayes been accounted part of Princely Wiſdom, by all meanes, to protect them, to vindicate them from contempt. For, the honour of an Embaſſadour, is his honour that ſends him, and the Vice-royes diſhonour, redounds upon the King. Even our Prophet DAVID, vvhen thoſe were reproachfully handled, whom he ſent, inſtead of himſelf, to rejoyce with King AMMON, he judged himſelf to be violated in them. The diſgrace, as though it had been proper to himſelf, he ſeverely revenged. Thus, it is with the ſupream King, to whom our Kings are Vice-royes: His own honour, except Kings be ſafe (who are His Vice-royes) His own honour, cannot ſtand ſafe, and inviolated. Even, for His own honour, He will preſerve them ſafe. For, * By Him they reign, By Him they are ordained. By Him they are, what they are. All come to this point, that it belongs to him, in ſome ſort behoves Him; that whom He makes, them, He ſhould alſo favour: And whom He favours, that they may not be wronged: He is alſo their Revenger, if they be violated. This, is one reaſon why He ſhould give ſalvation unto them.

Rom. 13.4,6.

2 Sam. 10.4; and 12,31.

* Prov. 8.15. Rom. 13.2.

Further to this, I alſo add another.

God deſires His peoples ſafety, He deſires all our ſafety: (for the benefit of Salvation the more general it is, the more heavenly it is.) The LORD ſaid to Jonas, Is it meet that thou ſhouldeſt deſire the preſervation of the gourd? And ſhould not I ſpare Nineveh that great City, wherein are 120000 perſons which cannot diſcern between their right hand and their left? Now He gives Salvation to Kings, thereby to derive it to the people, fitly to Them, that by Them, it may extend to all. For thence it is, that He not only calls the Magiſtrates Gods: I have called you Gods: but alſo Saviours. For, ſo it is in the book of Judges, as often as mention is made of the ſupream Magiſtrate: GOD (ſaith he) hath raiſed up a Saviour for them, Othoniel, Gedeon, Jepthe, and others. Therefore They, ſave many thouſands. Finally, it is moſt agreeable, fit, and a thing well be-ſeeeming GOD, to ſave the Saviours, of ſo many thouſands: That is, to give Salvation to Them, in whoſe ſafety, Our ſafety, yea all our ſafety, is placed. That place of S. Paul is remarkable, Let prayers (ſaith he) be made for all men. But this is boundleſſe; it is too long, to run through all. Will you therefore, confine it in brief? Let them be made for Kings. Becauſe if for Them, for all. If it be well with Them, it will be well with all. In which place the Apoſtle pleads powerfully. Mark his gradations. For Kings (ſaith he) that They may be ſafe; thence it is, that whilſt

They

They are ſafe, the peace is ſafe: In a ſafe peace, there is the knowledge of God: From the knowledge of God, an honeſt and godly life: from a godly and honeſt life, comes the ſafety of the whole world. Do you not ſee? That the Safety of Kings and prayers for it, is laid as the very corner ſtone to all mens ſafety.

But, why ſeek I for theſe examples abroad? Seeing, we have them growing at home, here in our Pſalme, and ſurely far more abundantly. In this verſe, are thankes to be given for the Deliverance of Kings: In the next verſe, are prayers to be made. Why, I pray you? Namely (verſe 12.) that, So, it might go well with Our ſons, our daughters: verſe 13. That, So, it might be well with our Store-houſes, our Flocks: verſe 14. That, ſo, all might go well with our Oxen. That, there be no Breaking in, nor going out, or complaining in our ſtreets. None of theſe, ſhall be, we ſhall have all theſe ſafe, if the King be ſafe. By account indeed, there are eight (which the Fathers from the words of the Pſalme, Bleſſed are the people, who are in ſuch a caſe: have called them the eight felicities of this life, the eight earthly beatitudes) all depending upon the ſafety of Kings. Nor only theſe eight, but alſo (which laſt remaines, and is worth all, Bleſſed are the people whoſe God is the LORD) this alſo (that GOD may be our LORD, that is, that our religion may be ſafe) doth, certainly, very much depend on the Prince. For, ſurely, he that reades of ſix Kings of Iudah, ſucceſſively in the books of Kings: or the five Emperours, ſucceſſively in the Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtory: Or he that here at home, hath ſeen amongſt us four Princes ſucceſſively by turnes altering Religion; and as the Kings, ſo the people alſo, changing in Religion: will diſcern, that it is of great conſequence, that Salvation be given to SALOMON; leaſt, when he is dead, Ieroboam make Iſrael to ſin. Therefore that He may give ſalvation to the people, He gives ſalvation unto Kings: both for his own honours ſake, and even for all our ſakes, He gives ſalvation to Kings. Why He ſhould give ſalvation, I have already made knowne. How He gives it, that yet remaines. I haſte unto it. 1 King. 15.30.

Firſt, by ſending his Word, that he may ſave them: but if that be a ſmall thing, by ſtretching forth his hands alſo, that he may ſet them in ſafety.

Firſt, by the Word of ſalvation. For, leaſt any ſhould overthrow that Salvation which GOD hath given: he hath provided in a triple charge, wherewith (as with a triple trench.) He hath fortified the ſafety of Kings.

I. Touch not mine annointed. Whereby He ſecures them from violent hands. Pſal. 105. 15.

II. Curſe not the ruler of thy people. Whereby He ſecures them from the poyſon of the tongue. Exod. 22. 28.

III. Curſe not the King, no not in thy thought. Whereby He ſecures them againſt the bold and boundleſſe thoughts, of the ſoule it ſelfe. Eccleſ. 10. 20.

And if they be ſafe enough, from theſe three, all would be well: the ſafety of Kings would be abundantly provided for. Thus, God provides by His triple ſaving Word, that their ſafety may not come in danger.

But if theſe are not enough (and often they are not enough) but this triple bulwark being caſt down, ſtrange children dare ſit in counſell, and mutter ill words, nay verily, even lift up their hand, againſt Gods annoynted. Yet then, as it is in the 7. verſe, He will ſend his hand from Heaven, He will ſend His hand from Heaven, and will deliver them from the midſt of danger. This truly and indeed He will do, by oppoſing Himſelf, both againſt their counſels, and againſt them.

Againſt their counſells partly by detecting them, whileſt yet, they are ſcarcely ripened: partly by ſcattering them, even then, when they are digeſted, finiſhed; even then, when all is in a readineſſe.

And verily, for to detect their counſell He ſaith, in another place, that He hath ordained a lanterne for His annoynted. A lanterne ſurely, that is, faithfull counſell: and thoſe that are His miniſters (they being the lampes of Kings) whom it concernes, throughly to know their inmoſt deſignes: But, when the Kings lampe is too dim, then Gods lightning gives light. For, ſo it is, in the 6. verſe, when the light of the lampe ſufficeth not, by Him (Miſſo a ſe de Cœlo fulgure) is the whole plot diſcovered. The Kings lanterne, I ſay, as, when Mardochai brought the accuſation againſt the trayterous Eunuchs: As when Eliſha revealed the plot, concerning Aram's lying in wait for the King of Iſrael. Pſal. 132. 18. Pſal. 144. 6. Eſth. 1. 22. 2 King 6. 9.

But it was Fulgur Dei, when as SALOMON ſaith, A birde of the aire ſhall carry the voyce, (namely) when by ſome ſtrang means, and by no humane aſſiſtance things are brought to light. When their own tongues ſhall make them fall, as it is, Pſal. 64. 8. That is, when by their own whiſperings, their own writings they betray themſelves. That all that ſee it may be aſtoniſhed; who ſee it to be the hand of God, and that thou, Lord, haſt done it. And doubtleſſe He is wonderfull in the Kings of the earth, but in no one thing more, than, in ſending this His Lightning, whereby the moſt ſecret counſels of traytors, are often revealed. Eccl. 10. 20.

YEt, ſuppoſe it be ſo: grant, that nothing be ſuſpected, not a word ſpoken, every thing concealed till all be in readineſſe: And now, the treaſon brought to the laſt caſt: Yet: even then; He will ſcatter them notwithſtanding, and, as it is in the 5 verſe, He will touch the Mountaines and

Psalm. 144. they shall smoake, every one. Absolom, now having usurped a Kingdome, grew as big as a mountaine. God will but touch Absolom, He, will smite his braine with madnesse, that he might reject that very counsel which was most conducing to his designe. Thus in a moment God scattered them
2 Sam. 17.14. all. Adonias also swelled into a mountaine. God will but touch Adonias, He will smite his heart with a causelesse feare, that then, when, he was almost fully enthroned, he durst neither go on forward, nor stir: Thus they all vanish into smoake. All of them are become (even when all was as sure as bird in hand) as a bowing wall and tottering fence; they either fall with Psalm 62. 3. their own accord, or with the least enforcing are cast downe, they are touched, turne into smoak, and vanish.

And thus God sets up Himselfe against their conspiracies, and showes, that He will assert the salvation of Kings: Moreover, he undertakes this very thing, against the traytors themselves: By making ready the strings of his bow against the face of them, as it is, Psal. 21. and as it is here (vers. 6.) By consuming them with His arrowes. That men seeing there most unhappy ends, might tremble
Psalm 21. 12. at their accursed deeds. Moses hath rightly comprised the whole matter, then, when Corah first of all withstood him. Hereby (saith he) shall ye know, that Magistrates are from God, that God takes care for their safety. If these men die the common death of all men, or if they be visited after the visitation of all men.

Num. 16. 28. 29, 30. Then ye may make a doubt, whether it be He: But, if God do a new thing, and bring all of them forth, every one, to punishment, all of them, to fearfull ends: If Divine Justice follow them at the heels, and suffer them not to be carried to their graves in peace, Morte vel maura vel sicca: Hereby shall ye plainly know, that It is the Lord himselfe who gives salvation unto Kings. Because the hand of the Lord is gone forth against them. And, verily so it is: For, what is become of those who boldly assayed, to cast downe that triple bulwark (of which I lately spake?) What is become of Sheba, who durst lift up his hand, and sound a trumpet, against David? His head is thrown down, from the wall. And, what become of Shimei, who durst open his mouth, and curse the 2 Sam. 20. 1. annoynted of the LORD? His hoare head, went downe to the grave with blood. What also became
2 Sam. 20. 22. of the Eunuchs, who only thought in their mindes, how they might lay hands on the King? They
1 King. 2. 9. were both hanged on a tree. And what should I say more? The time would faile me, to speak of Esth. 2. 21, 23. Baana and Rechab, of Absolom, and Achitophel, of Adonia, and Ioab, of Zimri and Iozabad:
2 Sam. 4. 12. And all the rest, all who have sought the destruction of their Kings, they have all perished, and 2 Sam. 34. 24. are gone to their grave by some shamefull death. All these, cry out as it were with one voyce;
25. From our example, let no mortall men dare, to take that salvation from Kings, which God hath given unto Psal. 18. 1. them. DAVID, called God the horne of his salvation: He said truly. For by pouring out oyle from the horne (out of the lowest and hollow part of it) God annoynted Him. And with the same horne (the end of it being sharpened) God scattered his enemies, and brake them all in pieces. Thus, with one end, He Annoynted him King: with the other he gave him deliverance. Thus, is God indeed a horne of salvation to his annoynted.

But I may not keep you too long in the Thesis; Ye have seen (I suppose) already, both why it should be just with God, to give salvation unto Kings. 1 Because there is a wicked one who would destroy them. 2 Kings are in GOD's Place. 3 GOD's honour is concerned in Saving them. 4 In their Safety, the safety of many nations consists. You have also seen, how GOD brings this to passe; By His Word, and by His Work. 1 He reveales it by His Lightning. 2 He touches them and turnes their counsels into smoake. 3 The contrivers themselves, Hee shootes them thorow with His arrowes. And thus He Workes Salvation for Kings, in the middle of the earth.

THe Thesis now finished, I descend to the Hypothesis. It is He who hath delivered David His servant, &c. But I begin with this. God is the Saviour of all Men, but especially those that be- 1 Tim. 4. 10. lieve. It is S. Pauls saying. Let me add, He is the Saviour of all Kings but especially of those that believe. For there is like reason in both. Thus I infer it. If Divine providence rest upon Kings, Kings indefinitely, Kings in generall: What, shall it do upon Kings, who also themselves believe, and are the Rulers of those that believe? If, God be wonderfull in the Kings of the earth, what is He in Kings, who, are both Sons and Nursing Fathers of the Church? If in Assuerus a Heathen, what is He in David, a religious and pious Prince. For (as the son of Sirach spake wisely of him) Even, as fat is parted from the flesh of the Sacrifice, so is David from the Kings of the earth:
Eccl. 47. 2. That look what Kings are amongst men; Such, is DAVID amongst Kings, what will God therefore do for Him? What, will He do for them, that are to Him, Faithfull as David, in all his house? For surely, what you may finde severally, in other Kings, are here in David conjoyned. Namely a King and a Servant of God. Wherefore both because he is a King, He, will give salvation unto him, and because He is His servant, He will deliver him from the perillous sword. That He is a King, He, hath that in common with other kings of the Heathen; for whom, that God should thus provide, there is no cause, but only this, because they are Kings. That He is Gods servant, this is peculiar to Him, above others.

And God will surely save all His servants, of whatsoever even of the meanest condition: But, Kings that are His servants, above others, both because, as Kings by Him they reigne, and because, as servants, they are governed by him. O Lord save the King. This is his prayer:

Psal.

Pſal. 20. 9. O God ſave thy ſervant, This is his prayer, Pſal. 86. 2. This is one petition and yet not one. One in David: not one in all: For all are not ſervants. Yes, verily, all are His ſervants, all the Kings of the earth. And ſo it is indeed; all are, for all, although unwitting, although unwilling, yet all, doe His Will. All are, but (which is for our purpoſe) all do not ſo acknowledg themſelves, all carry themſelves like ſervants. Nebuchodonozor was His ſervant. For ſo GOD ſpake by Jeremiah: Behold, I have given all theſe lands to Nebuchodonozar my ſervant: Yet notwithſtanding He did not acknowledge this. He acknowledged not, either himſelfe to be a ſervant, or Him his Lord. For he ſaid as much to the three Children. Let us ſee, who is that God which will deliver you out of my hands? Neither indeed did Pharaoh acknowledge it. Who is the Lord? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Iſrael go. Our David did not ſo, no ſurely. But he acknowledged himſelfe a ſervant: Heare him ſpeake for himſelf, Behold, O Lord, how that I am thy ſervant; I am thy ſervant, and the ſon of thy handmaid. Neither is He this in word and ſpeech alone, but alſo in deed and in truth: Not (as they) doing it, neither wittingly, nor willingly, but of ſet purpoſe, Doing all his Will. Being ſo carefull in the Lords buſineſſe, that He would not climbe up into his bed, would not ſuffer his eyes to ſleep, untill he had found out a place for the Arke of the LORD: And in bringing it back, being girt with a linnen Ephod, he ſo behaved Himſelfe, amongſt the ſervants of GOD, ſo (I ſay) that he ſeemed to his wife, to be, too much a ſervant. But he could never, be humbled enough before his LORD, never carefull enough to do His Will. DAVID was a ſervant indeed: humble as a ſervant: faithfull as a ſervant: a ſervant after His own heart. Fitly therefore, and to the purpoſe is it ſaid, in this verſe, His ſervant David. Therefore GOD ſpeaks ſo, of him His ſervant: Pſal. 89. 21. My hand ſhall hold him faſt, and my arme ſhall ſtrengthen him: the enemie ſhall not be able to do him violence: the ſon of wickedneſſe ſhall not hurt him. That is (in one word) I will deliver him.

And what he ſaid, in his word, he fulfilled indeed; therefore, God often delivered him, both from many (I do not ſay) dangers; that word is too large, for our preſent purpoſe (weapons I do ſay, which is more appoſite) from ſharp arrowes, drawn, and ſhot at him, to deſtroy him. He delivered him from Goliah's ſpear: He delivered him from the javelin of Saul: and (which is proper to this place) He alſo delivered him from the ſword.

From the ſword yet, not from any mans at all, in common, and promiſcuouſly: But (as it is in the verſe) from the malignant ſword: And is there indeed, a malignant ſword? Do I ſay a malignant one? Perhaps there is an evill one, perhaps a wicked one: but to call it a malignant ſword, that is too violent an expreſſion. Indeed the ſword is in no fault, there is no malignancy in the iron: all the malevolency is in him, and is diffuſed through his mind, at whoſe ſide it hangs. For in any other ſenſe, there is no malignant ſword.

Who therefore, I pray you, is that malignant one? Truly it is not he, who openly and in flat termes is miſchievous, or malevolent: Not he, who as an enemy profeſſeth open hoſtility. He is that malignant one, who covertly and in ſecret is malevolent. Who under a ſmooth forehead, hath a feſtered mind: under a painted face, a rotten heart. Who (as Salomon skilfully deſcribes him) Speaks faire, but there are ſeven abominations in his heart, finally he is that malignant one, and his ſword (in as much as he is malignant) is malignant, that is, it is like it's Maſter.

Thoſe Locuſts which I lately mentioned, are the malignant ones. They have a Womans face, but behind a Scorpions tayl: whom I lately called ſtrange children, they are thoſe malignant ones: whoſe mouth is vaine: But for their ſwords point, that is not vaine, (as we ſee) neither wounds it in vaine, but gives a home, and more than that, a malignant wound.

And, is it ſo? Are there ſuch about David, who covertly wiſh him evill? Cannot, ſo good a King, ſo faithfull a ſervant of God, cannot he however, eſcape thoſe malignant ones, Surely he might, and ſo he did. David had ſuch, whom David did not ſatisfie. David had alſo, his malignant ones, and they, their ſwords: and by them and their ſwords, he was in greateſt perill. The King as yet met with no Doeg, and men of Keilah: Now the King met with Shimei and Sheba. He had to deale with His companions, His guide, and Achitophel, His familiar friend. He had to do with Abſolom His ſon, His ſon Abſolom. He met with others, and thoſe: no few: For in many Pſalmes, You may heare Him complaining of the worſt (for they are not the beſt) ſort of men. Yea even in this our Pſalme, twice He complaines of ſome Natives indeed by birth, but in affection forraigners, that is, painted ſubjects, in whoſe Mouth there is no truth, nor truſt to their right hand. David had ſuch as theſe, even he that's like David (if any be like Him) yet ſuch as theſe He ſhall have. And from theſe, namely, once at the eighth verſe: Nor there once alone; But againe alſo at the eleventh, that is againe, and againe, he prayes, to be Delivered. For He knew how perillous this ſword was, that ſurely the enemies ſword in reſpect of it, was full of courteſie. For this ſword was no ſword of Warre, nor of Goliah, nor of the Philiſtims, who openly invade, which becauſe He ſaw, He might avoid: This ſword is the Traytors ſword: Ioab is a ſword, even this ſword; who friendly ſaluted ABNER, kindly embraced Amaſa. Yet thruſt both of them into the belly, and that in ſuch ſort, namely ſo Perilouſly, that hee needed not to give them a ſecond Wound: For with that alone, both their bowels guſhed out upon the Earth. Ioab is a ſword, a perillous ſword: the fault, is in Him.

1 Sam. 21. 9, 22. Pſal. 55. 14. 2 Sam. 18. 33.

Now, (that all may know, how good God is to David.) God Delivered him from this ſword, Him I ſay: For ſome there are, yea ſome Kings, whom He Delivers not: There are ſome

Kings

KINGS, whom he deſtroyes, whom this perillous ſword deſtroyes; Namely, over whom GOD doth not ſtretch forth His Helmet of ſalvation. He, deſtroyed Iſhboſheth, who lay on his bed at Noon. 2 Sam. 4. 5. He, deſtroyed Elam, as he was drinking himſelf drunk, in his Stewards houſe. 1 King. 16. 9. He deſtroyed Joaſh affrighted with the peoples uproare. 2 Chr. 24. 25. He deſtroyed Gedaliah fearleſly feaſting, with Iſhmael, his malicious murtherer. This ſword deſtroyed all theſe: that is, GOD delivered them not. But GOD delivered DAVID, delivered Him (whoever that malignant one was) from his ſword. And becauſe GOD delivered Him, He ſung this verſe to GOD, as it were, his Canticum corripior. And thus much for the Hypotheſis, that is concerning David.

I now come, to our ſelves.

For as GOD formerly delivered his ſervant David: ſo lately He delivered his ſervant James; He delivered both, and both from the ſword, both from the perillous ſword: So, that this verſe, may truly be applied to them both, that it may be rightly ſung: both on this day, this year; and on this day, for every year.

For, now the ſixt year is paſt, ſince on this day (this very day) ſtrange children lay in wait for him: ſtrange children diſſembled with him. Pſalm 5. 48. They inticed him home to their houſe; they entertained him, with all ſeeming courteſie, moreover they promiſed (ſome ſecret thing) vanities, and lies, all. And ſo at laſt, he that was not guilty of wickedneſſe himſelf, and therefore ſuſpecting no evil, Him they brought, whether they deſired, namely to a place, in the very inmoſt room in the houſe, where that Perillous ſword was. There they ſet upon him (againſt the Law of hoſpitality) their gueſt; Nay againſt a far greater Law, for ſubjects aſſaulted their King: His retinue was included, the doores bolted, thus they ſet upon Him, alone, unarmed, voyd of all defence, and aſſiſtance. For then were ſtrange children preſent, who brought forth that ſword, true born Children, who might interpoſe their buckler, and (if need were) their body too, theſe were abſent: All gone away. What, could here be expected, but a certain death? Surely, my mind trembles, to remember how near that ſword was brandiſhed, that He, even felt its cold iron edge, both applied, and more than that, daſhed againſt that ſacred breaſt. What (I ſay) but certain death, the ſword being brandiſhed, ſo near unto him? Even then, GOD freed and delivered him, GOD who gives ſalvation unto Kings, to Kings, His ſervants: Even then, GOD freed, and delivered him, the King, His ſervant, in the midſt of danger, in the very jawes of death; from the midſt of danger, from the very jawes of death, He ſaved, and delivered him. GOD Himſelf (I ſay) delivered Him.

Firſt, by ſtriking that armed man, with fear; who was ready inſtructed, and appointed, to act this great wickedneſſe: So, that he neither durſt, nor could aſſay any thing. Moreover He changed the mind of that armed man ſo ſuddenly, that he, who was appointed to do it, held back his hand, who appointed him thereto (when he would have acted this wickedneſſe.) Further yet by giving preſent courage, both power, and ſtrength ſufficient to the King ad feralem illam palæſtram. That the enemy was not able to do him violence, that the ſonne of wickedneſſe could not hurt him. Pſalm 89. 23. Laſtly by leading thoſe, the right way after a marvellous manner, through unknown paſſages, that knew not the place, unacquainted with the way, and by guiding thoſe men, who being ſummoned by the Kings out-cry, haſted on each ſide, towards his reliefe; (men, for this, ſo happy and faithfull ſervice, worthy eternal memory;) finally by freeing Him, both from this firſt, and alſo from that other ſword, of the other brother, yet more malignant than the perillous one; and ſo freeing Him, that their ſword went thorow their own heart, and their miſchievouſneſſe was turned on their own pate. Pſalm 37. 15. Pſalm 7. 17. Thus the King is ſaved, ſalvation given to the King, given from heaven (if, ever ſalvation was given from heaven, to any) as if, GOD had ſent His hand, from heaven, and brought Him help: at once delivering Him; and at once, overthrowing thoſe perillous cut-throats, and killing them with their own perillous ſword. Surely, this is no humane aſſiſtance; not from man. It is the Lords doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes: In all mens eyes: and, it is wonderfull in our eares: In all mens eares: and for this cauſe, no poſterity, no future age, ſhall paſſe it in ſilence.

But this alſo, ſeemed a ſmall thing to God, unleſſe afterward often, and indeed very lately He had delivered Him (for yet it is not a year ago) from a like, yea from a greater, from a far greater danger, not of the ſword, but of the Perillous Powder: An act ſo horrid, ſo black, ſo foul, ſo accurſed: that, it is to be curſed, with all execrations, that, it almoſt exceeds our belief, who yet our ſelves have ſeen it. Later ages, ſure enough (I think) will ſcarcely credit it, that ever there were in a mans ſhape, ſuch Locuſts from the nether-moſt hell, who ſhould deviſe ſo helliſh practices. Such, as was the magnitude of the danger, ſuch ſhall be the meaſure of our thanſgiving. And verily that late Powder-plot, might make us forget this dayes deliverance. But, far be it from us, For (as I ſaid at firſt) new deliverances are ſo to be celebrated, that old ones are alſo to be renewed. We ſhall ſing Him, His ſong for that in due ſeaſon. Now it is enough to mention it; 2 Sam. 7. 19.

I will no longer offend your patience: I will finiſh the remainder in few words.

THerefore as they, then, ſung this ſong for their King: So, do we, now, for ours. For ſalvation, is not ſo like ſalvation, as is theirs, and ours. Nor verily, is there any where an example, whence we may take a pattern to our ſelves, what it behooves us now to do, ſo fit for us to imitate, as the manner and method of this Pſalm (nor, do I far digreſſe) of this place, in the Pſalm, which which we have now in hand. David doth two things (which the Hebrewes, especially do elegantly expresse:) He mixes Tehilla and Tephilla: (that is) petitions with Thanksgivings: Prayers with a Song. As soon as He had sung His hymn, instantly, with one and the same breath, He said His prayers. For in the foregoing verse, He brought forth His song, He tuned his Strings, takes his Lute, sings thus (as ye have heard) It is He who gives salvation to Kings: it is he who hath delivered David his servant from the perillous sword. And behold immediately (namely in the following verse) He layes his Lute out of his hand; He falls down on his knees, betakes himself to his prayers: and there dictates a prayer for himself and for us, in these words: Save Me, and deliver Me, from the hand of strange children: whose mouth talketh of vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of iniquity. This was the best way for himself, and for his people, whilst he mixed these: and let us imitate his example. And first, as the ground of our duty requires, let us praise this preserver of Kings, the Deliverer of his servant, our King. Let us praise Him with a new song, in singing, with stringed instruments, with Pipes, with wind instruments; with the best and choisest, that our breath, voyce, mind, hand, either hath, or can get. For even the best we have is due to this favour; is due to GOD, for this. Yea, all we have, even the best things are lesse than this favour, lesse than He deserves, for this. But yet, let us assay the best we can, to sing something. And herein let all that is within us, all our bones, confesse unto thee, O Lord, that salvation is thine, that thou giveſt it, that thou giveſt it unto Kings, that thou haſt given it to our King: and in Him, to us all, even, to Three kingdomes, in one; to one in Three. And now, what can we say more unto thee? For thou Lord knoweſt thy servants, though we expresse our minds unworthily; yet inwardly in our minds, and inmost thoughts, we are eternally bound unto thee, for this, the Kings salvation.

תחלה תפלה

Psalm 103.1, & 35, 10.

2 Sam. 7. 20.

But yet, because to have once delivered him, it is not enough, nor twice, or thrice, nor seven times (for as long as he lives, so long is there this danger, from those perillous ones) because all strange children are not in a strange Land. Some there are in ours, even with us: In regard all the sonnes of Belial are not yet dead, at least their father Belial is not dead: But yet is alive, yet he devises his mischievous plots, no lesse now, than in Davids time: No lesse, than any time since David, till this day: No lesse? Yea certainly, and more, because he hath but a short time: Let us also after the manner of our Psalm, least we stay too long in the song, hang up our Lutes a while, and lay them aside for a season; Yea let us also kneel down, and adjoyn our prayes; Yea let us also after his example make publike prayers. No other, than he Himself doth make, here, and in other Psalmes. Here: Save him: Yea deliver him from strange children; from their mouth, right hand, their perillous sword. And out of other Psalmes: * Save now I beseech thee, O Lord, O Lord, I beseech thee send now prosperity. O God, send forth thy strength; stablish this good work that thou haſt wrought for us. * Shew thy marvellous loving kindnesse: † Shew great deliverance to thy King: * Præcipe omnimodam salutem ℣ ACOBO. It is Thou, who haſt given salvation: It is Thou, who haſt delivered: Be thou alwayes the same that Thou art. Alwayes deliver, alwayes save Him, alwayes continue these blessings unto us.

But for those that remain (for I much fear, that yet some remain) strange children, what else pray we, than as Cushy did, 2 Sam. 18.32. For David also, when he, was then in like sort delivered from the sword of a Sonne, both his own, and a strange one, Absalom; * The enemies of my Lord the King and all that rise against him, to do him hurt, let them be as those brothers, brothers in iniquity, mischievous brothers. * So let all thine enemies perish (the enemies of thine anointed) O Lord. But those that love Thee, that love Him: be as the Sun when he goeth forth in his might. That thereby as we, so may our seed enjoy, who under the prosperous successe of his Reigne, have possessed, those eight earthly Beatitudes (in this Psalm) the eight Felicities of this life; Yea that ninth also (worth all the rest) of pure Religion; I pray GOD we may long, and many yeares enjoy the same, under Him, in safety, in health, in long life; (which this four yeares we have done) Yearly paying our vowes, on this day, for this dayes sake, for the salvation given on this day: Alwayes inter-lacing this verse; in the beginning, in the midst, in the end: It is he who gives salvation unto Kings: It is he who hath delivered JAMES his servant, from the perillous sword. To him, be honour, praise, glory, thanksgiving, for ever and ever. Amen.

1 Tim. Chap. IV. Ver. XVII, XVIII, XIX.

Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, that they truſt not in the uncertainty of Riches, but in the living GOD, which giveth us all things to enjoy plenteouſly;

That they do good, be rich in good works, ready to diſtribute, and to communicate.

Laying up in ſtore for themſelves, a good foundation; againſt the time to come, that they may lay hold of Eternal life.

THE commendation of the Word of GOD is, that Every Scripture is profitable for our inſtruction. Every Scripture is profitable; yet, not every Scripture in every place alike. For the Place and Auditory have great intereſt in ſome Scriptures; and a fit Scripture hath a greater and fuller force in his own Auditory. And GOD in ſo excellent a manner hath ſorted His Scriptures, as there lie diſperſed in them, ſeveral Texts, ſeaſonable for each time, and pertinent to each place and degree; for Prince, for people; for rich, for poor: for each, his peculiar Scripture, in due time and place, to be reached them. This Scripture which I have read, whoſe it is, & to whom it ſpeaketh, is at the very reading ſtraight: as one ſaith of the XLI. Pſalm (Bleſſed is he that judgeth rightly of the poor) that it is Scriptura Pauperum, the Poor mans Scripture: So of this, it may be rightly ſaid, that it is Scriptura Divitum, the Rich mans Scripture. And if this 2 Tim. 3. 16.

be the Scripture for rich men, this place is the place of rich men: and therefore, if this Scripture have his place, no where ſo fit as in this place. For no where is there ſuch ſtore of riches, by the [a] Harveſt of the water, which far ſurpaſſeth the harveſt of the ground: No where are the like [b] Sunnes ſealed: No where do they [c] ſuck the abundance of the ſea, and the treaſures hid in the ſand, in like meaſure: No where are the [d] Marchants Noble-mens fellows, and able to lend the Princes of the earth, ſo much as here. Therefore when as I gave all diligence to ſpeak, not only to true things, but alſo ſeaſonable, both for this time and this place, I was directed to this Scripture. I need not to ſay much in this point; to ſhew, it concerneth this Audience. I will ſay, as the Fathers ſay, upon the like occaſion; Pavit Deus tam commoda, quam ſit accommodo. I pray God make it as profitable, as it is pertinent; as fruitfull to you, as it is fit for you.

[b] Ezek. 28.12
[c] Deut. 33.19
[d] Eſay 23.8.

The Diviſion

I. 1. This whole Scripture hath his name given it even in the firſt word: Charge (ſaith he) the rich, &c. It is a Charge.

II. 2. It is directed to certain men: namely, to the rich of this world.

III. 3. It conſiſteth of four branches: whereof two are negative, for the removing of two abuſes:

1. The firſt, Charge them that they be not high-minded.

2. The ſecond, Charge them, that they truſt not in their riches.

The reaſon is added, (which is a Maxime, and a Ground in the Law of Nature, that we muſt truſt to no uncertain thing;) Truſt not in the uncertainty of riches.

The other two are affirmative, concerning the true uſe of riches.

1. The firſt; Charge them that they truſt in God. The reaſon; becauſe, He giveth them all things to enjoy plentifully.

2. The ſecond: Charge them that they do good: that is the ſubſtance: The quantity, that they be rich in good works: the quality, that they be ready to part with, (and a ſpecial kind of doing good) to communicate, to benefit the publick.

And all theſe are one Charge. The reaſon of them all doth follow; Becauſe by this meanes they ſhall lay up in ſtore, and that for themſelves, a good foundation againſt the time to come. The end, That they may obtain eternal life.

I. A Charge.

Præcipe divitibus; Charge the rich of this world, &c, Beloved, here is a Charge, a Præcipe, a Precept, or a Writ, directed unto Timothy, and to thoſe of his Commiſſion to the worlds end, to convent and call before him: He, the rich men of Epheſus; and we, the rich men of this City, and others of other places of the earth, and to give them a charge.

Charges (as you know) uſe to be given at Aſſiſes in Courts from the Bench. From thence is taken this judicial term παραγγέλλειν, as it appeareth, Acts 5. 28. Did not we charge you ſtraightly: ſaith the Bench in the Conſiſtory judicially aſſembled. Whereby we are given to underſtand, that in ſuch Aſſemblies as this is, the Lord of Heaven doth hold His Court, whereunto all men, and (they that of all men ſeem leaſt) the rich and mighty of the world owe both ſuit and ſervice. For as earthly Princes have their Lawes, their Commiſſions, their Miniſters of the Law, their Courts, and Court-dayes, for the maintenance of their Peace: So hath the King of Kings His Lawes and Statutes, His Precepts and Commiſſions by authority delegate, Ite, prædicate, Go preach the Goſpel. His Counſellors at Law, whom Auguſtine calleth Divini juris Conſultos; His Courts in occulto conſcientiæ, in the hid and ſecret part of the heart and conſcience, for the preſervation of his Peace, which the world can neither give nor take away; to the end, that none may offend, or be offended at it.

Rom. 7.
Mat. 28. 19.
Pſal. 7. 8.
Pſal. 119. 165.

This we learn. And with this we learn, all of us, ſo to conceive of, and to diſpoſe our ſelves to ſuch Meetings, as this, as men that are to appear in Court, before the Lord, there to receive a Charge; which when the Court is broken up, we muſt think of how to diſcharge.

In which point, great is the occaſion of complaint, which we muſt take up. For who is there, that with aweand reverence ſtandeth before the Lord, at His charge-keeping, that he receiveth a charge with, at an earthly Bar? Or with that care remembreth the Lord and his Charge, wherewith he continually thinketh upon the Judge and His Charge? Truly the Lords Commiſſion is worthy to have as great reverence and regard attending on it, as the charge of any Prince; truly, it is. Weigh with your ſelfe; is not Gods charge with as much heed and reverence to be received, as an earthly Judges? Abſit ut ſic (ſaith St. Auguſtine) ſed utinam vel ſic: God forbid, but with more heed and reverence; Well, I would it had ſo much, in the mean time: And (which to our ſhame we muſt ſpeak) I would we could do as much for the Bible, as for the Statute-books: for heaven as for earth: for the immortal God as for a mortal man. But whether we do or no, yet as our Saviour Chriſt ſaid of St. John Baptiſt, If ye will receive, this is that Eliah which was to come; ſo ſay I of this Precept, If ye will receive it, this is the Charge the Lord hath laid upon you. And this let me tell you farther, that it is ſuch a Charge, as it concerneth your Peace, the plentifull uſe of all your wealth and riches (in the ſecond Verſe of my Text, Which giveth us all things to enjoy plenteouſly, &c.) Which may move you. Or if that will not, let me add this farther; It is ſuch a Charge, as toucheth your eſtate in everlaſting life, the very laſt words of my Text. That is the well or evil hearing of this Charge, is as much worth as your eternal life is worth: And therefore, He that hath eares to hear let him hear.

Mat. 11. 14.

Mat. 14. 5.

It

It is a Charge then, and consequently to be discharged. To be discharged? Where? Charge, saith he, the rich men. He speaketh to the Rich: You know your own names; you know best, what those rich men are. Shall I tell you? you are the rich, he speaketh unto you. It is the fashion and the fault of this world, to exercise their authority on them most, that need it least: For rich men, to feast them that least need it; for mighty men to preferre them that least deserve it. It is an old Simile, we have oft heard it, that the Lawes are like Cobwebs, that they hold fast the silly flies, but the greater Hornets breake thorow them, as oft as they list. And as there Cobweb-Lawes, which exempt mighty men; So the same corruption that was the cause thereof, would also make Cobweb Divinity. For, notwithstanding the Commission runneth expresly to the Rich, Charge, &c. Notwithstanding they be in great danger, and that of many snares (as the Apostle saith in this Chapter) and therefore need it greatly: Yet (I know not how) it comes to pass, whether, because they think themselves too wise to receive a charge, any charge at all; or because they think themselves too good to receive it, at the hands of such mean men, as we be, (and if they must needs be charged, they would be charged from the councel, from men more Noble and Honourable than themselves) they would not gladly hear it, surely they would not; and because they would not gladly hear it, we are not hasty they should hear it. And great reason, why (as we think:) for as it is true which is in the Psalm 49. 18. So long as they do good to themselves, men will speak good of them; So it is true backward too, So long as we speak well of them, spare them, call not on them, they will do good to us. And otherwise, if we spare them not, but prosecute our charge, then cometh Odi Micheam filium Imle, I hate Micheas the son of Imlah. And who would willingly live in disgrace, and sustain, I say, not the fierce wrath, but the heavy look of a man in authority? That makes the office of giving a charge, a cold office, and therefore to decay, and be shunned of all hands; that makes us, if we cannot of the Eunuch learn to speak good of the King: yet to follow Balak's counsel at the least, neither to bless nor curse: that makes, that though for shame of the world, we will not set up for Upholsters, and stuffe cushions and pillowes, to lay them under their elbowes; yet for fear of men, we shun the Prophet Esay's occupation, to take the trumpet and disease them, lest we lose Balak's promotion, or Ahab's friendship; Esau's portion, or I wot not what else, which we will not be without. In a word: this maketh, that Jonah was never more unwilling to deliver this message at Nineve, than is Timothy to give his Charge at Ephesus.

The Apostle saw this, and what it would come to: and that you may see, that he saw it, you shall understand, he hath besides this of yours, directed another Writ to us, ver. 13. I charge thee, &c, running in very rigorous and peremptory terms, able to make any that shall consider them aright, to tremble. Straightly commanding us, in the name of God the Father, and of the Lord Jesus Christ, laying before us the Passion of Christ, If there be any grace, and the day of Judgement, and there be any fear, that we fulfill every part of our charge, and immediately after nameth this your charge for one. And knowing that we are given to fear Princes and Lords, he telleth us of the Prince of all Princes, and Lord of all Lords; Knowing, that we are given to fear, and be dazled with the glittering of their pomp (which yet a man may abide to look on) he telleth us of Him, whose brightness no eye may once abide; Knowing, that we fear honour and power, though it last but for a small time: He feareth us with one, whose honour and power lasteth for ever.

Beloved in the Lord, I beseech you but weigh the place: weigh it, and have pity on us. For, Nunquid nos recipimus? nunquid nos delere possumus? Si delemus, timemus deleri (saith St. Augustine.) We writ not this charge, our pens dealt not in it; it was not we that writ, and it is not we that can blot it out, unless we our selves will be blotted out of the book of life.

Such is our charge, as you see, to charge you: and but for this charge, but that we are commanded, but that we are threatned, and that in so fearfull a manner threatned, we would never do it; of all men, we should never deal with the rich. For who would not choose to hold his peace, and to seek his own ease for his charge, many times chargeable, sometimes dangerous, evermore unsavory, but for this Process that is out against us? For my selfe, I profess, that in the same words that S. Augustine did sometime, Ad istam otiosissimam securitatem nemo me vinceret; In this discreet kind of Idleness, no man should go beyond me, if Saint Paul would be content: if order might be taken, to have these Verses cancelled: if we could deliver (I say not yours, but) our own souls with silence. But this standing in force, Coget nos Paulus iste, we are inforced by this Paul: His præcipio tibi, I charge you, drives us to our Præcipe illis, to charge them. We charge not you, but when we are charged our selves; we terrifie not you, but when we are first terrified our selves. And I would to God we knowing this terrour, might both fear together this day, at the charge-giving, that so we might both rejoyce together in the great day, at the charge-answering. This may serve: and I beseech you, let it serve to stand between us and your displeasure in this behalf: and seeing the Commission is penned to our hand, and that Rich men are in it nominatim (except the leaven of affection shew it self too evidently in us) to think we cannot otherwise do: and therefore it is, because the commandment of our God is upon us, is heavy upon us. The charge it followeth.

Charge

II. 1 The first point of the Charge: Not to be High-minded.

Charge the Rich, &c. This is the first point of the charge, that they be not high minded: 1. First, against that, which if it come with all the riches, yea, all the vertues in the world, it spoileth them all; that is, against Pride. 2. Secondly, against that which is the root of this bitter branch, and the prop and stay of an high raised mind; namely, a vain trust in our riches. Both these forbidden, by meanes of their uncertainty ἀδηλότης: such, as a man cannot tell where to have them, therefore not to be boasted of, therefore not to be trusted in.

Ever since our first Fathers, by infection took this morbum Satanicum, this devillish disease (Pride) of the Devil: such tinder is in our nature, that every little spark sets us on fire: our nature hath grown so light, that every little thing puffeth us up, and sets us aloft in our altitudes presently. Yea indeed, so light we are, that many times, when the gifts are low, yet for all that, the mind is as high, as the bramble: low in qualities (GOD knoweth) yet had his mind higher than the highest Cedar in Lebanon. But if we be but of mean stature once, but a thought higher than others our fellowes, if never so little more in us, than is in our neighbours, presently we fall into Simons case, we seem to our selves as he did, to be τὶ μέγας, no doubt some goodly great thing. But if we come once to any growth indeed, then presently our case is Haman's case: Who but he? Who was he, that the King would honour more than him? Nay, who was there, that the King could honour, but he? He, and none but he. Through this apt nesse in us that we have to learn the Devils lesson, the Devils Discite a me, for I am proud; (for so it is, by opposition of CHRIST's lessons, which is Discite a me, quia mitis sum, because I am meek and gentle;) we are ready to corrupt our selves in every good gift of GOD: in Wisdom, in Manhood, in Law, in Divinity, in Learning, or Eloquence: every and each of these serveth for a stirrup to mount us aloft in our own conceits. For, where each of the former hath (as it were) his own circuit (as Wisdom ruleth in Counsel; Manhood in the Field; Law in the Judgement-seat; Divinity in the Pulpit; Learning in the Schooles; and Eloquence in Perswasion:) only Riches ruleth without limitation: Riches ruleth with them all, ruleth them all, and over-ruleth them all: his Circuit is the whole world. For which cause, some think, when he saith, Charge the rich, he presently addeth, of this world, because this world standeth altogether at the devotion of riches; and he may do what he will in this world, that is rich in this world. So said the Wise man long ago, Pecunia obediunt omnia: all things answer Money; Money mastereth all things; they all answer at his call; and they all obey at his commandement. Let us go lightly over them all; you shall see, that they all else have their several predicaments to bound them, and that Riches is only the transcendent of this world.

Judg. 9. 15.

Acts 8. 9.

Ester 6. 6.

Matth. 11. 29.

Eccl. 10. 19.

Wisdom, ruleth in Counsel; so do Riches: for we see, in the Court of the great King Artaxerxes, there were Counsellours, whose wisdom was to be commanded by riches, even to hinder a publike benefit, the building of the Temple: Manhood ruleth in the warre; so do Riches: Experience teacheth us, it is so: It is said, it was they, that won Deventer; and that it was they, and none but they, that drave the Switzers out of France, and that without stroke strucken. Law governeth in the Seat of Justice; so do Riches: and oftentimes they turn Justice it self into wormwood, by a corrupt Sentence; but more often doth it turn Justice into vineger, by long standing, and infinite delayes, yet Sentence will come forth. Divinity ruleth in the Church and Pulpit; so do Riches: For, with a set of silver-pieces (saith Augustine) they brought Concionatorem mundi, the Preacher of the world JESUS CHRIST to the Barre, and the Disciple is not above his Master. Learning ruleth in the Schooles; so do Riches: And indeed, there, Money setteth all to school. For (to say the truth) Riches have so ordered the matter there, as Learning is now but the Usher; Money he is the Master: the Chair it self, and the disposing of the Chair, is his too. Eloquence ruleth in perswasion; and so do riches: when Tertullus had laboured a goodly flowing Oration against Paul, Felix looked, that another, a greater Oratour should have spoken for him: namely, that Something should have been given him: and if that Oratour had spoken his short pithy sentence, Tantum dabo, Tertullus his Oration had been cleat dasht. Tantum dabo is a strange piece of Rhetohick; Devise as cunningly, pen as curiously as you can, it overthrowes all. Tantum valent quatuor syllabæ, such force is there in four syllables. Though indeed, some think (it being so unreasonable short as it is, but two words) that it cannot be the Rhetorike of it, that worketh these strange effects, but that there is some sorcery or witchcraft in them, in Tantum dabo. And surely a great Sorcerer (Simon Magus) used them to Peter: and it may well be so, for all estates are shrewdly bewitched by them. I must end: for it is a world to think and tell, what the Rich of the world, may do in the world.

Ezra 4. 5.

Acts 24. 27.

Acts 8. 19.

So then, Riches, seeing they may do so much, it is no marvel though they be much set by. Et divites cum habeant quæ magni fiunt ab omnibus, quid mirum, si ab omnibus ipsi magni fiant; & cum magni fiant ab omnibus, quid mirum si & a se? Rich men having that which is much set by, no marvel though of all men they be much set by; and if all other men set much by them, no marvel, if they set much by themselves; and to set much by a mans self, that is to be high-minded. It is our own Proverb in our own tongue: As riseth our good, so riseth our blood. And Saint Austine saith, that Each fruit, by kind, hath his worm breeding in it: as the Pear, his; the Nut, his; and the Bean, his; So, Riches have their worm, Et vermis divitiarum, Superbia; and the worm of riches, is Pride. Whereof we see a plain proof in Saul: Who, while he was in a poor estate, and his boy and he could not make five pence between them, was as the Scripture saith, low in his own eyes: after, when the wealth and pleasant things of Israel were his, he grew so stern, as he forgat himself, his friends, friends, and GOD too: and at every word that liketh him not, was ready to run David, Jonathan, and every one through with his javeline. It is very certain; where riches are, there is great danger of pride. I desire you to think, there is so, and not to put me to justifie GOD'S wisdom herein, in perswading and proving, that this charge is needfull for you that be rich; that it was needfull for the Prophet, to preach under the Law. If riches increase, set not your heart on the top of them: Let not that rise as they rise: Nor for the other Prophet, Give me not riches, lest I wax proud: Nor for the Apostle Paul under the Gospel, to say: Charge them that be rich in this world, that they be not high-minded. I beseech you, Honour GOD, and ease me so much as to think, there was high cause, it should be in charge; and that, if a more principal sin had been reigning in the rich, this sin should not have had the principal place, as it hath. Psalm 62. 10. Prov. 30. 9.

2 Sam. 9. 21.

How then? What, are you able to charge any here? will some say: It is not the manner of our Court, nor of any Court, that I know. To us it belongeth only to deliver the Charge, and to exhort, that if none be proud, none would be; and if any be; they would be lesse: and, if any be not humble, they would be; and if any be humble, they would be more. You that are the Court, your part is to enquire, and to present, and to endict; and that, every own in his own conscience, as in the presence of GOD, unto Him to approve your innocencie, or of Him to sue for your pardon. You find none (you will say:) I would to GOD you might not.

When a Judge at an Assize, giveth his charge concerning treason and such like offences, I dare say, he would with all his heart, that his charge might be in vain, rather than any Traytour or offender should be found. A Phisitian, when he hath tempered and prepared his potion, if there be in him the heart of a true Physitian, desireth (I know) that the potion might be cast down the kennel, so that the patient might recover without it: So, truly, it is the desire of my heart (CHRIST He knoweth) that this charge may not find one man guilty amongst all these hearers; amongst so many men, not one high-minded man. I wish, it might be in vain. The best Sessions and Potions, and Sermons are those, which are in vain: I say not, in vain, if there be cause of reproof and no amends. But, if there be no cause, and so it be in vain, I joy therein, and will joy. But, if it be far unlikely, amongst so great riches as is here, to find no pride at all; then, hear the charge and present your selves and find your selves guilty here in our Office, this day, while you may find grace, lest you be tried and found so, in that day, when there shall be no hope of grace, but only a fearfull expectation of judgement.

Which that you may do the better, so many as GOD shall make willing (as, some (I hope) He doth) I will inform you, how to try your selves; referring you, to the several branches, in our Statutes, in the High Court of Parliament in Heaven: laying them out unto you, as I find them in the Records of the HOLY GHOST.

The points are three in number. First. if the mind of any man be so exalted, that he looketh down on his brethren, as if he stood on the top of a Leads, and not on the same ground they do, that man is high-minded. Saint Augustine saith well: Excipe pompatica hac & volatica, they are the same that you are. They have not vestem communem, the same coat; but they have cutem communem, the same skin: and within a few yeares, when you die, if a man come with a Joyner and measure all that you carrie with you, they shall carrie away with them as much: and within a few yeares after, a man shall not be able to discern the shoulder-blade of one of them, and one of you. Therefore no cause, why you should incedere inflati, insericati, and from a high mind, bewraying it self by a high look, contemn them, as many of you do. I say then, if any of you be a child of Anak, and look down so upon another, as in his sight his brethren seem as grashoppers: 1 Whether it appear in the countenance, in drawing up his eie-browes, in a disdainfull and scornfull eye; such an one as David (though he found no penal statute to punish it) could never abide (and David was a man after GOD'S own heart, and therefore neither can GOD abide it:) 2 Or whether it appear in a proud kind of Dialect of speech, as was that of Saul's; Ubi nunc est iste filius Ishai? Where is this Sonne of Ishai? that he come to the Pharisees Non sunt sicut: 3 Or whether it be in the course of their life, and that they be like to the great fishes (to pikes) that think, all the little fishes in the stream were made for them to feed on. So that, it appeareth, they care not, what misery, what beggerie, what slaverie they bring all men to, so they may soke in the broth of the Cauldron, and welter in their wealth and pleasure: who are in their streets and Parishes as Lions, a great deal more feared than beloved; as implacable as Lamech to bear any injurie, and will have, for one drop of blood, no lesse than a mans life: what speak I of bearing injurie? which will do injurie, and that for no other reason but this, thus it must be, for Hophni will have it not thus, but thus; and except they may do thus (what they will; to whom they will, when and how they will) forsooth they do not govern, their authority is nothing; in this sort, over-bearing all things with their countenance and wealth, and whosoever standeth but up, drawing him before the Judgement-seats, and wearying him out with Law. These men who do thus, from a high in-bearing of the head, in phrase of fleech, and in the order, or rather disorder of their dealing: over-look, over-crow, and over-bear their brethren of mean estate; it is certain, they be high-minded: Enquire and look, whether any be so. 1 Numb. 33. 34. Prov. 30. 13. Psalm 101. 5. 1 Sam. 20. 27. Habac. 2. 14. Ezek. 11. 3. Zeph. 3. 3. 1 Sam. 2. 15. 1 Reg. 21. 7. James 2. 6.

Secondly, if any mind climb so high, that the boughes will bear him no longer, by exalting himself above either his ability, condition, or calling (a fault, which hath like to cost our times dear) that mans footing will fail him, he will down; he and his mind are too high a great deal. The late treasons and conspiracies came from such kind of mindes. For, when the mindes of men will will over-reach their abilities, what must be the end, but (as we have seen of late) to prove Traytors? Why, because they have swoln themselves out of their skin. Why so? because they had lasted on more on their pleasures than they had. For, so doing, when they had over-reached themselves, they became πρωτεῦσι, they must take some heady enterprise in hand, what is that? to become 2 Tim. 3. 4. προδόται; that, seeing their credit is decayed in this State, they may set up anew; and that is, by over-turning the old.

And not only this passing the ability is dangerous to the over-turning of a Common-wealth; but the passing of a mans condition too: and tendeth to the impoverishing: and, at last, to the overthrow of the estate also. 1 Whether it be excesse of diet: as when being no Magistrate, but plain Mr. Nabal, his dinner must be like to the feast of a King. 2 Or whether it be in excesse of 1 Sam. 25. 36. apparel, wherein the pride of England now, as the pride of Ephraim in times past, [a] testifieth against a Hos. 5. 5. her to her face. 3 Or whether it be in [b] lifting up the gate too high; that is, in excesse of building.
b Prov. 17. 16. 4 Or whether it be in keeping too great a traine (Esau's case) that he go with [c] four hundred men c Gen. 32. 6. at his tail: whereas the fourth part of the fourth part would have served his Father well enough.
5 Or whether it be in perking too high in their alliance, the Brambles son in Lebanon, must match
Reg. 14. 8: with the Cedars daughter. These are evidences and signes set down to prove a high mind: see and search into your selves, whether you find them or no.

There is yet of this feather another kind of exalting our selves above that we ought, much to 1 Cor. 10. 14. be complained of in these dayes. S. Paul calleth it a stretching of our selves beyond measure. Thus, if a man be attained to any high skil in Law, which is the gift of GOD; or if a man be grown wise, and experienced well in the affaires of this world, which is also His good blessing: presently by vertue of this, they take themselves to be so qualified, as they be able to over-rule our matters in Divinity, able to prescribe Bishops how to govern, and Divines how to preach; so to determine d 1 Tim. 2. 7. our cases, as if they were professed with us; and that many times, [d] affirming things they know not, e Jude 10. and [e] censuring things they have little skill of. Now seeing we take not upon us to deal in cases of your Law, or in matters of your Trade, we take, this is a stretching beyond your line. That in so doing you are [f] a people that controll the Priest: that you are too high, when you [g] set your selves
f Hos. 4. 4. over them that are over you in the Lord: and that this is no part of that [h] sober wisdom, which g 1 Thes 5. 12. Saint Paul commendeth to you; but of that cup-shotten wisdom which he there condemneth.
h Rom. 12. 4. Which breaking compasse and out-reaching, is (no doubt) the cause of these lamentable rents and ruptures in the Lord's Net, in our dayes. For, Only by pride cometh contention, saith the Wise man. Which point I wish might be looked upon and amended. Sure, it will marre all in the end.

3 Thirdly, if a man lift up himself too high, any of both these wayes, GOD hath taken order i Hos. 6. 6. to abate him and take him down: for, He hath appointed His Prophets, to [i] prune those that are too k 2 Cor. 10. 4. high; and He hath ordained His Word, to [k] bring down every imagination that shall be exalted against it. Now then, if there be any man, that shall seek to set himself without the shot of it; and is so high-minded, as that he cannot suffer the words of exhortation, and where God hath said, Charge them that be rich, he cannot abide to hear any Charge (and such there be:) sure, that man without all question is very high-minded; and, if he durst, he would tear out this leaf, and all other where like charge is given thorow the Bible. Of Nabal it is recorded, [l] He was so surly, a man
l 1 Sam. 25. 17. might not speak to him: Of [m] Abner (a great man, and a special stay of the house of Saul) that m 2 Sam. 3. 7. upon a word spoken, of his adulterous life with one of Saul's minions, he grew to such choler, that he forgat all, and laid the plot that cost his Master Ishbosheth his kingdom. Micheah professied good things, that is to say, profitable to Ahab, the event shewed it: yet because he did not professie good things, that is, such as Ahab would hear, he spared not openly to professe, he hated him: and whereas the false Prophets were fed at his own table, and fared no worse then he and his Queen, he 1 King. 22: took order for Micheah's diet, that it should be the bread of affliction, and the water of trouble; and all for a charge-giving. These here (I dare boldly affirm) high-minded men in their generations: If any be like these, they know what they are. If then there be any that refuse to be pruned and n Deut. 29. 19. trimmed by the Word of God; 1 Who either when he heareth the words of the charge, [n] blesseth him in his heart, and saith, Tush, he doth but prate; th se things shall not come upon me, though I walk still according to the stubbornesse of mine own heart: 2 Either in hearing the Word of God, takes upon him (his flesh, and blood, and he) to sit on it, and censure it: and say to himself one while, this is well spoken, while his humour is served; another while, this is foolishly spoken, now he babbleth, because the Charge sits somewhat near him: 3 Either is in the Pharisees case, which q Gal. 1. 16. after they have heard the Charge, do (as they did at CHRIST) [q] ἐκμυκτηρίζειν, jest, and scoffe, o Luke 16. 14. and make themselves merry with it, and wash it down with a cup of Sack, and that [o] because they
p Jer. 6. 10. were covetous: If in very deed [p] the Word of God be to them a reproach, and they take like delight in both, and well were they if they might never hear it; and to testifie their good conceit of the Word, shew it in the account of the Ephod, which is a base and contemptible garment in their eyes, and the Word in it and with it (this is Michol's case.) Whosoever is in any of these mens cases, is in the case of a high-minded man; and that of the highest degree: for they lift themselves up, not against earth and man, but against heaven and GOD Himself. O beloved, you that be in wealth and authority, love and reverence the Word of GOD. It is the root that doth bear you; It is the Majestie thereof that keepeth you in your thrones, and maketh you be, that you are: But for Ego dixi Dii estis (a parcell-commission out of this commission of ours) the madnesse of the people
Psal. 82. 5. would bear no government, but run head-long, and overthrow all Chaires of Estate, and break in pieces all the Swords and Scepters in the world; which you of this City had a ſtrange experience of in Jack Straw and his meiny, and keep a memorial of it in your City Scutcheon, how all had gone down, if this Word had not held all up. And therefore, honour it I beſeech you; I ſay, honour it. For, when the higheſt of you your ſelves, which are but graſſe, and your Lordſhips glory and Worſhip, which is the flower of this graſſe, ſhall periſh and paſſe away, this Word ſhall continue for ever. Eſay 40. 8. And if you receive it now, with due regard and reverence, it will make you alſo to continue for ever.

This is your Charge, touching the firſt branch. I beſeech you, enquire of it, whether there be any guilty in theſe points: And if there be, ſuffer us to do our Office: that is, to humble you, or elſe ſure the LORD will do His: that is, pull down riches, and mind, and man, and all. Patimini falcem occantem, ne patiamini ſecurim extirpantem. GOD will not ſuffer it certainly: He would not ſuffer it in a [q] King; He would not ſuffer it in an [r] Angel: He cannot bear it, to riſe, in an [r] Apoſtle, for the greatneſſe of revelations: therefore, He will not bear it in any man for any cauſe whatſoever. Let this be the concluſion of this point.

[ſ] 1 Cor. 12. 7.

We ſhall never have pride well pluckt up, ſo long as the root of it ſticks ſtill; that is, a Vaine confidence in riches. For if we doubted them, we would not truſt in them, we would not loſt of them. But, we truſt in them: and that inordinately, as counter-meanes againſt GOD: not ſubordinately, as under-meanes unto GOD: and in ſo doing, we tranſlate GOD'S Office unto us, and our homage unto Him, to a plate of ſilver, or a wedge of gold. And that is (Saint Paul ſaith) the worldly mans idolatry. And indeed there is little difference: It is but turning the ſentence of the Prophet David; of Idolaters, to ſay thus; Their Idols are ſilver and gold; and of the Worldly men, thus: Silver and gold are their Idols.

2 The ſecond Point. Not to truſt in uncertain riches. Coloſſ. 3. 5. Pſalm 135. 15.

We may examine our ſelves, in this point of the Charge: namely, whether our truſt be in our riches, by two wayes: For it being a received ground; that our ſtrength is our confidence; where we take our chief ſtrength to lie, that is it certainly, which we truſt to. Now, when that is, we ſhall ſoon find. 1 If we can certifie our ſelves, in our need, among all meanes, what doth firſt offer it ſelf in our intention; 2 And again, when all our meanes forſake us, and fail, what is our laſt ſuccour in executions. Prov. 24. 22.

By courſe of nature, every thing, when it is aſſaulted, ever rouzeth that part firſt, wherein his principal ſtrength lieth: if it be in his tuskes, them; or in his hornes, or whatſoever it is, that. To a poor man (if he have a cauſe in hand) there is nothing cometh to mind but GOD and innocency, and the goodneſſe of his cauſe: there is his ſtrength, and that is the Horn of his ſalvation. But, the rich, (ſaith Amos) hath gotten him Hornes in his own ſtrength; and not iron hornes, as were Zedekia's, but golden-hornes, with which he is able to puſh any cauſe, till he have conſumed it. For, indeed, if he be to undertake ought, the firſt thing that cometh to his head is, Thus much will diſpatch it: Such a gift will I aſſure ſuch a man, and ſuch a gift will ſtop ſuch a mans mouth, and ſo it is done: Neither is GOD in all his thoughts. Amos 9. 13.

Tell me then, if your affaires, what cometh firſt to mind? nay, tell your ſelves what it is Aures omnium pulſo (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) conſcientiæ ſingulorum convenio: Tell your ſelves, what it is; and by this, try and know, wherein your truſt is; whether this charge meet with you or no, whether your riches be the ſtrength of your confidence.

Now lightly, what we firſt think of, that we laſt fly to. It is ſo. Salomon ſaw it in his time and ſaid, The rich mans wealth is his caſtle: that even as men, when they are foiled in the field, and beaten from the City-walls, flye laſt of all into the Caſtle, and there think themſelves ſafe, as in their place of chief ſtrength; So, it falleth out with the rich of this world: in any of their cauſes; when juſtice, and equity, and truth, and right, and GOD, and good men, and a good conſcience and all forſaken them (and yet yield they will not, in the pride of an high mind) they know, when all other have forſaken them, their purſe will ſtand to them: and thither, as to their ſtrongeſt ſalvation they fly; when nothing elſe comforts them. So that, when they cannot in heart ſay to GOD, Thou art my hope, their matter is ſo bad they do ſay ('tis he, in Job) to their Wedge of gold: Well yet, thou art my confidence. And ſurely, he that deviſeth or purſueth an unrighteous cauſe, becauſe his hand hath ſtrength, that man may be arraigned of the point. As again if any ſay, and ſay within truly (dic, dic, ſed intus dic, ſaith Auguſtine) with all my riches, with all my friends, and all the meanes I can make. I can do nothing againſt the truth, when a man is ſo rich, that he is poor to do evil; ſo wiſe, that he is a fool to do evil? ſo truſteth in his riches, that he dare not take an evil cauſe in hand, no more than the pooreſt Commoner in the City; I dare diſcharge that man the Court for this point. Oh beloved, think of theſe things, and ſecretly betwixt GOD and you, uſe your ſelf to this examination: Sure if GOD be GOD, if there be any truth in Him, you ſhall find grace, peace and comfort in it at the laſt. Prov. 8. 11. Job 31. 24. Mic. 2. 2.

Charge the rich, that they be not high-minded, nor truſt, &c. And, why not high-minded? and why not truſt? Inclufively the reaſon is added in theſe words, becauſe of the uncertainty of riches. It is Pauls reaſon; and it is Salomons too, who knew better what belonged to riches, than Paul or any other. Travel not too greedily for them, beſtow not all thy wiſdom upon them (ſaith he:) for they have the wings of an Eagle, and will take their flight of a ſudden. Such is Saint Paul's word here, the very ſame. We behold them, we hold them, they are here with us; let us but turn our ſelves aſide a little, and look for them, and they are gone. It is, as if he ſhould ſay; Indeed if we could pinion the wings of our riches, if we could nail them down faſt to us, then were there ſome ſhew or ſhadow, why we ſhould repoſe truſt in them: But it is otherwiſe; they are exceeding uncertaine; even the harveſt of the water much above all trades. Yea, I take it, the Merchants confeſſe ſo much, before they be aware; For; by this, he claimeth to be allowed an extraordinary gaine, becauſe he ventureth his trafficke as uncertaine, and that he is driven to hazard and put in a venture his goods continually, and many times his perſon, and (to make him a right venture) many times his ſoule too. And, if they be not uncertaine, how commeth it then to paſſe, the rich men themſelves are ſo uncertaine? that is, that they that were but the other day a little before, of principall credit, within a while after, and a very ſhort while after, their bills will not be taken? And if riches be not uncertaine, what need they upon a night of foule weather, Such Aſſurances upon the Exchange? What need the Merchants have ſecurity one of another? What need they, to have their eſtates ſure, and ſo good? ſuch aſſurances and conveyances, ſo ſtrong, yea, more ſtrong than the wit of man can deviſe, if both riches and men be not uncertaine? I know, they pretend the mans mortality: but, they know, they meane many times, the mortalitie of his riches, rather than himſelfe; or at the leaſt, of one as of the other. I will by judged by themſelves.

I would have you marke Saint Paul's manner of ſpeech. Before, he called them not rich, barely; but, with an addition, the rich of the world. Sure, it is thought of divers of the beſt Writers both old and new (I name of the new, M. Calvin; and of the old, Saint Auguſtine) that this addition is a diminution; and that it is (as it were) a barre, in the Armes of all rich men; and that; even by that word, he meanes to enthwite them, and (as I may ſay) to cry them down; ſo, to make an entrance to his charge, that men ſhould not be too proud of them. For, being of this world, they muſt needs ſavour of the ſoile; be as this world is (that is tranſitory, fickle and deceitfull. And now he comes in with riches, againe; and will not put it alone, but calleth it the uncertaintie of riches. And I ſee, it is Holy Ghoſt's faſhion, not in this place onely, but all along the Scriptures, to ſpeake nothing magnifically of them, as the manner of the world is to doe. Saint Paul calleth them not rich, but the rich of this world: Saint Iohn likewiſe calleth them not goods ſimply, but this worlds goods. Saint Paul calleth them not riches, but the uncertainty of riches: Our SAVIOUR CHRIST calleth them not riches, but the deceitfulneſſe of riches. So David, the plate and arras and rich furniture of a wealthy man, calleth it of purpoſe, the glory of a mans houſe; not his glory, but the glory of his houſe; (that is Saint Chryſoſtomes not.) And Salomon calleth them (as they be indeed) GODS bleſſings of His left hand. For, immortalitie, eternal life, that onely is the bleſſings of His right hand. All, to learne us, not to boaſt our ſelves, to ſtay our ſelves, or (as CHRIST calleth it) to rejoyce (I ſay not, as He to His Diſciples, that a few devills, but) that a few mineralls be ſubject unto us; but that, by our humbleneſſe of minde, truſt in God, dealing truly with all, and mercifully with our poore brethren, we are aſſured, that our names are written in the booke of life. This then is the uncertainty of our riches; becauſe, they are the riches of this world (the world, and they, are all within the compaſſe of our Text) that is, you muſt leave them to the world, they are none of yours. Denique ſi veſtra ſint (ſaith Gregorie) tollite ea vobiſcum, If they be yours, why doe you not take them with you, when you goe? By leaving them behinde you to the world, you confeſſe, they are not yours, but the worlds. But, indeed, they are the riches of this world; Hic enim acquiruntur, hic vel amittuntur, vel dimittuntur: here you get them, and here you may loſe them; here you get them, and here you muſt leave them. And in this disjunctive, you have the certainty of riches: the very certainty is loſing or leaving, that is, foregoing; ſo, the very certainty is an uncertainty. Leave them, or loſe them we muſt: leave them when we die, or loſe them while we live. One end they muſt have, finem tuum, or finem ſuum; thy end, or their owne end. You muſt either leave them when you die, or they will leave you while you live, this is certaine: but, whether you, them; or, they you; this is uncertain. Iob tarried himſelf, his riches went: The Rich mans riches tarried, but he himſelf went: One of theſe ſhall be, we know; but which of them ſhall be, or when, or how, or how ſoone it ſhall be, that we know not.

Mat. 13. 22.

Pſal. 49. 16.

Luk. 12.

Let us briefly conſider this double uncertainty.

1. Of our riches ſtaying with us firſt.

2. And then, of our ſtaying with them.

1. In 2 Cor. 11. 26. when as he would glory, he ſaith, He will glory in his infirmity: which when he would recount; as a principall part of it, he reckoneth, that he had been in perills of waters, in perills of robbers, of his owne nation, among the Gentiles, in the City, in the wilderneſſe, in the ſea, and amongſt falſe brethren. If this were frailty then (ſure) fraile and weak are riches. And ſure, if the rich will glory, they muſt glory with Saint Paul: for, they are in all, and in more and greater than the Apoſtle ever was. He was in perills of water; they in perill both of water and fire: He was in perill of robbers, they in perill of Rovers by ſea, and Robbers by land: He in perill of his owne nation; they are in perill of our own nation, and of other nations: both removed as the Moore and Spaniards, and neere home, as the Dunkirker: He in perill of ſtrangers; they, not of ſtrangers only, but of their own houſhold, their ſervants and factours: He in perill of the Sea, they, both of the tempeſt at the Sea, and the Publican on land: He in perill of the wilderneſſe, that is, of wild beaſts; they, not only of the wild beaſt, called the Sycophant, but of the tame beaſts too, called the flatterer: He in danger of falſe brethren; and ſo are they in perill of certaine falſe brethren called willfull Bankrupts, and of certaine other called deceitfull Lawyers; for the one, their debts; for the other eſtates and deeds can have no certainty.

Mat. 6. Muſculus on that place (where CHRIST willeth Our treaſure to be laid, where no moths come) ſaith ſaith, his Auditors did laugh in conceit, at CHRIST, that frayed them with moths, their maids ſhould deal with the moths well enough: (Saith he) you think, he meant the ſilly poore flies: Tuſh, you are deceived, what ſay you to Tineæ urbanæ, evill Creditors? You muſt needs credit, you can have no vent, for your merchandize: and what ſay you to a ſecond kind of moths, called Tineæ forenſes, Weſtminſter-Hall-moths? (for I truſt, I may ſpeak of the corrupt Lawyer, with the favour of the better ſort) you muſt needs credit them with your evidence and eſtates, it is not certaine what wealth theſe two moths doe waſt, and in what uncertainty mens riches are, by their meanes.

Theſe are out of Saint Paul's perils: he was free from theſe moths. But many rich men might be brought forth in a fair day and ſhewed, whoſe ſubſtance hath by theſe moths been fretted to pieces. Thus little certainty have we, of their ſtaying with us.

2 But grant, Let it be that they were certaine: yet, except we our ſelves were ſure to ſtay with them alſo, it is as good as nothing. That there may be a certainty between two things (as a man and his wealth) to continue together, they muſt either of them be ſure: elſe, if the one faile, where is the others aſſurance? Grant then, we were certaine of them, we are not certaine of our ſelves; and in very deed, we are no more certaine of them, than they of us. Leaſes of them we have for ſixtie yeares; but they have no leaſes of us for three houres: If they might take leaſes of us too, it were ſomewhat. Now, when the Leaſe is taken, nay when the Fee-ſimple is bought, and the houſe; and the ware-houſe filled, and the purſe too, if GOD ſay but Hac nocte, it daſhes all. For which cauſe; I thinke, Saint James (ſpeaking in two ſeverall places of our life, and our riches) our riches he compareth to the graſſe, of no certainty; it will either wither or be plucke up ſhortly: but this is a great certainty in reſpect of that of our life, which he reſembleth to a vapour which we ſee now, and by and by we turn us to look for it, and it is vaniſhed away. To us then that are uncertaine of our ſelves, they cannot be but riches of uncertainty. Luk. 12. James 1. 11.

But, let us admit, we were ſure of both theſe, what is it to have riches and not to enjoy them? And the enjoying of riches dependeth upon two uncertainties more.

1 Firſt, a mans uncertainty, which hangeth upon the favour of a Prince; which is many times wavering & uncertain. I know not, whether I ſhall make you underſtand it, becauſe of the want of examples in our time, by meanes of the mild and bleſſed government that we live in. For, a practice it hath been, and many Records doe our Chronicles affoord, in the daies of ſome Princes of this Realme, when a man was growen to wealth, to picke holes and make quarrels againſt him; and ſo ſeize his goods into the Princes hand: to uſe wealthy Cittizens as ſpunges, to roule them up & down in moiſture till they be full, and then to wring all out of them again. God wot, an eaſie matter it is, if a Prince ſtand ſo minded, to finde matter of diſgrace againſt a ſubject of ſome wealth; and then he might fare never a with the better for his wealth, for fine and forfeiture whereof, rather than any fault elſe, the buſineſſe it ſelfe was made againſt him. We cannot tell, what this meaneth; we may thanke the gracious government, we live under; ſo that, I thinke, I do ſcarce ſpeak ſo that I am underſtood. But, ſuch a thing there is, ſuch an uncertainty belonging to riches, whether we conceive it or no,

2 Againe, if the times which we live in, happen to prove unquiet and troubleſome, then againe comes another uncertainty. For, the dayes being evill and dangerous, a man can have no joy, and indeed no certainty neither of riches. For, if there fall an invaſion, or garboile into the State by forrein or Civill warre, then (if ever) is Iobs ſimile verified, that Riches are like a cobweb; that which a man ſhall be weaving all his life long, with great adoe and much travell, there comes me a ſouldier, a barbarous ſouldier, with his broom, and in the turning of a hand ſweeps it cleane away. How many in our neighbour countries, during their miſery have taſted this uncertainty? How many have gone to bed rich, and riſen poore men in the morning? Great troubles are looked for, and great troubles there muſt be and will be, doubtles. The world now knoweth his Maſters will and doth it not, it muſt therefore certainly be beaten with many ſtripes, with many more than the ignorant world was. And therefore this word [of this world] in this Text, we may with a Emphaſis pronounce and ſay, Charge them that are rich in this world, that they truſt not in the uncertainty of riches. Iob. 8. 1. 4.

There are but three things in riches: 1 The poſſeſſing, 2 the enjoying, 3 and laſt the conveighing of them. Little aſſurance is there in the two former, and what ſhall we ſay of the conveyance? If our pompe cannot deſcend with us; well yet, if we were certaine to whom we ſhould leave them, ſomewhat it were for the certainty of them. Theſe conſiderations oft had in mind would looſen both our aſſurance in, and our liking of them.

What for the conveyance: do we not ſee daily that men make heritages, but God makes heires; that many ſons roſt not that, their fathers got in hunting? that they that have been in the chief account for their wealth, their ſons ſhould be driven even to flatter the poor, and have nothing in their hands, no not bread? that never ſnow in the Sun melted faſter, than do ſome mens riches as ſoon as they be gone. Iob. 20. 10.

Theſe things are in the eyes of the whole world. O beloved, theſe are the judgments of GOD. Deceive not your ſelves with vaine words: ſay not in your hearts, this is the way of the world, ſome muſt get and ſome muſt loſe. No, no: it is not the way of the world, it is the way of GODS judgement. For, to the reaſon of man nothing can be alledged, but that conſider the infinite number of infinite rich men in this place, the poſterity of them theſe many yeares ſhould by this ſhew or ſhadow, why we ſhould repoſe truſt in them: But it is otherwiſe; they are exceeding uncertaine; even the harveſt of the water much above all trades. For, to the reaſon of man nothing can be alledged, but that conſider the infinite number of infinite rich men in this place, the poſterity of them theſe many yeares ſhould by this time filled have the whole land, were it much bigger than it is, with their progeny, even with divers both Worshipfull and Honourable Families from them descended: and it is well known, it is otherwise, that there is scarce a handfull in comparison. This is not the way of the world; for we see divers Houses of divers lines remain to this day in continuance of the same wealth and worship, which they had five hundred yeares since. It is not therefore the way of the world: say not it is so; but it is a heavy judgment from the Lord. And these uncertainties, namely this last came upon some of them for their wicked and deceitfull getting of them: upon some of them, for their proud and riotous abusing them: upon some of them, for their wretched and covetous retaining them. And except ye now heare this the Lords Charge, looke unto it; howsoever you wrastle out with the uncertainties your selves; assuredly this last uncertainty remaineth for your children. The Lords hand is not shortened. I shall never get out of this point; if I breake not from it.

Esa. 59. 1

These are but three fruits of all your getting. 1 the tenure: 2 the fruition: 3 the parting with. See, whether the Lord hath not laid one uncertainty on them all. 1 Uncertainty, in their tarrying with us, and Uncertainty, in our tarrying with them. 2 Uncertainty of enjoying, by reason of the danger of the time; 3 Uncertainty of our leaving them, by reason of the danger of our childrens scattering. The estate in them, the enjoying of them, the departing with them, all being uncertaine, so many uncertainties, might not Saint Paul truly say, the uncertainty of riches?

There is yet one behind, worse than them all. I will adde no more but that: and that is, that our riches and our worship they shall leave us, because they be uncertaine; but the pride of our minds, and the vain trust in them, them we shall be certaine of, they shall not leave us. And this is grave jugum, a heavy misery upon mankind: The Goods, the Lordship, the Offices that they got, them they shall leave here: the sin, that they commit in getting and enjoying them, they shall not leave behind them for their hearts, but that shall cleave fast unto them. This is a certainty you will say: it is indeed a certainty of sinne, but therefore an uncertainty of the soule: so doth Iob reckon it amongst the uncertainties of riches. For, what hope hath the hypocrite when he hath heaped up riches, if God take away his soul? Where is his hope or his trust then? Never will they shew themselves in their owne kinde, to be a staffe of reed, as then: both deceiving them which leane on them, and besides going into their soules and piercing them. For, very sure it is, many of that calling die in great uncertainty this way; wishing; they had never seene that wealth, which they have seen, that so they might not see that sin which they then see. Yea, some of them (I speake it of mine own knowledge abroad) wish, they had never come further than the shovel and the Spade: crying out at the houre of death, both of the uncertainty of their riches, and of the uncertainty of the estate of their soules too.

Iob. 27. 8.
Esa. 36. 6.

This point, this, is a point of speciall importance, to be spoken of by me, and to be thought of by you. I would God, you would take it many times (when GOD shall move you) into sad consideration. With great affection, and no lesse great truth (said Chrysostome) that heaven and earth, and all the creatures in them, if they had tears, they would shed them in great abundance, to see a great many of us, so careleſse in this point as we be. It is the hand of the Lord, and it is his gracious hand, (if we could see) it that He in this manner, maketh the world to totter & reel under us: that we might not stay and rest upon it, where certainty and stedfastnesse we shall never finde; but in Him, above, where only they are to be found. For, if riches, being so brittle and unsteadie as they be, men are so mad upon them; if God had setled them in any certainty, what would they have done? What poore mans right, what widdowes copy, or what Orphanes legacie should have been free from us.

The III. point Trust in God.

Well then: if riches be uncertaine, whereto shal we trust? If not in them, where then? It is, in the third point, Charge them that be rich in this world, that they be not high minded, neither trust in the uncertainty of riches: but that they trust in GOD. It is the third point of the Charge, in generall, and first of the affirmative part: and containeth, Partly a Homage to be done for our riches to GOD, and that is, trust in Him: And partlie a rent-charge laid upon our riches which is doing good. And indeed, no other than David had said before, trust in the Lord and be doing good.

Saint Paul will batter downe, and lay flat our Castle, but he will erect us another, wherein we may trust. Yea indeed, so as Salomon did before, setteth up a Tower against the Tower; The Tower of the righteous, which is the Name of the Lord, against the Rich mans Tower, which is as you have heard before, his riches. Instead of the Worldlings faith, which is to make money an article of his faith; teacheth us the faith of a Christian, which is, to vouchsafe none but God that honour. Even so doth the Apostle here; and that, for great reason. Nam qui vult securus spirare, speret in Eo, qui non potest perire, He that will trust, and be secure in His trust, let him trust in Him, who Himselfe never failed, and never failed those that put their trust in Him: in whom is no uncertainty, no not so much as any shadow of uncertainty.

Prov. 37. 5.
Prov. 18. 10.

Trust in Him, by looking to Him first, yet we admit any else into our conceipt: and by looking to Him last, and not looking beyond Him to any, as if we had a safer or trustier than He.

Iames. 1. 17.

And that, because He is the living God: as if He should say, That you phansie to your selves, to truſt in a dead idoll, and not a living God; and if ever you come to any dangerous diſeaſe, you ſhall finde, it is an idoll, dead in it ſelfe, not able to give it ſelfe life; much leſſe to another: not able to ranſome the body from the death, much leſſe the ſoule from hers; not able to recover life when it is gone, nay, not able to preſerve life when it is preſent: not to remove death, nay not to remove ſikneſs, not any ſicknes, not the gout from your feet, not the palſie from your hands, nay, not ſo much as the ache from your teeth: not able to adde one haire to your head, nor one haires breadth to your ſtature, nor an houre to your daies, nor one minute to the houres of your life. This moth-eaten God, as our Saviour Chriſt calleth it, this canker-eaten God, this God, that muſt be kept under lock and key from a thiefe, truſt not in it for ſhame. O let it never be ſaid, the living truſt in the dead. Truſt in the living God, that liveth Himſelfe, nay that is life Himſelfe; in His Son, that was able to quicken Himſelfe, and is able to quicken you; of whoſe gift and inſpiration you have already this life; by whoſe daily ſpirit and viſitation your ſoul is preſerved in this life, in this mortall and corruptible life; and of whoſe grace and mercie we look for our other immortal and eternal life.

Who onely not liveth, but alſo giveth you, &c.] A living and a giving God: that is, that liveth, and that giveth: of whoſe gift you have not onely your life and terme of yeares, but even alſo your riches themſelves, the very hornes that you lift ſo high, and wherewith naturally many times you puſh againſt Him that gave them. He giveth; for the earth was the Lords, and all that therein is, till the earth He gave unto the children of men: And ſilver and gold were the Lords till, not by a caſuall ſcattering, but by His appointed giving; not by chance, but by gift, He made them thine. He gave them: thou broughteſt none of them with thee into the world, thou cameſt naked. He gave them; and when He gave them, He might have given them to thy brother of low eſtate: and made thee ſtand and aske at his doore; as He hath made him now ſtand and aske at thine. He giveth you riches; you get them not; it is not your own wiſdome or travell that getteth them, but His grace and goodneſſe that giveth them. For, you ſee many men of as great underſtanding and foreſight as your ſelves, want not only riches, but even bread. It is not your travel; except the LORD hath given them, all the early up-riſing, and late downe-lying had been in vaine. It is God that giveth: make your recogniſance, it is ſo, for fear leſt if you deny Dominus dedit, you come to affirme Dominus abſtulit. God teacheth, it was He that gave them, by taking them away.

Pſal. 24. 1. 5. 16. Agg 2. 9. Eccle. 9 11. Iob 1. 21.

This is S. Pauls reaſon: let us ſee how it ſerves his concluſion to the overthrow of our vaine pride and fooliſh truſt in them. If it be gift, Si accepiſti, quid gloriaris? be not proud of it: And if it be gift, He that ſent it, can call for it again; truſt not in it.

1 Cor. 4. 7.

Who giveth us all things, &c.] All things, ſpirituall or corporall; temporall or eternall, little or great, from the leaſt and ſo upward; from the greateſt and ſo downward: from panem quotidianum, a morſell of bread, to Regnum cœlorum, the Kingdome of heaven. He giveth us all even unto Himſelfe: yea, He giveth us himſelfe and all, and more we cannot deſire.

Why then, if He gives all, all are Donatives; all that we hold, we hold in franck almoigne; and no other tenure is there, at Gods hands, or in our Law. For, quid habes quod non acceipiſti? What is there, that is to ſay, name one thing, thou haſt, that thou haſt not received; and if there be any one thing, boaſt of that and ſpare not. But if that be nothing, then let Cyprians ſentence take place (ſo much commended and ſo often cited by Saint Auguſtine) De nullo gloriandum eſt, quia nullum eſt noſtrum: and adde unto it, De nullo fidendum eſt, quia nullum eſt noſtrum: we muſt glory of nothing, for that we have nothing of our owne; neither muſt we truſt any thing, for that we have nothing of our owne.

1 Cor. 4. 7.

That giveth us all things to enjoy.] Not onely to have, but to enjoy. For, ſo to have them, that we have no joy of them; ſo to get all things, that we can take no part of them, when we have gotten them; ſo to poſſeſſe the labours of our hands; that we cannot eat the labours of our hands; as good be without them: This is a great vanity and vexation; and indeed (as Salomon ſaith) an untimely birth were better, than ſo to be. But bleſſed be God, that beſides theſe bleſſings to be enjoyed, giveth us healthfull bodies to enjoy them with, the favour of our Prince to enjoy them under, the dayes of peace to enjoy them in; whereby our ſoules may be ſatisfied with good things, and every one may eat his portion with joy of heart.

Eccles. 6. 2, 3.

That giveth all things to enjoy.] that is, dealeth not with you as He hath dealt with the poore, hath given you things, not onely of uſe and neceſſity, but things alſo of fruition and pleaſure: Hath given you not onely Manna for your need, but alſo Quailes for your luſt: Hath given you out of Ophir not onely linnen cloth and Horſes for ſervice, but alſo, Apes, Ivory, and Peacocks, for your delight. Unto them He giveth indumenta, covering for their nakedneſs; but unto you ornamenta, cloathing for your comelineſſe. Unto them He gives alimenta, nouriſhment for their emptineſſe; unto you delectamenta, delicious fare for daintineſſe. Therefore you above all men, are to rejoyce in Him, there is great cauſe: that He may rejoyce over you, unto whom He hath given ſo many wayes, ſo great cauſe of rejoycing.

Pſal. 78. 29.

That giveth us all things to enjoy plenteouſly:] Plenteouſly, indeed, may Iſrael now ſay, (ſaid the Prophet;) may England now ſay (ſay I) and I am ſure upon as great cauſe. He hath not dealt ſo with every Nation, nay, He hath not dealt ſo with any nation. And plenteouſly may] England now ſay; for it could not alwaies: Nay it could not ever have ſaid the like. Plenteouſly

Pſal. 7. 26.

ously indeed, for He hath not ſtrinkled, but powred His benefits upon us. Not onely Bleſſed be the Pſal. 144. 15. People whoſe God is the Lord (that bleſſing which is highly to be eſteemed, if we had none beſides it,)
Ibid. but Bleſſed be the people that are in ſuch a caſe. That bleſſing He hath given us, all things to enjoy plenteouſly; we cannot, nay our enemies cannot but confeſſe it. O that our thankfulneſſe to Him, and our bounty to His, might be as plenteous, as His gifts and goodneſſe have beene plenteous to us!

To move us from the two evils before, the Apoſtle uſed their uncertainty, which is a reaſon from Law and the courſe thereof, So he might now have told us, if we truſted not in God, we ſhould have the table turned, and His giving changed to taking away, our all things, into want of many things, and having nothing neer all our plenty into penury; and our enjoying more than we need, into no more than needs, nor ſo much neither. Thus He might have dealt: but He is now in a point of Goſpel, and therefore taketh his perſwaſion from thence. For this indeed, is the Evangelical argument of Gods goodneſſe; and there is no goodneſs to that, which the conſideration of Gods goodneſſe worketh in us.

The argument is forcible; and ſo forcible, as that chooſe whether this will move us or no: Sure, if this will not prevaile with us, we ſhall not need Moſes and Chriſt, to ſit and give ſentence upon us; the Divell himſelfe will doe it. For, as wicked as he is, and as wretched a ſpirit, yet thus
Iob. 19. he reaſoneth upon Iob: Doth Iob feare thee for nought? As if he ſhould ſay: ſeeing thou haſt dealt ſo plenteouſly, yea ſo bounteouſly with him, if he ſhould not ſerve thee, if he ſhould ſo forget himſelf, it were a fault paſt all excuſe, a fault well worthy to be condemned. A bad fault it muſt be, that the Divell doth abhor: yet ſo bad a fault it is (you ſee) that the Divel doth abhor it. When men receive bleſſings plenteouſly from God, and returne not the homage backe againe, unthankfull rich men ſhall need no other Judge but the Devill, and then, as you ſee, they are ſure to be condemned, For if God will not do it, the Divell will.

Let me then recommend this third part of the Charge to your carefull remembrance and regard. It concerneth your homage, which is your truſt in Him, that you truſt in him with your ſervice of body and ſoule, who hath truſted you with His plenty and ſtore, and hath made you in that eſtate, that you are truſted with matters of high importance both at home and abroad. For it is the argument of all arguments to the true Chriſtian, becauſe GOD hath given him (ſaith S. James) without exprobration; and given all things, without exception of any; and that Iames. 1. 5. to enjoy which is more than competency; and that plenteouſly, which is more than ſufficiency, therefore, even therefore, to truſt in him only. If there be in us the hearts of true Chriſtians, this will ſhew it; for it will move us: and ſo let it, I beſeech you. Let us not, as men under the Law, be tried with the uncertainty of the creatures; but as men under grace, have our heart broken with the goodneſſe of our God. In that God to place our truſt, who beyond all our deſires giveth: if we reſpect the quantity, all things; if the manner, very plenteouſly; if the end, to joy in them; yet ſo, that our joy and repoſe end in Him: a very bleſſed and heavenly condition.

The III. Part
That they doe good.

Truſt in the Lord and be doing good, ſaid David: S. Paul ſaith the ſame, Charge the rich of this world, that they do good. The laſt was a very plauſible point, which we have dwelt in with great delight. What? the plenty of all things; that we enjoy, and long may enjoy, I beſeech God: who is not Pſal. 37. 3. moved with joy to hear it reported?

But little know they, what a conſequent S. Paul will inferre upon this antecedent. For thus doth Paul argue. God hath done good to you by giving you; you alſo are bound to do good to others, by giving them. If he hath given you all things, you ought to part with ſomething: (and the more you part with, the liker yee become to Him, that giveth all things.) If He have given you to enjoy, you ought to receive others into the fellowſhip of the ſame joy: and not to thinke, that to doe others good, is to do your ſelves hurt. If plenteouſly He have given you, you ought to be plenteous in giving; and, not when the LORD hath His Epha great, wherein He hath mete to you, to make you Hin ſmall, whereby you meaſure to the poore; turning the plenty of heaven into the ſcarcity of earth.

Thus doth the Apoſtle fetch the matter about, and thus doth he inferre your doing good to theſe little lambs and ſuch like, out of GODS doing good unto you.

And that which he inferreth, he doth exceeding fitly, and ſheweth great art and learning in it. For, ſpeaking of enjoying (his very laſt word) he is carried in a very good zeale and affection of the rich of this world, to deſire of GOD, and to entreat of them that they may not have
Heb. 11. 25. onely πρόσκαιρον ἀπόλαυσιν of them (that is) enjoy them for a ſeaſon, but that they may enjoy them for ever; not onely for a few yeares, or weeks or daies (we cannot tell well which, but from everlaſting to everlaſting: And that is, by doing good, So enjoy that we may doe good too.

To ſay truth: Saint Paul could not better deviſe, than here to place it. For, our too much enjoying, eateth up our well doing, cleane. Our too much laſhing on in doing our ſelves good, maketh that we can doe good to none but our ſelves. Our preſent enjoying deſtroyeth our well-doing ut-
Gen. 41. 4. terly, and conſequently the eternall enjoying we ſhould have of our riches. As Pharaoh's leane kine devoured the fat, and it was not ſeene on them; ſo doth (ſaith Baſil) our ἐφ' ἅμιλλα, our riotous miſpending (where we ſhould not) eat up our ἐφ' ἅμιλλα, our Chriſtian beſtowing where we ſhould: and a man cannot tell

tell, what is become of it. Very well and wisely said that, Father, Ακόνη γὰρ τῆς ἀσωτίας ἡ φιλοτιμία, Pride is Prodigalities Whet-stone, and it sets such an edge upon it, in our enjoying, that it cuts so deep into our wealth, and shares so much for our vain and riotous enjoying, that it leaves but little for our well doing.

Look how the trust in God, and the trust in riches are set one against another, here by the Apostle: so are our high minds, and our doing good. One would not think it at the first, but (sure) so it is; we must have lower minds and less pride, if we will have more good works, and greater plenty of well-doing. You may therefore enjoy your wealth, that is true: but you must also take this with you, you must do good with it, and learn of the Apostle: There be two uses of your riches, and that therefore GOD hath given them, 1 To enjoy, 2 To do good: not to enjoy only, but to enjoy, and to do good.

Enjoying, is doing good: But to our selves only; but by doing good, here, Saint Paul meaneth, Prov. 5. 15. to do it to others, that they may be the better for us. The very same two doth Salomon in very fit terms set down: That Water is given into our cisterns, 1 that we may drink of it our selves, 2 that our fountain may flow out, and they that dwell about us fare the better for them. The very same two doth a greater than Salomon, our Saviour Himself count of too: for of His purse, we read Mat. 22. 42. He had these two uses, To buy that He had need of Himself, and to give something to the poor. It John 13. 29. is good reason, that man consisting of two parts, the soul and body, the body only should not take up all, but the soul should be remembred too. Enjoying is the bodies part; and well-doing is the souls; your souls are suiters to you to remember them, that is, to remember well-doing, which is the souls portion.

Remember this second: the other (I doubt not) but you will remember fast enough. This was the use of our Saviour Christs purse, and if yours be like His, this must be the use of yours also. For surely, it is greatly to be feared, that many rich at this day, know not both these: indeed know no other use of their wealth than an Ox or an Asse, or other bruit beasts would know: to have their crib well served, sweet and clean provender of the best in the manger, and their furniture and trappings fit, and of the finest fashion: No other than the Glutton did, to go in soft linnen and rich silk, and to fare deliciously every day. Or than the other, his pew-fellow, Luke 16. 22. that professed, it was all the use he counted of, and therefore we see he saith to his soul eat thy Luke 12. 19. fill (soul) and drink thy fill; fill and fat thy self, and enjoy this life: never look to enjoy any other.

We must learn one use more, one more out of our Charge, and consequently, When we look upon our sealed sums, our heaps of Treasures, and continual commings in, thus to think with our selves: This that I see here, hath God given me to enjoy, but not only for that, but to do good with also. The former use of my riches I have had long, and daily still have, but what have I done in the other? The rich men in the Gospel, they had the same; they did enjoy theirs, but now (it is sure) little joy they have of them: why? for want of this other. Abraham he did both: he enjoyed his riches here, and now another, an eternal joy of them. Yea, he received Lazarus into his bosome, Why? he received him into his bosome, and cherished him, and did good here on earth. And so did Job, and so did Zacheus. Now good Lord, so give me grace, so to enjoy here, that I lose not my endless joy in thy heavenly Kingdome. Let me follow their steps in my life, with whom I wish my soul after death. These things are good and profitable for the rich, oft to think on.

Well then, if to do good be a part of the Charge, what is it to do good? It is a positive thing (good) not a privative, to do no harm. Yet, as the world goeth now, we are fain so to commend men: He is an honest man, he doth not hurt: of which praise any wicked man, that keeps himself to himself, may be partaker. But it is to do some good thing: what good thing? I will not answer, as in the Schooles: I fear I should not be understood; I will go grosly to work. These, that you see here before your eyes, to do them good, to part with that, that may do them good, use the goods that you have, to do but that, which sundry that they have heretofore occupied those roomes where you now sit (whose remembrance is therefore in blessing upon earth, and whose names are in the books of life in heaven) have before you in divers works of charity, to the maintenance of the Church, the benefit of Learning, and the Relief of the Poor of the land. This is to do good. This I trust, you understand.

This know, that God hath not given sight to the eye, to enjoy, but to lighten the members; nor wisedome to the honourable man, but for us men of simple shallow forecast; not learning to the divine, but for the ignorant: so, neither riches to the wealthy, but for those that want relief. Think your Timothy hath his depositum, and we ours, and you have none? it is sure, you have. We, ours, in inward graces and treasures of knowledge: You yours, in outward blessings and treasures of wealth. But both are deposita, and we both are Feoffees of trust. I see, there is a strange hatred, and a bitter gain-saying every where stirred up against unpreaching Prelates (as you term them) the Pastors that feed themselves only: and they are well worthy: If I might see the same hatred begun among your selves, I would think it sincere. But that I cannot see. For that which a slothfull Divine is, in things spiritual; that is, a Rich man for himself and no body else, in things carnal, and they are not pointed at. But, sure you have your harvest as well, as we ours; and that a great harvest. Lift up your eyes, and see the streets round about you, the harvest is verily great, and the Labourers few: Let us pray (both) that the Lord would thrust our Labourers into both these harvests, that the treasures of knowledge being opened, they may Mat. 9. 37. have have the bread of eternal life: and the treaſures of well-doing being opened, they may have the bread of this life, and ſo they want neither.

I will tell you it, another as eaſie a way: Saint Auguſtine making it plain to his auditory (ſomewhat backward as it ſhould ſeem) was fain to tell them thus, thus to define doing good: Quod non vultis facere, hoc bonum eſt (ſaith he:) that that you will not do, that that I cannot get you to do, that is, to do good. Shall I tell ſo to you? No indeed, I will not, I hope better things, and partly I know them. But this I will ſay, that which the Papiſts with open mouth, in all their books, to the ſlander of the Goſpel: that which they ſay, you do not: nay, you will not do; that is, to do good.

One of them ſaith, that our religion hath comforted your force attractive ſo much, and made it ſo ſtrong, that nothing can be wrung from you. Another, he ſaith, that our religion hath brought a hardneſs into the bowels of our profeſſors, that they pity little, and the cramp of chiragra into their hands, that they give leſs. Another, that our preaching hath bred your minds full of Salomons horſleeches, that cry, bring in, bring in, and nothing elſe. All of them ſay, that your good works come ſo from you, as if indeed your religion were, to be ſaved by faith only. Thus through you, and through want of your doing good, the Goſpel of CHRIST is evil ſpoken of among them that are without. They ſay, we call not to you for them: that we preach not this point, that we leave them out of our Charges. Libero animam meam, I deliver here mine own ſoul: I do now call for them, I have done it elſewhere yet now. Here I call for them now, I take witneſs, I call you to record, I call heaven to record, Domine ſcis quia dixi, ſcis quia locutus ſum, ſcis quia clamavi: Lord, thou knoweſt, I have ſpoken for them, I have called for them, I have cryed for them, I have made them a part of my charge, and the moſt earneſt and vehement part of my charge, even the charge of doing good.

Unto you therefore that be rich, be it ſpoken; hear your charge I pray you. There is no avoiding, you muſt needs ſeal this fruit of well-doing, you muſt needs do it. For, having wealth, and wherewithal to do good, if you do it not; Imprimis, talk not of Faith, for you have no faith in you; if you have wherewith to ſhew it, and ſhew it not, Saint James ſaith, you have none to ſhew. Nor, tell me of your religion; there is no religion in you: Pure Religion is this (as to very good purpoſe was ſhewed yeſterday) To viſit the fatherleſs and widdowes: and you never learned other religion of us.

James 1.27.

Secondly, if you do it not, I warn you of it now; you ſhall then find it, when you ſhall never be able to anſwer the exacting of this charge, in the great day: where the queſtion ſhall not be of the highneſs or lowneſs of your minds, not of your truſt and confidence, or any other vertues, though they be excellent, but of your feeding, clothing, viſiting, harbouring, ſuccouring, and in a word, of your well-doing, only. This I ſay to you, bear witneſs I ſay it.

Now to them, in your juſt defence I ſay: (for God forbid, but while I live, I ſhould alway defend this honourable City in all Truth.) to them whom the miſt of envy hath ſo blinded, that they can ſee no good at all done, but by themſelves, I forbid them, the beſt of them, to ſhew me in Rhemes or in Rome, or any popiſh City Chriſten, ſuch a ſhew, as we have ſeen here theſe two dayes. To day but a handfull of the heap, but Yeſterday and on Munday, the whole heap; even a mighty Army of ſo many good works, as there were relieved Orphanes, the Chariots of this City, I doubt not, and the horſemen thereof.

2 Kings 2 12.

They will ſay, it is but one; ſo they ſay: Be it ſo, yet it is a matchleſs one. I will go further with them; ſpoken be it to GODS glory, Non nobis Domine, non nobis, ſed nomini tuo da gloriam. Not unto us, not unto us, O Lord, but unto thy Name give the praiſe; for thy loving mercy, and for thy truths ſake which we profeſs. I will be able to prove, that Learning, in the foundation of Schools, and encreaſe of revenues within Colledges; and the Poor, in foundation of Almes-houſes, and encreaſe of perpetuities to them, have received greater help in this Realm within theſe forty years laſt paſt, ſince, (not, the ſtarting up of our Church, as they fondly uſe to ſpeak, but ſince) the reforming ours from the errour of theirs, than it hath, I ſay, in any Realm Chriſten, not only within the ſelf ſame forty years (which were enough to ſtop their mouthes) but alſo than it hath in any forty years upward, during all the time of Popery: which I ſpeak, partly of my own knowledge, and partly by ſufficient grave information to this behalf. This may be ſaid, and ſaid truly.

Pſal. 115. 1.

And when we have ſaid this, what great thing have we ſaid? that, time for time, ſo many years for ſo many; thirty yeares of light have made compariſon with thirty years of trouble. But this is not as we would have it: We would have it out of all compariſon. This, that hath been ſaid, is ſtrange to them (I know) and more, than they reckoned of. But I would have you in theſe times of peace and truth, ſo far beyond them, as that you might φιμῶν, ſnaffle them in this. So that they durſt not once offer to enter into this Theam with us, or once to mention it more. So it ſhould be, I am ſure, ſo the Goſpel deſerves to have it.

1 Pet. 2. 15.

2. The quantity. Be rich in good works.

You have the ſubſtance of that you muſt do, to do good. Now here is the quantity: Be rich in good works: that ſeeing you are rich indeed, you would not be poor men, but rich in good works.

Good works (Saint Paul ſaith) not good words. Good, with the goodneſs of the hand; not with the goodneſs of the tongue, and tongue only; as many now are, (well therefore reſembled to the tree that Pliny ſpeaketh of, the leaves of it as broad as any target, but the fruit is no bigger ger than a bean:) to talk targets, and to do beans. It were better reverſed; if we were (as St. Paul ſaith) perfect in all good works, than perfect in certain curious and queint termes, and ſet phraſes, wherein a great part of many mens religions do now a dayes conſiſt: plain ſpeech and ſound dealing; plain ſpeech and good works, beſt. 2 Tim. 3. 16.

And rich in them. The rich man in the Goſpel, would (as he ſaid) build his barns bigger to put in them πάντα ἀγαθα, all his goods he had: no good out of his barn. Yes, yes ſome in good works too. Saint Paul hath here within the compaſs of this Text two rich men; his deſire is, they may both meet together in every rich man. Rich, ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι, in the world that now is, ſo ye are: Rich, in the world that ſhall be after this; be that too. Rich in Cofers, ſo ye are: Rich in conſcience, be ſo too. Your conſciences you ſhall carry with you: your cofers you ſhall not. Thus you are valued in the Queens books: what are you in Gods books? So much worth in this land of the dying: how much worth in the land of the living? Saint Paul's advice is, that you ſtrive for both, which you ſhall be, if ye be rich in good works. The true riches are the riches of his glorious inheritance. They be the true riches, which except a man can aſſure himſelf of, after the leaſe of his life is out, he ſhall be in a marvellous poor caſe, as was the rich man; and beg of Lazarus there, that begged of him here. Thoſe riches muſt be thought of, marry then you muſt be rich in good works. Not to give ſomething, to ſome body, at ſome time: Why? Who doth not ſo? That is not to be rich. To give φειδομένως ſparingly, a piece of bread, or a draught of drink; and that only; that belongeth to him whom GOD hath ſparingly bleſſed, to the brother of low eſtate; it is not your work. Ephes. 1. 18. Luke 16. 24.

In the Law, to the building of the Tabernacle, the poor gave Goats hair, and Badgers skins; that was for them, and that was accepted: the rich, they gave purple, gold and Jewels to the Tabernacle; they were rich in good works. And in the Goſpel, to whom much is given, of him proportionally much ſhall be required: that is, in a word, as you are ſeſſed in the Queens books, ſo are you in Gods books, each one according to his ability. And God will look, that according to that ſeſſement they ſhould be done: that you ſhould πλουτεῖτε, abound in good works, as you do in wealth, that you ſhould πρόεδροι, Go before, and ſit higheſt, and have a precedence in works, as you have in your places. And in a word, that you ſhould be Lords, Knights, Aldermen, Maſters, Wardens, and of the livery in good works, as you be in your ſeveral Wards and Companies. And indeed to ſay the truth, to commit ſo many ſinns, as no Auditor can number them, and to afford ſo few good works, as a child may tell them: To receive ſuch profits, as great count-books will not hold them, and to yield ſo ſmall ſtore of good works, as a little paper, not ſo broad as my hand, may contain them; To laſh out at a banquet, you know what; and to caſt to a Captives redemption all the world knowes what: to caſt your pride with pounds, and your good works with pence; what coherence is there in theſe? This is not to be rich: But that is a part of the charge too. I pray you remember it: Remember to be Rich: not only to do good, but to be rich in doing good. That will make you in caſe well to die, as now (God be thanked) you are well to live. Exod. 35. Luke 12. 48. Col. 1. 10. 2 Cor. 9. 8.

And with the quantity, take the quality too, I pray you: for the quantity, richly; for the quality, readily. Ἐξ ἀνάγκης, with compulſion, not willingly; and ἐκ λύπης, with grudging, not cheerfully, theſe are the faults contrary to this vertue. God muſt have it done with a facility, with a readineſs eaſily. And good reaſon, eaſily; for eaſily you may. We that want, cannot without difficulty; we would, and we cannot: we have a heart without a hand: though we be willing, nothing is done; why? we are not able. You are well able (God be thanked) if you be well willing, there is no more to do, it is done. This readineſs is a neceſſary vertue in our daies; where, yer a benefit come (nay many times, yer a debt) ſo much ingenuity is ſpent, ſo many Rogo's, ſuch a Vade & redi, go and come ſuch a time; ſuch a dauncing on the threſhold, ſuch a failing of the eyes, yet it can be ſeen; ſuch a cleaving to the fingers, yer it will come off; ſuch inſtillation by now a drop, and then a drop; as to a liberal nature, when it commeth, it is like to bread full of gravel; for hunger a man muſt needs have it, and but for needs muſt, a man, had as leefe be without it. O beloved, marre not all you do before God and man, for want of this one thing. You have a fair ſeed-time, all of you; Hilaris datio, ſerena ſatio; cheerfull giving is like a fair ſeed-time. As you, for your ſeed, to bury it, with a ſeaſonable time: ſo no leſs GOD deſireth for His, that His ſeed may not be ſowen with an over-caſt mind, but with the gladneſs of heart, and cheerfulneſs of countenance. Even as he doth himſelf, who what he beſtoweth, beſtoweth ſo, as He taketh as much, yea more delight in giving, than we in receiving. So do, and then this Charge is at an end. Be ready to communicate. 3. The quality. Ready to diſtribute. Prov. 3. 28.

There is of this word, ſome difference among Writers; but ſuch as you may eaſily reconcile. Some think, the Apoſtle would have rich men to be εὐπροσόδους eaſie to be ſpoken with, and to be ſpoken to. Some, that He would not only have them give readily, but lend freely, and not practiſe the Devils Alchymiſtrie (as they do) by multiplication in lending. Some, that they ſhould not think their beneficence to be a taking from them without receiving back, inaſmuch as there is an entercourſe of the givers grace, and the receivers prayer. Some, that His mind is, that they ſhould not do good to ſome few, but even to a multitude. All are good and godly, and agreeable to the analogie of faith: and you by doing all, may veriſie and agree all, and make of a diſcord in opinions, an harmony in practice. Saint Heirome (me thinketh) ſaith beſt, that Communicare eſt communitati dare, aut ad aliquid commune, to be beneficial to a Society, or to beſtow to ſome common uſe.

a 2 Cor. 4. 15. This is the perfection or pitch of well-doing, that most plenteous grace by the thanksgiving of many, may redound to the glory of God. The Apostle therefore is a further suitor to you that be rich, and will not end his Charge, till he hath laid this on you too, to do good to Societies and Foundations, either necessary to be erected, or more than necessary to be maintained, lest through our evil-doing, our Fathers well-doing perish. It is not for every man to reach unto them; there is no hope to have them upholden but by you; that you would therefore have them in remembrance, and to think upon them to do them good.

But alass, what hope is there to hear, that good will be this way done, since it is thought, that many may be endicted for seeking to eat up Companies, and to convert that which was the good and making of many, into their own singulare commodo, by out-buying and out-bidding all besides themselves, that they alone may appropriate civil things, turn common into private: the whole bodies nourishment into one foregrown member, and in the end dwell alone upon the earth. Jer. 49. 31.

That the world is toward an end, other men may be perswaded by other reasons; none more effectual to perswade me, than this one, that every man doth what in him lieth to Discommon communities, and to bring all to the first privation. For the world being it self a main Society: these men, by dismembring under-societies, seek and do what they can to dissolve the whole. So that, GOD must needs come to make an end of the world, or else, if this hold on, we should shortly make an end of it our selves.

It is further complained, that whereas there hath been and is given charitably to the poor and their maintenance, that the poor themselves want, and they that have the receiving of the profits do yet encrease mightily. Had not these things need to be put in the Charge? Are they not in the eares of the Lord? Is it not a sinne crying to heaven? Shall he not visit for these things? for this discredit of His Gospel, for this unexcusable, unfaithfull dealing, in the eares of Jew and Gentile, of Turk and Christian, of GOD and man? I beseech you still, suffer the words of exhortation: it is good for you to know, what things are said abroad. For my part, in GOD's presence I protest, I know none; and if there be none, present none. It is that I desire; the charge is now given, may be given in vain.

1 To the Church. Now, if you enquire, to whom your doing good should stretch it self? Saint Paul himself will tell you, To them that instruct you, they are to a communicate with you in all good things: that is, the Church; and to the necessity of the Saints, and to the b Saints that be in necessity: that is, to the Poor.

b Rom. 12. 13.

The Church first: c For this end, came Ester to the Kingdom, and d Nehemiah to his great favour with the Prince, even to do good to the Church: And for this end hath e Tyrus, that rich City, that abundance bestowed on her, even to be a covering Cherub to the Church of GOD, and to stretch out her wings over it. The Prophets meaning was, the rich men must be a shadow of maintenance and defence to the Ark, to Divinity, their riches must serve them as wings to that end; they must be covering Cherubs on earth to the Church militant, if ever they will be singing Cherubs in heaven with the Church triumphant.

c Esth. 4. 14.
d Neh. 1. 11.
e Ezek. 28. 14.

And much good might be done, and is not, in this behalf, and that many wayes: I will name but one, that is, that with their wings stretched out, they would keep the filth and pollution of the sin of sinnes (whereof you heard so bitter complaint both these dayes) of Simony and Sacriledge, from falling on the Ark, and corrupting and putrifying it, which it hath almost already done. That seeing the Pope do that he doth (howsoever some have alleadged the Papists great detestation of this sinne, and of us for this sinne, for a motive; it is all but dissembling, their hand is as deep in this sin as any mans:) I say, seeing the Pope doth as he doth: that is, as he hath dispensed with the oath and duty of Subjects to their Prince, against the fifth Commandement: with the murder, both violent with daggs, and secret with poyson of the Sacred Persons of Princes, against the sixth: with the uncleanness of the stewes, and with incestuous marriages, against the seventh: So, now of late, with the abomination of Simony, against the eighth; having lately (as it is known by the voluntary confession of their owne Priests) by special and expresse warrant of the See Apostolike sent hither into this Land, his License dispensative to all Patrons of his mark to set up Simony, and to mart and make sale of all Spiritual livings which they have or can get, to the uttermost penny, even (if it were possible) by the sound of the drumme; and that with a very clear conscience (so that some portion thereof be sent over to the relief of his Seminaries, which by such honest meanes as this, come to be now maintained.) Seeing thus do the Papists, and we (loth to be behind them in this gain of blood) make such merchandise with this sinne, of the poor Church and her patrimony, as all the world crieth shame of it: To redeem the orderly disposing them to the Churches good, were a special way for you rich men to do good in these dayes. Neither as these times are, do I know a better service, nor which (I am perswaded) will please GOD better, than this, or be better accepted at His hands.

2 To the poor. This for the Church: you must have a wing stretched abroad to cover it. And for the poor, you must have a bosome wide open to receive them. Lazarus in a rich mans bosome, is a goodly sight in heaven; and no lesse goodly in earth. And there shall be never a rich man with Lazarus in his bosom, in heaven, unlesse he have had a Lazarus in his bosom here on earth.

John 12. 8.

The poor are of two sorts: Such as shall be with us alwayes (as CHRIST saith) to whom we must do good by relieving them: such is the comfortlesse estate of the poor Captives: the succourlesse estate of poor Orphanes; the desolate estate of the poor Widows; the distressed estate of poor Strangers; the diſcontented eſtate of poor Scholars: all which muſt be ſuffered and ſuccoured too.

of

There are others, ſuch as ſhould not be ſuffered to be in Iſrael, whereof Iſrael is full: I mean beggers and vagabonds, able to work; to whom good muſt be done, by not ſuffering them to be as they are, but to employ them in ſuch ſort, as they may do good. This is a good deed no doubt; and there being, as I hear, an honourable good purpoſe in hand for the redreſſe of it, God ſend it good ſucceſſe. I am as one, in part of my charge, to exhort you by all good meanes to help and further it.

Me thinketh it is ſtrange, that the exiled Churches of Strangers, which are harboured here with us, ſhould be able in this kind to do ſuch good, as not one of their poor is ſeen to ask about the ſtreets; and this City, the harbourer and maintainer of them, ſhould not be able to do the ſame good. Able it is no doubt, but men would have doing good too good cheap. I know, the charges will be great: but, it will quit the charges, the good done will be ſo great. Great good to their bodies, in redeeming them from divers corrupt and noyſome diſeaſes, and this City from danger of infection. Great good to their ſoules: in redeeming them from idleneſſe, and the fruit of idleneſſe, which is all naughtineſſe, no where ſo rife as among them; and this City from much pilfering, and loſſe that way. Great good to the Common-wealth, in redeeming unto it many rotten members, and making them men of ſervice, which may hereafter do good in it, to the publike benefit, and redeem this City from the blood of many ſoules which periſh in it for want of good order. Laſt of all, great good to the whole eſtate, in bringing the bleſſing of God upon it; even that bleſſing, that there ſhall not be a begger in all Iſrael, So much for doing good. Deut. 15:4.

Laying up in ſtore, &c.] That is, your work ſhall not be in vain in the end, but receive a recompence of reward: which is a prerogative, the which GOD'S Charges have above all other. In mans, there is death to the Offender; but if any have kept his charge; he may claim nothing but that, he hath. Only the Lords Charges are rewarded. The laſt point: The Reaſon.

So that, beſides the two reaſons which may be drawn out of the former: 1 one of the uncertainty, 2 the other of Gods bounty. 1. Of the Uncertainty, Da quod non potes retinere: That we would part with that, that we cannot keep long; that we muſt part with yer long, whether we will or no: 2. Of the bounty of God; De meo peto, dicit CHRISTUS; That God which gave, asketh but His own; but of that, He gave us, a part to be given Him, and we (if there be in us, the heart of David) will ſay, quod de manu ſua accepimus. 3. Beſides theſe, a third; Though God might juſtly challenge a free gift without any hope of receiving again, He will not; but tell us, His meaning is, not to impoveriſh or undo us, but to receive theſe, which He gave us, and came from Him every one: and thoſe that within a while forgo we muſt, to give us that, we ſhall never forgo. That is that, He teacheth us: commandeth not but loſſe, cut commendeth to us a way to lay up for our ſelves, if we could ſee it; not, to leeſe and leave all, we know to whom. 1 Chr. 29:40.

Well ſaid Auguſtine, preaching on theſe very words: At the very hearing theſe words [Part with and Diſtribute] the covetous man ſhrinks in himſelf; at the very ſound of parting with; as if one ſhould pour a baſon of cold water upon him, ſo doth he chill and draw himſelf together, and ſay Non perdo: he ſaith not, I will not part with, but, I will not loſe; for he counteth all parting with to be loſing. And will ye not loſe, ſaith Saint Auguſtine? Yet, uſe the matter how you can, loſe you ſhall: for, when you can carry nothing away of all you have, do you not loſe it? But, go to, (ſaith he) be not troubled, hear what followes, ſhut not thy heart againſt it.

Laying up for your ſelves.] I know, Judas was of the mind, that all that went beſides the bag, was Ut quid perditio? and ſo be all they that be of his ſpirit. But, Saint Paul is of that mind, that ἀγαθοεργεῖν, to lay out to good uſes, is to lay up to our own uſes: that, in parting thus with it, we do not dimittere, but præmittere; not loſe it, by leaving it here from whence we are going, but ſtore it up, by ſending it thither before, whither we are going. And indeed, one of the two, we muſt needs, either leave it behind and loſe it for ever; or ſend it before, and have it our own for ever. Now chooſe whether you will hold of Judas's, or Paul's. Laying up for your ſelves.

For indeed, it is not laying up, Saint Paul findeth fault with: but the place where: not building, or obtaining, or purchaſing; all which three are ſpecified, and the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in your own terms, and the things you chiefly delight in: but, the laying up in the fleſh, which will rot, and with it whatſoever is laid up with it; or in the world, which is ſo variable now, and will be conſumed all to nought, and with it, whatſoever is laid up in it. But, he would have us to lay it up in heaven: which (beſides that it is our own Countrey, and this but a ſtrange land) is the place, whether we paſſe leaving this place behind; and from whence we muſt never paſſe, but ſtay here, and either for ever want, or have uſe for ever of that, we part with here. And to ſay truth, Ut quid reſpicimus? With what face can we look up and look upon heaven, where we have laid up nothing: or what entertainment can we look for there, whether we have ſent no part of our proviſion; but for ought of our ſending, the place is clean empty?

You will ſay; how can one reach heaven to lay any thing there? I will ask you alſo another queſtion: How can a man being in France, reach to England to lay any thing there? By Exchange. And did you never hear of our exchange, Cambium cœleſte? You know, that to avoid the danger of Pirates, and the inconvenience of forraign Coin, not currant at home, it is the uſe of Merchants to pay it there, to receive it here. Such a thing is there in this laying up. We are here as ſtrangers: the place here we wiſh our ſelves, is our Countrey, even Paradiſe (if ſo be, we ſend our our carriage thither before; if not, I fear, we intend ſome other place: it is not our Countrey.) When we ſhall take our way thither, thorow the way of all fleſh, through death, certainly we loſe all; he ſtrips every one he layes hold of: and put caſe, we could get thorow with all our bags; here it is currant (for it is the coin of the world;) but there it is baſe, and goeth for nought; what ſhall we then do? Quare non facis? Why deal you not with exchange, paying here ſo much, to have ſo much repaid you there. Alires trapezitas, you ſhould go to the Bankers; who be thoſe? Cum quæſieris, when you have ſought all, Pauperes ſunt campſores, they be the poor: Da pauperibus & accipies theſaurum. Where is our bill? Quod, vel quantumcunq; Who will repay it? Ego reſolvam: Non repetis mercedem, ſed das mercedem. What? refuſe you to take CHRIST's bill? If you dare truſt your ſervants without fear of loſing; if you truſt your LORD, fear you to loſe? If them, of whom you receive nothing, but, they of you: what, not of him of whom earſt you profeſſed to receive all things? If CHRIST be of credit, and heaven be not Utopia; if we think there is ſuch a life after this, we ſhall ever have to do there, Lay up here. Think, it is a laying up. Upon the believing of this one word, the weight of doing and not doing, all the Text lieth.

When we recount our good deeds, we commonly ſay: For him, and for him, we have done this and that: It is true, ſaith Saint Paul. That good you do, you do for them, and for your ſelves too: but more, for your ſelves than for them. To lay up, and to do good; yea, to others: Nay, to do your ſelves good, to lay up for your ſelves. Before, you thought it ſcattering, it was indeed laying up: Now, you think, it is for them; it is, for you, and your ſakes, God commandeth it.

GOD hath no need of you to feed the poor: No need of the Widow to feed Elias; He could ſtill have fed him by Ravens: and, as he fed Elias by one; ſo could He them, by others, or other meanes, and never ſend them to Sarepta among you. He could have created ſufficient for all men: or ſo few men, as all ſhould have been ſufficient for them. He would not: He ordered, there ſhould ever be poor in the Land, Why? To prove them; and to proue you by them: that, He which Deut. 15. 11. feedeth you, might feed them by you; that your ſuperfluities might be their neceſſaries: that they of their patience, in wanting; and you, of your liberality in ſupporting, might both together, of Him that made you both, receive reward. They with you, in your boſomes there, as here: a good ſight in heaven, and a good ſight in earth. For ſure, there ſhall never be a rich man in heaven, without a Lazarus in his boſom. Therefore, we have need of them, as they have need of us: yet, that, we make theirs, remaineth ours ſtill.

It liketh the HOLY GHOST, as to term our preaching our ſeed, ſo to term your wealth, your ſeed. The ſeed, the Husbandman caſts it, the ground receives it: Whoſe is it? the ground's? No, the Husbandmans. And, though it be caſt out of his hands, and rot in the bowels of the earth, and come to nothing, and there becomes of it, no man can tell what: yet, this count he maketh, it is his ſtill; and that every grain will bring him an eare, at time of the year; and ſo, that he hath in caſting it from him, ſtored it up for himſelf. Whereas, in fooliſhly loving it (as many do their wealth) he might have ſtored it up for wormes and muſtineſſe, and by that meanes indeed have loſt it for altogether. The ſeed is your almes. The ground is the poor: You are the Sowers. When it is therefore ſown among them, how it is ſpent, and what becomes of it, you know not: yet, this you know, and may reckon; that at the fulneſſe of time, at the harveſt of the end of the world, for every grain of temporal contribution, you ſhall receive an eare of eternal retribution. Whereas, ſtoring it up here, it may after your deceaſe be ſtored for harlots, and gameſters, and rioters: in whoſe hands it ſhall corrupt and putrifie, and your ſelves loſe the fruit thereof for ever. By this compariſon you may know, that when you are dealing for the poor, it is your own buſineſſe, you intend: that, not forgetting them, you remember your ſelves; pitying them, you have pity on your own ſoule, and that your labour ſhall not be in vain in the Lord. 1 Cor. 13. 51.

Men uſe to reaſon with themſelves: it will not alwayes be health, let us lay up for ſickneſſe; it will not alway be youth, for age: and why not (ſaith Saint Paul) it will not alway be this life, not alway preſent life: lay up for your ſelves againſt the life to come. In this place, here, we ſhall not be alwayes, but in another of our eternal abode. This time, that is, will not be alwayes: but ſuch a time will come, as in which, that we call a thouſand yeares, ſhall be no more than a day, now. Pſalm 90. 4. That place and that time would be thought of: and good wiſdom it will be, for a man to forget what he is, and to weigh what he ſhall be. Surely, for any preſent matter GOD did not make us, Sed ad neſcio quid aliud, to ſome further matter yet to come. Not yet preſent: as yet, in promiſe, not yet in performance; as yet in hope, not in poſſeſſion. I know, that even in this place the LORD doth reward, and ſheweth us plainly, that Date and Dabitur are two twins: We our ſelves have by good triall found it true; when our carefull Date and proviſion for the poor laſt year ſave one, was requited in præſenti with a great Dabitur of the laſt yeares encreaſe. But this is but an, &c. making nothing to the main promiſe which is to come, which our Saviour would never Luke 6. 24. have out of our eye; Habetis hic, here you have your comfort, Habete illic have it there too, for here you cannot ever have it. For the preſent time; you have officers and ſervants to wait on you; in the time to come, none will accompany you, all will leave you, when to the grave they have brought you, ſave mercy only; none will wait or make room, but opera eorum, your works which you have here laid up for the time to come.

Heb. 11. 9. The Scripture ſpeaketh of this life, and all the felicity therein, as of a tent or booth, ſpread for a 2 Cor. 5. 1. day, and taken down at night. Even like Jonas's gourd for all the world; freſh in the morning, and ſtark withered yer evening. But, of the life to come, as of ground-work, never to remove it ſelf, or or we from it; but to abide therein, ἐν τῇ φυλακῇ or ἐν τῇ βασιλικῇ in the prison, or the palace for evermore. We ſhall not therefore loſe, but lay up in ſtore: not for others, but for our ſelves: Not, for a few dayes now, but for hereafter: Not a tent to be taken down, but a foundation never to be removed.

Of all the words in the Text, not one was meet for the teeth of Rhemiſts, ſave this only: here you have a perillous note cloſe in the margent: Good works are a Foundation. A Foundation, very true: who denies it? but whether a foundation in our graces, as CHRIST is without us, that is the point. The ground whereon every building is raiſed, is termed fundamentum. The loweſt part of the building immediately lying on it, is ſo termed too. In the firſt ſenſe, CHRIST is ſaid to be the only foundation: Yet the Apoſtles, becauſe they are the loweſt row of ſtones, are ſaid to be foundations, in the ſecond. So, among the graces within us, faith is properly in the firſt ſenſe, ſaid to be the foundation: yet, in the ſecond, we do not deny, but as the Apoſtle calleth them, as the loweſt row, next to Faith, Charity, and the works of charity may be called foundations too. Albeit the margent might well have been ſpared at this place: for, the note is here, all out of place. For, beeing ſo great Schoolmen as they would ſeem, they muſt needs know, it is not the drift of the Apoſtle here, in calling them a foundation, to carry our conſiderations into the matter of juſtifying, but only to preſſe his former reaſon of uncertainty there, by a contrary weight of certain ſtability here; and ſo, their note comes in like Magnificat at Mattins. 1 Cor. 3. 11. Epheſ. 2. 20. Col. 1. 23. Epheſ. 3. 18.

Thus reaſoneth Saint Paul: This world is uncertain, of a ſandy nature; you may rear upon it, but it is ſo bad a ſoil, as whatſoever you raiſe, will never be well ſetled, and therefore ever tottering; and when the rain, and the wind, and the waves beat againſt it, it cometh down on your heads. Therefore to make choice of a faſter ſoil, build upon GOD'S ground, not upon the worlds ground: for, πάντα ἐκεῖνα βέβαια, μεταβολὴ ἀδιάλυτα (ſaith Chryſoſtome;) there all is firm, there you may build and be ſure: fall the rain upon the top of it, blow the wind againſt the ſide of it, riſe the waves againſt the foot of it, it ſtands irremoveable. Wherein the Apoſtle (ſaith Chryſoſtom) doth teach a very goodly and excellent Art, how to make of our fugitive riches a truſty and faſt-friend; how to mak Gold out of Quick-ſilver, and of the uncertainty of riches, a ſure and certain ground-work. Matth. 7. 25. Chryſoſt. in locum, Hom. 18.

Aſſurance and ſecurity are two things (we know) that rich men many times buy dear: here they may be had; not for thus much, or thus long, but for as much as you liſt, and as long as eternity is long, that never ſhall have end. The meaning is; that if you lay out, or lay on that you have, on theſe earthly things (the plot; which the world would fain commend unto you) with this life, or at the furtheſt, with this world, they ſhall be ſhaken in pieces and come to nought; and you poſſibly in the hour of death, but moſt certainly in the day of judgement, ſhall ſhake, when the world your ground-work ſhakes, and be in trembling fear and perplexed agonie touching the eſtate of your ſoul: knowing, there is nothing coming to you but the fruit of this world, which is ruine; or the fruit of the fleſh, which is corruption. But, if you ſhall have grace to make choiſe of GOD'S plot, which He hath here levelled for you to raiſe upon, O quanto dignum pretio! that will be vvorth all the world in that day: the perfect certainty, ſound knowledge, and precious aſſurance, you ſhall then have, vvhereby you ſhall be aſſured to be received, becauſe you are ſure you are CHRIST'S, becauſe you are ſure you have true faith, becauſe you are ſure you have framed it up into good works. And ſo ſhall they be a foundation to you-ward, by making evident the aſſurance of ſalvation: not, natura, to GOD-ward, in bringing forth the eſſence of your ſalvation.

Look you, how excellent a ground-work here is! (not for a Cottage:) whereon you may raiſe your frame to ſo notable a height, as ſtanding on it, you may lay hand on, and lay hold of eternal life. O that you would mind once theſe high things, that you would be in this ſenſe high-minded! Saint Pauls meaning is to take nothing from you, but give you a better to requite it by farre. He would have you part vvith part of your wealth to do good, he will lay you up for it, treaſure in heaven for your own uſe. He vvould have you forſake the worlds ſand and uncertainty, vvherein you cannot truſt; but therefore, he marks you out a plot out of the rock whereto you may truſt. He would not have you high-minded in conſideration or comparison of ought on this earth: but he would have your minds truly exalted to reach up to heavenly things higher than the earth. And laſt, inſtead of this world, the luſts and riches thereof, to match that, if you will lay hold of it, he holdeth out eternal life and the glory thereof.

To take a ſhort proſpect in eternal life. Life it ſelf firſt (you know) is ſuch a thing, as were it to be ſold, would be ſtaple ware; if it ſtood where hold might be laid on it, ſome vvould thruſt their ſhoulders out of joynt, but they would reach it. It was a great truth out of a great lyar's mouth: ſkinne and all. And I mean not eternal, but this life: and therefore ſome readings have, to lay hold of true life; as if, in this, were little truth. Indeed Saint Auguſtine ſaith, it is nothing but a diſeaſe: We ſay of dangerous ſickneſſe, he hath the plague, he is in a conſumption, ſure he will die; and yet it failes; divers die not: whereas (ſaith he) of life it ſelf, it may be ſaid, and never failes: He lives, therefore he will certainly die. Job 2. 4.

Well yet, this life, such as it is, yet we love it, and loth we are to end it: and, if it be in hazard by the Law: what running, riding, posting, suing, bribing, and if all will not serve, breaking prison is there for it! Or, if it be in danger of disease, what ado is there kept, what ill-savoured drugges taken! what scarrifying, cutting, fearing! and when all comes to all, it is but a few yeares more added: and when they are done, we are where we should have been before; and then, that which is now life, then shall be no life. And then, what is it the nearer? What if Adam had lived till this morning, what were he now the nearer? Yet, for all that, as short and frail as it is, we do, what possibly man can do, to eeke it stiff; and think our selves jolly wise men when we have done, though we die next year after for all that. If then with so great labour, diligence, earnestnesse, endeavour, care and cost, we busie our selves sometimes to live for a while, how ought we to desire to live for ever? if for a time to put death away, how to take death away clean? You desire life I am sure, and long life; and therefore a long life, because it is long: that is, cometh somewhat nearer in some degre to eternal life: If you desire a long lasting life, why do you not desire an everlasting life? If a life of many yeares, which yet in the end shall fail; why not that life, whose yeares shall never fail? If we say, it is lack of wit or grace when any man runs in danger of the law of man, whereby haply he abridges himself of half a dozen yeares of this life; what wit or grace is there, wilfully to incurre the losse of eternal life? For indeed, as in the beginning we set down, it is a matter touching the losse of eternal life, we have in hand; and withall touching the pain of eternal death. It is not a losse only, for we cannot lose life, and become as a stone, free from either: if we leese our hold of this life, eternal death taketh hold upon us: If we heap not up the treasure of immortality, we heap up the treasure of wrath against the day of wrath. If your wealth be not with us to life, pecunia vestra vobiscum est in perditionem. We have not farre to seek for this. For, if now we turn our deaf ear to this Charge, you shall fall into temptations: fear ye not that? Into many foolish and noysome lusts, nor fear ye that neither? yet fear whether these lead; which drown men in perdition and destruction of body and soul. Fear ye not these? doth the Lord thunder thus, and are ye not moved? Quibus verbis te curabo? I know not how to do you good. But, let eternal life prevail. Sure, if life come not, death comes. There is as much said, now, (not as I have to say, but) as the time would suffer: Only let me in a few words deliver the charge concerning this, and so I will break up the Court for this time.

Psalm 101.28.

Rom. 2. 5.
Acts 8. 20,
Verse 9.

And now (Right honourable, beloved, &c.) albeit that according to the power that the LORD hath given us, I might testifie and charge you in the presence of GOD the FATHER, who quickeneth all things: and of the LORD JESUS, who shall shew himself from Heaven with His mighty Angels in flaming fire, rendring vengeance to them, not only that know not GOD, but to them also that obey not the Gospel of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, that ye think upon these things, which you have heard, to do them: yet humanum dico, for your infirmity, I will speak after the manner of men, the nature of a man best loveth to be dealt withall, and even beseech you by the mercies of GOD, even of GOD the FATHER, who hath loved you, and given you an everlasting consolation and a good hope through grace, and by the coming of our LORD JESUS CHRIST and our assembly unto Him, that you receive not this Charge in vain; that ye account it His charge, and not mine; received of Him, to deliver to you. Look not to me, I beseech you: in whom, whatsoever you regard (countenance or learning, yeares or authority) I do most willingly acknowledge my self farre unmeet to deliver any; more meet a great deal, to receive one my self, save that I have obtained fellowship in this businesse, in dispensing the Mysteries, and delivering the Charges of the LORD. Look not on me, look on your own soules, and have pity on them: Look upon Heaven, and the Lord of Heaven and earth, from whom it cometh, and of whom it will be one day called for again. Surely there is a Heaven; Surely there is a Hell: Surely there will be a day, when enquiry shall be made, how we have discharged that we have received of the Lord; and how you have discharged that, you have received of us in the Lord's Name. Against which day, your consciences stands charged with many things, at many times heard. O seek not death in the errour of your life, deceive not your selves: think not, that when my words shall be at an end, both they shall vanish in the ayr, and you never hear of them again. Surely you shall; the day is coming, when it shall be required again at your hands. A fearfull day for all those, that for a ilittle Riches, think basely of others: upon all those that repose in these vain Riches (as they shall see then) a vain confidence; upon all those, that enjoy only with the belly and the back, and do either no good, or miserable sparing good with their Riches: whose Riches shall be with them to their destruction. Beloved, when your life shall have an end (as an end it shall have) when the terrour of death shall be upon you; when your soul shall be cited to appear before GOD, in novissimo; I know and am perfectly assured, all these things will come to mind again, you will perceive and feel that, which possibly now you do not. The Devils charge cometh then, who will presse these points in another manner, than we can: then it will be too late. Prevent his charge, I beseech you, by reguarding and remembring this, now. Now is the time, while you may and have time wherein, and ability wherewith: think upon it; and provide for eternal life: you ſhall never in your life ſtand in ſo great need of your Riches, as in that day; provide for that day; and provide for eternal life. It will not come yet, it is true, it will be long in coming: but when it comes; it will never have an end.

This end is ſo good, that I will end with eternal life, which (you ſee) is Saint Pauls end. It is his, and the ſame ſhall be my end, and I beſeech GOD it may be all our ends. To GOD immortal, inviſible, and only wiſe, GOD; who hath prepared this eternal life for us; who hath taught us this day how to come unto it; whoſe grace be ever with us, and leave us not, till it have thereto brought us; the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt, be all glory, power, praiſe, and thankſgiving, now and for ever. AMEN.

Upon the SECOND

COMMANDEMENT.

Preached in the Pariſh Church of

Sᵀ. GILES CRIPPLEGATE.

Jan. IX. Anno Dom. MDXCII.

ACTS, CHAP. II. VER. XLII.

And they continued in the Apoſtles Doctrine, and Fellowſhip, and Breaking of Bread and Prayers.

THere had been two ſundry dayes before, Sermons concerning the poſitive outward Worſhip of GOD, out of this Text, conſiſting of theſe four parts.

1. The Apoſtles Doctrine. 2. Their Society or Fellowſhip. 3. Breaking of Bread. 4. Prayers.

The effect of this laſt, was to acquaint the Auditory with ſundry Imaginations by divers erected, which many unſtable perſons do run after, and worſhip in ſtead of thoſe four, the Apoſtles Doctrine, &c. The order was to begin with the Doctrine firſt, and ſo after, through the reſt, as they ſtand.

I Eccle. 7. ult. HAT ſuch imaginations there are, Salomon complaineth of Ratiocinia plurima, whereby men were with-drawn from the ſimplicity of their creation. And under the Goſpel, S. Paul likewiſe of Venti doctrinarum, whereby Chriſtian people began to be blown and carried about from the ſtedfaſtneſs of the truth. Ephes. 4. 14.

But eſpecially under the Goſpel. For that, as St. Auguſtine ſaith (De Civit. 18.) Videns Diabolus templa Dæmonum deſeri, & in nomen CHRISTI currere genus humanum, &c. Seeing idolatrous images would down, he bent his whole device, in place of them to erect and ſet up divers imaginations, that the people, inſtead of the former, might bow down to theſe and worſhip them. Since which it hath been, and is his daily practice, either to broach, Doctrinas novas & peregrinas, new imaginations never heard of before: or to revive the old, and new dreſs them. And theſe (for that by themſelves they will not utter) to mingle, and to card with the Apoſtles doctrine, &c. that at the leaſt yet, he may ſo vent them. Heb. 13. 9. Apoc. 2. 14. 2 Cor. 2. 10.

And

And this indeed is the diſeaſe of our age, and the juſt complaint we make of it. That there hath been good riddance made of images: but for imaginations, they be daily ſtamped in great number, and inſtead of the old Images, ſet up, deified, and worſhipped, carrying the names and credit of the Apoſtles doctrine, Government, &c.

Touching theſe Imaginations then, to find ſome heads of them: They be, in reſpect of the Devil, who inſpireth them, called Doctrina damoniorum. In reſpect of the inſtruments, by whom he breaths them out, Doctrina hominum: As the doctrine of the Phariſees, The doctrine of the Nicolaitans. 1 Tim. 4. 1. Mat. 16. 9. 12. Apoc. 2. 13. Acts 20. 29.

Theſe men were of two ſorts, as S. Paul ſorteth them, 1 Wolves which from without entered into the Church: 2 Men ariſing from among themſelves teaching perverſe things.

1. Thoſe which from without entered, were Philoſophers from the Gentiles: Phariſees from the Jewes. Both which bred many imaginations in Chriſtian Religion. 1. Imaginations without the Church.

Againſt them both, St. Paul giveth a double Caveat. Not to be ſeduced by Philoſophy (meaning as he ſheweth, the vain deceit of that profeſſion:) that is the former. 2 Nor the humane traditions and rudiments of the Phariſees; that, is the latter. To avoid oppoſitions of ſcience falſly ſo called: there is the firſt. To avoid Jewiſh fables and traditions: there is the ſecond. For, from theſe two forges, came a great part of the imaginations which enſued. Each of theſe Sects eſteeming his old wine good, and conſequently brewing it with the new wine of the Goſpel. Col. 2. 8. 1 Tim. 6. 20. Tit. 1. 14. Luke 5. ult.

Imaginations by Philoſophy. Firſt, by the courſe of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, it appeareth, that Simon Magus (who of a heathen Philoſopher became a Chriſtian, and was baptized) after through the gall of bitterneſs wherein he was, fell away again, and proved the firſt of all Hereticks. He, firſt; and after, Valentine: and then, Baſilides deviſed many ſtrange ſpeculative phanſies. And indeed, whoſoever they be, that dote about unprofitable curious ſpeculations, from this kind they ſprung firſt. Acts 8. 23. 1 By Philoſophy.

After theſe, thoſe two main Hereſies, that ſo mightily troubled the Church: Firſt, that of the Manichee, who brought a neceſſity upon all things by meanes of his duo principia: making men ſecure how they lived, becauſe it was ordained what ſhould become of them. Secondly, the other of the Pelagian, who aſcribed to mans free-will, and ability to keeps Gods Lawes; and thereby made void the grace of Chriſt. Both theſe were but two baſtard ſlips of corrupt Philoſophy: The former, an imagination iſſuing from the ſect of Stoicks, and their fatal deſtiny. The latter, from the ſect of the Peripatetickes, and their pure naturals.

Imaginations by Iudaiſm. As the curious ſpeculations came from the Philoſophers of the Gentiles. So whatſoever ſuperſtitious obſervations were imagined, came from the Phariſees and ſects of the Jewes. As Simon Magus is reckoned, the firſt Heretick, So Ebion the Jew, is the ſecond. And from him ſprang the opinion of the Neceſſity of Jewiſh obſervances; which was the occaſion of the Counſel in Acts 15. and the opinion of worſhipping Angels as Mediators, as Theodoret teſtifieth upon Coloſ. 2. 18. And for thoſe Ceremonies, as at the firſt they deſired to retain thoſe very ſame that were Iudaical; So (when it was withſtood by the Apoſtles) they did after but turn them, and new varniſh them over into others like, and with them ſo clogged the Church, as the Jewes eſtate was much more tolerable than the Chriſtians, Saint Auguſtines complaint, Ep. 19: 2 By Judaiſm.

Now from theſe two ſorts of perſons proceeded thoſe two ſeveral means, whereby (as it were in two moulds) all imaginations have been caſt, and the Truth of Gods word ever perverted. 1. From the Phariſee; that piecing out the new Garment with old rags of traditions, that is, adding to, and eeking out Gods truth, with mens phanſies; with the Phylacteries and fringes of the Phariſees, who took upon them to obſerve many things beſide it. 2: From the Philoſopher, that wreſting and tentring of the Scriptures (which St. Peter complaineth of) with expoſitions and gloſſes newly coyned, to make them ſpeak that, they never meant. Giving ſuch new and ſtrange ſenſes to places of Scripture, as the Church of CHRIST never heard of. And what words are there or can there be, that (being helped out with the Phariſees addition of a truth unwritten, or tuned with the Philoſophers wreſt of a divided ſenſe) may not be made to give a colour to a new imagination? Therefore the ancient Fathers thought it meet, that they that would take upon them to interpret the Apoſtles Doctrine, ſhould put in ſureties, that their ſenſes they gave, were no other than the Church in former time hath acknowledged. It is true. The Apoſtles indeed ſpake from the Spirit, and every affection of theirs was an Oracle: but, that (I take) was their peculiar priviledge. But all that are after them, ſpeak not by revelation, but by labouring in the word and learning: are not to utter their own phanſies, and to deſire to be believed upon their bare word; (if this be not dominari fidei, to be Lords of their Auditors faith, I know not what it is;) but only on condition, that the ſenſe they now give, be not a feined ſenſe (as S. Peter termeth it) but ſuch an one, as hath been before given by our Fathers and Fore-runners in the Chriſtian faith. Say I this of my ſelf (ſaith the Apoſtle) ſaith not the Law ſo too? Give I this ſenſe of mine own head, hath not Chriſts Church heretofore given the like? which one courſe, if it were ſtrictly held, would rid our Church of many fond imaginations which now are ſtamped daily, becauſe every man upon his own ſingle bond, is truſted to deliver the meaning of any Scripture, which is many times nought elſe, but his own imagination. This is the diſeaſe of our Age. Not the Phariſees addition (which is well left) but (as bad as it) the Philoſophers gloſs, which too much aboundeth. And I ſee no way but this to help it. 2 Pet. 3. 16. Mat. 9. 17. Mat. 7. 4.

2 From within by Christians. Gal. 2. 4.

Imaginations from the Christians. Secondly, from among the Christians themselves arose men speaking perverse things, whom S. Paul well calleth fratres subintroductos. Who also by their imaginations, mainely corrupted the Apostles Doctrine, which we heretofore divided into { 1 Matter, in which { 1 The Substance, and therein { 1 the foundation. 2 the Building upon it. 2 Manner, { 2 The Ceremony.

Concerning all which, imaginations have risen.

1 In the matter and substance. a Touching the foundation. Heb. 6. 2. Mat. 1. 15. Acts 20. 20. 1 Repentance. Acts 6. * Apoc. 2. 15.

Imaginations touching the foundations. Which are two (so called by the name of foundations, first laid by our Saviour Christ, and after kept by the Apostles) Even a Repentance, and b Faith.

Imaginations touching Repentance. Nicolas one of the seven, (as Eusebius testifieth) became a man of Imaginations, and began the sect of Nicolaitans * whom God hateth! After whom arose Carpocrates in the same, of whom came the sect of the Gnosticks. A sect that blew up that part of the foundation, which is called Repentance from dead works. For (as Epiphanius testifieth,) they held; that all other things besides faith, were indifferent, Repentance and all. And that; so a man knew and imbraced certaine dictates and positions, they would deliver him, live how he list, he could not choose but be saved. And of these high points of knowledge they intituled themselves Gnosticks, that is, men of knowledge. And all other Christians that could not talke like them, Simplices, good simple soules. Such is the imagination in our dayes, of carnal Gospellers; That, so hee forget not his Creed, he cannot miscarry. These be the Gnosticks of our age.

Imaginations touching faith. On the other side, against the other part of the foundation (faith) Latianus a Christian and a great learned man cast his Mine, of whom was the sect of the Encratites: who offended at the licentious lives of the Gnosticks, fell into the other extreame, that Non est curandum quid quisque credat, id tantum curandum est, quid quisque faciat: that the Creed might be cancelled well enough, for, an upright and strait course of life, God onely regarded: And in every Sect, a man might be saved, that lived well. These, for their sober, and temperate kind of life, termed themselves Encratites, that is strict livers; and all other Christians that lived not in like austerity, Psychicos (that is) carnal men. Such is in our daies the imagination of the Civill Christian; who, so his conversation be blamelesse and honest, careth not for Religion and Faith at all, but for the most part lives and dies in brutish ignorance. We may call these the Enoratites of our Age.

b Touching the building.

Imaginations touching the Building. A secondary part of the Apostles Doctrine, and not of like necessity with the former. Epiphanius writeth (Heres. 61) There were a sect, a branch of the old Cathari or Puritanes (as he saith) which calleth themselves Apostolici, propter exactum disciplinæ studium &c. For an extraordinary desire they had above other men to have discipline and all things, to the exact patterne of the Apostles dayes; which is it selfe an imagination.

1.

Gal. 6. 16. Acts 16. 4.

For, it were cacozelia an apish imitation, to retaine all in use then; seeing divers things; even then, were but temporaria. For beside their Canon in matters of knowledge, they had their dogmata or decreta, not of equall importance; as was that of eating things strangled, and bloud which no man now thinketh himself bound to abstaine from. And, besides their Epitaxes, commandements in matter of practice, they had their Diataxes, Injunctions, not of equall regard with the former. Such were their Agapæ, love-feasts after the Sacrament, and their celebrating the Sacrament after Supper; which no Church at this day doth imitate. Therefore, to presse all that was in that time is an imagination.

1 Cor. 11. 10. Iude 12. 1 Cor. 11. 20.

And, as to presse all; so, of these things that remaine, to presse all alike, or thinke an equall necessitie of them, which was a parcell of the imagination of the Donatists. For, some things the Apostles peremtorily commanded: Some things they had no commandment for, but onely gave counsell: Some things they commanded and taught: some things, they taught and exhorted: whereof each was to be esteemed in his own value and worthinesse: Neither to dispense with the commandment; nor to make a matter of necessity of the Counsell. Both which have not a little harmed the Church.

1 Cor. 7. 10. 1 Cor. 7. 25. 1 Tim. 4. 11.

Lastly, for these matters of Counsel, which for the most part are things indifferent, they also fall upon two imaginations: 1 Some say Omnia mihi licent: and, so it be not condemned as unlawfull, make no bones of it: which tendeth to all prophanenesse. Others say, Touch not, Taste not, Handle not; which speake of things indifferent, as meerly unlawfull: which imagina- tion ends in ſuperſtition. A meane way would be holden between them both, that neither a ſnare be caſt on mens conſciences, by turning Non expedit into Non licet: nor our liberty in Chriſt be made an occaſion to the fleſh, by caſting non expedit out of doores. For the Spirit of CHRIST is the ſpirit of ingenuity, which will freely ſubmit it ſelfe to that which is expedient, even in things of their owne nature lawfull. The not obſerving whereof with good heed and diſcretion, hath in old time filled the world with many a ſuperſtitious Imagination; and in our dayes hath healed the imagination and ſuperſtition and hypocriſie, with another of riot and licentious liberty, as bad as the former, yea a great deal worſe. 1 Cor. 7. 35. Gal. 5. 13.

Imaginations touching the ceremony. Firſt, I take it to be a phancie, to imagine, there needs none: for, without them, neither comelineſſe, nor orderly uniformity, will be in the Church. Women will pray uncovered (an uncomely ſight) unleſſe the Apoſtle enjoyne the contrary: therefore, Let every thing be done decently and in order. Now, to adviſe what is comely and orderly in each Age and Place, is left in the power and diſcretion of each Church; Viſum eſt Spiritui Sancto & nobis. And the cuſtome of each Church is peaceably to be obſerved by the members of it. In a matter ceremonial, touching the veiling of women (after ſome reaſons alledged, which yet a troubleſome body might quarrell with) thus doth S Paul determine the matter definitively: If any liſt to be contentious, Nos non habemus talem conſuetudinem, nec Eccleſiæ Dei. As if he ſhould ſay: In matters of that quality, each Churches cuſtome is to over-rule, as from that place S Hierome (Ep. 28) and S. Aug. Ep. 86. & 118.) do both reſolve. 2 Imagination in the ceremony. 1 Cor. 11. 13. 1 Cor. 14. ult. 1 Cor. 11. 16.

It hath been thought meet (ſaith S. Gregory) that there ſhould be In unitate fidei conſuetudo diverſa: that is, the diverſity of cuſtomes, ſhould be in divers Churches, all in the unity of one faith, to ſhew the Churches liberty in thoſe matters. And therefore, the eating of things offered to Idols wholly reſtrained the Churches of Syria & Cilicia, ſeemeth in ſome ſort permitted the Church of Corinth, in caſe no man did challenge it. 1 Cor. 10. 17.

And as for divers Churches, this hath been judged requiſite; ſo hath it likewiſe been deemed no leſſe requiſite, that every perſon ſhould inviolably obſerve the rites and cuſtomes of his own Church. Therefore thoſe former ordinances, which, were not urged upon the Corinthians; upon the Galathians, within the compaſſe of the Regions where they took place, (as we ſee) they were urged (as the fathers interpret thoſe places,) under the paine of Anathema; which cenſure is due to all thoſe that trouble the Church: as thoſe doe, who for ſetting light by the cuſtomes and orders of the Church, are by S Paul concluded within the number of perſons contentious and troubleſome. Gal. 1. 9. Gal. 5. 12. 1 Cor. 11. 16.

Imaginations touching the manner of delivery. For, even in it alſo, for failing, men muſt imagine ſomething, that, when they can take no exception to the matter, yet they may itch after a new manner, and hear it after ſuch and ſuch a ſort delivered, or they will not heare at all, and therefore after their owne liking get them a heap of Teachers. 1. They muſt hear no Latine nor Greek; no, though it be interpreted. A meere imagination. For, the Apoſtle writting to the Corinthians, which were Grecians, hath not feared to uſe terms as ſtrange to them, as Latine or Greek is to us (Maranatha, Belial, Abba.) All which he might eaſily enough have expreſſed in their vulgar, but that it liked him to retaine his liberty in this point. 2 In the manner of delivery. 2 Tim. 4. 3. 1 Cor. 16. 22. 2 Cor. 6. 16. Rom. 8. 15.

2 Nor none of the Apochrypha cited. Another imagination: For S. Jude in his Epiſtle, hath not feared to alleadge, out of the book of Enoch (Iude 14.) which booke hath ever been reckoned Apocrypha. And, by his example all the ancient Writers are full of allegations from them: ever theſe Writtings yielding the next place after the Cannon of the Scriptures, and preferring them before all forraine Writers whatſoever.

3 Nor any thing alledged out of the Jewes Thalmud, a third Imagination. For, from their Records, S. Paul is judged to have ſet downe the names of Sorceres that withſtood Moſes, to be James and Jambres; which in Exodus, or the whole Cannon or Scriptures are not named. As many other things in the new teſtament, from them receive great light. And the Jewes themſelves are herein cleerly confuted. 2 Tim. 3. 8.

4 But, eſpecially no heathen example or authority (for, with allegation of the ancient Fathers I have often dealt) a matter which the Primitive Church never imagined unlawfull. For Clement Alexandrinus (in Strom. 7.) by alluſion to Sara & Agar, teacheth the contrary. So doth Baſil, in a ſet Treatiſe de legendis Ethnicorum Scriptis; and Gregory Nyſſen de vita Moſis, out of the XXI. of Deut. by the rites touching the marrying of heathen women taken captive: and laſt of all S. Auguſtine moſt plainly, De Doctrina Chriſtiana, 2. 40. And theſe all reckoned of the contrary, as a very imagination. Which they did the rather, for that, beſides divers other places, not ſo apparent, they find S. Paul, in matter of doctrine, alledging Aratus a heathen Writer, in his Sermon at Athens. And againe, in matter of life, alledging Menander, a Writer of Comedies, in his Epiſtle: And thirdly, in matter of report only without any urgent neceſſity, alledging Epimenides, or as ſome thinke Callimachus. Acts 17. 28. 1 Cor. 15. 33.

And ſurely, if it be lawfull to reaſon from that which Nature teacheth, as S. Paul doth againſt mens wearing long hiare; it is not unlawfull neither, to reaſon from the wiſeſt and moſt pithy ſayings of naturall men. Eſpecially, with the Apoſtle, uſing them (as in a manner they only are uſed) thereby to provoke Chriſtian men to emulation, by ſhewing them their own blindneſs in matter of knowledge, that ſee not ſo much as the heathen did by the light of Nature: or their 1 Cor. 11. 14.

slackneſſe, in matter of converſation; that cannot be got ſo farre forward by Gods Law, as the poore Pagan can by his Philoſophy. That if Grace will not remove, ſhame may.

II. Touching the Apoſtles fellowſhip.

Imaginations touching the Apoſtles fellowſhip. For, this doctrine received, doth incorporate the receivers of it into a fellowſhip or Society, which is called the fellowſhip, or coporation of the Goſpell: and they, that bring not this doctrine, are no wayes to be received thereto. Which fellowſhip is not to be forſaken, as the manner of ſome is (men of imaginations) in our daies, either becauſe there be hereſies, for oportet eſſe: Or, for that many at communions, come together, not for the better, but for the worſe; for ſo did they in Corinth: Or laſtly, for that many and many Chriſtians walke (which S. Paul wrote with teares) as enemies to the Croſſe of Chriſt; for ſo it was in the Church of Philippi.

Iohn 2. 10. Heb. 10.25. 1 Cor.11 19. 1 Cor. 11. 17. Phil.3. 18.

Now it is plaine, there can no Society endure without government. And therefore God hath appointed in it Governours and Aſſiſtants: which ſeeing they have power from God, to reject or receive accuſations, and to judge thoſe that are within and of the fellowſhip; it is an idle imagination that ſome have imagined, to hold, the Church hath not her Iudgement-ſeat, and power to cenſure her diſobedient children. It hath ever been holden good Divinity, that the Church from Chriſt received power to cenſure and ſeparate wilfull offenders. Both, with the Heathen man's ſeparation, who might not ſo much as enter into the Church-door (which is the greater cenſure) and with the Publicans ſeparation (which is the leſſe) who might enter and pray in the Temple, but was avoided in common converſation, and in the fellowſhip of the private table, and therefore much more of the Alter. Of which twaine, the former, the Apoſtle calleth cutting off, Gal. 5. 12. the latter abſtaining from; 2 Theſ. 3. 6. The Primitive Church calleth the former excommunicatos, the latter abſtentos. So that, to phanſie no government, is an imagination. A Government there is.

1 Cor. 12. 8. 1 Tim. 5. 19. 1 Cor. 8. 12. Mat. 18. 17. Acts 21. 18. Luke 18. 10.

Touching the forme of which Government, many imaginations have lately been bred; in theſe our dayes ſpecially. At the writting of this Verſe, it is certaine, that the Government of Chriſtian people conſiſted in two degrees onely. (Of both which our Saviour CHRIST himſelfe was the Author.) 1 Of the twelve, 2 Of the ſeventy: both which were over the People, in things pertaining to God.

Acts 2. 42. Luke 9. 1. 10.1.

Theſe two, were one ſuperiour to another and not equall. And, that the Apoſtles eſtabliſhed an equality in the Clergy, is (I take it) an imagination. No man could periſh in the gaine-ſaying of Coreh, under the Goſpell) which Saint Iude ſaith, they may) if there were not a ſuperiority in the Clergy; For, Cores mutinie was, becauſe he might not be equall to Aaron, appointed his ſuperiour by God, Num. 16 10, Which very humour (obſerve it who will) hath brought forth moſt part of the hereſies, ſince the time of the Goſpell: that Coreh might not be Aarons equall. Now, of theſe two orders, the Apoſtles have ever been reckoned the ſuperior to the other, till our times; as having even under our Saviour CHRIT, a power to forbid others, Luk. 9. 49. And after, exerciſing the ſame power; Silas (one of the Seventy) receiving a commandment (ἐντολὴν) from Saint Paul an Apoſtle to come unto him. As the Auditory had their roome by themſelves, So among the perſons Eccleſiaſticall, the Apoſtles had a higher ſeate, as may be gathered; and in the very place it ſelf, were diſtinguiſhed. Now in the place of the Twelve, ſucceeded Biſhops; and in the place of the Seventy, Presbyterie, Prieſts, or Miniſters, and that by the judgement of Irenæus (lib. 3. cap 3) who lived immediately upon the Apoſtles age: Of Tertullian (de præſcript.) Of S. Auguſtine (in Pſal. 44.) And this, till of late was thought the forme of that fellowſhip, and never other imagined.

Acts 15; 32. 17.15. 1 Cor.14. 16. Acts 4. 19.

But, not long ſince, ſome have phanſied another, that ſhould conſiſt of Lay-elders, Paſtors and Doctors, and whether of Deacons too, is not fully agreed yet. Which device is preſſed now upon our Church: not, as a forme of more convenience than that, it hath; but, as one abſolutely neceſſary, and of our Saviour CHRSITS owne only inſtitution, which maketh it the leſſe ſufferable. I know that by vertue of Saint Peters wrinch before mentioned, ſome places may be brought, which may ſeeme to give it colour: but, that is, if we allow thoſe new gloſſed ſenſes. But, if we ſeek what ſenſes, the Primitive Church gave of them, not one of them, but will ſuffer it to fall to the gronud. And, finding it a ſtranger to them, I know not how to terme it, but an imagination. To touch it briefly in a word.

If we aske Scripture for it, and where wee may finde it, they paſſe by the two moſt evident places in appearance; 1 Cor. 12. 28. Becauſe, there are no Paſtors; and Eph. 4. 11. Becauſe, there are no Lay-elders; and lay it upon, Rom. 12. 6, 7, 8. And there, by a ſtrange and unheard of Expoſition, they will finde them all foure. But not, except that Expoſition be allowed them: Nor if the ancient Writers may be heard, what the true ſenſe of it is. There is no Epiſtle on which ſo many of them have written: Sixe only I will name: Origen, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Ambroſe, Hierome, Oecumenius; All which have entreated of it. Let their Commentaries be looked on upon that place. Not one of them applieth it to the Church-Government (which by any likelyhood cannot be imagined, but they would, if it were the maine place for it) it)or findeth thoſe offices in thoſe words, which they in good earneſt tell us of, as that διάκονος (in the ſeventh verſe) is not the Deacon: but the Diſtributer (in the eighth verſe) is heior that qui miſeretur, is latine for a Widow, or ſuch like.

But if jointly they find them not: let us ſee how ſeverally they warrant their Offices. 1. Of Elders, ſome both preach and govern: ſome govern only: and there they imagine they have found their Lay-elder; 1 Tim. 5. 17. by implication, that there are Presbyteri, that labour not in preaching. Hear Saint Chryſoſtome on 1 Cor. 1. 17. You ſhall find a far other ſenſe; Evangelizare (ſaith he) perquàm rarum eſt; baptizare autem cuiuſlibet, modo fungatur Sacerdotio. And a little after, Siquidem Presbyteris quidem, qui ſimpliciores ſunt, hoc munus tradimus, ut baptizent; verbum autem ut doceant, non niſi Sapientioribus: hic ſapientia eſt labor. Quamobrem & alibi inquit: qui bene præſunt Preſbyteri, duplici honore digni ſunt, maxime qui laborant in verbo. Whereby it is plain, that in Saint Chryſoſtome's time, it was not reckoned meet, that every one that miniſtred the Sacraments, ſhould alſo preach. That the meaner ſort dealt with the Baptizing; and they only that were of the more wiſe ſort, with the Word. And to prove, it ſhould thus be, he cieth this their Scripture, as if in the Apoſtles dayes, the like had been thought Wiſdome. But as for lay-elders, He, nor any that waiteth on it, can find in this verſe; nor any ſuch in all antiquity ever underſtood by the name of Presbuter.

The Elders Preachers they divide into Paſtors and Doctors; and theſe they ſever in function; limiting the one to his exhortation only, the other to point of Doctrine only. An imagination, which none of the Fathers would ever acknowledge, ſearch their Writings. Saint Chryſoſtome upon this Verſe, Epheſ. 4. 11. taketh them both for one, and maketh no difference. So Saint Hierome in both his Commentaries upon that Epiſtle: Omnis enim Paſtor Doctor eſt. But Saint Auguſtine may ſerve for all, to ſhew, how unknown this was then. Who being purpoſely written to, by Paulinus to aſſign a difference between them, thus anſwereth, PASTORES autem & DOCTORES, quos maxime ut diſcerneremus voluiſti, eoſdem puto eſſe, ſicut & tibi viſum eſt, ut non alios PASTORES, alios DOCTORES intelligeremus, &c. Hos enim ſicut unum aliquod duobus nominibus complexus eſt, Aug. Ep. 59. ad Paulinum.

Laſtly, For their Deacons too: that they ſhould be men of occupation and Trade, to deal with the Church-ſtock, and care of the poor only, is alſo (I doubt not) an imagination: ſeeing all Antiquity hath ever reckoned of that Calling, as of a ſtep or degree to the Miniſtry, out of 1 Tim. 3. 13. And that the Churches practice hath been alwayes to imploy them in other parts and functions beſides that, is plain by Iuſtine Martyr (who lived in the Apoſtles daies) Apol. 2. ad Antonium, namely, To diſtribute the Communion: by Tertullian (de Bap.) to baptize: by Cyprian (Ser. 6. de lapſis) and divers others. So that to conclude, theſe are imaginations touching the Apoſtles fellowſhip, howſoever, a great number of deceived people bow down to them and worſhip them.

III. Imaginations touching the breaking of bread

Imaginations touching the breaking of bread: which is joyned to that fellowſhip, as the chiefeſt badge of that fellowſhip. For by it is gathered the Communion, as may be gathered by conference with Acts 20. 7. and as the Syrian Text tranſlateth it. For that, as by the other Sacrament in the verſe immediatly going before, they are received into the body of the Church; ſo by this, they are made to drink of the Spirit (1 Cor. 13, 13.) and ſo perfected in the higheſt Myſtery of this Society.

Concerning which, as the Church of Rome hath her imaginations: Firſt, in that ſhe many times celebrateth this myſtery ſine fractione, without any breaking at all. Whereas (as heretofore hath been ſhewed out of 1 Cor. 10. 18.) it is of the nature of an Euchariſt or Peace-offering: which was never offered but it was eaten, that both there might be a repreſentation of the memory of that ſacrifice, and together an application to each perſon by partaking of it. And ſecondly, in that ſhe had indeed no breaking of bread at all. For, it being broken (ever) after it is conſecrated, there is (with them) no bread remaining to break: and the body of CHRIST is now impaſſible, and cannot be broken, ſo that they are fain to ſay, they break Accidents, and indeed they well know not what. Contrary to Saint Luke here, who calleth it fractionem panis; and to St. Paul (1 Cor. 10. 16.) who ſaith, Panis quem frangimus. As theſe are their imaginations, ſo we want not ours. For many among us, phanſie only a Sacrament in this action, and look ſtrange at the mention of a Sacrifice: whereas we not only uſe it, as a nouriſhment ſpiritual (as, that, it is too) but as a mean alſo, to renew a covenant with GOD, by vertue of that Sacrifice, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh, Pſalm 50. 5. So our Saviour Chriſt in the inſtitution, telleth us, Luke 20. 10. And the Apoſtle, Heb. 13. 10. And the old Writers uſe no leſs, the word Sacrifice, than Sacrament; Altar, than Table; Offer, than Eat; but both indifferently, to ſhew there is both.

And again too, that to a many with us, it is indeed ſo fractio panis, as it is that only and nothing beſide: Whereas, the bread which we break is the partaking of Chriſts true body, (and not, of a Signe, Figure or Remembrance of it) 1 Cor. 10. 16. For the Church hath ever believed a true fruition of the true body of Chriſt, in that Sacrament.

Further (as heretofore hath been made plain) it is an imagination, to think, that this breaking of bread can be severed from the other, ver. 46. which is Esaiahs breaking of bread to the needy. Esay 58.7. Whereby, as in the former, CHRIST communicateth Himself with us; so we in this latter, communicate our selves with our poor brethren, that so, there may be perfect communion. For both in the Sacrifice which was the figure of it, it was a matter of Commandment, Deut. 6.10. insomuch, as the poorest were not exempt from Gods offerings: And our Saviour Christs practice was, at this feast, to command somewhat to be given to the poor, John 13. 29. Luke 21.4. And last of all, the Agapæ or love-feasts of the Christians for relief of the poor, do most plainly express that, I mean. In place of which (when they after proved incovenient) succeeded the Christian Offertory.

And lastly, whereas we continue in the Doctrine and Prayers of the Church, we do many times discontinue this action a whole year together. These long intermissions, (so that, if it be panis annuus, once a year received, we think our duty discharged) and also (no doubt) a second imagination in our common practice. For sure, we should continue also in this part, and the frequenting of it, if not so often as the Primitive Church did (which either thrice in the week, or at the furthest once, did communicate) yet, as often as the Church doth celebrate; which (I think) should do better to celebrate more often. And those exceptions which commonly we alledge to disturbe our selves for that action, make us no less meet for prayers than for it. For except a man abandon the purpose of sin, Psalm 66. 18. And except he be in Charity, Mat. 6.14. he is no more fit to pray than to communicate; and therefore should abstain from the one, as well as from the other. Or to say the truth, should by renewing himself in both these points, make himself meet for both, continuing no less in the breaking of bread; than in Prayers and doctrine.

IV. Imaginations touching Prayers.

Imaginations touching prayers. As the former was the most special exercise of a Christian, and chiefest in dignity; So this is the most general and chiefest in use. Therefore he puts it in the plural number: as if, both in preaching, censuring and communicating, it had his use; as indeed it hath. Before all things (1 Tim. 2.1.) In all things (1 Thes. 5.17.) After all things (Ephes. 6.18. Num. 6. verse ult.) And in this also we want not phansies: In this age especially, wherein an idle conceit is taken up, that never came into the heads of any of the old Hereticks, though never so brain-sick once to imagine: Our Saviour Christ thus wilieth us, When ye pray, say our Father, &c. Luke 11.12. A most fond imagination is start up in our times, never once dreamed of before, that telleth us, in no case we must say, Our Father, &c. with which form (if Saint Augustine be to be believed as a witness of Antiquity) the universal Church of Christ, hath ever used to begin and end all her prayers, Ep. 59. as striving indeed by divers other formes more largely to express the sense of that prayer, but not being able to come near the high art, and most excellent spirit of perfection in that pattern, they alwayes conclude with it; as being sure, howsoever they may for divers defects not attain to the depth of it; and by it, they shall be sure to beg all things necessary at GODS hands. This I named first, because it is appropriate to our times.

Besides, as the Church of Rome hath her imaginations touching Prayers: First, against Saint Pauls Orabo & mente, in setting the people to pray they wote not what; and so making their understanding unfruitfull, 1 Cor. 14.14. And again, against our Saviour Christs Cæveat, Mat. 6.7. in setting them to go over whole Rosaries and Psalters; as if much babling after the heathen manner, were acceptable to God. So likewise, do others also among us, erre in their imaginations, no less, and that even against the same places.

First, against Orabo spiritu (1 Cor. 14.15.) in the same verse, by finding fault with a set Lyturgie (which they call stinted prayers) and giving themselves to imagine prayers at the same instant: whereby it is plain, they so occupie their mindes, with divising still what to say next, their spirit is unfruitfull, no lesse than the others understanding; And both these: 1 the understanding of the mind, and the affections of the spirit are there necessarily required. Mat. 23.14. And again, that, instead of Rosaries and a number of prayers, they bring in the Pharisees imagination of long prayers (that is) a prayer as long as a whole Rosarie. And this they take to be a great part of holinesse: but indeed it is nothing but the former superstition drawn in backward. In which, who so marks them, shall find, they commit both faults: that of the Pharisee, in tedious length, procuring many times nauseam spiritus, a dangerous passion: and the other of the Heathen, in fond repetitions, tautologies, inconsequences, and all the absurdities that may fall into such manner of speech. Saint Cyprian saith, It was ever in Christ's Church counted an absurd thing (which some count their glory) ventilare preces inconditis vocibus. The absurditie whereof would better appear, if (seeing under prayers here, Psalmes, and spiritual songs are contained, both being parts of invocation) they would have no stinted Psalms, but conceive their songs too, upon the present out of the spirit, and so sing them. For to say truth, there is no more reason for the one, than for the other. But GODS Church hath ever had, as a form of doctrine, both of faith in the Creed; and of life, in the Decalogue; so of prayer too. Which, from Acts 13. 2. the Fathers in all ages have called a Lyturgie, or service of GOD.

These

These are, of many imaginations, some set up and magnified by some, and by others adored and worshipped, under the names of the 1 Apostles Doctrine, 2 Government, 3 Sacraments, and 4 Prayer.

Saint Stephen telleth us, out of the fifth of Amos, that if we do thus make to ourselves Tabernacles and figures to worship them, our punishment shall be to be carried away beyond Babylon, Acts 7. 43. And good reason, for these idle phansies, are not from Christ's Church, from Sion; but from Babylon they came, and if we delight in them, thither shall we be carryed.

And sure we are in a good way thitherward; for of Babel St. Augustine saith; Civitas illa confusionis indifferenter habuit Philosophos inter se diversa, & diversa sentientes. In Gods city it was never so; there was ever correction for Coyners; but in Babel, the City of confusion, every Philosopher might set up; as now every Sect-master may broach any imagination that taketh him in the head, without punishment. For in Babel, it is reckoned but an indifferent matter. Sure the Prophets tell us, that if Babylons confusion go thus before, the captivity of Babylon is not far behind. From which, Almighty God deliver us, and make us carefull, as to continue the Apostles Doctrine, &c. So neither to engrave, nor to bow down, and worship any of these imaginations. Amen. 18. De Civ. Dei.

A SERMON

One of the

SERMONS

Upon the THIRD

COMMANDEMENT,

Preached in the Parish Church of

St. GILES CRIPPLEGATE.

June XI. Anno Dom. MDXCII.

JEREM. CHAP. IV. VER. II.

Et jurabis, vivit Dominus, in veritate, & in judicio, & in justitia.

And thou shalt swear, the LORD liveth, in truth, in judgement, and in righteousness.

OF this Commandement, there are two main Propositions. 1. Thou shalt take the Name of GOD: Else, it should have been, thou shalt not take it at all. 2. Thou shalt take it orderly, and not in vain. Of the first: thou shalt take it to those ends and uses, to which GOD lendeth it. Of which one is, Thou shalt swear by it: which limited by two wayes:

First, by what: The Lord liveth.

Secondly, how: In truth, judgement, justice. As in the former Commandements, so in this, there be two Extreams. 1. The one, of the Anabaptists, which hold all swearing unlawfull, contrary to the first, Thou shalt swear. 2. The other of the licentious Christian, which holds (at least in practice) A man may swear how, and in what sort he list: By Creatures, &c. Contrary to The Lord liveth, &c. Falsely, rashly, lewdly; contrary to In truth, judgement, justice.

That

That it is lawfull to ſwear, it appeareth by the Law, *Deut.*6.15. By the Prophets: Jeremy here. Eſay, (*Chap.*45. *Ver.*23.) more earneſtly: I have ſworn by My Self, the word is gone out of My mouth and ſhall not return: That every knee ſhall bow to Me, and every tongue ſhall ſwear by Me. Davids Pſalm 63. ult. Laudabuntur omnes, qui jurant per Eum. By the practiſe of the Saints, not only under Moſes; but, under the Law of Nature. Abraham ſweareth, Gen.21.24. Iſaac ſweareth, Gen.26.31. Jacob ſweareth, Gen. 31.53. Now, our Saviour Chriſt came not to deſtroy the Law and the Prophets, in thoſe things wherein they agree with the Law of Nature. Therefore, not to take away an Oath. 1 Thou ſhalt ſwear.

Whereas, they object firſt: That it ſtandeth not with Chriſtian profeſſion, but was tolerated, as an unperfect thing, under the Law.

We anſwer: It cannot be reckoned an Imperfection, to ſwear. For that, not only Abraham, the pattern of humane perfection, both ſware himſelf, *Gen.*21.25. and put his ſervant to an Oath, Gen.24.3. But, even the Angels, nearer than we to perfection, ſware both under the Law (Dan. 12.7.) and under the Goſpel (*Apoc.*13.10.) And, not only they, but even God Himſelf (in whom are all perfections) Gen. 22.16. and Pſalm 110.4. So that it cannot be imagined an imperfection.

Beſides, the holy Apoſtles, the moſt perfect Chriſtians, have in urgent cauſes done the like, 2 Cor. 1.23. I call God for a record againſt mine own ſoul; and 1 Cor. 15.31. By our rejoycing which I have in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord: which place cannot be avoided, having in the Greek, the word (Nὴ) never uſed, but in an oath only.

Whereas ſecondly, they object our Saviour's ſaying, I ſay unto you ſwear not at all: The Ancient Writers anſwer, that our Saviour Chriſt in the very ſame place, not reproving the other part: Reddes autem Domino Iuramenta tua, meant not to take all oathes away: But muſt be underſtood according to the Phariſees erroneous gloſs of this Commandement, which He intendeth to overthrow, by oppoſing to dictum eſt antiquis, Ego autem dico: Which was of two ſorts: 1. For firſt, it ſeemeth they underſtood it of perjurie alone: So that, if a man forſwear not himſelf, he might ſwear an oath. And ſo Chriſt reproveth not only falſe, but all raſh and unadviſed ſwearing.

2. Secondly, it ſeemeth, they had thisconceipt: So a man ſwear not by the great Name of God, all was well; He might ſwear by any creature at his pleaſure: and ſo Chriſt willeth, not to ſwear at all, by any creature.

Though indeed, we hold in Divinitie, that Iurare, of an by it ſelf conſidered, is an act forbidden, no leſſe than occidere. And that, as it is an abſolute countermand, Non occides, and yet the Magiſtrate, by due courſe of Juſtice, executing a Malefactor is commanded: So is it likewiſe Non jurabis, and yet being (as we term it) veſtitum debitis circumſtantiis, Laudabuntur omnes qui jurant per Eum, as King David ſaith, Pſalm 63. ult.

Laſtly, there is alſo a barr in the word Iurare. For, God in His Law; ever putting it paſſively (that is) rather, thou ſhalt be ſworn, or called to an oath, than, thou ſhalt ſwear, actively: our Saviour Chriſt here utterly condemneth the active, voluntary ſwearing of men, of their own heads: which was indeed never permitted: howſoever the Phariſees gloſſed the matter: If the matter were true, and ſo it were by Jehova.

So that, an oath is lawfull: but with this condition limited; that the partie do therein habere ſe paſſive, come to it not of his own accord, but preſſed (as Saint Auguſtine well ſaith) vel autoritate deferentis, vel duritie non credentis, as to the lifting of a burden, as to the entring of a Bond, Numb. 30.3.

Thou ſhalt ſwear, The Lord liveth: or (as Moſes ſaith *Deut.*6.13.) by God's Name. Which clauſe firſt doth limit, by what we are to ſwear: and doth exclude 1 Swearing by thoſe which are no gods, Jer. 5.7. Either Idols, forbidden in the Law, Exod. 23.13. Joſh. 23.7. Either to ſwear by them alone, Amos 8. ult. Or to joyn God and them together, *Zeph.*1.5 2 Or creatures, which our Saviour Chriſt forbiddeth, *Matth.*5.34. 1 Limitation. The Lord liveth.

And ſure, as to ſwear by them is derogatorie to our ſelves, ſeeing thereby we make them our betters; for that every one that ſweareth, ſweareth by a greater than himſelf, Heb. 6.16. So it is highly injurous to the Majeſtie of God; ſeeing to ſwear by a creature, is to aſcribe unto it power, to ſee and know all things, and do vengeance on perjurie: Which in Divinitie, to think or ſay, is manifeſt blaſphemie.

Howbeit yet the Fathers (well weighing that ſpeech of Saint Paul, 1 Corinth. 15.31. where he ſpeaketh on this wiſe, By our rejoycing which we have in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, &c. wherein his oath, is not immediately by the Name of God, but by a ſecondarie thing, iſſuing from it:) have thought it not abſolutely neceſſarie, that in every oath, the Name of God ſhould be expreſly mentioned; but ſufficient, if reductivè. It is ruled in Divinitie, that ſuch things as are preſently reduced to God, will bear an oath. In which reſpect, to ſwear by the Holy Goſpel (conſidering our rejoycing will bear an oath; and that, in the Goſpel, our matter of rejoycing is principally contained) hath in the Primitive Church been holden lawfull. As in the Councel of Conſtantinople, 6. Acts 13. Eſpecially, ſeeing there is no direct conteſtation uſed, but rather by way of oppignoration, Engaging unto God our Salvation, Faith, Rejoycing, part in his Goſpel and promiſes, the Contents, &c. if we utter an untruth.

II. The manner or second limitation.

Secondly, the forme and manner of ſwearing: Which is of three ſorts: 1. Either by conteſtation as here, the Lord liveth. Before God, Gal. 1. 2. Or God knoweth it is ſo, 2 Cor. 11. 11. God is my witneſs, 1 Theſ. 2. 5. 2. Or by a more earneſt aſſeveration: as ſure as God liveth, Iude 8. 19. 3. Or by deteſtation and execration, as in other places: and that againe is of two ſorts: 1. By imprecation of evil: God be my Iudge. Gen. 31. 53. God beholdit and rebuke it, 1 Chro. 12. 17. God do ſo, and ſo unto me, 1 Sam. 14. 44. I call God a record againſt my ſoul, 2 Cor. 4. 23. 2. Or by oppignoration or engaging of ſome good which we would not loſe: as Our rejoycing in Chriſt, 1 Cor. 15, 3. Our Salvation, God's helpe, &c.

Both are oft, and may be joyned together, if it be thought meete. God is my witneſſe, that thus it is, and GOD be my Iudge, if thus it be not. Wherein, as in Prayer; when all meanes faile, we acknowledge, that GOD can help, as well without, as with ſecond cauſes: So we confeſſe that He can diſcover our truth and falſhod, and can puniſh the ſame by waies and meanes to Him known, though no creature in the world beſide, know the thing or can take hold of us.

Thou ſhalt ſweare: In Truth, Iudgement, Iuſtice. The three Encloſures and companions of a Chriſtian oath, are.

In	Truth	Falſhood	the	matter.
	Iudgement	Lightneſs		matter and manner both.
	Iuſtice	Unlawfullneſſe		end.

I. In truth.

In truth: Thou ſhalt not ſweare by my name falſely, Levit. 19. 12. Which vice forbidden we call perjury. Each action, we ſay, is too light ſuper debitam materiam. The due and own matter of ſwearing, is a Truth. If it fall or light ſuper indebitam materiam (as, falſhood) it proveth a ſin.

At all times are we bound to ſpeak truth to our neighbour, Eph. 4. 5. But becauſe men are naturally given to have their mouth fraught with vanity, Pſa. 144. 8. in ſolemne matters, to be ſure, to bring the truth from us, GOD is ſet before us. If then when we confeſſe the truth, we give glory to GOD, Ioſ. 7. 21. So if, when GOD being ſet before us, we teſtifie an untruth, it is exceeding contumelious to Him: it is to make Him one, that knoweth not all things; or that can be deceived; or that if He know, cannot do any harme or (which is worſt) which will willingly be uſed to boulſter out our lyes. Pejerare, eſt dicere Deo, Deſcende de Cœlo, & aſſere mecum mendacium hoc.

1. Of Promiſe

In an oath of Promiſe, we are to ſweare in Truth, He that ſweareth an oath, and by it bindeth his ſoul with a bond, ſhall not violate his word, but do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth, Num. 30. 3. Reddes autem Domino Iuramenta, Mat. 5. 33. Yea, by the very light of nature Pharaoh willeth Ioſeph, Go and bury thy Father, ſeeing he made thee ſweare to do ſo. Againſt which oath, men are two waies faulty. 1 If at the ſwearing they purpoſe not (as David ſaith, Pſ. 119. 106. I have ſworne and am utterly purpoſed:) Such is the nature of an oath. 2. If they then purpoſe, but after, a dammage, being likely to enſue, they diſappoint their former oath, Pſ. 15. 15. Touching which, we ſee, that when Joſua & the Iſraelites had ſworne to the men of Gibeon, though that oath coſt them foure great and fair Cities, which ſhould otherwiſe have come to their poſſeſion; they would not breake though. As contrarywiſe, Zedekias having given his oath of Allegiance to the King of Babylon (2. Chro. 36. 9.) when he regarded it not, but roſe againſt him notwithſtanding, God ſendeth him word, he ſhall never proſper for ſo doing, Ezek. 17. 12. And to ſay truth, there is nothing more forcible to move us herein, than to conſider GOD'S own practiſe: who having ſworne for our benefit, Pſal. 110. 4. though by many our unkindneſſes and hard uſages provoked, we (as Himſelfe ſaith) will not breake His Covenant, nor alter the thing that is gone out of His lipps, Pſal. 89. 35. Which is it, that keepeth us all from periſhing, even the immutable truth of GOD'S Oath, that we the rather may take it to imitation.

1 Of Proofe. Rom. 9. 1.

In an oath of Proofe: the charge ought to be, that we ſpeak nothing but that which is true in the Name of the Lord, 1 Reg. 22. 16. That we ſay the truth and lye not, our conſciences bearing us witneſſe in the Holy Ghoſt: which if we do not, being charged by a Iudge, we bear our own iniquite, Leviticus 5. 1.

Againſt which oath, men are two waies faulty: 1 If either they ſwear to that, which they know to be falſe; as if a man finde, and deny it, ſwearing falſely, Levit. 6. 3. 2 Or, if they preſume to ſweare directly, in a matter, wherein themſelves are doubtfull, or have no ſure ground of, As if a man ſweare, and the thing be hid from him, Leviticus 5: 4.

The breach of theſe two ſorts of oathes, in regard of the truth, is called perjury; and both in old time and now, we greatly complaine of it in two places: 1. The one, they call Iuramenta Officinarum: When men in their ſhops, So they may utter to their gaine, care not how untruly they abuſe the Name of GOD. Men, which (as the Wiſe man ſaith reckon our life as a market, wherein they muſt be getting on every ſide, though it be by evill meanes, Sap. 15. 12. Or, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Tim. 6. 15. That do in practice ſeem to hold, that gain is godlineſſe, for all the world as the prophane man in the Comedie, Iuramentum, rei ſervandæ non perdendæ conditum; that Oathes were made to thrive by. Full little knew thoſe men, that whatſo-ever is gotten by falſe ſwearing, muſt by GOD'S Law, both be reſtored in the whole Summe, and adde an overplus beſide. Elſe no atonement can be made for them, Leviticus 6.5. And if that atonement be not made, that GOD by His Prophet hath denounced, that their gain ſhall not proſper. For He will ſend the flying book into their houſe, a Curſe appropriate to thoſe that both ſwear and ſteale, (that is ſteale by ſwearing) which ſhall conſume both the goods, and the very ſtone, timber and all, of the houſe it ſelf, Zac. 5.4.

2. The other they call Iuramenta Tribunalium, much more fearefull and heynous than the former: when a man (or rather as Saint Auguſtine calleth him, deteſtanda beſtia, no man but a deteſtable beaſt) ſhall ſo farre preſume, as in the Iudgement it ſelf, which is GOD'S (2 Chro. 19.8.) before the Magiſtrates, which are GODS (Pſal. 82.6.) to prophane the oath of GOD, Eccleſ. 8.2. Even, as it were, to come into GOD'S own place, and there to offer Him villanie to His face. A crime ſo grievous, as no Nation, were it never ſo barbarous, but have thought it ſeverly to be puniſhed; Some with loſſe of tongue: Some, of fingers: Some, of eares; and ſome, of life it ſelf. And howſoever they eſcape man, the Prophet ſaith, the very Book of the Law, which they have touched in teſtifying an untruth, ſhall have wings given it, and ſhall purſue them, and cut them off on this ſide, and on that ſide till they and their name be rotted from the earth. It is a fearefull thing to fall into GOD'S hands on this wiſe: and of no one ſin, more dreadfull examples. For it is indeed, facere Deum mendacii conſortem. We hold it worſe Divinity, to lay upon GOD, that evil which we call malum culpæ, than the other which we terme malum pœnæ, which hath been inflicted on many an innocent, good man. Conſequently, a leſſe evill to crucifie Chriſt by any bodily paine, than to draw Him into the ſociety of Sin, which every perjured perſon doth, as much as in him lieth. Yea, we ſay that the Name of GOD being fearefull to the devils themſelves, and bringing them to tremble, that that party that treadeth that moſt glorious and fearefull Name, under his feet, is in worſe eſtate, not only than the wickedeſt of all men, the Murderers of Chriſt, but even than the devill himſelfe. And all this, that we conceive aright of In veritate.

In Iudicio. For; thus far the Phariſees themſelves come; to thinke perjury condemned. But, our righteouſneſſe is to exceed theirs, Mat. 5.20. and therefore we muſt ſeek yet farther. 2 In Iudgement.

This Clauſe (we ſay) ſtandeth againſt a double vanity, 1 as well in matter, if for a vaine, light, trifling matter we ſweare; 2 as in manner alſo, if with a vaine, light, unadviſed mind or affection. For, both the matter is to be weighty, grave, and judiciall: and we are with due advice and judgement to come to the action.

Againſt which Iudiciall ſwearing, we complain of two evill kinds: 1. The one Iuramenta Platearum, ſuch as going through the ſtreets, a man ſhall every day heare (yea, even out of the mouthes of children;) light, undiſcreet, frivilous oathes. 2. The other Iuramenta Popinarum, much worſe yet than they. When men in Tabling-houſes, at their game blaſpheme the Name of GOD moſt grievouſly. Not content to ſweare by Him whole, diſmember Him and pluck Him in pieces, that they may have oaths enough. And that perſon of the Holy Trinity, to whom and to His name, for taking our fleſh upon Him, and performing our redemption, even by GOD'S own charge, a ſpeciall regard is due: and that action of His, which among the reſt is moſt venerable of all others, which is His Death, Paſſion, and ſhedding His Blood.

For the Matter: The very words of the Commandement teach us, it is to be weighty; which ſpeake of GOD'S Name, as a thing, to be lifted up with ſtrength, as if it were heavy: and we uſe not to remove things heavy but upon good occaſion. 1 For the Matter.

The nature of an Oath, is as of a bond; which none that is wiſe will eaſily enter: it is to be drawen from, or preſſed out of a man upon neceſſarie cauſe. Yea, it is no further good, than it is neceſſary. For ſo is our rule, Neceſſarium, extra terminos neceſſitatis non eſt bonum: As, purging, blood-letting; which are no longer good than needfull. The Name of GOD is as a ſtrong Caſtle, which men flye not to, but when they have need. Theſe ſhew, that for every frivolous matter, and of no importance, we are not vainly to take up GOD'S Name. GOD'S Name is ſaid to be holy, Pſal. 111.9 and holy things may not be put to common and vulgar uſes, Numbers 18.ult. And in plaine words, Levit. 22.32. Ye ſhall not pollute my Name. Polluting, by GOD'S own word being nothing elſe, but to make common, Acts 10.15. Therefore they, to be condemned, that no man urging them, upon no ſufficient ground, make it common.

For the Manner with great regard, Eccl. 8.1. we muſt ſweare to the LORD, with all our heart. They are highly praiſed that did ſo, 1 Chro. 15.16. that is, When they are to take an Oath, they are to call together the powers of their ſoul, and with ſad and ſerious deliberation to undertake it; that is do it in Judicio. Therefore in the Law GOD maketh it the entry, Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy GOD, and ſhalt ſweare by His Name: that is with due fear and reverence thou ſhalt ſwear. For, as GOD'S Name is holy; not for every common matter: ſo is it alſo reverend; not with an unregarding affection to be taken in our mouths. 2 For the Manner.

To this end is it, that the Church of GOD excludeth ſuch perſons from oaths, as are preſumed, that in Judgement they cannot, or will take them: as perſons already convict of perjury, that they will not: Thoſe that are under yeares, that they can not; To this end alſo, there have ever been been uſed Ceremonies, that by that meanes, there might be a reverend regard ſtricken into the mind of the ſwearer. Therefore the very Angels, when they ſwear, do it not without ceremony, but with lifting up their hands to heaven, Dan.12.7. Apoc.10.5. The Patriarchs, under the Law of Nature, not without ceremonie, but laying their hands on the thigh, therein have reference to the incarnation of the Bleſſed Seed, Gen.24.3, and 47, 29. The people of GOD under the Law, came into the Temple, and before the Altar (1 *Reg.*8.31.) and in the preſence of the Prieſt (Deut. 12. 8.) uncovered (Numbers 5.18.) ſo took their Oath: all theſe ſerving to ſtir up their reverence, that what they did, they might do in judgement.

Therefore, they are to be condemned, that paſſionately ſwear, Eccl. 5.1. (which Paſſion alwayes bereaveth men of judgement:) either in anger, as David, which he repented of, 1 *Sam.*25. 33. Or in deſire, as Saul, which proved prejudicial to him and his people, 1 *Sam.*14.28. And they, that as not of any paſſion, ſo without all manner of reſpect, to avow any idle, fond fancy of their own, even as it were water, pour out the Name of GOD.

And they yet more, that not only unadviſedly ſometimes, but continually (as it were by a cuſtom) make it an Interjection of filling, for all their ſpeeches, and cannot utter one ſentence without it: yea, which thereby come to a diabetica paſſio of ſwearing, that Oathes run from them, and they feel them not.

But, above all, they that are come to that pitch, that even in contempt they ſwear, and will ſwear, and the rather, becauſe they be told of it. Theſe perſons the Church of GOD hath ſo deteſted, that they are excommunicate without ſentence of any Judge or Canon, and Chriſtian people forbidden to have any fellowſhip with them.

1 In Juſtice.

In Juſtitia. As the Matter of the Oath is to be true and weighty: and the Manner, with due advice and judgement: ſo is it to be taken alſo, to a good and juſt end. And of this there is to be had chief regard, for that divers times, both falſe and raſh Oathes are not hurtfull ſave to the ſwearer only. But theſe tend alway to ſome miſchief, beſide the ſin of the ſwearing.

An Oath is of the nature of a Bond, and bindeth a man to do that, he ſweareth; Now, it is ſin enough, to do evil of it ſelf; but to bind himſelf to do evil, and to make the Name of GOD the Bond, that is ſin out of meaſure ſinfull. GOD hath ordained, that only for truth and right, His Name ſhould be uſed: to abuſe it, to uphold falſhood, and to enforce men to evil dealing, is to change a Sanctuary, and make it a brothel-houſe. Theſe we call Latronum Iuramenta; ſuch Oathes, as thieves and ſuch kind of perſons take one of another; For, they do not only joyn hand in hand (as Salomon telleth us, *Prov.*26.5.) but do even alſo by Oath bind themſelves to do miſchief, Nehem. 6.28. Tobiah the ſpecial hinderer of the Temple, had many in Juda his ſworn-men.

1 No of things impoſſible.

That an Oath may be in juſtice: It is required that it be of a thing poſſible, No man ever required an Oath, to an impoſſibilitie apparent: So Abraham's ſervant ſaith, *Gen.*24. What if I cannot poſſibly get any maiden to come with me? Abraham's anſwer is, then he ſhall be free from the oath: So that, if at the preſent it ſeem poſſible (otherwiſe not to be ſworn to) and after, there do emergere impoſſibile, the party is innocent. The ſame is obſerved, touching our knowledge: fore, ſo the Law ſaith, A man ſhall teſtifie that only, which he hath ſeen, heard or known, and more ſhall not be required of him. So, the Law of Nature, only de quibus ſciam poteroque.

Now becauſe (as Joſeph well telleth us, *Gen.*39.9.) that we only can do that, which lawfully we can, and Chriſtian poſſibility implieth lawfulneſſe; that is the ſecond point of Injuſtitia, and the ſecond Caveat Ne illicitum. Which is either prima facie, as Saul's oath, 1 *Sam.*28.10. and Acts 23. 14. Or it is likewiſe emergens, as in Herod's oath, at the firſt no harm being underſtood: but after the demand made, it was ſin to keep it. So ſaith Ezra in the Law, Secundum legem fiat, Ezra 10. 5. and Saint Paul in the Goſpel, Acts 23. 3. They ſit to judge ſecundum id quod in Lege eſt.

Put theſe together, that we be required to ſwear nothing but the truth, In veritate: that we do it upon due advice and conſideration, In judicio: that we do it but of thoſe things we know and can tell, and of thoſe whereto Law bindeth us: There is no more required in a Chriſtian oath. This to be remembred, becauſe divers which will be accounted Chriſtians, refuſe in our dayes, the Oath which hath all her attendents. If the Magiſtrate, either Civil (*Exod.*22.8. *Nehem.*5.12.) or Eccleſiaſtical (Numb. 5.19.) 1 Either by a curſe, where the party is not known, as Prov. 29.24. Judg. 17.2. *Levit.*5.1: 2 Or by tendring an oath, and that again double: 1 Either by way of adjuration, 1 *Sam.*3.27. 1 *Reg.*22.16. 2 Or by way of ſwearing them, as Exod. 22. 11. *Numb.*5.13. 1 *Reg.*8.31. 1 *Reg.*18.10. Where the party is accuſed by complaint, detection, (*Gen.*3.) preſumption (Gen.) 4.) common fame (1 *Cor.*5.4.) He is bound to purge himſelf, and ſatisfie the people, in Adultery, Theft, or any crime.

Matth.26.63.

But what if it tend to his dammage, or to the prejudice of his liberty? Our rule is; Qui poteſt ad pœnam, poteſt ad quæ pœna conſequitur. Therefore in a matter of life or limme, we admit not the Oath: becauſe, no man can lawfully ſwear, to caſt away or maime himſelf. But a man may directly ſwear to his loſſe, in his goods, as Geneſis 25. 33. and to become a priſoner, as (1 Reg. 1. 43.) Shemei did. Therefore, ſwear, and be ſworn in thoſe cauſes and queſtions, whereto Law doth bind to give anſwer, though, Fine and Commitment do enſue upon them.

This

This queſtion remaineth, If a man have ſworn without thoſe, what he is to do? when an oath binds, when it doth not.

We hold: No man is ſo ſtraightened betweene two ſins, but without committing a third, he may get forth. Herod thought he could not: and therefore, being in a ſtrait, betwixt murder and periurie, thought he could have no iſſue, but by putting Iohn Baptiſt to death. It was not ſo: for, having ſworn, and his oath proving unlawfull, if he had repented him of his unadviſedneſſe in ſwearing, and gone no further, he had his iſſue, without any offence.

1. If then We have ſworn to be ſimply evil: the rule is, Ne ſit Sacramentum pietatis, vinculum iniquitatis:

2. If it hinder a greater or higher good, the rule; Ne ſit Sacramentum pietatis, impedimentum pietatis.

3. If it be in things indifferent, as we term them, abſque grano ſalis; it is a raſh oath; to be repented, not to be executed.

4. If the oath be ſimply made; yet (as we ſay) it doth ſubjacere Civili intellectui: ſo as GOD's oath doth, Ieremy 18. 8. and therefore thoſe conditions may exclude the event, and the Oath remain good.

5. If in regard of the Manner, it be extorted from us: the rule is, Injuſta vincula rumpit juſtitia.

6. If raſhly, Pœnitenda promiſſio, non perficienda præſumptio.

7. If to any man, for his benefit, or for favour to him; if that party releaſe it, it bindeth not.

been uſed Ceremonies, that by that meanes, there might be a reverend regard ſtricken into the mind of the ſwearer. Therefore the very Angels, when they ſwear, do it not without ceremony, but with lifting up their hands to heaven, Dan.12.7. Apoc.10.5. The Patriarchs under the Law of Nature, not without ceremonie, but laying their hands on the thigh, therein have reference to the incarnation of the Bleſſed Seed, Gen.24.3, and 47, 29. The people of GOD under the Law, came into the Temple, and before the Altar (1 *Reg.*8.31.) and in the preſence of the Prieſt (Deut. 12. 8.) uncovered, (Numbers 5.18.) ſo took their Oath: all theſe ſerving to ſtir up their reverence, that what they did, they might do in judgement.

Therefore, they are to be condemned, that paſſionately ſwear, Eccl. 5. 1. (which Paſſion alwayes bereaveth men of judgement:) either in anger, as David, which he repented of, 1 *Sam.*25. 33. Or in deſire, as Saul, which proved prejudicial to him and his people, 1 *Sam.*14.28. And they, that as not of any paſſion, ſo without all manner of reſpect, to avow any idle, fond fancy of their own, even as it were water, pour out the Name of GOD.

And they yet more, that not only unadviſedly ſometimes, but continually (as it were by a cuſtom) make it an Interjection of filling, for all their ſpeeches, and cannot utter one ſentence without it: yea, which thereby come to a diabetica paſſio of ſwearing, that Oathes run from them, and they feel them not.

But, above all, they that are come to that pitch, that even in contempt they ſwear, and will ſwear, and the rather, becauſe they be told of it. Theſe perſons the Church of GOD hath ſo deteſted, that they are excommunicate without ſentence of any Judge or Canon, and Chriſtian people forbidden to have any fellowſhip with them.

1 In Juſtice.

In Juſtitia. As the Matter of the Oath is to be true and weighty: and the Manner, with due advice and judgement: ſo is it to be taken alſo, to a good and juſt end. And of this there is to be had chief regard, for that divers times, both falſe and raſh Oathes are not hurtfull ſave to the ſwearer only. But theſe tend alway to ſome miſchief, beſide the ſin of the ſwearing.

An Oath is of the nature of a Bond, and bindeth a man to do that, he ſweareth: Now, it is ſin enough, to do evil of it ſelf; but to bind himſelf to do evil, and to make the Name of GOD the Bond, that is ſin out of meaſure ſinfull. GOD hath ordained, that only for truth and right, His Name ſhould be uſed: to abuſe it, to uphold falſhood, and to enforce men to evil dealing, is to change a Sanctuary, and make it a brothel-houſe. Theſe we call Latronum Iuramenta; ſuch Oathes, as thieves and ſuch kind of perſons take one of another; For, they do not only joyn hand in hand (as Salomon telleth us, *Prov.*26.5.) but do even alſo by Oath bind themſelves to do miſchief, Nehem. 6.28. Tobiah the ſpecial hinderer of the Temple, had many in Juda his ſworn-men.

1 Not of things impoſſible.

That an Oath may be in juſtice: It is required that it be of a thing poſſible, No man ever required an Oath, to an impoſſibilitie apparent: So Abraham's ſervant ſaith, *Gen.*24. What if I cannot poſſibly get any maiden to come with me? Abraham's anſwer is, then he ſhall be free from the oath: So that, if at the preſent it ſeem poſſible (otherwiſe not to be ſworn to) and after, theredo emergere impoſſibile, the party is innocent. The ſame is obſerved, touching our knowledge: fore, ſo the Law ſaith, A man ſhall teſtifie that only, which he hath ſeen, heard or known, and more Levit. 5. 1. ſhall not be required of him. So, the Law of Nature, only de quibus ſciam poteroque.

Nor unlawfulneſſe.

Now becauſe (as Joſeph well telleth us, *Gen.*39.9.) that we only can do that, which lawfully we can, and Chriſtian poſſibility implieth lawfulneſe; that is the ſecond point of Injuſtitia, and the ſecond Caveat Ne illicitum. Which is either prima facie, as Saul's oath, 1 *Sam.*28.19. and Acts 23. 14. Or it is likewiſe emergens, as in Herod's oath, at the firſt no harm being underſtood: but after the demand made, it was ſin to keep it. So ſaith Ezra in the Law, Secundum legem fiat, Ezra 10. 5. and Saint Paul in the Goſpel, Acts 23. 3. They ſit to judge ſecundum id quod in Lege eſt.

Put theſe together, that we be required to ſwear nothing but the truth, In veritate: that we do it upon due advice and conſideration, In judicio: that we do it but of thoſe things we know and can tell, and of thoſe whereto Law bindeth us: There is no more required in a Chriſtian oath. This Matth.26.63. to be remembred, becauſe divers which will be accounted Chriſtians, refuſe in our dayes, the Oath which hath all her attendents. If the Magiſtrate, either Civil (*Exod.*22.8. *Nehem.*5.12.) or Eccleſiaſtical (Numb. 5.19.) 1 Either by a curſe, where the party is not known, as Prov. 29.24. Judg. 17.2. *Levit.*5.1: 2 Or by tendring an oath, and that again double: 1 Either by way of adjuration, 1 *Sam.*3.27. 1 *Reg.*22.16. 2 Or by way of ſwearing them, as Exod. 22. 11. *Numb.*5.13. 1 *Reg.*8.31. 1 *Reg.*18.10. Where the party is accuſed by complaint, detection, (*Gen.*3.) preſumption (Gen.) 4.) common fame (1 *Cor.*5.4.) He is bound to purge himſelf, and ſatisfie the people, in Adultery, Theft, or any crime.

But what if it tend to his dammage, or to the prejudice of his liberty? Our rule is; Qui poteſt ad pœnam, poteſt ad quæ pœna conſequitur. Therefore in a matter of life or limme, we admit not the Oath: becauſe, no man can lawfully ſwear, to caſt away or maime himſelf. But a man may directly ſwear to his loſſe, in his goods, as Geneſis 25. 33. and to become a priſoner, as (1 Reg. 1. 43.) Shemei did. Therefore, ſwear, and be ſworn in thoſe cauſes and queſtions, whereto Law doth bind to give anſwer, though, Fine and Commitment do enſue upon them.

This

This queſtion remaineth, If a man have ſworn without thoſe, what he is to do? when an oath binds, when it doth not.

We hold: No man is ſo ſtraightened between two ſins, but without committing a third, he may get forth. Herod thought he could not: and therefore, being in a ſtrait, betwixt murder and perjurie, thought he could have no iſſue, but by putting John Baptiſt to death. It was not ſo: for, having ſworn, and his oath proving unlawfull, if he had repented him of his unadviſedneſſe in ſwearing, and gone no further, he had his iſſue, without any offence.

1. If then We have ſworn to be ſimply evil: the rule is, Ne ſit Sacramentum pietatis, vinculum iniquitatis:

2. If it hinder a greater or higher good, the rule; Ne ſit Sacramentum pietatis, impedimentum pietatis.

3. If it be in things indifferent, as we term them, abſque grano ſalis; it is a raſh oath; to be repented, not to be executed.

4. If the oath be ſimply made; yet (as we ſay) it doth ſubjacere Civili intellectui: ſo as GOD's oath doth, Jeremy 18. 8. and therefore thoſe conditions may exclude the event, and the Oath remain good.

5. If in regard of the Manner, it be extorted from us: the rule is, Injuſta vincula rumpit juſtitia.

6. If raſhly, Pœnitenda promiſſio, non perficienda præſumptio.

7. If to any man, for his benefit, or for favour to him; if that party releaſe it, it bindeth not,

Preached at

WHITE-HALL

Upon the Sunday after

EASTER,

being March XXX. Anno Dom. MDC.

IOHN. CHAP. XX. VER. XXIII.

Quorum remiſeritis peccata, remittuntur eis: Et quorum retinueritis, retenta ſunt.

Whoſe-ſoever ſinnes yee remit, they are remitted unto them: and whoſe-ſoever ye retain, they are retained.

The concluſion of the Goſpell for the Sunday.

THEY be the words of our Saviour CHRIST to His Apoſtles. A part of the firſt words, which He ſpake to them at His Epiphanie, or firſt apparation after He roſe from the dead. And they containe a Commiſſion by Him granted to the Apoſtles, which is the Summe or Contents of this Verſe.

Which Commiſſion, is His firſt largeſſe after His riſing againe. For, at His firſt appearing to them, it pleaſed Him not to come empty, but with a bleſſing, and to beſtovv on them, and on the world by them, as the firſt fruits of His reſurrection, this Commiſſion; a part of that Commiſſion, which the ſinfull world moſt of all ſtood in need of for remiſſion of ſinnes.

Summa. The proceeding in it.

To the granting whereof, He proceeded not without ſome ſolemnity or circumſtance, well worthy to be remembred.

For firſt, Verſe 21. He ſaith, As my Father ſent me, ſo I ſend you: which is their authorizing or giving them their credence.

Second

Secondly, Verſe 22. He doth breath upon them, and withall inſpireth them with the Holy Ghoſt, which is their enabling or furniſhing thereto.

And having ſo authorized and enabled them, now in this Verſ. here, He giveth them their Commiſſion, and thereby doth perfectly inaugurate them, into this part of their office.

A commiſſion is nothing elſe, but the imparting of a power which before they had not. Firſt therefore, He imparteth to them a power, a power over ſinnes; over ſins, eitheir for the remitting, or the retaining of them, as the perſons ſhall be qualified.

And after, to this power He addeth a promiſe (as the Lawyers terme it) of Ratihabition, that He will ratifie and make it good, that His power ſhall accompany this power, and the lawfull uſe of it in His Church for ever.

The dependance in reſpect of the time

And very agreeable is this power now beſtowed by Him upon his reſurrection. Not ſo conveniently before His death; becauſe till then, He had not made His ſoule an offering for ſinne, nor till then, He had not ſhed His bloud, without which there is no remiſſion of ſinnes. Therefore it was promiſed before, but not given till now, becauſe it was convenient, there ſhould be ſolutio, before there were abſolutio. Not before He was riſen, then.

Why not before; Eſa. 53. 10. Heb. 9.22.

And againe, no longer than till He was riſen, not till he was aſcended. Firſt, to ſhew that the remiſſion of ſins is the undivided and immediate effect of his death. Secondly, to ſhew how much the world needed it, for which cauſe he would not with-hold it, no not ſo much as one day (for this was done in the very day of His reſurrection.) Thirdly, but eſpecially, to ſet forth his great love and tender care over us, in this, that as ſoone as he had accompliſhed his own reſurrection, even preſently upon it, he ſets in hand with ours, and beginneth the firſt part of it, the very firſt day of his riſing.

Mat. 16.19. 18.18.

Why now.

The Scripture maketh mention of a firſt and ſecond death, and from them two, of a firſt and ſecond reſurrection. Both, expreſly ſet downe in one verſe; Happy is he that hath his part in the firſt reſurrection; for over ſuch the Second death hath no power. Underſtanding by the firſt, the death of the ſoul by ſin, and the riſing thence to the life of grace: by the ſecond, the death of the body by corruption, and the riſing thence to the life of glory.

Apoc. 20.6.

Chriſt truly is the Saviour of the whole man, both ſoule and body, from the firſt and ſecond death.

But beginneth firſt with the firſt, that is, with ſin, the death of the ſoul and the riſing from ir. So is the method of Divinity preſcribed by himſelf 1. to cleanſe that which is within (the ſoul) then that which is without (the body.) And ſo is the method of Phiſick, firſt to cure the cauſe, & then the diſeaſe. Now the cauſe (or as the Apoſtle calleth it) the ſting of death is ſin. Therefore firſt to remove ſin, and then death afterwards. For, the cure of ſinne being performed, the other will follow of his own accord. As Saint John telleth us, He that hath his part in the firſt reſurrection, ſhall not faile of it in the ſecond. The firſt reſurrection then from ſin, is it which our Saviour Chriſt here goeth about, whereto there is no leſſe power required than a divine power. For look what power is neceſſary to raiſe the dead body out of the duſt; the very ſame, every way, is requiſite to raiſe the dead ſoul out of ſin. For which cauſe the Remiſſion of ſins is an Article of faith, no leſſe than the Reſurrection of the body. For in very deed, a reſurrection it is, and ſo it is termed, no leſſe than that.

Mat. 23 26. 1 Cor. 15. 56.

To the ſervice and miniſtery of which divine worke, a commiſſion is here granted to the Apoſtles. And firſt, they have here their ſending from GOD the Father; their inſpiring from GOD the Holy Ghoſt; their commiſſon from GOD the Son: that being thus ſent from the Father, by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, in the perſon of Chriſt they may performe the Office, or (as the Apoſtle calleth it) the Embaſſage of reconciling ſinners unto God, to which they are appointed. And ſo much for the Summe and dependance of this Scripture.

2 Cor. 5. 9.

The points of ſpeciall obſervation are three: 1. Firſt, the Power that is granted. 2. The Matter or Subject, whereon the power is to be exerciſed. 3. The Promiſe of ratifying the exerciſe of that power.

The Diviſion.

The power it ſelfe in which commeth firſt to be entreated. 1. What is meant by remitting and retaining. 2. After in generall, that there is a power to remit and retaine: but firſt to remit, and after to retaine. 3. Then in particular, of that power as it is ſet down in both words, Remiſeritis and remittuntur.

I.

The Matter or ſubject: which is alſo two wayes to be conſidered, either as it is ſin in it ſelfe, which is the matter at large; or as it is the ſin of ſome perſons (for it is not quæ peccata, but quorum) which is the immediate or proper matter of this power.

II.

The ratifying or promiſe of concurrence to aſſure the conſcience of the ſinner of the certainty and efficacie of the Churches act, that what the Apoſtles doe in the perſon of Chriſt, by the inſtinct of the Holy Ghoſt, he that ſent them, will certainly make good and effectuall from heaven. And of theſe three in order,

III.

The

I. The termes how to be understood.

THe termes of remitting and retaining may be taken many wayes. To the end then, that we may the moore clearly conceive that which shall be said, it will be expedient, that first of all we understand, in what sense especially, and according to what resemblance, those termes are to be taken.

The originall from Christs commission.

This may we best doe out of our Saviour Christs owne Commission. For, this of the Apostles is nothing else but a branch out of his, which he Himself (as man) had here upon earth. For as man; he himselfe was sent, and was anointed with the Spirit, and proceeded by Commission.

Iu'te 4.18. Esay 61.1.

His Commission we finde Luk 4. which he himselfe read in the Synagogue at Nazareth at his first entring on it: Which is originally recorded Esa 61. Wherein, among others, this power is one, to preach ἄφεσιν (that is) Remission, as it is turned here; or deliverance, as it is turned there: but the word is one in both places; and that respectively to captives: and (as it followeth in that place of Esay) to them that are bound, the opening of the prison.

Sin, an imprisonment.

Which very terme (of Captives or such as are in prison) doth open unto us, with what reference or respect, this terme of remitting, or letting go, is to be conceived. And as it was in his, so must it be understood here in this, since this is but derived from that of Christs.

The minde of the Holy Ghost then, as in other places by divers other resemblances, so in this here, is to compare the sinners case to the estate of a person imprisoned. And indeed, who so well weigheth the place, it cannot well be taken otherwise. For, not onely here, but elsewhere (where this Power is expressed) it seemeth ever, to be with reference (as it were) to

Mat.16. 19. parties committed. The very term of the Keyes (wherein it was promised, and wherein it is most usually delivered;) the termes of opening and shutting, seeme to have relation (as it were)

Mat. 18. 18. to the prison gate. The termes of binding and loosing, (as it were) to the fetters or bands. And these here of letting forth, or still detaining (all and every of them) seeme to have an evident relation, to a prisoners estate; as if sin were a prison, and the case of sinners, like theirs that are shut up.

Iob 20. 12. Verily, as sinne at the first in committing, seemeth sweet; that men cannot be got to spit it out (saith Iob) but hold it close under their tongues, till they have swallowed it downe; but after

Jer. 2. 19. Esa. 66. ult. it is committed, the sinner findeth then, that it is Malum & amarum dereliquisse Dominum (saith the Prophet;) that it turneth to a bitter and cholerick matter, of which there breedeth a worme which never leaveth gnawing: Even so doth sin at the first also seeme a matter of liberty. For a li-

Gal.3. 23. Gen.3. 2. berty it is, not to be restrained; not to be (as the Apostle speaketh) committed to Moses, to be kept and shut up under the Law; not to be forbidden any fruit (under which very terme, the Serpent did perswade it:) But when it was done and past, then shall a man feel a pinching or

Rom.2.9. straightnesse in his soule, termed by the Apostle στενοχωρία which properly signifieth the paine which they suffer, that are shut up in a narrow room or some place of little ease.

So speaketh Solomon of sinne. His owne wickednesse shall attach the sinner, and he shall be holden, or pinioned with the cords of his own sin. So S. Peter to Simon Magus: I perceive, thou art

Prov.5.22. Acts 8.13. (to expresse the former resemblance) in the gall of bitternesse (and to expresse the latter in the bond of iniquity. And S. Paul that sinners, instead of having Moses to their keeper, become the Devils captives, and are of him holden and taken at his will and pleasure.

2 Tim. 2. ult. Truly some have felt as much as I speak of, and have in pregnant termes complained of it.

Psalm.8.88. 142. ult. 119.32. I am so fast in prison (saith David) that I cannot get out. And, bring my soule out of prison and I will praise thee. And, I will run the way of thy commandements, when thou shalt set my heart at liberty.

Peradventure all feel not this presently as soon as they have sinned; nor (it may be) a good while after. So GOD told Caine at the beginning: his sin should lie at the doore; that is while

Gen.4. 7. he keept within, he should not be troubled with it perhaps; but at his comming forth, it should certainly attach him. But saith Moses, let every one that sinneth be sure, that his sin

Numb.32. 23. at last will finde him out: For he shall no sooner be under arrest of any trouble, sickness, crosse or calamity, but he shall be shut into his στενοχωρία and feel it presently. As the brethren of

Gen.42.21. Joseph, for very many years, after they had of envy and without all pity sold him to be a bond-servant, seemed at liberty: No sooner fell they into danger and displeasure, in a strange countrey but it came to mind, and they were served with it straight way. Even as in Iob, it is said:

Iob.10.11. The sins of our youth shall let us go up and down quietly all our youth-time, but when we come to years we shall feel them pinch us in our very bones.

James. 5.9. Yea, though many, even then when they feele this straightnesse in their soule, make meanes to put it away for the time, and seem merry and light enough (as many times, Prisoners be in the Goale, tell the very day of Assises come:) yet when it is come to that, that index est præ foribus, when the terror of death commeth, and with it a fearfull expectation of judg- ment; then certainly, then without all doubt, the anguish S. Paul speaketh of, shall be upon every soule of every one that doth evill. Then there is no man never so wicked, that with his good will would die in his sins, but would have them released while he is yet in via, yet in the way. Then we seek help at such Scriptures as this, and call for the persons to whom this Commission belongeth. And those, whom we have gone by seven years together, and never said word to about it, then we are content to speak with, when the counsell and direction they give, we are scarce able to receive, and much lesse to put in practice. As if, all our life time we believed the permission of sins; as if that were the article of our faith all our life long, and the article of remission of sins never till the point of death. Heb. 10.27. Ioh. 8.27. Mat. 5.25.

And this may serve, shortly to set forth unto us this prison of the soule: which if any conceive not, by that which hath been said, I must say with the Prophet to them; that sure, there is such a thing, and that In novissimo intelliget is hæc plane, at their latter end (I wish, before; but sure then, shall very plainly understand, that such a thing there is. Ier. 30. ult.

But now, they that have either felt or believe, that such an imprisonment there is, will be glad to hear that there is a Power, whereby they may be enlarged: And this very tidings in general, that there is a Remittuntur, that men may have deliverance from these fetters, this prison, this streitnesse or anguish of the soul, must needs be very acceptable and welcome tydings to them. For which very point (even that there is a Remittuntur) what thankes are we eternally bound to render unto GOD? For I tell you, Nusquam Angelos apprehendit, the Angels never found the like. For, the Angels, which kept not their first estate, hath He reserved in everlasting chaines of darknesse, to the judgement of the great Day. Their chaines, everlasting; their imprisonment, perpetuall: No Comission to be sued for them: No Remittuntur eis. But with man it is not so. To him, deliverance; to him, loosing of the chaines: to him, opening of the prison is promised. For his sins, a commission is granted out, his sinnes have a Remittuntur. This, is a high and speciall priviledge of our nature to be had by us in an everlasting thankfull remembrance. So that no man needeth now, abruptly to say with those in Ieremie, Desperavimus, we are desperate, now, we never shall be forgiven, let us now doe what we list. No: but (as it is said in Ezra) Though we have grievously sinned: yet there is hope for all that: and (as in Ezekiel) that we may so use the matter, that Peccata nostra non erunt nobis in scandalum, Our sins shall not be our destruction. Which very point is both an especial stay of our hope, and a principal means of manifesting unto us the great goodnesse of God. Good tydings that there is Remission. Heb. 2.16. Iude 6. Ier. 18. 12. Ezra 10.2. Ezek. 18.30.

Which goodnesse of God, as it doth shew forth it self in this first (that, such a power there is:) so doth it secondly and no lesse, in the order that (which both acts are mentioned, as well retaining, as remitting) He placeth the power of remitting first. Which very sorting of them in that order, doth plainly shew unto us, whereunto God of His goodnesse is most inclinable; and which of them it is, that is the principall in His intent. That to remit, is more proper to Him, and that he is more ready to it, and that it is first, first in His purpose, first in His grant: and that to the other He commeth but secondarily, but by occasion, when the former cannot take place. For, of remitting sinne, He taketh the ground from Himself, and not from any other, and therefore, that more naturally: but of retaining it, the cause is ministred from us, even from our hardnesse, and heart that cannot repent. And as Himselfe doth use this power, so giveth He it to them, to edification, and not to destruction. I say, not first or principally to destruction; nor of any, save onely of the wilfull impenitent sinner. Thus much of the remitting and retaining in generall, and of their place and order. Now of the power it selfe in particular. Remission first, before Retentio. Esay 28.2. 2 Cor. 10.8.

Of this Power there is here in my Text twice mention; 1 One in Remiseritis, and 2 againe in Remittuntur. Which two words doe plainely lead us to two Acts; of which two Acts; by good consequence are inferred two Powers. Which two powers, though they be concurrent to one end, yet are they distinct in themselves. Distinct, in person; for, Remiseritis is the second person, & meant of the Apostles; and Remittuntur is the third person, and meant of God Himself. And as distinct in person, so distinct in place; for the one is exercised in earth, which is the Apostles; the other in heaven, which is Gods. Quicquid solveritis in terra, solutum erit in Cœlo: Of Remission in particular. The Power of it twofold. 1 Remiseritis. 2 Remittuntur. Mat. 16.19.

Now where two powers, are and one of them in God, the other, must needs be subordinate from it. For, Duo principia, two beginnings there are not, Therefore none other from whence it can proceed, but from God and from the power in Him alone.

Of these two then. Remittuntur, though latter in place, yet indeed is by nature and order first, and from it doth proceed the other of Remiseritis; Which howsoever in the sentence it stand before it, yet without all question it is derived from it, and after it. So that, thus the case stands between them: Remittuntur, which is Gods power, is the primitive or originall; Remiseritis, which is the Apostles power, is meerly derived. That in God, Soveraign: This in the Apostles Dependent. In Him only Absolute: in them, Delegate. In Him Imperiall, in them, Ministeriall. 1 Remittuntur (Gods power) first in order. Esay 43. 25.

The power of remitting sinne is originally in God, and in God alone. And in Christ our Saviour, by meanes of the union of the God head and manhood into one person: By vertue whereof, the Son of man hath power to forgive sins upon earth. Mat. 2. 10.

This

This power being thus ſolely inveſted in God, He might without wrong to any, have retained and kept to Himſelf, and without means of Word or Sacrament, and without Miniſters, either Apoſtles or others, have exerciſed immediately by Himſelf from heaven.

Rom. 10. 6. But we ſhould then have ſaid of the remiſſion of ſins (ſaith S. Paul) Who ſhall go up to heaven for it, and fetch it thence? For which cauſe (ſaith he) the righteouſneſs of faith ſpeaketh thus, ſay not ſo in thy heart. The word ſhall be neer thee in thy mouth, and in thy heart, and this is the word of faith which we preach.

Partly this, that there ſhould be no ſuch difficulty to ſhake our faith, as once to imagine to fetch Chriſt from Herven for the Remiſſion of our ſinnes.

Partly alſo, becauſe Chriſt (to whom alone this Commiſſion was originally granted) having ordained himſelf a body, would work by bodily things, and having taken the nature of a man upon Him, would honour the nature he had ſo taken. For theſe cauſes that which was His, and His alone, He vouchſafed to impart; and out of his Commiſſion, to grant a Commiſſion, and thereby to aſſociate them to Himſelf; (it is his own word by the Prophet) and to make them συνέργους, that is, Co-operatores, workers together with him, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, to the work of ſalvation, both of themſelves, and of others.

From God, then it is derived: From God, and to men.

2 Remiſeritis. Gods power derived to Men, and not to Angels. To men, and not to Angels. And this I take to be a ſecond Prerogative of our nature. That an Angel muſt give order to Cornelius, to ſend to Joppe for one Simon, to ſpeak words to him, by which he and his houſhold ſhould be ſaved; but the Angel muſt not be the doer of it. That not to Angels, but to men, is committed this office, or Embaſſage of Reconciliation. And that which is yet more, to ſinfull men, for ſo is the truth, and ſo themſelves confeſs it. Saint Peter, Go from me, Lord, for I am a ſinfull man. Saint James, In many things we offend all (putting himſelf in the number.) And, leſt we ſhould think it to be but their modeſty, Saint John ſpeaketh plainly, If we ſay we have no ſin (what then? not we are proud, and there is no humility in us, but) we are lyars, and there is no truth in us. And this is that, which is wonderfull in this point, that Saint Paul, who confeſſeth himſelf a ſinner, and a chief ſinner, quorum primus ego; The ſame concerning another ſinner (the inceſtuous Corinthian) I forgive it him, ſaith he, ἐν προσώπῳ τοῦ Χριστοῦ in the perſon of Chriſt.

To ſinfull men.

1 Tim. 1. 15.

2 Cor. 2. 10.

To the Apoſtles. Now if we ask, to what men? The Text is plain. They to whom Chriſt ſaid this Remiſeritis, were the Apoſtles.

In the Apoſtles (that we may come nearer yet) we find three capacities, as we may term them. 1 As Chriſtians in general. 2. As Preachers, Prieſts or Miniſters, more ſpecial. 3. As thoſe twelve perſons, whom in ſtrict propriety of ſpeech we term the Apoſtles.

Mar. 13. ult. Some things, that Chriſt ſpake to them, He ſpake to them as repreſenting the whole company of Chriſtians: as His vigilate.

Some things to them, not as Chriſtians, but as Preachers or Prieſts: as His Ite prædicate Evangelium, and His hoc facite; which no man thinketh all Chriſtians may do.

Mat. 28. 18. Luke 22. 19.

Act. 1. 8. And ſome things, to themſelves perſonally: as that he had appointed them Witneſſes of His Miracles and Reſurrection, which cannot be applyed but to them, and them in perſon. It remaineth, we enquire, in which of theſe three capacities, CHRIST imparteth to them this commiſſion.

Not as to Apoſtles properly. That is, this was no perſonal priviledge to be in them, and to die with them, that they ſhould only execute it for a time, and none ever after them. GOD forbid, we ſhould ſo think it. For this power being more than needfull for the world, as in the beginning it was ſaid, it was not to be either perſonal, or for a time. Then thoſe perſons dying, and thoſe times determining, they in the ages following, as we now in this, that ſhould light into this priſon or captivity of ſinne, how could they or we receive any benefit by it? Of Nature, it is ſaid by the heathen Philoſopher, that it doth neither abundare in ſuperfluis, nor deficere in neceſſariis. God forbid, but we ſhould aſcribe as much to God, at the leaſt; that neither He ſhould ordain a power ſuperfluous, or more than needed; or elſe, it being needfull, would appropriate it unto one age, and leave all other deſtitute of it; and not rather as all Writers both new and old take it, continue it ſucceſſively to the worlds end.

And as not proper to the Apoſtles perſons, ſo neither common to all Chriſtians in general, nor in the perſons of all Chriſtians conveighed to them. Which thing, the very circumſtances of the Text do evict. For he ſent them firſt, and after inſpired them; and after both theſe, gave them this Commiſſion. Now all Chriſtians are not ſo ſent, nor are all Chriſtians inſpired with the grace or gift of the Spirit, that they were here. Conſequently, it was not intended to the whole ſociety of Chriſtians. Yea, I add, that foraſmuch as theſe two, both theſe two, muſt go before it; 1 Miſſio, and 2 Inſpiratio; that though God inſpire ſome Laymen, if I may have leave ſo to term them, with very ſpecial graces of knowledge to this end; yet inaſmuch as they have not the form of ſending, it agreeth not to them, neither may they exerciſe it, untill they be ſent, that is, untill they have their calling thereunto.

Verſe 21. Verſe 22.

It

It being then neither perſonall nor peculiar to them as Apoſtles, nor again common to all as Chriſtians, it muſt needs be commited to them as Miniſters, Prieſts, or Preachers; and conſequently to thoſe, that in that office and function do ſucceed them, to whom and by whom, this Commiſſion is ſtill continued. Neither are they, that are ordained or inſtituted to that calling, ordained or inſtituted by any other words or verſe, than this. Yet not ſo, that abſolutely without them, GOD cannot beſtow it, on whom, or when Him pleaſeth; or that he is bound to this meanes only, and cannot worke without it. For, Gratia Dei non alligatur mediis, the grace of God is not bound but free, and can worke without meanes either of Word or Sacrament; and as without meanes, ſo without Miniſters, how and when to Him ſeemeth good. But ſpeaking of that which is proper and ordinary, in the courſe by him eſtabliſhed, this is an Eccleſiaſticall Act committed, as the reſidue of the miniſtery of reconciliation, to Eccleſiaſticall perſons. And if at any time He vouchſafe it by others that are not ſuch, they be in that caſe, Miniſtri neceſſitatis, non Officii: in caſe of neceſſity, Miniſters; but by Office, not ſo. To them as Miniſters.

Now, as by committing this power, GOD doth not deprive or bereave himſelf of it: For there is a Remittuntur ſtill, and cheife, ſoveraign and abſolute: ſo on the other ſide, where GOD proceedeth by the Churches act, as ordinarily He doth, it being His own ordinance; there, whoſoever will be partaker of the Churches act muſt be partaker of it by the Apoſtles meanes; there, doth Remiſeritis concurre in his order and place, and there runneth ſtil a correſpondence between both. There doth GOD aſſociate his Miniſters, and maketh them Workers together with him. There, have they their parts in this worke, and cannot be excluded: no more in this, than in other acts and parts of their function. And to exclude them, is (after a ſort to wring the keys out of their hands, to whom CHRIST hath given them, is, to cancell and make void this clauſe of Remiſeritis, as if it were no part of the ſentence; To account of all this ſolemne ſending, and inſpiring, as if it were an idle and fruitleſſe ceremony: which if it may not be admitted, then ſure it is, they have their part and concourrence in this worke, as in the reſt of the miniſtery of reconciliation. Of Gods ſoveraign power ſtill. Zech. 13.7. 1 Cor. 3.7.

Neither is this a new or ſtrange thing; from the beginning it was ſo: Under the law of Nature (ſaith Elihu in Iob, ſpeaking of one for his ſinnes in GOD'S priſon,) If there be with him an Embaſſador, Commiſſioner, or Interpreter (not any whoſoever, but) one among a thouſand, to ſhew unto Him his righteouſneſſe, Then ſhall God have mercy upon him and ſay, Let him go, for I have received a propitiation. The act of the Church ordinary Iob 23.25.

Under Moſes, it is certain, the Covenant of life and peace was made with Levi, and at the ſacrifices for ſin, he was ever a party. Mal. 2.5. Lev. 4.5,6.

Under the Prophets. It pleaſed GOD to uſe this concurrence towards David himſelf: Nathan the Prophet ſaying unto him, Tranſtulit Dominus peccatum tuum.

Which courſe ſo eſtabliſhed by GOD, till CHRIST ſhould come; (for neither covenant nor Prieſt-hood was to endure any longer; was) by CHRIST re-eſtabliſhed anew in the Church, in that calling: to whom he hath committed the Word of reconciliation. Neither are we (the ordinances of GOD thus ſtanding) to rend off one part of the ſentence. Three are here expreſſed, three perſons: 1 The perſon of the ſinner, in quorum; 2 of God, in Remittuntur; 3 of the Prieſt in Remiſeritis. Three are expreſſed; and where three are expreſſed, three are required, and where three are required, two are not enough. It is Saint Auguſtin that thus ſpeaketh of this Eccleſiaſticall act in his time: Nemo ſibi dicat occulte ago pœnitentiam, apud Deum ago. Novit Deus qui mihi ignoſcit, quia in corde ago. Ergo ſine cauſa dictum eſt, quæ ſolveritis in terra, ſoluta erunt in Cœlo, Ergo ſine cauſa Claves datæ ſunt Eccleſiæ Dei; Fruſtramus Evangelium Dei: Fruſtramus verba Chriſti. The neceſſity of the Prieſt therein. Homil. 49. de 50.

Which may ſuffice for the diſtinguiſhing of theſe two Powers, the deriving of the one from whom, and to whom, the continuance and concurrnce of them.

The Remiſſion of ſinnes, as it is from God only, ſo is it by the death and bloud-ſhedding of Chriſt alone: but, for the applying of this unto us, there are divers meanes eſtabliſhed. There is Multiformis gratia (ſaith Saint Peter) variety of graces, whereof we are made the diſpoſers. Now, all and every of theſe meanes working to the remiſſion of ſinnes (which is the firſt and greateſt benefit, our SAVIOUR CHRIST hath obtained for us, it reſteth that we further enquire, what that meanes is in particular, which is here imparted. Wherein this power conſiſts. 1 Pet. 4.10.

For ſure it is, that beſides this there are diverſe acts inſtituted by God, and executed by us, which all tend to the remiſſion of ſins. Sins remitted.

1. In the inſtitution of Baptiſme, there is a power to that end. Be baptized every one of you for the remiſſion of ſins (ſaith Saint Peter to three thouſand at once.) Ariſe and be baptized (ſaith Ananias to Paul) and waſh away thy ſinnes. And to be ſhort: I believe one baptiſme for the remiſſion of ſinnes (ſaith the Nicene Creed.) 1 By Baptiſme. Acts 2.38. Acts 22.16.

2. Again, there is alſo another power for the Remiſſion of ſinnes, in the inſtitution of the holy Euchariſt. The words are exceeding plaine: This is my bloud of the New Teſtament, for the remiſſion of ſins. 2 By the Euchariſt.

3. Beſides; in the Word it ſelf, there is a like power ordained. Now are you clean, ſaith Chriſt (no doubt from their ſins) propter Sermonem hunc. And the very Name giveth as much, that is intitled, The word of reconciliation. Mat. 26.28. 3 By Preaching. John 15.3. 2 Cor. 5.6.

4. Further,

4 By Prayer. James 5.14.

4. Further there is to the ſame effect, a power in prayer, and that in the Prieſts prayer, Call for the Prieſts (ſaith the Apoſtle) and let them pray for the ſick perſon, and if he have committed ſin, it ſhall be forgiven him.

All and every of theſe, are acts for the remiſſion of ſins; and in all and every of theſe, is the perſon of the Miniſter required, and they cannot be diſpatched without him.

None of theſe meant here.

But the ceremonies and circumſtances that here I find uſed, prevaile with me to think, that there is ſomewhat here imparted to them, that was not before. For, it carrieth no likelyhood, that our Saviour beſtowing on them nothing here, but that which before He had, would uſe ſo much ſolemnity, ſo diverſe and new circumſtances, no new or diverſe grace being here communicated.

Ioh. 4.2.

1. Now, for Baptiſme, it appeareth plainly: that the Apoſtles Baptized in a manner from the beginning; which I make no queſtion, they did not without a commiſſion.

Luke 22.19.

2. And for the power of adminiſtring the holy Sacrament, it was granted expreſly to them by Hoc facite, before his Paſſion.

Mat. 10.7. Luke 9.2.

3. The like we may ſay of the power of Preaching, which was given them long before; even when He ſent them, and commanded them to preach the kingdom of GOD, which was done, before this power was promiſed, which here is beſtowed, as will evidently appear, the one being given, Mat. 10. the other after promiſed, Mat. 16.

1 Tim. 2.2.

4. Neither can it be meant of prayer. There is no partition in prayer. Prayers and ſupplication are to be made for all men. But here is a plain partition. There is a Quorum, whoſe ſins are remitted, and another Quorum whoſe ſins are retained.

But the power of Abſolution.

Seing then this new ceremony and ſolemn manner of proceeding in this, are able to perſwade any; it was ſome new power that here was conferred, and not thoſe which before had been (though there be, that apply this, others to ſome one, and others to all of them:) I take it to be a power diſtinct from the former, and (not to hold you long) to be the accompliſhment of the promiſe made, Ma. 16. 19. of the power of the Keyes, which here in this place and in theſe words is fulfilled; and have therein for me the joynt conſent of the Fathers. Which being a different power in it ſelfe, is that which we call the Act or Beneſit of Abſolution, in which (as in the reſt) there is in the due time and place of it, an uſe for the remiſſion of ſins. Whereunto our SAVIOUR CHRIST, by His ſending them; doth inſtitute them, and give them the key of authority: And by breathing on them and inſpiring them, doth enable them and give them the key of knowledge, to do it well, and having beſtowed both theſe upon them as the Stewards of his Houſe, doth laſt of deliver them their Commiſſion to do it, having ſo enabled them and authorized them as before. So much for the power.

Verſe 21, Verſe 22.

II.

Quorum peccata. The ſubject of this power.

Every power is not every where to be exerciſed, nor upon every matter; but each power hath, his proper ſubject.

That matter or ſubject, whereon this power is to be exerciſed, is ſin. To be conſidered firſt in it ſelf, as the matter at large. And then, as qualified with the perſon: (for it is quorum, and not quæ peccata;) As the neerer and more proper ſubject.

Peccata, at large.

Firſt then, the ſubject are Sinnes. Sins in themſelves, no wayes reſtrained or limited. No ſins at all, either for number, or greatneſſe being excepted.

Without exception of number. Mat. 18.22.

Nor for number. For Chriſt teaching us, That we our ſelves ſhould forgive untill ſeventy times ſeven times, doth thereby after a ſort give us to underſtand, that He will not ſticke with us for the like number in ours. For GOD forbid, we ſhould imagine, He taught us to be more mercifull or of greater perfection than He will be Himſelelf. That number amounteth to ten jubiles of pardon: For ſo many ſins, may we then hope for pardon at His hands. If thoſe be not enough, we have example of one, whoſe ſins were more in number than the haires of his head; and of another, whoſe were more than the ſands of the Sea: both which give us hope; for they both obtained pardon.

Pſal. 40.12. Orat Manaſſ.

Or greatneſſe. Mat. 18.24. Luc. 7.48. Gen. 4.13.

But that which followeth in the place of Matthew, maketh both parts plain. For there a debt is remitted, not only of five hundred (as Luk. 7.) but of ten thouſand, and thoſe (not as in Luke, pence, but) talents: A great and huge ſumme, yet for that hath He remiſsion in ſtore. So that, no man ſhall need to ſay, his ſin is greater than can be remited, as Cain did, ſince that aſſertion is convinced to be erroneous: For, his ſin may be forgiven, that ſlew Abel, though his brother, ſeing S. Peter ſaith, that theirs was no greater than might be forgiven, that ſlew the ſon of God. For no man but will conceive that the betraying and murdering JESUS CHRIST, was far a more heynous offence than that of Abels killing: But, that might (ſaith Saint Peter;) therefore, this much more may be forgiven. And to end this point, whereas it is affirmed, and that moſt truly, by the Apoſtle, that the weakneſſe of GOD is ſtronger than men, if there were any ſin greater than could be remitted, the weakeneſſe of man (for of that cometh ſin) ſhould be ſtronger than GOD; which neither Religion nor reaſon will admit. In reſpect of the ſinne it ſelf, therefore here is no exception.

Act. 31.15.19.

1 Cor. 1.25.

But

But because it is not quæ peccata but quorum, it sheweth, that in the act of remission, we are to respect, not the sin so much as the person. So that, though all sins may be remitted, yet not to all persons, but to quorum, as we see. For there is another quorum, whose sins are retained: so that this limiteth the former, and sheweth indeed, what is the Materia propinqua, or immediate subject of this power committed.

Quorum, The proper immediate Subject.

Our Saviour Christ Himself, at the reading of His Commission (whereof this is a branch) in effect expresseth as much. For He telleth them, There were many lepers in the dayes of Elisha, and many widowes in the daies of Elias, yet none cleansed but Naaman, nor to none was Elias sent, but to the widdow of Sarephtha. And so the case standeth here. Many sinners there be, and many sins may be remitted, but not to any, except they be of this Quorum. In which point there is a special use of the key of knowledge, to direct to whom and to whom not; since it is not, but with advice, to be applied, not hands hastily to be layd on any man (as the Apostle testifieth) which place is referred by the ancient Writers, to the Act of Absolution, and the circumstance of the place giveth no lesse. But discretion is to be used in applying of comfort, counsail, and the benefit of Absolution. Whereby it falleth out sometimes, that the very same sins to some may be remitted, being of the Quorum, that to some others may not, that are out of it.

Luc. 4. 18. 25.

1 Tim. 5. 22. Cypr. 3 26. Pacian. in Paræn. 16. Aug. de Bap. 5. 20. 23.

To see then a little into this qualification, that thereby we may discerne who be of either Quorum. The conditions to be required, to be of Quorum remittuntur, are two.

The Qualification of the Persons.

First, that the party be within the house and family, whereto those keyes belong (that is) be a member of the Church, be a faithfull believing Christian. In the Law, the Propitiatory was annexed to the Arke, and could not be severed from it: to shew, that they must hold of the Arke, (that is) be of the number of the people of GOD, or else could they not be partakers of the Propitiation for their sins. So saith the Psalmist, in the Psalme of the Church, Omnes canalis mei erant in te. All the conduit-pipes of all my spirituall graces are conveyed into thee, and are no where else to be had. And namely, of this benefit of remission of sins: Thou hast (saith he) O Lord, been gracious unto Thy land, &c. Thou hast forgiven all their iniquity, and covered all their sin. But the Prophet Esai, most plainely: The people which dwelleth in her (that is, the Church) They shall have their iniquity forgiven. And to end this point, the Angel when he interpreteth the name of JESUS, extendeth it no further than that, thus He shall save their people from their sins. To them then is the benefit of remission of sins entailed and limitted; it is sors Sanctorum, and dos Ecclesiæ. And they that are of this Quorum have their certain hope thereof. They that are out of it, pertain to the second sort of them that have their sins reteined. The power of the keys reacheth not to them: What have I to do with them that are without (saith the Apostle?) Them that are without, GOD shall judge. Therefore, all Pagans, Infidels, Iewes, and Turkes are without the compasse of this Quorum. For who so beleiveth not in Christ, who so is not a faithfull Christian, shall die in his sins.

That, in the Church.

Psal. 85. 1.

Esa. 33. ult.

Mat. 1. 21.

1 Cor. 5. 25.

Iohn 6. 24.

But are all that are within this house, thereby partakers of this remission? Is there nothing else required? Yes indeed, there is yet another condition requisite, whereby many are cut off, that are within the Quorum of the Church. And that is (as our Saviour Christ Himself setteth it down) Repentance. For, He willeth Repentance and Remission of sins to be preached in His name; both these, but Repentance first, and then Remission of sinnes to follow after. So that, the sinner, that is a member of the Church, if he want this, is not of the former, but of the latter Quorum.

That, Repentant.

Luk. 24. 47.

To Repentance there go two things (as heretofore hath been entreated more at large.) To insist upon the resemblance here made. First, that he feeles his chaines and imprisonment, and be greived with them, and therefore would gladly be let loose, and discharged from them. And no otherwise doth our Saviour Christ proclaim it: That none should come to Him but such as are weary and heavy laden, For, sentiat onus qui vult levari, & sentiat vincula qui vult solvi. And no reason there is meanes should be made for his enlargement, that is well enough already, and had rather be where He is, than at liberty abroad.

1 That is, Feel the want of Remission & desire it.

Mat. 11. 28.

Out of which groweth this division of sinners, which make this double Quorum, For, there are sinners, that are weary of their commitment, and would gladly be enlarged. Such as he was: O bring my soul out of prison, that I may praise thee. And as he: Wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me? And to these belongeth the first cause of Remission, even pœnitentibus & petentibus, to them that are weary of their durance, and that desire and sue for deliverance.

Psal. 142. ult. Rom. 7. 24

Again there are sinners, which care not greatly for their present estate, but are as it were without sense of their misery. The prison grieveth them not being in it, they reckon themselves well enough, either because they have drunken of the slumbering cup, which is the very dregges of GOD'S wrath, having their hearts as brawn, and their consciences seared with a hot iron, that is (as the Apostle doth interpret it) being past all feeling or remorse of sinne: Or else a worse sort of people, that not only have no sense of their present wretched case, but do even take delight and pleasure in the place, and (to choose) will not be out of it. Qui lætantur cum malum fecerint, & exultant in rebus pessimis, that scorne the denouncing of GOD'S judgement, and when they hear the words of this curse absolve themselves and say, I shall have peace and do full well for all that. Of such, Dominus ne ignoscat illis (saith Moses) let not GOD be mercifull to them. Pity it is, they should be let go, or the Key once turned to let them out. Sense and sorrow is required of their restraint, and an earnest desire of enlargement, else they pertain not to the first, but to the latter Quorum.

Exe 33. 14. 1 Cor. 11. 3. Ezek 36. 31. 2 Cor. 7. 11. In which very point (of sorrow for sinne) there is an especial good use of the key of knowledge, for counsel and direction. 1. For, inasmuch as Repentance it self is an act of corrective Justice, and to repent is to do judgement (as the Prophet:) and to judge our selves, as the Apostle calleth it. 2. To which there belongeth not only a sentence, but also ἐκδίκησις a revenge, or punishment. And because it is not a fruitlesse repentance which must serve the turn: but it must have fruits (saith Saint John Baptist) and fruits worthy of repentance: that is, more plainly (as Saint Paul saith, he was charged to preach even fron heaven) That men must not only repent and turn to GOD, but also do works worthy of Repentance.

Luke 3. 8. Acts 26. 20. Dan. 4. 24. Jon. 3. 8. Act. 8. 22. 3. And for that the works of Repentance, all of them, are not meet and suitable to every sinne, but as the sinnes are divers, so are the works to be also. 3. For that also, as a man may go too farre in them (as appeareth in the case of the Corinthian;) so may one fall too short, as appeareth in the case of Miriam: and a proportion or Analogie is to be kept, according as the case of the sinne requireth. In both these to advise, both what works are meet, and also what measure is to be kept, the Key of Knowledge will help to direct, and we may have use of it, if we mean to use it to that end.

2 Cor. 2. 7. Numb 12. 24. Apoc. 3. 2. The other condition which must be joyned to the former, is an unfeigned purpose and endeavour, our selves to remit or let go those sinnes, which we would have by GOD remitted. For, it is not enough to be sorry for sinne past, or to seek repentance, no though it be with

Heb. 12. 17. Gen. 27. 38, 14. teares: this will not make us of the first Quorum, if there be nothing but this; if there be in our hearts a purpose, our selves to retain and hold fast our old sinne still. Esau lift up his voice with a great cry and bitter out of measure, and wept: Yet even at the same time, vowed in his heart, so soon as his Father was dead, to make away his Brother. And this purpose of mind, for all his bitter crying and teares, cast him into the latter Quorum, and made his sinnes to be retained still. And such is the case of them, that would be let go out of prison; but would have liberty to go in and out still to visit the company there, when and as often as them list. So do not the Saints that be of the first Quorum, to whom GOD, as He

Psalm 85. 8. speaketh peace, so He speaketh this too, that they turn not thither again, that they fall not again to their former folly.

But these latter would have their sinnes let go by GOD, but themselves would not let them go, but keep fast their end still. They would quoad reatum, hear that saying from

Luke 7. 48. John 8. 11. CHRIST'S mouth, Thy sinnes are forgiven thee: but quoad actum would not willingly hear that other, Go and sinne no more. But we must be willing to hear them both: willing to have our sinnes remitted by GOD, and willing too (our selves) to remit our sinning, or from thenceforth remissius peccare, to sinne more remissely, and nothing so licenciously as before. To the former, sorrow, sentence, and revenge, we must (saith Saint Paul) joyn a de-

1 Cor. 7. 11. sire, ἐπιπόθησιν, and to that desire and endeavour, ἀποδύω, and that, such an endeavour as may be able to alleadge for it self ἀπολογίαν, an honest defence, that we have used all good meanes to do that, which on our part is to be performed, that we may be of the first Quorum.

In which point no lesse than the former, there may be use of the Key of knowledge, to advise and direct our selves, no lesse in the cure of sinne, than in the sorrow for it. They

Acts 2. 37. in the second of the Acts, which were pricked in their hearts, knew of themselves that somewhat they should do (as by their question appeareth:) but what it was they should do, they knew not. Sometimes men have good mindes: but know not which way to turn them to set themselves about it. Sometimes they are scrupulous and doubtfull, whether they do as they should, because one may Propitius esse sibi, favour himself too much, and be over-partiall in his own case, neither so carefull to use the meanes to good, nor to avoid the occasions of evil, as he ought. Wherein, it were good for men to make sure work, and to be fully resolved. For, most usual it is for men, at their ends to doubt, not of the power of remitting of sinnes, but of their own disposition to receive it: and whether they have ordered the matter so, that they be within the compasse of GOD'S effectual Calling, or as the Text is, of the Quorum, to whom it belongeth. So much for the matter, or subject, whereto this power is to be applied.

And here I should now speak somewhat of the applying or use of it: but the time hath overtaken me, and will not permit it. Now only a word of the third part, of the Efficacy, or (as the Lawyers term it) of GOD'S Ratihabition, and so an end.

III.

Of the Ratihabition.

Wherein GOD willing more abundantly, to shew to them that should be partakers of it, the stableneese of his Counsel, He hath penned it exceeding effectually, and indeed strangely to them that deeply consider of it: which He hath so done, to the end, that thereby such poor sinners as shall be partakers of it, might have strong consolation and perfect assurance, not to waver in the hope which is set before them.

And to that end, even for comfort, I will only point at four things in the inditing of it; all expressing the efficacie of it, in more than common manner.

Super verbis Esaiæ Vidi Dominum. Homil. 5. 1. The order, in this; that Remiseritis standeth first, and Remittuntur second. It is Saint Chrysostome's note, that it beginneth in earth, and that heaven followeth after. So that, whereas in prayer and in other parts of Religion it is, Sicut in Cœlo, ſic in terra; here it is, Sicut in terra, ſic in Cœlo. A terra judicandi principalem authoritatem ſumit Cœlum. Nam Index ſedet in terra: Dominus ſequitur ſervum, & quicquid hic in inferioribus judicarit, hoc ille in ſupernis comprobat, ſaith he.

as

2. The time: in this, that it is Remittuntur in the preſent tenſe; there is no delay between, no deferring, or holding in ſuſpence, but the Abſolution pronounced upon earth, Remittuntur, preſently they are remitted; that He ſaith not, hereafter they ſhall be, but they are already remitted.

3. The Manner: in ſetting down of the two words. For, it is ſo delivered by CHRIST, as if He were content, it ſhould be accounted their act, and that the Apoſtles were the agents in it, and Himſelf but the patient, and ſuffered it to be done. For, the Apoſtle's part is delivered in the Active (Remiſeritis;) and His own in the paſſive (Remittuntur.)

4. The Certainty: which in the Identity of the word, in not changing the word, but keeping the ſelf ſame in both parts. For, Chriſt hath not thus endited it, Whoſe ſinnes ye wiſh or ye pray for, or whoſe ſinnes ye declare to be remitted; but whoſe ſinnes ye remit: uſing no other word, in the Apoſtle's, than he uſeth in his own. And to all theſe, in Saint Matthew He addeth His ſolemn proteſtation of Verily, Verily, or Amen, Amen, that ſo it is, and ſhall be. And all to certifie us, that Mat. 18.18. He fully meaneth, with effect to ratifie in heaven, that is done on earth; to the ſure and ſtedfaſt comfort of them, that ſhall partake it.

Preached at

WHITE-HALL

Upon the XXIII. of NOVEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDC.

JERE. Chap. XXIII, Ver. VI.

Hoc eſt Nomen quo vocabunt Eum, Jehova Juſtitia noſtra.

This is the Name whereby they ſhall call Him, the LORD our Righteouſneſſe.

Verſe 7.

THE former points, which the Prophet pointeth us to with his Ecce, and willed us to behold, we then were ſo long in beholding, that we had no time to take a viev of this laſt: which I take to be the chiefeſt part of his Ecce, and the point of all points moſt worthy our beholding. Hoc eſt nomen, &c.

1. The chief, becauſe His Name is given him from this and not from any of the reſt. For (commonly from his chiefeſt title doth every man take his denomination. In the verſe next following, GOD ſaith; He will no more be called, Their deliverer from Ægypt, becauſe He will vouchſafe them a greater deliverance from Babylon. And ſo from thence, as from the greater, have His name given. And as GOD, ſo men. What title of honour is higheſt in their ſtyle, that of all other, doth each perſon delight, to be termed by.

Now thoſe (in the former part of this verſe) of Salvation, and Peace which he will procure them) be great and excellent Titles: and they be no leſſe verified of Him, than this of Righteouſneſſe: (The Lord is my light and my Salvation, by the Prophet: and, He is our Peace, by by the Apostle.) Yet, of neither of these doth He take His Name. But, from this of Righteousnesse, He doth. And that, both His former Name, in metaphor and figure, The Branch of Righteousnesse: and this His latter, in propriety and truth, His Royal Name, Jehovah Justitia nostra. This; therefore is the Chief in His accompt. Psalm 27.1. Ephes. 2.14. Verse 5.

2. Again, the Chief: because it is His peculiar. And, every man reckoneth of that, as his chiefest Title, that is not common to him with others, but proper to him alone; (as wherein he hath a prerogative above all. He, and none but He.)

Now those in the former verse, (of executing judgement and justice) are such, as are also given to other Kings. King David is said to have executed judgement and justice to all his people: So is King Salomon likewise; the Queen of Sheba giveth him that Title. To do justice, is the title also of others (and not many neither, but yet of some others) But to be justice, to be righteousnesse; that is the name of none, but CHRIST only. His, and His only, is that title. Therefore, as well in this regard, as in the former, this is the very chief part in the Ecce, The Name of Jehova our Righteousnesse. 2 Sam. 8.15. 1 Reg. 10.9.

Which, because it is nothing but a name, may seem to some, a matter of no great importance. The Deputy of Achaia (Gallio) in the Acts, seemeth of that mind: If it were some weighty matter, I would sit the hearing: But if it be a matter of Names, I take it not worth the while: Hear it who will; for I will not. And to say the truth, if it were a name of mens giving, he said not much amisse. Their names are not greatly to be looked after. The argument taken from them, the Heathen Philosopher confesseth, is μικρὸς ἀλλάζων, an argument, that setteth a good face upon it, but no great substance in it. The reason whereof is, Because with men, there be Nominals, and there be Reals: Names and things, are many times two. There is quædam dicuntur de, & non insunt in. There is learning (saith the Apostle) ψευδώνυμος, falsely so called. And as learning; so, many things beside. The Church is named liberal, and they worshipfull, that have nothing worthy worship in them. Yea, it falleth out, that some have a name, that they live, and yet are dead: and many things besides, quæ dicuntur de, & non insunt in. Whereof, we need not seek farre, we have an example here in the Prophet, of King Zedekia, that reigned at the time of this Propheſie; one that had neither truth nor righteousnesse in him: a breaker of his league and Covenant, a falsifyer of his oath; and yet, his name is Zedekia, GOD'S righteous one, or the righteousnesse of GOD. Mens names for the most part are false. Acts 18.14. 1 Tim. 6.20. Esay 32.5. Apoc. 3.1. Eze. 17.9.

2. And when they be true, empty, and no great weight in them. For what are mens titles, but mens breath; but a blast of ayr, but wind. If they be popular titles, the wind of a common pair of bellowes: If of those of the better sort (as the heathen man well said ἐπιχεύσου φυσιτῆος, the winde of a guilt or wrought paire of Bellowes; but both of them, wind.

But, the names of GOD'S imposition, are not so. They ever carry truth in them. For seeing GOD cannot away with those that are title-givers (as saith Elihu) He will give none Himself. With Him, is not the division, that is with us, of Nominals and Reals; of quædam dicuntur de, quædam insunt in. If we be named the Sonnes of GOD, we are so (saith Saint John:) and therefore, from His Name, a sound and substantial argument may be drawn, (as we see) the Apostle doth: proving the excellency of Christ's Nature, above the Angels, from the excellency of His Name above theirs. Job 32.2. 1 John 3.1. Heb. 11.1.

And, as they are free from falshood; so are they not empty, but have ever some vertue in them. The Name of GOD (saith Salomon) is a strong Tower. So that, When some trust in Chariots and Horses; and other some, in the Name of GOD; they that trust in Chariots and horses, they go down; they that in that Name, stand upright. And this, not only in the dangers of this life; but, there is also, in the Name of GOD, a saving power for the life to come. A power, to justifie: Ye are justified in the Name of CHRIST (saith Saint Paul.) A power for remission of sinnes: Your sinnes are forgiven you, for His Name's sake (saith Saint John.) A power to save: In this Name, you have Salvation (saith Saint Peter.) Prov. 18.10. Psalm 20.8. 1 Cor. 6.11. 2 John 2.12. Acts 4.12.

And, such is the Name here named; Jehova, our righteousnesse. Our, righteousnesse: to justifie, to forgive us our sinnes, to give us salvation. Such, is this Name: and there is not under heaven, any Name given to men wherein they may be saved, beside it. Act 4.11.

The division.

In the Ecce, or beholding whereof, two things present themselves to our view: 1. The Name it self. 2. The Calling Him by it. The Name in these words: Hoc est Nomen. The calling in these; Quo vocabant Eum.

I.

In either of which, two others: In the Name, these two; 1 The parts of it: and the reason of them. 2 The sense of it.

II.

Ind the calling Him by it, likewise two: 1 As it is our duty, so to call Him. 2 As we have an use or benefit by so calling Him. The duty, and the use.

I

1 The Name. Psalm 16. 2.

TO GOD Himself (as the Psalmist telleth us) all the service, we can perform, reacheth not. The perfection of His Nature is such, as it can from us receive nothing. But, two things of his there are, which he hath left to expresse that duty, which we owe and bear to Himself. Which two things are in one verse set down by the Prophet David: Thou hast magnified, 1 Thy Name, and 2 Thy Word above all things: 1 His Name, and 2 His Word. His Name, for our invocation; His Word, for our instruction. And these two: as they are the highest things, in GOD's accompt; so are they to be in ours. Not the Word only (which carrieth all away in a manner, in these dayes:) But, His Name also, no lesse. For, in the setting them down, the HOLY GHOST giveth the first place to the Name. Our very assembling, and coming together, is in his Name. And then, before all things, supplications are to be made in his Name. And the very hearing of the Word it self is, that we may call upon His Name: How shall they call upon His Name whom they have not heard? How shall they hear without a Preacher? So that, preaching, and hearing of the Word, are both ordained for the calling on of this name.

Psalm 138. 2.

Mark 13. 20. 1 Tim. 2. 1.

Rom. 10. 14.

Which being so high in GOD's accompt, of very civility, if there were nothing else, we are not to be ignorant, what His name is, that He is to be called by. No man, that maketh any (yea, but common) accompt of a party, but he will learn by what name to call him. And so requisite doth Salomon hold this, as he affirmeth, There is little more in that man than in a beast; yea, there is not the understanding of a Man in him: of GOD (of Him that stretcheth out the heavens, and gathereth the winds in his fist, bindeth the waters in a garment; establisheth all the ends of the earth) not to know what is His name, or what is His Sonne's Name. That His name, is Jehova: And His Sonne's name, Jehova Justitia nostra.

Prov. 30. 2.

This, were we bound to get notice of, if it were but civility; or (as Salomon reckoneth it) even humanity. But that is not all. For seeing (as the heathen man confesseth) Παντὶ δὲ ἀνδρὶ χρήματα πάσεις, we all either have, or may have need of GOD, in our necessities of this life, but specially in our last need; of very necessity it will stand us in hand, to know how to call unto Him. There is no Client, but will be sure to learn his Advocate's name; nor no patient but will tell his Physitian's. Not (in a word) any of them, of whom we are to have any special use, but we will be carefull as to learn his true name, that we misse not in it; so, if he have divers names, and love to be called by any one rather than other, to be sure to be perfect in it, and ready to salute him by it. And such is this Name here; and we therefore not to be to seek in it; seeing not only Courtesie, but very necessity commendeth it to us.

Which Name (as you see) is compounded of three words: 1 Jehova, 2 Justitia, 3 Nostra: all of them necessary, all of them essential. And they all three concurring, as it were three twists, they make a three-fold cord (like that which the Preacher mentioned) that cannot be broken. But except it be entire, and have all three, it loseth the vertue; it worketh nothing. For sever any one of them from the rest, and the other are not of moment. A sound, but not a name; or a name, but not Hoc Nomen this Name; a Name qualified to save them that call on it. Take Jehova from Justitia nostra, and Justitia nostra is nothing worth. And, take Justitia from Jehova, and though there be worth in Jehova, yet there is not that which we seek for. Yea, take nostra from the other two, and how excellent soever they be, they concern us not, but are against us, rather than for us. So that, together we must take them, or the Name is lost.

Eccles. 12. 4.

I

†The Parts of the Name.

To see this the better, it will not be amiss to take it in sunder, and to see the ground of every part in order. Why, 1 Jehova, 2 Why Justitia, 3 Why Jehova Justitia, 4 Why Justitia nostra, 5 Both nostra, and Justitia.

1 Jehova. Psalm 71. 16.

1 Jehova. Touching which word, and the ground why it must be a part in this Name, the Prophet David resolveth us: Memorabor (saith he) Justitiæ Tuæ solius. Because his righteousnesse, and only His righteousnesse, is worth the remembring; and any others, beside His, is not meet to be mentioned. For, as for our own righteousnesse which we have without Him, Esay telleth us, it is but a defiled cloth; and Saint Paul, that it is but dung. Two very homely comparisons: but they be the Holy Ghost's own: yet nothing so homely as in the originall, where they be so odious, as what manner of defiled cloth, or what kind of dung, we have not dared to translate.

Esay 64. 6. Psalm 3. 8. Psalm 24. 5. Rom. 5. 17. Job 15. 15. 4. 18, 25. 5.

Our own then being no better, we are driven to seek for it elsewhere. He shall receive His righteousnesse (saith the Prophet:) and the gift of righteousnesse (saith the Apostle.) It is then another, to be given us, and to be received by us, which we must seek for. And whether shall we go for it; Job alone dispatcheth this point. Not to the heavens or starres: For, they are unclean in His sight. Not to the Saints: For in them He found folly. Nor to the Angels: For neither in them found He any stedfastnesse. Now, if none of these will serve, we see a necessary reason, why Jehova must be a part of this Name. And this is the reason, why Jeremy here expressing more fully the Name given Him before in Esay (Immanuel, GOD with us) instead of the Name of GOD, in that name (which is El) setteth down by the way of explanation, this Name here of Jehova. Because, that (El) and the other Names of GOD are communicated to Creatures. As the Name of El, to Angels, for their Names end in it; Michael, Gabriel, &c. And, the Name of Iha to Saints, and their names end in it; Isaiah, Jeremiah, Zachariah. To certifie us therefore, that it is neither the righteousnesse of Saints nor Angels, that will serve the turn, but the righteousnesse of GOD and very GOD: He useth that Name which is proper to GOD alone; ever reserved to Him only; and never imparted by any occasion to Angel, or Saint, or any creature in heaven or earth.

2 Justitia. Justitia: Righteousnesse. Why that? If we ask, in regard of the other benefits which are before remembred (Salvation and Peace) Why Righteousnesse and not Salvation nor Peace? it is evident. Because (as in the verse next before, the Prophet termeth it.) Righteousnesse is the Branch; and these two: Salvation and Peace are the fruits growing on it. So that, if this be had, both the other are had with it. Of Righteousnesse and Salvation: Esay saith, they grow both together, as it were out of one stalk. And of Peace, that Opus Justitia Pax, the very work or proper effect of Righteousnesse is Peace. For which cause the Apostle interpreting the name of Melchisedeck, King of Salem: first (saith he) King of Righteousnesse; and after, King of Peace. Even as on the contrary part, sinne which is nothing else but ἀνομία, iniquity or unrighteousnesse, as saith Saint John, is that root of bitternesse, from whence shooteth forth both perdition of the soul, contrary to Salvation, and unquietnesse of the conscience, opposite to Peace. And both they, and all other miseries are (as JOB termeth them) sparks of this brand of hell: as health and Peace, and all blessings, are the fruits of this branch of Righteousnesse. Now, because there is no vana salus, a vain salvation (as saith David;) and a peace falsely so called a Peace which is no peace (as saith Jeremy;) To the end therefore, that our salvation might be substantial, and our peace uncounterfeit: it behooveth us to lay a sure ground-work of them both; and to set a true root of this branch, which is the Name Jehova. For, such as the root of this branch is, such will Salvation and Peace, the fruits thereof, be. If it be man's righteousnesse which is vain, it will be also vana salus hominis, vain and soon at an end; and the peace, like to the worlds peace, vain and of no certainty. But if Jehova be our righteousnesse, look how He is, so will they be, everlasting Salvation, a peace which passeth all understanding.

Esay 45. 8. Esay 32. 17. Heb. 7. 2. 1 John 3. 4. Job 5. 8. Psalm 60. 11. Jerem. 6. 14.

3 Jehova Justitia. Jehova Justitia. We are now to seek the reason, why Jehova is in this Name per modum Justitiæ, by the way or under the term of Righteousnesse, rather than of some other Attribute: as of Power or Mercy; that it is not Jehova Misericordia, or Jehova Potentia, but Jehova Justitia. GOD with us (saith Esay:) with us (saith Jeremy) of all his properties, by that of Righteousnesse: chiefly and above other.

Not of Power (as in Esay) by His Name El: which is His Name of Power. For, in Power there is no true comfort, without Justice be joyned to it. For, what is Power, except Righteousnesse go before? We see it is a thing very agreeable to our Nature, to have that we shall have, by Justice (to choose:) and that way do even the mightiest first seek it; and when that way it will not come, they overbear it with Power.

Nor of Mercy; not Jehova Misericordia, by which Name David calleth Him. For, though it be a Name of special comfort, and S. Augustine saith of it: O Nomen sub quo nemini desperandum! yet if we weigh it well of it self alone, we shall find, there is no full or perfect comfort in it, except this also be added; For that, we have in us two respects: First one, as persons in Misery: Secondly, the other, as persons convict of sin. And though Mercy be willing to receive us, in the one; for her delight is to help those in misery: Yet what shall become of the other, how shall that be answered? We have in the verse before, mention of a King ready to execute Judgement and Justice. Now Justice is professed enemy to all sin; and Justice in her proceeding, may not admit of any respect, either of the might or of the misery of any, to lead her from giving sentence according to Law.

Psalm 59. ult.

True it is, Mercy is ours, ours wholly, there is no doubt; but Justice is against us, and except Justice may be made ours too, all is not as it should be. But if Justice, if that in God, which only is against, might be made for us, then were we safe. Therefore all our thought is to be, either how we may get Mercy to triumph over Justice with the Apostle; or, how (at the least) we may get them to meet together, and be friends in this work. For, except Justice be satisfied, and do joyn in it also; in vain we promise our selves, that Mercy, of it self, shall work our salvation, Which may serve for the reason, why neither Jehova Potentia, or Jehova Misericordia, are enough; but, it must be Jehova Justitia; and Justitia a part of the Name.

James 2. 13. Psalm 85. 10.

4 Nostra. Nostra: And neither may this be left out. For without this, Jehova alone doth not concern us; and Jehova Justitia is altogether against us. But if He be Righteousnesse, and not only Righteousnesse, but ours too; all is at an end, we have our desires; Verily this last, this possessive, this word of application is all in all. By it, we have interest in both the former: and without it, our case is as theirs, Quid nobis & tibi, what have we to do with thee, Jehova Justitia? Which is most fearfull, and nothing but terror and torment in the consideration of it. Therefore we must make much of this. For, if once He be Nobiscum with us, and not against us, and not only Nobiscum with us, but Noster our own; all is safe. Otherwise it falleth out oft, there be many Nobiscum, that be not Nostri: with us, talk with us, eat with us, sit with us, which yet are not ours for all that. And in this point also, doth this Name of Jeremy more fully expresse the Name of Esay's Immanuel, no lesse than in the two former, first of Jehova, which is more than El: and then of justitia, which is more agreeable than of Potentia: and now in this here, that there is Nobiscum (which is well;) and there is

Matth. 8. 29.

1 Cor. 1. 30.

Noſter, which is better, and more ſure by a great deal. For if He be (as the Apoſtle ſaith) Factus nobis, Made unto us Righteouſneſſe, and that ſo, as He becometh ours, what can we have more? What can hinder us (ſaith Saint Bernard) but that we ſhould uti noſtro in utilitatem noſtram; & de Servatore ſalutem operari: Uſe Him and his Righteouſneſſe; uſe that which is ours to our beſt behoof, and work our Salvation out of this our Saviour. So that, Noſtra may not be ſpared, no more than the other part of the Name. For all is in ſuſpence, and there is no compleat comfort without it.

Serm. 3. in Miſſus eſt, &c.

5 Juſtitia noſtra.

To which comfort, this may be added for a concluſion of this part, no leſſe effectual than any of the former. That it is Juſtitia noſtra in the Abſtract; and not in the Concrete, Juſtificans, or Juſtificator noſter, our Juſtice or Righteouſneſſe it ſelf; not our Juſtifier or Maker of us Righteous. For thus delivered, I make no doubt, it hath much more efficacy in it; and more ſignificant it is by farre, to ſay Jehova our juſtice, than Jehova our juſtifier. I know, Saint Paul ſaith much: That our SAVIOUR CHRIST ſhed His blood, to ſhew His Righteouſneſſe, that He might not only be juſt, but a juſtifier of thoſe which are of His faith. And much more again, in that when He ſhould have ſo ſaid, To him that believeth in GOD, He chooſeth thus to ſet it down, To him that believeth in Him, that juſtifieth the ungodly: making theſe two be all one; GOD and the juſtifier of ſinners. Though this be very much, yet certainly this is moſt forcible, that He is made unto us by GOD, very righteouſneſſe it ſelf. And that yet more: That he is made righteouſneſſe to us, that we be made the righteouſneſſe of GOD in Him. Which place Saint Chryſoſtome well weighing this very word, Δικαιοσύνη (ſaith he) the Apoſtle uſeth δεικνὺς τὸ ἀφαῖον τῆς δόσεως, to expreſſe the unſpeakable bounty of that Gift, that He hath not given us the operation or effect of His Righteouſneſſe, but His very Righteouſneſſe, yea His very ſelf unto us; Mark (ſaith he) how every thing is lively, and as full as can be imagined, CHRIST, one, not only that had done no ſinne, but that had not ſo much as known any ſinne, hath GOD made (not a ſinner, but) ſinne it ſelf, as in another place (not accurſed, but) a curſe it ſelf: Sin, in reſpect of the guilt, a Curſe, in reſpect of the puniſhment. And why this? To the end, that we might be made (not Righteous perſons; that was not full enough, but) Righteouſneſſe it ſelf: and there he ſtayes not yet, and not every righteouſneſſe, but the very Righteouſneſſe of GOD Himſelf. What can be further ſaid; what can be conceived more comfortable? To have Him ours, not to make us Righteous, but to make us Righteouſneſſe, and that not any other but the Righteouſneſſe of GOD: the wit of man can deviſe no more. And all to this end: That we might ſee, there belongeth a ſpecial Ecce to this Name; that there is more than ordinary comfort in it: that therefore we ſhould be carefull to honour Him with it, and ſo call Him by it; Jehova our Righteouſneſſe.

Gal. 3. 13.

2 The ſenſe of this Name.

There is no Chriſtian man that will deny this Name, but will call CHRIST by it, and ſay of Him, that He is Jehova Juſtitia noſtra, without taking a ſyllable or letter from it: But it is not the Syllables, but the Senſe that maketh the Name, And the Senſe is it, we are to look unto; that we keep it entire in Senſe, as well as in ſound, if we mean to preſerve this Name of Juſtitia noſtra full and whole unto Him. And as this is true; ſo is it true likewiſe, that even among Chriſtians, all take it not in one ſenſe: but ſome, of a greater latitude than other. There are that take it in that ſenſe which the Prophet Eſay hath ſet down: In Jehova juſtitia mea, that all our Righteouſneſſe is in Him; and we to be found in Him, not having our own righteouſneſſe, but being made the Righteouſneſſe of GOD in Him. There are ſome other, that though in one part of our righteouſneſſe they take it in that ſenſe; yet in another part, they ſhrink it up, and in that, make it but a propoſition cauſall, and the interpretation thereof to be, A Jehova juſtitia mea. Which is true too. Firſt, whether we reſpect Him, as the Cauſe exemplary, or pattern: (For we are to be made conformable to the Image of CHRIST.) Secondly, or whether we reſpect Him, as the Cauſe efficient: For, of all His righteous works, the Prophet truly proteſteth: Domine, univerſa opera noſtra, Tu operatus es in nobis: and the Apoſtle when he had ſaid Ego, corrected himſelf preſently and ſaith, Non ego, ſed gratia Dei mecum, Not I, but the grace of GOD. This meaning then is true and good: but not full enough. For either it taketh the name in ſunder, and giveth Him not all, but a part of it again: or elſe it maketh two Senſes, which may not be allowed in one Name.

1 Righteouſneſs accounted.
2 Righteouſneſs done.

For the more plain conceiving of which point, we are to be put in mind, That the true Righteouſneſſe (as ſaith S. Paul) is not of mans device, but hath His witneſſe from the Law and Prophets, which he there proceedeth to ſhew, out of the example, firſt of Abraham, and after of David. In the Scripture then, there is a double Righteouſneſſe ſet down, both in the Old and in the New Teſtament.

Gen. 15. 6.

In the Old, and in the very firſt place, that Righteouſneſſe is named in the Bible: Abraham believed and it was accounted unto him for righteouſneſſe. A righteouſneſſe accounted. And again (in the very next line) it is mentioned, Abraham will teach his houſe to do righteouſneſſe. A Righteouſneſſe done. In the New likewiſe. The former in one Chapter (even the fourth to the Romanes) no fewer than eleven times; Reputatum eſt illi ad juſtitiam. A reputed Righteouſneſſe. The later, in S. John. My beloved let no man deceive you, he that doth Righteouſneſſe is Righteous. A Righteouſneſſe done. Which is nothing elſe but our juſt dealing, upright carriage, honeſt converſation.

Gen. 11. 19.

John 3. 7.

Of theſe, the latter, the Philoſophers themſelves conceived and acknowledged; the other is proper to Chriſtians only, and altogether unknown in Philoſophy. The one is a quality of the party. The other, an act of the Judge, declaring or pronouncing righteous. The one, ours by influence or infuſion; the other by accompt or imputation.

That

That both these there are, there is no question. The question is, whether of these the Prophet here principally meaneth, in this Name?

This shall we best inform our selves of, by looking back to the verse before; and without so looking back, we shall never do it to purpose.

There the Prophet setteth one before us, in his royal judicial power, in the person of a King, and of a King set down to execute judgement; and this he telleth us, before he think meet to tell us his Name. Before this King, thus set down in his Throne, there to do judgement, the righteousness that will stand against the Law, or Conscience, Satan, Sin, the gates of Hell, and the power of darkness; and so stand that we may be delivered by it, from death, despair and damnation; and entitled by it to life, salvation and happiness eternal; that is, righteousness indeed: that is it, we seek for, if we may find it. And that is not this latter, but the former only: and therefore that is the true interpretation of Jehovah justitia nostra. Look but how St. Augustine, and the rest of the Fathers, when they occasion to mention that place, in the Proverbs, (Cum Rex justus sederit in solio, quis potest dicere, Mundum est cor meum?) Look how they interpret it then, and it will give us light to understand this Name; and we shall see, that no name will serve then, but this name. Nor this name neither, but with this interpretation of it. Con. cref. 4. Prov. 20. 8.

And that the Holy Ghost would have it ever thus understood, and us ever to represent before our eyes, this King thus sitting in his judgement seat, when we speak of this Righteousness, it is plain two wayes. First, by way of position. For the tenour of the Scripture touching our Justification, all along runneth in judicial terms, to admonish us still what to set before us. The usual joyning of Justice and Judgement continually all along the Scriptures, shew, it is a judicial Justice we are to set before us. The terms of 1 A Judge [a] It is the Lord that judgeth me. 2 A Prison, [b] Kept and shut up under Moses. 3 A Barre, [c] We must all appear before the Barre. 4 A Proclamation, [d] Who will lay any thing to the Prisoners charge? 5 An Accuser, [e] The Accuser of our brethren. 6 A Witness, Our Conscience bearing witness. 7 An Enditement upon these; Cursed be he that continueth not in all the words of this Law to do them: And again, He that breaketh one is guilty of all. A Conviction, that all may be ὑπόδικοι, guilty or culpable before God. Yea, the very delivering of our sins, under the name of debts; of the Law, under the name of a Hand-writing; the very termes of an Advocate; of a Surety made under the Law: of a pardon, or being justified from those things which by the Law we could not. All these, wherein for the most part this is still expressed; What speak they, but that the sense of this name cannot be rightly understood, nor what manner of Righteousness is in question, except we still have before our eyes; this same Coram Rege justo judicium faciente.

[a] 1 Cor. 4. 4. [b] Gal. 3. 23. [c] Cor. 5. 10. [d] Rom. 8. 33. [e] Apo. 12. 10. Rom. 2. 15. Deut. 27. ult. Jam. 2. 10. Rom. 3. 19. Col. 2. 14. 1 John 2. 2. Gal. 4. 4.

2. And again, by way of opposition. For usually, where justifying is named, there condemning (which is a term meerly judicial) is set against it. In the Law, When there shall be strife, and the matter shall come before thee, and sentence to be given, see the righteous be justified, and the sinner condemned. To justifie the wicked, and condemn the innocent, both are alike abominable before God. If man cannot judge, hear thou from heaven, condemn the wicked, and justifie the Righteous. Deut. 25. 1. Psal. 17. 15. 1 Reg. 8. 32.

In the Gospel. By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words condemned. It is GOD that justifieth, who shall condemn? Grace to justification, as sin to condemnation. All these shew manifestly: we must imagine our selves standing at the barre, or we shall never take the state of this question aright, nor truly understand the mystery of this Name. Mat. 12. 27. Rom. 8. 34. Rom. 5. 16.

For it is not in question, whether we have an inherent Righteousness or no: Or whether GOD will accept it, or reward it: but whether that must be our Righteousness, Coram Rege justo judicium faciente.

Which is a point very material, and in no wise to be forgotten: For, without this, if we compare our selves with our selves, what heretofore we have been; or if we compare our selves with others, as did the Pharisee; we may take a phansie perhaps, and have some good conceipt of our inherent Righteousness. Yea, if we be to deal in Schools by argument or disputation, we may peradventure argue for it, and make some shew in the matter. But let us once be brought and arraigned, Coram Rege justo sedente in Solio, let us set our selves there, we shall then see, that all our former conceipt will vanish straight, and Righteousness (in that sense) will not abide the trial.

Bring them hither then, and ask them here of this Name, and never a Saint, nor Father, no nor the Schoolmen themselves, none of them but will shew you how to understand it aright. In their Commentaries, it may be in their questions and debates they will hold hard for the other. But remove it hither, they forsake it presently, and take the Name in the right sense. Hast thou considered my servant Job (saith GOD to Satan) how just and perfect he is. This just and perfect JOB, standing here, Though I be just (saith he) I will not hold up my head (or as they say, Stare rectus in curia) will never plead it, or stand upon it, but put up a supplication to be relieved by Iehova justitia nostra. Job 1. 18. Job 9. 15. 10. 15.

David hath the witness to have been a man according to GOD'S own heart. For all that, he dareth not stand here: but desireth, GOD would not enter into judgement with him: For that, In conspectu tuo, in His sight, not he, nor any other living (which Saint Bernard extendeth to the Angels) shall be justified. But if he must come, (as thither we must come all) then Memorabor justitiæ tuæ solius, he will never chaunt his own righteousness, but make mention only of this Name, JEHOVAH justitia nostra. 1 Sam. 13. 14. Non in justificationibus nostris*: Not in our Righteousnes; yet was that righteousnes à Jehova, but (here) it would not serve; he must wait for the Messias, and the Everlasting Righteousnes which he bringeth with him.

Esa.6.5

And Esay likewise, at the Vision of the Lord sedentis super Thronum, and the Angels covering their faces before Him, cryeth out, Væ mihi, Woe is me, I am a man of polluted lips: Woe is me, for I have held my peace: and (there) he seeth the very sins of his lips, and the very sins of omission will be enough to condemn him, though he had never in act committed any.

Acts 9.15

To end this point: Sait Paul, a Vessel of Election (so GOD himself doth name him) saith plainly, if it were before the Corinthians; or any Assize of man, he would stand upon his

1 Cor.4.4

Righteousnes: but seeing, Qui me judicat est Dominus, he will give it over, and confess, that though Nihil mihi conscius sum (and so had justitia a Domino;) yet for all that, in hoc non sum justificatus; it is another Righteousnes, and not that, must acquit him.

Thus do the Saints, both of the Old, and of the New Testament take this Name. And do not the Fathers the like? S. Augustines report it is, of S. Ambrose, that being now at the point of death, he alledged, that the cause why he feared not death, was, Quia bonum habemus Dominum: and doth not he give this note upon it, that he did not presume De suis purgatissimis moribus, of his conversation, though most holy and clean, but only stood on the goodnes of the LORD, the LORD our Righteousnes?

And doth he not, in his own case, fly to the same, against Crescentius the Donatist. That he shunned not, to have his life sifted to the uttermost by any Donatist of them all. Yet in the eyes of God, Cum Rex justus sederit in solio (these very words he alledgeth) he saith plainly, he dare not justifie himself, but rather waited for the overflowing bounty of His Grace; than would abide the severe examination of his judgement. And Bernard (in his 310. Epistle, the very last he wrote a little before his death, to the Abbot of Chartres) concludeth he not, Calcaneum vacuum meritis curate mugire precibus? Abandoneth he not them, his justitia à Domino, and confesseth, his heel (meaning the end of his life) is bare of all merits, and desireth to have it, by Prayers commended to Jehova justitia nostra. Thus do the Fathers conceive of it.

Yea, the very Schoolmen themselves, take them from their Questions, Quodlibets and Comments on the Sentences, let them be in their soliloquies, meditations or devotions, and specially in directing how to deal with men in their last agony, quando judex præ foribus est; then take Anselm, take Bonaventure, take Gerson, you would not wish to find Jehovah justitia nostra better, or more pregnantly acknowledged, than in them you shall find it. But this is by vertue of this Ecce Rex faciet judicium; out of whose sight when we be; we may fall into a phansie, or (as the Prophet saith) we may have a dream of Justitia nostra a Jehova.

Verse 17.

But framing our selves as before him, we shall see, it is not that Righteousnes, will consist there: but we must come to Justitia nostra in Iehovah. It is the only way how to settle the state of this controversie aright: and without this, we may well miss of the interpretation of this Name. And this they do not, or will not (now) conceive, the Prophet telleth them after, at the 20. verse, quod in novissimo intelligetis plane, at the end they shall understand, whether they will or no.

And indeed to do them no wrong, it is true, that at his Judgement-seat, so far as it concerneth the satisfaction for sin, and our escaping from from eternal death, the Church of Rome taketh this Name aright; and that term, which a great while seemed harsh unto them, now they find no such absurdity in it. That Christs Righteousnes and merits are imputed to us. So

saith Bellarmine; Et hoc modo non esset absurdum, si quis diceret, nobis imputari Christi justitiam & merita, cum nobis donentur & applicentur, ac si nos ipsi Deo satisfecissemus. And again, Solus Christus pro salute nostra satisfacere potuit, & re ipsa ex justitia satisfecit, & illa satisfactio nobis donatur, & applicatur, & nostra reputatur, cum Deo reconciliamur & justificamur. So saith

De Just.7.9.

Stapleton, Illa sane justitia, qua satisfecit pro nobis, per communicationem sic nostra est, ut perinde nobis imputetur, ac si nos sufficienter satisfecimus: in as full terms as one could wish. So that this point is meetly well cleared now, Thus they understand this Name in that part of righteousnes, which is satisfactory for punishment; and there they say with us (as we, with Esay) in Jehova justitia nostra.

But in the positive justice, or that part thereof, which is meritorious for reward; there fall they into a phansie, they may give it over; and suppose, that justitia a Domino, a righteousnes (from GOD, they grant, yet) inherent in themselves, without a Righteousnes that is in Christ, will serve them, whereof they have a good conceipt, that it will endure GODS justice, and standeth not by acceptation. So by this means shrink they up their Name; and though they leave the full sound, yet take they halfe the sense from it.

John 1.29.
Mat.1.21.
De verb. Apost. 16.
In Cant. 22.

Now as for us, in this point of Righteousnes, if we both go no further, than the former of taking away sin, then as much as we strive for, they do yield us. And therein (we think) we have cause to blame them justly, for not contenting themselves with that which contented the Prophet, Hic est omnis fructus (mark that omnis) ut auferatur peccatum. Which contented S. John Baptist; Ecce Agnus Dei qui tollit peccata mundi. Which contented the Angel; Hic servabit populum suum a peccatis eorum. Which contented the Fathers, S. Augustine, Puto hoc esse justus sum, quod peccator non sum. S. Bernard, factus est nobis justitia, sapientia, &c. sapientia in prædicatione, justitia justitia in peccatorum absolutione. So that, to be absolved from sin with him, is our Righteousness. And yet more plainly in his CXC Epistle to Innocentius the Pope himself, Ubi reconciliatio, ibi remissio peccatorum, & quid ipsa nisi justificatio? Which the very name and nature of a judgement-seat doth give, which proceedeth only in matters penal.

And as we blame them for that: so likewise for this, no less, that (if they will needs have it a part of Justice) they allow not Christs merit as full in this part as in the former. For there they allow imputation, but here they do not.

For I ask what is the reason why in the other part (of satisfaction for sin) we need CHRIST'S Righteousness to be accompted ours? The reason is, saith Bellarmine, Non acceptat Deus in veram satisfactionem pro peccato, nisi justitiam infinitam, quoniam peccatum offensa est infinita. If that be the reason, that it must have an infinite satisfaction; because the offence is infinite? we reason a pari, there must be an infinite merit, because the reward is no less infinite. Else, by what proportion do they proceed, or at what beam do they weigh these twain, that cannot counterpoyze an infinite sin, but with an infinite satisfaction: and think they can weigh down a reward every way as infinite, with a merit, (to say the least) surely not infinite? Why should there be a necessary use of the sacrifice of CHRISTS death for the one, and not an use full as necessary of the Oblation of His life for the other? Or how cometh it to pass, that no less than the one will serve to free us from eternal death, and a great deal less will serve to entitle us to eternal life? Is there not as much requisite to purchase for us the Crown of Glory, as there is to redeem us from the Torments of Hell? What difference is there, are they not both equal, both alike infinite? Why is his death allowed solely sufficient to put away sin, and why is not His life to be allowed like solely sufficient to bring us to life? If in that the blessed Saints themselves (were their sufferings never so great, yea, though they endured never so cruel Martyrdome) if all those could not serve to satisfie GODS justice for their sins, but it is the death of Christ must deliver them; is it not the very same reason, that were their merits never so many, and their life never so holy, yet that by them, they could not, nor we cannot challenge the reward, but it is the life and obedience of CHRIST that de justitia must procure it, for us all? For sure it is, that Finiti ad finitum nulla est proportio. Especially, if we add hereunto, that as it cannot be denied but to be finite, so withal, that the ancient Fathers seem further to be but meanly conceipted of it, reckoning it not to be full, but defective; not pure, but defiled; and if it be judged by the just Judge, Districte, or cum districtione examinis (they be Saint Gregories and Saint Bernards words) indeed, no Righteousness at all. De Just. 2. 5.

Not full, but defective. So saith Saint Augustine: Neque totam, neque plenam, in hac vita, justitiam nos habere, confitendum nobis est. If neither whole, but a part; nor full, but wanting; then unperfect and defective. Now, which must be weighed in GODS Ballance, must not be found minus habens, and this is minus habens, saith saint Bernard in expres terms.

Not pure, but defiled. Nostra recta forsan, sed non pura justitia, saith Bernard, nisi forte meliores sumus quam patres nostri, quorum illa vox, Omnes justitiæ nostræ sicut pannus menstruata; Mala nostra, pura mala; Bona nostra, pura nequaquam, saith Gregory. Now καλὰ ἀνάγκη τινὰ μὴ εὑρεθῆναι, saith S. Chrysostome; Necessary it is, that the Righteousness, that shall present it self there, have not a spot in it. As for ours, as Pope Adrian the sixth said) the case standeth thus, that Stillamus quotidie super telam Justitiæ nostræ, saniem concupiscentiæ nostræ, and so it is defiled.

And last of all, if it be straightly examined, indeed no righteousness. Sancti viri omne meritum vitium est, si ab Æterno arbitro districte judicetur. And again; Quousque pœna corruptionis astringimur, veram mundiam nequaquam apprehendimus. And, Omnis humana justitia injustitia esse invenitur, si districte judicetur, injusta invenietur omnis justitia nostra. And thus we see, the conceipt, these Fathers have, of our Righteousness inherent: That if it be dealt with according to Righteousness, in illo examine etiam justorum vita succumbet, in that examination it will sink and cannot stand before it. Yea, they themselves, of the Church of Rome also, upon better examination, have begun to cry it down: and I doubt not, but the longer and further they look into it, the easier accompt they will make of it. Mor. 9. 11. Mor. 9. 1.

Gregory de Valentia, after a long debating the matter, thus resolveth: that, Secluſa promissione divina, non suppetit aliquis sufficiens titulus, cur opera nostra debent compensari. And thus he expresseth his meaning, touching their value: That they be like to base money (as Princes have somtime made leather-money current) wherewith, Plate is bought, or other wares far exceeding the Coyn in value, which is no way in respect of it self; but because it pleaseth the Prince so to allow of it: And what is this but a proclaiming our righteousness base, or as I said before, a crying it down. Disp. 8. Quæst. 6.

Stapleton, in his seventh proposition, how the matter standeth in our justification, at length is fain to resolve thus, Facitque indulgendo, ut perinde simus coram Deo justi ac si universa, adamussim omnia mandata eademque perfectissime fecissemus. Now, Indulgence (we know) belongeth unto sin, and righteousness, if it be true, needeth none. Therefore he telleth us, it is, Perinde ac si justi; it is not justi, as they defend it: So that he confesseth their righteousness needeth an indulgence: and it is but Perinde ac si; and not that neither in justice, but acceptation, which is meer matter of favour, and not of judicial proceeding. De Just. 6. 8.

And to conclude, Bellarmin after his long disputation, in the end taking upon him to answer a case of Conscience, Whether a man repose any trust in that he had so long argued for, and how far; comprizeth the matter in three propositions well worth the noting. 1. For first, very stout- De Just. 5. 12.

ly he setteth down: Fiducia non ex fide sola nascitur, sed ex bonis meritis.

2. Then in the second he falleth somewhat: In meritis (qua vere talia compertum est) fiducia aliqua collocari potest. Not unless it be compertum, they be talia (a case with them, impossible:) and not in them neither, but only aliqua fiducia.

3. And yet there is some: But after, better bethinking himself (it may be, of the Judge sitting in his Throne) he spoileth all in the third, which is, that Propter incertitudinem propriæ justitiæ against His compertum est) & periculum inanis gloriæ, tutissimum est, fiduciam totam in sola Dei misericordia reponere: Mark that same totam in solam; which is clean contrary to his aliqua a little before. Mark his Misericordia: and that he declineth the judicial proceeding. And mark his Reason, because His righteousness is such, as he is not sure of it, nor dare not put any trust in it, nor plead it coram Rege juste judicium faciente. Which is enough (I think) to shew, when they have forgot themselves a little out of the fervour of their oppositions, how light and small account they make of it themselves, for which they spoil Christ of one half of His Name.

This is then the interpretation or meaning of this name, that as well in the one sence as in the other, Christ is our Righteousness, and as the Prophet Esay putteth it down, in the plural number, in Domino justitiæ nostræ, as it were propheeying of these men: All our Righteousnesses; this, is that, that one as well as the other, are in the Lord. No abatement is to be devised, the Name is not to be mangled or divided, but entirely belonging to Christ, full and whole, and we to call him by it, Jehova justitia nostra.

II. The calling Christ by this Name.

1 Our Duty.

We to call him by it; this is our duty first: and that so to call him by it, as by His Name. And a Name is a note of distinction, and we therefore to use it: To apply it to him, and to none other whatsoever, as the nature of a Name is. The Nature of all names: but chiefly of those which be Titles of Honour: For, howsoever we dispence with others, those we will not in any wise divide with any: Gloriam meam alteri non dabo, saith GOD by the Prophet; which maketh the Prophet to protest, he will not meddle with it, Non nobis Domine: and again more vehemently, Non nobis, sed Nomini tuo da gloriam. And such is this Name. For that very place in the New Testament, where it is said, that GOD hath given him a name which is above all names, that in his Name all knees should bow, and all tongues confess: that place is taken out of the Prophet Esay, where the very same is said; That all knees shall bow, and all tongues shall acknowledge this Name; and that thus, by saying, in Jehova justitiæ meæ, and so acknowledging, concludeth, that all the whole Seed of Israel, as they shall be justified, so shall they Glory in the Lord. It is the very question which the Apostle of purpose doth propound, Ubi ergo est gloriatio tua? as if he should admonish us, that this Name is given with expres intent, to exclude it from us, and us from it. And therefore, in that very place where he saith, He is made unto us from GOD Righteousness: To this end, saith he, he is so made, Ut qui gloriatur, in Domino glorietur. All which I put you in mind of, to this end, that you may mark, that this nipping at this Name of CHRIST, is for no other reason, but that we may have some honour our selves, out of our Righteousnesses.

Esay 42.3. Psalm 115.1. Psalm 2.20. Esay 45.24. 1 Cor. 1.13.

Bellarmine doth disclose as much, and doth not stick in plain terms to avow it. For, In answer to that argument, which is alleadged by us, that after we are acquit of our sins at this bar, and that only for CHRIST our only Righteousness; we are received into GODS favour, and made His Children by adoption, and then have heaven by way of inheritance: He answereth directly, Their meaning is, not to content themselves with that single title of inheritance; but they mean to lay claim to it, duplici jure. That is, not only titulo hæreditatis, but jure mercedis too. And thereof he giveth this reason, Quoniam magis honorificum est, habere aliquid ex merito: For that it is more for their honour, to have it by merit. For, so (saith he) CHRIST had it, and they must not be behind Him, but go even as far as he did. So that, it seemeth he is resolved, that rather than they will lose their honour, CHRIST must part with a piece of his Name, and be named justitia nostra, only in the latter sense. Which is it, the Prophet after (in the twenty seventh verse of this Chapter) setteth down as a mark of false Prophets; that by having a pleasant Dream of their own righteousness, they make Gods people to forget His Name. As indeed, by this means, this part of CHRISTS Name hath been forgotten. And so much doth Pighius confess, Dissimulare non possumus, hanc vel primam doctrinæ Christianæ partem obscuratam quam illustratam magis a scholasticis spinosis plerisque quæstionibus; that this, being the very chief part of a Christian Doctrine, hath rather been obscured, than received any light, by the Schoolmens questions, and handling of it. As much as to say, as they had made the people in a manner to forget this Name.

De Just. 5.3.

2 Our benefit.

Now as to call Him by this Name is a duty; so to call him by it, is an use likewise, and a benefit there is, which we receive by it. For calling him by that Name, which God hath prescribed, and which there is to Him most acceptable, we shall not do it for nought, for he will answer us; answer us, and answer for us; for, as an Advocate in our Cause. So calleth Ezekias to Him, Domine vim patior, responde pro me. So King David reposeth himself, Thou shalt answer for me, O LORD my GOD. And this shall He, in all things wherein we shall need him: but above all, in that which concerneth His Name in particular, to be our Righteousness against sin, and that before the righteous Judge. And even so doth Jeremy teach us to pray unto Him, O Lord

Esay 38.14. Psalm 38.15.

our misdeeds testifie against us, yet deal thou with us according to thy Name; Which is Jehova justitia nostra. In thy Name we are justified: deal thou with us according to thy Name, and justifie us. Our sins are forgiven for thy Names sake: Deal thou with us according to thy Name, and forgive us our sins. Et noli ita reminisci peccatum nostrum, ut velis propterea obliviſci Nomen tuum: Let not the remembrance of our sins make thee forget thine own Name. And this if we do, thus if we call on him, Fidelis & justus est, he is faithfull, saith S. John, and just to forgive us our sins, to justifie us, and to be our Righteousness. For so is His Name, and he beareth not His Name for nought. Cap. 14.9. 1 Cor.6.11. 1 John 1.9.

And, this if we do, and if he be our Righteousness, as we may say in respect of His other Name with the Prophet, Look thou upon us, and be mercifull unto us, as thou useſt to do to those that love thy Name, so may we in respect of this, go further, and safely say, Esto justitia, & fac justitiam; esto justitia, & intra in judicium cum servo tuo. For with this Advocate, with this Righteousness, with this Name, we may without fear, appear before the King executing Judgement and Justice. Psal.119. 132.

So for that duty which we are bound to acknowledge, we have this benefit which we shall be sure to receive; the greatest benefit that can be received for importance in it self, and the greatest respect of the most dreadfull place and time, wherein we shall need to receive it, wherein heaven and earth, and all in them, shall not be able to stand us in stead, but JEHOVAH, our Righteousness only. And this is the view of His Name, whereby we are called to Him, as well for our duty to it, as for our benefit by it, which is that, the Prophet by his Ecce willeth us to behold, and the sum of this Scripture.

MAT. Chap. XXII. Ver. XXI.

Reddite ergo quæ ſunt Cæſaris Cæſari; & quæ ſunt DEI DEO.

Give therefore to Cæſar, the things which are Cæſars: and to GOD, thoſe things which are GOD'S.

WHich XXII. of Matthew in effect, is nothing elſe but a Chapter of Controverſies: with the Saducee, verſe 23. With the Phariſee, ver. 22. With the Scribe, verſe 34. And (here) with the Herodian. With the Saducees, of the Reſurrection: With the Phariſees, of the great Commandment; With the Scribes, of the Meſſias. All worthy to be weighed, and all at other times to be commended by the Church, to our conſideration. This here in this.

The Herodian was a Politique: and his queſtion according, about a ſecular point; Licetne ſolvere? The caſe ſtandeth not in this, as it did in the other. The Phariſees and Saducees had no further end, but to ſet him on ground; and ſo to expoſe Him to the contempt of the people. The Herodians had laid a more dangerous plot: they came with this mind, ſaith Saint Luke, Ut caperent Eum, &c. to catch him; by catching ſomewhat from Him, whereby they might lay Him faſt, and draw Him within danger of the State. It ſtood our Saviour upon, to be well adviſed, to eſcape this ſnare ſthus laid for Him, which accordingly he doth; leaving them in a Muſe, and withal under one, leaving us a pattern, that he is no enemy, but a friend to Caſar, and a friend, in this ſpecial point, of his receipt. That there is no duty, no not in this kind, but Christ saith of it, Reddite: willeth and commandeth it to be Rendred; That so, knowing what CHRIST held, we may make it our Tenet; and both hold it in opinion, and hold us to it in practice for ever.

At or about the birth of CHRIST, this came to be first a question; and so from thence, still remained. So that, it was very meet, Christ should resolve it. At his birth, was the great Tax of the world under Augustus: which being a new imposition, and never heard of before, fell out to breed much matter of question: Two sorts of men taking two several parts about it. There is in Acts 5. mention of Judas of Galalee, that rose in the dayes of Tribute. He it was that held touching the Tax, Quod non. The people of God, Abrahams seed, free born, they to be charged with Taxes, by a stranger, a heathen idolater? No, rather rise and take armes, as Jeroboam did. The peoples ears itched after this Doctrine. The best Religion for the Purse, is the best for them; and they ready to hold with Jeroboam or Judas, or any that will abrogate payments. And now, though Judas was taken, and had as he deserved; and after his execution, pay it they did, though with an ill will: yet the scruple of this question remained in mens minds still; they continued irresolute, touching the right of it. As indeed, is no one thing, men are ever so long in resolving. Still there were, that muttered in corners; Judas was right: Tribute was but a meer exaction. Men indeed of tumultuous spirits; but in shew zealous preservers of the peoples liberties; whom they called Gaulonites.

Acts 5. 36, 37.

On the other side, Herod, and they that were toward him, being all that they were by Cæsar; to make the Tribute sure work, they held, that not only Tribute, but whatsoever else was Cæsars: His qua was quacunque; He could not have enough; not till he had qua Dei too. The Roman Monarchy pricked fast toward this point: Divisum imperium cum Jove, was received at this time with great applause. Cæsar and Jupiter at halves; half GOD. Not long after, full out a God; Edictum Domini, &c. the Edict of our Lord God Domitian. And this was not a piece of Poetry: but we find in the Jewish story, Petronius in good earnest, sought to bring in Caligula's image into the Temple of God: and called for not only Tribute, but sacrifice for Cæsar. Now them, that thus in derogation of the peoples liberty, held this part, they termed Herodians: as it were men for Herods turn. And thus held this question: Thus have we both sides, and both abettours. Of which the People inclined to the Gaulonite, and liked them better: The Statesmen and Officers took part with the Herodian.

Now come they to CHRIST, to receive His resolution, which part he will take to. It is for them, a very Quodlibet. If to retain the peoples favour, to avoid their Out-cry, he speaks but doubtfully of Cæsars Tribute, habetur propositum, they have what they would: It is that they came for; to bring him in disgrace with the State, and in danger of his life. Thus would they fain have had it, and therefore when truly they could not (as by this answer it is too plain) untruly, they suggested, We found this man denying to pay Tribute unto Cæsar. But if this hit not: if he be for the tribute, yet will it not be from the purpose: they shall set the people (as good as a Wasps nest) upon Him, they shall subject Him to their clamour and obloquie. He that must be their MESSIAS, must proclaim a Iubile; must cry, No Tribute. Otherwise, he is not for them: if he betray them to the servitude of Tolls and Taxes, away with him: Not Him, but Judas of Galilee. So have they him at a dangerous Dilemma: imagining, he must take one part. But that was in their errour. For CHRIST took a way between both. For as neither part is simply true: so is there some truth in both. Therefore, He answers not absolutely (as they fondly conceived, he needs must) but with a double Qua, as indeed he should: which was not the answer they looked for. But it was such, as they missed their purpose, and knew not how to reprove it.

The summe whereof is; that Christ is neither Gaulonite nor Herodian: Nor no more are Christians, Gaulonites to deny Cæsar his Qua; nor Herodians; to grant Him GOD'S, and leave GOD none all. But ready to acknowledge what due is, to either; both of Faith to GOD, and Allegiance to Cæsar; and that in every point, and even in this here, of Licetne solvere?

The substance of which answer, is the main ground of all Justice; Suum cuique, Let every one render to each, that which is his. And if to every one, then to these two great ones, Cæsar and GOD. To Cæsar, Cæsars due, to GOD, GOD'S. Upon which two Duties, by vertue of this Text, there goeth forth two decrees, for all the world to be taxed. The first taxing, to be for Cæsar, and his affairs. 2. The like tax to be levied for GOD, and for His. For though many other duties be due to both, and to be rendred to them both; yet the matter of principal entendment in this place, is, Ostende mihi numisma, matter of payment.

These be two Capital points. Wherein, 1. of the joynt and mutual consistence, of Cæsar and of God.

2. That there are, among the things we have, certain of them, things of Cæsars. Certain others, things of GODS. The division: I. II.

3. That these things are to be rendred and given. III.

4. What these things are that are Cæsars in this kind: and what those that are GODS, that we may pay each his own. IV.

FRom this happy conjunction of these two great Lights (Cæsar and GOD) here met together, linked with this Copulative, Cæsari and DEO; and both in the compass of one Period: ag inst the Gaulonite of our Age, the Anabaptist (who thinketh, they are in opposition, the whole heaven in sunder, and that GOD hath not his due, unless Cæsar lay down his Scepter.) That Cæsar and GOD, CHRIST and a Christian Magistrate, are δύσκατα, incompatible, that they stand aloof, and will not once come near another; Here is a Systasie, a Consistence; they will stand together well (both they and their duties:) as close as one Verse, one breath, one period can joyn them.

I Cæsar and God joyntly.

To see then this pair thus near, thus coupled, thus (as it were) arm in arm together, is a blessed sight. Not here only to be seen, but all the Scriptures through, with like aspect. Here in one Gospel, Cæsar and GOD. Before in one Law, GOD providing as for His own worship, so for their honour that are set over us. In one Verse the Prophet joyneth them, Prov. 24. 21. My Sonne, fear GOD and the King; And in one Verse the Apostle forteth them, (1 Pet. 2. 17.) Fear Exod 20. GOD, honour the King. So GOD and CHRIST, the Law and Gospel, the Prophets and Apostles, fetch not their breath, come not to a full point, till they have taken in both. Sure it is, CHRIST and Belial agree not, 2 Cor. 6. 11. and as sure, that they are the children of Belial, that have no part in David (that is, the lawfull Magistrate) by Sheba's case, 2 Sam. 20. 1.

This is enough to shew, God impeacheth not Cæsar; nor Gods due, Cæsars right. Either permitteth others interest; and both of them may joyntly be performed. That as Gods Law supporteth the Law of Nations: so doth Christ plead for Cæsar: His Religion, for Cæsars Allegiance; His Gospel, for Cæsars duty, even to a penny. It was but a penny was shewed: Not so much as a penny of Cæsars, but Christ duty will speak, he may have it. This against the Gaulonite, that steps over Quæ Cæsaris, the first part, and is all for Quæ Dei, the latter. And against the Herodian too; by whom Quæ Cæsaris is stood on alone, and Quæ Dei slipped over. Two duties are set forth; There is a like regard to be had of both, that we may make not Christs answer serve for either alone. I know not how, an evil use hath possessed the world: Commonly, one duty is singled out, and much made of, without heed had of the other. Quæ Cæsaris, audibly, and with full voice, Quæ Dei drowned and scarce heard. And it is not in this alone, but in many others: We cannot raise the price of one vertue, but we must cry down all the rest. Not canonize Preaching, but Prayer must grow out of request. Not possible to bring up Almes and works of mercy, but Offerings and Workes of devotion must be laid down. But by sale of CHRISTS ointment, no way to provide for the poor. Sensible in others, and this too dull.

God is not entire, (thinks the Gaulonite) unless Cæsars image and superscription be blotted out. Cæsar hath not enough, till GOD have nothing left, thinks the Herodian.

CHRIST's course is best; to hold the mean between both: Either to be preserved in his right. Not to look so much on one, as we lose sight of the other. Not to give so good an ear to one, as we care not though the other be never spoken of. GOD hath coupled them here: and since GOD hath coupled them, let not man sever them. To Cæsar, and to GOD: Not to Cæsar only, but to Cæsar and GOD. And again, not to GOD only; but to GOD and Cæsar.

Cæsar and GOD then, will stand together: Descend yet one degree further, we may put the Case harder yet. For, I demand, What Cæsar was this, for whose interest CHRIST here pleadeth? To quicken this point somewhat the more: It is certain, it was Tiberius, even he under whom our Saviour was, (and knew He was to be) put to death: A stranger from Israel. A Heathen man, uncircumcised, an idolater, and enemy to the Truth. So were Augustus, and the rest, you will say: But even in moral goodness, he nothing so good as they. The Roman stories are in every mans hand; Men know, he was far from a good Prince, or good man either, as good went even among the Heathen. Yet even this Cæsar, and such as he; any Cæsar will stand with GOD, and GOD with them, for all that.

Not only to Cæsar, but to this, and such as this; Reddite (saith CHRIST) Solvite (saith Paul) Subjecti estote (saith Peter) for all that: So was the old Divinity. Though an evil spirit Rom. 13. 7. 1 Pet. 2. 13. sent from God, vex Saul, yet, saith David, destroy not, it is his Word; nay, Touch not the Lords 1 Sam. 26. 9. Anointed. Though Nebuchadnezzar set up a great Idol in the field Dura, and Balthazar his 1 Chro. 16. 22. son rather worse, than his father; yet Pray for Nebuchadnezzar, saith Jeremy, and for *Balthaza*r his sonne, and for the peace even of that state. From these examples, might Judas of Dan. 3. 1 Dan. 5. Galilee have taken his directions. CHRIST did, and his Apostles after Him, willed duties to Baruc, 1. 11. be paid, and obedience to be yielded; and yielded it themselves to such Cæsars as Claudius, Caligula and Nero; Dyscolis Dominis (as Saint Peter term is) if ever there were any. Which 1 Pet. 2. 18. sheweth, they were all of one mind, that Cæsar (though no better than these) and GOD will stand together well enough. Yea, that though Cæsar gave not GOD His due, as these did not certainly; yet are we to give Cæsar, that his is notwithstanding.

I know, we all know; if this Cæsar be Constantine, or Theodosius, the case is much the stronger, and the duty toucheth us nearer. But whether he be or no, the Powers that are, are ordained of GOD, though Tiberius or Nero have the powers. It is not the man, it is the ordinance of GOD, we owe and perform our subjection to. We yield it not to Tiberius, but to Cæsar; and Cæsar is Gods ordinance, be Tiberius what he will. This, for the consorting of GOD and Cæsar, and even, of this Cæsar. Rom. 13. 1. Rom. 13. 2.

II. Certain things Cæsars. Certain things Gods.

That point established, we come to the second, out of these words quæ Cæsaris, & quæ Dei, This may we inferre; That among these things we have, we all and every of us, have certain things of Cæsars, and certain other things of Gods. That all the things we have, are not our own, inasmuch as out of them, there belong some things, to either of these. It is, as if CHRIST would make, all we have not to be fully and wholly ours, but three persons to be interessed in them? Cæsar to have a right to some; GOD to other some; and the remainder only, clearly to be ours, (Weigh the words Quæ Dei.) So that, His meaning is, every man should thus make account with himself, of that he hath, that there is in his hands somewhat that pertaineth to either of these two. That there is in our substance, a portion whereto they have as good right and title, as we to the rest. That what we have is ours, GOD'S part and Cæsars part first deducted; Quæ Dei & quæ Cæsaris (it is the case possessive) do carry thus much. Therefore saith the true Israelite, when he tendreth his offering to GOD, Sustuli quod Sanctum est è domo mea: I had a holy portion due to GOD amongst my goods, I have severed it from the rest, I have brought it and laid it upon the Altar, So, they in 1 Sam. 10. to Saul their lawfull Magistrate, presented that was his. They that did so. Tetigit Deus cor eorum, GOD hath touched their hearts. Consequently, in their hearts that did it not, there was the Print of the Devils clawes, not the touch of the finger of GOD. This may serve for the second of the duty: so we shall strike the same nail home, in the third of Reddite. Deut. 26. 13. 1 Sam. 10. 26, 27.

III. These to be rendred.

For, from this right thus imported in the words (Quæ Cæsaris, quæ Dei) without any streining, naturally doth follow the Reddite.

That theirs it is, and so being theirs, to be paid them. Not of courtesie, but of duty. Not, as a free largesse, but as a due debt. Not Date, but Reddite, ἀπόδοτε. As if our Saviour should say, you ask me whether it be lawfull to pay, I tell you it is as lawfull to pay it, as it is unlawfull to withhold it: you would know whether you may; I say unto you, you not only may, but must answer it. Not dare, as a matter of gift, but reddere, as a matter of repayment or restitution. Saint Paul maketh this point yet more plain: indeed past all controversie, where he addeth to ἀπόδοτε the other ὀφειλάς, to the word of rendring, the plain term of debts: expresly calling them debts, both Tribute and Custom.

Then what is paid to the Prince, or to GOD, is not to be termed a donative, gratuity, or benevolence, but of the nature of things restored, which though they be in our keeping, are in very deed other mens. And they that reckon of them as matters meerly voluntary, must alter CHRIST'S Reddite needs; and teach Him some other term. But they that will learn of Him, must think and call them debts: must accompt themselves debtors; and that God and Cæsar are as two Creditors, and they indebted to them both: and thereby as truly bound to discharge themselves of these, as of any debt, or bond they owe. That, if they render not these duties, they detain that which is none of theirs; and so doing, are not only hard and illiberall, but unrighteous and unjust men. Rom. 7. 13.

This from Reddite, but this not all. There is yet a further matter in it, which giveth a great grace to this rendring.

For in that He willeth them, ἀπόδοτε, His meaning is withall it should not be ἀπότισις, a forced yielding, but ἀπόδοσις a Rendring, and that willingly; for so the nature of the word doth import, and so the Grecians distinguish ἀποτίσαι, and ἀποδῶναι. Our translation readeth Give to Cæsar, no doubt, with reference to this; that it should (though duly) yet so willingly be paid, as it were even a frank gift. In our speech we say, What is more due than debt? And again, What is more free than gift? Yet both these may meet, as in any other case, the Apostle coupleth them ὀφειλομένην εὐνοίαν, Duty, yet Benevolent; Benevolence and yet due; the one respecting the nature, the other the mind: So, both translations not amisse, both readings reconciled.

That is not therefore to pay them, because it will no better be. Cæsar hath vim coactivam. Hophni hath a flesh-hook, and can say, date vel auferetur a vobis: and therefore to part with it, as one delivereth a purse, or to bear it as a Porter doth his load; groaning under it: that is not the manner of Rendring it, that is here required. But we must offer it as it were a Gift, voluntarily, willingly, chearfully, ἐκχαρεῖσθαι, ἐκ ψυχῆς: Not, ἐξ ἀνάγκης, ἐκ πάτης. Διὰ τὸν κύριον: (saith Saint Peter) Διὰ συνείδησιν (saith Saint Paul) Even for the Lord, even for conscience sake; though Hophni had no flesh-hook, though Cæsar had no Publican to take a tresse. 1 Sam. 2: 13. Col. 3. 23. 2 Cor. 9. 7, 3. 1 Pet. 2. 13.

To pay it with grudging and an evil eye, to say Vade & redi cras, to put off, to pay it after often coming and sending; this is no ἀπόδοτε, these the heathen man termeth viscata beneficia, when they hang to the fingers like bird-lime, and will not come away. Rom. 13. 5. Prov. 3. 28.

Nay, Ecce venio (saith CHRIST;) So to pay it, even with Love and good will: An offering of a free heart (as the Prophet;) a blessing and a grace (as the Apostle termeth it.) The manner is much, and much to be regarded. The willingnesse of the mind, is ever the fat of the sacrifice, Psalm 39. 8. 2 Cor. 9. 5.

and without it, all is lean and dry. It holdeth here, which the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Corinth. 9. If I preach
1 Cor. 9. 16. (ſaith he; if we pay, ſay we) we have no great cauſe to rejoyce: Neceſſity lieth on us ſo to do. But if we do it with a good will, there is then a reward. A reward at His hands, who as His Apoſtle tel-
1 Cor. 9. 7. leth us, Hilarem datorem diligit. Not datorem, any that giveth; but hilarem, him that giveth it
2 Chron. 9. 5. cheerfully. That gift beſt pleaſeth GOD; and that ſervice, Læti ſerviamus Regi, is ever beſt pleaſing and moſt acceptable.

IV. What are Cæſars, what Gods.

Render then, and give, Quæ Cæſaris Cæſari (that is) the right duty to the right owner: As, dutifully and willingly, ſo to do it wiſely. In Suum cuique, there is not only juſtice, but wiſdom, to know and to preſerve to every one that is his own; the right quæ, to him that of right it belongeth to.

1 Cor. 14. 33. Not to ſhuffle them together: Cæſar's to GOD, GOD'S to Cæſar; it skils not which to which. GOD is not the Author of confuſion: but, to know and diſcern, what to each, pertaineth; and what pertaineth, that to be anſwered. As before we pleaded, What GOD hath joyned, man ſhould not ſever; ſo now we plead again, What God hath ſevered, man ſhould not confound: The Prophet calleth it removing the Land-mark, which GOD hath ſet to diſtinguiſh the duties, that neither invade the others right, but keep the partition which He hath ſet up. Not to ſtand (as here they do,) ſtreining at a penny, which was Cæſars without queſtion; and do (as after they did) receive the Roman Eagle into their Temple, which was GOD'S right, and but fleightly of them looked to. Ægerrimè pendere tributum, promptiſſimè ſuſcipere Religionem: with much ado to pay any tribute at all, with little ado to receive one religion after another. GOD forbid, Cæſar ſhould ſo readily receive GOD'S duties at their hands, as He might eaſily have them if He would.

To the end then, we may know, which to render to which, it remaineth we enquire what is eithers due, that we may tender it accordingly. And firſt, what is Cæſars.

If we ask then, what is Cæſars? Our anſwer muſt be; what GOD hath ſet over to him. For, though Quæ Dei ſtand laſt in place; yet ſure it is, the former quæ cometh out of the later, and Quæ Cæſaris is derived out of quæ Dei.

Originally, in the perſon of all Kings, doth King David acknowledge: that, All things are of Him, and all things are His. But the Soveraign bounty of GOD was ſuch, as He would not keep all, in His own hands: but as He hath vouchſafed to take unto Himſelf a ſecond meanes in the government of mankind; ſo hath He ſet over unto them a part of his own duty, that ſo one man might be one anothers debtor, and (after a ſort) Homo homini Deus. To the conveiance then of divers benefits, He hath called to Himſelf divers perſons, and joyned them with Himſelf: As our Parents, to the work of our bringing forth; our Teachers, in the work of our training up: and many other, in their kindes, with Him, and under Him, His meanes and Miniſters, all for our good.

And in the high and heavenly work of the Preſervation of all our lives, perſons, eſtates, and goods, in ſafety, peace and quietneſſe, in this His ſo great and divine benefit, He hath aſſociated Cæſar to Himſelf: and in regard of His care and travel therein, hath entitled him to part of His own right; hath made over this Quæ, and made it due to Cæſar, and ſo cometh he to claim it.

In which point we learn, if we pay tribute, what we have for it back in exchange: if we give, what Cæſar giveth us for it again, our penny and our penny-worthes: Even this, Ut ſit pax & veritas in diebus noſtris. This is it, to which we do debitum reddere, as he calleth it (Rom. 13.) This, to which we do mutuam vicem rependere, as he ſpeaketh, 1 Tim. 5. 4. διὰ τοῦτο, and even for this cauſe pay we tribute. For this, that while we intend our private pleaſures and profits in particular, we have them that ſtudy how we may ſafely and quietly do it; that counſel and contrive our peace, while we intend every man in his own affaires: that wake while we ſleep ſecurely, and cark and care, while we are merry and never think of it. Perſons, by whoſe providence, an happy peace we long have enjoyed, and many good bleſſings are come to our Nation. In which reſpect, we owe them a large quæ: larger than I (now) can ſtand to recount.

1. We owe them honour inward, by a reverent conceipt. 2. And outward, by an honourable teſtimony of the vertues in them, and the good we receive by them. And ſure I am, this we owe, Not to ſpeak evil of them that are in authority: and if there were ſome infirmity, not to blaze, but to conceal and cover it; for that the Apoſtle maketh a part of honour, 1 Cor. 12. 23. 3. We owe them our Prayers, and daily devout remembrance; For all (ſaith Saint Paul) but by ſpecial prerogative
1 Tim. 2. 2. for Princes. 4. We owe them the ſervice of our bodies, which if we refuſe to come in perſon to Acts 25. 11. do, the Angel of the Lord will curſe us, as he did Meroz, Judges 5. 24. And in a word to ſay with the Apoſtle, Non recuſo mori.

All theſe we owe, and all theſe are parts of quæ Cæſaris, but theſe are without the compaſſe of this quæ here. Theſe be not the things here queſtioned. It is the Coin with Cæſars ſtamp, it is a matter of payment. Let us hold us to that.

I ſay then, that to be ſafe from the forraign enemy, from the Wolf abroad, is a very great benefit. The ſword holdeth him out; propter hoc we owe to the ſword. To be quiet from the inward violent injurious oppreſſours, the fat and foregrown rammes within our own fold, is a ſpecial bleſſing. The Scepter holds them in; Propter hoc we owe to the Scepter. That by meanes of Cæſars Sword, we have a free Sea, and ſafe port and har bour, Propter hoc we owe to Cæſar our cuſtom. That by meanes of his Sword, we have our ſeed-time to ear the ground, our harveſt, to inne the crop quiet and ſafe: Propter hoc we owe to Cæſar our Tribute or taxe. That by meanes of his Scepter, we have right in all wrongs, and are not overborn in our innocency, by such as never cease to trouble such as are quiet in the land: Propter hoc we owe to Cesar, the fees due to his Courts of Justice.

There are Quæ Cæsaris; and not one of these but hath his ground In the word & GOD. The Custom, Luk. 3.13. The Taxe, 1 Sam. 17.25. The Fines, Ezra 7. 26. The confiscation, Ezra 10 8.

These which are Quæ Cæsaris. But these are current and ordinary. But extraordinary occasions cannot be answered with ordinary charges: Though, in peace, the set maintenance of Garrisons which is certain, (the ordinance Josaphat) is enough, 2 Chron. 17.3.5 et when warre comes, πολεμὸς ὁ τεταγμένος ζητεῖ, Warre admits no stint, but as occasions call for it, supply must be readie.

There is no safety or assurance of quietnesse, except the Enemy fear. There is no feare without power, except we be able to hold our own; maugre the malice and force of the enemies. There is no power, but by preparation of Souldiers and furniture for warre. Nor that without Pay, (the Sinews of all affaires:) Nor Pay, without Contribution. And Propter hoc, διὰ τοῦτο, besides those other ordinary, the indictions for war (which we call subsidies) are part of quæ Cæsaris too. And warranted by the Scripture: Amaziah, levying a hundred Talents, at one time against Edom: Menahem levying a thousand Talents, at another, against Assur (a great contribution of fifty sicles a man.) Indeed so it was, but such were the occasions:, and the occasions being such, done: and done lawfully. 2 Chro. 25. 6. 2 King. 15. 19, 20.

Then, as generally we are bound to render all quæ Cæsaris: So, in particular, by this Text and at this instant, this quæ; when the times make it requisite, and it is orderly required.

CHRIST, that willeth us to render it, rendred it Himself: and very timely He did it. For, He went to be taxed, being yet in His mothers womb (as Levi is said to pay tythe in his Fathers loynes.) And he was born under the obedience of payng this duty. This may haply be said not to be his own act: Therefore after at full yeares, then also, though He might have pleaded exemption (as He telleth S. Peter) yet payed He His Stater; though not due, yet to avoid the offence of refusing to pay to Cesar, Conditor Cæsaris censum solvit Cæsari: Seeing then, Cesar's Creator paid Cesar his due, will any deny to do it; Especially seeing He paid Cesar his due: yea, even then, when Cesar did not render to GOD His due, but to Idols; and what colour then, can any have to deny it? Luke 2.5. Heb. 7.9, 10. Matth. 17.27.

So have we His Example, whereof we have here His Precept: doing that before us, which He willeth us to do after Him, and calling to us for no more, than He did Himself. And ensuing His steps. His Apostle presseth the same point: telling us, Custom and Tribute are ὀφειλαὶ, debts: shewing us, why they be debts, διὰ τοῦτο, for the good we receive: and willing us therefore to depart with them even propter conscientiam, for very conscience sake. Rom. 13.7.

Let me add but this one. The fore-fathers of these here that move this doubt, they forsook David's House, only because they thought much of payiug the taxe which Salomon had set, and they revolted to Jeroboam: what got they by it? By denying Quæ Cæsaris, they lost Quæ Dei, the true Religion; and besides enthralled themselves to far greater exactions, which the erecting of a new Estate must needs require. Even these, not obeying this advice, this Reddite of our SAVIOUR, but mutining for the Roman tribute after, under Florus and Albinus Deputies for Cesar: besides that they lost their Temple, Sacrifice, and Service, their Quæ Dei; upon this very point, overthrew their estate clean, which to this day they never recovered. Therefore Reddite Quæ Cæsaris, is good counsel, lest Quæ Dei and all go after it.

To conclude then, 1 Cesar and GOD will stand together!; yea, Tiberius Cesar and GOD. 2 To these, so standing, there are certain things due, of duty belonging. 3 These things so due are to be rendred: Not given as Gratuities, but rendred as Debts: And again, with good will to be rendred, not delivered by force: And as willingly, so wisely; Cesar to have his, GOD His; in distinction, not confusion, but each his own. 4. Cesar, such duties: all such duties as pertain to him at large; but as this Text occasioneth, the duty of Tribute and Subsidie. This is the summe.

And if Tiberius Cesar, much more that Prince, that every way CHRIST Himself would commend before Tiberius; whom it were an injurie, once to compare with Tiberius; Above any Cesar of them all: who hath exalted Him, whom Tiberius crucified; and professed Him, with hazard of his estate and life, whom they persecuted in all bloody manner.

Who hath preserved us, in the profession of His holy Name and truth many years, quietly without fear, and peaceably without interruption; and, so may still, many and many times many years more. To this, to such a one, by special due: Reddite more, and more willingly, and more bounteously, than to them. The conclusion is good, the Consequent much more forcible. This, for Quæ Cæsaris now. For Quæ Dei, at some other time, when like Text shall offer like occasion.

KINGS MAJESTIE

AT

HAMPTON COURT,

On Sunday the XXVIII of SEPTEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDCVI.

NUMB. Chap. X. Ver. I, II.

Then GOD ſpake to Moſes, ſaying,

Make thee two Trumpets of ſilver, of one whole piece ſhalt thou make them. And thou ſhalt have them (or they ſhall be for thee to Aſſemble, or call together) the Congregation, and to remove the Camp.

חיולך למקרא העוה

A Grant:

From God.

AMong divers and ſundry Commiſſions granted in the Law, for the benefit and better order of GOD'S people: this (which, I have read) is one. Given (as we ſee) per Ipſum DEUM by GOD Himſelf: and that vivæ vocis Oraculo, by expreſſe warrant from His own mouth, Then GOD ſpake to Moſes, ſaying,

Of the power of calling Aſſemblies.

The Grant of this power, a matter of importance.

Chap. 25. 1.

And it is a grant of the Right and Power of the Trumpets, and with them, of aſſembling the people of GOD. A Right and Power not to be lightly accounted of, or to be heard of with ſleight attention: It is a matter of great weight and conſequence, the calling of Aſſemblies.

There is yearly a ſolemn Feaſt holden in memory of it, and that by GOD'S own appointment, no leſſe than of the Paſſeover, or of the Law it ſelf, Even the Feaſt of the trumpets, much about this time of the year, the later Æquinoctial. And GOD appointeth no Feaſt, but in remembrance of ſome ſpecial benefit. It is therefore one of His ſpecial benefits, and high favours vouchſafed them, and to be regarded accordingly.

This

This power hitherto, ever since they came out of Ægypt, and that GOD adopted then for His people, unto this very day and place had GOD kept in His own hands, as to Him alone (of right) properly belonging. For unto this very day and place the people of GOD, as they had assembled many times and oft; so it was ever (they be the very last words of the last Chapter, which serve for an introduction to these of ours) ever, all their meetings and removings were, by immediate warrant from GOD Himself. But here now, GOD no longer intending, thus to warrant them still by special direction from His own self, but to set over this power, once for all: Here He doth it. This is the primatie passing it from GOD, and deriving it to Moses, who was the first that ever held it by force of the Law written. For, to this place they came by the sound of Gods; and from this place they dislodged, by the sound of Moses's Trumpet.

In whose hands this Power was before. Chap. 9. V. 18, 20, 23.

Exod. 19. 13.

And it is a point very considerable, what day and place this was: for it appeareth, they were yet at Sinai, by the 12. ver. yet, at the very Mount of GOD, by the 33. of this Chapter, even then, when this Commission came forth: So that this power is as ancient as the Law. At no other place, nor no other time delivered, than even the Law it self: when the two Tables were given, the two Trumpets were given: and Moses that was made keeper of both the Tables, made likewise keeper of both the Trumpets; Both at Sinai; both at one time: As if there were some near alliance between the Law and Assemblies. And so there is: Assemblies being ever a special meanes to revive the Law (as occasions serve) and to keep it in life. As if the Law it self therefore lacked yet something, and were not perfect and full without them: So, till this grant was passed, they stayed still at Sinai, and so soon as ever this was passed, they presently removed.

The time and place of the Granting.

To entreat then of this Power. The story of the Bible would serve our turn to shew us, who have had the exercise of it in their hands, from time to time, if that were enough. But that is not enough. For, the errours first and last about this point, from hence they seem to grow, that men look not back enough: have not an eye to this, how it was in the beginning, by the very Law of God. Being therefore to search for the Original warrant, by which the Assemblies of Gods people are called, and kept: this place of Numbers is generally agreed to be it: That here, it is first found, and here it is first founded; even in the Law, the best ground for a Power that may be.

Matth. 19. 4.

This the original Grant of it.

In Lege quid scriptum est? quomodo legis? (saith our SAVIOUR) What is written in the Law, how read you there? as if He should say: If it be to be read there, it is well: then must it needs be yielded to: there is no excepting to it then, unless you will except to Law, and Law-giver, to GOD and all. Let us then come to this Commission.

Luke 10. 26.

The points of it be three: First, two trumpets of silver, to be made out of one whole piece, both. Secondly, with these trumpets, the Congregation to be called, and the Camp removed. Thirdly, Moses to make these Trumpets, and being made, to use them to these ends. These three: 1 The Instrument: 2 The End, for which: 3 The Party, to whom.

The Parts of the Grant.

Now (to marshall these in their right order:) 1. The end is to be first: Sapiens semper incipit a fine (saith the Philosopher.) A wise man begins ever at the end: for that (indeed) is Causa Causarum (as Logick teacheth us) the cause of all the causes: the cause that sets them all on working. 2: Then next, the Instrument; which applieth this power to this end. 3. And so last, the Agent, who is to guide the Instrument, and to whom both Instrument and Power is committed.

1. The End, for which this Power is conveyed, is double: as the subject is double, whereon it hath his operation. 1 The Camp, and the 2 Congregation. On either of these, a special act exercised: to remove the Camp: To call together the Congregation: One for Warre, the other for Peace.

That of the Camp, hath no longer use, than while it is warre. GOD forbid that should be long: nay, GOD forbid, it should be at all. The best removing of the Camp, is the removing of it quite and clean away. But if it be not possible, if it lie not in us, to have peace with all men, if warre must be, here is order for it. But, the calling of the Congregation, that is it: that is to continue, and therefore, that, which we deal with.

Rom. 12. 18.

The calling of the Congregation (as in the two next verses) either in whole, or in part: either of all the Tribes, or but of the chief and principal men in them. A power for both these. And (in a word) a power general, for calling Assemblies: Assemblies in war: Assemblies in peace: Assemblies, of the whole: Assemblies of each, or any part.

2. This Power, to be executed by Instruments: the Instruments to be Trumpets: two in number: those to be of silver, and both of one entire piece of silver.

3. This Power, and the executing of it by these Instruments, committed to Moses. First, he to have the making of these Trumpets: Fac tibi then, he to have the right to them being made: Et erunt tibi: then, he to use them to call the Congregation, and if need be, to remove the Camp. None to make any Trumpet but he. None to have any Trumpet but he. None to meddle with the calling of the Congregation, or removing the Camp with them but he, or by his leave and appointment.

Wherein as we find the Grant full, so are we further to search and see, whether this Grant took place or no? Whether as these trumpets were made and given to call the Congregation, so the Congregation from time to time, have been called by these trumpets. And so first of the granting this Power to be executed, and then of the executing this Power so granted.

So have we two Subjects: the Camp, and the Congregation. Two Acts: to Assemble, and to Remove. Two Instruments: the two silver Trumpets. Two Powers: to make them, to owe them being made, for the two acts or ends before specified: First for calling the Assembly, and then for dislodging the Camp. And all these committed to Moses. The summe of all is: the establishing in Moses, the Prerogative and Power of calling and dissolving Assemblies about publike affaires.

Then GOD spake to Moses, &c.

Assembling, a motion extraordinary.

IF we begin with the End: the End is Assembling. Assembling, is reduced to Motion. Not to every motion: but to the very chiefest of all; as that which draweth together all: and so at once moveth all. For as in the Soul, when the mind summoneth all the powers and faculties together: Or in the body, when all the sinews joyn their forces together, it is ultimum potentiæ: So in the body politick, when all the Estates are drawn together into one, it is nixus rather than Motus, a main sway, rather than a motion: Or, if a motion, it is Motus magnus, no common and ordinary, but an extraordinary great Motion. Such a motion is Assembling, and such is the nature of it.

Yet necessary.

For the Camp.

For the Congregation.

Yet, even this (great and extraordinary as it is) such and so urgent occasions may, and do daily arise, as very requisite it is, such Meetings there should be: very requisite (I say) both in Warre and in Peace, both for the Camp and for the Congregation. The ground whereof seemeth to be; that, power dispersed may do many things: but to do some, it must be united. United in consultation: For, that which one eye cannot discern, many may. United in Action: For, many hands may discharge that by parts, which in whole, were too troublesome for any. But Action is more proper to Warre: that is the Assembly of Fortitude: And Consultation rather for Peace; that is the Assembly of Prudence. And in Peace, chiefly, for making of Lawes: For that every man is more willing to submit himself to that, whereof all do agree. The whole Camp, then, when it is assembled, will be the more surely fortified: And, the whole Congregation, when it is assembled, will be the more surely advised. And, hereby it cometh to passe, that there ever hath, and ever will be, great use of calling Assemblies.

a Especially for this land of Britain. Nec aliud adversus validissimas gentes, pro nobis utilius, quam quod in commune non consulunt. Ravus ad propugnandum commune periculum convenitus. Ita dum singuli pugnant, universi vincuntur. In vita Agric.

Let me add yet one thing further, to bring it home to our selves. There is no people under heaven may better speak for the use of Assemblies, than we: There was nothing that did our Ancestors the Britains more hurt (saith Tasitus [a] of them, nothing that turned them to greater prejudice, than this one, That they met not, they consulted not in common: but every man ran a course by himself of his own head: And, this was the greatest advantage the Roman had of them: they were not so wise, as to know, what good there was in publike Conventions. Therefore, great use of Assemblies: may we say of all others.

b Necessary for the Church. De vita Constantini, lib. 3. cap. 6.

Now if they be needfull for the Camp, and for the Congregation, as it is a Civil body; I doubt not, but I may add, also, every way as needfull for the Congregation properly so called (that is) the Church. [b] The Church hath her warres to fight: The Church hath her Lawes to make.

Warres, with heresies; wherein experience teacheth us, it is matter of lesse difficulty to raze a good Fort, than to cast down a strong imagination; and more easie to drive out of the Field a good Army of men, than to chase out of mens mindes a heap of fond opinions, having once taken head. Now, heresies have ever been best put to flight by the Churches Assemblies (that is) Councels, as it were by the Armies of GOD'S Angels (as Eusebius calleth them:) yea, it is well known, some heresies could never be throughly mastered or conquered, but so.

Then for the Churches Lawes (which we call Canons and Rules) made to restrain or redresse abuses, they have alwayes likewise been made at her Assemblies in Councels, and not elsewhere. So that, as requisite are Assemblies for the Congregation, in this sense, as in any other: By this then that hath been said it appeareth, that GOD'S Fac tibi here is no more than needs; but that meet it is, the Trumpets be put to making. And so I passe over the Instrument, which is the second part.

2 Instruments.

Trumpets.

Assembling (we said) is reduced to motion. Motion is a work of Power. Power is executed Organicè (that is) by Instrument: So, an Instrument we must have, wherewithall to stir up, or to begin this Motion.

1 Cor. 15. 52

1. That Instrument to be the Trumpet. It is the sound that GOD Himself made choice of, to use at the publishing or proclaiming His Law, and the same sound He will have continued, and used still, for Assemblies, which are (as hath been said) special supporters of His Law. And the very same He will use too, at the last when He will take account of the keeping or breaking of it; which shall be done, in Tuba novissima, by the sound of the last Trumpet. And He holden on, or continueth one and the same Instrument, to shew, it is one and the same Power, that con-continueth ſtill: That, whether an Angel blow it, as at Sinai; or whether Moſes, as ever after! it is one ſound, even GOD'S ſound, GOD'S voyce, we have in both.

2. They are to be twain, for the two Aſſemblies, that follow in the next Verſes; Either, of the whole Tribes Coagmentative: or of the chief and choice perſons of them only, Repræſentative. And for the two Tables, alſo. For, even this very month, the firſt day, they are uſed to a civil end: the tenth day to a Holy, for the day of expiation: Of which this later belongeth to the firſt: that former to the ſecond Table. Two.

3. They are to be of ſilver, (not to ſeek after ſpeculations) only, for the Metals ſake, which hath the ſhrilleſt and cleareſt ſound of all others. 3 Of ſilver.

4. They are to be of one whole piece both of them, not of two diverſe: and that muſt needs have a meaning: it cannot be for nothing. For, unleſſe it were for ſome meaning, what skilled it elſe, though they had been made of two ſeveral plates? but only to ſhew, that both Aſſemblies are unius juris, both of one and the ſame right: as the Trumpets are wrought, and beaten out, both of one entire piece of Bullion. 4 Of one entire piece.

3. But it will be to ſmall purpoſe, to ſtand much upon the Inſtrument: I make way therefore to the third point; how they ſhall be beſtowed, who ſhall have the dealing with them: For on them depend, and with them goeth the Power of calling Aſſemblies.

For, to whom theſe Trumpets, to whom this Power was granted, to call the Congregation: And then, whether the Congregation were ever after ſo called; by this Power, and theſe Trumpets. To whom committed.

1. Where firſt, it will be ſoon agreed (I truſt) that every body muſt not be allowed to be a maker of Trumpets: nor when they be made, that they hang, where who that liſt may blow them: (that is) that every man, hand over-head is not to be in caſe, to draw multitudes together: There will be (ſaith Saint Luke) Turbatio non minima, no ſmall ado, if that may be ſuffered. If Demetrius getting together his fellow craftsmen, they may of their own heads, ruſh into the common Hall, and there keep a ſhouting and crying two houres together; not knowing moſt of them, why they came thither, and yet thither they came. There is not ſo much good, in publike meetings, but there is thrice as much hurt, in ſuch as this; No commonwealth, no not Popular Eſtates could ever endure them. Nay, πάντα χὴ τάξιν (ſay both Scripture and Nature) Let all be done in order: let us have ἔννομον ἐκκλησίαν, Lawfull orderly Aſſemblies, or elſe none at all. Away then with this confuſion, (to begin with:) away with Demetrius's Aſſemblies. Not, to all. Acts 19. 13.

To avoid then this confuſion, ſome muſt have this Power, for, and in the name of the reſt. Shall it be one, or more? (for that is next.) Nay, but one (ſaith GOD) in ſaying, Tibi. Where I wiſh you mark this: That as at the firſt He took this Power into His own hands, and called them ſtill together Himſelf: So here, He deriveth this Power immediately from Himſelf, unto one: without firſt ſetling it, in any body collective at all. But ſome. Some, not many, but one.

It is from our purpoſe to enter the queſtion, whether the Power were in the whole body originally? ſeeing though it were, it is now by the poſitive ordinance of GOD otherwiſe diſpoſed. The reaſon may ſeem to be Partly; neceſſity of expedition: The trumpets may need to be blowen ſometimes, ſuddenly, ſooner, than divers can well meet, and agree upon it too. Partly, avoiding of diſtraction: The two Trumpets may be blowen, two divers wayes, if they be in two hands: and ſo ſhall the Trumpet give an uncertain ſound (1 Cor. 14. 8.) and how ſhall the Congregation know, whether to Aſſemble? Nay (a worſe matter yet than all that) ſo may we have Aſſembly againſt Aſſembly: and rather than ſo, better no Aſſembly at all.

Therefore as GOD would have them, both made of one piece: ſo will He have them both made over to one Perſon: for, tibi implieth one. Who is that one? It is to Moſes GOD ſpeaketh, to Him is this Tibi directed: Him, doth GOD nominate, and of his Perſon make choice, firſt, to make theſe trumpets. No man to make, no man to have the hammering of any trumpet, but he. 1 That one Moſes. Moſes to be maker of them.

And there is no queſtion, but for Aaron, and his ſonnes the Prieſts: they are to call the Levites, to call the people together to their Aſſemblies: How ſhall they warn them together, unleſſe they may make a trumpet too? But if there be any queſtion about this, GOD'S proceedings here will put all out of queſtion. For, to whom giveth He this charge? Not to Aaron is this ſpoken; but to Moſes: Aaron receiveth no charge to make any trumpet: Never a fac tibi, to him; neither in this, nor in any other place. To Moſes is this charge given. And to Moſes: Not, Make thee one (one for ſecular affaires; that, they would allow him) but Fac tibi duas: Make thee two, make both. וְתוֹרֹלָם: And owner of them.

2 Well, the making is not it. One may make, and another may have: Sic vos non vobis: You know the old Verſe. When they be made and done, then who ſhall owe them? It is expreſſed that, too; Et erunt tibi: They ſhall be for thee. They ſhall be, not one for thee, and another for Aaron: but Erunt tibi, they ſhall be both for thee: they ſhall be both thine. A third if they can find, they may lay claim to that; but both theſe are for Moſes.

We have then the delivery of them to Moſes, to make, which is a kind of ſeizen, or a Ceremony inveſting him with the right of them. We have beſide, plain words, to lead their poſſeſſion; and thoſe words operative, Erunt tibi. That as none to make them: ſo none to own them being made, but Moſes. And what would we have more to ſhew us, Cujus ſunt tubæ, whoſe the trumpets be; or whoſe is the right of calling Aſſemblies? It is Moſes certainly, and he by vertue of theſe, ſtands ſeized of it.

That power to continue after Moſes.

To go yet further: But was not all this to Moſes, for his time only; and as it begun in him, ſo to take end with him? Was it not one of theſe ſame Privilegia Perſonalia, quæ non tranſeuntur in exemplum; A priviledge peculiar to him, and ſo no preſident to be made of it? No, for if you look but a little forward (to the VIII. Verſe following) there you ſhall ſee, that this Power which GOD here conveigheth; this Law of the ſilver trumpets, is a Law to laſt for ever; even throughout all their generations, not that generation only. And there is great reaſon it ſhould be ſo, that ſeeing the Uſe ſhould never ceaſe, the Power likewiſe ſhould never determine.

Moſes received it as chief Magiſtrate.

Being then not to determine, but to continue, it muſt deſcend to thoſe that hold Moſes's place. I demand then, what place did Moſes hold? Sure it is, that Aaron was now the High Prieſt, annointed and fully inveſted in all the rights of it, ever ſince the eighth chapter of the laſt Book. Moſes had in him now, no other Right, but that of the chief Magiſtrate. Therefore as in that Right (and no other) he received and held them: So, he was made Cuſtos utriuſque Tabulæ: So, he is made Cuſtos utriuſque Tubæ. But who can tell us better than he himſelf, in what right he held them? He doth it in the third Verſe of Deut. XXXIII. (I read it which way you will:) Erat in Iiſhrune Rex, or, in rectiſſimo Rex, or, in rectitudine Rex, or, in recto Regis, dum congregaret Principes populi, & Tribus Iſrael: All come to this; that, though in ſtrict propriety of ſpeech, Moſes were no King, yet in this, he was in rectitudine Rex, or in recto Regis, (that is) in this, had (as we ſay) Jus Regale, that he might and did aſſemble the Tribes and chief men of the Tribes, at his pleaſure. Herein he was, Rex in rectitudine. For this was rectitudo Regis, A power Regal. And ſo it was holden in Ægypt before Moſes, even in the Law of Nature: that without Pharaoh, no man might lift up hand or foot in all the Land of Ægypt (ſuppoſe, to no publike or principal motion:) And ſo hath it been holden in all Nations, as a ſpecial Power belonging to Dominion. Which maketh it ſeem ſtrange, that thoſe men, which in no cauſe are ſo fervent as when they plead, that Church-men ſhould not κυριεύειν, that is, have Dominion; do yet hold this Power, which hath ever been reputed moſt proper to Dominion, ſhould belong to none, but to them only. Our SAVIOUR CHRIST'S Vos autem non ſic, may (I am ſure) be ſaid to them here in a truer ſenſe, than as they commonly uſe to apply it.

The chiefe Magiſtrate to ſucceed in it.

To conclude then this point, if Moſes as in the right of chief Magiſtrate held this power, it was from him to deſcend to the chief Magiſtrates after him over the people of GOD, and they to ſucceed him, as in his place, ſo in his right, it being by GOD Himſelf ſetled in Moſes and annexed to this place, lege perpetua, by an eſtate indefeizible, by a perpetual Law, throughout all their generations. Therefore ever after by GOD'S expreſſe order, from year to year, every year on the firſt day of the ſeventh moneth,, were they blowen by Moſes firſt, and after by them that held his place, and the Feaſt of the Trumpets ſolemnly holden, and put them in mind of the benefit thereby coming to them, ſo withall to keep alive and freſh ſtill in the knowledge of all, that this power belonged to their place, that ſo none might ever be ignorant, to whom it did of right appertain, to call Aſſemblies.

Aarons Aſſemblies, how called.

Verſe 10.

And how then ſhall Aaron's Aſſemblies be called? with what Trumpet, they? God Himſelf hath provided for that in the X. Verſe following, that with no other than theſe. (There is in all the Law, no order for calling an Aſſembly, to what end, or for what cauſe ſoever, but this, and only this: No order for making any third trumpet: Under theſe two therefore are all compriz-ed.) This order there God taketh, that Moſes ſhall permit Aaron's ſonnes to have the uſe of theſe trumpets. But the uſe, not the property. They muſt take them from Moſes, as (in the XXXI. chapter of this Book) Phineas doth: But Erunt tibi (Gods own words, Erunt tibi) muſt ſtill be remembred: His they be, for all that: Moſes the owner ſtill, the right remaines in him: their ſounding of them deprive not him of his intereſt, alter not the property: Erunt tibi, muſt ſtill be true, that right muſt ſtill be preſerved. It may be, if we communicate with fleſh and blood, we may think it more convenient (as ſome do) that GOD had delivered Moſes and Aaron either of them one. But when we ſee Gods will by GOD'S Word what it is, that Moſes is to have them both: we will let that paſſe as a Revelation of fleſh and blood, and think that, which God thinketh, to be moſt convenient.

Numb. 31. 6.

The two duties.

Now then, if the trumpet belong to Moſes; and that to this end, that with them he may call the Congregation, theſe two things do follow: Firſt, that if he call; the Congregation muſt not refuſe to come: Secondly, that unleſſe he call they muſt not aſſemble of their own heads, but keep their places. Briefly thus: the Congregation muſt come when it is called: and it muſt be called yer it come. Theſe are the two duties we owe to the two trumpets, and both theſe have Gods people ever duly performed.

And yet not ſo, but that this right had been called in queſtion, yea, even, in Moſes's own time, (that we marvel not, if it be ſo, now;) and both theſe duties denied him, even by thoſe who were alive and preſent then, when God gave him the trumpets. But mark by whom, and what became of them.

To come when he ybe called.

The firſt duty is, to come when they be called: and this was denied (in the XVI. chapter following, Ver. 12.) by Core, Dathan, and their crew: Moſes ſounded his trumpet, ſent to call them: they anſwered flatly (and that not once, but once and again,) Non veniemus, they would not come, nor once ſtir for him or his trumpet, they. A plain contradiction indeed: neither is there in all that chapter any contradiction veri nominis, true and properly ſo to be called, but only that. You know what became of them; they went quick to hell for it, and wo be to them, even under

under the Gospel (saith Saint Jude) that perish in the same Contradiction, the Contradiction of Core.

The second duty is, to be called yer they come: this likewise denied, even Moses himself; (that they in his place may not think strange of it) in the XX. Chapter of this very Book. Water waxing scant, a company of them grew mutinous, and in a tumultuous manner, without any sound of the Trumpet, assembled of themselves. But these are branded too: the water they got, is called the water of Meriba: and what followed you know; None of them that drank of it, came into the land of Promise. God swore, they should not enter into His Rest.

Jude 11.

2 To be called yer they come.

Chap. 20. 13.

Now, as both these are bad; so of the twain, this later is the worse. The former (that came not, being called) do but sit still, as if they were somewhat thick of hearing: But the later that come, being not called; either, they make themselves a trumpet, without ever a Vae tibi: or else they offer to wring Moses's trumpet out of his hands, and take it into their own. Take heed of this later: it is said there, to be adversus Mosen, even against Moses himself. It is the very next fore runner to it: it pricks fast upon it. For they that meet, against Moses will, when they have once throughly learned that lesson, will quickly perhaps grow capable of another, even to meet against Moses himself, as they did, Periclitamur argui seditionis (saith the Town-Clark) We have done more than we can well answer: We may be indicted of treason, for this dayes work, for coming together without a trumpet; and yet it was for Diana, that is for a matter of Religion.

Called, and come not. Came uncalled.

Act. 19. 40.

You see then whose the Right is, and what the duties be to it, and in whose steps they tread, that deny them. Sure, they have been baptised, or made to drink of the same water (the water of Meriba,) that ever shall offer to do the like, to draw together without Moses Call.

And now to our Saviour CHRIST's question: In the Law how is it written? How read you? Our answer is: There it is thus written, and thus we read: that Moses hath the Right of the trumpets: that they to go over with him and his Successours: and that to them belongeth the power of calling the publike Assemblies.

This is the Law of God; and that no judicial Law, peculiar to that People alone, but agreeable to the Law of Nature and Nations: (two Lawes of force thorow the whole world.) For even in the little Empire of the body natural, Principium motus, the beginning of all motion, is in, and from the head. There, all the knots; or (as they call them) all the conjugations of sinewes have their head, by which all the body is moved. And as the Law to Nature, by secret instinct by the light of the Creation annexeth the organ of the chiefest part: even so doth the Law of Nations, by the light of Reason, to the chiefest Person: And both fall just with the Law here written where (but Erunt tibi) the same organ or power is committed to Moses, the principal Person, in that Common-wealth. The Law of Nations in this point (both before the Law written, and since, where the Law written was not known) might easily appear, if time would suffer, both in their general order for conventions so to be called; and in their general opposing to all conventicles called otherwise.

Agreeable to the Law of Nature.

To the Law of Nations.

Verily, the Heathen lawes made all such Assemblies unlawfull, which the highest authority did not cause to meet: yea, though they were ἱερῶν ὀργίων ἕνεκα, say Solons Lawes: yea, though sub pratextu Religionis, say the Roman Lawes. Neither did the Christian Emperours think good, to abate any thing of that Right. Nay, they took more streight order: For, besides the exiling of the person, which was the Law before they proscribed the place; where, under pretence of Religion, any such meeting should be. But I let them passe, and stand only on the written Law, the Law of God.

We have Law then for us, That Moses is ever to call the Congregation. But though we have Law, Mos vincit Legem; Custom over-ruleth Law. And the custom or practice may go another way; and it is practice that ever best bewrayeth a Power. How then hath the practice gone? It is a necessary question this, and pertinent to the Text it self. For, there is a Power granted: and in vain is that Power that never cometh into act. Came then this Power into acts? It is a Power to call the Congregation together: Were the Congregation called together by it? A grant there is, That Erunt tibi; so it should be; did take place? was it so; Erantne illi? Had he it? Did he enjoy it? Let us look into that another while, what became of this Grant, what place it took. And we shall offend not Moses in so doing. It is his advice, and desire both; that we should enquire into the dayes past, that were before us, and ask, even from one end of heaven to the other: to see how matters have been carried. So that, as our SAVIOUR CHRIST sendeth us to the Law, by His In Lege quid scriptum est? so doth Moses direct us to the use and practice, by His Interroga de diebus antiquis. I do ask then, These trumpets here given, this power to call together the Congregation, how hath it been used? Hath the Congregation been called accordingly, in this, and no other manner? by this, and no other power? It hath (as shall appear:) and I will deal with no Assemblies, but only for matters of Religion.

The practice or use of this power, among the Jewes. Deut. 4. 32.

Of Moses, first there is no question: it is yielded that he called them, and dismissed them. And even so did Josua after him, no lesse than he? and they obeyed him in that Power, no lesse than Moses. And as for that which is objected concerning Moses, that he for a time dealt in matters of the Priests Office, it hath no colour in Josua, and those that succeeded him.

By Moses. Josua. Josh. 1. 17.

The Covenant, and the renewing of the Covenant, are matters meerly ſpiritual; yet in that caſe did Ioſhua (Ioſhua, not Eliazar) aſſemble all the Tribes, Levi and all, to Sichem (*Ioſ.*XXIV) called the Aſſembly at the firſt verſe, diſſolved it at the XXVIII. For if Ioſhua may call, he may diſſolve too: Law, Reaſon, Sence, teach, That cujus eſt nolle, ejus eſt & velle. That calling and diſcharging, belong both to one power. Nay, Demetrius aſſembly, though they had come together diſorderly, yet when the Town-Clark (that ſhould have called them together) did diſcharge them, they added not one fault to another; but went their wayes, every man quietly, Demetrius himſelf: and all: that they are worſe than Demetrius that deny this.

Ioſ.24.18.

But I paſs to the Kings (that eſtate fitteth us better.) There doth David call together the Prieſts and other perſons Eccleſiaſtical, and that even with theſe Trumphets. And for what matters? Secular? Nay, but firſt, when the Ark was to be removed; And again, when the Oeffiers of the Temple were to be ſet in order: things meerly pertaining to Religion? And as he called them, 1 *Chron.*15.4. ſo he diſmiſſed them, 1 *Chron.*16.43.

In all theſe caſes, did all theſe Kings call all theſe Conventions of Prieſts and Levites, for matters of Religion. I inſiſt only on the fact of Ezekias. He was a King, he gave forth his precept for the Prieſts, and all their brethren to aſſemble: Wherefore Ad res Iehovæ, for the affairs of the ſervice of GOD, yea, GOD himſelf. There are fourteen chief men of the Prieſts ſet down there; by name, that by vertue of that precept of the King, came together themſelves, they and their brethren, all, ex præcepto Regis, ad res Iehovæ, by the Kings authority, for matters meerly of the Church. I know not what can be more plain: the Matters, ſpiritual, the perſons aſſembled, ſpiritual: and yet called by the Kings Trumpet.

2 Cron.29.15.

Thus, till the captivity. In the Captivity there we have Mardochei (when he came in a place of Authority) appointing the dayes of Purim, and calling all the Iewes in the Province together to the celebrating of them.

Mardochæus.
Heſt.9.17.

After the Captivity, Nehemiah kept the Trumpet ſtill: and by it, firſt called the Prieſts, to ſhew their right to their places by their Genealogies, and after reduced them alſo to their places again, when they were all ſhrunk away in time of his abſence.

Nehemias.
Nehem.7.14.
Nehem.13.11.

These lead the practice till you come to the Machabees; and there it is but too evident? they profeſs there expreſly to Simeon, made then their Ruler. That it ſhould not be lawfull for any ἐπισυναγωγὰς συναγαγεῖν τινὰ to call any Aſſembly in the land, ἄνευ αὐτοῦ without him. A plain evidence, that ſo had ever gone the courſe of their Government: Elſe how ſhould it come to paſs, that the altering of Religion, is ſtill termed the deed of the King? that his diſpoſition, godly, or otherwiſe, did alwayes accordingly change the publick face of Religion? which thing the Prieſts by themſelves never did, neither could at any time hinder from being done. Had the Prieſts without him, been poſſeſſed of this power of aſſembling, how had any Act concering Religion paſſed without them? In them it had been to ſtop it at any time, if they had (of themſelves) had this power of aſſembling to ſet order in matters of Religion.

The Maccabees.
1 Mac.14.44.

Thus from Moſes to the Macchabees, we ſee in whoſe hands this power was. And what ſhall I ſay more? There was in all Gods people no one religious King, but this power he practiſed: And there was of all Gods Prophets no none, that ever interpoſed any prohibition againſt it.

Would Eſay (ſhall we once imagine) have endured Ezekias, him to call, or the Prieſt to come together, only by his Precept, ad res Jehovæ; and not liſt up his voice like a Trumphet againſt it, if it had not been (in his knowledge) the Kings right, to command, and their duty to obey? Never, certainly.

Eſay 38 2.

What ſhall we ſay then? were all theſe wrong? ſhall we condemn them all? Take heed. In all that Government, GOD hath no other child, but theſe: if we condemn theſe, we condemn the whole generation of his children. Yet to this we are come now, that either we muſt condemn them all, one after another; the Kings, as uſurpers, for taking on them, to uſe more power, than ever orderly they received; and the Prophets, for ſoothers of them, in that their unjuſt claim: Or elſe confeſs, they did no more, than they might; and exceeded not therein, the bounds of their calling. And indeed, that we muſt confeſs; for that is the truth.

Pſal.73.15.

This then may ſerve for the cuſtome of GODS own elect people. But they were Jewes, and we would be loth to Iudaize: and it may be this was one of the clauſes of the Law of Commandements, conſiſting of Ordinances which Chriſt came to abrogate.

Epheſ.2.15.

The practice or uſe of this power among Chriſtians.

I demand therefore, when Chriſt came, how was it then? will the like appear in the Aſſemblies ſince Chriſt? The very like, every way, as conſonant to that of the Old Teſtament, as may be. For Chriſt (*Mat.*18.) giveth a promiſe of his aſſiſtance to ſuch meetings; but ſets nonew order for calling of them, other than had been taken in the old. Therefore the ſame order to be kept ſtill.

A time there was, you know, after CHRIST, when they were infidels: Kings and Kingd omes both.

both. A time there followed, when Kings received Religion; and no ſooner received they it, but they received this power of the Trumpets with it. This to be made manifeſt. 1. By General councels. 2. By National and Provincial Councels; that have been aſſembled. 3. Under Emperors. 4. And under Kings, by the ſpace of many hundred years.

1. And for General Councels, this firſt (to begin with:) that if thoſe Aſſemblies be not rightly called, that by this Power are called, we have loſt all our General Councels at one blow. The Church of CHRIST hath to this day, never a General Councel, Una litura, with one wipe, we daſh them out all: we leave them never a one, no not one. For all that ever hath been, have been thus called and kept. Yea thoſe four firſt, which all Chriſtians have ever had in ſo great reverence, and high eſtimation; not one of them a lawfull Councel, if this new aſſertion take place. This is a perillous inconvenience: yet this we muſt yield to, and more than this, if we ſeek to diſable Aſſemblies, ſo holden. For ſure it is, all the General councels were thus aſſembled, all; all ſeven (for more are not to be reckoned; the eighth was only for a private buſineſs.) The reſt were only of the Weſt Church alone, and ſo not General: The Eaſt and Weſt together, make a General: The Eaſt and Weſt together never met, but in one of thoſe ſeven for publick affairs: unleſs it were once after, in that of Ferrara. In General Councels.

And it is well known, that was in hope of help, on the Eaſt Churches part, which they never had; and ſo the councel never kept, but broken, even as ſoon as it was broken up.

Briefly then to ſurvey theſe ſeven. And I will not herein alledge the reports of Stories (they write things they ſaw not, many times, and ſo frame matters to their own conceipts; and many times are tainted with a partial humour) but only, out of authentical Records in them, and out of the very acts of the councels themſelves beſt able to teſtifie and tell them, by whoſe authority they came together: and it is happy for the Church of Chriſt, there are ſo many of them extant as there are, to guide us to the truth in this point, that ſo the right may appear.

Firſt then, for the great Nicene councel, the firſt General congregation of all that were called in the Chriſtian world: The whole Councel in their Synodical Epiſtle written to the Church of Alexandria, witneſs they were aſſembled (the holy Emperour Conſtantine gathering them together out of divers Cities and Provinces.) The whole letter is extant upon Record in Socrates 1.9. and Theodoret 1.9. Give me leave here to make a little ſtand: For here at this councel, was the pale firſt broken, and the right, (if any ſuch were) here, it went firſt away. At Nice there were then together, three hundred and eighteen Biſhops; totius orbis lumina, (as Victorinus well termeth them) the Lights of the whole world; the chiefeſt and choiceſt men for holineſs, vertue and valour, that the Chriſtian Religion ever had before or ſince: Men that had laid down their lives for the teſtimony of the truth: Did any of them refuſe to come, being called by him, as not called aright? Or coming, was there any of them that did proteſt againſt it? or pleaded the Churches intereſt, to meet of themſelves? Not one. Συναχρσθὲν τῦ θεοφιλεσ. τῦ βασιλέως Κωνσαντίνε Συναγαγόντος ἡμᾶς ἐκ διαφόρων πολέων τε χ ἐπαρχιῶν

What is it then? want of skill, in ſo many famous men, that knew not their own rights? Or want of valour, that knowing it for ſuch, would not ſo much as ſpeak a word for it, but ſit ſtill, and ſay nothing all the while? There were then and there preſent, Spyridion, Paphnutius, Potamon, and divers beſides, (but theſe I name) that had not long before, for their conſtancy, had their right eyes bored out, their right ham-ſtrings, and the ſtrings of their right arm-pits cut in ſunder. Did theſe want courage, think we? Were they become ſo faint-hearted, that they durſt not open their mouth, for their own due?

Verily: that Councel of Nice, (which is, and ever hath been ſo much admired by all Chriſtians,) cannot be excuſed before God or men; if they thus conſpired (all) to betray the Churches right, and ſuffered it, beyond all equity, to be carried away, leaving a dangerous preſident therein, for all councels ever after, to the worlds end. But no ſuch right there was: if there had been, they neither wanted wit to diſcern it, nor courage to claim it. But they knew whoſe the Trumpets were: to whom (Erunt tibi) was ſpoken; And therefore never offered to lay hold on either of them, and ſay, this is ours.

And yet, to ſay the truth, there is no man of reaſon, but will think it reaſonable, if this were the Churches own peculiar, if appropriate unto it (and ſo known to them to be) there ought to have been plain dealing, now at the very firſt councel of all; that if Conſtantine would embrace Religion, he muſt needs reſign up one of his Trumpets, and forbear from thence to meddle with their Aſſemblies. Was there ſo? No ſuch thing. Why was there not? Belike, becauſe none were there, that had ever been preſent at any Aſſembly, holden under perſecution, to know the Churches order and manner of meeting then. Yes, there was Hoſius Biſhop of Cordova, who had held the councel of Elvira in Spain, even in time of perſecution. Hoſius for the Weſt. And for the Eaſt, there was Euſtatius Biſhop of Antioch, had held the like at Ancyra then too: (both the councels yet extant to be ſeen) and theſe two, Preſidents of them. Yet were theſe twain, two that came firſt, and ſat for moſt at the councel of Nice; and neither of them pleaded or knew of any ſuch right: but that their power then ceaſed: and that Conſtantines Trumpet now took place. Sure, if but this firſt councel be well conſidered, it is able to move much. And the example of this firſt, was of great conſequence; for all the reſt followed it; and as this went, ſo went they. And this for the firſt. Conc. Eliberit. Tom. 1 660. Concil. Ancyra. Tom. 1. 446.

For the fourth at Chalcedon, look but upon the very front of the councel, it proclaimeth it ſelf, to be the e aſſembled, Facta eſt Synodus, ex decreto piiſſimorum, & fideliſſimorum Imperatorum, Valentiniani & Martiani. And it is well known, it was firſt called at Nice; and then recalled from thence, and removed to Chalcedon, all wholly by the diſpoſing of the Emperour.

And theſe be all the General. In all which the force of the truth preſenteth it ſelf ſo clearly, that [f] Bellarmine is even dazled with it: For as one dazled, he ſets down divers reaſons, why the Emperors were to call them; in that very place, where he taketh upon him to prove, the Emperours were not to call them.

2. But it may be, General councels have a faſhion by themſelves: Thoſe congregations may be called thus: but National or Provincial (ſuch as ours) how? Even ſo too, and no otherwiſe. Conſtantine began with them firſt, before he proceeded to the General at Nice, His Tractoria, or Writ, is extant to be ſeen in Euſebius. Whereby he called the firſt Provincial councel in France. For ſure, by no Canon could the Biſhop of Syracuſe in Sicily, or Reſtitutus Biſhop of London in Britain, be lawfully ſummoned to the Synode in France, (which they were) but (as it was indeed) by the Emperours Writ only. But this he did at the beginning of his reign; perhaps while he was yet an unperfect Chriſtian. Nay, even firſt and laſt, he did the ſame: as at the beginning he calleth this; ſo in the end of his Reign, the thirtieth year, the year before his death, called he the Councel at Tyre, and from thence removed it to Jeruſalem, and from thence called them to appear before himſelf at Conſtantinople. The Letters are to be ſeen by which they were called, Socr. 1.34. The like after him did [g] Conſtans at Sardis, [h] Valentinian at Lampſacus, [i] Theodotius at Aquileia, [k] Gratian at Theſſalonica.

It is too tedious to go thorow them all: Only for that of Aquileia, thus much. Saint Ambroſe, a man of as much ſpirit, as high a courage, as ever the Church had, and one that ſtood as much as ever did any for the Churches right: he was there preſent, and Preſident both. Thus writeth he from the Councel to the Emperour in his own name, and in the name of all the reſt: juxta Manſuetudinis veſtræ ſtatuta convenimus: Hither we are aſſembled, by the appointment of Your Clemency; and there is no one councel more plain, than that of Saint Ambroſe for this purpoſe. Yea, I add this, (which is a point to be conſidered) that even then, when the Emperours were profeſſed Arrians; even then did the Biſhops acknowledge their power to call Councels: came to them being called: ſued to them, that they might be called. Came to them, as Hoſius to that of [l] Aramine; Liberius, to that of [m] Sirmium, and that of Seleucia, Sued for them, as [n] Liberius to Conſtantius: as [o] Leo to Theodoſius, for the ſecond Epheſine Councel; Innocentius to Arcadius. And ſometimes they ſped, as, Leo; and ſometimes not, as Liberius and Innocentius: and yet when they ſped not, they held themſelves quiet, and never preſumed to draw together of their own heads.

But it may be, this was ſome Imperial power, and that Emperours had in this point more juriſdiction than Kings. Nor that neither: For about five hundred years after Chriſt, when the Empire fell in pieces, and theſe Weſtern parts came into the hands of Kings, thoſe Kings had, held, enjoyed and practiſed the ſame power. 4. Then

4. Then arose there a kind of Empire here in the West, under Charles the Great; and did he not then take the Trumpets as his own, and use them six several times, in calling six several Councels, at [s] Franckford, [t] Arles, [u] Tours, [x] Chalons, [y] Mentz, and [z] Rhemes? And what saith he in them? Rhemes I named last: take that; In conventu more priscorum Imperatorum congregato à piissimo Domino nostro Carolo. That he called that Convention by no other right, than as the manner of the ancient Emperours had been to do. Expressing under one, both what it was: and what the usage had ever been before him.

The like after him did Ludovicus Pius, Lotharius, Ludovicus Balbus, Carolus Calvus, Carolus Crassus, and Arnulphus, at the several councels holden at [a] Aken, [b] Mentz, [c] Meldun, [d] Vormes, [e] Colein, and [f] Tribur; and so he held it till nine hundred years: For about that year (a year or two under or over) was holden the councel of Tribur in Germany, Cum concilium sacrum continuari decrevisset: and [g] Præsidente pio Principe Arnulpho, by the Emperour Arnulphus's decree, himself then President of it.

And if it be excepted: there are of the councels which carry in their acts no mention how they were called: For them we are to understand, that after the decrees of the first Nicene Councel were by Constantines Edict confirmed, wherein (as likewise in the councel at Chalcedon) it was ordered, each Province should yearly hold their Synods twice: but especially, after Justinian had made the decrees of the four first General councels to have the nature and force of Imperial Lawes: (a Law being thus passed from them,) we are to conceive, the Emperours authority was in all afterward, habitually at least: that is, if not (as in the other) by expres and formal consent, yet by way of implied allowance, as passed by a former Grant.

Well, thus far the Trumpet giveth a certain sound. Now after this, there is a great silence in the volumes of the Councels, in a manner for the space of two hundred years, untill the year MCLXXX. or thereabout, when the councel of Lateran was: and then (indeed) the case was altered. By that time had the Bishop of Rome by his skill and practice, got one of the Trumpets away, and carried it with him to Rome: so leaving Princes but one: But, so long they held it.

Tom. 4. 101.
One of the Trumpets gotten away.

Truly, three times so much time as we are allowed, would not serve for this one point of the Councels; but even barely to recite them, and to cite them, they are so many. You remember how Abraham dealt with God for the saving of the five Cities, how he went down from fifty to ten: I might well take a course the other way, and rise from ten to fifty, nay, sixty, nay, seventy, nay eighty, not so few of Councels General, National, Provincial, called by Emperours, by Kings; Emperours of the East, of the West: Kings of Italy, France, Spain, Germany (as before, from Moses to the Maccabees: so here from Constantine to Arnulphus) for so many hundred years together, extant all to be shewed and seen, all clear and evident, all full and forcible for this Power: as it is indeed a cause that laboureth rather of plenty, than penury of proof. And this was the course that of old was well thought of in the Christian world. Thus was the congregation so long called; neither is there yet brought any thing to force us to swarve from the way, wherein so many, and so holy ages have gone before us.

Yes, something: for what say you to the three hundred years before Constantine? How went Assemblies then? Who called them all that while? For divers were holden that while: In Palestine about Easter; At Carthage, about Heretick's Baptism; at Rome, about Novatus; at Antioch; about Paulus Samosatenus. How assembled these?

How in the time of persecution for 300 years before Constantine.

Truly, even as these people here, of the Jewes, did before in Ægypt, under the Tyranny of Pharoah: they were then a Church under persecution, untill Moses was raised up by GOD, a lawfull Magistrate over them. The cases are like for all the world. No Magistrate did assemble them in Egypt. And good reason; they had none to do it. Pharoah (we may be sure) would not offer to do it; not for any conscience (I trust) or fear, to encroach upon the Churches right; but because he hated both Assembly and Congregation, and sought by all means to extinguish both. But this was no bar; but that when Moses arose, authorized by God, and had the Trumpets here, by GOD delivered him, he might take them, keep them, and use them, to that end, for which GOD gave them; to call the congregation: And none then but he could do it, because to none, but him then, was this power conveighed. They could not say to him now, as before one of them did in Ægypt, who made you a commander over us, to call us together? not plead in bar of the trumpets, and say; Nay, we will meet still of our selves, even as we did before in Ægypt: we will still keep our old manner of conventions. No: for GOD had now taken another order; GOD (I say) had now done it: And GOD shall (I trust) be allowed, to translate this power to the principal member of the body, and to dispose of it, as it best pleaseth him.

1 As in Ægypt.
Exod. 2. 14.

The very same case fell out again after, in the captivity of Babylon: and again after that in the persecution under Antiochus: and these three, all are the patterns we have in the Old Testament. As before in Egypt; so, then they had meetings: but they were all by stealth; yet meetings they had. For Moses ceasing, and his right with him, the power devolved to the body, (as is usual in such cases.) But then, when Nehemias after the captivity, and Simeon Maccabeus after the fury of Antiochus were raised them by God; when GOD had set them in Moses place, they might lawfully do, as Moses before had done: and take their silver trumpets into their hands again. So soon as they had a lawfull Governour, the right returned to him straight: And the Congregation, none of them might then plead; Nay, but as he did in Babylon, or as we did

2 As under the captivity.
3 As under Antiochus.

under Antiochus: So, and no otherwise, will we assemble still. No, we see the contrary still. No, we see the contrary rather: Even of themselves, they profess to Simeon plainly: now, they have a lawful Governour, no meeting should from hence forth be in the Land, without him, his privity and permission.

And even as these two Nehemias and Simeon: even by the same right, Constantine, by Moses right, all, all by the Commission here penned. By it, did Constantine resume the trumpet, and enjoy, and exercise the Power of calling the congregation: (For even Moses pattern and practice five sundry times at least doth Eusebius allege in the life of Constantine to justifie his proceedings still by Moses example.) True it is therefore, that before Constantines time, they met together as they durst, and took such order as they could. They must venture it: there was no Moses; they had no trumpet: and if they had, they durst not have blown it. But when Constantine came in place, in Moses place, it was lawfull for him to do as Moses did: and so he did; and they never said to him, Nay, spare your Trumpet: look how we have done hitherto, we will do so even still: meet no otherwise now, than in former times we have by our own agreement. As before it was said, this had been plain dealing: Thus (if rightly they might) they should have done: Did they so? No, but to him they went, as to Moses, for their meetings; at his hands they sought them; without his leave or liking they would not attempt them, Yea, (I dare say) they blessed God from their hearts, that they had lived to see the day, they might now assemble by the sound of the Trumpet.

To conclude this point then. These two times, or estates of the Church are not to be confounded: There is a plain difference between them, and a divers respect to be had of each. If the succession of Magistrates be interrupted, in such case of necessity, the Church of her self maketh supply, because then Gods order ceaseth. But GOD granting a Constantine to them again, GODS former positive order returneth, and the course is to proceed and go on, as before. When the Magistrate and his authority was at any time wanting to the Church, forced she was to deal with her own affairs, within her self: for then was the Church wholly divided from Princes, and they from it. But when this wall of partition is pulled down, shall Moses have no more to do than Pharoah, or Constantine than Nero? Congregations were so called under them: must they be so still under these too? No; no more than their manner of meeting in Ægypt (for all the world like this of the Primitive Church persecuted) was to be a rule, and to over-rule these Trumpets here (in the Text) either GOD forgiving them, or Moses for taking them at his hands. This rather: If ever the Church fall into such bloody times, they must meet as they may, and come together as they can: They have no Moses, no trumpet to call them. The times of Pharaoh and Nero are then their pattern. But if it be so happy as to find the dayes of peace, Moses and Constantine are patterns for the daies of Peace: they have a Moses then; from that time forward they must give ear to the Trumpet. In a word, none can seek to have the Congregation so called (as before Constantine) but they must secretly, and by implication confess, they are a persecuted Church, as that then was, without a Moses, without a Constantine.

The times then before Constantine, are no bar, no kind of impeachment to Constantine's, no more than the times in Ægypt were to Mose's right. And indeed no more they were: for Constantine and his Successours had them, and held them till a thousand years after CHRIST, and then one of them (by what means we all know) was let go by them, or gotten away from them: It was then gotten away and carried to Rome. But that getting, hath hitherto been holden a plain usurping; and usurping (not upon the Congregation, but) upon Princes and their Right; and that they in their own wrong, suffered it to be wrung from them. And why? Because not to Aaron, but to Moses it was said, Et erunt tibi.

The recovery of the Trumpets.

1. To draw to an end, it was then gotten away: and with some ado it was recovered not long since: and what? shall we now let it go, and destroy so soon that which so lately we built again? You may please to remember, there was not long since a Clergy in place, that was wholly ad oppositum, and would never have yielded to reform ought: Nothing they would do, and (in eye of Law) without them, nothing could then be done; they had encroached the power of Assembling into their own hands. How then? how shall we do for an Assembly? Then Erunt tibi, was a good Text: it must needs be meant of the Prince; he had his power, and to him of right it belonged. This was then good Divinity (and what Writer is there extant of those times, but it may be turned to, in him?) and was it good divinity then, and is it now no longer so? Was the King but licenced for a while, to hold this power, till another Clergy were in; and must he then be deprived of it again? Was it then usurped from Princes: and are now Princes usurpers of it themselves? And is this all the difference in the matter of assemblies, and calling of them: that there must be only a change; and instead of a forrain, they shall have a domestical: and instead of one, many: and no remed y now, but one of these two they must needs admit of? Is this now become good divinity? Nay, I trust, if Erunt tibi were once true, it is so still: and if Tibi were then Moses, it is so still. That we will be better advised, and not thus go against our selves, and let truth be no longer truth, then it will serve our turnes.

Now sought to be gotten away
1. By the Presbytery.

2. And this calleth to mind the like dealing of a sort of men, not long since here amongst us. A while they plyed Prince and Parliament, with Admonitions, Supplications, Motions and Petitions. And in them, it was; their duty, their right, to frame all things to their new invented plot And this is so long as any hope blew out of that Coast. But when, that way they saw it would not be, then took they up a new Tenet, straight; they needed neither Magistrate nor Trumpet, they t

The:

The godly among the people might do it of themſelves. For confuſion to the wiſe and mighty: the poor and ſimple muſt take this work in hand, and ſo by this means the trumpet prove their right, in the end: and ſo come by devolution to Demetrius, and the Craftſ-men. Now, if not for love of the Truth, yet for very ſhame of theſe ſhifting abſurdities, let theſe Phantaſies be abandoned: and (that which Gods own mouth hath here ſpoken) let it be for once, and for ever true: That which once we truly held and maintained for truth, let us do ſo ſtill; that we be not like evil ſervants, judged (Ex ore proprio) out of their own mouths.

Let me not over-weary you; let this rather ſuffice. 1. We have done as our Saviour Chriſt willed us, reſorted to the Law, and found what there is written: (The Grant of this power to Moſes, to call the Congregation:) 2. We have followed Moſes's advice; enquired of the dayes before us, even from one end of Heaven to another, and found the practice of this Grant in Moſes's Succeſſours: and the Congregation ſo by them called. It remaineth, that as GOD by His Law, hath taken this order, and His people in former ages have kept this order; that we do ſo too; that we may ſay as GOD ſaith, Erunt tibi, this power pertaineth to Moſes. And that neither with Core we ſay, Non veniemus: Not with Demetrius, run together of our ſelves, and think to carry it away with crying, Great is DIANA. But as we ſee the Power is of GOD: ſo, truly, to acknowledge it, and dutifully to yield it: that ſo they, whoſe it is, may quietly hold it, and laudably uſe it, to His glory that gave it, and their good for whom it was given: Which God Almighty grant, &c. A SERMON

KINGS MAJESTIE

AT

WHITE-HALL

On the XXIV. of MARCH,

Anno Dom. MDCVI.

JUDGES Chap. XVII. Ver. VI.

* Vel, quod rectum videbatur in oculis ſuis.

In Diebus illis non erat Rex in Iſrael; ſed unuſquiſque, * quod ſibi rectum videbatur, hoc faciebat.

In thoſe dayes there was no King in Iſrael; But every man did that, which was good in his own eyes.

THis Chapter (the XVII. of Judges) is the Chapter, which by the courſe of the Kalendar, is proper to this very day. Not as now it is: For now, by reaſon this day, God ſet us a King in Iſrael, it hath a ſelect Service, both of Pſalmes and of Chapters. But by order of the Church-ſervice, this Chapter is for this: and ſo it was this time four yeares (I am ſure;) we all that then heard it, have good cauſe to remember it. And though we have got us a new, it will not be amiſſe, to call our ſelves back to our old Chapter; being this day come hither, to render our thankes even for this very thing, In theſe dayes, it is not with us, as In thoſe dayes, it was with them; but that, to the joy and comfort of us all there is a King in Iſrael.

This, how great a benefit it is, it is not (it may be) the beſt Way ſimply to informe our ſelves, by Non erat Rex. Not ſimply; but ſure to us our nature is, to us I ſay, there is no way better. It is an old obſervation (but experience daily reneweth it) that of Carendo magis quam fruendo: What it is to have, no better way, to make us truly to value, than by feeling a while, how great a plague it is to be without. Our nature ſurely is more ſenſible that way, and never taketh perfect impreſſion of that we enjoy, but by the privation or want; nor underſtandeth throughly (in his diebus eſt) now there is one, but be thoſe (in illis non erat.) And that is our verſe.

Of which, this is the occaſion. The Book of the Judges, and the eſtate of the Judges now growing to an end, the Holy Ghoſt here beginneth to make a paſſage, to the eſtate and Books of of the Kings. To which ſtate, this Chapter (and ſo to the end of the Book) is a preparative, or introduction: to ſhew, that now the time was at hand.

There ſhould be Kings of his Race, GOD firſt told [a] Abraham, by way of promiſe. That thoſe Kings ſhould come of Juda, and the [b] Scepter be his, Jacob foretold, by way of propheſie. The duty of thoſe Kings, againſt the time came, was ſet down by [c] Moſes, by way of proviſion long before. This ſhewed, Kings there ſhould be.

a Gen. 17. 6.
b Gen. 49. 10.
c Deut. 17.

But all things have a time, ſaith [d] Salomon: and time hath a fulneſſe, ſaith [e] Saint Paul. And till that time, it is not only a folly, but a fault, to preſſe things out of ſeaſon: We ſee, offer was twice made to [f] Gedeon, to take it: by [g] Abimelech, to get it: both came to nothing; the time was not yet come. But ſtill, as the time drew near, every thing did co-operate, every thing made way, and gave occaſion, to the purpoſe of GOD.

The ſumme.

And now here, in this Chapter, is ſet down the very firſt occaſion, on which GOD firſt miſſeth Kings: that, for all the Judges, one Micah, a private man of Mount Ephraim, be and his old mother, it took them in the heads, they would have a new Religion by themſelves; and that was plain Idolatry: and up with an Idol they went. And becauſe they lacked a Prieſt, it came into Micah's head, to give Orders; and ſoo he did. Why, could he be ſuffered? It was, and then cometh in this Verſe, This was all for want of a King. And when he had done with this; he goeth to another; and when with that, to a third, diſorder upon diſorder. And ſtill at the end of every one this cometh in, All theſe, becauſe there was no King. Which all is nothing elſe, but a Preparative againſt the time came, that God ſhould give Kings: that they might with joy receive that his gift, and with thanks celebrate it, from year to year; do as we do now. And this is the Summe.

Verſe 2.
Verſe 5.
Chap. 17. 1. 22. 25. 1. 19.

The diviſion.

Three points there are in it. Two are ad oculum apparent, the third by neceſſary inference. 1. The want of a King. 2. For want of a King, what miſchief enſued; Every man did what he thought good: this in general. 3. And thirdly, Every man, but namely Micah; he went up with Idols. For, Micahs fact it was, begat this Verſe, and ſo of neceſſity falleth into it. Thoſe two both general and particular diſorder, are linked to the firſt, as to the efficient cauſe, or rather deficient. For, evil it is, & malum non habet efficientem, ſed deficientem cauſam; Evil hath a deficient, but no efficient cauſe. For the want of ſome notable good (as here, a King) is the cauſe of ſome notorious evil; as greater evil cannot poſſibly come to a people, than to be in this caſe, every one to do what he liſts.

For the handling of theſe, though in nature the cauſe be firſt (and ſo ſtandeth it ever) to us, the effect firſt offereth it ſelf; and through it (as through the veil) we enter into the cauſe; and ſo, erunt noviſſimi primi, the laſt ſhall be firſt. 1. Firſt then, of Fecit quiſque. 2. And then, of Nonerat Rex.

In the former of theſe we have two parts: 1 The Eye, rectum in oculis. 2 The Hand, Fecit quiſque: 3 And then together, that what ſeemed to the eye, the hand did; and that was miſchief enough. I.

In the latter likewiſe three. 1 There was no King (in oppoſition to other eſtates: they had Judges and Prieſts, but there was no King.) 2 No King in Iſrael, with reference to other Nations. Not in Canaan, nor in Edom; but not in Iſrael: Even there, it is a want, to want a King. 3 And then out of theſe, Quid faciat nobis Rex, what a King hath to perform. To repreſſe all inſolencies, not only in general; but particularly this of Micah. Where will fall in, that the good or evil eſtate of Religion doth much depend, on the having, or Not having a King. For it is as if he ſhould ſay; Had there been a King, this of Micah had never been endured. Now becauſe there was not; Religion firſt; and after it, all went to wrack. II.

And laſt, we ſhall ſee, how farre all this doth touch us, in matter of our bounden duty of thanks to GOD, for this day. III.

I
Of the effect: fecit quisque, &c.

IN Those dayes, when, &c. What dayes were those: were they good or evil dayes? And this whole Verse, is set down by way of liking, or Complaint. At the first one would think, that it were a merry world, if every one might do what he listed; that there were no harm in the world: they be fair words all. Right, and doing right, and the eye, the faireſt member, not an evil word amongſt them?

But yet ſure, thoſe dayes were evil. This a complaint. Quaſi ingemiſcit ſuper hac Scriptura, the Scripture doth (as it were) fetch a deep ſigh, ſo oft as it repeateth this verſe, and ſaith thus in effect: Tanta mala conciliat non habere Regem, ſo much miſchief cometh there in Iſrael, or any where, where there is no King (ſaith Theodoret.)

Quod rectum in oculis. The eye.

To let you ſee then, what a monſter lurketh under theſe ſmooth terms doing that which is right in our eyes. Two parts there be: 1 the Eye, 2 the Hand. To begin with the eye, and that which is right in the eye. There began all evil, in the firſt tentation: even from this perſwaſion, They ſhould need no direction from GOD, or from any; their own eye ſhould be their director to, what was right, they ſhould do but what was right in their own eyes.

Three evils in it.
1 Quod in oculis.

Three evils are in it. It is not ſafe, to commit the judgement of what is right to the eye: and yet (I know) it is our ſureſt ſenſe, as that which apprehendeth greateſt variety of differences. But I know withall, the Optikes (the Maſters of that faculty) reckon up twenty ſeveral wayes, all which it may be, and is deceived. The Object full of deceipt: things are not as they ſeem. The Medium is not evenly diſpoſed. The Organ it ſelf hath his ſuffuſions. Take but one: that of the Oare in the water. Though the Oare be ſtraight, yet if the eye be judge, it ſeemeth bowed. And, if that which is right, may ſeem crooked; that which is crooked, may ſeem right: So, the eye, no competent judge. The Rule is the judge of right: If it touch the Rule, and runne even with it, it is right, if it vary from the Rule, let it ſeem to the eye as it will, it is awry. GOD ſaw, this was not good: an expreſſe countermand we have from Him in Deuteronomie; You ſhall not do every man, that which is right in his eyes: that is, you ſhall have a ſurer Rule of right, than your eyes.

Deut. 12. 18.

2 Quod quiſq;

But admit, we will make the eye the judge, yet (I hope) not Quiſque, not Every mans eye, that were too much. Many weak and dimme eyes there be, many goggle, and miſ-ſet, many little better than blind: ſhall all, and every of theſe be allowed, to define what is right? Some, it may be (perhaps, the Eagles: but ſhall the Owle and all? I trow not. Many miſhapen kindes of right ſhall we have, if that may be ſuffered; yea, otherwhile, divers of them contrary one to the other.

3 Quod in ſuis.

To go yet further. Say we would allow every eye his priviledge; (it were great folly to do it, but ſay we ſhould? if we ſhould allow it every one, yet not every one In ſuis. Not his own eye, to direct his own doings, or (as we ſay) to ſit Judge in his own right. No not the Eagle, not the beſt eye to be allowed to right it ſelf. The Judge himſelf cometh down from the Bench, when his own right is in hearing. We all know, Self-love, what a thing it is, how it dazleth the ſight; how every thing appeareth right and good, that appeareth thorow thoſe Spectacles. Therefore, 1 Not right, by the eye: 2 At leaſt, not every mans eye. 3 Nay, not any mans right, but by his own eye.

We ſhall never ſee this ſo well in the general, as if we look in ſome few examples upon it, In individuo. And that can we no where better, than in this Chapter, and thoſe that follow it to the end of the Book. They be nothing elſe, but a Commentary at large upon theſe words, Right in every mans eyes, &c.

1. What ſay you to making and worſhipping a graven Image. Lay it to the Rule: the Rule is, Non facies, non adorabis: then it is crooked and nought. Yet, to Micha's eyes, and his mother, a goodly graven image ſheweth fair and well.

Exod. 20. 4, 5.

2. Go to the next chapter. What ſay you of Burglary, robbing, and rifling of houſes; yea, whole Cities, of harmleſſe poor people, and cutting all their throats? Fie upon it, it is crooked. Put it to the men of Dan, they ſaw nothing but it was right enough.

3. Go to the next to that. How think you by raviſhing of women, and that to death? How? away with that: Let it not be once named. No man will think that right. Yes, they of Gibeah (in the XIX. Chapter) did, and ſtood to it to maintain it. You ſee a good Gloſſe of this Text. Upon the matter, there are no worſe things in the world than theſe were: if theſe ſeemed ſtraight, there is nothing but will ſeem ſo to the eye. There is no truſting in oculis.

Fecit quiſque: The hand.

But this is not all. I now paſſe to the next point; Here is a Hand too, Fecit quiſque. Fecit is but one word; but there is more in this one, than in all the former. For, here at this, breaketh in the whole Sea of confuſion, when the hand followeth the eye, and men proceed to do as lewdly, as they ſee perverſly. And ſure, the hand will follow the eye, and men do as it ſeemeth right, to them, be it never ſo abſurd that ſo ſeemeth. To die for it; Eve, if her eye like it, her hand will have it: and Eves children, that have no other guide but their eye, if their eye

rove at it, their hand will reach at it: there is no parting them. Therefore, if a bad eye light upon an hand that hath ſtrength, and there be not Rex, or the ſtronger barre, it will be done. You may ſee it in all the former: 1. Micah liked an Idol well; Micah had a good purſe; he told out two hundred ſicles, and ſo up went the Idol. 2. The men of Dan liked well of ſpoyling: they were well appointed; their ſwords were ſharp; Fecerunt, they did it. 3. They of Gibeah: to their luſt, Rape ſeemed a ſmall matter: they were a multitude, no reſiſting them; and ſo they committed that abominable villany.

By this time we ſee, what a maſſe of miſchief there is in theſe few words. For ſure, if theſe all ſeemed right; and ſo ſeeming were done; Then are we come to quidlibet a quolibet, any man do any thing; which is the next door to confuſion, nay confuſion it ſelf. For ſo, no mans ſoul ſhall be ſafe, if idolatry go up. Alaſs, what talk we of the ſoul! they have leaſt ſenſe of it, talk to them of that they have feeling. No mans goods, or wife, or life in ſafety, if this may go on thus. If robbery, rape and murther be right, what is wrong?

See then now, what a woful face of a Common-wealth is here? Idols and murther ſeen and allowed for good: done and practiſed for good. Again, Micah a private man; Gibeah, a City: Dan, a whole Tribe: Tribes, Cities, Families, all out of courſe. Out of courſe, in Religion; and not in religion alone, but in moral matters: and ſo, that the like never heard of, no, not among the heathen.

Laſt, this was now not in a corner, but all over the Land. Micah was at Mount Ephraim, in the midſt; Gibeah, was at one end, and Dan at the other. So in the midſt and both ends, all were wrapped in the ſame confuſion.

But what, ſhall this be ſuffered and no remedy ſought? God forbid.

Firſt, the Eye, errour in the eye, is harm enough; and order muſt be taken even for that. For, men do not erre in judgement but with hazard of their ſoules; very requiſite therefore, that men be travelled with, that they may ſee their own blindneſſe. Then, that the counſel be followed (Apoc. 3.) that eye-ſalve be bought of him and applied to the eyes, that that might ſeem to them right, that is ſo indeed. This, if it may be, is beſt. Revel. 3. 18.

But, if they be ſtrongly conceited of their own ſight, and marvel at CHRIST (as they, John 9. 40. What, are we blind trow?) and will not endure any to come near their eyes: if we cannot cure their eyes, what ſhall we not hold their hands neither? Yes, in any wiſe. So long, as they but ſee, though they ſee amiſſe, they hurt none but themſelves; it is but ſuo damno, to their own hurt, (and that is enough, nay too much; it may be as much as their ſoules be worth.) But that is all, if it ſtay there, and go no further than the eye. But, when they ſee amiſſe and that groſſely; What, ſhall their hand be ſuffered to follow their eye? their hand to be as deſperate, in miſ-doing, as their eye dark, in miſtaking, to the detriment of others, and the ſcandall of all? That may not be.

We cannot pull mens eyes out of their heads, nor their opinions neither; but ſhall we not pinion their hands, or bind them to the peace? Yes, whatſoever become of rectum in oculis, order muſt be taken with fecit, or elſe farwell all. Foul Rule we are like to have; even (for all the world) ſuch as was here in Iſrael.

II.

The cauſe, 1. Non erat Rex.

We ſee then the maladie; more than time we ſought out a remedy for it. That ſhall we beſt do, if we know the cauſe. The cauſe is here ſet down; and this is it, Non erat Rex. Is this the cauſe? We would (perhaps) imagine many cauſes beſides, but GOD paſſeth by them all, and layeth it upon none but this, Non erat Rex. And ſeeing he hath aſſigned that only for the cauſe, we will not be wiſer than He, but reſt our ſelves in it. The rather for that, Ex ore inimici we have as much. For theſe miſcreants, whom He ſets on work, to bring Realmes to confuſion, and to root out Religion, that every one may do that, is good in their own eyes: to this point they all drive, Ut ne ſit Rex. Away with the King, that is their only way. Heaven and hell both are agreed, that is the cauſe.

To make ſhort work then: If the cauſe be [There is no King.] Let there be one, that is the remedy: A good King will help all. If it be of abſolute neceſſity, that neither Micah, for all his wealth; nor Dan, for all their forces; nor Gibeah, for all their multitude, do what they liſt: And if the miſs of the Kings were the cauſe, that all this were amiſſe; no better way to ceaſe it, no better way to keep Religion from Idolatry, mens lives and goods in ſafety, their veſſels in honour, than by Kings. No more effectual barre to fecit quiſque quod rectum in oculis, than Rex in Iſrael.

This will better appear, if we take it in ſunder; There was no King. He doth not charge them with a flat Anarchie; that there was no Eſtates, no kind of Government among them: but this only, there was no King. What then? there were Prieſts: would not they ſerve? It ſeemed, they would not. Phineas was to look to their eyes: But, ſomewhere there be ſome ſuch, as Hoſee ſpeakes of, Populus hic quaſi qui contra licit Sacerdoti, This people will look to Phinees eyes: Set their Prieſts and Preachers to ſchool; and not learn of them, but learn them Divinity. The Judges are to look to their hands: But, there are too ſomewhere ſuch, as he ſpeaketh of (Chap. VII. Ver. VII.) Devorabunt judices; ſuch, as (if it take them in the head) will not ſtick to ſet up, and ſwallow down the Judges; ſpecially, inter arma. How then, ſhall we have Military Government? Nay, that is too violent: and if it lie long, the remedy proves as ill, as Oſe 4. 4. Oſe 7. 7.

the disease. To me, a plain evidence: that, though all these were, all these were not perfect. There was one yet missing, that was to do this to better purpose, than yet had been done, and till he were had, they were not where they should be.

This is then GOD'S meanes. We cannot say, His only meanes, in that (we see) there are States that subsist without them. But this we may say, His best meanes. The best (saith the Philosopher) for Order, Peace, Strength, Steadinesse, and proves them all, one by one. But, best (say the Fathers) for that, had there been a better than this, GOD would not last have resolved on this. This is the most perfect, He last brought them to. Hither till they came, He changed their Government: From Josua a Captain, to the Judges: From the Judges, to Eli and Samuel, Priests: But here when He had setled them, He changed no more. And this act of GOD in this change, is enough to shew, where it is not, there is a defect certainly, and such a State we may repute defective.

Besides, you shall observe: Of those three estates, which swayeth most, that in a manner doth over-top the rest, and like a foregrown member depriveth the other of their proportion of growth. The world hath seen it in two already, and shall daily more and more see it in the third. Requisite therefore, there be One over all, that is none of all, but a common Father to all, that may poize and keep them all in æquilibrio; that so all the Estates may be evenly ballanced.

This act then of God in this change, is enough to teach, that this Non erat Rex is a defect certainly; and where there is not one, we may report the estate for deficient. At least, thus farre; that God yet may change it into a more perfect, as He did His own. And again this; that it is not conformed to the Government, simply the most perfect of all, the Government of the whole: when as the inferiour bodies are ruled by the Superiour, so a multitude, by unitie; that is, all by one. Thus farre on these words, There was no King, howsoever other States there were.

2 Non Rex in Israel.

The next point is. No King in Israel. That this is not noted as a defect in grosse, or at large; but even in Israel, Gods own chosen people: It is a want (not in Edom, or Canaan, but) even in Israel too, the want of a King. Truly Israel, being Gods own peculiar, might seem to claim a Prerogative above other Nations, in this, that they had the knowledge of His Lawes, whereby their eyes were lightned, and their hands taught; and so the most likely to spare one: others had not like light: yet this, non obstante their light and their law, and that they which were Gods own people, is no super-sedeas, for having a King. Of which there needeth no reason but this; that a King is a good meanes to keep them Gods Israel. Here, for want of a King, Israel began and was fair onward, to be no longer Israel, but even Babel. When Micah (and by good reason any other as well as he) might set up Religions, and give Orders themselves; as it were in open contempt of God and His Law. So that, the people of God can plead no exemption from this; Since it is His own Ordinance, to make them and keep them the people of God.

Was it thus here, in the Old Testament, and is it not so likewise in the New? Yes, even in the New too. For there, Saint Peter willeth them that they be subject to the King, as to the Soveraign, or most excellent. And Saint Paul goeth further, and expresseth it more strongly, in the style of Parliament, and (like a Law-giver) saith Δοξαϛάτω: Be it enacted, that they submit themselves. And when Saint Paul there, had in his Act said, Omnis anima; that this Act reacheth to every soul, which was enough: yet, because that seemed too general, Saint Peter came after, and goeth to the very point, and saith, Gens sancta must do thus too: that is, there must be a King even in GOD'S Israel. And, what would we more?

1 Pet. 2. 13.

Rom. 13. 1.

Quid faciat, nobis Rex.

I come to the third part. And to what end a King? Quid faciet nobis? What will a King do unto us; It hath been said already: He will look, that every one do not that which is good in his own, and evil in Gods eyes. He will in His general care look to both parts, the eye and the hand. The Eye, that men sinne not blindly, for want of direction. The Hand, that men sinne not with an high hand (that is wilfully) for want of correction. He will, there be good Ophthalmists, with right eye-salve, that the sight may be cured, and things seem as they be, and not be as they seem. At the hardest, Si noluerunt intelligere, but the eye will rove and runne astray, that the hand be bound to the good abearing. That they do it not: or if they do it (as do it they will, yea though there be a King) yet that they may not do it impune; do it, and nothing done to them for it, and scape the punishment due unto it. For, that is the case, when there is no King in Israel. And if, when there is one, that be the case too, where have we been all this while? For if so, Etiam non est Rex, cum est Rex, Then, where there is a King, there is no King; or one in name, but none in deed: Which as it is not good for the State, so neither is it safe for themselves. To this special regard will be had. Non enim frustra (saith Saint Paul) for they bear not the sword in vain.

Rom. 13. 5.

2. That every one do not thus. Every one, but namely (which is the occasion of this Text) that not Mica. For, Mica's fact brought forth this first sight: that they were now come to this passe, that he, or any such as he was, might set up in his house any Religion he would, and no man controul him for it. To look to every one therefore, but specially Mica: and to care for all, but above all, the matter of Religion. Ne quisque videat quod rectum est, there; that every one be not allowed to see visions there: at least, Ne quisque faciat, that see what they list, they be not suffered to set them up: but if the eye will not be rectified, the hand be restrained.

And sure, No where doth the eye more misse, nor the hand swerve, then in this; and therefore fore no where more cauſe to call for a King, than for this. One would think, this were impertinent, and we were free enough from Mica. We are not. Even to this day, do men ſtill caſt images or imaginations (all is one) in the mould of their conceipts, and up they ſet them; at leaſt for their own houſhold to adore. And then, if they can get ſuch a fellow as is hereafter deſcribed, a Levite, for ten ſicles and a ſuit; (or becauſe now the world is harder, ten pound:) they are ſafe; and there they have and hold a Religion by themſelves.

3. For, evident it is by this Text: ſetting up of falſe worſhip, is the cauſe why Kings were miſſed; and the redreſſe of it, the cauſe, why they were placed. The cauſe I ſay, and the firſt cauſe of their placing: and therefore this a part, and a principal part of this charge. I will touch them ſeverally; 1. A part, to look to Mica, and his falſe worſhip. Why, this is matter Eccleſiaſtical? It is ſo, and thereby it appeareth (I think) that Kings have, and are to have a hand in matters of that nature: If Religion were at a fault, becauſe there was no King; and that one there muſt be, to ſet it right again. For, is it once to be imagined, that the cauſe of corrupt Religion is laid on the want of a King; and yet when there is one he ſhould not meddle with it? Rather the conſequence is ſtrong on the other ſide. Mica thus did, becauſe there was then no King: therefore when there is one, he will look better to it, that never a Mica of them all ſhall do the like. Thus it went, when there was no King: after, when there was one, I find again, the not taking away the High places (which were places meerly religious, where the people did ſacrifice) imputed ſtill to the King, as his fault: And yet, ſhall we have nothing to do with high places, or ſacrificing either there or any where elſe?

Very ſtrange it were, that they who are by God Himſelf, by an expreſſe Ego dixi, termed GOD'S, ſhould yet have nothing to do with GOD'S affaires! And no leſſe, that being termed by Eſay, Nutritii, Foſter-Fathers, to whoſe care the Church is committed, to cheriſh and bring up, ſhould yet be forbidden to intermeddle with the Church, in that which is of all foſtering the principal part! Verily, when the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the ſervice that Kings do unto GOD, he doth not only uſe the term of λειτουργὸς (that is) Publike Officer, but διάκονος too (as it were Gods Deacon, or Servitor) by a name peculiar to the Church-Offices: and this he uſeth twice, for one other. It can therefore neither be denied, nor doubted of, in that Idolatry came up by defect of Kings, but that Kings were placed, to pull down Idolatry, and to plant and preſerve the true Service of God. In a word: There is a King in Iſrael, that there may not be a Mica in Iſrael. Pſalm 82. 6. Eſ. 49. 23. Rom. 13. 6, 4.

But this is not all; the Text carrieth us yet further: That it is not only the charge of the King; but the very firſt and chief article in his charge. For, this mark I pray you: that this, is the firſt place in all the Scripture, where; and the firſt cauſe, why Kings were miſſed; this the very firſt occaſion, that drew this complaint from GOD. Being to ſet down the diſorders, that then multiplied: other there were, beſides this, yet, this he beginneth with (not with the outrage of Gibea, or the riot of Dan, but) with Micas idolatry: as that, which he chiefly miſliked, and therefore would have firſt and chiefeſt care to ſee it reformed. This with GOD is firſt; and GOD was not well pleaſed, it was not ſo with them. It is that wherewith GOD upbraideth them (Hoſ. 10.) with their hot taking the matter of Gibea. Why, were they to blame for it, being ſo villanous an act? No indeed, it was ſo good a piece of Juſtice. This only it is, God findeth fault with, that they could be ſo forward and fervent, in the caſe of wrong offered to a woman; and ſo cold and careleſſe, when His worſhip received ſo great a wound, ſo ſenſible of their own wrong, ſo paſt all feeling in His. For when injury was offered one of their Concubines, they cry; The like was never ſeen in Iſrael. They were all up in armes, and upon the point to root out the whole Tribe of Benjamin. But when Idolatry was ſet up, firſt here in an Houſe, after in a whole Tribe, even as it were in open defiance of God and his Law, no man drew a ſword: Nay, no man ſo much as ſpake a word in reproof of it; not cry then, The like was never ſeen in Iſrael. Their fathers were more tender in this point. They, upon the erecting of a thing but like an Altar (but no Altar indeed) were all ready to have bidden battel, till they were ſufficiently ſatisfied, that no ſuch thing was meant. Here there is not a ſhew of an Altar, but (paſt a ſhew) very Idols, an whole houſe full of them, and no man ſaith to Mica ſo much as, What doeſt thou? This is that, He blameth them for, there. This, it, which he taketh in evil part; and ſaith, He will truſt them no longer with his worſhip: He will have one who ſhall look better to his worſhip, than they had done. Hoſ. 10. 8, 9. Judc 19. 30. Joſ. 22. 11.

One, that ſeeing, that was the firſt cauſe, that made God think of ſetting up Kings, will therefore think it his firſt duty, primum & ante omnia, to have regard of that point.

To conclude, if the want of Kings, Kings in Iſrael, be evil (as evil it is, being the cauſe of ſo much evil) it is Gods Will, there ſhould be a remedy for it: That remedy is a King; It is Gods Will therefore, there be Kings: S. Peter ſpeaketh it totidem verbis: this is the Will of God that ye be ſubject to your Kings. 1 Pet. 1. 15.

Then ſecondly, being Evil, it is Gods Will, that Iſrael be not only kept from it at ſometime, but at all. Evil is not to be allowed any, though never ſo ſhort a time; but it agreeth well with His pleaſure, that once and ever, it be kept from Iſrael. Conſequently that there never be a time wherein it may be ſaid, Non erat Rex, That there be not only Kings, but a Succeſſion of Kings: Not only Rex, but ſanguis ſemen, ſtirps Regis; they be all in Scripture. The Blood, 1 King. 11. 14. The Seed, Jeremy 41. 1. The Race, 2 Chron. 22. 10. It is among other, one of the differences of the ſtate of Kings and Judges: and main inconvenience of the ſtate of Judges (and ſo is it of all Elective Kingdomes) the Inter-regna, as we term them; times between the old Judges death and the raſing of a new: in which times, all ran to riot, and much diſorder got head. To the end then, there be no ſuch inconvenience, no Inter-regna at all, not ſo much as a minute of time, wherein it may be ſaid, Non eſt Rex in Iſrael, it agreeth with his will, there be not only Kings, but a Race of Kings; that ſo ſoon as the breath is gone from one, inſtantly it may be reſted in another; that ſo, the good may ever be, and the evil never found in Iſrael.

III. Our duty.

Thus have we gone through the matter of inſtruction; and now come to the matter of our own thanksgiving riſing out of it.

As there cannot be a greater plague to a Land, than to be in that caſe, ſo is there not a higher benefit, that God beſtoweth on any people, to be fairly bleſſed from in it, than for the removing from us ſo many miſchiefs, and for the preſerving to us the oppoſite bleſſings. For freeing us from that miſery, and not only conveighing, but entailing to us and ours, this happineſſe. For this, are we all now met here, in his preſence every man to put in his thanks, into one common ſtock, and ſo all joyntly to offer it up unto God, that; (as this day) ſent us a King in Iſrael.

We come not for this alone to thank him: (yet well might we come for this, if there were none but this:) But there is more beſides: And even ſeven times are we bound, this day to praiſe GOD, for ſo many benefits, and yet go not out of the Text.

1 Our firſt thanks then ſhall be for this firſt, the ground of all the reſt: For a King. This very thing, that there is one: and that this defect Non erat Rex hath not taken hold on us. The ſhout of a King, is a joyfull ſhout, was a true ſaying out of the mouth of a falſe Prophet (Balaam) but forced thereto by GOD. That a joyfull ſhout; and this a wofull cry, Nonne ideo nobis nullus Rex, quia non timemus Dominum? Are we not therefore without any King at all, becauſe we feared not God? And, our fear to God, was not ſuch, but He might juſtly have brought us to that miſerable plight. The more cauſe have we to thank Him, that we have one. And when I ſay one; I mean firſt, have any one. For, be he Nebuchodonozar, yet muſt we pray for him: Or be it Jeroboam, him though GOD gave in His wrath, yet He took away in His fury, the worſe wrath of the twain. Or, be he who he will, to have one, though but ſuch an one, is a matter of Thanksgiving. For, better any, than an Anarchy: Better, any one a King, than every one a King: and every one is more than a King, if he do what he liſts. It calleth to mind the cry of the Beaſts in the Fable, when they were in conſultation, to ſubmit themſelves to the Lion, as to their King. For when it was alleadged; it was like enough he would do they knew not well what, what he liſted which they had cauſe to fear, they all cried Præſtat unum timere quam multos; Better one Lion do ſo, than all the Bears and Wolves and wild beaſts of the forreſt, as before they did. Firſt then, for this; that there is a King.

Numb 23. 21. Hoſ. 10. 3. Jer. 26. 7. Oſe 13. 11.

Secondly, for this: that, a King, not many. For to have many, (is a plague for the peoples ſins.) Not many: Nay, not two, as of late: But now, Rex indeed, one King over all Iſrael. We know, when there were two Kings, one in Juda, and the other in the ten Tribes: two in one territory; it was a maime and a blemiſh both: That there was not Rex, one entire King, but two diverſe Kings (as it were) over two halves of a Countrey. The like imperfection was it, even the dividing of this one Iſland, under two Soveraigns. The reducing of both theſe under one, was promiſed Iſrael, as an high favour. The ſame, to us performed, can be no leſſe: even, that (now) there is a King indeed. Rex, one King: One (and no more) abſolute, entire King over all the Tribes, over all Iſrael. Let this be the Second.

Ezek. 37. 22.

And this our Third: That not only over Iſrael: but (as the words are) in Iſrael. Theſe are two different things: To ſpeak (as the Prophet doth) that, this King is not Aſſur. For this cauſe Aſſur ſhall be your King, is a fearfull threat, GOD uſeth to His people, for their unkindneſſe. To have a meer Alien, one from beyond the water, as Nebuchodonozar was; out of a people, whoſe ſpeech they did not underſtand. One, not in, but extra Iſraelem, that is, over Iſrael, but neither in it, nor of it. That this is not our caſe, as (it is known) ſome would have had it. Therein then, muſt we alſo acknowledge, GOD hath dealt graciouſly with us, ſending us ſuch an one, as, by more than one or two, before this very laſt of all, is come of the Race Royal, and is by due and undoubted right a King, not only over, but in, and of Iſrael. Is not this a Third?

Hoſ. 11. 5.

And ſure, this Fourth. That, as he ſent us not Aſſur a ſtranger: ſo, neither ſent he a Jeroboam. No ſtranger, in birth, he; but one addicted to a ſtrange worſhip; a ſtranger in Religion. (And, it was even Micha's religion juſt: As, Micha's Countrey-man he was; for, both, were of Ephraim.) Who did that which was evil in GOD'S eyes, by doing that, which was good in his own; and ſo, made Iſrael to ſin. Such an one he hath not ſent us; but one that knoweth GOD: doth neither favour Mica, nor Micha's worſhip; ſince that was a principal cauſe, why there is a King in Iſrael, that Micha's Idols might not be ſet up.

3 King. 15. 26.

And then fifthly. As not a Jeroboam favouring Mica, not a Rehoboam neither; who was (indeed) well for his religion, but otherwiſe not able to adviſe himſelf, and ſo ready to be adviſed to the worſe. One, that was full of great words, but ſo faint-hearted, as not able to reſiſt ought: that under him every one did what he would, for all the King. It was (as in another caſe the Prophet ſpeaketh) Rex, Rex, & non eſt Rex. It is otherwiſe, where Princes are intelligent, learned, and (as David was) both religious and wiſe, wiſe as an Angel of God, to diſcern good and evil. Such a King as David, a ſpecial bleſſing: not omnibus data, not given to every people; Nay, many times, not to Iſrael it ſelf. May we not report this for a Fifth?

2 Chro. 10. 14. 2 Chro 13. 17. 2 Sam. 19. 27.

And for a Sixth, this, That not as David neither, though he were both gentle and wiſe, which Rehoboam was not. For, though he were both, yet was he ſo intangled with warres all his time, and forced ſtill by continual effuſion of blood, firſt to recover, and then to maintain his right, as that he was rather Dux, than Rex in Iſrael, a General of an Army, rather than a King: No, but (that which addeth ſtill to the heap of our bleſſings) like Salomon, more happy than his father; as one that procured to his people peace with all the Nations round about. Of him, of ſuch an one as he, ſaith the Queen of Saba, becauſe the Lord thy God loved Iſrael, to eſtabliſh it for ever, therefore hath he ſet thee King over them, to bring them to, and to preſerve them in the happy dayes of peace. That is indeed the right King, to be as Melchiſedech King of Salem, that is, King of peace. To be as the great King of Iſrael, whoſe ſtile is Princeps pacis.

Rehoboam

And laſt of all, which is the compleat perfection of all; that in and by him GOD hath not only ſent us a King, but a Race and ſucceſſion of Kings. A bleſſing yet further, a greater hope, by bleſſing him, and in him us all, with an Iſſue of ſuch hope, and with hope ſtill of more. Who ſhall (we truſt, and pray they may) ſtretch their line to the worlds end: and ever keep this land, from this plague here mentioned; from dayes, whereof it may be ſaid, Non erat Rex in Iſrael Even ſo Lord Jeſus, ſo be it.

And thus ſeventimes a day, praiſe we GOD, for this His ſevenfold goodneſſe. 1 For a King. 2 an abſolute entire King, 3 a King both in, and of Iſrael, 4 a King neither favouring nor favoured by Micah, 5 a King too wiſe to endure, Fecit quiſque quod rectum, 6 a King of peace, 7 a King, who hath already by himſelf, and ſhall for ever by his ſeed, preſerve this Land from the evil dayes, wherein Iſrael was, without a King. There is not any one of theſe ſeven, but we owe our ſpecial thanks for it: But for them all, all that ever we have or can make.

And theſe now we offer and preſent, to the Divine Majeſty, all: and together with our thanks, a commixtion of Prayers, that this bleſſing of a King in Iſrael, and of this King in Iſrael, may to us and our poſterity, long, and many yeares, yea, many times many be continued, and we or they often ſee the renewing of this bleſſed day. Which Almighty GOD grant, &c.

A SERMON

Preached before the

KINGS MAJESTIE

GREENVVICH,

Anno Dom. MDCVII.

JAMES, Chap. I. Ver. XXII.

Eſtote autem factores Verbi, & non auditores tantum, fallentes voſmetipſos.

And be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own ſelves.

N advice of Caution of Saint James, to thoſe that receive the Word ingrafted. And that ſo neceſſary an advice, as without which, all our receiving the Word, or hearing Sermons, is nothing elſe (ſaith he) but a very couſening or deceiving our ſelves.

Which I therefore thought very meet to attend upon the former verſe, ſo lately handled. That, being a commandment to do it: This, a caution to do it well.

There is not any time, but this caution of Saint James is needfull: But, the ſpecial time for it is, when hearing of the Word is grown into ſuch requeſt, as it hath got the ſtart of all the reſt of the parts of GOD'S ſervice. So as, but that ſure we are, the World will not like any one thing long, it might juſtly be feared, leſt this part eating out the reſt ſhould grow indeed the ſole and only worſhip of GOD: which Saint James by no meanes would have it.

Now, if this be a proper Text for ſuch times, our times, are ſuch: This way our Age is affected; now, is the world of Sermons. For proof whereof (as if all Godlineſſe were in in hearing of Sermons) take this very place, the houſe of God, which now you ſee meetly well repleniſhed: Come at any other parts of the Service of GOD (parts, I ſay, of the Service of GOD no leſſe than this) you ſhall find it in a manner deſolate: And, not here only; but, go any whether elſe, ye ſhall find even the like.

And this (to ſpeak with Salomon) is an evil diſeaſe under the Sun, which hath poſſeſſed the world; or (with Saint James) a ſtrong illuſion of our ghoſtly enemy. Who when he cannot draw us wholly from the Service of GOD, maketh us ſingle out ſome one part of it from all the reſt, and to be ſuperſtitiouſly conceited of that part: to make much of it; and to magnifie it highly, nay only; with neglect, and (even as it were) with ſome diſgrace to all beſides it. Eccl. 5. 11.

Of which I may well ſay with Saint James (the 3. Chapter following at the 10. Verſe.) My beloved, theſe things ought not ſo to be: nor they cannot ſo be, without manifeſt impeachment of the wiſdom of GOD, who hath appointed all the reſt, as well as this; and would have us make a conſcience of all the reſt, no leſſe than of this. And, we cannot ſo ſever out one (as we do) but this will follow; that, GOD did well and wiſely in appointing that one, but not ſo in the reſt. For, as for them, they might well have been ſpared: we can ſerve GOD without them, well enough.

Truly, though we cannot turn the ſtream or torrent of the Time (for that men will not hear of ought againſt hearing;) yet, ſure it is, this is utterly a fault: Hearing is not the only thing: And, ſo much we muſt, and do teſtifie unto you, though our witneſſe be not received. John 3. 32. 1 Cor. 6. 7.

But, this is not properly Saint James his only: This rather; that, in hearing when we have made it the only thing, we ſo carry our ſelves, as, when we have heard, and heard only, though we do nothing elſe, but hear and only hear, we think we have done enough; we ſtand diſcharged before GOD; no further thing can be required at our hands. This (ſaith Saint James) is (certainly) an illuſion, or deceiving our ſelves. For, if all other parts be neglected for this; and then, in this ſo great an errour be committed; if all we do, be hearing, and even in that, we be deceived too, what ſhall become of us?

The ſumme.

For remedy (then) of this, doth Saint James give us this Item: See that ye be, &c. In effect, as if he ſhould ſay: You are ſwift to hear, you receive the Word with all gladneſſe, you will not miſſe a Sermon: all this I allow of and like well, But then, See, (that is) do it not blindly: to hear the word, is not a blind mans work: He had need, not only have his eares, but his eyes too, that ſhall do it to purpoſe: Yea, both his eyes; for there is work for both: Videte, quid audiatis, to ſee, what he heares: Videte, quomodo audiatis, to ſee how he heares; In any wiſe, to ſee, he be not a hearer only, and nothing but a Hearer, and when he hath done that, think he hath nothing elſe to do. Verſe 19. 21. Matth. 4. 24. Luke 8. 18.

Yet ſuch there were in Ezekiels time (which place in the Old Teſtament, matcheth this in the New) that called one to another, Come, let us go to the Sermon: Et audiunt (ſaith he) ſed nihil faciunt, and heard, but did nothing. Eze. 33. 31.

Such in Saint Jame's time, elſe was his Caution without cauſe. And ſuch in our time: not, in dogmate, for they maintain it not; but their practice plainly diſcovers as much: that ſo they hear, they care neither what, nor how, ipſum audire, very hearing ſerves their turn.

Well, whoſoever ſo doth, how ſure ſoever he makes himſelf, how well and wiſely ſoever he thinks he carries the matter, it is ſure (ſaith Saint James) if he ſee not to it, he is fallen into deceptio viſus. And if he hear no otherwiſe, into deceptio auditus. His receiving of the Word, is nothing but a deceiving himſelf.

The diviſion.

So have we two principall parts of this Text: Firſt, his advice, or caution: See that ye be doers of the Word, and not hearers only. And ſecondly, that which giveth an edge to this advice, which is a main inconvenience, we fall into, if we follow it not: Leſt we deceive our ſelves.

I.

The former of the adviſe, thus we put in order: Be not hearers only of the Word, but doers; So is the true placing of the words, though it ſtands otherwiſe in the Text. Now, he that ſaith, Be not hearers only, ſaith two things: 1 Be ye hearers. 2 But, not hearers only. So that the points grow to be three: 1 An allowing us, to be hearers (firſt.) 2 But not hearers only, but ſomewhat elſe (the ſecond.) 3 Thirdly, what that is: Namely, to be doers of the Word: which is nothing elſe, but the fruit of that graft, which ſo lately ye heard of. And this is the Caution. Verſe 21.

II.

Then ſecondly, he giveth it an edge, by ſaying, if we follow not his Caution, we fall into a flat Paralogiſme, we make a falſe concluſion, or fallacy. Yea, a double edge: Firſt, that we are deceived: The ſecond, that we deceive our ſelves.

I.
The advice.
1 Be hearers.

WE begin with this, that St. James, in saying, Be not hearers only, this he saith: Be hearers, but not only hearers; be ye doers too: but, be hearers still.

Mat.12.24.

For, in dealing with Scriptures that consist of Negatives, by comparison (not hearers, but doers; and such like) we had need walk warily: and (as the Schoolmen say) resolve them cum grano salis, lest we cast out one Devil with another, as the manner of some is: the Devil of hearing only, with the Devil of not hearing at all: And so, the last error prove worse than the first. We must take heed we preserve both, both hearing and doing; each in their several right; and so do the former, that the latter we leave not undone.

Mat 27.64.
Mat.23.23.

Ver. 19.21.

For, S. James, by opening our hands to do, hath no meaning to shut our ears, to hear: by wishing us to fall to doing, he willeth us not to give over hearing: by bringing in the latter, taketh not away the former. But (as I said) to hold on our hearing still, only with this caution, that we reckon not that for all, or to be the thing solely or wholly to be intended by us. This being seen unto, to bear on, as we did.

For, he that had (two Verses before) willed us to be swift to hear; he that (the very next verse before) meekly to receive the word: he could not possibly forget himself, as to have any such meaning. No certainly, he had given it the honour of the first place, and his purpose is not to take it away again.

Mat.17.5.

GOD from heaven so began his Law with hearing: hear Israel. GOD from heaven too, so began his Gospel; This is my beloved Son, Hear Him. So GOD began, and so must we begin, for else we begin wrong.

And not begin only, but continue still hearing: For so doth the Apostle comment on the place of the Psalm, (To day if you will hear His voice) that, by to day, is meant, Donec cognominatur hodie, while it is called to day. And to morrow, and every day (when it comes) is called to day,

Psal.95 7.
Heb.13.3.

so that, to day, is all the dayes of our life.

The reason of which our continual being hearers, is the continual necessity of hearing of the Word of God. Which necessity our Saviour Christ Himself setteth down; in expres terms, speaking of Maries choice, to sit and hear his words, Unum est necessarium; one of the necessary things it is, and for such we may boldly affirm it.

Luk.10.34.

What that necessity is, He tells us, when He calls it The Key of knowledge. That there is a door shut; this is the Key: no opening, no entrance without it; none at all. For Quomodo possunt (saith Saint Paul) How can they possibly be saved, except they call upon God, or call upon him except they hear? It seems, he knew not how: and if not he, not any man else. For if we must be doers of the Word, (as by and by he tels us we must) we must needs hear first what we do, before we can do it.

Luk.11.52.
Rom.10. 14.
Acts 9.6.

John 14.6.

At the first, we are in his case, that said, Domine quid me vis facere? we know not what to do: then it is necessary to teach us.

After we know, we forget again. Then it is necessary to call us to remembrance.

When we remember, we grow dull in our duty: Then it is necessary to stir and quicken us.

2 Pet.3.1

So every way it is necessary, and we cannot be quit of it donec cognominatur hodie, while it is called to day.

As the Philosopher said of the Celestial bodies and lights, that they were dignum & idonium spectaculum, si tantum præterirent (it is Seneca) if they only passed by over our heads, and we received not the benefit of their motion and influence (which we do) yet were they a spectacle worth the beholding. So may we justly say of the Word: though it only disclosed the high and admirable treasure of wisdome and knowledge (it doth,) yet were it worth the while to hear it. For the

Mat.12.42.

Queen of the South, came a great long journey, only to be partaker of Salomons wisdome, and fornothing else: & ecce major Salomone hic, and He that was the Author of this Word is greater than Salomon.

How much more then, when besides this excellency, we have further so necessary use of it? It serves us first, as a Key, or special means, whereby we may escape the place of torments. So saith Abraham to him that was in them: if your five brethren would not come where you are, they have Moses and the Prophets, audiant ipsos, let them hear them: that shall quit them, for ever coming there.

Luke 11 52

And it serves us, not only as a Key to lock that place, but to open to us another, even the Kingdome of heaven. For, not so few as twenty times in the Gospel, is the Preaching of the word, called the Kingdome of Heaven, as a special means to bring us thither. It is that which St. James in the verse before saith: It is able to save our souls. The very words which the Angel used to Cornelius, that when St. Peter came, he should speak words, by which he and his household should be saved. Such and so necessary is the use of hearing the Word both wayes.

Verse 21

I

I conclude with St. Peter: Cui bene facitis attendentes, that ye do well in giving heed to it: as Saint James here ſaith, not as ἀκροαὶ, bare hearers; but, as ἀκροάται, Attentive hearers: that is ſo doing, you do well. 1 Pet. 1. 19.

But Saint Paul is ſo far carried, with this deſire to have us hear, that he ſaith, Let the Word be preached, and let it be heard, be it ſincerily, or be it pretenſedly, ſo it be done, it is to him, and ſhould be to us, matter, (not only of contentment, but alſo) of rejoycing. As much to ſay, as let them come, and be hearers, though it be to mock; let them come and be hearers, though it be but to carp, ſo they come and be hearers. And it is not amiſs. They, that came to mock the Apoſtles, as men gone with drink, were caught by their hearing. They that came to take our Saviour Chriſt, were taken themſelves by their hearing. Therefore Quocunque modo (ſaith S. Paul and though it be more than S. James ſeems to warrant, ſay we) howſoever, and with what condition ſoever it be, Be ye hearers of the word, ſtill. Phil. 1. 18. Act. 2. 6. John 7. 32.

Hearers, but of the Word.

Hearers; but Hearers of the Word. For, it ſhould be the word, we hear. Words we hear every foot: But I dare not ſay, the Word alwayes. Much chaffe is ſown in ſtead of right grain: Many a dry ſtick ingrafted, inſtead of a Siene with life and ſap in it. That was it our Saviour Chriſt willed us to look to; Quid, what we heard, as well as Quomodo, How. And indeed, for all our hearing, few have exerciſed ſenſes, to diſcern this point. Whatſoever it be, that we hear out of the pulpit, it ſerves our turn: it is all one: There is much deceit in this point. But a point it is that would not be ſaluted a far off, or touched lightly, but the very core of it ſearched, if it were dealt with as it ſhould. But indeed it is not ſo pertinent to Saint James his purpoſe in this place; therefore, I will not enter into it, but go on to the ſecond. Mat. 4. 24. Luke 8. 18.

2 Not hearers only.

Hearers of the Word: But not hearers only; For all the matter is in the word [Only] The more Hearers the better: the more Hearers only, the worſe. We cannot ſay ſo much good of hearing, as we muſt ſpeak evil of ſuch as content themſelves with hearing only.

And, why not only? Becauſe to hear is ſomewhat; but it is not all. A part it is; but, in no wiſe the whole. It is one thing; but not the only one thing; And therefore we muſt not ſtay in it; there is a plus ultra: when we have done hearing, ſomewhat elſe is to be done.

This appeareth plainly, from our Saviour Chriſts own mouth, even in that very place, where he ſo much commendeth hearing, and ſo ſetteth out the neceſſity of it. He commendeth it by ſaying, Mary hath choſen the better part: The better part is but a part, yet; therefore not the whole then. He ſetteth out the neceſſity of it, by ſaying, Unum eſt neceſſarium: Unum he ſaith, not Unicum: That, one thing it is, but not the only one thing, that is neceſſary, nor ſo to be reputed. Luke 10. 42.

But of all other, S. Paul doth ſhew the beſt abſurdity of them, that ſo eſteem it. What (ſaith he) is all the body and ear? Is all hearing? As if he ſhould ſay, that is too groſs. Yet thither they muſt come, even to make all the ſenſes hearing, and all the body an ear, that place all Religion in Lectures and Sermons. 1 Cor. 12. 17.

This then being but a part only, being but one thing, we muſt not ſtay here: We muſt not ſtay; for the Scripture it ſelf (mark it where you will) never maketh a ſtay at this of hearing. Ever the ſentence is ſuſpended; ever there followeth a Copulative, an [And] in the neck of it. It never cometh to a pawſe, or full point, till ſomewhat elſe be ſupplied.

This people hath well ſaid, ſaith God in Deuteronomy; What was that, that we may ſay ſo too? This it was, They ſaid to Moſes, Bring thou GODS Word to us, and we will hear it, and do it. Not hear it only, (for then it ſhould not have been commended) but hear it, and do it. And ſo it is well ſaid, and not otherwiſe. I will tell you, ſaith our Saviour Chriſt, who is a wiſe builder: He that heareth my words (and no period there, but) and doth them. And to the woman that heard His words with a great paſſion, Bleſſed are they that hear the Word of God, and keep it. And not to trouble you with many allegations, ſo concludeth He in the Revelation, Bleſſed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this Prophecy, and keep the things written therein. Mark it well, Never a pawſe, a breath, a full point, or ſtay at hearing; but ſtill an And; and do, and keep, and fulfill, and ſomewhat elſe. To ſhew, it is neither the ſole, nor the whole thing: There remaineth ſtill for us ſome further duty behind. Deut. 5. 28. Mat. 7. 24. Luke 11. 28. Rev. 1. 3.

In as much then, as it is never put alone, but ſtill coupled with ſome other: And it is a rule, (not only for marriage, but for all things elſe) What GOD hath coupled, let no man put ſunder: Let us ſee, what that other thing is, which GOD hath coupled, and Saint James ſupplieth to be joyned with it. Mat. 16. 6.

3 But doers of the Word.

What is that? Is it to be moved a little with that we hear; Upon our hearing, to ſay with Agrippa, ἐν ὀλίγῳ, ſomewhat I was; I was a little moved with it: No: this is to ſuffer, not to do S. James ſpeaketh of doing. Acts 26. 38.

What is it then? Is it to cry, Magiſter bene dixiſti, Sir you well ſaid, you have made us a good Sermon? Nay then, what ſay you to Nunquam quiſquam, we never heard a better: Is not that it? No: for this is to ſay, and not to do. S. James ſpeaketh of doing. Luke 20. 29. John 7. 46.

What ſay you to conferring of it, by the walls of our houſe, and making that we have heard, matter of diſcourſe or queſtion? I can tell what I would ſay, if our queſtions and diſcourſes tended to that of S. James (there) to doing: that then we are in a good way. But ye ſhall obſerve, for the moſt part, they be about ſome pretty ſpeculative point, ſome ſubtill objection; Somewhat (ever) tending tending to curioſity of knowledge, rather than conſcience of practice. But if we did ſo, yet it were but to talk of doing, not to do. Still we are ſhort of St. Iames; who, whatſoever we do, to ſatisfie him beſides, will not leave us, till we be doers of it. And (ſure) any that obſerveth it, ſhall find, that thoſe I have named, (1 To hear. 2 To be moved with it a little. 3 To commend it. 4. To ſpend a little talk about it) this is all. And that all theſe be but by-wayes, which the enemy of our ſouls ſeeketh to lead us into, ſo to divert us from the true end, that we may reſt in theſe, as in our final concluſion, and never come to this of St. James, (which is the point indeed) to be doers.

We ſee then what the other part is: to hear, that we may do, to receive, that we may bring forth; to be grafted, that we may fructifie.

Luke 10. ult. And that our care of it may be according, I add, that this is not only a part, but far the better part of the twain. For though Maries part, was better than Marthas: (Maries in hearing, than Marthas in entertaining: yet Maries part in doing, that is, in anointing CHRIST, was better, than her part in hearing CHRIST, and hath a greater praiſe and promiſe from Chriſts Mat 26.13. own mouth: This that ſhe hath done ſhall be ſpoken of through the world. It is our rule; Vnumquodque propter quid, & illud magis: In that doing is the propter quid, the end of hearing; and we therefore hear, what to do; that we may do, what we hear: In that (as the Schoolmen ſay) Scire eſt propter ire; We know the way, to go the way: Doing muſt be the worthier of the twain: Worthier in it ſelf, and conſequently worthier our care and intendment.

Rom. 2.13. To make it plain, do but take them in ſunder, and ſever them: St. Paul ſaith plainly, then, Non Auditories, Hearing is nothing; ſed factores, but doing is all. And when they be joyned, ſtill there is a mark ſet upon this part, to ſhew it for the chief. As here (at the 25 verſe following) he ſaith plainly: Beatus erit in opere ſuo, he that ſhall be bleſſed, ſhall be bleſſed in his work: Luke 13.17. not in any thing elſe. Our Saviour himſelf ſaith the ſame in expreſs terms: If ye know theſe things: how then? Bleſſed ſhall ye be if ye do them: Mark, Bleſſed, if ye do them. Otherwiſe, if ye know them never ſo much, never the more bleſſed. Never the more bleſſed? Nay, Scienti, & non facienti (ſaith S. James) Knowing, and not doing, is an increaſe of our ſin, and conſequently, James 4. ult. a greater heap of our condemnation. This there is the principal part to be doers.

If then we would fain be doers, and ask what that is; It is a material point to know. There are two kinds of Doers, 1. ποιηταὶ, and, 2. ἐργάται, Which the Latine likewiſe expreſſeth; in 1 Agere, and 2 Facere. Agere, as in Muſick, where, when we have done ſinging or playing, nothing remaineth: Facere, as in building, where after we have done, there is a thing permanent. And ποιηταὶ, Factores, they are S. Iames his doers: But we have both the words in the Engliſh tongue: Actors, as in a Play; Factors, as in Merchandiſe. When the play is done, all the Actors do vaniſh: But of the Factors doing, there is a gain: a real thing remaining.

To be a Doer of the Word, is (as St. Gregory ſaith well) Convertere Scripturas in operas, To change the word which is audible, into a work which is viſible: The Word which is tranſient, into a work which is permanent.

Or rather, not to change it, but (as Saint Auguſtine ſaith) Accedat ad verbum, unto the Word, that we hear, let there be joyned the Element of the Work, that is, ſome real Elemental deed: Et ſic fit magnum Sacramentum pietatis, and ſo ſhall ye have the great Myſtery or Sacra- 1 Tim. 3. 6. ment of Godlineſs. For indeed, Godlineſs is as a Sacrament: hath not only the Myſtery to be known, but the exerciſe to be done; not the Word to be had, but the work alſo to be performed: or elſe, if it be not a Sacrament, it is not true godlineſs.

1 Tim 4.7 Which very Sacrament of Godlineſs is there ſaid to be the manifeſting of the word in the fleſh: which it ſelf is lively expreſſed by us, when we are doers of the Word: as it is well gathered out of our Saviour CHRIST's ſpeech, to them which interrupted Him in His Sermon, and told Mat. 12.50 Him, His mother was without: Who is my Mother, ſaith He? Theſe here, that hear and do my words, Gal. 4.9 are my mother. They travel of me till I am faſhoned in them. Hearing, they receive the immortal 2 Pet. 1.23 ſeed of the Word; by a firm purpoſe of doing, they conceive; by a longing deſire, they quicken; by an earneſt endeavour, they travel with it; and when the work is wrought, Verbum caro factum eſt, John 1.14 they have incarnate the word. Therefore to the womans acclamation, Bleſſed be the womb that Luke 11,27. bare thee; true (ſaith Chriſt) but that bleſſing can extend but only to one, and to no more: I will tell you, how you may be bleſſed too; Bleſſed are they, that ſo incarnate the written Word by doing it, as the Bleſſed Virgin gave fleſh to the eternal word, by bearing it.

It is that Saint James meaneth in the next Chapter, where he ſaith, Oſtende mihi fidem; Faith Chap. 2. ver 18 commeth by hearing: ſhew me thy faith and thy hearing (ſaith he, in the perſon of an Heathen Rom 10.17 man.) The Chriſtian faith, Quando creditur quod dicitur; the heathan ſaith, Quando fit quod dicitur, (for, ſo they define it in their Books of Offices) Ye ſhall never ſhew them your faith, cum creditur quod dicitur; but by that they underſtand, that is, their own faith, cum fit quod dicitur, by doing the Word. Enough to ſhew what is meant, by doers of the Word.

And leſt we excuſe our ſelves by this, that all Sermons (are not de Theologica practica) entreat not of matters of action, and ſo not to be done. By this that hath been ſaid of the Sacrament of Godlineſs, we may eaſily underſtand, that there is no Article of faith, or Myſtery of Religion at all, but is as a key to open, and as a hand to lead us to ſome operative vertue. Even thoſe myſtical points, being by the Holy Ghoſt's wiſdome, ſo tempered, that they miniſter every one of them ſomewhat to be doing with, ſomewhat pertaining to the exerciſe of Godlineſs, no leſs than the moral points themſelves. So that, if if we would diſpoſe our ſelves, to keep St. James his Cau- tion,

tion, I make no queſtion, I make no queſtion, we might well do it through all. At leaſt, when the points are plainly practick, meer Agents, then to make a conſcience of doing them, and to call our ſelves to account of what we heard, what we have done, till as St. James his term is, we find our ſelves to be doers of the Word: till as Saint James his term was, verbum inſitum, the ingrafted word have his fruit in a work ſuitable to the ſeed or ſien, it came of. And this is the ſumme of his Caution.

II. The edge of the caution.

What if we do thus, what then? So doing, ſaith Saint Iames, we ſhall do wiſely, and make ſure work; in ſaying that, Not doing ſo, we ſhall but beguile our ſelves. For indeed, thoſe are the only hearers, that are doers too: The other, that are hearers only, as good not hear; for when all is done, doing muſt do it. That is plaineſt, that Scripture telleth us, how it ſhall go at laſt: They that have done good, ſhall go into life everlaſting; and they that have done evil, go (I need not tell you) you know whither well enough.

1 The inconvenience.

1 Deceiving. John 8. 29.

This very thing had David ſaid long before of the Word, A good underſtanding have all they that do thereafter. And ſo had our Saviour Chriſt, who ſaith of him that heareth and doeth, that he approved himſelf for a wiſe builder. Which is that and nothing elſe, which Saint Iames here implieth, that they make a ſound concluſion, or true Syllogiſm. Pſalm 111. 10. Matth. 7. 24.

As on the other ſide, ſuppoſing they do it not, they be fooliſh builders, fooliſh Virgins, ſaith Chriſt: they fall into a flat Fallacy, or Paralogiſm; are deceived by a peece of the Devils ſophiſtry. Matth. 7. 26. Matth. 5. 23.

And the Apoſtle could not poſſibly deviſe to ſpeak more fitly, or to give his Caution a better edge. For theſe great hearers, nothing ſo much nettles them, as to be counted men deceived, unwiſe, or overſeen. Men are deceived for want of knowledge. They reckon themſelves the only people, as if knowledge ſhould die with them. And being men of knowledge, conſequently freeſt from error, of any men alive. They pity much the blindneſs of the former times: but as for them, they ſee light cleerly, and are not deceived you may be ſure. Therefore this ſeemeth very ſtrange to them, and in evil part they muſt needs take it, to be holden for men deceived. The more it moveth them, the liker it is to work with them, and therefore S. Iames the rather chooſeth it.

It is the courſe the Holy Ghoſt ſtill keeps with them. For ſuch were in our Saviours time, the Phariſees. None ſuch men of knowledge as they; they were knowledge all over: in their forehead, at their wriſts, down to the very fringe and skirts of their garment. Notwithſtanding upon this very point of Non faciunt: our Saviour Chriſt let not to call them fools and blind, though they took themſelves to be the only Eagles of the world. Even ſo were thoſe of the Pſalm, when they had heard the Law, Sabbath after Sabbath, forty years together, yet ſaith he, It is a people that do erre in their hearts, for all that: and though they have heard ſo long, yet they know not my wayes. And even ſo S. Paul, with ſome in his time, whom though he terms alwayes learning, continually hearing, ſtill at Sermons; yet for all that he ſaith, they never came to the knowledge of the Truth: not the true knowledge, which conſiſteth in the Practice; but a kind of janging knowledge, and holding of oppoſition, which he calleth knowledge falſly ſo called. Therefore for all their Sermons, and all their Lectures, a deceipt there is certainly. 2 Tim. 3. 7. 1 Tim. 6. 20.

For let us examine it. If that which is heard, be therefore heard that it may be done; and it be not done, a deceipt there is; ſomebody there is deceived, light where it will. Now there be but three in all, that be parties to it. 1 GOD. 2 The Preacher. 3 And the Hearer. One of theſe it muſt be.

Be not deceived (ſaith the Apoſtle) God is not mocked: No deceiving of Him. It is not He ſure. Gal. 6. 8.

Then it is we: ſo one would think; ſo thought Eſay: Alas (ſaith he) I have labored in vain, I have ſpent my ſtrength in vain, I find I am deceived. But he receives anſwer of God, it was not ſo. That neither he had preached the word, nor the word he had preached, had been, or ſhould be in vain. For himſelf; that his reward was with God, whether the hearer profited or no. For the Word that, as the rain or ſnow going forth, it ſhould not return empty without his effects. Eſay 49. 4. Verſe 4. Eſay 55. 11.

Which anſwer to Eſay, was it which put comfort in Saint Paul: that were his preaching the ſavour of life, or of death; both wayes, it was in him a ſweet ſmelling ſavour, accepted of GOD. And if neither GOD, nor the Preacher, then muſt the deceipt fall on the Hearer: and he it is that is deceived. 2 Cor. 2. 15.

Deceived? Wherein, or how? many wayes. 1 And firſt, in groſly miſtaking the very nature of Sermons. Upon Audiunt & non faciunt, Ezekiel ſaith plainly of thoſe in his dayes, they ſeemed to reckon of Sermons, no otherwiſe than of Songs: to give them the hearing, to commend the ayr of them, and ſo let them go. The Muſick of a ſong and the Rhetorick of a ſermon, all is one. A foul errour, even in the very nature of the word: for, that is a Law, a Teſtament, and neither ſong nor ſonnet. A Law, enacted to be done. For, it ſhall not ſerve the three children, to ſay of Nebuchadnezzars Law, They had heard it proclaimed from point to point; but do it they muſt, or into the furnace; for ſuch is the nature of a Law. A Teſtament: which, though it be but a mans (as Saint Paul ſaith) muſt be executed; and we are compellable to the execution of it: and to GOD'S much more. Dan. 3. 8. Gal. 3. 15.

To ſpeak but according to the Metaphor in the Verſe before: It is a plain miſtaking of the word (which is, as Seed in a ſoil, or as a Sien in a ſtock) to take it for a ſtake in a hedge, there to ſtick Verſe 21.

Verſe 23. and ſtand ſtill and bring forth nothing. Or, according to the Metaphor in the Verſe next after; where it is termed a Glaſſe, which we ſhould look in, to do ſomewhat by: to take away ſome ſpot, to mend ſomewhat amiſs, to ſet ſomewhat right: And it is plainly to miſtake it, to look in it, and look off it, and forget our chief errand to it.

As this is a manifeſt miſtaking in the Nature; ſo is there a like in the End. For whereas they hear, and do; and to do, is the End, why they hear; theſe Auditores tantum do (even as S. Paul ſaith) requieſcunt in lege, make the Law their pillow, lay them down upon it, and there take their reſt: Never ſeek farther, and ſo miſs their mark quite.

Rom. 2. 19.

But a worſe errour yet than this is, that they which when they have heard, have done, ſeem to think that hearing and doing is all one; inaſmuch as all they do, is only that they hear: and ſo, groſly confound the two parts, that are plainly diſtinguiſhed. For, hearing is a ſenſe, and ſenſe is in ſuffering: but the hearing of the Word is ſo eaſie a ſuffering, as if we look not to our ſelves, we often fall aſleep at it. Now, ſuffering and doing are plainly diſtinguiſhed: and not only plainly diſtinguiſhed, but (as we ſee) flatly oppoſed (by S. James in the Text) either to other.

Not to hold you over-long: ſeeing the Apoſtle borroweth his term of Paralogiſm from the Schooles, to ſpeak in School-terms. In hearing only, and not doing, there is (firſt) the Elench, A ſenſu compoſito ad diviſum: which they fall into, that where two things are required, reſt in one. And again, Elench, A dicto ſecundum quid, ad dictum ſimpliciter: wherewith they are deceived that having a part, think that part ſhall ſerve them, inſtead of the whole. Which two, are a piece of the Devils ſophiſtry: and ſo you ſee, both 1 that they are deceived; 2 and how they are deceived that reſt upon hearing only.

Deceiving your ſelves.

But to be deceived ſimply, is no ſo great matter; wiſe men (many of them) are ſo, and many of them may be. This is that which edgeth it yet more, which giveth it a double edge: that they deceive themſelves.

1 In which point, firſt certain it is, there is no man, that willingly would be deceived, can endure to be deceived himſelf. Saith the firſt and greateſt Deceiver, to Eve, even then, when he came purpoſely to deceive her, אַף כִּי, Is it for a troth, that God hath forbidden you to eat of all the trees? As if he ſhould ſay: I would not have you deceive me, tell me true, whether it be ſo or no. Lo, he would not be deceived himſelf, though he came meerly about deceipt.

Gen. 3. 1. 3

2 But then ſecondly: If deceived we muſt be, of all men we would not be deceived of ſuch, as we truſt: that grieves us exceedingly. Saith David, He hath beguiled me whom I truſted; my Guide, my Counſellour, my familiar friend. He can never ſay enough of it, for it is a grief above all griefs to be ſo deceived.

Pſalm 55. 14.

3 Thirdly then, if not by one we truſt, leaſt of all, by that party, whom moſt of all we truſt (that is) by our ſelves; for, we truſt none better, I ſuppoſe, if we muſt be deceived; of another, of any other rather than of our ſelves. For, he that deceiveth himſelf, is both the deceived and the deceiver too. The deceived may be pitied: the deceiver is ever to be blamed: Therefore, he is utterly without excuſe, that is the author of his own deceiving. And there is no man pitieth him, but every one mocketh him, and takes up Proverbs over him, of ſelf do ſelf have, and I wot not what. So that, this of all other, is the worſt; 1 To be deceived: 2 To be deceivers: 3 To be their own deceivers.

Will ye ſee an example of this, that they do but deceive themſelves, that build upon Auditores tantum? You may, Luc. 13. where you ſhall ſee ſome, that upon their bare hearing, bare themſelves very confidently, as if they could by no meanes be deceived in it, and yet they were. CHRIST ſaith to them, Neſcio vos. They think very ſtrange of that ſpeech, and reply, Lord, why, haſt not thou preached in our ſtreets, and have not we heard thee duely, and never miſſed? Well for all that; for all their hearing, he telleth them again, Neſcio vos. Though he had ſeen them at never ſo many Sermons, He taketh no notice of them by their being, or hearing there, but by their doing afterward. By which it appeareth, that upon this very point, they promiſed themſelves very much; but found at laſt, they had but deceived themſelves.

Luke 13. 26.

And (which is worſt of all) found it then, when it was too late; when no Writ of errour could be brought; when it was paſt time, and they no way to be relieved.

And yet to go further, If this deceipt of themſelves were in ſome light matter, of no great importance, it were ſo much the more tolerable, but ſo it is not, here. The laſt words of the laſt Verſe, are (as you remember) ſalvare animas veſtras: ſo that, it is a matter of ſaving our ſouls; a matter as much as our ſouls or ſalvation are worth. Life or Death; Heaven or Hell; no leſs matter depends upon our being deceived here. Things which moſt of all, it concerneth us, not to be deceived in.

One point more, and ſo an end. They will be hearers of the word, and not do it: what ſay you to this, that when they have been hearers only all their life long: they ſhall in the end, be forced to be doers; and doers of that word, which leaſt of all others they would do: Is not this evidently to be deceived themſelves (In the Prophet Jeremy they ſay) They will give God the hearing, but not do any of His Words: But, they ſhall not go away with it ſo. For, when they have done what they can, they ſhall find themſelves deceived in that too. A word there is, they ſhall not hear only, but hear and do, whether they will or no. And, what is that word? Even Diſcedite maledicti in ignem æternum. For they that will do none elſe; that they ſhall do: and fulfill that Commandment that break all the reſt. And, who is able to fulfill, nay, to abide that word? Who can

Jer. 18. 18.

Matth. 25. 41.

can endure to go whither that will send him? Of all words, that is durus sermo, nay durissimus, the hardest to do of all: better do any, yea, better do all, than do that. John 6.60.

You see then, what an edge the Apostle hath set upon his advice: how great an inconvenience they run themselves into, that be hearers only. Which if it be intollerable (as sure, it is) it will import us, to take heed to the Caution, that so we may avoid this double edge.

First then, that we do as we do, hear still. For, Bene-facitis Attendentes.

Yet not to be carried away with the common errour, that Sermon-hearing is the Consummatum est of all Christianity; and, so we hear our Sermons duly, all is safe, more needs not. But, to resolve with our selves, that only will not do it: somewhat there must be besides. And when all is done, it must be Factores verbi.

Lastly, that we may (if we please) entertain other opinions touching this point; but they will deceive us, and we in holding them, be deceived. And that, in a matter of great weight and consequence: which then we shall find and feel, when it will be too late to help it.

Then, that hearing, and not doing, we shall in the end be forced both to hear and to do a word, the heaviest to be heard, and the worst to be done, of all others. Therefore, that we see to it in time, and keep the Caution, that we may avoid the penalty. which Almighty GOD open our eyes, that we may see, &c.

A SERMON

Preached at the opening of the

PARLIAMENT

Anno Dom. MDCXXI.

PSALM LXXXII. Ver. I.

Deus ſtat in Synagoga Deorum : in medio Deos judicavit.

The Greek, word for word, the ſame.

a The Pſalter.
b The Geneva.
c The New Tranſlation.

a GOD ſtandeth in the Congregation of Princes.
b or, in the Aſſembly of the Gods,
c or, of the Mighty.
In the midſt will he judge the Gods.

which was the Pſalm for the day, viz. the XVI, day of the month, on which day the Parliament was firſt begun.

GOD ſtandeth in the Congregation of Princes, &c. Of a Congregation of Princes is this Pſalm (as you have heard.) And behold here, ſuch a Congregation (and God, I truſt, ſtanding in it.) And who then can doubt but this Pſalm is for this day.

The words (ſure) ſeem to favour it: The uſe much more, which hath ever gone with it.

For, ſtanding the Policy of the Common-wealth of Iſrael (their Writers tell us,) when ought was to be done, for chooſing their Rulers, for placing them and giving them their charge: but ſpecially, when there was any meeting of them in their Synagoga magna, their great Congregation: this was ever the Pſalm before they ſat down. Purpoſely ſet (as it ſeemeth) for the Aſſembly, to ſet them in tune. For that end ſet: and to that end ever uſed.

It was Moſes the man of God, that by ſpecial direction from God Himſelf, Deut. 19, began and brought up this order firſt, of making mens duty into muſick; putting it into their mouthes, that ſo, with the ſweetneſſe of melody it might be conveighed into their mindes. And David ſince continued it, and brought it to perfection, as having a ſpecial grace and felicity; he for a Song, and his Son Salomon for a Proverb: By which two (the unhappy Adage, and a wanton ſong) Satan hath ever breathed moſt of his infection and poyſon, into the mind of man.

Now

Now in this holy and heavenly use of his harp, He doth by his tunes (as it were) teach all sorts of men, how to tune themselves. And there is no estate whatsoever, but in this Book he sweetly singeth their duty into them. Into his Court, Psalm 101. and so severally, into the rest. And here now, in this Psalm, how to preserve harmony in a Congregation.

Of which Psalm this is the first verse; the Key, and the Compendium of the whole. And thus we divide it. 1 Into two Parties: first, 2 Into two Acts: second. Two Parties: 1 the first word of it is God, God in the singular: 2 the last is Gods, Gods in the plural: These two Parties are distinct, 1 one from another, 2 one above another. The division.

1 GOD that standeth, from the Congregation He standeth in. 2 GOD that judgeth, from and above the Gods whom He will judge.

The Gods we consider two wayes, as the word is twice repeated: 1 Deorum, and 2 Deos. 1 In Synagoga Deorum, and 2 In medio Deos. Deorum, in the Congregation 2 Deos out of it. If you will, thus into the 1 Gods of the Congregation, and the 2 Congregation of the Gods.

Now of the first God, in and upon the last Gods, and in and upon the Congregation of them, two Acts there are set down: 1 His standing, 2 His judgement.

1 In the Congregation, He stands: Stat in Synagoga Deorum.

2 Out of it, the Gods He will judge: Deos judicabit (that is) call them to accompt (every God of them:) and even upon this very point, how they carried themselves before Him standing in the Congregation. 1 This He will do: and do it in medio, not in a corner, but bring them forth into the midst, and do it in the view of all. In medio Deos judicabit.

The Order lieth plain. 1 Of the Gods, first, 2 Then, of the Congregation of them. After, of GOD: His standing, and His judging. Standing, now; Deus stat. Judging, hereafter; Deus judicabit. Judging, 1 even the Gods themselves. And that 2 in medio, that all the world may see it. 1. In the whole course of our lives, we may have good use of these two. 2. But the Psalmist seemeth to think, not at any time so good, as at this.

Therefore what ever else slip you, my desire is, these two may stick with you, and be ever in your minds all the Session long. Two they be: and short ones, and plain ones they be (but two words a piece.) 1 Deus stat, 2 Deus judicabit: 1 God doth stand, and 2 God will judge, 1 Doth stand for the present: 2 And will judge, will take a time to call each party to a reckoning, for every thing shall here passe.

1 The taking to heart; a true impression there of these two, cannot but do much good, keep all in true measure, time and tune. 2 The ignorantibus or non recordantibus of it (as it is at the fourth Verse) like enough to put all out of course, while men run on and carry things away before them, as if there were no judicare in the Creed, as if they should never come to accompt again.

It hath been thought, there needeth no more to make a good Parliament, but the due recording of this Verse. It will serve as a wrest to tune, and to set all right. To set GOD, 1 First standing, and then 2 judging, before our eyes.

But specially standing. For, if we shall regard Him well, when He stands, we shall never need to fear Him, when He judges; and then I shall never need to trouble you, with that part. The regard then of Gods standing, to be our only care for the present, and we to commend it to your care and so to conclude.

OF the Gods first, And first on our parts that be men: after, on theirs that be the Gods. The two parties

On our parts: When we read, and weigh well with our selves, this high term and title of Gods, given to them that are in authority; we learn, To hold them for Gods, to owe and to bear all reverend regard to their Places and Persons. And above all, highly to magnifie such Assemblies as this. So taught by the Prophet here; who once and twice, over and over again, so stileth them, their persons themselves, Deos; their Assembly, Synagogam Deorum. In the Congregation they are so: Out of it they are so. Add to these two, a third yet, more authentical (and it is in this Psalm too.) The Prophet speaketh here; GOD Himself; there, Ego dixi dii estis, This saith our SAVIOUR (John 10.35.) is sermo Dei. The other two may seem to drop out of the Prophets pen, but this came from GOD'S own mouth: the more (I say) to be regarded. And this is not Old Testament (as say our Anabaptists.) Our blessed Saviour, in the New, comments upon these words (the best Commenter, that ever was) and two things he tels us; 1 One, we thought it to be but a Psalm, He tels us it is a Law, Nonne scriptum est in Lege? And so gives it the force of a Law. 2 The other, that it is a binding Law still: so binding that Non potest solvi (they be His own words) it cannot be loosed. Was not by Him; nor can, nor any other: And so, is in full force still.

The Gods of the Congregation.

a The duty of inferiours to the Gods.

Verse 6.

John 10.34.

John 10.25.

These then, Dii, Deorum, and Deos, are not S. Peters ὑπεροχὴν δόξης ὑπερηφάνους φθεγγόμενοι swelling words of vanity. This is not to give titles, but of GOD'S own giving: Nor to say one syllable more than GOD hath said before us. Said it must be, that God hath said, who never gives titulum sine Re. So they are by Him intituled: and so they are.

2 Pet. 2. 18.

But

Yet not to hold all the Gods equal. Rom. 13. 2. 1 Pet. 2. 13.

But I take it my duty not to keep from you, that all that are comprised here under Dii, Deorum, and Deos are not all Gods alike. No: in this Godhead, Some are before or after other, Some are greater and lesser than another. There are some higher than other (saith Salomon, Eccl. 5. 12.) And there are others yet higher than they. For the powers that are, are by God, both ordained, and set in order (saith S. Paul) So in order, (saith S. Peter) as there is one ὑπέρτερον, and that (he saith) is the King by name, supereminent above the rest, and the rest ab eo missi, have their mission, and commission from him. Many Superiours, but one Soveraign.

Ego dixi was said to all; but not to all at once. To some one, before the rest: even to David, to whom before the writing of this Psalm, 1 Sam. 23. 3. GOD (saith he) even the strength of Israel spake to me and said, Thou shalt bear rule over men. Nor did all the sonnes of the most High (as they are after called at the sixth verse) come into the world, at one time. There was Primogenitus inter fratres: Of whose Primogeniture or birthright; this was a part, Gen. 27. 29. Be thou Lord over thy brethren, and let thy mothers sonnes bow unto thee. And take even the word Synagoga: Never was there Synagogue heard of, but there was an Archisynagogus, a Ruler of it.

Nazianzen speaking of Magistrates as of the Images of God, and sorting them, compareth the highest to a picture drawn clean through down to the feet; The middle sort, to half pictures drawn but to the girdle; The lowest, to those same Idyllia, no further but to the neck and shoulders. But all in some degree, carry the image of God, as all have the honour to be called by His Name. This for our parts. Now for theirs, the Gods.

a The duty of the Gods: To be as they be called Gods, indeed. Heb. 1. 4. 2 Pet. 2. 11. Gen. 1. 26. Acts 14. 11.

What infer we of this? Nothing, but that, what they are, they would be: having obtained so excellent a name, they would be even what their name bodeth. They that wear Gods name, hold Gods place, represent His person, what manner persons ought they to be: Choice persons they would be? taken, as the fat from the sacrifice; having more sparks of the Deity, a larger portion of the spirit of God, more lively expressing the image and similitude whereto man was made, than the rest.

If it were possible, such, as of them might be said in the Lycaonian tongue, Gods are come down to us, in the likenesse of men. Sure, they that are styled Gods somewhat more than they would be; as like, come as near rem nominis, the truth of that they are named, as humane frailty will permit.

Yet have they not alwayes been such. a Judges 9. 4. b 1 Reg. 12. 8. c 2 Chro. 13. 7.

But have they been ever so? I cannot say it. Assemblies there have been, [a] Abimelech had one: and [b] Roboam his, and Jeroboam his. But Abimelech with his needy indigent Sichemites: Roboam, with his youth, that never stood before Salomon: [c] Jeroboam with his crue of malecontents, Sons of Belial, shall I call any of these Synagoga Deorum; I cannot, I see no lineaments, no resemblance at all, nothing for which this name should once be vouchsafed them (of Gods,) Nay, not scarce of Synagoga neither; as deserving, not only to be left out of the list of Gods, but even to be put extra Synagogam. Scarce a Synagogue, much lesse of Gods.

After, in this Psalm, at the V. Verse, they are told as much, when by their ignorantibus, or non intelligentibus, things were grown out of course. And told it by GOD Himself, and that with a kind of indignation, that He had said they were Gods, and they carried themselves scarce like men: gone from their names quite.

But ours we wish to be such.

But I leave them, and come to this of ours. There is not in the world a more reasonable request than this, what you would be, that to be: what you would be in name, that to be in deed; to make good your name. Every one to be Homo homini Deus, by doing good: specially, that good which is the good of all, that is, the good of this Assembly. This the time and place for it: And, so my wish is, you may, and my trust is you will. And so I leave Deorum, the Gods of the Congregation: and come to Synagoga, the Congregation it self.

II.

The Congregation of the Gods. Ezek 1. 20.

For when we consider these Gods each apart, they are as in Ezekiel, Every Spirit on his wheel, and every wheel in his own course, when they are at home in their several Countries. But when as in a Congregation, then are they to come and to be together.

God alloweth such Congregations, when there is cause. d Num. 10 34.

And this (if cause be) GOD alloweth well of. 1. For he hath to that end left with his Lieutenant; a power [d] to blow the trumpets, one or both, to call together a part, or the whole Congregation. By the Trumpets, while they were all within the Trumpets sound: but after, when they were setled all Canaan over, to call them by the pen of the writer (that is, by Writ.) Of which we have a fair example, Iudg. 5. 14. 2. For secondly, He hath willed the Angels of his Church, by the Angels example (Judg. 5. 23.) to lay Meroz's curse to them that come not to it. 3. For thirdly, He here calleth their meeting by the name of Synagogue, which is a Holy place, a Sanctuary, a High place, or Court of refuge, (עֵדָה signifies all these.) 4. For fourthly, He hath to that end spared them a piece of his own Temple, to have their meetings in, [e] On the south side of it, called twice by the name of Asuppim (which was to them, as the Parliament house is to us) that so their feet might stand on holy ground. And they knew themselves, to be, no קָהָל common or prophane, but עֵדָה a sacred Assembly to him. 5 For fifthly, he hath set them here a Monitorie Psalm of this, to put them in mind, how to bear themselves in it, like Gods (that is) Divinely. 6. For last when they are together, He comes Himself in person and stands among them. All which shew, He favours and likes well such Assemblies as this.

e 1 Chr. 26. 15.

The cause of the meeting of such Congregations. f 1 Cor. 11. 17.

But then, there must be a Cause: And indeed, else it is Concursus atomorum, rather than Congregatio Deorum. Thus many, so goodly a Company to meet to no end, GOD forbid. If the Apostle had not, Nature doth teach us, [f] When we come together, to come together for the better, not for the worse. And nothing is worse, than to come together for nothing. Better (as Debora saith well)

[g] stay

[g] ſtay at home, and hear the bleating of their flocks. This be far from any Aſſembly; ſpecially the Aſſembly of the Gods, who are herein to imitate GOD, who doth nothing in vain, or without a cauſe. g Judg. 5.16.

If you ask me the cauſe, the two words themſelves, Synagoga and Deorum, contain either of them a cauſe of it. As a Congregation, for the good of the Congregation: As Gods, Catus Deorum Catus Dei (ſaith S. Hieron.) the Congregation of Gods is GOD'S Congregation: As His, for Him, for His honour, who gave them theirs; to the high pleaſure for that GOD, whoſe Ego dixi Goded them all. And ſo (as I remember) it is written In capite libri, the firſt page, or front of your acts, To the high pleaſure of Almighty God (there, lo, is God) and for the weale publike (there is the Congregation.) Not this only here, the Congregation of Gods, but the Congregation of men (I know not how many) all the Land over, even the great Congregation. This cauſe double. 1 One from Synagoga. 2 The other from Deorum.

Learn a Parable of the Natural Body. If there be no other cauſe, each Member is left to look to it ſelf; but if there be any danger toward the whole body, preſently all the parts are ſummoned (as it were) to come together, and every Veine ſends his blood, and every ſinew his ſtrength, and every artery his ſpirits, and all draw together about the heart for a while, till the ſafety of the whole be provided for; and then return back, every one to his place again. So it is with the Body Civil, in caſe of danger, and never but in it. 1 From Synagoga when it is in danger.

But is there any danger then towards? There is, and that to both. To the Synagogue firſt, and that from a twofold Synagogue, and of two ſorts; 1 One continual or ordinary: 2 The other not ſo, but ſpecial and upon occaſion. The danger, this Pſalm expreſſeth thus (ver. V.) That things are brought out of courſe, yea, foundations and all. Thus; there be (I may call them a Synagogue, for they be many) of theſe ſame mali mores, that like tubera terræ, ſhoot out daily, no man knowes whence, or how; never heard of before: Theſe if they be ſuffered to grow, will bring all out of courſe. And grow they do; for even of them, ſome that have penalties already ſet (I know not how) ſuch a head they get, as they overgrow their puniſhments: that if this Congregation grind not on a new and ſharper edge, they will bring things yet further out of Courſe. The danger of two ſorts. 1 Ordinary. 2 Or upon ſpecial occaſion. 1 Ordinary. By Synagoga vitiorum. 2 Ex malis moribus.

Beſides, thoſe that ſhould keep in courſe, the Lawes themſelves are in danger too. There be a ſort of men (I may well ſay of the Synagogue of Satan) that give their wayes, and bend their wits to nothing, but even to deviſe, how to fret through the Lawes, as ſoon as they be made; as it were in ſcorn of this Congregation, and of all the Gods in it. Theſe go to the foundations (for ſo, are the Laws) undermine them and in a ſort, though after another manner, ſeek to blow up all. Great pity,) but this Congregation here ſhould look well to the foundation of all. Great pity, that it ſhould be overcome of their evil; but that their evil ſhould be overcome of our good, & this of yours go beyond them. b Ex legibus depravatis. Rom. 12. 21.

It is not to go through all. Generally, Quid populo, quod ſtet? What the Congregation of men have juſt cauſe to complain of, the Congregation of God fit to redreſs. Whatſoever Synagoga Satanæ per malos mores doth put out; Synagoga Deorum, per bonas Leges, is to ſet in joynt again. And that is the proper work of this Aſſembly, to make Lawes. And that is properly the work of GOD: His work, at Sinai, and at Sion both. And in truth, That there is but one Lawgiver, and that is GOD (ſaith S. James, chap. 4. ver. 12.) As, till Ego dixi, till then, there was but one GOD: but together with His Name, He imparted alſo His Power, and made you a Congregation of Lawgivers, and of Gods, both at once. A high Power; the higheſt in earth, ſave one: Next to the Scepter in Juda's hand, is the Lawgiver between his feet, even with Jacob. And ſo with Salomon: After Per me Reges regnant, preſently followes Et Legum conditores juſta decernunt. To this ſo high a work, a whole Synagogue of wiſdom is little enough; to bring into courſe that is out, to ſet the foundations faſt, againſt this Synagogue of Satan. And this lo, is the ordinary and continual danger, I ſpake of. 1 Sam. 11. 15. Theſe to be helped with good Lawes. Gen. 49. 10. Prov. 8. 15.

But for all this danger, we might well enough ſtay a longer time and not come together; there is no ſuch preſent haſte to meet with that. There is another (I take it) more preſſing, as I ſaid before, upon a more ſpecial and preſent occaſion. Will you but look over into the next Pſalm following, into the beginning of it? there, you ſhall find another Congregation, a ſecond, caſting their heads, and confederate together, able to put foundations and all out of courſe. And then he reckons up a rabble of them. Edomites: the Edomites firſt, and you know what they cryed, Exinanite uſque ad fundamenta, Up with all, foundations and all: the Edomites, and Iſmaelites, and Moabites. and Agarenes, Gebal, and Ammon, and Amalek. And at laſt, Aſſur alſo was joyned with them: (Aſſur, that even then, purpoſed; and after did eat them all up one after another; yet he was then joyned with them.) Such a Congregation (as is ſaid) there is now abroad, and what will they do? No harm; bring nothing out of courſe (they ſay.) But it will be the wiſdom of this Congregation, to be provided for them, if they ſhould not do as they ſay: This Pſalm ſtands before that, that this Congregation may be before-hand, with that. 2 Upon ſpecial occaſion. By Synagoga inimicorum. Pſalm 83. 3. Verſe 6. Pſalm 137. 7.

Peace and perfect amity to be wiſhed before all: (no man doubts of that:) If it be poſſible as in us lieth, peace with all men. But, Peace will be had, with never the leſſe aſſurance, and with never the worſe conditions, if the Congregation be well appointed, that ſeek it. Rom. 12. 18.

And this is the ſecond work of this Congregation (if not the firſt.) Therefore (it may be thought) at this time called together, that there may be Multitudo Conſilii, ſoundly to adviſe of it; and Multitudo Auxilii, roundly to go through with it. The Text intends this of help ſpecially; for, in ſome Tranſlations, it is the Congregation of the Mighty; but howſoever, the very name is taken from אל, that Name of GOD, that is given Him for His ſtrength and Power. Of thoſe that are Mighty and ſo can ſhew themſelves, of thoſe is this Congregation. Ever remembring this, that they who aſſemble for an End; aſſemble alſo to deviſe how to furniſh meanes to compaſſe that End: (and indeed, of the End, properly, we conſult not, but of meanes rather.)

Luke 14. 15. rather.) Our SAVIOUR CHRIST, ſpake with his own mouth, Who will ever reſolve upon Warre, but they will ſit down firſt, and ſet down what forces will be needfull? and how much they will ſtand in? and how that is to be had or levied, that (as the wiſe-man ſaith) Reſpondit omnibus; Anſwers, takes order for all.

Eccl. 10. 19. Thus for the Synagogue: What for GOD? There is no doubt (bleſſed be GOD for it) but what Moſes ſaid of Juda (His own hands ſhall be ſufficient for Him, if thou LORD help him againſt his enemies) may be ſaid of this our Land: If GOD help us, ſufficient enough. And He will help us, if we help Him. Help GOD? what a word is that? Even the very word, the Angel uſed, when he had laid a curſe upon Meroz, for not coming to help the LORD: Again, leſt we might think it ſcaped him, upon deliberation he ſaith, to help the LORD againſt the Mighty, that is Siſera and Jabins mighty preparations. Ever, where the right is, there GOD is; when that in Danger, GOD in danger: they that help that, help him; and he will help them. If the Congregation, God; God, the congregation. They will fight from heaven (then) the ſtars in heaven will fight in their courſes for us, And then it will be an Auxiliary war right. And in ſign, that He will ſo, when they are met together about theſe matters, GOD comes Himſelf here in perſon, and ſtands among them. GOD, in the Congregation of the Gods, what more proper and kindly? And ſo much for the Gods, and for their Congregation.

Judges 5. 20.

III.

The two acts: I Joyntly. 1 To correct the word, [Gods.] 2 To put a difference between them and God.

Now for the two Acts of GOD: in and upon this Congregation: 1 His Standing, and 2 Judging: Firſt joyntly; After, apart: 1. Iointly: They are thought to be ſet firſt (theſe two) as two Correctors of the two former, Deorum and Deos, leſt the Gods of the Congregation ſhould be exalted above meaſure with this deifying revelation. Secondly, as two marks of difference between the firſt GOD, and the laſt Gods; ſo to let them ſee what manner of Gods they be indeed, how differing from Him.

God ſtands: they fall.

GOD ſtands: This may well refer to that in the fifth Verſe: But you ſhall fall. A ſtanding GOD; He who only ſtands, and will ſtand, when they all ſhall fall, and fall even to duſt, every God of them. And this could not be told us in a fitter place: the place where we ſtand, is compaſſed about with a Congregation of theſe fallen Gods, theſe ſame Dii caduci; with Monuments of the mortality of many a great Elohim in their times. And let me tell you this, that in the Hebrew tongue the Grave is called a Synagogue as well as the Church. All ſhall be gathered, even the Gods, even the whole Synagogue of them, into this Synagogue at laſt. So this firſt ſhewes them, Their Godſhips give them no immortality. Gods: but mortal, temporal Gods they be.

God judges: they are called to accompt. * Heb. 9. 27.

The other is of judging. That as they have no exemption from the firſt ſtatute, * Statutum eſt omnibus ſemel mori: So neither from the ſecond, Et poſt mortem judicium. They be Dii ſub judice: They be not Gods, abſque aliquo computo reddendo. When they have done judging others, they ſhall come to be judged themſelves. Dii caduci, Dii judicandi; Gods that ſhall fall, Gods that muſt come to judgement. From neither of theſe ſhall their Godhead excuſe themſelves.

These two then, ſever them from the firſt GOD, the Eternal GOD, and the Soveraign Judge of all. And ſhew (the one, their judging) that their Glory is not equal; (the other, their falling) that their Majeſty is not co-eternal, that ſo they may underſtand themſelves aright.

I Severally. The firſt Act. The Metaphor of ſtanding. 1 Gods preſence. Can. 9. 2.

And now to ſtanding and judging, either of them apart by it ſelf, Standing, firſt. The members of man, the eye, hand, and foot; and the acts of them, ſeeing, doing, ſtanding, are not in GOD (to ſpeak properly:) only by them, is noted in GOD, the efficacy of thoſe acts and members. By the eye, His knowledge: by the hand, His Power: by the foot, His Preſence. The meaning then is firſt, that GOD is preſent. It is not enough for Him to look down from heaven, and behold us afar off, but he comes and ſtands here. And not (as in the Canticles) Behind the wall, and looks in by the gates: but it is even in the Aſſembly it ſelf, even in the place where the Gods are.

Not as every where. a Jer. 23. 24. Eſay 63. 1:

Preſent? Why what great matter is that? Where is He not preſent? [a] Heaven and earth He fils, the earth is His footſtool, where then ſtands He not? Indeed GOD is preſent in all places: yet not in all alike. In ſome by a more ſpecial preſence, than in otherſome: And among all, and above all, there where the Gods are together.

But in a more ſpecial manner.

For though GOD be both in heaven and earth; yet we ſay (which art in heaven:) intending that there He is with a far more high and glorious preſence. And ſo, here is He in a more eminent ſort, For, no where on earth doth His Glory ſhine, and ſhew forth it ſelf ſo, as in a well ordered Aſſembly.

Matth. 18. 20. And, if where Two or three common Chriſtians be together in His name, there is He in the middeſt of them: when three or four hundred, and thoſe no common ordinary perſons, but of His own name (Gods) even a whole Congregation of them, (Of His Name, and in His Name too;) are together, in moſt ſolemn manner aſſembled? and to do His Work: ſhall He not much more be there, and in a much more excellent manner of preſence to aſſiſt them? Yes ſure: it toucheth His providence in the higheſt degree.

2 Gods Attention.

Preſent then: And ſecondly, the manner of His preſence: ſtanding. And that is a word of Site. Standing is a ſite, and it is a ſite of Attention. When we ſit and hear ought, that we would liſten better to, up we ſtand and leave ſitting: So do we (without the occaſion) uſually; Even to ſtir up our ſelves: For, ſitting we may fall on ſleep. This, to ſhew we ſhall not need to ſay to Him here, as in another Pſalm, they do, Up Lord why ſleepeſt thou? For He ſtands, and they never ſleep. The truth is: to be present, as good be absent, if we do not intend. This then sheweth GOD is so present, as He is also attentive: nothing passes but Deo astante & attestante; but He is an eare, nay an eye-witnesse, nay more than that, a heart-witnesse of all.

Stands then: and thirdly, the manner of His standing, which is (as is observed) נצב; and that is not the ordinary word for standing, when one flitts; so stands, as he will remove: no, but as one fixed, not to start: It is Statio militaris this, that pitch about their standard, not to remove thence, but still to maintain and keep their standing. So He, where you leave Him, you shall be sure to find Him. He makes it His rest, meanes to stand it out to the very last. 3 Gods perseverance.

These three, 1 Presence, 2 Attendance, 3 Perseverance, be in this standing of His. Present, for he stands; and standing marks: mark, and will mark from the beginning to the end. So we, not to conceive of Him, 1 as if he were away, 2 or here stood and noted not, 3 or did for a time, but would leave off and give over, and not stand it out. This, for standing.

IV.

And, so long as it is but standing and no more, it is no great matter; So he suffer them to go quietly and trouble them not. And indeed so long as GOD doth no more, he may be said to stand, and but even to stand. But (saith the Text) when He hath done standing, He hath not done. Stay a while, you shall see, He so stands as he will judge also before He have done. 2 The latter Act. Gods judging. He not only stands. The Act. But will judge also. 2 Cor. 5. 10.

The Congregation will not alwayes sit; nor GOD alwayes stand. But that is over and past, the Prophet here begins to set him up a Seat, to erect Him a Throne to sit down and judge in. And then (lo) the courses will change. We sit now, and he stands: he will sit then, and we all shall stand. All; Omnes stabimus ante Tribunal, Before his judgement seat. His first act (standing) then to take an end: and his latter act (judicabit) to have his turn too.

But by this we see (as before I told you) while He stood; He stood attentive: He stood not like an idol; was all the while no idle stander by, or looker on, but as the Writing was on the wall, Mene, Mene, He told and numbred; and Tekel, Stetit cum statera, He weighed and pondered well, every Motion that was made, every Bill that was read, every Consent or otherwise passed upon it. And weighed withall, whence every of them proceeded, whether from dutifull regard of him and his Presence; or otherwise, for some by-respect of our own. Stetit ut testis; as a Witnesse, he stood: Sedet ut Judex, Now sits as a Judge, and will give His doom accordingly. And upon whom will He give it? Not upon the meaner sort, upon inferiour persons, but even upon the greatest: Upon Deos, the Gods themselves. For even to them, doth this his judgement extend. They that sit and judge others, shall then stand and be judged themselves. They be Gods; but he is Deus Deorum, Psalm 50. 1. They are Judges; but He Judex judicum: Judex judicum and judiciorum both; Judge of judges and of Courts; and even of this high Court and all. Men may not, GOD may and will convent even the Conventions themselves, if they forget themselves. Yea even the rather, for that they are Gods, shall he judge them. And namely, how they used themselves in their Deity, when they sat in his place, and went under his Name. So while he stood, he stood attentive. Daniel 5. The Persons: He will judge the Gods, Deus.

And not for any fault they ever have made; as for those they have made here, in Synagoga. Above all, for them: for not regarding his Presence and standing here.

And because there is here a double mention of Deorum, and Deos; Deorum in Synagoga, and Deos in judicio: It will not be amiss to set them before us both at once. Now when they sit in Synagoga, how glorious! But when in judicio, they shall stand to be judged, how poor then! When God but stands and looks on, how secure! when he shall sit down to his Sentence, how full of fear then! Specially, when he shall take, and they shall give accompt of abusing His Presence here. For a special judicabit belongs to that, and remaines for them that so do. They that despise GOD'S long suffering, when he stands here, shall find and suffer his severity, and suffer it long, when he sits to judge there. The difference of the Persons; Deorum in Synagoga, and Deos judicabit.

But I cannot say, this will be presently, or out of hand. It may be, it will be deferred yet, for a while: it is not Judicat in the present; but judicabit in the Future, he will judge; Cum accepero tempus (as he saith, Psalm 75. 3.) he will take a time for it.

But take a time he will, and judge he will. Even the heathen, that have written de sera Numinis vindicta, are clear for this point; That you may well accompt of it, he that stands, will sit, and sitting, judge: Judge, and never a God of them all shall escape him. The time. The judgement will not be present. It is judicabit, the Future.

And in medio he will do it: in the midst, it shall be. The midst, either Inwardly of the Gods own selves, even of their own hearts (בקרב will bear it, and so it is taken, Jer. 31. 33.) There in the middest, in their heart: their Conscience accusing them, and a worm there gnawing when they shall see the evil, that doth follow of their carrying matters unduly; see any foundation shaked by it. The place. He will judge in medio. 1 Of Themselves.

Or, in the middest (that is) openly: as, openly He hath ever made it appear, that evil counsel, first or last, shall prove worst for them that gave it. 2 Of the world.

Or, in medio, referring it to the Parties: that is, in the middest between them both. Those that regard: and those other, that never looked after, nor cared for Him and His standing. 3 Of them that regard, and them that regard not. The future judicabit, and in medio, are two favours to us.

And it is well for us, it is Judicabit: for so we have a time to bethink us of it, and to prevent it. And again it is well for us, that it is In medio: For so, we may yet choose our side, which side we will fall on: for indeed, Iudicare is Actus in medio; it may be for, and it may be against. It is not necessary it should be against: GOD forbid: we may not prejudice it then.

All is, as we carry our selves here. For, as we here, so He there. They that saw Him standing and demeaned themselves accordingly; a judicabit for them. Those other, that ran ran on their own courses (His ſtanding there, notwithſtanding) a hard judgement will they have, they that be loth to endure it. And this for GOD; His ſtanding, and His judging.

V Our own duty to the Text. To regard Gods ſtanding.

And now to our ſelves, and to our duty to GOD, thus ſtanding and judging.

To avoid GOD'S judgement (the Apoſtle tells us) there is but one way: To judge our ſelves. And here now in this, not upon many, but upon this one Point only of GOD'S ſtanding (for, I will be bold to out off the other, His judging:) Regard His ſtanding, and you ſhall never need to fear His judging.

* 1 Cor. 11. 31.

Four things to be done.

To regard that; do but theſe four: 1 Set down this and believe it, that He is preſent. 2 So behave your ſelves, as if you did ſo believe. 3 To do that, ſhew your ſelves well affected to His ſtanding. 4 To ſhew that, Procure but thoſe meanes, that He may take pleaſure in His ſtanding. These four.

1 To believe God is preſent. Job 9. 11. John 1. 26. Heb. 11. 26.

First, never imagine this, that GOD is far enough off, or hath otherwiſe to buſie Himſelf, than to have a banc or foot in theſe Aſſemblies. But (with Jab) believe, He is hard by us, though we perceive Him not: Or (as the Baptiſt ſaid of CHRIST) Medius veſtrum ſtetit, quem vos neſcitis; He ſtandeth in the middeſt of us, though we know not ſo much. To ſee Him ſo ſtanding, with the eyes of faith, with which (the Apoſtle ſaith) Moſes ſaw Him that was invisible.

2 To behave our ſelves as if preſent. Matth. 21. 37.

Then will it follow of it ſelf, To do all we do, Tanquam DEO ſtante & inſpectante, As if God ſtood and beheld us. This we behove to think: When He comes thus to ſtand among us, He will ſay as much for Himſelf, as he did for his Son in the Goſpel, Certe reverebuntur Me, Surely they will reverence Me; my ſtanding, my being there, will make them the more carefull: If I come and ſtand among them, all will go the better, if it be but becauſe I am there. Not any thing at all ſhall (I truſt) but if ought ſhould be moved againſt His good liking, ſhall not our own hearts ſmite us, and tell us ſtraight, What? GOD ſtanding, and looking on, ſhall we offer this? What give Him an affront in His own preſence, to His own face? Nonne judicabit ſuper hoc? what, will He never judge for this jeer? And when He doth, ſhall it go for nought? Thus, to behave out ſelves as in His preſence.

3 To ſtand well affected to Gods ſtanding.

But yet (I know not how) this is not it; To do it for fear of Him, or of His judicabit: but to do it willingly, that is it. For, as if ſome were not willing to allow Him a place, not ſo much as to ſtand in, with a kind of Ironie (ſome think) he ſaith: Well yet howſoever, GOD ſtands in the Congregation, though againſt ſome bodies will, that would be content (if they durſt) to ſay with them in Eſay 30. 11. Cauſe the HOLY-ONE of Iſrael to ceaſe from us, Get Him away. Or with them in the Goſpel (the Gergeſites) not only give CHRIST good leave, but even to pray Him fair to be gone, and take His eaſe ſomewhere elſe, their matters would ſpeed better, if he were out of the way.

Matth. 8. 34.

Never ſpeak of that; there He ſtands, and there He will ſtand: He ought not, will not, cannot be excluded. To endure Him, that is not it: The point is, how we ſtand affected to His ſtanding, Whether we be willing with it: whether it be the deſire of our hearts, that He ſhould, and the joy that He doth ſtand, and will ſtand there.

Put caſe He ſtood not: would we earneſtly entreat Him to vouchſafe us His preſence, to take up His ſtanding among us? If He made as if he would be gone (as Luke 24. 29.) would we be inſtant with Mane nobiſcum Domine, Stay with us ſtill good Lord? MOSES ſaid, If thou go not with us, carry us not hence; would we ſay, If thou Lord ſtay not with us, what do we here? GOD be gone, migremus hinc, let us be gone too; And never hope for good of that Aſſembly where He is not.

Exod. 33. 15.

4 To procure the meanes that God may be willing to ſtand.

Now fourthly, if we be willing and glad, if we take comfort in His ſtanding, hereby ſhall we be tried; if we uſe all meanes, as will procure Him to ſtay in our Aſſembly the more willingly; as will make His ſtanding pleaſant and not grow tedious to him. And ſuch things there are: And theſe they are.

Thoſe be four.

1 To be of one mind.

One ſpecial thing that gives Him content, is a Place where there is Concord and Unity. [a] At Salem (that is) where peace is, In pace factus eſt locus Ejus (So read the Fathers) there is his Tabernacle: And that Tabernacle is the Tabernacle of the Congregation: His feet, and our feet, both ſtand willingly in the Gates there. (The reaſon:) [b] For, it is at unity within it ſelf. There loves He to ſtand. And there, his Spirit, where [c] they were all, with one accord, in one place. [d] Qui facit unanimes habitare in domo, if He make all of one mind that are in the houſe, if brethren to dwell together in unity, O how good, O how pleaſing is that ſtanding to Him! It paſſes Aarons perfume, His ointment is nothing to the delight of it.

b Pſalm 122. 2.
c Acts 2. 1.
d Pſalm 68. 6.
Pſalm 133. 2.

And in very deed, if we conſider it well, it is the vertue (this of Concord) that is moſt proper, nay eſſential (then) to a Congregation: without it, a gregation it may be, but no Congregation. The Con is gone: a diſgregation rather. Enough to make him to be gone (that.) For, if there [a] ſpring up a root of bitterneſs: if the [b] evil ſpirit get in, that was ſent upon Abimelech and the men of Sichem: [c] If the diviſions of Reuben do make great thoughts of heart: there, GOD ſtands upon thornes. But where [d] the hearts of all the Congregation are bowed as the heart of one man, there ſtands GOD, and there he delights to ſtand.

d 2 Sam. 19. 14.

To uſe no cunning, but plain dealing.

Another: He takes pleaſure to ſtand among them, that are good and true of heart. Where he finds truth in the inward parts: Where, without art or artificial gloſing or cunning carrying of things under-hand, men go plainly to work, every one in the ſincerity and ſingleneſſe of an honeſt upright meaning. And the more plainneſs, ever the more pleaſure God takes, there to ſtand. Truth, as it is the mightieſt, ſo it is the wiſeſt thing, when all is done. They that love it not, but to cover, and colour and carry all by cunning, they ſhall never ſtand in Gods Tabernacle. Neither they in his, nor he in theirs. Pſalm 15. 1.

and,

One more. There is a word, and it is a great word in this Book, καὶ τὸ ἀυτὸ In idipſum; that is, to look to the thing it ſelf, the very point, the principal matter of all; to have our eye on that, and not off it, upon alia omnia, any thing but it. So ſay I (again) upon the thing it ſelf, not upon ſome perſons or perſonal reſpects: God accepts no perſons, nor loves them that do. The very firſt thing, that in the very next Verſe, he finds fault with, and charges them with, is this: when men are for, or againſt a thing (be it what it will be) and neither, for it ſelf, but only, becauſe it proceeds from ſuch or ſuch perſons: Neither of theſe is in medio. Idipſum, that is the Centre, that the middle: That place is GOD'S place. To go to the point, drive all to that, as alſo to go to the matter real, without declining from it, this way or that, to the right hand or to the left for any perſonal regard. To look to Idipſum. Neither to by matters: Nor to perſonal reſpects.

And laſt of all, that which pleaſeth him beſt of all: And that is, where he finds a ready willing mind, his heart is upon ſuch. And where his heart is, ever his feet ſtand at eaſe: Calcat roſas, he treads upon roſes there. In the Song of Debora it is thought, there is ſet down a pattern of the Vertues or Faults of an Aſſembly. In that Song, there are two Hallelujah's, two Benedicite's for it. Firſt, at the very beginning, Halleluiah, Praiſe the Lord: Why? for the people that came off, and offered themſelves ſo willingly. And again ſeven verſes after, My heart is upon the Governours, that offered (themſelves) and made the people to offer ſo willingly, Halleluiah, Praiſe the Lord. Halleluia, for the Princes, Halleluia for the people; Bleſſed be GOD, for both. To do that we do, cheerfully. Judges 5. 2 Verſe 9. Judges 5. 9. Judge. 5. 23. 24.

Then have you again after thoſe, two verſes together; in the one, Meroz curſed for their backwardneſſe; And Iael, for her forwardneſſe, bleſſed and bleſſed again. For, this indeed is the marrow of the Sacrifice, the fat of the offering: and without this, all is poor and lean. b And readily. * Pſalm 120. 5. Matth. 25. 21

This is ſure: GOD, loves not to dwell in Meſech: that is interpreted, prolongatus eſt. And His Son calling on, Serve nequam & piger, ſhewes, He loves piger as evil, as He does nequam. And His Spirit cannot skil of theſe ſame tarda molimina. In a word; none of them to be wearied, with ſtanding I know not how long.

And ſee the very next word of all, the next that followes theſe immediately: is How long! So he begins his complaint, the firſt word of the next Verſe; which ſhewes, he loves it not.

Not, that he can be weary. It is an Infirmity (that) and ſo is grief, and ſo is repentance; and they cannot fall into GOD: They are attributed to him though. And GOD is ſaid as to [a] repent, and [b] to be grieved, ſo to be ſtark [c] weary. In no other ſenſe, but this: That if he be not weary, no thanks to us: For, if it were poſſible, if the divine Nature were or could be ſubject to it; if GOD could be weary, if his feet were not of braſſe (Apoc. 1. 5.) we would put him to it: we do even what in us lieth to tire him outright, to make him cry uſque quo, how long? a Gen. 6. 6. b Epheſ 4. 30. c Jer. 6. 11.

But, 1 where there is accord without Reubens diviſions: 2 where plain meaning, and dealing, without (as Eſay calls them) theſe ſame deep-digged devices; 3 where the eye is upon idipſum, and no ipſum elſe; 4 where GOD is not conſtrained to dwell in Meſech, but the People and their Governours offer willingly; there ſtands GOD, and there will he ever ſtand. Of that place he ſaith; Hæc eſt requies mea, This is my reſt, here will I ſtay, for I have a delight therein. Eſay 29. 15. Pſalm 132. 14.

Thus doing then, thus procuring, our Aſſembly thus qualified, we perform our duty to GOD, and to his ſtanding. And this done, we ſhall never need to fear judicabit come when it will.

And now to conclude. Mine unfeigned hearty prayer to GOD is, and daily ſhall be, that if ever in any, he would ſtand in this Congregation. And if ever any uſed the meanes ſo to procure him, we may uſe them. The rather, that Eccleſia malignantium, the malignant Synagogue may not ask with deriſion, Where was then their GOD? Where ſtood he? Behind the wall (ſure) not in the Aſſembly; Such, proceedings, and his ſtanding will never ſtand together. To have regard what will be ſaid abroad.

But rather, that all may ſay, Verily GOD was among them, Of a truth GOD ſtood in that Congregation? where, with ſo good accord, ſo good things, ſo readily were paſſed. CHRIST was in the midſt of them, his holy Spirit reſted on them. Pſalm 26. 5. 1 Cor. 2, 14.

Yet I know, what men ſay off or on, is not it; what GOD ſaith, that is all in all. To men we do not; To GOD, we ſtand or fall, whoſe judicabit we cannot ſcape, either the one way or the other: but have a judicabit for us, that we may, if we yield his ſtanding all due reſpect, Even Euge ſerve bone, intra in gaudium Domini, which in the end will be worth all. Matth. 25. 23.

But if any ſhall ſay; O the time is long to that (peradventure not ſo long though, as we reckon:) well yet in the mean time, now for the preſent, it ſtands us in hand to uſe him well, and our ſelves well to him. For if he ſtand not to us, we ſhall not ſubſiſt, we ſhall not ſtand, but fall before our enemies. This time is now; this danger is at hand.

Uſe him well then: Stand before Him thus ſtanding, with all due reverence and regard: that as by His preſence, He doth ſtand among us; ſo he may not only do that, but by His Mercy alſo ſtand by us, and by His Power ſtand for us. So ſhall we ſtand and with-ſtand all the adverſe forces: and at laſt (for thither at laſt we muſt all come) ſtand in His judgement, Stand there upright: To our comfort (for the preſent) of His ſtanding by us; and to our endleſſe comfort (for the time to come) of His judging for us. To have regard of our preſent uſe of Him againſt our enemies.

PESTILENCE

AUGUST XXI. Anno Dom. MDCIII.

PSALM CVI. Ver. XXIX. XXX.

Thus they provoked Him to anger with their own inventions, and the Plague was great (or brake in) among them.
Then ſtood up Phinees, and prayed (or, executed judgement*) and ſo the Plague was ceaſed (or,* ſtayed.)

HERE is mention of a Plague: of a great Plague; For, there died of it four and twenty thouſand. And we complain of a Plague at this time. The ſame axe is laid to the root of our trees. Or rather, becauſe an axe is long in cutting down of one tree, the Razor is hired for us, that ſweeps away a great number of haires at once (as Eſay calleth it) or a Sythe that mowes down Graſs, a great deal at once.

Numb. 35. 9.

Eſay 7. 20.

But here is not only mention of the Breaking in of the Plague; in the XXIX. Verſe; but of the ſtaying or ceaſing of the Plague, in the XXX.

Rom. 5. 4.

Now, Whatſoever things were written afore-time, were written for our learning, and ſo was this Text. Under one, to teach us how the Plague comes, and how it may be ſtayed.

The diviſion. The Plague is a diſeaſe. In every diſeaſe, we conſider the Cauſe and the Cure. Both which are here ſet forth unto us in theſe two verſes. In the former, the Cauſe how it comes. In the latter, the Cure how it may be ſtaid. To know the Cauſe is expedient; for if we know it not, our Cure will be but palliative, as not going to the right. And if knowing the Cauſe, we add not the Cure, when we are taught it, who will pity us? For, none is then to blame, but our ſelves.

I. Of the Cauſe firſt: and then of the Cure. The cauſe is ſet down to be twofold: 1 GOD'S anger, and 2 their inventions.

GOD'S anger, by the which: and their inventions, for the which, the Plague brake in among them.

II. The Cure is likewiſe ſet down: and it is twofold, out of two ſignifications of one word, the word (Palal) in the Verſe. Phineesprayed (ſome read it:) Phinees executed judgement (ſome other;) and the word bears both. Two then: 1 Phinees prayer, one: 2 Phinees executing judgement, the other; by both which the plague ceaſed. His prayer referring to GOD'S anger: His executing executing judgement; to their inventions. GOD'S wrath was appeaſed by his prayer: Prayer refers to that. Their inventions were removed by his execution of judgement: The execution of judgement refers to that. If his anger provoked do ſend the plague; His anger appeaſed will ſtay it. If our inventions provoke his anger, the puniſhing of our inventions will appeaſe it. The one worketh upon GOD, pacifieth Him: The other worketh upon our ſoul: and cures it. For there is a cure of the ſoul, no leſſe than of the body, as appeareth by the Pſalm, Heal my ſoul, for I have ſinned againſt thee. Pſalm 99. 8. Pſalm 41. 4.

We are to begin with the Cauſe of the plague, in the firſt Verſe: And ſo to come to the Cure, in the ſecond.

I.

OF the Cauſe. 1 Firſt, there is a Cauſe. 2 And ſecondly, What that Cauſe may be.

1 That there is a cauſe (that is) that the plague is a thing cauſal, not caſual; comes not meerly by chance, but hath ſomewhat, ſome cauſe that procureth it. Of the cauſe.

Sure, if a Sparrow fall not to the ground without the providence of GOD, of which two are ſold for a farthing; much leſſe doth any man, or woman, which are more worth than many ſparrows. A cauſe there is. Matth. 10. 29.

And if any one man comes not to his End (as we call it) by caſualty, but it is GOD, that delivers him ſo to die: How much more then, when not one, but many thouſands are ſwept away at once? The Philiſtines; in their plague, put the matter upon trial of both theſe wayes: 1 Whether it were GOD'S hand, 2 Or whether it were but a chance. And the event ſhewed, it was no caſualty, but the very handy-work of GOD upon them. Exod. 21. 13.

And indeed, the very name of the Plague doth tell us as much. For Deber in Hebrew ſheweth, there is a reaſon, there is a cauſe, why it cometh, And the Engliſh word Plague, coming from the Latine word Plaga, which is properly a ſtroke, neceſſarily inferreth a cauſe. For where there is a ſtroke, there muſt be One that ſtriketh. And in that both it, and other evil things (that come upon us) are uſually in Scripture called Gods judgements; If they be judgements, it followeth, there is a Judge they come from. They come not by adventure; by chance they come not. Chance and Judgment are utterly oppoſite. Not caſually then, but judicially. Judged we are; For when we are chaſtened, we are iudged of the Lord. 1 Sam. 6. 9. 1 Cor. 23. 32.

There is a Cauſe: Now, what that cauſe is, Concerning which, if you ask the Phyſitian, he will ſay, the cauſe is in the ayr. The Ayr is infected; the Humors corrupted: the Contagion of the ſick, coming to and converſing with the ſound. And they be all true cauſes. The cauſe is. 1 Natural.

The Ayr. For ſo we ſee, by caſting * aſhes of the furnace towards heaven in the ayr, the ayr became infected, and the plague of botches, and blaines, was ſo brought forth in Ægypt. 1 The ayr infected. * Exod. 9. 8.

The Humors. For to that doth King David aſcribe the cauſe of his Diſeaſe: (that is) that his moiſture in him was corrupt, dried up, turned into the drought of Summer. 1 The Humors corrupted.

Contagion. Which is clear by the Law: where, the leprous perſon for fear of contagion from him, was ordered to cry, that no body ſhould come near him: To dwell apart from other men; The clothing he had worn to be waſhed, and in ſome caſe to be burnt: The houſe-walls he had dwelt in, to be ſcraped; and in ſome caſe, the houſe it ſelf to be pulled down. Pſalm 32. 4. 3 Contagion. Lev. 13. 45, 46, 52.

In all which three reſpects, Salomon ſaith, A wiſe man feareth the plague, and departeth from it, and fools run on and be careleſſe. A wiſe man doth it, and a good man too. For King David himſelf durſt not go to the Altar of GOD at Gibeon, to enquire of GOD there, becauſe the Angel that ſmote the people with the plague, ſtood between him and it: (that is) becauſe he was to paſſe through infected places thither. Prov. 14. 16. 1 Chro. 21. 3.

But as we acknowledge theſe to be true, that in all diſeaſes, and even in this alſo, there is a Natural cauſe; ſo we ſay, there is ſomewhat more, ſomething Divine, and above nature. As ſomewhat, which the Phyſitian is to look unto, in the plague: ſo likewiſe ſomething for Phinees to do, and Phinees was a Prieſt. And ſo ſome work for the Prieſt, as well as for the Phyſitian, and more, then (it may be.) 2 Supernatural. By which, GOD.

It was King Aſa's fault. He in his ſickneſſe, looked all to Phyſitians, and looked not after GOD at all. That, is noted as his fault. It ſeems his fault. It ſeems, his conceit was, there was nothing in a diſeaſe, but natural, nothing but bodily: which is not ſo. For, infirmity, is not only a thing bodily; there is a Spirit of infirmity, we find, Luke 13. 11. And ſomething ſpiritual there is, in all infirmities; ſomething in the ſoul to be healed. In all, but ſpecially in this; wherein that we might know it to be ſpiritual, we find it oft-times to be executed by ſpirits. We ſee an Angel, a deſtroying Angel, in the plague of Ægypt: another in the plague in Senacherib's Camp: a third in the plague at Jeruſalem under David: a fourth, pouring his phial upon earth, and there fell a noyſome plague upon man and beaſt. So that no man looketh deeply enough into the cauſe of this ſickneſſe, unleſs he acknowledge the Finger of God in it, over and above any cauſes natural. Exod. 12. 13. Eſay 37. 36. 1 Chro. 21. 16. Rev. 16. 2.

GOD then hath his part. GOD? but how affected? God, provoked to anger: ſo it is in the Text: His anger, His wrath it is, that bringeth the plague among us. The Verſe is plain; They provoked Him to anger, and the plague brake in among them. God provoked to anger.

Generally, there is no evil (ſaith Job) but it is a ſpark of Gods wrath. And of all evils, the Job 5. 6.

1 Chron. 21. 7. plague is begun (ſaith Moſes, Num. 6. 46.) So it is ſaid GOD was diſpleaſed with David, and he ſmote Iſrael with the plague. So that if there be a plague, GOD is angry: and if there be a great plague, God is very angry. Thus much for By what; for the anger of God, by which the plague is ſent. Now for what.

For which. Sin in general. Heb. 3. 8. Epheſ. 5. 6. There is a cauſe in God, that he is angry. And there is a cauſe, for which he is angry. For he is not angry without a cauſe. And what is that cauſe? For what is God angry? What, is God angry with the waters when he ſends a tempeſt? (it is Habacuk's queſtion.) Or is God angry with the earth, when He ſends barrenneſſe? Or with the ayr, when he makes it contagious? No indeed, His anger is not againſt the Elements, they provoke him not. Againſt them it is, that provoke Him to anger? Againſt men it is, and againſt their ſinnes, and for them cometh the wrath of God upon the children of diſobedience.

a Mica 7. 3. b Gen. 6. 12. c 1 King. 8. 38. d Rom. 5. 12. e Pſalm 38. 5. f Jer. 8. ult. g Jer. 48. 46. h Matth. 5. 26. And this is the very cauſe indeed. As there is Putredo humorum; ſo there is alſo putredo morum. And putredo morum, is more a cauſe, than putredo humorum. The Corruption of the ſoul, the a corruption of our wayes, more than the b corrupting of the ayr. The c plague of the heart, more than the ſore, that is ſeen in the body. d The cauſe of death, (that is) ſinne, the ſame is the cauſe, of this c kind of death, or the plague of mortality. And as the f Balm of Gilead, and the g Phyſitian there, may yield us help, when Gods wrath is removed: ſo, if it be not, no balm, no medicine will ſerve. Let us with the woman in the Goſpel, h ſpend all upon Phyſitians, we ſhall be never the better, till we come to CHRIST, and he cure us of our ſinnes, who is the only Phyſitian of the diſeaſes of the ſoul.

Mark 9. 2 And with CHRIST, the cure begins ever within. Firſt, Son thy ſins be forgiven thee: and then after, take up thy bed and walk. His ſinnes be firſt, and his limbs after. As likewiſe when we are once well, Chriſts counſel is, ſin no more, leſt a worſe thing come unto thee. As if ſin would certainly bring a relapſe in a ſickneſs.

Particular ſin. But ſhall we ſay, the wrath of GOD for ſins indefinitely? That were ſomewhat too general: may we not ſpecifie them, or ſet them down in particular? Yes, I will point you at three or four.

1 Fornication. Numb. 25. 1. Firſt, this plague here, as appeareth by XXVIII. Verſe, the Verſe next before, came for the ſin of Peor (that is) for fornication (as you may read.) And not every fornication, but fornication paſt ſhame; as was that of Zamri there, with a daughter of Moab. And indeed if we mark it well, it fits well. For, that kind of ſin (fornication) doth end in Vlcers and ſores; and thoſe are infectious as the Plague it ſelf: a proper puniſhment; ſuch ſore for ſuch evil.

2 Pride. 1 Chro. 21. 14 Secondly, Davids plague of ſeventy thouſand (which we mention in our Prayer) that came from Pride, plainly: His heart was lifted up to number the people. And that ſeems ſomewhat kindly too, and to agree with this diſeaſe. That pride which ſwels it ſelf, ſhould end in a tumor, or ſwelling; as for the moſt part this diſeaſe doth.

3 Blaſphemy. Eſay 37. 36. Numb. 16. 46. Thirdly, Zenacheribs plague (it is plain) came from Rabſhakes blaſphemy: Blaſphemy able to infect the ayr, it was ſo foul. In which regard, Aarons act might be juſtified, in putting odours into his Cenſer, to purifie the Ayr from ſuch corruption.

4 Neglect of the Sacrament. 1 Cor. 11. 30. Exod. 5. 3. Exod. 4. 24. And laſt, the Apoſtle ſets down the cauſe of the plague at Corinth: For this cauſe (ſaith he) that is, for neglect of the Sacrament: Either in not caring to come to it; or in coming to it, we care not how: For this cauſe, is there a mortality among you; and many are ſick, and many are weak, and many are fallen aſleep. And this is no new thing. Moſes Himſelf, his neglect of the Sacrament, made him to be ſtricken of God, that it was like to have coſt him his life. And he ſaith plainly to Pharaoh: If they neglected their Sacrifice, GOD would fall upon them with the Peſtilence: which appeareth by this, that the Sacrament of the Paſſeover, and the blood of it, was the meanes to ſave them from the Plague of the deſtroying ANGEL in Ægypt.

The phraſe for ſin, Their inventions. In matters of Religion; Deut. 12. 8. A little now of the phraſe; that their ſins are here called by the name of their inventions. And ſo (ſure) they are: as no wayes taught us by God, but of our own imagining or finding out. For indeed, our inventions are the cauſe of all ſins. And if we look well into it we ſhall find our inventions are ſo. By Gods injunction we ſhould all live, and His injunction is: You ſhall not do every man what ſeems good in his own eyes (or finds out in his own braines) but whatſoever I command you, that only ſhall you do. But we, ſetting light by that charge of his, out of the old diſeaſe of our Father Adam (Eritis ſicut Dii, ſcientes bonum & malum) think it a goodly matter to be witty, and to find out things our ſelves to make to our ſelves, to be Authors, and inventors of ſomewhat, that ſo we may ſeem to be as wiſe as God, if not wiſer: and to know what is for our turnes, as well as he, if not better. It was Sauls fault. God bad deſtroy Amalek all; and he, would invent a better way to ſave Matth. 16. 22. ſome (forſooth) for ſacrifice, which God could not think of. And it was St. Peters fault, when he perſwaded Chriſt from his Paſſion, and found out a better way (as he thought) than Chriſt could deviſe.

Deut. 32. 17. 2 Tim. 4. 3. This is the proud invention, which will not be kept in, but makes men even not to forbear in things pertaining to Gods Worſhip, but there, to be ſtill deviſing new tricks, opinions and faſhions, freſh and newly taken up, which their Fathers never knew of. And this is that, which makes men that have itching eares, to heap to themſelves Teachers, according to their own luſts, which may fill their heads full, with new inventions.

In the common life. And this is that, that even out of Religion, in the common life, ſpoiles all. The wanton invention, in finding out new meats in diet, in inventing new faſhions in apparel, which men ſo dote on (as the Pſalm ſaith at the 32. Verſe) as they even go a whoring with them, with their own inventions, and care not what they ſpend on them. And know no end of them : but as faſt as they are weary of one, a new invention is found out ; which whatſoever it coſt, how much ſoever it take from our Almes, or good deeds, muſt be had, till all come to nought. That the Pſalmiſt hath choſen a very fit word, that for our inventions, the plague breaks in among us : for them, as for the primary, or firſt moving cauſe of all, Indeed for them, as much and more than for any thing elſe.

We ſee then, 1 Firſt, that a cauſe there is. 2 That that cauſe is not only natural, but that God Himſelf hath a hand in it. 3 God as being provoked to anger. 4 To anger for our ſinnes in general (and for what ſinnes in ſpecial) For our ſins proceeding from nothing, but our inventions. Which cauſe if it continue, and yet we turn not to the Lord (as Amos the fourth,) then will not his anger be turned away, but His hand will be ſtretched out ſtill (as Eſay the ninth.) And no way to avoid the one, but by appeaſing the other.

II. Of the Cure.

For the cure now. One contrary evil is ever cured by another. If then it be anger; which is the cauſe in God, anger would be appeaſed. If it be Inventions, which is the cauſe in us, of the anger of God, they would be puniſhed and removed. That ſo, the cauſe being taken away, the effect may ceaſe. Take away our inventions, Gods anger will ceaſe. Take away Gods anger, and the plague will ceaſe.

Two Readings (we ſaid) there were : 1 Phinees prayed, or 2 Phinees executed judgement. Palal, the Hebrew word will bear both. And both are good : And ſo we will take them both in.

Againſt Gods anger. 1 Prayer.

Prayer is good againſt the plague, as appeareth : Not only in this plague in the Text, wherein all the Congregation a were weeping, and praying before the door of the Tabernacle : But in King b Davids plague alſo ; where we ſee, what his prayer was, and the very words of it.

And in c Ezekias's plague, who turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto GOD (and his prayer is ſet down :) GOD heard his prayer, and healed him. And (for a general rule) d If there be in the Land any peſtilent diſeaſe : Whatſoever plague, whatſoever ſickneſſe it be, the prayer and ſupplication in the Temple made by the people, every man knowing the plague of his own heart, God in heaven will hear it, and remove his hand from afflicting them any further.

a Numb. 25. 6
b 2 Sam. 24. 17.
c Eſay 38. 3.
d 1 King. 8. 37, 38, 39.

And it ſtandeth with good reaſon. For, as the Ayr is infected with noyſome ſcents or ſmels, ſo the infection is removed by ſweet odours, or incenſe : which Aaron did in the Plague (put ſweet odours in his Cenſer, and went between the living and the dead.) Now there is a fit reſemblance between Incenſe and Prayer : e Let my prayer come before thy preſence, as the Incenſe. And when the Prieſt was within, burning Incenſe, g the people were without at their prayers. And it is expreſly ſaid, h that the ſweet odours were nothing elſe, but the prayers of the Saints.

Numb. 16. 48.
e Pſalm 141. 2.
g Luke 1. 10.
h Rev. 5. 8.

Prayer is good, and that Phinees prayer. Phinees was a Prieſt, the ſon of Eleezar, the Nephew of Aaron. So as, there is Vertue, as in the prayer, ſo in the perſon that did pray : in Phinees himſelf.

2 Phinees prayer, as a Prieſt.

As (we know) the office of a Sergeant being to arreſt, the Office of a Notary to make acts ; the act that is done by one of them, is much more authentical, than that which is done by any common perſon. So every Prieſt being taken from among men, and ordained for men in things pertaining to GOD, that he may offer prayers : the prayers he offereth out of his office, and ſo even in that reſpect there is (cæteris paribus) a more force, an energy in them, as coming from him, whoſe calling it is to offer them ; than in thoſe, that come from another, whoſe calling it is not ſo to do.

Heb. 5. 1.

To this end, God ſaith to Abimelech : Abraham is a Prophet, and he ſhall pray for thee, and thou ſhalt live. So that the prayer of a Prophet, in that he is a Prophet, is more effectual.

Gen. 20. 7.

And in the Law, you ſhall find it all along : when men come to bring their ſacrifice for their ſins, it is ſaid, the Prieſt ſhall make an attonement for them before the Lord, and their ſinnes ſhall be forgiven them.

And in the Prophets we ſee plainly, in time of diſtreſs, Ezekiah ſent unto the Prophet Eſay, to entreat him to lift up his prayer for the remnant that were left : and ſo he did, and was heard by God.

And in the New Teſtament, St. James advice is, In the time of ſickneſs to call for the Prieſts, and they to pray over the party,, and that Prayer ſhall work his health ; and if he have committed ſins they ſhall be forgiven him. For, where the grace of prayer is, and the calling both, they cannot but avail more, then where no calling is, but the Grace alone.

The prayer of Phinees, and of Phinees ſtanding. What need there be any mention of Phinees ſtanding? Was it not enough to ſay Phinees prayed? It ſkils not whether he ſat or ſtood ; for praying it ſelf was enough.

No : we muſt not think, the Holy Ghoſt ſets down any thing that is ſuperfluous. Somewhat there is, in that he ſtood. Of Moſes it is ſaid before in this Pſalm, that he ſtood in the gap to turn away the wrath of God. In Jeremy it is ſaid, though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me : So there is mention made of ſtanding alſo. And the Prophet himſelf puts God in mind, that he ſtood before Him, to ſpeak good for the people, and to turn away His wrath from them (that is) put God in mind of the very ſight of His body.

Jer. 18. 20.

For, though God be a Spirit, and ſo in Spirit to be worſhipped ; yet inaſmuch as He hath given us a body, with that alſo are we to worſhip Him, and to glorifie him in our body and ſpirit, which both are Gods : and to preſent (or offer) our bodies to God, as a holy and acceptable ſacrifice, in the ſeaſonable ſervice of Him.

John 4: 24.
1 Cor. 6. 20.
Rom. 12. 1.

And to preſent them decently. For that alſo is required in the ſervice of God. Now judge in your ſelves, Is it comely to ſpeak unto our betters? ſitting ? Sedentem orare, extra diſciplinam eſt (ſaith Tertullian) to pray ſitting or ſit praying, is againſt the order of the Church. The Church of God never had, nor hath any ſuch faſhion.

1 Cor. 14. 40.
1 Cor. 11. 13.

All

All tendeth to this, as Cyprians advice is, Etiam habitu corporis placere Deo, even by our very geſture, and the carriage of our body, to behave our ſelves ſo, as with it we may pleaſe God. Unreverent, careleſs, undevout behaviour pleaſeth Him not.

It is noted of the very Angels, Job 1.6. Eſay 6.2. Dan.7.10. that they were ſtanding before God. If them it becomes; if Phinees, if Moſes, if Samuel, and Jeremy, it may well become us to learn our geſture of them.

Againſt their inventions. 1 Execution of Judgement. Num.24.7,8.

Prayer is available to appeaſe Gods wrath, and ſo conſequently to remove the Plague: but not prayer alone. For though it abate the anger of God (which is the firſt) yet it goeth not high enough, takes not away the ſecond cauſe (that is) our inventions, which are the cauſe of Gods anger. We ſee it plain in *Num.*25.6, they were all at prayers, and Phinees among them, he and the reſt. But yet the plague ceaſed not for all that: till (in the verſe following) Phinees took his javelin, wherewith in the very act of fornication, he thruſt them both through, Zamri and his Woman, and then the plague was ſtayed from the children of Iſrael. For, as prayer referreth properly to anger: ſo doth executing judgement to ſin, or to our inventions the cauſe of it.

Prayer then doth well: but prayer and doing juſtice, both theſe together (jointly) will do it indeed. And if you diſjoyn or ſeparate them, nothing will be done. If we draw near to God with our mouthes, and honour him with our lips, it will not avail us, if judgement be turned back, or juſtice ſtand afar off. Eſay 29. 14.

2 By Phinees as a Prince in his Tribe, and a Magiſtrate.

There are two perſons. Both of them were in Phinees. For, as he was a Prieſt, ſo he was a Prince of his Tribe. So then, both theſe muſt joyn together, as well the devotion of the Prieſt in prayer, which is his Office: as the zeal of the Magiſtrate in executing judgement, which is His. For, Phinees the Prieſt, muſt not only ſtand up, and pray: but Moſes (the Magiſtrate alſo) muſt ſtand in the gap, to turn away the wrath of God, that he deſtroy not the people. No leſs he, than Aaron, with his golden Cenſer, to run into the midſt of the Congregation, to make atonement for them when the plague is begun.

Moſes he gave in charge for the executing of them, that were joyned to Baal-Peor, Num. 25. 4. Phinees, he executed the charge: Moſes ſtood in the gap, when he gave the ſentence: Phinees ſtood up, when he did the execution. And theſe two are a bleſſed conjunction. One of them without the other, may miſs; but both together never fail. For when Zamri was ſlain; and ſo when Rabſhakeh periſhed; and ſo when the inceſtuous Corinthian was excommunicated, in all three, the plague ceaſed.

3 By every man upon himſelf: 2 Cor. 2. 11. 1 Cor. 9. 27. 1 Cor. 11. 3.

But what if Moſes give no charge: what if Phinees do no execution, as oft it falleth out? How then? In that caſe, every private man is to be Phinees to himſelf; is not only to pray to God, but to be wreaked, do judgment, chaſten his own body; and ſo judge himſelf that he may not be judged of the Lord. For every one, for his part, is a cauſe of the judgments of God, ſent down, and ſo may be, and is to be, a cauſe of the removing them. Somewhile the King, as David by the pride of his heart. Otherwhile the people, by their murmuring againſt Moſes and Aaron. So that, King and people, both, muſt judge themſelves; every private offender, himſelf. Zamri if he had judged himſelf, Phinees ſhould not have judged him. The inceſtuous Corinthian, if he had judged himſelf, St. Paul had not judged him. For, either by our ſelves, or by the Magiſtrate; or if by neither of both, by GOD Himſelf. For, one way or other ſin muſt be judged. Zamri, by his repentance; Phinees, by his prayer or doing juſtice; or GOD, by the plague ſent among them. 1 Chr.21.1,8. Num. 16. 3.

Now then, theſe two: 1 Phinees ſtood up and prayed, 2 and Phines ſtood up and executed judgment, if they might be coupled together I durſt undertake, the concluſion would be, and the plague ceaſed, But either of them wanting I dare promiſe nothing.

To conclude then. 1. The plague comes not by chance, but hath a cauſe. 2. That cauſe is not altogether natural, and pertaines to Phyſick; but hath ſomething ſupernatural in it, and pertaines to Divinity. 3. That Supernatural Cauſe is the wrath of God. 4. Which yet is not the firſt cauſe. For, the wrath of God, would not riſe, but that he is provoked by our ſins (and the certain ſins, that provoke it, have been ſet down.) 5. And the cauſe of them, our own inventions. So, our inventions beget ſin; ſin provokes the wrath of God; the wrath of God ſends the Plague among us: To ſtay the plague, Gods wrath muſt be ſtayed: to ſtay it, there muſt be a ceaſing from ſin; That ſin may ceaſe, we muſt be out of love with our own inventions and not go awhoring after them. Prayer, that aſſwageth anger: To execute juſtice, that abateth ſin: To execute juſtice, either publikely, as doth the Magiſtrate, or privately, as every man doth, or may do upon himſelf. Which joyned with prayer and prayer with it, will ſoon rid us of that we complain: and otherwiſe, his anger will not be turned away, but his hand ſtretched out ſtill.

HEB. Chap. XIII. Ver. XVI.

To do good, and to distribute forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased.

IN the tenth Verse the Apostle saith, We have an Altar, of which they have no right to eat, that serve the Tabernacle. Habemus Altare. We have, that is, Christians: So it is proprium Christianorum, proper to Christians: not common to the Jewes together with Christians; they have no right to communicate, and eat there, that serve the Tabernacle. And yet it is commune Altare, a common Altar to all Christians, they have all right to eat there.

And so it is externum Altare, not only a spiritual Altar in the heart of every Christian; then S. Paul should have said habeo, or habet unusquisque, I have, and every Christian hath in private to himself: but we have an Altar, that is, all Christians have; and it must be External, else all Christians cannot have it.

Our Head CHRIST offered His Sacrifice of Himself upon the Crosse; Crux Altare CHRISTI: and the Crosse of CHRIST was the Altar of our Head, where he offered the unicum, verum, & proprium Sacrificium, the only, true, proper sacrifice, propitiatory for the sinnes of mankind; in which all other sacrifices are accepted, and applicatory of this propitiation.

1 The Only Sacrifice, one in it self, and once only offered, that purchased Eternal Redemption: and if the Redemption be Eternal, what need is there, that it should be offered more than once, when once is all-sufficient?

2 And the True Sacrifice: All other are but Types and Representations of this sacrifice; this only hath power to appease GOD'S wrath, and make all other Sacrificers, and sacrifices acceptable.

And the Proper Sacrifice: As the Psalm saith, Corpus aptasti mihi, thou hast fitted me with a Body; the Deity assumed the Humanity, that it might accipere a nobis quod offerret pro nobis; being the Deity could not offer, nor be offered to it self, He took flesh of ours, that he might offer for us.

Now as Christs Crosse was His Altar, where He offered Himself for us; so the Church hath an Altar also, where it offereth it self: not Christum in capite, but Christum in membris, not Christ the Head properly (but only by commemoration) but Christ the members. For, Christ cannot be offered truly, and properly, no more but once upon the Crosse; For he cannot be offered again, no more than He can be dead again: and dying and shedding blood, as He did upon the Crosse, and not dying, and not shedding blood, as in the Eucharist, cannot be one Action of Christ offered on the Crosse, and of Christ offered in the Church at the Altar by the Priest, by Repreſentation only, no more than Chriſt and the Prieſt are one perſon: and therefore though in the Croſſe and the Euchariſt there be eadem ſacrificata, the ſame ſacrificed thing, Chriſt is the Body and Blood of Chriſt, offered by Chriſt to his Father on the Croſſe, and received and participated by the Communicants in the Sacrifice of the Altar; yet Idem ſacrificium quoad actionem ſacrificii, or ſacrificandi, it is impoſſible there ſhould be the ſame ſacrifice, underſtanding by ſacrifice the action of ſacrificing. For then, the Action of Chriſts ſacrifice, which is long ſince paſt, ſhould continue as long as the Euchariſt ſhall endure, even unto the worlds end; and his conſummatum eſt is not yet finiſhed: And dying and not dying, ſhedding of blood and not ſhedding of blood, and ſuffering and not ſuffering cannot poſſibly be one action: and the Repreſentation of an Action cannot be the Action it ſelf.

Contra Fauſtum, lib. 20. 21. Ad Hebr. Hom.

And this conceipt was unknown to Antiquity. All the Fathers held it a ſacrifice, only becauſe it is a Repreſentation or Commemoration of the True ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the Croſſe; even as our Saviour commanded, Do this in remembrance of me. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Hujus ſacrificii caro & ſanguis, ante adventum Chriſti, per victimas ſimilitudinis prænuntiabatur: in paſſione Chriſti, per ipſam veritatem reddebatur: poſt aſcenſum Chriſti, per Sacramentum memoriæ celebratur, &c. And Saint Chryſoſtome, Hoc eſt exemplar illius, &c. And Thomas Aquinas giving the reaſon of the diverſe Names given to this Sacrament, ſaith, that it hath a triple ſignification. 1. Reſpectu præteriti, one in reſpect of the Time paſt, inaſmuch as it is commemorative of the LORD'S Paſſion, which is called a true ſacrifice, and according to this, it is called a ſacrifice. 2. Reſpectu præſentis, in reſpect of the preſent, that is, of the Unity of the Church, unto which men are gathered by this Sacrament, and according to this it is named a Communion, or Synaxis, becauſe by it we communicate with Chriſt, and are partakers of his Fleſh and Deity. 3. Reſpectu futuri, in reſpect of that which is to come, inaſmuch as this Sacrament is preſignurative of the fruition of GOD, which ſhall be in heaven; and accordingly it is called viaticum, becauſe it here furniſheth us in the way, that leads us thither. Again, it is called the Euchariſt, that is, bona gratia, the good grace, becauſe Eternal life is the grace of God, Rom. VI. or elſe, becauſe it really containes Chriſt, who is full of grace. It is alſo called Metalepſis, or Aſſumptio, becauſe by it we aſſume the Deity of the Son. All this, Part. III. Q. LXXII. Artic. IIII. In corpore. And in his Anſwer ad III^m. he addeth, That this Sacrament is called a Sacrifice, inaſmuch as it doth repreſent the Paſſion of Chriſt; it is likewiſe called Hoſtia an Hoſt, inaſmuch as it containeth Chriſt himſelf, who is Hoſtia ſalutaris, Epheſ. V.

Here is a Repreſentative, or Commemorative, and Participated Sacrifice of the Paſſion of Chriſt, the True Sacrifice, that is paſt; and here is an Euchariſtical Sacrifice; but for an External proper Sacrifice, eſpecially as ſacrifice doth ſignifie the Action of ſacrificing, here is not one word. And therefore this is a new conceipt of latter men, ſince Thomas his time, unknown to him, and a meer Novelliſm. And the cure is as bad as the Diſeaſe: Though Thomas gives no other reaſons, why it is called a ſacrifice, yet (ſay they) Thomas denieth it not. For, that is plainly to confeſſe that this is but a patch added to Antiquity. And yet when he ſaith, it is a Repreſentative or Commemorative Sacrifice reſpectu præteriti, in reſpect of that which is paſt, that is, the Paſſion of Chriſt, which was the true Sacrifice, he doth deny by conſequence, that it is the true ſacrifice it ſelf which is paſt. And if Chriſt be ſacrificed daily in the Euchariſt, according to the Action of Sacrifice, and it to be one and the ſame ſacrifice offered by Chriſt on the Croſſe, and the Prieſt at the Altar, then can it not be a Repreſentation of that ſacrifice which is paſt, becauſe it is one and the ſame ſacrifice and action preſent.

Therefore Saint Paul proceeds in the XV. Verſe: By him therefore let us offer the ſacrifice of praiſe to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips giving thanks to His Name. Let us offer up to GOD; Chriſtians then have an offering: and let us offer up to GOD continually; this is the ground of the daily Sacrifice of Chriſtians, that anſwereth to the daily ſacrifice of the Jewes. And this ſacrifice of praiſe and thanks may well be underſtood the Euchariſt, in which we chiefly praiſe and thank God for this his chief and great bleſſing of our Redemption. And this and all other Sacrifices of the Church external or ſpiritual muſt be offered up and accepted per Ieſum, in, by, and through Chriſt. S. Paul ſaith not, Ipſum offeramus, Let us offer Him (that is) Chriſt; but let us offer and ſacrifice per Ipſum by him, in whom only we and our ſacrifice are accepted. And Rom. XII. I. Offerte corpora, Offer your bodies living ſacrifices, holy and acceptable to God, which is your reaſonable ſervice: It is not Corpore ſine animis, not bodies without ſoules, For in them without ſoules, there is no life, no holineſs, no accepting: and this is mans reaſonable ſervice; all elſe is without reaſon. And S. Peter (the firſt Pope as they reckon him, who I am aſſured had infallibility) ſaith I Pet. II. V, Ye alſo as lively ſtones are built up a ſpiritual houſe, and holy Prieſthood, to offer up ſpiritual Sacrifices acceptable to God, per Ipſum Chriſtum, by JESUS CHRIST. And Saint James (Chap. I. Ver. XVIII.) tells us, that to this end God begat us by his Word of truth, that we might be primitiæ creaturarum: not offer to God the firſt fruits of our fields or cattel, but that we might offer up our ſelves as firſt fruits to God. So all the offerings of the Church are the Church it ſelf; and Chriſt the Head offered corpus naturale, his natural Body, his ſoul and fleſh for a ſacrifice; for the ranſom and price of our ſinne, thereby purchaſing eternal Redemption, Heb. 10. 11. and by this one offering He perfected for ever them that are ſanctified, Verſe 13. Neither doth Chriſt there (that is) in heaven where he now appears in the preſence of God, offer often, or any more for us, but this one; there is appearing, but no offering. And the Apoſtle gives the reaſon of it. For then he muſt have often ſuffered ſince the foundation of the the world, *Heb.*9.24,25,26. He appears in heaven as our High Priest, and makes intercession for us; but He offers his natural body no more but once, because he suffers but once. No offering of Christ (by S. Pauls rule) without the suffering of Christ: the Priest cannot offer Christs natural body without the suffering of Christs natural body.

So likewise the Church, which is Christs mystical body, offers not Christs natural body: it hath no power to offer the natural body, which is proper to Christ only, Pono animam & nemo tollit; not the Church, nor they that are not the Church. And there is no such thing in Scripture, nor I presume can easily be shewed out of any of the probable and undoubted Fathers, but the Church offers corpus mysticum, Christs mystical body (that is, it self) to God in her daily Sacrifice.

First, all sacrifice is proper and due only to God. Be men never so venerable, never so worshipfull, yea adorandi, to be adored also, yet no man ever offered sacrifice to any, unless he knew him, or thought him or feigned him to be God. True Angels would never accept Sacrifice: and wicked Angels only sought it, because they also affected to be deified. Saint Aug. de Civ. Dei, l. 10. c. 4. Et Cont. Faust. l. 20. 21.

In which respect, never any Priest at the Altar, even super corpus Martyris, over the body or sepulchre of any Martyr, prayed thus, Offero tibi Sacrificium, Petre, Paule, Cypriane, I offer sacrifice to Thee, O Saint Peter, Saint Paul, or Saint Cyprian. All celebrities towards them, whether praises to GOD for their victories, or Exhortations to their imitation, are only Ornamenta memoriarum, the Ornaments of their memories, not Sacra, nor Sacrificia mortuorum, tanquam Deorum, not the sacred things or Sacrifices of the dead, as if they were GOD'S, Lib. 8. C. 27.

And therefore Saint Augustine often denies Temples, Altars, and Sacrifices inward and outward, visible and invisible to all Martyrs and Saints, as being proper and peculiar to GOD only. And I trust, Prayers and Invocation be in this number. For as Orantes & Laudantes, praying and praising, we direct our signifying words to him, to whom we offer the things signified in our hearts: so sacrificing, we know the visible sacrifice is to be offered to no other but to him, whose visible sacrifice in our hearts we our selves ought to be, Nos esse debemus, Lib. X. Cap. XIX. And then it followeth in the XX. Chapter. The true Mediator inasmuch as taking upon Him the form of a servant, the Man JESUS CHRIST became a Mediator of God and Man; whereas in the form of GOD He takes sacrifice with His Father, yet in the form of a servant, Maluit esse, quam sumere, He chose rather to be a Sacrifice, than to receive Sacrifice; lest even by this occasion any man might think he might sacrifice to a Creature, by this (Nature) He is a Priest; the same the offerer and the same the thing offered: Cujus rei sacramentum, of which things he would have the daily Sacrifice of the Church to be a Sacrament, quæ cum ipsius capitis corpus sit, seipsam per ipsum discit offerre: which Church being the body of our Head himself, doth learn to offer it self (that is, the Church) by Him, that is, by Christ. Here the Body of the Head, is the mystical body of Christ: and therefore the daily Sacrifice of the Church is not the Natural Body of Christ, but the Mystical Body that offers it self to God by Christ. This made Saint Augustine to say of Angels, and Elect and Glorious Saints, Nec illis sacrificemus, sed cum illis sacrificium Deo simus. Let us not sacrifice to them, but let us be a Sacrifice to God together with them, cap. XXV.

But a singular and full place we have in the Xth. Book, and VI. Chap. Where having shewed what Sacrifice is, that is, every work which is performed, that we may cleave to God in an holy Society, being referred to that end of good, by which we may be truly blessed: (as a man consecrated to the name of God, and dying to the world, that he may live to God, is a Sacrifice, as the Body chastened by temperance, is a Sacrifice, such as the Apostle calls for, Offer up your bodies to be a Living Sacrifice, Rom. 12.1. And if the body, the servant and instrument of the soul, much more the soul it self is a sacrifice; As likewise works of mercy and the like:) Hence (saith he) it cometh to passe, Ut tota ipsa, redempta civitas societasq; sanctorum universale sacrificium offeratur DEO, &c. [That the whole redeemed City and society of the Saints is offered up an universal sacrifice to God, by our great Priest; who also offered himself in His passion for us, that we might be the body of so great a Head, in the form of a servant. For this he offered: in this he was offered, because according to this he is our Mediator, in this our Priest, in this our Sacrifice.] and then urging again the Apostles words, Rom. 12.1: of offering our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to GOD, which is our reasonable service of Him, he adds, Quod totum sacrificium ipsi nos sumus [All which whole sacrifice we are:] We the Members are this whole sacrifice, not Christ the Head. For as in the body there are many members, and many offices of those members; so we being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members of one another, having divers gifts according to the grace given us. Hoc est sacrificium Christianorum, multi unum corpus sumus in Christo, [this is the sacrifice of Christians, many are one body in Christ.] This must necessarily be the mystical body of Christ; the natural body it cannot be: Quod etiam Sacramento Altaris Fidelibus noto frequentat Ecclesia; ubi ei demonstratur, quod in illa oblatione quam offert, ipsa offeratur: [Which Sacrifice the Church also frequents in the Sacrament of the Altar, well known to the faithfull; in which it is demonstrated to the Church, that in that oblation which the Church offers, the Church it self is offered.] I hope, the Church is the mystical body of Christ, not the natural, Lib. XX. cap. X. Ipsum vero sacrificium corpus est Christi, quod non offertur ipsis, quia hoc sunt & ipsi; denying Temples, Altars and Sacrifices to Martyrs and Saints: he saith [The sacrifice it self is the Body of Christ, which is not offered to them, because they are also this sacrifice.] This may suffice to satisfie any reasonable man of the Sacrifice of the Church, in Saint Augustines judgement. Yea give me leave to add one place more, because it may stand for many: and that in Lib. 13. cap. 13. Nec jubent, &c. [Neither do they they command, that we ſhould Sacrifice to them, but only to Him, whoſe Sacrifice we together with them ought to be a Sacrifice, Ut ſæpe dixi, & ſæpe dicendum eſt, as I have often ſaid, and muſt often ſay.]

This then is the daily Sacrifice of the Church in Saint Auguſtin's reſolute judgement, even the Church it ſelf, the Univerſal Body of Chriſt, not the Natural Body; whereof the Sacrament is an Exemplar, and a Memorial only, as hath been ſhewed. And when they ſhall prove the Churches Sacrifice to be the Natural Body of Chriſt, and the ſame ſacrifice with the Sacrifice of the croſs, as it denoteth the Action or Sacrificing, becauſe the Fathers often uſe the word corpus Chriſti, The Body of Chriſt, they ſhall be further anſwered.

In the mean time the Church of England in her reformed Liturgie (offering our ſelves, our ſoules, and bodies to be a living ſacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which is our reaſonable ſervice of Him) may truly and boldly ſay, that in this ſhe hath farre exceeded their Canon of their Maſſe, in which there is not one ſyllable, that mentions the ſacrifice of our ſelves and ſouls and bodies, which is the only thing that God looks and calls for at our hands, and in Chriſt our Head, is moſt pleaſing; nay more, only pleaſing to Him, and in our power to offer properly.

We deny not then the daily Sacrifice of the Church (that is, the Church it ſelf) warranted by Scriptures and Fathers. We take not upon us to ſacrifice the natural Body of CHRIST otherwiſe than by the commemoration, as CHRIST Himſelf, and Saint Paul doth preſcribe. They rather, that take a power never given them over the natural body of CHRIST, which once offered by Himſelf purchaſed Eternal Redemption all-ſufficient for ſin, to offer it again and often, never thinking of the offering of CHRIST'S myſtical body, the Church, that is, our ſelves, our ſouls and bodies; they (I ſay) do deſtroy the daily Sacrifice of Chriſtians, which is moſt acceptable to God.

Now then that which went before in the Head Chriſt on the croſſe; is daily performed in the members, in the Church. Chriſt there offered Himſelf once for us; we daily offer our ſelves by Chriſt, that ſo the whole myſtical Body of Chriſt in due time may be offered to GOD.

This was begun in the Apoſtles, in their Liturgie, of whom it is ſaid (Acts 13.) Miniſtrantibus illis, while they miniſtred and prayed, the Holy Ghoſt ſaid unto them, &c, Eraſmus reads it, Sacrificantibus illis, while they ſacrificed and prayed. If they had offered Chriſts Natural body, the Apoſtles would ſurele have made ſome mention of it in their Writings, as well as they do of the commemorative Sacrifice. The word is λειτουργούντων ſo it is a Liturgical Sacrifice; or a ſacrifice performed or offered in our Liturgy or form of Gods worſhip: ſo the offering of our ſelves, our ſouls, and bodies, is a part of Divine worſhip.

Now as it is not enough to feed our own ſoules, unleſſe we alſo feed both the ſoules and bodies of the poor; And there is no true faſt, unleſſe we diſtribute that to the poor, which we deny to our own bellies and ſtomachs; And there cannot be a perfect and compleat adoration of GOD in our devotions; unleſſe there be alſo doing good and diſtributing to our Neighbours; therefore to the Sacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving in the Euchariſt, in the Church, mentioned in the fifteenth Verſe, we muſt alſo add beneficence and communication in this Text: For, Devotio debetur capiti, Beniſicentia membris, the ſacrifice of Devotion is due to our Head CHRIST, and piety and charity is due to the Members. So then, offer the Sacrifice of praiſe to GOD daily in the Church, as in the fifteenth Verſe; and diſtribute and communicate the Sacrifice of compaſſion and Almes to the poor out of the Church, as in this Text.

Shall I ſay extra Eccleſiam; out of the Church? I do not ſay amiſſe, if I do ſay ſo: yet I muſt ſay alſo, intra Eccleſiam; this ſhould be a ſacrifice in the Church, the Apoſtles kept it ſo in their time; Primo Die, the firſt day of the week, when they came together to pray and to break bread, Saint Pauls rule was, Separet unuſquiſque; Let every one ſet apart, or lay by in ſtore, as GOD hath proſpered him, that there be no gatherings, when I come. And our Liturgy in the Offertory tenders her Prayers and Almes on the Lords day or Sunday, as a part of the ſacrifice or ſervice of that day and of GOD'S Worſhip; which I wiſh were more carefully obſerved among us For this alſo is a Liturgie or Office, ſo called by the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 9. 12. ἡ διακονία τῆς λειτουργίας, the Adminiſtration of this Service, or Office, or Liturgie: there is the word Liturgie or Office. For, the daily ſervice and ſacrifice not only ſupplieth the want of the Saints; but is abundant alſo by many thankſgivings unto GOD. So the Lords day or Sunday is then beſt kept and obſerved, when to our prayers and praiſes and ſacrifices of our ſelves, our ſouls and bodies, we alſo add the ſacrifices of our goods and Almes, and other works of mercy to make it up perfect and compleat, that there may be Opus diei in die ſuo, the work of the day in the proper day thereof; and theſe two ſacrifices of praiſe and Almes joyned here by GOD and his Apoſtle, may never be parted by us in our lives and practice.

Firſt then we ſee, that as our SAVIOUR firſt preached in the Mount, and then healed in the Cities and Townes; ſo when we have offered our ſelves, our ſouls, and bodies, to be living and ſpiritual ſacrifices in the Church unto GOD, by our High Prieſt CHRIST, we muſt not reſt there, but muſt alſo offer our goods and almes, whether in the Church or out of the Church, to the relief of the poor members of CHRIST, that are in want. And that theſe two: 1 the ſacrifice of Praiſe, 2 and the ſacrifice of Almes may appear to be indiviſible and inſeparable, inſomuch that he that will give himself, his soul, and body to GOD, will never spare also to give his goods to those that suffer hunger, and thirst, and nakedness; See how our Apostle joynes these two: 1 First, Per Ipsum offeramus; By CHRIST our High Priest, Let us offer our selves: 2 and lest that should be thought, to be all the whole Sacrifice, that man is to render to his GOD, He adds this second, with a Nolite oblivisci, by a kind of Negative, which is many times more forcible than any ordinary Affirmative: to do good, and to distribute forget not: fearing as it were, lest when man had done his homage and fealty to GOD, of whom he holds in chief, he might think, that were enough to sacrifice to GOD in the Church on the Lords day, and then forget his Brother all the week after, and never to take compassion on him: whereas the truth is, Unus amor, but duplex objectum: the love is but one, wherewith we love God for Himself, and our brother who is Gods image for His sake, as there be two eyes, yet but one visual faculty. For as it is to no purpose, to learn our duty at the mouth of Gods Preachers on the Lords day, and never to put it in practice all our week, or life following, as if it were a matter only for the brain and understanding; whereas in truth, first it should edifie our faith, and then fructifie in our lives: So it is a very short love to professe to love God, whom we have not seen, and starve our poor brethren, who lye at our gates in such sort, that we cannot choose but see them.

So then the words contain, first an Act, Beneficentiæ & communionis; to do good, and to distribute: and that must needs be a great work, for it is to do good, and nothing is truly great, but that which is good. 2. A Caveat, Nolite oblivisci, it is a work of great consequence, very important to our salvation, it may not be forgotten. 3. How small or vile it may seem in it self, yet it is of a high rate and great esteem: sacrificia sunt, & talia sunt; they are sacrifices and sacrifices of much price, though they be but crumms of bread, or drops of water: And so much the more precious, because they are grateful to God; delectatur, or placatur Deus, God is pacified, or God is well pleased: and all the world is well given to appease and pacifie His wrath, and gain His favour. The division. 1 2 3

Now the work is compriſed in two words, Beneficentia & communicatio: beneficence and distribution. Beneficence or bounty, that is, Affectio cordis; the affection and compassion of the heart: And Communication and distribution, that is Opus manuum; the work of the hand. And these two may be no more divided, than the two other sacrifices, of devotion in the sacrifice of our selves, and charity in the Relief of the poor: For Beneficence is ut Fons, as the fountain and spring or cistern, whence all works of compassion do arise; and distribution is ut Rivuli, as the Rivers or channels or pipes, by which the waters of comfort and goodness are carried to hungry soules.

Beneficence is as the Sun, distribution is as the light that proceeds from the Sun: At the beneficence of the heart there we must begin, and by the distribution and communication of the hand, there is the progresse. And it is not enough that our heart is charitable, and full of compassion, if we be cluster-fisted, and close-handed, and give nothing: Go and be warm, and go and be fed, and go and be cloathed, they be verba compassionis, words of compassion: but if we do not as well feed and cloath, as our tongue blesseth, we may have gentle hearts like Jacobs voice, but our hands will be cruel and hairy like Esaus, that vowed to kill his Brother.

And true Religion is no way a gargalism only, to wash the tongue and mouth, to speak good words: it must root in the heart, and then fructifie in the hand, else it will not cleanse the whole man.

Now, God only is good, and the universal good of all things, and goodness it self: If there be any good in man, it is particular, not universal, and it is participatum: man is not good in himself, but only by participation: Goodness in God is Essentia, essence and being; and He is so goodness, that He cannot be but goodness, good in Himself, and good of Himself.

In man goodness is Accidens, an Accident; and such an accident, as most commonly he is devoid of it, but only by the grace and likeness of GOD: So that man is good sola similitudine bonitatis divinæ, only by the similitude and imitation of the divine good: the nearer to God, the nearer to goodness; and the further from God the more removed from all goodness. So that as in every good, the greatest good is most desired: so in doing good, that is ever best, that joynes us most to our greatest good.

All creatures are said to be good, by the goodness of God, Ut principio, as the principle, and efficient cause of all good. 2. Ut exemplari, as the pattern and exemplar, and Idea, according to which all good things are fashioned. 3. Ut fine, as the end and final cause for which all things were made. 1 2 3

And the like is in this beneficence and doing of good. For first, it must be good à causa, in regard of the first and efficient cause, which is God: as the good fruit proceeds from the good tree and the tree owes his goodness to God that transplants and waters it. 2. It must be good in fundamento, in respect of the foundation: as the house, as the living stones and spiritual buildings are therefore good, because they are built upon the immoveable foundation, the Rock Christ. And 3. It must be good a fine, from the end to which it is referred: it takes beginning from the Holy Ghost; and the riches of Grace, and it must be directed only to the supream and grand end of all things, Gods glory, and the relief of the poor members of Christ. 1 2 3

And these two, Beneficence and Communication, the eminent and imperated Acts of true Religion, the mother of all Vertues, they are also the acts of many other particular Vertues. For first, they are the Acts of Charity, because they proceed from the love of God: 2. They are the 1 2

3 acts of Justice, because Relief and sustentation is the due debt, that is owing to the poor: 3. They are the acts of Liberality and Bounty, because the free gifts of men, not the merit of the needy:

4 4. They are the acts of Mercy, because they participate with the wants and miseries of the afflicted.

So that as impendere, is Bonitatis: to do good, and distribute, and bestow is the act of goodnesse; so likewise rependere, to pay them, where we owe them, is Justitiæ, the work of Justice. And therefore our goods, they are not properly ours, in such sort that we can carry them with us, when we go hence: but they are bona pauperum; so our goods, that they are also the goods of the poor, whereof we are rather Stewards, than Proprietaries and Lords: and he that so keeps and hoords them, that he doth not expend them, to buy the Kingdom of heaven with them, at the hands of the poor (Ipsorum est Regnum) he doth indeed detinere alienum; he defrauds the poor, and detains that which is anothers. And therefore the Psalm saith, Dispersit, dedit pauperibus, Justitia Ejus manet in æternum (Psalm 112.9.) He hath dispersed and given to the poor: his righteousnesse endures for ever; not his mercy only, but his justice also.

Where, by the way observe; that there it is first, Dispersit, dedit; he dispersed and gave to the poor: here, in the Text that lies before me this day, it is Dedit, dispersit; He gave it, and then he dispersed it, to the poor, in such sort, that He did as it were study how to dispence it to all sorts of poor, even as many kinds of poor, as He could devise and find fit to receive it, learned old men, widowes, children and prisoners, and the like.

And this goodnesse whether we must understand it plainly, as the Intention of the heart, that doth the good, and the works of the hand, that distributes and divides it: or whether we understand it, as some do, that there is Beneficentia in iis quæ dantur; beneficence in those things that are given: and Communicatio in iis quæ servantur, Communication in those things that we give not: because in these times, Omnia erant communia, All things were in common, and so they did communicate even those things which they did not communicate and distribute: This goodnesse, I say, hath two properties of true goodnesse: First, it is diffusivum sui; diffusive of it self, it imparts it self to as many as it can, it heaps not all upon one, as those do that rob all others, that they may enrich their heir: Secondly, it is unitivum Deo, & proximo, it is unitive, and unites us to God, for whose sake we do it, and to our Neighbour to whom we do it.

And surely as in the civil States, Quid leges sine moribus vanæ proficiunt? What will the best lawes profit us, if there be no obedience; no manners? are they not altogether vain, of lesse force than Spiders webs? and in Christianity, Quid fides sine operibus? What will faith and knowledge profit us, if it fructifie not in life and works? what can Devotion, and Justice profit, if Almes follow not? He that will send an Embassage to God, that shall surely speed, he must send sighs from his heart, tears from his eyes, prayers from his mouth, and also alms from his hands, and they will prove of that force, that God cannot deny them.

And if we will take with us the resolution of the Learned, out of the form of the last Judgement, it will amount to thus much; that not only Peccata commissionis, sinnes of commission, or sinnes committed will condemn us, but also Peccata omissionis, sinnes of omission, or omission of doing good, as not feeding and cloathing the poor, will cast us into hell: and auferre aliena & non dare sua, to take other mens goods from them, either by force or fraud, and not to give our own to the poor, both are damnable, though not in the same degree. And therefore our Saviours counsel is well worth our learning (Luke 16.) Make you friends of the unrighteous Mammon, that when you shall fail, they may receive you into everlasting Tabernacles. And these external gifts they are the viaticum, or vians to carry us to heaven: for though Non hic Cœlum, heaven be not here in this life; yet Hic quæritur Cœlum, here in this life heaven is to be sought, and here it is either found or lost. So then, shall we fast from meat, and not from sin? shall we pray, and rob the poor? shall our tongue praise charity, and our hands spoil those that need our charity? GOD forbid.

And now, most glorious Bounty, and Communication, and Distribution, what shall I say of thee? but that thou art Vita sanctorum; the very life, and joy, and delight of all Saints: and when Saints must leave this life, and all things else leave them, and they leave all things; yet thou leavest them not, but art Comes defunctorum the unseparable companion of the dying. For of all that a man hath, there is nothing that shall accompany him to the Tribunal of the great Judge of the quick and the dead, but Peccata & bona opera, Sins and good works: and then it will appear, that the voice of a few good works, done for Christs sake, will speak lowder and plead harder, and more effectually for us, than all our glorious words and professions.

And this doing good and distributing, is not only profitable, but admirable also, For why? by evils and wants of others, it self is bettered; and it becomes beautiful, by the uncleanesse and nastinesse of the wretched: it is enriched by others poverty, by others infirmities it grows strong; and bearing of burdens attols and lifts it up: and therein of all other it is happy, de spinis colligit uvas; it does that, which CHRIST denies to be feisable, it gathers grapes of thornes, and sweetest consolation out of greatest miseries; and that which is contrary to all Nature, and Natural reason, ex agro sterilissimo paupertatis, messem copiosissimam colligit, out of the most barren fields of poverty, it reapes the most plentiful harvest. And herein are these two Vertues most to be admired, Misericordia miseriam aliorum facit nostram, Mercie makes other mens miseries and calamities to be our own: and Charitas facit bona nostra proximorum, Charity makes our goods to be our Neighbours.

If a travelling man were heavy loaden, were it not a great and happy ease for him, if his fellow-traveller would bear part of his burden? And Divitiæ, onus: Riches is a heavy load, it presses down many so much, that they are never able to climb up to heaven. What is then to be done? Da partem comiti: give thy companion (the poor man) a part with thee, thou shalt refresh him that is weary of his wants, and thy self shall runne most lightly and nimbly to Heaven gates.

And now if thou wilt do as my Text teacheth (that is, to do good, and distribute) yet take these few rules in the way, they will make thee to make the more and better speed. First, do it Voluntary, willingly: not by compulsion, as if it were a grievous tax or seaze: For GOD more regards thy affection, than thy gift; the widows two mites, more than great heapes of treasure: and why? GOD is Ponderator spirituum, non panis aut monetæ: GOD is a weigher of the spirits, rather than of bread and money. 2. Do it hilariter, chearfully: for thou well knowest what GOD loves most, that is, a chearful giver. He doth not respect Quid, what is that thou giveſt; but Ex Quanto, the chearful heart it comes from. 3. Do it Affabiliter, with kind words and fair language: Not of a wearinesse to be rid of a begger, as the unjust Judge righted the importunate widow; but out of compassion to relieve him. And certainly, when there is Pietas in re, Compassion and pity in the deed, non sit in verbis contumelia: though thou give him good counsel, yet load him not with reproaches and contumelies; upbraid him not with his want or diseases; for GOD might have turned the Tables, and made him as rich as Abraham, and thee as poor and infirm as Job or Lazarus. 4. Do it Festinanter, speedily: for Blessed is he that considereth the poor and needy, and prevents his petition: For, this is indeed to give twice, to give quickly; to have his money or his bread prepared and ready at his hand, as more ready to give than they to ask: And this is indeed Quærere pauperes, quibus benefacias, to seek and search for poor, to whom thou mayst do good: and know withall that Abraham's speed to entertain CHRIST and His Angels, made sinum Abrahæ receptaculum Lazari: Abraham's bosome to be the receptacle and place of Rest to Lazarus, as well as Lazarus's patience advanced him to Abraham's bosome. And 5. Do it Humiliter, in all humility: Ut eluas peccatum, non ut corrumpas judicem: to Redeem thine own sinnes by thine Almes, as David said to Nebuchodonozar, but not to corrupt thy Judge, that thou may'st sinne more freely, more securely. For, GOD is like to bear the loudest cry; and it may be the cry of thy sinne, may decry or cry down thine Almes; and the scale of sin make thine Almes to be found too light. 1 2 3 4

Again, take I beseech you these things into your consideration: First, Quis petit? Who it is, that askes an Almes of thee. Thou takest it to be the poor man, but thou mistakest it, It is DEUS in paupere, & CHRISTUS in paupere: GOD thy Creator, and CHRIST thy Redeemer in the poor man: and doest thou hoord up for thy wife, or thy child, or thy servant, that will spend it in riot; Et negas Creatori, vel Redemptori; and dost thou deny to GOD thy Creator, and CHRIST thy Redeemer, that bought thee with his own blood and life. 5

Secondly, Quid petis? what it is that he doth ask: in short, Suum non tuum: He askes not thine, thou hast only the use, and dispose of it, but He askes His own; and what hast thou, that thou hast not received? even to thy self, thy soul, and thy body, all the gifts of Nature, and all the gifts of grace? And when all is said, this is indeed all, Da quod dedi: give me that I first gave thee, a fruit of mine own Tree; I bestowed it on thee: Da & reddam, give me but some crummes, some drops out of thy heap, out of thy Fountain, I will repay it: Nay, da & debitor ero; give me any part, I will become a debtor to thee upon my word and promise, to repay it in Heaven. 2

Thirdly, Ad quid, To what purpose doth GOD ask thee by the poor man? to gain it to himself? No, ad mutuandum, only to borrow of thee; and be assured, he is the best pay-master, he will restore to thee an hundred fold. And wilt thou lend to a Jew, or a Turk for ten or eight in the hundred; Et Deo non accommodas, and wilt not lend to thy Creator and Redeemer, who will give an everlasting weight of glory for thy crummes and drops. 3

And fourthly, Quid daturus, qui petit; what will He give thee, that now begs of thee? For thy broken bread and meat, He will make thee partaker of the Feast of the Lamb; and for a few drops of water, He will crown thee in the Kingdom of glory: pro poculo aquæ frigidæ, torrens voluptatis; for a cup of cold water (water the common element, and cold water, that cost thee not the charge of a fire to warm it) there is a torrent, nay, a very sea of pleasures provided for thee for all Eternity. 4

Do good then and distribute; but do it Manibus propriis with thine own hands, if thou canst spare it: nor by other mens hands, which may die soon after thee, or else deceive thy trust. Lucerna in manibus, non a tergo, hang not thy light at thy back, to shine after thy death, but carry it in thy hand; be Executor of thine own Will. And do it Secreto; in secret, without a Trumpet: The seed must be buried or harrowed under the earth, else it neither roots nor multipies: which though perdi videtur, it seems to be lost, yet unlesse it be thus sowed and buried, revera perditur, it will be lost indeed: And the more thou soweſt, the more thou shalt reap, for he that sowes sparingly, shall reap sparingly. 4 bred, because it never was forgotten, never omitted in the Church, whether thou art put, as to the School of Memory. This is but lip-labour; or at the most but an heart-labour, it costs nothing but breath: but to give Almes: to do good, and to distribute, that costs more; it will put thee to the charge of bread, and water, and cloathes, and the like, which is chargeable and burdensome. Any thing but our purses: No, that must not be left out neither: To do good and to distribute, to rob thine own back and thy belly, to feed the hungry and cloath the naked, Nolite oblivisci; forget not to add the Sacrifice of Almes, to that other of devotion and praise.

And now in the second place, mark the Caution: Nolite oblivisci: to do good, and to distribute forget not. Offer the sacrifice of praise daily: and if daily, it is likely enough to be remem- Pars II.

And surely, I may call this the Chapter of Remembrances, or the Remembrancers Chapter. In the second Verse: Memento hospitalitatis, forget not to be hospitable: Abraham entertained Angels: yea, the Son of GOD, the LORD of Angels by his hospitality. In the third Verse: Memento vinctorum, & afflictorum laborantium; Remember those that are in bonds, and afflicted, being your selves in bonds and adversity together with them: for, as CHRISTUS pascitur in iis, so incarceratur; as CHRIST is fed in the poor, so he is imprisoned with them that are in bonds, and exiled with his exiled members, and condemned to the Mines, with those that are chained in the Mines: and it is an impossibility to banish the Head from His Members, in whom he lives, and they in Him. In the eight Verse: Memento Praepositorum, Remember your Governours, that have the Rule over you: you owe much to them that have sowen in you the Word of GOD, whose faith is a light or example to you. So here, To do good, and to distribute forget not. The rest are particulars, Hospitality to strangers, Visitation to prisoners, comfort to the persecuted, and Sustentation to our spiritual Governours: but this in general, and extends to all; strangers, prisoners, persecuted, Governours, and all other men in need, in general; though with a precipuè, chiefly to the Houshold of faith. For, every man is our neighbour, to whom charity is to be extended; but they are more nearly our Neighbours, to whom we stand bound by a double obligation and fraternity, of Nature, and Grace.

Why then is our Apostle so solicitous, that we forget not this doing good and distributing? A man would think, the precept need not be so strictly urged and inculcated, and that in the negative which binds Semper & ad semper, and therefore never to be forgotten. The Moralist gives a good Rule, Homo in homine calamitoso misericors, meminit sui: That man that is merciful to a man in misery and calamity, remembers himself: he might have been in misery and need, as well as his afflicted Neighbour, if GOD had so disposed. Is it such a matter, to be so much and so often inculcated? Can a man forget himself? or can any man think that, that which falls to another man, might not fall upon him? Equal in nature, and grace, may also be equal in misery, if GOD will: Yes surely there is need: for he that beheld his face in a glasse, James 1.24. he went away, & statim oblitus est; straitway he forgetteth his own shape; his own spots and deformities, amends none of them, never thinks on them more, till he come to the glasse again: be the glasse never so true, never so pure, even as pure as the Word of GOD it self, yet so often as he comes, so often he forgets, therefore nothing is more needful then this not forgetting.

Matth.13.20. And the truth is, most men are like to the young man, that said to our SAVIOUR CHRIST: All these things, the Commandements of GOD, custodivi ab adolescentia, have I kept from my youth; but yet he had not so strictly kept GOD'S Commandement, but that withal, custodivit bona omnia a pauperibus; he had more strictly kept all his goods from the poor; and because he had great substance, and loved it greatly, he had need to be remembred with Nolite oblivisci, Forget not to do good, and to distribute: for he was Custos pecuniæ, potius quam præcepti; he was a keeper, but a keeper of money; and no keeper, but a breaker of the Commandements.

The Rich man and all his fellowes, Luke 16. have need of this, Forget not: He saw Lazarus full of sores, from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot, and the very sight of him, was conflatorium pietatis; the very bellowes and Anvile of compassion: and he lay at his gate, he could neither go in, nor out, but he must look upon him, yet obliviscitur quod vidit; he forgot him that he saw, and could not choose but see him: Nay, he saw the dogs more merciful in licking his sores than himself was, in curing or feeding him: and therefore non accepit guttam aquæ, he received not one drop of water to cool his tongue. (He was a great, but a most miserable professour, and therefore his tongue was most tormented, because therein consisted all his Religion.) And the reason is, because non dedit micam panis, he would not give him so much as he gave his dogs, not one crumme of bread.

There be some that say, Matth. 25. 37, 44. Quando te vidimus esurientem, nudum, &c. When did we see Thee hungry or naked? Peradventure they saw Him, in his own person, in capite, as a particular man, the Head; but they could not but see Him, in membris; in His members, the poor: Vident pauperem, but CHRISTUM in pauperе non vident; they saw the poor man, but CHRIST they saw not in the poor man: Here is great need of this Nolite oblivisci, Forget not to put them in mind, that they flatter not themselves with this ambiguity. Te & Te totum: they see not the Man JESUS, the Head alone, but they cannot choose but see whole CHRIST, that is CHRIST the Head, and the poor, His Members,

Mat.25.18,17: There is one, and I would there were but one, that received a talent and hid it in a napkin under the earth: he was worthy to hear Serve nequam, Evil servant: For he knew his Masters will, that gave his talents to receive them with encrease; his memory failed and had need to be rubbed with oblitus tradere usurariis; he forgot that which he did not forget; he forgot not to take use for his money, and use upon use, but he forgot the true and lawful usury, to give it to the poor, and so to lend

it to the Lord, who would surely have paid both principall and interest also, hath the substantiall reward of eternal life, and also the accidentall degree and measure of glory.

How many are there that forget the Preachers precept, Casteth thy bread upon the waters? How many are these that say, My barnes are too little, I will pull them down and build bigger? who have been at the Schoole of forgetfulnesse, and do not remember, Quod vastitas pauperum rapina, quod horrea non capiant, that the bellies of the poor are greater then the greatest barnes, and will receive and consume all that which the greatest barnes cannot hold; yea, the poor doe so multiply, that the rich are not able to feed them. The foolish Rich man said in the Gospel, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up in store for many yeares, but when he said so, he had not many houres to reckon, to eate and drinke and take his pleasure. Male recondita, melius erogata; they were ill layed up, they had been much better distributed and scattered abroad. It may be they may passe all the degrees of comparison, Male parta, ill gotten by oppression, and fraud, and Rapine; And Pejus detenta, worse kept and detained; that which is ill gotten may be worse kept; and so that is, that is scraped and extorted from all others, is denyed to all others, and most of all, to himselfe, and God, and Christ: And Pessime erogata expended worst of all, in ryot and excesse, in pride and vanity, in cruelty and rebellion, in denying maintenance to the King and Country, or to the poor.

Eccle. 11. 1. Luk. 12.

Luk. 12. 18, 19.

But howsoever ill gotten, worse imprisoned and debarred the light of the Sun: and worst of all so spent, that with them, the soul, and life, and Heaven it selfe is spent and lost. yet the truth is, they are then best kept, when they are well expended, and never better, then on the poor afflicted members of Christ, than in buying of Heaven. But if you will make a true coniunction indeed, they are then bene recondita when bene erogata, well stored and layd up, when they are well laid out. Reconde in sinu pauperum; The best house to lay them up, is to put them into the box and bosome of the poor: for that indeed is the safest and surest Treasury, safer then the Temple it selfe, the living Temples of God: A Treasury, Sine fure, Sine verme; without theefe, without worme; whatsoever is put there, defertur Deo, the poor man will carry it to God, out of whose hands it can never be taken.

And this indeed the Art of Arts. Not the gold-making, Juglingart, which under the name of gold-making, is the consumer of gold: but the art of turning earth into heaven, and earthly almes into celestiall riches; dando, cœlestia fiunt, these transitory earthly things procure us the unspeakable riches and treasures of heaven. And now consider, Cornelius's Almes and prayers ascended as a memoriall to God, and procured the great grace of the knowledge of Christ, and the gift of the Holy Ghost: and Dorcas's Almes obtained her Resurrection to life: God remembred them both, and shall we forget to do good and distribute our almes, which have that force, that God will never forget them?

Act. 10.

God cannot forget them, if we do remember and perform them: Nay God holds them at a great rate, He accepts them as sacrifices, and such sacrifices as both pacifie and please Him. Talibus sacrificiis, with such sacrifice God is pleased; talibus, with these of Praise and Almes; and with all those that are like, or of the same nature with these. Not with the sacrifices of Nature and Moses's Law: such are both Mortua and mortifera; dead in themselves, and mortiferous and deadly to all that shall use them. These had their time, and were accepted as types and figures, of the which they were partakers of Christ, and did eat of the same spirituall meat and the same spirituall drink, that we now eat and drink by faith, and the Rock that followed them was Christ.

Pars III.

No more then to doe with the sacrifice pectoris trucidati, of the slaine beasts: that is past: but cordis contriti, with the sacrifice of a broken and contrite heart: that was from the beginning, and so shall continue acceptable to God even to the end: the spirituall sacrifice, or the sacrifice of the soul and spirit, that is it, which God ever accepted in the sacrifice of His Son Christ, even from the first Adam, to the last Son of Adam, the last man that shall live at the last day. And GOD hath been and is weary of carnall and externall sacrifice, and neglected, yea, rejected it for the default and want of the inward sacrifice, but for this inward and spiritual sacrifice God will never be wearied with it.

In vocall prayer, and fasting; and outward almes, and the like, there may be Nimium too much; but of inward prayer and fasting from sin, and compassion and mercy, there can never be nimium, too much; nay, not satis, not enough; for GOD calls for all, and all we are not able to perform which we owe. So then, the sacrificia must be talia: such sacrifices, that is, spirituall.

And they be sacrificia; in the plurall number, sacrifices the representative, or memoriall of Christs sacrifice the Eucharist, which is truly the sacrifice of praise, and the daily sacrifice of our selves our soules and bodies in devotion and adoration to God. And the sacrifice of Mercy and Almes (both here recorded) these be the sacrifices here mentioned that please GOD and all others not here mentioned that are included in the talibus: in such like sacrifices, God is pleased.

And be the number of them as great as any man please to make them, yet because they are all reducible to three, I will compasse them in the number of three. First, Sacrificium cordis, contriti, the sacrifice of the contrite and broken heart, as before, which we tender to God in our Repentace; and sighes and teares for our sins. The second, Sacrificium cordis grati, the sacrifice of the thankful heart; in praise and thanksgiving to God, called here, the sacrifice of praise. The 1 2 third

3 child, Sacrificium cordis pij, the ſacrifice of a pious and mercifull heart, in compaſſion and workes of Mercy, and Almes-deeds, called here, doing good and diſtributing.

1 All theſe, and every one of theſe, which are indeed but the variations, or divers affections of one and the ſame heart, they are the talia ſacrificia: ſuch ſacrifices which God accepts: Saint Bernard was a skilfull confectioner, he made three rare and moſt odoriferous Oyntments of them moſt pleaſing unto God Himſelfe: The firſt, Unguentum contritionis, the ointment of contrition made of the ſighs of the heart, and the teares of the eyes, the confeſſion and prayers of the tongue, the revenge, the judgment, and execution done upon our own ſoules, for our ſinnes: And this compunction in heart, though it be all made of bitter and ſharpe poynant ingredients, yet the more ſoure it is, the ſweeter and more welcome it is to God. The ſecond is Unguentum pietatis: the oyntment of pitty and compaſſion, made up of the miſeries and the wants of the poor; wherein the greater is the miſerie, the greater is the mercy; and the more fellow-feeling and compaſſion of the preſſures of the poor, the more odoriferous is the ſacrifice to pacifie Gods wrath. The third is Unguentum devotionis, the oyntment of Devotion, which ſpends it ſelfe in praiſe and thankſgiving by the remembrance of His manifold bleſſings and graces, which cannot but be acceptable unto God, becauſe though praiſe and glory be nothing unto God, who cannot be encreaſed by the breath of a mortall man; yet becauſe it is all the Rent and tribute that man can render to his God, whereof to rob God is the greateſt ſacrilodge, it is an oyntment moſt welcome to God, the rather, becauſe man ever did himſelfe the moſt hurt, when he kept glory back from God, and aſcribed it to himſelf. In the LI. Pſalme, The Oyntment of Contrition is accepted of God, with a Non deſpicies: the ſacrifice of the broken and contrite heart, God will not deſpiſe the ointment of compaſſion in this place is accepted of God, with delectatur Deus: with ſuch ſacrifices God is pleaſed, The Oyntment of Praiſe goes ſomewhat higher with an Honorificat me: he that offers me praiſe he honoureth me, Pſal. L. So the contrit heart, the mercifull heart, and the thankfull heart; Talibus ſacrificijs, with ſuch ſacrifices God is pleaſed: all of theſe together, and every one of theſe ſeverally, and all others like unto theſe, they doe pacifie, and pleaſe, and delight God Himſelf.

Placatur or reconciliatur, God is pacified or reconciled, as ſome read: Delectatur, God is pleaſed or delighted. Hilareſcit, or pulchreſcit, God is cheered or lookes upon us with a ſerene or pleaſant countenance; but the Vulgar will have it Promeretur Deus, God is promerited, in favour of merits. I will not much ſtand upon the word; be it promeretur, in the Fathers ſenſe, in which, merit is via obtinendi, the way and meanes of obtaining, the matter is not great.

But the word in the proper ſenſe, ſignifies no more but this, that God is pleaſed, or at moſt pacified with ſuch ſacrifices: and this is remarkable, that the ſame word, Hebr. XI. VI. ſignifies onely, God is well pleaſed, when it is ſpoken of faith. For, without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, ευαρεστησαι: but here ενωπιον αυτου, muſt be, Promeriti, as if workes were more meritorious than faith: when all the merits of workes proceed from grace and faith, as the goodneſſe of the fruit is from the root, and the ſap thereof. And ſo, God may be both pacified and pleaſed, and yet no merit in us, but acceptation in God: for the beſt workes and ſacrifices and righteouſneſſe in man, are ſo farre from the true merit, out of any dignity, or condignity of the worke, that they cannot ſtand before God without mercy and grace. The beſt and moſt laudable life of the beſt man, hath a Væ, or Woe, lying upon it, Si ſine miſericordia diſcutiatur, if it come to be diſcuſſed without mercy: and in the diſtinct judgement of God, no man, no not the man after Gods owne heart dare enter, but prays againſt it, Ne intres in judicium cum ſervo tuo, Enter not into judgement with thy ſervant, O Lord (Pſalme CXLIV. III.) and why? For, no fleſh is righteous in thy ſight; no fleſh no man righteous or juſtified, then ſurely no true merit.

Braſſe or copper money may be made currant by the Kings Proclamation, but ſtill it is but braſſe and copper, and wants of the true value of gold and ſilver: and good workes, and to doe good and diſtribute, may goe for currant, by Gods promiſe, and receive a reward out of juſtice, but Juſtice with mercy: for, there is Juſtitia in reddendo, Juſtice in giving the Crowne according to his promiſe: but there is Miſericordia in promittendo; Mercy that triumpheth over juſtice, in promiſing to give an infinite reward, to a finite worke, as heaven for a Cup of cold water, or bread, or drinke, or clothes and the like: and between the kingdome of heaven, and the crown of glory, and eternall life, which is infinite, and a few crummes or drops, or rags, which are ſcant ſo much as finite, there is no equality. Inter finitum & infinitum nulla eſt proportio, there is no proportion between that which is finite, and that which is infinite. So that as much as infinite doth exceed that which is finite, ſo much doth God's infinite rewards, exceed the beſt finite workes, of the beſt man. And the Rule of the Schoole in this is true: God puniſhes citra condignum, leſſe than we deſerve; ſo there is mercy in God's Juſtice and puniſhments: and God rewards ultra meritum, beyond our merit or deſert; and ſo eternall life is the grace and free gift of God.

1. Inſomuch that we may thus reſolve; Firſt, Non tenetur Deus: God is not bound to give us any
2. reward for any dignity or worthineſs of our workes. Secondly; Non Meremur nos, we deſerve nothing, but are unprofitable ſervants, and our beſt workes are unperfect, and fall ſhort of that per-
3. fection that Law and Juſtice do require. And thirdly, Non deerit tamen Deus: though God be not bound, and man merits not, yet God never failed any man, that did doe any good worke, but he was ſure of his reward. For, though we be bound to good workes ex debito, of duty: God commands mands them, and requires an account of them: yet God is not bound to reward them ex debito, out of any debt owing to us for them; but onely ex pacto, out of His promise, and agreement. For eternal life is not a reward which men may exact and require in Justice at Gods hands, for his labour and hire; but it is His free gift: and therefore He calleth it not tuum, thine, but Meum, mine owne; May I not do what I list with my owne?

What is the reason the Prophet saith (Psal. LXXI. XVI.) O Lord, Memorabor Justitiæ tuæ solius, I will remember thy righteousnesse only, but because there is no other righteousnesse worth the remembring, but only thy righteousnesse only; that righteousnesse that is a Domino, inherent in us by sanctification of the gifts and graces of the Lord, is not worth the remembrance, for it is a defiled cloth, and dung in it selfe; and were it never so good, God hath no need of it; nay, being offered to God, He is nothing increased by it. If thou do all good works, Deus meus es, & bonorum meorum non indiges: Thou art my God (saith David, Psal. XVII. II.) my goods, and therein are his good workes also, are nothing to thee: God is not increased or inriched by them. If thou do commit sin with all manner of greedinesse, thou canst not defile God, nor take any thing from him; thy evil cannot decrease or diminish him. But it is Justitia in Domino, Righteousnesse in the Lord (that is) Christ's righteousnesse communicated, or imputed to us; for Christ is made to us wisdom from GOD, and Justice or righteousnesse and sanctification and redemption, and He doth not say, fecit nos, He made us righteous in the concrete; but factus est nobis, He was made righteousnesse to us in the abstract, because He communicates His righteousnes to us, and then by covers our nakednes, as Jacob clothed in his elder brothers garments received the blessing. And therefore the Name of the Son of God is Iehovah Justitia nostra, The Lord our righteousnesse.

Esay. 46. 6.

Jerem. 23. 6.

Besides, no man is accepted or well pleasing to God for his workes sake, but rather the work is accepted for the workemans sake: as God first Respexit Abelem, He respected or accepted of Abels person: and then followes & sacrificium ejus, and then his sacrifice: For, God cares not for Abels lambe, but because Abel the lambe, offered it; his heart and willing readinesse to offer a lambe, was pleasing, and He accepted the sacrifice. As in the Father of the Faithfull, God could not accept the sacrifices of Isaac, because he was not sacrificed facto, sed voto or voluntate: not in deed, but only in vow, and will, and purpose: in him, Voluntas reputatur pro facto, his will was accepted for the sacrifice.

And in Cain's sacrifice, GOD made no difference between the lambe and the sheaf of corne, both which were after commanded equally in the Law, and the Panes propositionis were ever ioyned with a lamb. The difference was, he offered his eares of corne, but not himself: and therefore the words be, ad Cain vero, & ad munera ejus non respexit, But to Cain, and to his offering God had not respect: He accepted not his person, and therefore He regarded not his sacrifice. And therefore the Ancient say: That either of them offered parem cultu & religione hostiam, an equall sacrifice in respect of Religion, and the worship of GOD: Sed non recte uterq; divisit: Cain made an ill division, he offered the fruits of the earth to God; Cor retinuit sibi, seipsum non obtulit, he reserved his heart to himselfe, and he offered not himselfe to GOD: but Abel first offered himself to God, and then his lamb.

Rupert. in Gen. lib. 4. 2.

And so Saint Paul's words are true; Abel offered a greater sacrifice to GOD than Cain. Greater first, Quia hostia copiosior; because he offered a double sacrifice, himself and his lamb: but Cain only offered his corne. Secondly, Quia excellentior; he offered a more excellent sacrifice, better chosen, because de adipibus, of the fattest, and best of the flock: Cain carelesly took that came first to hand; de fructibus, of the fruit, and no more. Thirdly Quia ex fide: by faith he offered it; and that faith justified him and his sacrifice, because he beleeved in the Seed of the Woman that should bruise the serpents head. And so it is true, dignitas operantis, the faith and piety of the sacrificer, and worker, dignatem confert operi, conferres all the worth to the worke. For if an Heathen or Turk do the same worke of Almes or mercy that the faithfull Christian doth, it shall passe without all regard; whereas the faithfull heart and person make the worke of the hand acceptable to the Lord.

So then, sacrifices of goodnesse and Almes or distribution there must be, they are necessary to Salvation in them that have time and opportunitie, and meanes: and therefore sufficit ad pœnam meritis carere, It is sufficient to punish us, if we want good workes. But there can be no trust or confidence placed in them; for, they are unperfect and defective, & therefore merit nothing at God's hand out of Justice, but onely are accepted out of GOD's mercy, and the infinite Merit of Christ, which is equall to His person that is infinite, as He is the eternall Son of God: and therefore, sufficit ad præmium, demeritis non præsumere; the greatest part of the dignity of the best works of the best men, is to renounce all trust and confidence in our selves, and our best workes, and to repose all our hope in the mercy and merits of Christ.

Now to returne to the use of the word [Promeretur.] in Antiquity, I remember Saint Cyprian useth it not for the dignity and merit of the best worke, but onely for the way or meanes of obtaining. For, reading that place of Saint Paul, I Tim. I. XIII. [But I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbeliefe] he reads it thus: Sed Misericordiam merui: but I merited Mercy what was Merui, in Saint Cyprian's sense, but I obtained mercy? and so the Vulgar reads that place.

Againe, speaking of those that were baptized, and signed, in the fore-head with the sign of the Crosse, he saith of Oxias the Leper, that he was maculated with Leprosy, in that part of his his body in which they are signed, qui Dominum promerentur, which promerits, the Lord, so would our Rhemists read it: But the true understanding is, they that promerit the LORD, that is, they that enter Covenant with the Lord, in Baptisme (de cujus ore Exeat, Numb. 16.) And I presume, rather the keeping the Covenant, than the entring should be meritorious, if there be any merit at all.

And being Augustine (de gratia, & libero arbitrio, cap. 5. & 6.) speaking of Saint Paul, saith, Meritum fuerat in Paulo, sed malum, in Paul, there was merit, but evill merit, when he persecuted the Church, and received good for it. And after, Let us returne to the Apostle, whom we finde without any good merits (Sine ullis bonis meritis, imo cum multis malis meritis) yea with many evill merits, to have obtained the grace of GOD: and then he adds, Ne igitur bona merita consequatur corona, quæ post malum meritum consecutus est gratiam; that after his good merits obtained the crowne (who after his evill merits had obtained grace. 1. Here, first it is plaine, merit is joyned in both. with obtaining. 2. Againe, Merits are good, and merits are bad: the word is common to both 3. Merit signifies in Saint Augustines sense, no dignity of worke, but onely a meanes of obtaining. For it is impossible, that evill merit (that is, sinne) out of the dignity of the worke should merit grace; and by the same proportion and form of speech, it is impossible, that the dignity of the Worke should merit a crowne; since Saint Augustine in the same place doth say, There would be none unto whom God the just Judge, redderet coronam, should render a crowne, unlesse first, as a mercifull Father, donasset gratiam, He had given His grace: And then he adds Dona sua coronat Deus, non merita; God crowneth not thy merits, but His owne gifts: His reason is, for, if they be such (that is, thine) they are evill, and if they be evill, God crowneth them not; if they be good, they are GOD's gifts, and He crowneth them not as thy merits, but as his own gifts, &c.

But I have troubled you too long with this Schoole-Doctrine, and Pulpit divinity of magnifying mans merits, before men, since their death-bed divinity recants it all: and then, they are all forced, learned and ignorant, utterly to renounce it, and put all their trust in Christ's mercy and merits, as their sure Anchor-hold: Of which I have onely this to say: that merits may have some place in their feares, but their owne consciences, unlesse they be feared, tell them, there is no true merit, but Christ's onely.

Application. I have now done with my Text: and now I apply my selfe and my Text to the present Text, that lyes before us: Hic nec silendus, nec dicendus sine cura, A man whose worth may not be passed over in silence, whom all ages with us may celebrate and admire; not to be spoken of without great care, care and study: Of whom I can say nothing, but his worth and vertues will farre exceed all mens words. Here I desire neither the tongue of man, nor Angels: if it were lawfull, I should wish no other but his own tongue and pen, Ipse, Ipsa quem loquar, loquatur: let him speak of himselfe, none so fit as himselfe was, of whom I am to speake this day. Et jam loquitur, And he now speaks: He speakes in his learned Workes and Sermons, and he speakes in his life and workes of mercy: and he speakes in his death: And what he taught in his life and workes, he taught and expressed in his death. He is the great Actor and performer, I but the poor cryer, Vox clamantis, He was the Vox clamans: he was the loud and great crying voyce, I am but the poor Echo: and it is well with me, if as an Ecchoe, of his large and learned bookes and workes, I onely repeat a few of the last words.

No man can blame me, if I commend him at his death, whose whole life was every way commendable: Justus sine mendacio laudor, apud bonos crimini non est; Iust commendation without flattery, is no fault in the opinion of the best men: And the ancient custome of the Church, did celebrate the memories of holy men, to the praise of GOD that gave such eminent graces to them, and to stir up others by their example to the Imitation of their vertues.

I speake my knowledge of him in many things Loved, and honoured him for above thirty yeares space. I loved him I confesse, but yet Judicio meo non obstat Amor, qui ex judicio natus est; my love doth not blind or outsway my Judgement, because it proceeded from Judgement. Of whom what can I say lesse, than that he was vita innocentissimus, ingenio florentissimus & proposito sanctissimus: In his life most innocent, in his knowledge, & learning most flourishing & eminent, and in his purpose and life most holy and devout: whose carriage was so happy, Quem nemo vituperat, nisi etiam laudet; no man could ever discommend him, but will he nill he, he must withall commend him. And no mans words were ever able to disgrace him: Vera, necesse est benedicat: falsum, vim moresque superant: They that spake trueth of him, could not but speake well of him; and if they spake falsely of him, his life and manners did confute them.

And if this Text were ever fully applied in any, I presume it was in him; for, he was totus in his sacrificijs; he wholly spent himselfe, and his studies, and estate in these sacrifices, in prayer and the praise of God, and compassion and workes of charity, as if he had minded nothing else, all his life long, but this, to offer himselfe, his soule and body, a contrite and a broken heart, a pitifull and a compassionate heart, and a thankfull and gratefull heart, a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, by Jesus Christ, which is our reasonable service of Him.

He

He was born in this City of London, of honeſt and godly parents? who beſides his breeding in learning, left him a ſufficient patrimony and inheritance, which is deſcended to his heir, at Rumeth in Eſſex. It is true: Senum vita compoſita, the lives, of old men, many times are orderly and well compoſed, and diſpoſed, and ſtayed; whereas in youth, many things that are in true judgement not altogether decent, are not ſo indecent in them, but that they well enough become their younger yeares: In this, he was happy, Hujus vita compoſita a puericia. His life was well compoſed and ordered even from his childhood. I may well ſay of him, as the Prophet doth; Bonum eſt portare Jugum Domini ab Adoleſcentia: herein was his happineſſe, that he took up, and did ſtoutly bear the yoke of the Lord even from his youth.

In his tendereſt yeares, he ſhewed ſuch readineſſe and ſharpneſſe of wit and capacity, that his Teachers and Maſters fore-ſaw in him, that he would prove lumen literarum & literatorum: The burning and ſhining Candle of all Learning and learned men. And therefore, thoſe two firſt Maſters, that had the care of the firſt Elements of his Learning (Mr. Ward of Ratcliffe, and Mr. Mulcaſter of the Merchant-Taylors School) contended for him, who ſhould have the honour of his breeding, that after became the honour of their Schooles, and all learning. Mr. Ward firſt obtained of his parents, that he ſhould not be a prentice: and at length Mr. Mulcaſter got him to his School: and from this time, perit omne tempus quod ſtudiis non impenditur, he accounted all that time loſt, that he ſpent not in his ſtudie, wherein in learning he out-ſtript all his equals; and his indefatigable induſtry, had almoſt out-ſtript himſelf: He ſtudied ſo hard when others played, that if his Parents and Maſters had not forced him to play with them alſo, all the play had been marred. His late ſtudying by candle, and early riſing at 4 in the morning, procured him envy among his equals; yea, with the Ushers alſo, becauſe he called them up too ſoon: Not like to our modern Scholars, qui nondum heſternam edormiverunt crapulam; who at ſeven and eight of the clock, have their heads and ſtomacks aking, becauſe they have not ſlept out their laſt nights ſurfets and fulneſſe.

Their paines and care, he ſo carefully remembred all his life long, that he ſtudied alwayes how to do good to them and theirs. In which gratefulneſſe he promoted Doctor Ward to the Parſonage of Waltham: and ever loved and honoured his Maſter Mulcaſter during his life, and was a continual helper to him, and his Sonne Peter Mulcaſter, to whom he gave a legacy of twenty pound by his Will: And as if he had made Mr. Mulcaſter his Tutor or Superviſor, he placed his picture over the door of his Study: whereas in all the reſt of his houſe, you could ſcantly ſee a picture.

From Maſter Mulcaſter he went to Cambridge, to Pembroke-Hall, and was there admitted one of Doctor Wats Scholars, a notable Grammarian, well entred in the Latine, Greek, and Hebrew Tongues, and likewiſe in the Geometry, and ſome of the Mathematicks: and after a fellow there, in which he paſſed over all Degrees, and Places in ſuch ſort, Ut majoribus ſemper dignus haberetur; he ever ſeemed worthy of higher and greater Places, and would in the end attain the higheſt: Virtutes enim ejus maturæ erant; for his abilities and vertues were mature, and ripe for greater imployments.

And in this he owed little to his Tutors, but moſt to his own paines and ſtudy. In which, give me leave to remember one thing which he hath often lamented himſelf to me and others, that he never could find a fit opportunity to ſhew his thankfulneſſe to Doctor Wats, his Patron, nor to any of his poſterity: Yet he did not utterly forget him in his Will: having ordered that the two fellowſhips to be founded by him in Pembroke-Hall, ſhould alwayes be choſen and filled, out of the Scholars of Doctor Wats Foundation, if they were found fit, of which himſelf had been one.

Being in holy Orders, he attended the Noble and zealous Henry Earle of Huntington, Preſident of York, and was employed by him in often preaching, and conference with Recuſants, both of the Clergy, and Laity; In which, GOD ſo bleſt his endeavours, that he converted ſome of the Prieſts, and many of the Laity; with great ſucceſſe: bringing many to the Church, and ſeldom loſed his labour; none ever converting ſo many as he did.

After this M. Secretary Walſingham takes notice of him, and obtained him of the Earl, intending his preferment, in which he would never permit him to take any Countrey-beneficе, leſt he and his great learning ſhould be buried in a Countrey-Church. His intent was to make him Reader of Controverſies in Cambridge, and for his maintenance he aſſigned to him (as I am informed) the Leaſe of the Parſonage of Alton in Hampſhire, which after his death he returned to his Lady, which ſhe never knew, nor thought of.

After this, he obtained the Vicarage of Saint Giles without Cripple-gate, London, and a Prebend Reſidentiaries place in S. Pauls, and was choſen Maſter of Pembroke-Hall: and afterward was advanced to the Deanry of Weſtminſter: and all this without all ambition or ſuit of his own; GOD turning the hearts of his friends to promote him for his great worth.

When he took the degree of D. D. in Cambridge, one of his queſtions was, that Decimæ debentur jure divino: which he betrayed not, as ſome have done, but made it good by Scriptures, and divine and natural reaſon, as will appear to the Reader, when that, among other of his Works, ſhall enrich the Engliſh Church, with a happy Treaſure of Learning.

He was, as all our Engliſh world well knowes, a ſingular Preacher, and a moſt famous Writer. He was ſo ſingular a Preacher, and ſo profound a Writer, that you will doubt in which he did excel: whoſe whose weapons in the mouthes of the adversaries proved stones in the teeth of dogs: while they thought to withstand or answer them, they bit the stones and brake their own teeth: and so it is true of him, Responsa ejus sine responsionibus, His answers were answerlesse: Never durst any Romanists answer him; as their common use is, that which they cannot answer and confute, they slight it, and let it passe without any answer at all.

His admirable knowledge in the learned Tongues, Latine, Greek, Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriack, Arabick, besides other modern Tongues to the number of fifteen (as I am informed) was such and so rare, that he may well be ranked in the first place, to be one of the rarest Linguists in Christendom; In which, he was so perfect and absolute, both for Grammar and profound knowledge therein, that he was so perfect in the Grammar and Criticismes of them, as if he had utterly neglected the matter it self; and yet he was so exquisite and sound in the matter and learning of these Tongues, as if he had never regarded the Grammar.

Scientia magna, Memoria major, Judicium maximum: his Knowledge was great and rare, his Memory greater, and his Judgement profoundest and greatest of all: and over and above all these, Industria infinita, his paines and industry was infinite: For in the things the world hath seen, he used no man to read for him; as those great Clerks, Bellarmine, and others fashion is, to employ whole Colledges and Societies to study and read for them, and so furnish them; he only used an Amanuensis, to transcribe that, which himself had written with his own hand.

So that now I may propose him, Ut exemplum sine exemplo maximum, as a great Example example-lesse: Nec ante eum, quem ille imitaretur; nec post eum, qui eum imitari & assequi possit, inventus est: There was none before him, whom he did imitate: nor none will come, after him, that will easily overtake him: Insomuch that his great gifts may well be taken; a little to cloud and over-shadow and obscure all men of his Age and Order: and surely the fame of this singular Bishop will become such a light to all posterity, Ut nec bona eorum, nec mala latere patietur, 'twil not suffice neither their good, nor, their evil to lie hid.

Was his fame great? Major inventus est, He was ever found to be greater than fame made him. In which, as he was a wonderful Mirrour of learning and learned men, so he was a singular Lover and encourager of learning and learned men: which appeared in his liberality and bounty to Master Causabon, Master Cluverius, Master Vossius, Master Grotius, Master Erpenius, whom he attempted with the offer of a very large stipend, of his own purse, to draw into England: to have read and taught the Oriental tongues here: even as one well said, Omnes quod in se amant, in aliis ventrantur: those gifts and knowledges, which he loved in himself, he honoured and rewarded in others.

When the Bishopricks of Ely and Salisbury were void, and some things were to be pared from them, some overture being made to him to take them, he refused them utterly: If it please you to give me leave, I will make his answer for him; Nolo Episcopari, quia nolo alienare, I will not be made a Bishop, because I will not alienate Bishops landr.

After this, by some perswasion he accepted of Chichester; yet with some fear of the burden: and after that, of Ely; and last of this of Winchester; whence GOD hath translated him to Heaven: in which he freed himself and his Successor of a pension of four hundred pounds per annum, which many of his Predecessors had paid. He was Almoner, Dean of the Chappel, and a Privy Counsellour to King James, and King Charles: In which he spake and medled little in Civil and Temporal affaires, being out of his profession and Element: but in causes that any way concerned the Church and his Calling, he spake fully and home to the purpose; that he made all know, that he understood and could speak, when it concerned him, as by those few speeches which are preserved, you may judge, ex ungue leonem, a wise man by his word and deeds.

And herein he was like the Ark of GOD: all places where it rested were blessed by the presence of GOD in it; so, whereseever he came and lived, they all tasted and were bettered by his providence and goodnesse. Saint Giles was reduced to him by a Rate toward the better maintenance of the place, and the house repaired. He found nothing in the Treasury in Pembroke-Hall; he left in it, in ready money a thousand pound. Being Prebend Residentiary in S. Pauls, he built the House in Creed-lane, belonging to his Prebend, and recovered it to the Church. He repaired the Deanes lodging in Westminster. When he came to Chichester, he repaired the Palace there, and the house in Aldingbourne. At Ely, he spent in Reparation of Ely-house in Holborne, of Ely-palace, at Downham, and Wisbich Castle two thousand pound. At Winchester-house, at Farnham, at Waltham, and Wolvesey, likewise two thousand pound.

It seems plainly, he loved the Churches in which he was promoted and lived, better than he did his money, or his own gain. For if we consider these expences in his Episcopal Houses, and his most magnificent entertainment of his most gracious Soveraign King JAMES, at Farenham, where in three dayes he spent three thousand pounds: as great and bountiful entertainment as ever King JAMES received at a Subjects hand: besides, he refused to make some Leases in his last yeares, which might have been very beneficial to him, for the good of his Successors; his reason was, Many are too ready to spoil Bishopricks, and few enough to uphold them: Add to these the many Almes he gave in his life, and now at his death, and we shall see he was free from all avarice and love of money. In him, is true that word of S. John, Nolite diligere mundum: he doth not say, Nolite habere, but Nolite diligere, Love not the world: he doth not say, have not, possesse not the world, or goods of the world; but love them not: He had them, but he loved them not: Ut dispensator, ut Erroganur; he had them but as a Steward to dispose and expend them; to procure an everlasting Tabernacle in the highest heavens.

He meddled little with them, but left the taking of his accounts from his Officers to his Brothers: and when he began his Will at Waltham a year before his death, he understood not his own estate; nay till about six weekes before his death, when his Accounts were delivered up and perfected, he did not fully know his own estate: and therefore in his first draught of his Will, he gave but little to his kindred, doubting he might give away more than he had, and therefore in a Codicill annexed to his Will he doubled all his legacies to them, and made every hundred to be two hundred, and every two hundred to be four hundred: And yet notwithstanding this encrease, he gave more to the maintenance of learning, and the poor, than to his kindred: His charity and love of God and the poor, was greater in him, than Naturall affection; and yet he forgot not his naturall affection to them.

It was said of him, that in his time was held to be Deliciæ hominum (Titus,) Abstinuit alieno, ut si quis unquam: If ever any man abstained from that which was not his own, he was the man.

This is as true of this most Reverend Prelate, he never took any mans goods, or right from him. Give me leave to adde a little more of him: Distribuit sua, ut si quis unquam; If ever any studied to dispense and distribute his owne, either to kindred or to the poor, surely this is the Man.

Neither did he stay to do good, and distribute till his death, that is, then gave his goods to the poore, when he could keep them no longer: The first place he lived on, was Saint Giles; there, I speak my knowledge, I do not say, he began; sure I am, he continued his charity: his certain Almes there, was ten pound per annum; which was payed quarterly by equal portions, and twelve pence every Sunday he came to Church, and five shillings at every Communion: and for many yeares, since he left that Cure, he sent five pound, about Christmas, besides the number of gownes given to the poor of that Parish when he was Almoner. And I have reason to presume the like of those other parishes mentioned in his Will, to which he also gave Legacies: to Saint Giles an hundred pound, where he had been Vicar. To Alhallowes Barkin, where he was borne, twenty pound: To Saint Martins Ludgate, where he dwelt, five pound. To Saint Andrewes in Holborne where Ely-house stands ten pound. And to this Parish, of Saint Saviours in Southwarke where he died, twenty pound. which Parishes he hath remembred, for his Almes to the poor, when the land shall be purchased for the relief and use of the poor.

When he came to Oxford, attending King James in the end of his progresse, his custome was to send fifty pound to be distributed among poor Scholars. And the like he did at Cambridge, in his Journey to Ely. And least his left hand should know what its right hand did, he sent great Almes to many poor places, under other mens names; and he stayed not till the poor sought him, for he first sought them (as his servants imployed in that service can witnesse) as appeared at Farnham, at Waltham and Winchester: And in the last year of great Sickness, he gave in this Parish of Saint Saviours, an hundred Marks. Besides, since the year one thousand six hundred and twentie, as I have my information from him, that kept his books of Accounts, and delivered him the money, he gave in private Almes to the summe of one thousand three hundred and forty pounds.

The totall of his pious and charitable works mentioned in his Will, amounts to the summe of six thousand three hundred twenty and six pounds. Of which, to Pembrooke-Hall, for the erection of two Fellowships, and other uses mentioned in the Codicill, a thousand pound, to buy fifty pound Land per Annum, to that purpose. Beside a Bason and Ewer, like that of the Foundresse, and some books.

To buy two hundred pound per Annum, four thousand pound: Viz. for aged poor men, fifty pound per annum: for poor widowes, the wives of one husband, fifty pound: for the putting of poor Orphans to prentise, fifty pound: to prisoners fifty pound.

He was alwayes a diligent and painfull Preacher: most of his Solemne Sermons he was most carefull of, and exact; I dare say, few of them, but they passed his hand, and were thrice revised, before they were preached: and he ever mislikt often and loose preaching, without study of Antiquity: and he would be bold with himselfe, and say, when he preached twise a day at Saint Giles, he prated once: And when his weaknesse grew on him, and that by infirmity of his body he grew unable to preach, he began to go little to the Court, not so much for weaknesse, as for inability to preach.

After he came to have an Episcopall house with a Chappell, he kept monthly Communions inviolably; yea, though himselfe had received at the Court, the same moneth. In which, his carriage was not only decent and religious, but also examplary: he ever offered twise at the Altar, and so did every one of his servants, to which purpose he gave them mony, lest it should be burthensome to them.

Now before I come to his last end, give me leave to tell you, that privately he did much find fault and reprove three sins, too common, and reigning in this latter age. 1. Usury was one, from which, what by his Sermons, what by private conference, he withdrew many: 2. Another was Simony, for which he endured many troubles by Quare Impedit, and Duplex querela: as for himselfe, he seldome gave a Benefice or preferment to him that petitioned or made suit for it: he rather sent for men of note, that he thought wanted preferment, and often gave places and Benefices, under Seale, before they knew of it; as to M. Roys, and Mr Fuller: The Third and greatest was Sacriledge, which he did abhorre, as one principal cause among many, of forreign and Civill warres in Christendome, and invasions of the Turke. Wherein even the reformed, and otherwise the true professours and servants of Christ, because they took God's portion, and turned it to publike prophane uses, or to private advancements, did suffer just chastisement and correction at God's hand: And at home it had been observed, and he wished some man would take the paines to collect, how many Families, that were raised by the spoiles of the Church, were now vanished, and the place thereof knowes them no more.

And now I draw to an end. Gods house is truly called, and is indeed, Domus Orationis, the House of Prayer, it accompanies all acts done in Gods House: of this Reverend Prelate: I may say, vita tota, vita omnis, his life was a life of prayer: A great part of five houres every day, did he spend in prayer and devotion to God. After the death of his Brother M. Thomas Andrewes, in the sicknesse time, whom he loved dearely, he began to foretell his owne death, before the end of summer, or before the beginning of winter. And when his Brother M. Nicholas Andrews died, he took that as a certaine signe and prognosticke, and warning of his owne death, and from that time till the houre of his dissolution, he spent all his time in prayer; and his prayer book, when he was private, was seldome seen out of his hands: and in the time of his feaver and last sickneſse; besides the often prayers which were read to him, in which he repeated all the parts of the Confession and other petitions, with an audible voyce, as long as his strength endured, he did (as was well observed by certain tokens in him) continually pray to himselfe, though he seemed otherwise to rest or slumber: And when he could pray no longer voce, with his voyce, yet oculis & manibus, by lifting up his eyes and hands he prayed still: and when nec manus, nec vox officium facere: both voice, and eyes, and hands failed in their office; then Corde, with his heart he still prayed, untill it pleased God to receive his blessed soule to himselfe.

And so, hujus mortalitas magis finita, quam vita, his Mortality had an end, and he died peaceably and quietly in the Lord, but his life shall have no end: yea, then his life did begin, when his Mortality made an end; that was Natale his birth-day, September XXV. being Munday about four of the clock in the morning. So died he alienum majore damno, quam suo, with greater dammage to others; even to all this English Church and all Christendom, than to himselfe: And God grant that many ages may be so happy to bring forth and enjoy such a Prelate, so furnished with all endowments of learning and knowledge, with innocency and holynesse of life, and with such piety and charity, as he shewed in his life and death.

My conclusion is short. I have spoken somewhat of this most Revered Prelate, but much short of his graces and worth. In summe thus much: In his life he was Concionatur & Scriptor potentissimus; a most powerfull Preacher, and Writer; in his deeds and actions he was potentior & diuturnior, more powerfull and lasting. Death hath bereaved us of him: but his life, and his works of learning, and his works of piety and charity, I doubt not but God in His goodnesse will make them Monumentum ære perennius; a Monument more lasting than brasse, and stone, even to the coming of our Lord Christ.

For no doubt while he lived he sowed the sincere word of life in the souls of men; and in his life and death, posuit eleemosynam in sinu pauperis; he put his Almes into the bosome of the poor: and shall I say, Oravit pro eo; it prayed for him, and by it he procured himselfe a strong Armie, and bellatores fortes, valiant Souldiers, whose many prayers and blessings God could not resist, the rather because they knew him not? that is too short and the Text goes farther, Exoravit; it shall pray and prevaile too: and he and they have prevailed, and he is now at rest and peace in heaven, and follows the Lamb whereſoever he goes.

And after him let us all send this blessing which the voyce from heaven uttered, Write, Blessed are the dead, which dye in the Lord. For the Lord, there was no cause he should die, but he dyed in the Lord, because he always lived to the Lord, and a happy death must needs accompany and crown such a life, From henceforth, saith the Spirit, they rest from their labours, all teares are wiped from their eyes, and all sighs from their hearts, and their workes follow them; Opera sequuntur, & opera præcedunt; their works go before them; so no doubt but this works have done, as the prayer and Almes and fasting of Cornelius did; they have procured a place for him in heaven, and his workes shall follow him, and the fame of him shall stir up many to follow his example.

And so I end; beseeching God to give us all, as he gave to him, our parts in the first Resurrection, from sin to grace: And to grant to him and all the faithfull, and Saints departed, and us all with him, a joyfull Resurrection to everlasting life and glory in JESUS CHRIST. AMEN.
